§ 877. — But another view is tenable: It was not contemplated that the agent should procure horses or other supplies on credit at all, or, at least, not on his principal's credit. The agent was expected to pay cash (and was supplied with cash for that purpose) or, if a brief credit was given, as (according to the suggestion of the court), until the service was performed, or until he calls for his bill at the hotel, and the like, it should be on the agent's own credit. His principal authorizes him to pay out the principal's money for this purpose (and agrees to allow it on an accounting), or agrees to reimburse or indemnify the agent for any proper expense for which the agent pledges his own credit, but does not authorize the pledging of the principal's credit.⁶⁰ Such a view accords best with the actual situation. It seems unnatural to suppose that the principal has authorized his credit to be pledged at any one of the (usually remote) hotels and livery stables which his agent may visit; or that the local hotel keeper or livery stable keeper ever, in fact, trusted to the credit of a principal, of whom he never heard and whom he might have to go into another state to find. It seems much more natural to suppose that the ⁵⁹ See ante, § 759.

⁶⁰ A principal who supplies his traveling salesman with money for his expenses while on the road, and allowed him to draw for more whenever he needed it, is not liable to a hotel keeper for the agent's board where he has settled with the agent and allowed him for this expense

before he knew that the agent had not paid it. Nicholson v. Pease, 61 Vt. 534.

But it is held that he will be liable if, after being notified that the agent has not paid, he then pays or allows it to the agent. Grand Ave. Hotel Co. v. Friedman, 83 Mo. App. 491.

agent's credit, if any one's, is looked to, and that the agent looks to his principal for reimbursement.

It would scarcely be thought that the agent was authorized to pledge his principal's credit for railroad tickets, since they are practically never sold except for cash; yet it would be just as easy to regard such a purchase as an incidental act as the hiring of horses. Once adopted, the rule may easily be pushed to extreme lengths, and be urged to justify pledging the principal's credit for the personal supplies of the agent, upon the ground that, without them, the agent could not actually be in condition to execute his authority.

§ 878. — Authority to procure personal supplies.—But, as is pointed out in the preceding section, even though it be conceded that the agent may exercise incidental authority, the authority so included must be directly incident to the main power and not merely collateral to it; and personal supplies for the agent could rarely be deemed to be legitimate.⁶¹ As said in one case,⁶² "Supplies afforded for the personal use of the agent are not among the objects presumed to be included in the agency, but, if related to it at all, are merely collateral to it. It follows that authority to procure such supplies, on the credit of the principal, is not to be presumed, nor will the law presume a contract in such a case from the mere fact of furnishing such supplies." Hence it was held that from the mere fact that an agent employed to sell goods, has intrusted to his possession a horse and wagon of the principal as well as the goods for sale, the law will not imply a contract on the part of the principal to pay for the board of the agent or the keeping of the horse.⁶³ Nor is the principal responsible for a hotel bill, covering a period of several months and contracted by his traveling agent, without notice to or authority from the principal, it being the custom to pay cash.⁶⁴

⁶¹ Sampson v. Singer Mfg. Co., 5 S. Car. 465; Covington v. Newberger, 99 N. C. 523; Nicholson v. Pease, 61 Vt. 534; Grand Ave Hotel Co. v. Friedman, 83 Mo. App. 491.

⁶² Sampson v. Singer Mfg. Co., supra.

⁶³ Sampson v. Singer Mfg. Co., 5 S. C. 465; Grover & Baker S. Mach. Co. v. Polhemus, 34 Mich. 247.

Where an agent is furnished a horse by his principal, which the agent is to feed and take care of, the fact that the principal derives a profit from such use of the horse does not make him liable for the board and keeping of the horse procured by the agent without authority. Grover & Baker S. Mach. Co. v. Polhemus, supra.

⁶⁴ Covington v. Newberger, 99 N. C. 523. In Gilmour v. Snow, 27 Rep. Jud. Quebec, 39, a commercial traveler is held to have no right to pledge his samples to an innkeeper as security for the expense of medical attention furnished by the innkeeper and money supplied by him

§ 879. — No implied authority to sell his samples.—A traveling salesman has no implied authority to sell the samples furnished him by his principal for use in soliciting orders. His sale of them, therefore, and receipt of payment therefor, will be no bar to the recovery of their value by his principal from the purchaser.⁶⁵ Neither may he pledge them to secure payment for personal supplies furnished to himself.⁶⁶ There may, however, be such proof of custom as to sustain the sale.⁶⁷

§ 880. Implied authority to warrant quality.—The question of the implied power of an agent, authorized to sell, to warrant the quality of the goods sold, is a very important one, and one that has often arisen, but upon which the authorities are not harmonious. It has been attempted in many cases to settle the question by reference to the arbitrary distinction made between general and special agencies;⁶⁸ but while these rules may suffice to determine many of the questions arising between the principal and his agent, they are not satisfactory in considering the liability of the principal to third persons. This question must be determined by the same principles which govern the liability of the principal for the acts of the agent in other cases.

As has been already seen, the authority of the agent in a given case may include not only the powers expressly conferred upon him, but also (a) such powers as are reasonably necessary and proper to carry into effect the main power conferred; (b) such powers as are usually exercised in similar cases; and (c) such powers as, on the doctrine of estoppel, may fairly be deemed to be open in the particular case. An authority to warrant quality as a part of a power to sell might conceivably arise under any of these rules.

§ 881. — Authority to warrant as a necessary incident.—Many dicta are to be found in the books to the effect that authority to warrant quality is an incident to authority to sell. Such a proposition is, of course, unsound. Sales may be, and constantly are, made in many fields without either an express or an implied warranty, as the well settled maxim of our law, caveat emptor, sufficiently attests.

to the traveler to continue his journey; and the employer is, therefore, held to have the right to reclaim such merchandise from the inn-keeper.

⁶⁵ Kohn v. Washer, 64 Tex. 131, 53 Am. Rep. 745; Hibbard, Spencer, Bartlett & Co. v. Stein, 45 Ore. 507.

See also, Savage v. Pelton, 1 Colo. App. 148.

⁶⁶ Gilmour v. Snow, 27 Rap. Jud. Que. 39.

⁶⁷ Lauchheimer v. Jacobs, 126 Ga. 261, example, to sell at the end of the season.

⁶⁸ As in Gaar v. Rose, 3 Ind. App. 269.

At the same time, it is believed to be true that there may be cases, though they must be rare, in which the making of a warranty of quality is so practically essential to the making of the sale as, without proof of usage, to justify the inference of the power as a necessary incident of authority to sell. A number of cases have been put upon this ground.⁶⁹ Thus, an agent for a distant principal, endeavoring to introduce a new article in a certain community, and who could not sell it unless it was warranted, has been held to have authority to warrant as a necessary incident to the authority to sell.⁷⁰

§ 882. — Authority to warrant because warranty usual.—

Authority to warrant quality may be, and in a constantly increasing mass of cases is, deduced from the fact that the same or similar articles are usually sold with such a warranty. In this respect it may be said to be the rule that authority conferred upon an agent, whether general or special, to sell personal property carries with it, in the absence of countervailing circumstances known to the person with whom he deals, implied authority to make, in the name of the principal, such a warranty of the quality and condition of the property sold as is usually and ordinarily made in like sales of similar property at that time and place.⁷¹ Stated negatively he will have no such authority if it be

⁶⁹ See Hille v. Adair, 22 Ky. L. Rep. 742, 58 S. W. 697; Woodford v. McClenahan, 9 Ill. 85; Ahern v. Goodspeed, 72 N. Y. 108; Conkling v. Standard Oil Co., 138 Iowa, 596.

⁷⁰ Hille v. Adair, supra.

⁷¹ Gaines v. McKinley, 1 Ala. 446; Skinner v. Gunn, 9 Port. (Ala.) 305; Bradford v. Bush, 10 Ala. 386; Herring v. Skaggs, 62 Ala. 180, 34 Am. Rep. 4; Cocke v. Campbell, 13 Ala. 286; Croom v. Shaw, 1 Fla. 211; Huguley v. Morris, 65 Ga. 666; Woodford v. McClenahan, 4 Gilm. (Ill.) 85; Eau Claire Canning Co. v. Western Brokerage Co., 213 Ill. 561; Applegate v. Moffitt, 60 Ind. 104; Talmage v. Bierhauser, 103 Ind. 270; Murray v. Brooks, 41 Iowa, 45; Malory v. Elwood, 120 Iowa, 632; First N. Bank v. Robinson, 105 Iowa, 463; Bryant v. Moore, 26 Me. 84, 45 Am. Dec. 96; Randall v. Kehler, 60 Me. 37, 11 Am. Rep. 169; Upton v. Suffolk Mills, 11 Cush. (Mass.) 586, 59 Am. Dec. 163; Palmer v. Hatch, 46 Mo. 585; Hayner v. Churchill, 29

Mo. App. 676; Morris v. Bowen, 52 N. H. 416; Cooley v. Perrine, 41 N. J. L. 322, 32 Am. Rep. 210 (aff'd, 42 N. J. L. 623); Decker v. Fredericks, 47 N. J. L. 469; Ahern v. Goodspeed, 72 N. Y. 108; Tice v. Gallup, 2 Hun (N. Y.), 446; Smith v. Tracy, 36 N. Y. 79; Nelson v. Cowing, 6 Hill (N. Y.), 336; Scott v. McGrath, 7 Barb. (N. Y.) 53; Milburn v. Belloni, 34 Id. 607; Sanford v. Handy, 23 Wend. (N. Y.) 260; Cafre v. Lockwood, 22 App. Div. (N. Y.) 11; Reynolds v. Mayor, 39 App. Div. (N. Y.) 218; Bierman v. City Mills Co., 10 Misc. Rep. (N. Y.) 140; Ellner v. Priestley, 39 Misc. Rep. (N. Y.) 535; Manley v. Ackler, 76 Hun (N. Y.), 546; Hunter v. Jameson, 6 Ired. (N. C.) L. 252; Davis v. Burnett, 4 Jones (N. C.), L. 71, 67 Am. Dec. 263; Williamson v. Canaday, 3 Ired. (N. C.) L. 349; Ezell v. Franklin, 2 Sneed (Tenn.), 236; McAlpin v. Cassidy, 17 Tex. 449; Deming v. Chase, 48 Vt. 382; Fay v. Richmond, 43 Vt. 25; Reese v. Bates, 94 Va.

not usual,⁷² and, of course, as will be seen,⁷³ he will have no authority to give an unusual warranty.

The question of what is usual in such a case is ordinarily a question of fact to be determined by the jury,⁷⁴ but in certain cases the court will take judicial notice of it.⁷⁵ The usage must be so well settled, notorious and continuous, as to raise the legal presumption that it was known to buyer and seller, and that the sale was made in reference to it.⁷⁶ If it is purely local, the principal may rebut the presumption of knowledge by showing that, in fact, he did not know of it, in which case he will not be bound.⁷⁷ Proof of the usage is admissible in behalf of either party.⁷⁸

§ 883. — Authority to give warranties which the law would imply.—It has, moreover, been declared in several cases that, if the sale is one in which, had it been made by the principal in person, the law would imply a warranty, e. g., a warranty of fitness for the contemplated use, an express warranty to the same effect, given by the agent, must be deemed to be within the scope of his implied authority.⁷⁹

§ 884. Authority to warrant in accordance with descriptions furnished by principal.—Where the principal furnishes the agent with written or printed circulars, or other descriptive matter relating to the goods to be sold, for the purpose of having these delivered or ex-

321; Pickert v. Marston, 68 Wis. 465, 60 Am. Rep. 876; Boothby v. Scales, 27 Wis. 626; Larson v. Aultman & Taylor Co., 86 Wis. 281, 39 Am. St. R. 893; Westurn v. Page, 94 Wis. 251; Waupaca Electric Light Co. v. Milwaukee Electric Ry. Co., 112 Wis. 469; Schuchardt v. Allens, 1 Wall. (U. S.) 359, 17 L. Ed. 642; Taggart v. Stanbery, 2 McLean (U. S. C. C.), 543; Graves v. Legg, 2 Hurl. & N. 210; Dingle v. Hare, 7 C. B. (N. S.) 145; Alexander v. Gibson, 2 Camp. 555.

After the sale is completed. the agent would have no implied authority to add a warranty. Fletcher v. Nelson, 6 N. D. 94.

⁷² See Piller v. Piser, 67 Misc. 445 (a salesman in a furniture store, selling articles open to view, has no implied authority to warrant a uniformity of color in a bed room suite); Dunham v. Salmon, 130 Wis. 164 (a warranty that a stallion was a good foal getter and would breed more than sixty per cent. of the mares served, held, beyond implied power of agent in absence of a custom to so warrant).

⁷³ See post, § 889.

⁷⁴ Herring v. Skaggs, supra; Pickert v. Marston, supra; Westurn v. Page, supra; Reese v. Bates, supra; Hayner v. Churchill, supra. See also, Reynolds v. Mayor, supra.

⁷⁵ Ahern v. Goodspeed, supra; Talmage v. Bierhausa, supra. See also Reese v. Bates, supra.

⁷⁶ Herring v. Skaggs, supra.

⁷⁷ Pickert v. Marston, supra; see ante, § 281.

⁷⁸ Pickert v. Marston, supra.

⁷⁹ In Laumur v. Dolph, 145 Mo. App. 78 (sale of an automobile) the court said: "The defendants impliedly warranted that the chattel was fit for the purpose intended, and no special authority in the agent, who made the sale, to give such warranty need be shown."

hibited to prospective buyers, or otherwise used as a means of inducing sales, the agent would doubtless have implied authority to warrant the goods in accordance with any statements of fact contained in such circulars, provided such statements, if made under the same circumstances by the principal in person, would constitute warranties.⁸⁰

§ 885. Illustrations of rules—Commercial paper—Agricultural implements—Sample, etc.—Thus in a New York case, the court said it was within their judicial observation from many cases before them, that a warranty of commercial character was the usual accompaniment of a sale, upon the New York stock exchange, of promissory notes having the guise of commercial paper, and it was held that an agent authorized to sell such paper had implied authority to make such a warranty.⁸¹

So the court will take judicial notice that it is usual and customary in ordering goods of a dealer, through his agent, to require a warranty of quality, where the goods are not present and subject to the inspection of the purchaser, and authority to make such a warranty will be implied.⁸²

Again, sales of implements, machinery and similar articles by the manufacturers are so generally accompanied by a warranty of good workmanship, sound materials, and general fitness for the purpose for which they are intended, that an agent commissioned to sell them, will it is held, be presumed to have authority to make such a warranty.⁸³

So such an agent has been held to have implied authority to sell upon trial and to give the purchaser the privilege of returning the machine if not satisfactory;⁸⁴ and may sell upon condition that the sale shall not be consummated if the machine does not do good work;⁸⁵ and, having sold upon condition that, if the machine does not prove satisfactory to the purchaser, he shall return it, the agent may waive such return.⁸⁶

⁸⁰ Smilie v. Hobbs, 64 N. H. 75; Levis v. Pope Motor Car Co., 202 N. Y. 402.

⁸¹ Ahern v. Goodspeed, 72 N. Y. 108, 114.

⁸² Talmage v. Bierhause, 103 Ind. 270.

⁸³ (Farm implements) Murray v. Brooks, 41 Iowa, 45; McCormick v. Kelly, 28 Minn. 135; Flatt v. Osborne & Co., 33 Minn. 98; Aultman v. Falkum, 51 Minn. 562; Gaar v. Patterson, 65 Minn. 449; Case Threshing Mach. Co. v. McKinnon, 82 Minn. 75; Parsons Band Cutter, etc., Co. v. Haub, 83 Minn. 180; Canham v. Plano Mfg. Co., 3 N. D. 229; Smith v. Williams, 29 Ind. App. 336. (Furnaces) Boynton Furnace Co. v. Clark, 42 Minn. 335. (Flour) Loomis v. Vawter, 8 Kan. App. 437.

⁸⁴ Deering v. Thom, 29 Minn. 120. See also, Olson v. Aultman Co., 81 Minn. 11; Reeves v. Cress, 80 Minn. 466.

⁸⁵ Oster v. Mickley, 35 Minn. 245.

⁸⁶ Pitsinowsky v. Beardsley, 37 Iowa, 9; Warder v. Robertson, 75 Iowa, 585.

An agent authorized to sell goods by sample would doubtless have implied authority to make the warranty usual in such cases, that the goods sold are equal to the sample.⁸⁷

§ 886. ——— Horses.—Whether an agent employed to sell a horse has implied authority to warrant his soundness, has been much discussed and the authorities are not harmonious. Thus it has been held that an agent of a horse dealer has such implied authority, and that it cannot be affected by private instructions from the principal not to warrant;⁸⁸ but that the agent of a private individual or a special agent has no such implied authority, even in the absence of any restrictions.⁸⁹ On the other hand, it has been decided that unless expressly forbidden, the agent would have such an implied authority;⁹⁰ and in still other cases, the authority has been declared in general terms.⁹¹

But no satisfactory reason is perceived why the question of the warranty of a horse should stand upon any different basis than the warranty of any other chattel, namely, that an agent authorized to sell may give a warranty of quality if, and only if, such a warranty is usually given on similar sales at that time and place.⁹² It would doubtless be ⁸⁷ Andrews v. Kneeland, 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 354; Dayton v. Hooglund, 39 Ohio St. 671; Schuchardt v. Allens, 1 Wall. (U. S.) 359, 17 L. Ed. 642; Murray v. Smith, 4 Daly (N. Y.), 277; Dreyfus v. Goss, 67 Kan. 57.

See also Ellinger v. Rawlings, 12 Ind. App. 336.

⁸⁸ Howard v. Sheward, L. R. 2 C. P. 148.

⁸⁹ Brady v. Todd, 9 C. B. (N. S.) 592; Cooley v. Perrine, 41 N. J. L. 322, 32 Am. Rep. 210, aff'd 42 N. J. L. 623. The decision in this case was based solely on the distinction between a general and a special agency.

See also Court v. Snyder, 2 Ind. App. 440, 50 Am. St. R. 247; Brier v. Mankey, 47 Ind. App. 7.

⁹⁰ Densing v. Chase, 48 Vt. 382; Tice v. Gallup, 2 Hun (N. Y.), 446.

⁹¹ See Nelson v. Cowing, 6 Hill (N. Y.), 336; Scott v. McGrath, 7 Barb. (N. Y.) 53; Ezell v. Franklin, 2 Sneed (Tenn.), 236; Skinner v. Gunn, 9 Port. (Ala.) 305; Lane v. Dudley, 2 Murph. (N. C.) 119, 5 Am.

Dec. 523; Gaines v. McKinley, 1 Ala. 446; Helyear v. Hawke, 5 Esp. 72; Alexander v. Gibson, 2 Camp. 555; Bradford v. Bush, 10 Ala. 386; Savage v. Eakins, 31 Ill. App. 267; Cochran v. Chitwood, 59 Ill. 53; Elison v. Simmons, 6 Pen. (Del.) 200.

Most of these cases rely for authority on § 102 of Story's Agency which however has been questioned or qualified by most of the subsequent editors. See 7th Ed. by Redfield & Herrick, and the 9th by Mr. C. P. Greenough.

In Belmont's Ex'r v. Talbot, 21 Ky. Law Rep. 453, 51 S. W. 588, it was held that the superintendent of a stock farm would have authority to warrant soundness. "It was at least within the apparent scope of his authority. He was not a special agent, but a general agent having charge of his principal's business in this state."

See also, First Nat. Bank v. Robinson, 105 Iowa, 463.

⁹² See Samuel v. Bartee, 53 Mo. App. 587; Westburn v. Page, 94 Wis. 251.

much easier to establish a custom to warrant in sales by horse dealers than in sales by other persons.

§ 887. — Limitations upon custom.—Where a general custom to warrant is recognized or proof of such a custom is made, evidence is not admissible to prove that it was not the custom of this particular principal to warrant, unless it be shown that the purchaser had notice of that fact,⁹³ or that the agent was expressly forbidden to warrant, unless notice of such prohibition be brought home to the purchaser.⁹⁴

§ 888. — Evidence that the authority of the agent to warrant was limited to the giving of a particular written or printed warranty only, furnished him by his principal, is not admissible, unless it be also shown that the purchaser had knowledge of the limitation;⁹⁵ but where the purchaser has knowledge that such a warranty was furnished, he cannot accept an oral warranty from the agent, different in its terms, and require the principal to comply with such oral warranty.⁹⁶

Evidence that it was the seller's custom to give a printed warranty only would not be admissible to rebut the general inference,⁹⁷ nor would evidence of any local custom not prevailing at the place of sale;⁹⁸ but a local custom there prevailing upon which the parties relied, or a general custom in contemplation of which they presumptively dealt, would be admissible.

§ 889. Limits of this rule—No extraordinary warranty.—But this

⁹³ Murray v. Brooks, 41 Iowa, 45.

⁹⁴ Boothby v. Scales, 27 Wis. 626; Reynolds v. Mayor, 39 N. Y. App. Div. 218.

See also Reese v. Bates, 94 Va. 321; Hayner v. Churchill, 29 Mo. App. 676.

⁹⁵ Murray v. Brooks, 41 Iowa, 45; First Nat. Bank v. Robinson, 105 Iowa, 463; Parsons, etc., Co. v. Haub, 83 Minn. 180.

⁹⁶ Wood Mow. & Reap. Machine Co. v. Crow, 70 Iowa, 340; limiting Eadie v. Ashbaugh, 44 Iowa, 519, and Farrar v. Peterson, 52 Iowa, 420. Where the purchaser is furnished with a printed warranty which expressly provides that the agent has no authority to change or vary its terms, such provision is a sufficient notice to the purchaser of the limitations upon the agent's authority. Furneaux v. Easterly, 36 Kan. 539.

Notice from blank not used or from previous order not accepted.—But where the purchaser had first given an order upon a printed form which contained a statement that agents were authorized to make contracts only on such a form, and that order was rejected, whereupon the purchaser made an oral contract with the agent, it was held that the purchaser was not bound, as to this last contract, by the notice contained in the previous one which had not been consummated. Olson v. Aultman, 81 Minn. 11, citing Gaar v. Patterson, 65 Minn. 449. See also Challenge Co. v. Kerr, 93 Mich. 328. But see contra Deane v. Everett, 90 Iowa, 242.

⁹⁷ Flatt v. Osborne, 33 Minn. 98.

⁹⁸ Flatt v. Osborne, supra.

rule authorizing the usual warranties is not to be extended beyond the limits prescribed by it. It cannot, therefore, apply to sales of property not usually sold with such a warranty, nor to sales made under such circumstances that such a warranty is not usually given, nor can it give countenance to any unusual or extraordinary warranty.

Thus, though an agent authorized to sell liquors may warrant their quality and condition, he has no implied power to warrant that they will not be seized for violation of the revenue laws;⁹⁹ an agent employed to sell flour, cannot without express authority, warrant that it will keep sweet during a sea voyage from Massachusetts to California;¹ nor has a traveling salesman authorized to sell fish any implied authority to warrant that it would keep sound for any particular time.²

And though an agent employed to sell negotiable notes would have implied authority, when necessary, to indorse them, he would have no implied authority to make an additional guarantee of payment.³

Nor has an agent authorized to sell safes implied authority to warrant that they are burglar proof.⁴

The implied authority must, moreover, be confined to warranties given respecting the goods the agent sells, and it will not extend to goods subsequently sold by the principal in person.⁵

§ 890. Authority to make representations concerning goods.—Even though not taking the form of an express warranty, authority to make representations concerning the goods would in many cases be implied. Thus, if the principal should send an agent out to introduce and sell a new article, as, for example, a new machine, a new article of food, a new medicine, and the like, authority to answer questions, or to make statements, concerning such matters as would naturally and ordinarily arise under such circumstances, would properly be implied. Questions respecting the purpose of the article, the manner in

⁹⁹ Palmer v. Hatch, 46 Mo. 585.

¹ Upton v. Suffolk County Mills, 11 Cush. (Mass.) 586, 59 Am. Dec. 163.

² Troy Grocery Co. v. Potter, 139 Ala. 359. An agent for the sale of Alaskan salmon has no implied authority to warrant that it is as good as that caught anywhere. Reid v. Alaska Packing Co., 47 Oreg. 215.

³ Graul v. Strutzel, 53 Iowa, 712, 36 Am. Rep. 250. Authority to sell a claim in judgment does not justify a warranty of the validity of the claim. Lipscomb v. Kitrell, 11 Humph. (Tenn.) 256.

⁴ Herring v. Skaggs, 62 Ala. 180, 34 Am. Rep. 4, s. c. 73 Ala. 446.

⁵ Wait v. Borne, 123 N. Y. 592.

So though an agent who sells a "stacker" may warrant the "stacker," he has no implied authority to warrant that an engine already owned by the buyer (though previously bought of the principal) has power enough to run the "stacker." Second Nat. Bank v. Adams (Ky.), 93 S. W. 671. See also Case Mill Mfg. Co. v. Vickers, 147 Ky. 396.

which it might be safely handled, the conditions and circumstances under which it could be properly used, and the like, would fall within this principle,⁶ and would, if false, afford whatever remedy would ordinarily be available for misrepresentations.

Even though the agent may not be deemed to be authorized to make representations, but he nevertheless does so as part of the sale, the principal may be affected by them, either in an action for damages or for rescission, as will be seen in a later chapter; but that is not the question here under consideration.

§ 891. Authority to warrant title.—An agent authorized to sell goods, as the goods of his principal, would doubtless be deemed to have implied authority to warrant his principal's title. Warranties of this sort are usual, and would be implied if the principal himself were to offer for sale goods in his own possession.⁷

The same principles would also doubtless apply to warranties against incumbrances upon the title of the goods sold.⁸

§ 892. Authority to advertise the property.—It is clearly not within the implied authority of the ordinary agent employed to sell property to bind the principal to third persons by contracts to pay for advertising the property to be sold.⁹ Presumptively, in the ordinary

⁶ In Haynor Mfg. Co. v. Davis, 147 N. C. 267, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 193, a salesman represented a certain "tonic" as being non-alcoholic, and guaranteed that a buyer, in a prohibition territory, would be indemnified for liquor licenses required. Held, that the manufacturer, knowing the character of the tonic, was bound by his agent's representations although no express authorization to make such statements was proven. In Darks v. Scudders-Gale Grocer Co., 146 Mo. App. 246, a salesman sold ginger extract, now alleged to contain wood alcohol, representing it to be a proper medicine and the buyer died of the effects. Said the court: "The defendant permitted the agent to go into the field and solicit orders. In soliciting business for the defendant, questions would naturally come up concerning the quality and usefulness of the articles the agent was attempting to sell, and therefore statements made by the agent concerning the quality of the articles and the purpose for which they were intended must be within his apparent authority." See also Doylestown Agr. Co. v. Brackett, — Me. —, 84 Atl. 146.

⁷ See 2 Mechem on Sales, § 1300 et seq.

⁸ See Colvin v. Peck, 62 Conn. 155. A general agent of defendant authorized a special agent to sell a cargo of imported coal, instructing him to make the best terms he could, and informing him that the duty had been paid. The latter agent sold with an express warranty that the coal was free from incumbrance, whereas in fact it was still subject to duty. Held, that the circumstances and the fact that the law would raise an implied warranty of title justified this warranty. North American Com'l Co. v. North American Transp. Co., 52 Wash. 502.

⁹ See Tarpy v. Bernheimer, 16 N. Y. Supp. 870 (beer salesman no im-case, that is a matter which the principal will arrange for himself. The authority of a general manager might be wider, as will be seen in a following section;¹⁰ and an agent authorized to sell goods of a sort usually sold only by some form of public advertising, or to sell goods in a manner usually involving such advertising, and the like, might well be found to have implied authority to pursue that method.¹¹ It would doubtless be easier in many cases to find an implied undertaking to reimburse the agent for expenses which he might incur in advertising, than to find implied authority to pledge the principal's credit directly.

§ 893. No implied authority to give credit.—In the absence of anything to indicate the contrary, it will be presumed that the sale is to be for cash in hand. An agent authorized merely to sell a chattel has, therefore, no implied authority to give credit, unless there is a valid usage to that effect at that time and place.¹²

A general authority to prescribe terms, or an established course of dealing, may, of course, justify a different conclusion.

§ 894. No authority to appropriate to his own use.—An agent entrusted with goods to sell for his principal, has no implied authority to sell or deliver them in payment of his own debt, or to pledge them as security for his own debt, and persons dealing with such an agent are bound to take notice of this limitation of his authority.¹³ Such plied authority); Brooklyn Daily Eagle v. Dellman, 30 N. Y. Misc. 747 (soliciting salesman no implied authority to agree with a buyer that his principal would advertise the wares in plaintiff's newspaper); United States Bedding Co. v. Andre, — Ark. —, 150 S. W. 413 (traveling salesman no implied authority to charge his principal for advertising goods upon bill boards for a period of six months at an expense of $44). See also National Cash Reg. Co. v. Ison, 94 Ga. 463.

¹⁰ See post, § 989.

¹¹ In Ayer v. Bell Mfg. Co., 147 Mass. 46, defendant was seeking to introduce a new soap; it was already advertising it widely; and gifts were offered to consumers who used the largest quantity up to a certain date. Plaintiff, a wholesale grocer, wrote to defendant, asking what terms and inducements were offered to jobbers. In response defendant sent an agent who, in order to get plaintiff's order, agreed that the advertisement should be continued until a certain date. Held, that the jury might properly find that this was within his authority.

¹² Payne v. Potter, 9 Iowa, 549; May v. Mitchell, 5 Humph. (Tenn.) 365; Burks v. Hubbard, 69 Ala. 379; School District v. Aetna Ins. Co., 62 Me. 330; State v. Delafield, 8 Paige (N. Y.), 527, aff'd 26 Wend. 192; Norton v. Nevills, 174 Mass. 243; Kops v. Smith, 137 Mich. 28; State v. Chilton, 49 W. Va. 453. See also Tyler v. O'Reilly, 59 Hun. 618; Bowles v. Rice, 107 Va. 51. That a factor may sell on credit, see post, Chapter on Factors.

¹³ Wheeler & Wilson Mfg. Co. v. Givan, 65 Mo. 89; Holton v. Smith, 7 N. H. 446; Gould v. Blodgett, 61

authority may however be expressly conferred, or it may be inferred from the fact that the agent was, with the principal's knowledge and consent, using the principal's property and credit, generally, in the agent's behalf.¹⁴

In other cases, however, a creditor who receives the goods under such an arrangement with the agent, though acting in good faith and in ignorance that the goods do not belong to the agent, acquires no title as against the principal.¹⁵

§ 895. No implied authority to exchange or barter.—Mere authority to sell gives an agent no authority to exchange the chattels for other property, or to take anything else than money in payment for them,¹⁶ though such an authority may, of course, be conferred expressly or be fairly inferred from the language of the power.¹⁷ Such an agent cannot therefore, take payment in notes, checks or other paper.¹⁸ And having received payment in money, he has no author-

N. H. 115; Whitney v. State Bank, 7 Wis. 620; Burks v. Hubbard, 69 Ala. 379; Stewart v. Woodward, 50 Vt. 78, 28 Am. Rep. 458; Levi v. Booth, 58 Md. 395, 42 Am. Rep. 332; Williams v. Johnston, 92 N. C. 532, 53 Am. Rep. 428; Parsons v. Webb, 9 Greenl. (Me.) 38, 22 Am. Dec. 220; Hook v. Crowe, 100 Me. 399; Greenwood v. Burns, 50 Mo. 52; Butts v. Newton, 29 Wis. 632; Rodick v. Coburn, 68 Me. 170; McCormick v. Keith, 8 Neb. 143; Hart v. Hudson, 6 Duer (N. Y.), 294; Hurley v. Watson, 68 Mich. 531, s. c. 92 Mich. 121; Wilson v. Wilson-Rogers, 181 Pa. 80; Hodgson v. Raphael, 105 Ga. 480; Talboys v. Boston, 46 Minn. 144; Low v. Moore, 31 Tex. Civ. App. 460; Grooms v. Neff Harness Co., 79 Ark. 401; Smith v. James, 53 Ark. 135; Miller v. Springfield Wagon Co., 6 Ind. Ter. 115; Sykes v. Giles, 5 M. & W. 645; Scott v. Irving, 1 B. & Ad. 605; Catterall v. Hindle, L. R. 1 C. P. 187.

¹⁴ Stewart v. Cowles, 67 Minn. 184.

¹⁵ Grooms v. Neff Harness Co., supra; Smith v. James, supra; Warner v. Martin, 11 How. (U. S.) 209, 13 L. Ed. 667; Belton Compress Co. v. Belton Brick Mfg. Co., 64 Tex. 337; De Bouchout v. Goldsmid, 5 Ves. Jun. 211, and cases above cited. An agent has no authority to agree to pay his private debt from the proceeds of the sale of his principal's goods. Rice v. Lyndborough Glass Co., 60 N. H. 195.

¹⁶ Trudo v. Anderson, 10 Mich. 357, 81 Am. Dec. 795; Wheeler & Wilson Mfg. Co. v. Givan, 65 Mo. 89; Taylor v. Starkey, 59 N. H. 142; Brown v. Smith, 67 N. C. 245; Victor Sewing Mach. Co. v. Heller, 44 Wis. 265; Kent v. Borstein, 12 Allen (Mass.), 342; City of Cleveland v. State Bank, 16 Ohio St. 236, 88 Am. Dec. 445; Block v. Dundin, 83 App. Div. 539; Beck v. Donohue, 27 Misc. 230; Jones v. Richards, 59 Misc. 645; Hayes v. Colby, 65 N. H. 142. See also Russell v. Cox, 18 Ky. Law Rep. 1087; Kearns v. Nickes, 80 Conn. 23, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1118, 19 Ann. Cas. 429; Starr Piano Co. v. Morrison (Mich.), 124 N. W. 562; Guerraireiro v. Pelle, 3 B. & Ald. 616.

¹⁷ Gaus v. Hathaway, 63 Ill. App. 149.

¹⁸ Buckwalter v. Craig, 55 Mo. 71. A direction to sell for cash does not permit the agent to take a check payable the day after the sale, even though that be the customary way

ity to exchange the money with a third person for other money, and if he does so and receives a counterfeit bill, his principal may recover the money given for it;¹⁹ or, having authority to receive notes, he has no authority to accept goods in payment of the notes.²⁰

§ 896. No authority to buy goods.—An agent authorized to sell has thereby no implied authority to buy goods;²¹ especially, as has been seen,²² to buy the goods he is authorized to sell.²³ Authority to buy, however, may as in other cases arise from the conduct or acquiescence of the principal.²⁴

§ 897. No authority to pledge goods.—An authority to sell goods clearly contemplates an actual transfer of the general ownership; and, as has been seen,²⁵ a transfer of such ownership for cash only. Mere authority to sell, therefore, does not justify a pledge,²⁶ even on the principal's account,²⁷ and a fortiori not on the agent's account.²⁸ Except as modified by the Factors Acts, this rule is not affected by the fact that the other parties did not know that the agent was merely such, and supposed him to be the owner of the goods.²⁹

§ 898. No authority to mortgage.—For reasons similar to those that rebut the implication of an authority to pledge, an authority to

at the place of sale of making what are there called cash sales. Hall v. Storrs, 7 Wis. 253. An agent who takes check payable ten days after date is liable if bank fails before payment. Harlan v. Ely, 68 Cal. 522.

¹⁹ Kent v. Borstein, supra.

²⁰ J. A. Fay, etc., Co. v. Causey, 131 N. C. 350; Woodruff v. Am. Road Mach. Co., 23 Ky. Law Rep. 1551. See also Russell v. Cox, supra.

²¹ Gates Iron Works v. Denver Engineering Works Company, 17 Colo. App. 15; Keyes v. Union Pac. Tea Co., 81 Vt. 420.

A fortiori, no authority to buy goods for third persons on his principal's credit. Cowan v. Sargent Mfg. Co., 141 Mich. 87.

²² See ante, § 179.

²³ See cases cited ante, § 179; McIntosh-Huntington Co. v. Rice, 13 Colo. App. 393.

This question is more fully discussed in Book IV, Chap. II.

²⁴ Witcher v. Gibson, 15 Colo. App. 163.

²⁵ See ante, § 893.

²⁶ Heilbronn v. McAleenan, 16 N. Y. St. Rep. 957, 1 N. Y. Supp. 875; Anderson v. McAleenan, 15 Daly, 444. See also, Hawxhurst v. Rathgeb, 119 Cal. 531, 63 Am. St. R. 142.

²⁷ Shaw v. Saranac Horsenail Co., 144 N. Y. 220. See also, Bonita v. Mosquera, 2 Bosw. (N. Y.) 401.

²⁸ Wycoff v. Davis, 127 Iowa, 399; Read v. Cumberland Tel. Co., 93 Tenn. 482; Wheeler & Wilson v. Givan, 65 Mo. 89; Henry v. Marvin, 3 E. D. Smith (N. Y.), 71; Merchants' Bank v. Livingstone, 74 N. Y. 223; Taliaferro v. Baltimore First Nat. Bank, 71 Md. 200; Ulman v. Myrick, 93 Ala. 532; Thurber v. Cecil Nat. Bank, 52 Fed. 513; Hawxhurst v. Rathgeb, supra; Haynes v. Foster, 2 Cr. & M. 237. See also, Ryan v. Stowell, 31 Neb. 121; Morsh v. Lessig, 100 Pac. 431.

²⁹ See post, Book IV, Chap. VII; Bott v. McCoy, 20 Ala. 578, 56 Am. Dec. 223; Voss & Co. v. Robertson, Brown & Co. 46 Ala. 483; Costikyan v. Sloan, 33 App. D. C. 420.

sell goods raises no implication of an authority to mortgage them.³⁰ Clearly is this so where the agent undertakes to mortgage them as his own, or to secure his own debt.³¹

§ 899. No authority to promise commissions for sub-sales.—An agent authorized to sell his principal's goods, and not being of the rank of a manager, general sales agent, and the like, has ordinarily no implied authority to bind his principal by a promise to pay commissions to third persons for sales made by them for the principal;³² nor having property to be sold for cash, like railroad tickets, has he implied power to deliver it to a third person to sell, to be paid for when sold, and to bind the principal by promising such third person a commission upon sales made by him.³³

§ 900. Authority to guarantee exclusive markets, particular prices, etc.—An agent authorized to take orders for his principal's goods of a certain sort, i. e., eye-glasses, may, it has been held, bind his principal by an agreement that the latter will give the buyer the exclusive right to handle his goods in that place, and will not, during that period sell similar goods to any other dealer in the same town;³⁴ but it has also been held that he cannot agree that his principal will not afterward sell to others similar goods for a less price.³⁵

If the first case is sound, its doctrine must certainly be confined to goods and places as to which a single representative might be deemed usual and sufficient.

So it has been held that an agent, authorized to sell threshing machinery, has no implied authority to bind his principal to procure threshing contracts from other persons;³⁶ and that an agent authorized to sell cigarettes and tobacco has no implied authority to agree, as an inducement to the purchase, that the buyer will not suffer from

³⁰ Edgerly v. Cover, 106 Iowa, 670; Kiefer v. Klinsick, 144 Ind. 46.

³¹ Switzer v. Wilvers, 24 Kan. 384, 36 Am. Rep. 259; Barry v. Adams, 3 Allen (Mass.), 493; Ryan v. Stowell, 31 Neb. 121; Reed v. Kinsey, 98 Ill. App. 364.

³² Atlee v. Fink, 75 Mo. 100, 42 Am. Rep. 385; National Cash Register Co. v. Ison, 94 Ga. 463. See also, Shoninger v. Peabody, 59 Conn. 588; National Cash Register Co. v. Hagan, 37 Tex. Civ. App. 281.

In Cooper v. Coad, 91 Neb. 840, an agent sent into a locality, in which he was a stranger, to sell valuable horses, was held to have authority to make arrangement for the assistance of a local dealer.

³³ Frank v. Ingalls, 41 Ohio St. 560.

³⁴ Keith v. Hirschberg Optical Co., 48 Ark. 138. To same effect (the goods being crockery, etc., manufactured by the seller) is Watkins v. Morley, 2 Will. (Tex. Civ. App.) 634.

³⁵ Anderson v. Bruner, 112 Mass. 14.

³⁶ Forbis v. Reeves, 109 Ill. App. 98.

the loss of rebates which would have been allowed to him by another dealer for selling the latter's goods.³⁷

§ 901. No implied authority to compromise, release principal's rights, or pay his debts.—Neither has such an agent any implied authority to release a debt due to his principal;³⁸ nor has a mere clerk employed in his principal's store, or a mere traveling salesman authorized to solicit orders, any implied authority to compound or compromise debts due to his employer;³⁹ or to sell goods at wholesale prices for a debt due from his principal;⁴⁰ or to deliver goods in payment of, or as security for, a note signed by his employer.⁴¹ So an agent, authorized to sell machinery—for example, a harvesting machine, has implied authority to release one of his principal's customers from liability for the price of goods purchased and to accept in his place the customer's successor in the business;⁴² nor, where goods have been sold upon conditions retaining title as security, would he have any implied authority to consent to acts which would waive or defeat that security.⁴³

§ 902. Authority to rescind the sale.—Authority to make or negotiate a sale is ordinarily exhausted when the sale contemplated is made.⁴⁴ After the contract of sale made or negotiated by the agent has become complete therefore, the agent has ordinarily no implied authority to rescind or discharge it, or to receive back the goods, or to otherwise alter or amend the terms of the sale.⁴⁵

³⁷ Braun v. Hess, 187 Ill. 283, 79 Am. St. Rep. 221.

³⁸ Smith v. Perry, 29 N. J. L. 74.

³⁹ Powell's Adm'r v. Henry, 27 Ala. 612.

Traveling salesman or "drummer" has no implied authority to compromise debts due for goods previously sold by him, or to agree that later goods may be applied to satisfy alleged defects existing in goods previously sold. Lindow v. Cohn, 5 Cal. App. 388; Scaritt v. Hudspeth, 19 Okla. 429, 14 Ann. Cas. 857.

⁴⁰ Lee v. Tinges, 7 Md. 215; Hampton v. Matthews, 14 Pa. 105.

⁴¹ Nash v. Drew, 5 Cush. (Mass.) 422.

⁴² Ludwig v. Gorsuch, 154 Pa. 413.

⁴³ McEntire, etc., Co. v. Buggy Co., 172 Ala. 637.

⁴⁴ Stilwell v. Mut. L. Ins. Co., 72

N. Y. 385; Luke v. Griggs, 4 Dak. 287; Ahern v. Baker, 34 Minn. 98; Fullerton v. McLaughlin, 70 Hun (N. Y.), 568; Robinson v. Nipp, 20 Ind. App. 156.

⁴⁵ Adams v. Fraser, 27 C. C. A. 108, 82 Fed. 21; Diversy v. Kellogg, 44 Ill. 114, 92 Am. Dec. 154; Brigham v. Hibbard, 28 Or. 386; Fletcher v. Nelson, 6 N. D. 94; Andrews v. Himrod, 37 Ill. App. 124; Fullerton v. McLaughlin, 70 Hun (N. Y.), 568; American Sales Book Co. v. Whitaker, 100 Ark. 360, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 91; Mange-Wiener Co. v. Patton Drug Co., 27 Pa. Super. 315; Sumwalt Ice Co. v. Knickerbocker Ice Co., 112 Md. 437.

Where an agent who has taken an order wrongfully alters it before transmission to his principal, the alteration is to be treated as the act of a stranger and will not in-

As has been seen, however, an agent having general authority to sell may, in many cases, make the right to return the property if the buyer is not satisfied, an express condition of the sale;⁴⁶ and an agent, having a general and continuing authority to sell, would also doubtless, in many cases, be deemed to have implied authority to release a dissatisfied purchaser, even though no such condition had been expressly incorporated in the contract.⁴⁷

§ 903. Authority to waive performance of terms of contract.—As has been seen in an earlier section,⁴⁸ it has been held that an agent authorized to sell machinery—for example, a harvesting machine, has implied authority to give a prospective purchaser an opportunity to try the machine, and to agree that if the machine is not satisfactory it may be returned.⁴⁹ The printed forms of contract, with which such agents are supplied by their principals, now quite commonly provide for return in case the machine shall be found defective, and also usually provide that, before the machine is returned, a notice of the defect shall be given to the seller or the agent, and an opportunity afforded to remedy it. Under such contracts, it has been held that the agent, having actual notice of the defect, may waive the formal return of the property to himself;⁵⁰ and, where the contract provides for no-validate the contract. Equitable Mfg. Co. v. Allen, 76 Vt. 22, 104 Am. St. R. 915.

Obviously a mere agent to deliver goods sold by the principal has thereby no authority to alter the terms of the sale. Schenck v. Griffith, 74 Ark. 557.

⁴⁶ See ante, § 858. Where the buyer, in pursuance of the contract, may return the article, a return or tender to the agent who made the sale and who is still acting as such will ordinarily be held sufficient. Parsons Band-Cutter & Self-Feeder Co. v. Mallinger, 122 Iowa, 703; Clydesdale Horse Co. v. Bennett, 52 Mo. App. 333; Adrian v. Lane, 13 S. C. 183.

⁴⁷ See ante, §§ 715, 858.

See also Palmer v. Roath, 86 Mich. 602; Herpolsheimer v. Acme Harvester Co., 83 Neb. 53.

In Peterson v. Walter A. Wood, etc., Co., 97 Iowa, 148, 59 Am. St. R. 399, it is said: "Did the agent have authority to agree with plaintiff for a return of the notes? It appears he had authority to sell, to set up, and to see that the machine worked properly. There is no question as to his authority to have received the machine back when he discovered that it did not work properly, unless he could remedy the defect, which he did not do. It seems to us, under such circumstances, his right to restore that which plaintiff had given for the machine is not to be doubted. Everything that the agent did, touching the setting up and operating the machine, and the promise to return the notes, was in the line of an attempt to complete the sale, and within his authority. Springfield Engine Co. v. Kennedy, 7 Ind. App. 502."

⁴⁸ Ante, § 858.

⁴⁹ Deering v. Thom, 29 Minn. 120. See also Olson v. Aultman, 81 Minn. 11; Marion Mfg. Co. v. Harding, 155 Ind. 648.

⁵⁰ Pitsinowsky v. Beardsley, 37 Iowa, 9; Warder v. Robertson, 75

tice in writing, the agent who has actual notice may waive the requirement of a written notice so far as he is concerned,⁵¹ though he cannot necessarily waive notice to his principal where that also is required.⁵²

Having thus the authority to waive, its exercise by the agent may be express, or it may be inferred from the fact that he has proceeded to do or act without requiring the performance in question.

§ 904. — Alteration of contract.—Such a sales-agent, while he could not of course surrender any of the substantial rights of his principal, would doubtless in many cases be held to have implied au-

Iowa, 585; McCormick Harvesting Mach. Co. v. Brower, 88 Iowa, 607; Osborne & Co. v. Backer, 81 Iowa, 375; Blaess v. Nichols & Shepard Co., 115 Iowa, 373; Massilon Engine Co. v. Shirmer, 122 Iowa, 699; Kenney v. Anderson (Ky.), 81 S. W. 663, 26 Ky. L. Rep. 367; McCormick Harvesting Mach. Co. v. Hiatt, 4 Neb. Unof. 587; Bannon v. C. Aultmann & Co., 80 Wis. 307, 26 Am. St. R. 37; Canham v. Plano Mfg. Co., 3 N. D. 229; Snody v. Shier, 88 Mich. 304.

In all of the cases previously cited the authority has been spoken of as a general authority to sell. In Bragg v. Bamberger, 23 Ind. 198, upon apparently the same general facts a contrary conclusion is reached; but it is said that the authority is special and exhausted when the sale is made.

See also Ellinger v. Rawlings, 12 Ind. App. 336.

⁵¹ Peterson v. Reaping Mach. Co., 97 Iowa, 148, 59 Am. St. R. 390; First Nat. Bank v. Dutcher, 128 Iowa, 413, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 142; Gaar, Scott & Co. v. Rose, 3 Ind. App. 269; Springfield Engine & Thresher Co. v. Kennedy, 7 Ind. App. 502; Heilman Machine Works v. Dollarhide, 32 Mo. App. 178.

⁵² See Nichols v. Knowles, 31 Minn. 489, where it is held that a notice of a defect given to the seller's mechanical expert, who happened to be in the neighborhood and his promise to come and "fix" the machine (which he never did) could not be regarded as a waiver of the requirement of written notice to the principal. The court said that there was no evidence whatever of this man's authority to receive such a notice in behalf of his principal or to waive it, and no evidence that the principal ever knew of or accepted or acted upon the notice, or ratified his promise or action in the matter.

Failure to send a registered letter as required by the contract has been held not fatal where the letter was actually received, especially where the proper person responded to it and came or did what was required. See First Nat. Bank v. Dutcher, 128 Iowa, 413, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 142 [citing Advance Thresher Co. v. Curd (Ky.), 85 S. W. 690; Kenny v. Anderson (Ky.), 81 S. W. 663; Frick v. Morgan (Ky.), 69 S. W. 1073 (Ky. cases not officially reported); Badgett v. Frick, 28 S. Car. 176; Aultman, etc., Machine Co. v. Ridenour, 96 Iowa, 638].

The Iowa cases state that "it is a well settled rule that an agent having power and authority to sell a machine under a contract which contains conditions for the benefit of the seller has authority to bind his principal by a waiver of such conditions." Reeves v. Younglove, 148 Iowa, 699; First Nat. Bank v. Dutcher, supra [citing Pitsinowsky v. Beardsley, 37 Iowa, 9; Warder v. Robertson, 75 Iowa, 585; McCormick v. Brower, 88 Iowa, 607; Osborne v. Backer, 81 Iowa, 375; Peterson v. Machine Co., 97 Iowa, 148, 59 Am. St. R. 399]. But that is certainly a most questionable proposition, however well settled it may be in Iowa.

thority, while the matter was still in his hands, to waive or alter other terms of the contract than the ones relating to notice, depending upon their nature and the extent of his authority. Thus, in order to prevent a failure of the sale, or to induce further trials, it might be held that he could extend the time for making tests, or promise further assistance or supplies.⁵³ So a general sales-agent, having authority to make sales and collections, would doubtless have authority to make reasonable adjustments and modifications in order to effect a settlement.⁵⁴ And a general sales and contracting agent, having charge of his principal's business within a given territory, with no apparent limitations upon his authority in that regard, has been held to have implied authority to consent to a change in a contract negotiated by him, though such change involved an alteration in the printed form supplied by his principal.⁵⁵

§ 905. — Notice of limitations upon the agent's authority to waive or alter the contract may be given by the terms of the contract itself and such limitations upon the authority of particular agents at least will be effective,⁵⁶ though some courts have refused to enforce

⁵³ See Blaess v. Nichols & Shepard Co., 115 Iowa, 373; Peter v. Plano Mfg. Co., 21 S. D. 198.

Where a harvester is sold on terms that if the machine upon a week's trial does not work well, the buyer shall give notice and the seller will send a man to put it in order; but fixes no time within which this shall be done, the buyer and the seller's agent sent to put it in order may agree upon a time, notwithstanding a provision in the contract that "no agent has power to make any additions, or to vary the terms and conditions hereof." Holt Mfg. Co. v. Dunnigan, 22 Wash. 134.

But a mere mechanical expert sent to repair a machine sold by other agents has no implied authority to alter or consent to the alteration of the terms of the contract. Houghton Implement Co. v. Vavrowski, 19 N. D. 594.

⁵⁴ Stevenson Co. v. Fox, 19 Misc. 177.

Same of an adjustment made by a "state agent" (Randall v. Fay Co., 158 Mich. 630); and of a district agent to agree that certain goods sold in excess of buyer's needs might be returned (Herpolsheimer v. Acme Harvester Co., 83 Neb. 53).

In Ellinger v. Rawlings, 12 Ind. App. 336, an ordinary traveling salesman who had taken orders for goods which were shipped but proved to be unsatisfactory to the buyer, was held to have apparent power on a later visit to the same customer (at which he took a new order) to give directions as to the time and manner of returning the unsatisfactory goods.

⁵⁵ Van Santvoord v. Smith, 79 Minn. 316 (citing Tice v. Russell, 43 Minn. 66; Badger Lumber Co. v. Ballentine, 54 Mo. App. 172; Burley v. Hitt, 54 Mo. App. 272; Palmer v. Roath, 86 Mich. 602; Indianapolis Rolling Mill v. R. Co., 120 U. S. 256, 30 L. Ed. 639).

So of statements made by a general agent that forfeitures under the contract would not be insisted upon and that delayed payments would be accepted. McDonald v. Kingsbury, 16 Cal. App. 244.

⁵⁶ (No agent or expert can change, etc.) Fahey v. Esterley Mach. Co., stipulations that "no one has any authority to add to, abridge or change it in any manner," and the like, upon the ground that language so broad as to include the parties themselves could not have been seriously intended.⁵⁷ So stipulations that written contracts can only be altered by writing have usually been denied effect,⁵⁸ and express stipulations against alterations in certain particulars have been held not to affect the power to alter in other respects.⁵⁹

§ 906. May not sell to or deal with himself.—In accordance with established principles which are more fully developed in later sections,⁶⁰ it is well settled that an agent to sell cannot, without his principal's full knowledge and consent, sell to himself, either directly or indirectly, or acquire in any way any rights or interests in that which

3 N. D. 220, 44 Am. St. R. 554; Reeves v. Corrigan, 3 N. D. 415. To same effect: National, etc., Co. v. Thomas, 28 Tex. Civ. App. 379; Waldorf v. Simpson, 15 N. Y. App. Div. 297; Eichelroth v. Long, 156 Ill. App. 108; Furneaux v. Esterly, 36 Kan. 539 (no agent, canvasser, employee or attorney); Larson v. Minneapolis Thresh. Mach. Co., 92 Minn. 62 (that the written order contains the entire agreement between the parties); Bybee v. Embree-McLean Carriage Co. (Tex. Civ. App.), 135 S. W. 203; Bruner v. Kansas Moline Plow Co., 7 Ind. T. 506.

⁵⁷ Peterson v. Reaping Mach. Co., 97 Iowa, 148, 59 Am. St. Rep. 399; Osborne Co. v. Backer, 81 Iowa, 375; First National Bank v. Dutcher, 128 Iowa, 413, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 142; Womach v. Case Threshing Mach. Co., 62 Wash. 661. See also Peter v. Plano Mfg. Co., 21 S. D. 198.

In McCormick H. Mach. Co. v. Hiatt, 4 Neb. Unof. 587, it is said: "The written contract provides that the machine shall be warranted according to the terms of the written warranty, 'without addition or erasure.' We do not think this precluded the agent of the seller from waiving the terms of the written warranty or some of them after the machine had been delivered."

In Bannon v. Aultman, 80 Wis. 307, 27 Am. St. R. 37, it is said:

"There is a clause below the plaintiff's signature, by way of notice, to the effect that 'no verbal agreement of any kind appertaining to the order will be recognized, and that all agreements must be in writing.' If the agent had power to bind the defendant in writing to a new agreement, we see no good reason for holding that he could not bind it by a parol contract." See also Warder, etc., Co. v. Fischer, 110 Wis. 363.

⁵⁸ Dowagiac Mfg. Co. v. Hellekson, 12 N. D. 257, 100 N. W. 717; Osborne Co. v. Backer, 81 Iowa, 375; Erskine v. Johnson, 23 Neb. 261; White v. Massey, 65 Mo. App. 260.

A written contract, containing such limitations, not finally executed is no bar to a subsequent parol contract respecting the same subject. Dowagiac Mfg. Co. v. Watson, 90 Minn. 100.

And where the only contract ever made between the parties was the oral one,—although a written contract was contemplated by the principal,—the principal can not retain the money he has received upon the oral contract and at the same time repudiate its obligations. Westby v. Case Thresh. Mach. Co., 21 N. Dak. 575.

⁵⁹ Van Santvoord v. Smith, 79 Minn. 316.

⁶⁰ See post, § 1197.

he is employed to sell; and if he attempts to do so the principal may treat the transaction as voidable.⁶¹

§ 907. Authority to receive notice.—In conclusion, a few cases bearing upon the capacity of sales-agents to affect their principal with notice received by them, may be noticed. Thus it has been held that a mere salesman in his principal's store is not authorized to receive notice that his principal's insurance will not be renewed.⁶² But on the other hand, notice to a traveling salesman of the dissolution of a firm which was one of his customers and from whom an order had been received directly which was not yet filled, has been held notice to his principal.⁶³ And where goods were sold with a warranty under a stipulation that, if no complaint should be made within a stated time, the warranty should be deemed to be satisfied, but which did not state to whom the complaint should be made, it was held that notice of defects given to a local agent who had assisted in making the sale and who had authority to collect the price, was a sufficient complaint or notice to the principal to save the buyer's right to rely upon the warranty.⁶⁴

⁶¹ See cases cited in sections above referred to. McKenzie v. State, 8 Ga. App. 124; Merrill v. Sax, 141 Iowa, 386.

⁶² German Ins. Co. v. Goodfriend (Ky.), 30 Ky. L. Rep. 218, 97 S. W. 1098.

⁶³ In Jenkins v. Renfrow, 151 N. C. 323, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 231, a traveling salesman took an order April 4th, and received notice of dissolution of buyers' firm some time before May 15th; the order was filled May 27th. In an action to hold the retired partner, held, that the notice bound the principal, it appearing that the agent was the sole representative of his principal in this territory, that he looked up references of new customers and in times past had reported dissolutions of partnerships. So in Straus v. Sparrow, 148 N. C. 309, notice to an agent who sold and collected in the district in which the debtor firm was located was held notice to the principal. Same effect: Ach v. Barnes, 107 Ky. 219.

But in Neal v. Smith, 54 C. C. A. 226, 116 Fed. 20, notice of dissolution to the traveling salesman of a corporation was held not enough. In Mackay-Nisbet Co. v. Kuhlman, 119 Ill. App. 144, it was held that a similar notice to a salesman was not sufficient where the salesman did not cover the territory in which the firm was located, and the statement was made in the course of a social conversation. Compare Collins & Toole v. Crews, 3 Ga. App. 238, 59 S. E. 727, where it was held that notice of bankruptcy made under similar circumstances was not to be charged to the principal.

⁶⁴ Buckeye Saw Co. v. Rutherford, 65 W. Va. 395, 64 S. E. 444.

V.

OF AGENT AUTHORIZED TO PURCHASE PERSONAL PROPERTY.

§ 908. When authority exists.—As in the case of an agency to sell, authority to purchase personal property need not be conferred in any particular manner. Where it is expressly conferred there is, of course, ordinarily very little room for doubt. The question here is rather, first whether any, and if so, what power to buy personal property is properly to be deduced from the words and conduct of the parties, or from a conceded power to do some other act; and, secondly, if it be found that authority to purchase has been conferred, how that authority is to be construed, and what implied or incidental powers are to be regarded as attaching to it.

Upon the first point, then, an agent may be deemed authorized to buy not only where he has been expressly authorized to do so, but also where as a matter of fact authority to buy may be implied, or where, though no such implication of fact can be made, the principal has so conducted himself as to reasonably warrant the inference of such an authority. Stated more specifically, if the principal has authorized an agent to do an act for the doing of which the purchase of personal property is practically essential, or has put him in a situation in which a power to buy it is usually exercised, or has in any manner held him out as possessing such a power, the principal will be bound by purchases made within the apparent scope of the authority from sellers in ignorance of any limitations upon it.⁶⁵ Thus the manager of a store, the superintendent of a railway or a mine, or the foreman of a farm ⁶⁵ Hayward Lumber Co. v. Cox (Tex. Civ. App.), 104 S. W. 403; Hall v. Ayer & Lord Tie Co. (Ky.), 102 S. W. 867.

In Furnace Run Sawmill Co. v. Heller, 81 Ohio St. 201, creditors who, by arrangement with their debtor, had united in appointing a trustee to manage the debtor's business with a view to paying the creditors, under a contract that the trustee should "complete all outstanding contracts and pay all necessary running expenses of said business," were held to be liable for supplies bought by him. The court held that there was express authority.

B, a salesman and buyer of raw furs, on several occasions had bought furs from the plaintiff on terms of present delivery; once before, to the knowledge of the plaintiff, he had bought furs of another person on a written contract for future delivery; his purchases had been made subject to confirmation. Held, to justify a finding of the jury that B had authority to make a binding contract for the purchase of furs to be delivered in the future. Abroahams v. Revillon, 129 Wis. 235.

may be found to have the power to buy stock or supplies as a usual or necessary incident of the business in his charge.⁶⁶

§ 909. — Authority from conduct.—It is, moreover, not essential that the authority be deducible from an acknowledged power. It is sufficient that there has been a course of dealing or a line of conduct from which the authority can reasonably be inferred.⁶⁷ An open and notorious exercise of the authority without objection, the receipt and payment for goods purchased by the alleged agent, the turning over to the alleged agent of a business and permitting him to conduct it as the business of the principal—these are but a few of the many illustrations of the cases of conduct from which it has been held that the authority to purchase may reasonably be inferred.⁶⁸

§ 910. — Limitations.—It cannot be too strongly emphasized, however, that the conduct or relation from which the inference is sought to be deduced must be such as fairly and reasonably to war-

⁶⁶ Superintendent of a mine may buy necessary supplies. Stuart v. Adams, 89 Cal. 367; Jones v. Clark, 42 Cal. 180. Or provisions for a boarding house. Heald v. Hendy, 89 Cal. 632. Manager of waterworks may buy a pump. Goss v. Helbing, 77 Cal. 190. So, of a quarry. Dorsey v. Pike, 57 Hun, 586. Manager of a farm may buy fertilizers. Jefferts v. Alvard, 151 Mass. 94. So an agent placed in charge of a lumber yard, may buy necessary supplies. Witcher v. Gibson, 15 Colo. App. 163. See also Columbus Showcase Co. v. Brinson, 128 Ga. 487. Manager of large store may buy team. Montgomery Furn. Co. v. Hardaway, 104 Ala. 100.

G and C who lived in town had an interest in a farm in another county. One H lived upon the farm and had immediate charge of their affairs there. C had for a long time had general personal supervision of the interests of himself and G. C sold out to G, but afterwards appeared to continue to exercise supervision as before. In this situation C bought supplies for the farm while H was present and they were delivered to H who used them in the usual way upon the farm. Held sufficient to justify a jury in finding that in the purchase C was also acting for G. Gregg v. Berkshire (10 Kan. App. 579, no opinion), 62 Pac. 550.

Where the owner of a warehouse placed an agent in charge of it and the agent, with the principal's knowledge held himself out as having general control of the principal's business at that place, the agent was held to have implied authority to purchase certain grain placed in the warehouse. Nash v. Classon, 55 Ill. App. 356 (aff'd 163 Ill. 409).

In Conabeer v. Bruenn, 121 N. Y. Supp. 207, a janitor in charge of an ordinary "flat" building was held to have implied authority to buy some necessary coal.

⁶⁷ Wilson v. Wyandance Springs Imp. Co., 4 N. Y. Misc. 605; Lamb v. Hirschberg, 1 N. Y. Misc. 108; Jefferson Hotel Co. v. Brumbaugh, 94 C. C. A. 279, 168 Fed. 867.

⁶⁸ Purchases of supplies made by the local supervising agent of a contracting company engaged in building a railroad, whose acts were known to the company and apparently acquiesced in by the company, bind the company even though actually contrary to his instructions. Hirschmann v. Iron Range, etc., R. Co., 97 Mich. 384; Black Lick Lum-

rant the inference of authority to buy; because it is clear that one may be authorized to sell, but not to buy; or to care for, manage, or control, but not to purchase.⁶⁹ And where the authority to purchase is ber Co. v. Camp Const. Co., 63 W. Va. 477. So of "extras" ordered under similar circumstances by a supervising architect. Jefferson Hotel Co. v. Brumbaugh, 94 C. C. A. 279, 168 Fed. 867.

The purchaser at a sheriff sale who allows the prior owner to continue the business under his name as agent is liable for goods to replenish the stock purchased on his credit by such agent. McKinney v. Stephens, 17 Pa. Super. Ct. 125.

Where an agent had for several months been representing the defendants in a certain county, buying cattle to be shipped to the defendants, soliciting consignments of cattle to be sold by the defendants, and during this time drafts drawn by the agent upon defendants had been honored; and the agent then bought certain cattle upon which plaintiff had a lien, agreeing that, if plaintiff would release his lien and accept certain drafts drawn upon the defendants, defendants would pay the drafts, it was held that the agent had apparent authority to make the agreement in question. Greer v. First Nat. Bank (Tex. Civ. App.), 47 S. W. 1045.

A physician who owned a drug store, turned it over to an agent to run it at a definite wage, to be determined by the success or failure of the enterprise. Held, that the physician was liable for goods bought for the store. Bice v. Hover, 2 Colo. App. 172. See also, Mahoney v. Butte Hardware Co., 19 Mont. 377; C. & C. Electric Motor Co. v. Frisbie, 66 Conn. 67.

⁶⁹ A mere agency to sell does not imply authority to buy (Keyes, etc., Co. v. Union Pac. Tea Co., 81 Vt. 420); nor an agency to solicit orders (Klump v. American Hardware Co., 50 N. Y. Misc. 662). The relation of master and coachman does not clothe the latter with ostensible authority to pledge his master's credit for feed supplied for his horses. Wright v. Glyn, [1902] 1 K. B. 745.

A chauffeur has no implied authority to buy supplies or to order repairs other than such as a journey or an emergency requires. Gage v. Callahan, 57 N. Y. Misc. 479.

A mortgagor left in possession of goods, with authority to sell them and apply the proceeds in the payment of the mortgage, has no implied authority to bind the mortgagee by a purchase of new goods. Kelly v. Tracy and Avery Co., 71 Ohio St. 220. See also Herd v. Bank of Buffalo, 66 Mo. App. 643; Bentley v. Snyder, 101 Iowa, 1. A store clerk "employed to sell goods, keep the store books, and to act generally in the conduct of the store" has no authority to purchase goods on his principal's account. Doan v. Duncan, 18 Ill. 96. The foreman in general charge of the construction of a mill, authorized to employ and pay workmen, has no authority to contract to purchase necessary timber for it. Rankin v. New England and Nevada Silver Mining Co., 4 Nev. 78. The general manager of a branch selling office of a concern engaged in the business of manufacturing and selling mining machinery has no authority to purchase mining machinery. Gates Iron Works v. Denver Eng. Works Co., 17 Colo. App. 15.

An employee upon a ranch has no implied or apparent authority to buy personal supplies upon the credit of the owner. Young v. Chi Psi Cattle Co., 79 Neb. 268.

See also Wales-Riggs Plantations v. Dye, — Ark. —, 151 S. W. 998; Sackville v. Storey, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 149 S. W. 239.

inferred, its operation must be confined to the purchase of goods for the principal's benefit and on his account, and be limited to those reasonably adapted to or customarily used in a business, or under circumstances, of the kind in question.⁷⁰

§ 911. ——— Ratification.—It is not indispensable that authority for a purchase shall have been given in advance. In this, as in other cases, there may be ratification; and ratification may be found where, with full knowledge of the facts, the principal has voluntarily accepted or taken the benefit of a purchase, made on his account, by one who purported to be his agent.⁷¹

The mere fact, however, that the goods came to the benefit of the principal is not enough to work a ratification. There must be knowledge and voluntary action or acquiescence, following a purchase made by one who acted as his agent.⁷²

⁷⁰ Wallis Tobacco Co. v. Jackson, 99 Ala. 460. Manager of a plantation "authorized to purchase mules, farming implements, and supplies for it" has no authority to buy goods for the hands employed on it. Carter v. Burnham, 31 Ark. 212.

One authorized to buy cattle, sheep and hogs has therefrom no implied authority to buy hotel properties. In re Miley, 187 Fed. 177. The traveling agent and solicitor of a commission house, with express authority to sell the goods in which his principal dealt, and to buy hides and wool, may be found by the jury to have apparent authority to purchase fowls. Brochman Commission Co. v. Pound, 77 Ark. 364.

General authority to purchase cannot be inferred from express authority in a single instance. Rice v. James, 193 Mass. 458. To same effect: Town v. Hendee, 27 Vt. 258; Heathfield v. Van Allen, 7 Up. Can. C. Pl. 346. A book-keeper was given express authority in one instance to buy a typewriter. Held, to confer no implied or apparent authority to later buy another. Smith Premier Typewriter Co. v. National Light Co., 72 Misc. 405. Where principal gave his son express permission to make one purchase which was duly made and paid for, held, that the son had no authority two months later to make another purchase on his father's account. Cohen v. Mincoff, 96 N. Y. Supp. 411.

⁷¹ See In re Cohen, 163 Fed. 444; Hayward Lumber Co. v. Cox (Tex. Civ. App.), 104 S. W. 403; Keyes v. Union Pac. Tea Co., 31 Vt. 420; Patton v. Brittain, 32 N. Car. (10 Ired. L.) 8; Witcher v. Gibson, 15 Colo. App. 163; Greenbrier Distillery Co. v. Van Frank, 147 Mo. App. 204.

⁷² "While from the fact that goods belonging to one party pass into the possession of another a contract of purchase may sometimes be implied, it will not be implied when it appears that such transfer of possession was surreptitious, and without the knowledge of the latter. A party cannot be compelled to buy property which he does not wish to buy; and no trick of the vendor, conspiring with an agent of such party, by which possession is placed in him, creates on his part a contract of purchase. Nor is any contract of purchase created, even if it also appears that, unknown to such party, his agent who has entered into this wrongful combination has sold the property and put the proceeds into his principal's possession. Whatever

Quasi-contractual liability for a purchase, if any such liability may be enforced, is not within the scope of this discussion.

§ 912. Powers and limitations incident to authority to purchase.—Having thus seen something concerning the existence of the main authority, that is, the authority to purchase, it is next necessary to determine what authority, if any, is incident to it, whether it be expressly given or arise by implication, and what limitations, if any, attend its exercise.

§ 913. Agent with general authority may buy on credit.—A general agent having full and discretionary authority to buy goods for his principal may, it is held, buy either for cash or upon credit, as may in his discretion, best subserve the interests of his principal at the time.⁷³ It is clear, however, as will be seen in the following sections, that authority to buy upon credit is by no means an invariable attribute of a mere authority to purchase.

Even though such an authority would not ordinarily exist, however, its existence in a given case may appear from conduct, as where the principal knows that the agent is regularly making purchases upon the principal's credit, and does not dissent.⁷⁴

§ 914. May not buy on credit, when furnished with funds.—An agent authorized to purchase goods, who is supplied with funds for that purpose, and who has not been held out as having a more general authority, has no implied authority to bind his principal by a purchase on the principal's credit; and in such a case the principal will not be bound by a purchase on credit, although the goods come in fact to his use, unless he has knowledge of the fact and does something in ratification of it, or unless there be shown a custom of trade or a course of dealing justifying a purchase on the principal's credit.⁷⁵ Mere liability might exist in an action brought under these circumstances for money had and received, no action will lie for goods sold and delivered. The party is not responsible under a contract and as a purchaser, whatever may be his liability for the money he has received as the proceeds of the sales." Per Brewer, J., in Schutz v. Jordan, 141 U. S. 213, 35 L. Ed. 705. See also Swindell v. Latham, 145 N. C. 144, 122 Am. St. R. 430.

Involuntary and unavoidable use of goods purchased without authority is not of itself a ratification.

Ayer & Lord Tie Co. v. Young, 90 Ark. 104.

Receipt of proceeds by the principal in the belief that they were being paid to him in satisfaction of a debt owed by the agent, is not a ratification. Bohart v. Oberne, 36 Kan. 284.

⁷³ Ruffin v. Mebane, 41 N. C. 507; Swindell v. Latham, 145 N. C. 144, 122 Am. St. R. 430.

⁷⁴ Witcher v. Gibson, 15 Colo. App. 163.

⁷⁵ Stubbing v. Heintz, 1 Peake's N. P. Rep. 47; Pearce v. Rogers, 3 Esp. 214; Rusby v. Scarlett, 5 Esp. 76; authority to buy does not imply authority to buy on credit.⁷⁶ A fortiori

Boston Iron Co. v. Hale, 8 N. H. 363; Komorowski v. Krumdick, 56 Wis. 23; Jacques v. Todd, 3 Wend. (N. Y.) 83; Laing v. Butler, 37 Hun (N. Y.), 144; Saugerties, etc., Co. v. Miller, 76 App. Div. 167; Brittain v. Westall, 137 N. Car. 30; Wheeler v. McGuire, 86 Ala. 398, 2 L. R. A. 808; Proctor v. Tows, 115 Ill. 138; Americus Oil Co. v. Gurr, 114 Ga. 624; Chapman v. Americus Oil Co., 117 Ga. 881; First Nat. Bank v. Pennington, 75 Tex. 272 (in the absence of ratification); Patton v. Brittain, 32 N. C. (10 Ired. L.) 8; Brooks v. Mortimer, 10 App. Div. 518; Taber v. Cannon, 8 Metc. (Mass.) 456; Fraser v. McPherson, 3 Desaussure (S. C.), 393; Parsons v. Armour, 3 Pet. (U. S.) 413, 7 L. Ed. 724. An agent authorized to draw on his principal for amount of purchases is governed by the same rules that govern agents in whose hands funds are placed. Parsons v. Armor, 3 Peters (U. S.), 412, 7 L. Ed. 724. Where an agent in charge of a livery business bought goods on his principal's credit, evidence is admissible in an action against the principal to show that the agent was at all times in sufficient funds either from the business, or furnished by the principal. Taft v. Baker, 100 Mass. 68.

An agent authorized to buy goods with funds furnished by the principal is not authorized to borrow money with which to buy even though the principal does not supply the funds. Swindell v. Latham, 145 N. Car. 144, 122 Am. St. R. 430.

Defendant, having charge of a farm in this state, employed an agent to manage it, and authorized him to employ, pay and discharge laborers. Defendant arranged with certain merchants to supply such goods as the agent needed. The agent bought clothing for the employees of other dealers, and charged it to the defendant. The sellers knew that the agent bought goods at the appointed places, but did not know and made no inquiry as his authority or the terms on which those purchases were made. Held, that defendant was not liable, even though, without his knowledge, the agent supplied the clothing to the employees in payment of their wages. Eckart v. Roehm, 43 Minn. 271.

Where the course of business between a merchant in the country and a merchant in town is such, that the country merchant transmits to his correspondent in town his produce and such articles as he has to sell, and the merchant in town, in return, supplies him with such merchandise as he deals in, charges it to the merchant in the country, the latter is not liable to the seller for any articles thus procured, although he directs the purchase of an article which he knows the merchant in town does not deal in, and the seller is informed for whom the purchase is made, if the merchant in the country has funds in the hands of the merchant in the city, and has never authorized him to pledge his credit on the purchase of any articles thus ordered, or recognized such act. Jacques v. Todd, 3 Wend. (N. Y.) 83.

Where a wife furnished her husband with money to buy lumber for her house, but the money, instead of being applied on the purchase of the lumber, was applied without her knowledge, on a debt owed by the husband, the wife is not liable for the lumber furnished. The fact that she knew the lumber was being used was not a ratification, where she supposed it had been paid for. Young v. Swan, 100 Iowa, 323.

Where an agent who is furnished with funds to buy goods for his principal buys them with his own funds for the principal, having used the principal's funds for other purposes, the title vests in the principal. Edwards v. Dooley, 120 N. Y. 540.

⁷⁶ Berry v. Barnes, 23 Ark. 411.

is this true where the seller is expressly notified that the agent has no authority to buy on credit.⁷⁷

§ 915. — But where the principal, either expressly or by implication, authorizes a purchase upon his credit, the fact that the agent then had, or was afterwards supplied with funds with which to pay for the goods so purchased, will not relieve the principal from liability if the agent fails to pay.⁷⁸ The fact, moreover, that an agent authorized to make purchases, is then, or soon after, supplied with funds with which to pay for them, does not necessarily lead to the conclusion that he was forbidden to purchase upon credit; the inference

⁷⁷ American Lead Pencil Co. v. Wolfe, 30 Fla. 360.

⁷⁸ Thus in Stapp v. Spurlin, 32 Ind. 442, where an agent for the purchase of wheat upon commission bought a quantity of wheat to be paid for on delivery, but the agent on delivery paid only a portion of the price, and sent the wheat to his principal who later settled with the agent in ignorance of the fact that the wheat was not fully paid for; it was held that the principal was liable for the balance of the price to the seller even though he had waited several months without presenting his claim. The court said: "If they [the principals] furnished the agent with money to pay for the wheat it was his duty to make the payment, but if he failed to do so, and converted the money to his own use, it was simply a violation of the trust and confidence reposed in him by his principals; and as they trusted him to act for them, as between them and one who has dealt with him as their agent, in good faith, they must suffer the consequences of his bad faith with themselves."

In the same effect is Cruzan v. Smith, 41 Ind. 288, where a general agent to purchase wheat and instructed to buy for cash only had actually bought wheat on credit and shipped it to his principal, who settled with him before learning of the purchase upon credit.

A general agent of trustees having full authority to purchase the particular goods, and to do so upon the principal's credit, obtained from the seller a receipt for the purchase price in full upon his representation that such receipt was necessary in order to secure payment from his principals. The agent then presented the receipt to his principals, who paid the money in ignorance of the circumstances under which the receipt was obtained. The agent failed to turn over the money to the seller and it was held that the latter could maintain an action against the principals for the purchase price. Willard v. Buckingham, 36 Conn. 395.

Plaintiff, upon the request of defendant's architect, supplied lumber which was used in the construction of defendant's house. The contract between defendant and the architect gave the latter authority to make contracts for the construction of the building, and it also provided that defendant should on each Saturday forenoon furnish money to pay the expenses of the preceding week as shown by the architect's estimates. Held, that the contract clearly showed that the money was not to be supplied till after bills were contracted and that it was the intention that the architect should have power to pledge the defendant's credit. Larivee v. A'Hearn, 207 Mass. 288.

Authority to an agent to build a house held to justify procuring ma-to be drawn is one of fact.⁷⁹ And where an agent, who has general authority to buy, is instructed not to buy more goods than the funds at his command will enable him to pay for, the principal will, nevertheless, be bound to one who relies upon his apparent authority in ignorance of such instructions.⁸⁰ And so where the usual course of business is to buy upon credit, private directions to the agent not to materials upon the principal's credit. Spry Lumber Co. v. McMillan, 77 Ill. App. 280.

A long continued course of dealing, in which the agent bought upon the principal's credit, with this knowledge and without his dissent, will justify an inference of consent. Witcher v. Gibson, 15 Colo. App. 163.

In the old nisi prius case of Hazard v. Treadwell, (1768) 1 Strange, 506, it appeared that "the defendant who was a considerable dealer in iron and known to the plaintiff as such, though they had never dealt together before, sent a waterman to the plaintiff for iron on trust and paid for it afterwards. He sent the same waterman a second time with ready money, who received the goods, but did not pay for them; and the chief justice [Pratt] ruled the sending him upon trust the first time and paying for the goods, was giving him credit, so as to charge the defendant upon the second contract." This case has been often cited, e. g. Keyes v. Union Pac. Tea Co., 81 Vt. 420, but it is, of course, questionable whether it is sound. It is at most an inference of fact, and, as has been seen in several places, the inference of authority upon one occasion is not usually to be safely drawn from the existence of a special authority upon another occasion. See ante, § 910, note.

⁷⁹ An agent who had entire charge of property,—procuring tenants, collecting rents, paying taxes, insurance, etc., was expressly authorized by the owner to make certain quite extensive repairs, being given full authority to act according to his own judgment, but being directed not to spend more than $500 upon them, which sum was given him in cash. The agent procured from the plaintiff lumber and other material, which were charged to the agent, and other supplies elsewhere for cash, in a gross amount in excess of $500. Upon discovery of the agency, the plaintiff filed a bill for mechanic's lien. Held, that the $500 limit did not qualify the power as far as third persons were concerned and that since the agent was not expressly prohibited from purchasing on credit, such prohibition, if it existed at all, must be inferred from the fact that money was placed in his hands and that such inference was a question of fact. Paine v. Tillinghast, 52 Conn. 532. Compare Proctor v. Tows, 115 Ill. 138.

⁸⁰ Liddell v. Sahline, 55 Ark. 627; Napa Valley Wine Co. v. Casanova, 140 Wis. 289; Wheeler v. McGuire, 86 Ala. 398, 2 L. R. A. 808; Pacific Biscuit Co. v. Dugger, 40 Or. 302.

The fact that the principal was undisclosed does not, it is held, alter the rule. Hubbard v. Tenbrook, 124 Pa. St. 291, 10 Am. St. Rep. 585, 2 L. R. A. 823; Watteau v. Fenwick, [1893] 1 Q. B. 346; Steel-Smith Grocery Co. v. Potthast, 109 Iowa, 413. See also Fees v. Shadel, 20 Pa. Super. 193; Sartwell v. Frost, 122 Mass. 184; Brooks v. Shaw, 197 Mass. 376; Mississippi Valley Const. Co. v. Abeles, 87 Ark. 374.

But see the discussion of the liability of the Undisclosed Principal.

The ordinary rules governing the liability of an undisclosed principal when discovered, of course apply to purchases. See Lamb v. Thompson, 31 Neb. 448; Patrick v. Grand Forks Merc. Co., 13 N. D. 12.

buy in that way will not save the principal from liability to those who, in good faith, sell in ignorance of the limitation.⁸¹

§ 916. — And even where the agent is supplied with funds and is forbidden to purchase upon the principal's credit, it does not necessarily follow that he is expected to pay at the very instant he receives the property. It may well be that it was fairly within the contemplation of the parties, that he was to pay at the termination of the transaction, or at the end of the day, or when the seller presented himself for payment, and the like; and if the agent should not pay when so expected, the principal might still be liable.⁸²

§ 917. — Moreover, the seller upon a cash sale, who has delivered the goods upon condition of immediate payment and without waiving his right thereto, may, if payment be not made, recover the goods from the agent or from the principal himself, if they have come into his possession, the principal in such a case not being a bona fide purchaser.⁸³ And so, where the agent, supplied with cash wrongfully purchases upon the principal's credit, the principal may make himself

⁸¹ Watts v. Devor, 1 Grant (Pa.), 267.

⁸² Where an agent is furnished with money to pay for property which he is authorized to purchase, there is no such limitation on his authority to buy on credit, as to require him to pay the instant, or on the same day, for property which he purchases without any understanding or agreement that credit is to be given therefor. Adams v. Boies, 24 Iowa, 96. The facts alleged were that W. (a resident of Muscatine) acted in that place and throughout the adjacent country as the agent of defendants (grain and cattle dealers, residing in Washington, Iowa), in making purchases and shipments of stock for them. Defendants furnished W. with money to pay for his purchases, and particularly made arrangements with a bank in Muscatine to cash checks drawn upon it by W. W. had acted as the agent of the defendants some eight or ten months, making purchases of stock for them. During that period he had bought hogs of the plaintiff at six different times. When he wished to buy in order to fill up a car he would come in person or send a wagon to plaintiff, get hogs, and then, or very soon afterwards, settle for them. He acted as agent for no other person, and there was no testimony in the case, showing that he bought stock on his own account. The two lots for which this action was brought were sold in the same way that the others had been. On the first of these two lots W. paid $125. In three or four days after the delivery of the second lot the plaintiff went to Muscatine and asked W. for his pay, but did not get it. Shortly after that W. ran away. Held, that defendants were liable.

In Spry Lumber Co. v. McMillan, 77 Ill. App. 280, the court points out that a purchase of goods which are delivered in installments and are to be paid for when all are delivered "can hardly be said to be a purchase on credit;" it is not the giving of credit "in the sense in which the word credit is used among merchants."

⁸³ See Mechem on Sales, §§ 554, 555.

liable for the purchase by ratification, or though he may not be liable upon the contract, he must usually, if he repudiates it, return the goods; and if he does not, or cannot do so, he may be liable in quasi contract for their value.⁸⁴

⁸⁴ See Patton v. Brittain, 32 N. Car. (10 Ired. L.) 8, in which a principal gave authority to an agent to purchase hides but only so far as he had cash of the principal to pay for them. The agent bought on the credit of his principal, and the goods were delivered to and received by the principal with knowledge that they had not been paid for. Held, that the seller could recover from the principal the price of the goods. In Sartwell v. Frost, 122 Mass. 184, the defendant purchased the stock in trade of a bankrupt, left him in charge of the business, with the understanding that he should not buy on credit. Plaintiff sold goods to this agent on credit, without knowledge of any principal. The defendant discovered by investigation of his agents business that purchases had been made on credit, and he thereupon compelled the agent to settle such debts. Afterwards the agent again bought on credit, as the defendant by reasonably diligent inquiry might have discovered. The defendant took possession of the business, and was held liable for the purchases on the theory of a ratification by an acceptance of benefits. In Moffit-West Drug Co. v. Lyneman, 10 Colo. App. 249, the defendant's husband acted as her agent in conducting a drug business. Defendant had notified plaintiff not to sell goods to her husband. The husband, however, bought goods on credit from plaintiff, on various occasions covering a period of five months. On his death, the defendant took charge of the store, and found in stock one barrel of whisky which she apparently knew had been purchased contrary to her orders. The other goods of the account sued on were not brought to her notice, but did in fact go to increase the stock of her business. Defendant was held liable for the price of all the goods on the ground that she had ratified the unauthorized purchase by an acceptance of the subject matter.

In Swindell v. Latham, 145 N. C. 144, 122 Am. St. R. 430, an agent, authorized to conduct a business and purchase goods, borrowed money from the plaintiff with which to buy. Lower court gave this instruction: "If the agent had no authority to borrow money to pay for goods, but was directed to buy for cash with money advanced by the principal, and the latter fails to furnish the cash, and the agent for the purpose of promoting the business borrows money and uses it to pay for goods for his principal, and the goods are used in said business for the benefit of the principal, then the principal is liable for the money so borrowed." This charge was held to be too broad, and the court explains its decision in Brittain v. Westhall, 135 N. C. 492, upon which decision the trial court had founded its instruction in this case. To hold a principal liable in contract for goods bought on credit where the agent was authorized to buy only for cash acceptance of benefits by the principal is not alone sufficient, but it must appear that the principal had notice of his agent's default.

In McDowell v. McKenzie, 65 Ga. 630, there was an action on account for goods purchased and the whole opinion of the court is in this language: "This case turns on a single question: Can a merchant in Georgia whose agent buys goods in New York, though on credit, and the credit unauthorized by the Georgia merchant, legally refuse to pay for the goods when they have gone into his possession, been sold for him, and he has pocketed the proceeds, especially when he had paid other bills bought on credit by the same agent? To propound the question plainly is to answer it in law, as well as in good sense and common honesty." If this decision rests on a ratification, it must be noted that there is no mention in the case of knowledge on the principal's part.

§ 918. May buy on credit when not supplied with funds.—An agent, however, who is directed to purchase goods, but is not supplied with the necessary funds, and who is not expected to buy upon his own credit,⁸⁵ has ordinarily implied authority to purchase such goods on the credit of his principal, for otherwise, he cannot execute his authority.⁸⁶ And it has been held that an agent who has general authority to buy and sell goods for his principal, may buy on credit or for cash at his discretion.⁸⁷

⁸⁵ In Bank of Indiana v. Bugbee, 3 Keyes (N. Y.), 461, it was said that authority to a broker to buy goods but not supplied with funds, contemplated that he should buy them on his own credit or with his own funds. The broker settles later with his principal.

This is apparently the common understanding in many markets with reference to brokers.

⁸⁶ Sprague v. Gillett, 9 Metc. (Mass.) 91; Witcher v. Gibson, 15 Colo. App. 163.

Where the owner of a boat sent a member of the crew to buy supplies for it, which were sold upon the owner's credit, it was held that if the agent was furnished with the money to pay for the goods the principal was not liable for goods furnished on credit since the mere authority to purchase would not justify the agent in buying on credit, but that since he did not always furnish the agent with funds and the agent rendered him an account and received the money in settlement, the agent was authorized to purchase on credit and the principal was liable for the goods. Spear & Tietjen Supply Co. v. Van Riper, 104 Fed. 689.

The defendants, being two of several joint owners of a whaling vessel, authorized a third joint owner to purchase their share of the necessary supplies of the vessel for a coming voyage but advanced him no money. Such third owner, as their agent, bought the supplies on a six months' credit and gave a note payable in six months. The defendants, in ignorance of the credit and the note, paid the third owner their share with a commission, but the note not being paid at maturity, the vendor brought suit against them for the supplies.

Held, that he was entitled to recover. Wilde, J., said: "The defence is, that the agent was not authorized to make the purchase on a credit. That he was not in terms expressly so authorized is admitted; but he was authorized to make the purchase, and no funds were advanced to him, to enable him to purchase for cash. This, by implication, unquestionably authorized him to make the purchase on the defendant's credit. When an agent is authorized to do an act for his employer, all the means necessary for the accomplishment of the act are impliedly included in the authority, unless the agent be in some particular expressly restricted." Sprague v. Gillett, 9 Metc. (Mass.) 91.

⁸⁷ Ruffin v. Mebane, 41 N. Car. (6 Ired. Eq.) 507.

§ 919. Agent with general authority to purchase has authority to agree upon price and terms.—An agent invested with general authority to purchase goods for his principal has, in the absence of contrary limitations upon his authority, implied power to settle upon the usual incidents of the purchase.⁸⁸ Thus, in general, he may select the seller; he may determine upon the particular goods to be supplied; he may, within ordinary and reasonable limits, agree upon the price and terms of payment;⁸⁹ he may determine upon the time and method of delivery;⁹⁰ he may as part of the act acknowledge the receipt of the goods and the amount of indebtedness therefor;⁹¹ and may in general ⁸⁸ The manager of a coal company put in charge of its business and authorized to purchase a track scale, to whom the principal refers the seller to make the contract, and with whom the contract is in fact made is impliedly authorized to arrange the details of the contract and may agree to dig the pit and stipulate that title shall not pass until the scale is paid for. Wishard v. McNeill, 85 Iowa, 474. Compare Elder v. Stuart, 85 Iowa, 690. An agent authorized to purchase window screens held to have implied power to agree that the window sash should be so arranged that the screens could be properly put in place. Hogg v. Jackson & Sharp Co. (Md.), 26 Atl. 869. An agent with authority to buy logs has authority to buy in the usual manner and therefore may agree that the logs shall be scaled in the usual way and paid for according to that scale. Watts v. Howard, 70 Minn. 122. The court took judicial notice of the usual manner.

Where the principals wrote to the seller: "R. comes to see you to purchase your cattle in M. County, adjoining our pasture, or any purchase he may make of you on this trip for joint account for us and himself, we have authorized him to do so, and have agreed to make any reasonable advance on delivery of contract at any bank in this city, as an advance on contract, and as to fulfilment of the same," held, that this authorized R., in buying a herd of 3,000 cattle, to stipulate for $5,000 liquidated damages, in case of breach by the purchasers. Half v. O'Connor, 14 Tex. Civ. App. 191. That agent "was placed at the elevator to buy and receive grain; that he contracted for future delivery and attended generally to the corporation's business" showed authority to rescind contract. Middle Elevator Co. v. Vandeventer, 80 Ill. App. 669.

But an agent authorized to purchase has no authority to make unusual and extravagant terms, as in Salmon v. Austro-American Stave Co., 109 C. C. A. 254, 187 Fed. 564, where an agent agreed as part of a contract of purchase that money would be advanced to cover the expense of manufacturing other goods than those included in the purchase.

⁸⁹ Boulder Invest. Co. v. Fries, 2 Colo. App. 373. As between principal and agent, the principal is not bound, where the agent has departed materially from his authority. Ross v. Clark, 18 Colo. 90.

And a buying agent has no authority to agree secretly with the seller upon an excessive price in order that the excess may be applied to discharge a debt due from the predecessor in business of the principal. Pacific Lumber Co. v. Moffat, 67 C. C. A. 442, 134 Fed. 836.

⁹⁰ Owen v. Brockschmidt, 54 Mo. 285.

⁹¹ Stothard v. Aull, 7 Mo. 318. The agent in this case executed a do those things, not inconsistent with his authority, which are proper and usual to do in such cases.⁹² When employed in a capacity, or to deal in a market, affected by a particular custom, he is presumptively authorized to comply with such custom in making the purchase.⁹³

In this case, however, as in others, limitations may lawfully be imposed upon the agent's authority, which will be binding upon the agent, and upon third persons having knowledge or charged with notice of them.⁹⁴

§ 920. May not exceed limits as to quantity.—It is the duty of an agent, commissioned to buy goods up to a certain quantity, to confine his purchase within the limits given.⁹⁵ And he has no more implied authority to purchase a smaller than a greater quantity.⁹⁶ If no limits are fixed, a reasonable discretion may be exercised. An agent, promissory note for the price,—an act which the agent ordinarily would have no authority to do (see post, § 926)—even though he might agree upon the amount. But in this case there was other evidence from which the court held that a power to make such a note might be inferred. The agent was also a general managing agent and carried on the business, with the principal's consent, in his own name.

But a mere agent to purchase goods, who has done so, has no implied authority at a later time to agree to an account stated. Moore v. Maxwell, 155 Ala. 299.

⁹² An agent authorized to purchase property is authorized to receive it. Callahan v. Crow, 91 Hun, 346; affirmed 157 N. Y. 695.

An agent authorized to purchase and receive property has implied power to pass upon the quality and to bind his principal by acknowledging that it conforms to the contract. Schroeder Lumber Co. v. Stearns, 122 Wis. 503; Nunnely v. Goodwin (Tenn. Ch. App.), 39 S. W. 855. In Birge-Forbes Co. v. St. Louis, etc., Ry., 53 Tex. Civ. App. 55, an agent authorized to buy and ship cotton was held to have implied authority to agree that cotton stored on a railroad's platform should be at the risk of the owner.

In St. Louis, etc., Ry. v. Blocker, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 138 S. W. 156, two agents were purchasing and shipping poles for plaintiff, and were working contiguous territories along line of defendant railroad. One agent signed an agreement releasing the railroad from liability on poles stored on its right of way. This agreement held to be binding only as to poles which the agent making it had stored.

⁹³ Van Dusen-Harrington Co. v. Jungeblut, 75 Minn. 298, 74 Am. St. R. 463.

This is more fully exemplified in the case of brokers. See Brokers.

⁹⁴ Bryant v. Moore, 26 Me. 84, 45 Am. Dec. 96.

⁹⁵ Olyphant v. McNair, 41 Barb. (N. Y.) 446, aff'd 41 N. Y. 619; White v. Cooper, 3 Pa. St. 130.

Where an agent is known by the seller to be authorized to buy goods on credit only to a certain amount, the seller is bound to observe the limitation at his peril. Mussey v. Beecher, 3 Cush. (Mass.) 511.

As to this, see ante. § 761.

⁹⁶ Olyphant v. McNair, 41 Barb. (N. Y.) 446, aff'd 41 N. Y. 619. An agent authorized to purchase one-sixteenth of a ship at $40 per ton does not bind his principal by purchasing two-sixteenths at $44 per ton, one-sixteenth being on his own

however, having general authority to buy would, in many cases, bind his principal, in accordance with rules already discussed, even although he exceeded the instructions given him, or bought more than his actual authority would justify, if his purchases were within the limits of his apparent powers.⁹⁷

§ 921. Must observe limits as to quality or species.—An agent authorized generally to buy chattels, without limitation as to kind or quality, may undoubtedly exercise a fair and reasonable discretion. But where he is expressly limited to the purchase of a specific thing, he cannot purchase another. And where he is instructed to buy goods only of a given quality or of a certain kind, he must observe the limits fixed.⁹⁸

These rules, however, must be limited as in the preceding section; for it is clear that an agent, having general authority to buy, would, in many cases, bind his principal, though he departed from instructions as to quality or species; and an agent, having apparent authority to buy according to his own discretion, might often bind his principal, though his actual authority were otherwise.⁹⁹ account. Starbird v. Curtis, 43 Me. 352.

§ 922. Must observe limits as to price.—As stated in the preceding section, an agent authorized to buy without restrictions has im-

But the circumstances may easily be such as to show that it was not essential that the agent should buy the entire quantity in one transaction or of one person. Thus a direction to buy one hundred horses might fairly be found to mean that the agent should buy of various persons until he had secured one hundred. A purchase of five horses, toward the hundred, might then be authorized, and, if the agent never succeeded in securing one hundred, the purchase of those he did buy would not necessarily be defeasible, nor would the agent necessarily be liable because he never completed the number if that was found to be impossible under the circumstances. See Johnston v. Kershaw, L. R. 2 Ex. 82; Lathrop v. Harlow, 23 Mo. 209; Gordon v. Buchanan, 13 Tenn. (5 Yerg.) 71.

⁹⁷ Herrmann Saw Mill Co. v. Bailey, 22 Ky. Law Rep. 552, 58 S. W. 449. Where, however, the sellers know of the limitation they deal at their peril. Thrall v. Wilson, 17 Pa. Super. Ct. 376.

⁹⁸ Davies v. Lyon, 36 Minn. 427; White v. Cooper, 3 Pa. St. 130; Hopkins v. Blane, 1 Call (Va.), 361; Killough v. Cleveland (Tex. Civ. App.), 33 S. W. 1040; Theile v. Chicago Brick Co., 60 Ill. App. 559; Gregg v. Wooliscroft, 52 Ill. App. 214; Hackett v. Van Frank, 105 Mo. App. 384; Day v. Snyder Brokerage Co. (Tex. Civ. App.), 130 S. W. 716; Dick v. Gordon, 6 Grant's Ch. (Can.) 394.

⁹⁹ South. Ry. Co. v. Raney, 117 Ala. 270. An agent authorized to purchase peanuts, but only with the approval of his principal, made a purchase of a specific stock, described as "re-cleaned peanuts" in the written contract, and the principal approved the contract. Later the principal contended that his approval was not binding upon him because the peanuts were inferior to the standard commercially described as plied authority to agree upon the price which shall be paid. This discretion, however, even in such a case, is not an unlimited one, and should be regulated by the customary or market price, where there is one, and, at all events, by a fair and reasonable price. The principal may, however, limit the price which the agent is to pay, and while private instructions cannot prevail against apparent authority, the seller who has actual knowledge or is charged with notice of the restrictions cannot bind the principal by a contract in violation of them.¹

The statement is not infrequently found that an agent to buy, though limited as to price, may bind his principal to pay more if the seller be ignorant of the limitations. A so-called general agent, having an apparently unqualified or discretionary power to buy, may doubtless bind his principal, though he exceeds his instructions. An agent, though a special one, may be so held out by his principal as to have an apparently unlimited authority. What was said by the principal concerning price may be found to have been intended as mere instructions for the private ear of the agent, rather than as a real limitation upon his au-

"re-cleaned." The seller had no knowledge of the restriction, and there was nothing to put him upon notice. Held, that the principal was bound. Nunnely v. Goodwin (Tenn. Ch. App.), 39 S. W. 855. Compare Shroeder L. Co. v. Stearns, 122 Wis. 503. But in Day v. Snyder B. Co., supra, the defendant in Texas wrote a broker in New York instructing the broker to buy "new soft shell walnuts," leaving the matter of varieties to the broker's discretion. The broker inspected the walnuts offered, and made a contract for the purchase of a quantity of old walnuts. Held, that the defendant could repudiate on discovering that its agent had not purchased the kind ordered.

¹ Burks v. Stam, 65 Mo. App. 455. Here an agent bought a pair of race horses for his principal, taking a written bill of sale in which the price was set at $3,500. Though the agent was authorized to buy at that figure, he nevertheless orally agreed at the sale that the seller should receive a certain amount more if the buyer "did well and had no bad luck with the horses." Held, that the agent was "under all the evidence, limited to the price stated in the written contract; hence the defendant was not bound by another or different agreement if any such was made." In Atlas Mining Co. v. Johnston, 23 Mich. 36, the plaintiff in a sale under order of court had land bid off to S at $20,500. P, an agent of the defendant, desired to buy the property, but had been told by his principal to pay no more than $20,100. This fact was known to the plaintiff. P, hoping his principal would see the advisability of the purchase, agreed to pay $20,500, and be substituted as purchaser in place of S. Held, that the principal was not bound by the agreement to buy for $20,500.

Authority given to an agent to purchase a certain horse for his principal at a limited price, does not justify the agent in sending a third person to buy the horse at a less price and then turn the horse over to the principal at the price limited. Armstrong v. Elliott, 29 Mich. 485.

thority.² But it certainly can not be true that a principal may not, in any case, put limitations upon the price which his agent may pay, which will be effective, even though the seller was in fact ignorant of them.³ A seller is under the same obligation as any one else to ascertain the authority of the agent with whom he deals.

The place at which, or the circumstances under which, the agent buys may be sufficient to indicate limitations as to price; and limitations suggested by the ordinary experience and conduct of men may not be overlooked. An agent sent out, however, with apparent authority to negotiate and conclude a binding purchase from any one having such goods for sale, would doubtless be deemed to have authority to agree upon the price within the limits of what was usual or reasonable. Much that was said in the preceding subdivision respecting the authority of a selling agent to fix the price, is applicable here.

§ 923. May be restricted as to persons with whom to deal.—As has been seen above, an agent authorized to buy without restrictions, may buy from any one who has such goods for sale. The principal, however, may lawfully restrict the agent as to the persons with whom he shall deal in the execution of his authority, and where such restrictions are actually or constructively known, the principal cannot be bound by a purchase from other persons than those designated.⁴

§ 924. May make representations as to principal's credit.—An agent expressly authorized to purchase goods upon his principal's credit, has implied authority to make the natural and ordinary representations as to the solvency and credit of his principal, without which the seller would not sell the goods.⁵ This rule is based upon the principle that the agent has implied power to do those things which are

² See as to this distinction, § 730, ante. Hatch v. Taylor, 10 N. H. 538; Towle v. Leavitt, 23 N. H. 360, 55 Am. Dec. 195.

³ It is true that Jones Cotton Co. v. Snead, 169 Ala. 566, seems to hold the contrary, upon the authority of § 365 of the first edition of this work; but the court gives to that section an effect which the writer did not intend it to have.

Comer v. Granniss, 75 Ga. 277, is also apparently contra, though there is no discussion at all of this particular question.

⁴ Peckham v. Lyon, 4 McLean, 45; Thrall v. Wilson, 17 Pa. Super. 376;

Robinson v. Thompson, 74 Miss. 847.

An agent apparently put in general charge of the construction of a building may, it is held, bind his principal for materials purchased for and used in the construction of the building, though he bought them of plaintiff, contrary to instructions to buy all materials of another person specified. Mississippi Valley Const. Co. v. Abeles, 87 Ark. 374.

⁵ Hunter v. Hudson River Co., 20 Barb. (N. Y.) 493; Morris v. Possner, 111 Iowa, 335. See also Meyerhoff v. Daniels, 173 Pa. 555, 51 Am. St. R. 782.

necessary and usual to accomplish the object sought to be attained, and must, in reason, be limited by that necessity. Thus, if the principal's credit is already established, or if the seller does not require a representation, the principal ought not to be bound by the mere voluntary and gratuitous representations of his agent, nor in any event, for excessive or unusual pledges of responsibility.

§ 925. May not borrow money to pay for goods.—Even though it should be conceded that the agent, not supplied with funds, may buy upon the principal's credit, no authority will be implied to borrow money on the principal's credit with which to pay for the goods, unless such borrowing was authorized by the course of dealing, or was practically indispensable to the execution of the authority.⁶

§ 926. May not execute negotiable paper.—So authority to bind his principal by a note or bill for the price of the goods bought is not

⁶ See post. of Agent Authorized to Borrow Money; Bickford v. Menier, 107 N. Y. 490. Authority to buy stock does not justify an inference that the agent may borrow money on the principal's credit to pay for it. Martin v. Peters, 27 N. Y. Superior (4 Robt.), 434. In Bank of Indiana v. Bugbee, 3 Keyes (N. Y.), 461, it was held that an authority to a broker to buy and load upon a vessel a cargo of produce, does not, by implication, and in the absence of any sufficient custom, give to the agent the power to borrow, upon the credit of the principal, the money with which to make the purchase. In Bryant v. La Banque Du Peuple, [1893] App. Cas. 170, it was held that the Quebec agent of a London Company, the Canadian business of which was loaning money on the security of timber, whose power of attorney authorized him to make contracts for the purchase or sale of goods, the chartering of vessels, the employment of agents and servants, and a great number of other specified acts necessarily incidental thereto, has no authority to borrow money on behalf of the company or bind it by a contract of loan.

Authority to buy cotton, though general, does not authorize the agent to open a bank account, borrow money, and pledge his principal's securities as collateral therefor. Chicago, etc., Ry. Co. v. Chickasha Nat. Bank, 98 C. C. A. 535, 174 Fed. 923.

A power of attorney, authorizing an agent in England to purchase goods in connection with the business carried on by his principal in the colonies, and either for cash or on credit, and "where necessary in connection with my business or in connection with any purchases made on my behalf as aforesaid," to make, draw and accept bills of exchange, and to sign the name of the principal to any checks on the London banking account of the principal, does not confer on the agent a general borrowing power. Jacobs v. Morris, [1901] 1 Ch. Div. 261. See also Weekes v. Hardware Co., 23 Tex. Civ. App. 577.

Authority to buy horses held to include authority to borrow money for feed for and care of them after purchase and before shipment to the principal. Rider v. Kirk, 82 Mo. App. 120.

An agent put in charge of a business, with large discretionary authority, may bind his principal by borrowing necessary money. McDermott v. Jackson, 97 Wis. 64.

to be implied from mere authority to purchase. Such an agent, therefore, has no authority to bind his principal by a promissory note or bill of exchange, unless that authority be expressly given, or unless the giving of such note or bill is indispensable to the discharge of the duties to be performed.⁷

Authority to buy on credit when not supplied with funds does not, as seen in the preceding section, justify the borrowing of money to pay for them, and it does not justify either giving a note for the price, or giving a note to obtain money with which to pay the price.⁸

§ 927. May not guarantee payment by his vendor.—An agent authorized to buy goods and to make cash advances upon goods to be delivered, has thereby no implied authority to bind his principal by a guaranty that the person from whom the agent bought will pay what he already owes to his own vendor for the goods.⁹

§ 928. May not sell goods.—An agent authorized to buy goods has therefrom no implied authority to sell them.¹⁰ And this result is,

⁷ Where an agent in charge of a butchering business signed his principal's name to a promissory note it was held that the jury should have been instructed that "though an agent employed to make purchases for his principal may undoubtedly bind him by a contract of sale, he cannot ordinarily, without express authority, bind him by a negotiable promissory note; and that the single exception to this positive rule is in relation to agencies, the objects and purposes of which cannot be accomplished without the exercise of such a power." Temple v. Pomroy, 4 Gray (Mass.), 128.

Accordingly where the owners of a whaling vessel appointed an agent to fit her out and furnish the proper supplies for a whaling voyage, it was held that such agent had no authority to bind the owners by accepting a draft in their names as agent for the purchases made by him for the vessel. Taber v. Cannon, 8 Met. (Mass.) 456. An agent placed in general charge of a mercantile business who is given a definite amount of money and directed to conduct the business "upon the cash systme" has no authority to execute a note in the defendant's name as agent for goods purchased for the business. Stoddard v. McIlwain, 7 Rich. (S. Car. L.) 525; Perrotin v. Cucullu, 6 La. 587, is contra.

An agent to purchase wool, suggested a certain purchase to his principal, but the latter declined it. Agent nevertheless purchased and induced plaintiff bank to discount a draft for the price. Plaintiff had no knowledge of the instructions not to buy, but made no effort to ascertain his powers and relied on the fact that once before the agent had caused a similar draft to be discounted at the bank which the principal paid. Held, that bank could not recover on the draft. First Nat'l Bank v. Hall, 8 Mont. 341.

⁸ Swindell v. Latham, 145 N. C. 144, 122 Am. St. R. 430.

Manager of store no implied authority to give note for goods previously bought. Witz v. Gray, 116 N. C. 48.

⁹ Oberne v. Burke, 30 Neb. 581.

¹⁰ Hogue v. Simonson, 94 N. Y. App. Div. 139; McIntosh-Huntington Co. v. Rice, 13 Colo. App. 393.

of course, not changed by the fact that the buyer relied on the agent's false assertion that the principal had permitted him to sell them.¹¹

§ 929. Authority to alter or cancel contract.—An agent authorized to make a contract of purchase would ordinarily have no implied authority to afterwards consent that the contract should be cancelled or altered; but where the agent has been given general authority over the matter of purchase, with discretion in selecting the purchasers, agreeing upon the amounts, and fixing upon the terms of the sale, a modification or cancellation of a particular contract, done with a view to promote the principal's interests, would ordinarily be within his authority.¹²

§ 930. Authority to make admissions after the purchase.—As has been seen in an earlier section, an agent at the time of the purchase may be deemed to have authority to make the acknowledgments or admissions which are properly a part of the purchase;¹³ but there his authority would usually end; and, unless he were an agent with general authority over the whole subject-matter, he could have no implied authority, after the transaction was ended, to affect his principal by admissions or acknowledgments respecting the past transaction.¹⁴

§ 931. Agent can buy only for principal.—The authority of the agent to buy, like that of other agents, is to be exercised only for the principal's benefit; and the agent therefore cannot bind his principal by purchases openly made on his own account or that of some third person.¹⁵ If an agent, not known to be such, buys for himself, when he should have purchased for his principal, the latter may charge him as a trustee; but a person who, in good faith, sells to the agent is not affected by a secret intention of the agent to use the goods for himself.¹⁶

¹¹ Sage v. Shepard & Morse Lumber Co., 4 N. Y. App. Div. 290 (aff'd 158 N. Y. 672).

¹² Anderson v. Coonley, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 279; Spaulding Lumber Co. v. Stout, 86 Wis. 89; Middle Division Elevator Co. v. Vandeventer, 80 Ill. App. 669.

¹³ See ante, § 919.

¹⁴ Agent who has made a purchase has no implied authority at a later period to bind his principal by an account stated as to the price. Moore v. Maxwell, 155 Ala. 299.

¹⁵ See Saul v. Lepidus, 46 Colo. 538, where the manager of defendant's store at P, undertook to buy in defendant's name goods to be supplied to the agent to establish a store of his own at F.

¹⁶ Loeb v. Selig, 120 La. 192.

VI.

OF AGENT AUTHORIZED TO COLLECT OR RECEIVE PAYMENT.

§ 932. What here involved.—The question of authority to collect or receive payment has, as its statement suggests, two aspects: One, that of the person who insists that he is authorized to demand and receive of another that which the latter owes to a third person. Whoever makes such a claim, has ordinarily the burden of proving his authority. The other, that of the person who contends that he has discharged a debt, which he owes to another, by paying it to a third person as one authorized to receive it for the creditor. Whoever insists that he has discharged an admitted debt, by paying it to some one other than the creditor himself, has ordinarily the burden of proving that the person to whom he paid it was authorized by the creditor to receive such payment.¹⁷

§ 933. What constitutes such authority.—Authority to collect or receive payment of a demand may, of course, be conferred in express terms and with more or less of discretionary and incidental power.¹⁸ When such is the case, the rules heretofore laid down are sufficient to determine its construction.

Such an authority however, as in the other cases already considered may also arise by implication. Nevertheless it is not lightly to be inferred. An authority to an agent to receive goods, for example, would be much less likely to be subject to abuse, and much less likely to furnish temptation to the agent, than an authority to receive money.

¹⁷ See, for example, Koen v. Miller, — Ark. —, 150 S. W. 411; Hoffmaster v. Black, 78 Ohio St. 1, 125 Am. St. R. 679, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 52, 14 Ann. Cas. 877; Smith v. First Nat. Bank, 23 Okl. 411, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 576; Marling v. Nommensen, 127 Wis. 363, 15 Am. St. R. 1017, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 412, 7 Ann. Cas. 364. See also McNabb v. Hunt, 28 Okl. 43.

¹⁸ See, for example, Schroeder v. Waters, 173 Pa. 422, where the principal not only in terms authorized an agent to receive the money, but also gave him a receipt already prepared to be delivered to the debtor upon payment.

¹⁹ In Lythgoe v. Smith, 140 N. Y. 442, money was to be distributed in pursuance of a decree of court. An agent clothed with a power of attorney executed by his principal who lived in a foreign country demanded his principal's share. There was no question raised respecting the genuineness of the power and nothing to suggest that the principal had died or revoked it. Held, that the agent was entitled to receive the money.

Authority given to two persons to receive payment does not justify payment to one of them only. Robbins v. Horgan, 192 Mass. 443.

But where from the relation of the parties, a previous course of dealing, an established custom, or conduct working an estoppel it can fairly and reasonably be inferred that one person is authorized to receive payment for another, payment to the former will bind the latter,¹⁹ irrespective, ordinarily, of what may become of the money.²⁰ At-

¹⁹ See Grant v. Humerick, 123 Iowa, 571; Wilson v. Fones, 99 Iowa, 132; Sax v. Drake, 69 Iowa, 760; Quinn v. Dresbach, 75 Cal. 159, 7 Am. St. R. 138; Simon v. Brown, 38 Mich. 552; Gross v. Owen, 86 N. Y. Supp. 266; DeWitt v. DeWitt, 202 Pa. 255; McConnell v. Mackin, 22 App. Div. 537; McCarty v. Stanfill, 19 Ky. L. Rep. 612, 41 S. W. 278; McLeish v. Ball, 58 Wash. 690, 137 Am. St. R. 1087; Bennett Piano Co. v. Scace, 130 App. Div. 281.

One who buys a note and mortgage, knowing that his transferrer is authorized to collect interest and principal thereon, and who permits him to make such collections for a considerable period, is bound by payments subsequently made and can not recover again upon the theory that he was a purchaser for value of negotiable paper. Pockin v. Knoebel, 63 Neb. 768.

The transferee of a note who allows the transferrer to continue to receive payments thereon as before the transfer, is bound by payments afterwards made to such transferrer. Enright v. Beaumont, 68 Vt. 249. To same effect: Morgan v. Neal, 7 Idaho, 629, 97 Am. St. R. 264.

But in Winer v. Bank, 89 Ark. 435, 131 Am. St. 102, the mere fact that the holder of a series of notes allowed the payee to collect one of them, was held not sufficient to confer authority in the payee to collect any others.

Loan agents residing in a city made loans through a local agent in another place and divided commissions with him. The local agent took an application for a loan, in which it was stipulated that the commission should be paid to the general or the local agent. When the loan was consummated, a separate note was taken for the commissions in the name of the general agents and sent to them, and they paid the local agent his share in cash. Later the borrower paid the amount of this note to the local agent who did not have the note in his possession. There was proof of some correspondence between the general and the local agent which indicated that the local agent was to urge payment of this note, at least, if not to receive it. Held, that on all the facts, the payment was good. May v. Trust Co., 138 Mo. 275.

A wholesale house established a local agency through which sales were made and accounts collected. The directions to the manager were to deposit all receipts in a certain bank, and they were to be checked out only on checks in the principal's name. This the bank knew. A former manager had often cashed checks received at the agency without depositing them. This practice was continued by the manager in question, with the knowledge of the principal and without objection. Later the principal sued the bank to recover the amount of certain checks so paid to the manager and not deposited. Held, that the course of dealing justified the bank in so paying. Heinz v. American Nat. Bank, 9 Colo. App. 31.

Payment to a salesman who would not ordinarily be authorized to receive it may be good where there has been a recognized course of dealing in which payments have been made to him. Murphy v. St. Louis Coffin Co., 150 Ala. 143.

The agent's previous authority betention must therefore be given to some of the circumstances under which an authority to receive payment may be implied.

§ 934. When implied from making the loan or negotiating the contract.—And in the first place it may be noticed that the mere fact that the agent was employed to make the loan or negotiate the contract or draft the securities, upon which the money is payable will not, as of course, confer upon him the incidental authority to receive a payment which may become due upon such contract.²¹ If the authority goes no further, the agent's power will be exhausted when the loan is made or the contract is negotiated.

The fact that the money is made payable at the agent's office does not alter this rule, and the rule itself applies alike to principal and interest.²² comes practically immaterial where the principal with knowledge accepts the payment without objection. Spencer v. McCament, 7 Cal. App. 84.

Authority to an agent to re-loan money, given before the maturity of the prior loan, implies authority to receive the money upon the prior loan. Wales v. Mower, 44 Colo. 146.

Payment to husband or wife acting as agent of the other is good. Long v. Martin, 71 Mo. App. 569; Stanton v. French, 83 Cal. 194.

A mere payment to "the man in the office" of the principal is not good in the absence of evidence showing his actual or apparent authority. Schneider v. Hill, 19 N. Y. Misc. 56.

Payment in face of notice that agent is not authorized to receive it is not good. Metz v. Harbor Bldg. & Loan Ass'n, 117 App. Div. 825.

²⁰ It seems scarcely necessary to mention in this connection the effect of payment; but it is well settled, of course, that in general one who pays money in good faith to one authorized to receive it, is not bound to follow the money into the hands of the principal, and is not affected by the fact that the agent may misappropriate the money. Schroeder v. Waters, 173 Pa. 422;

National Mtg. Co. v. Lash, 5 Kan. App. 633; Indiana Trust Co. v. Building & Loan Ass'n, 36 Ind. App. 685, aff'd 165 Ind. 597; Fayetteville Wagon Co. v. Kenefick Co., 76 Ark. 615; James v. Lewis, 189 Mass. 134; Land Mtg. Co. v. Preston, 119 Ala. 290; Hamil v. Amer. Mtg. Co., 127 Ala. 90; Rogerson v. Leggett, 145 N. C. 7; South Melbourne Bldg. Society v. Field, 19 Vict. L. R. 213.

²¹ Thompson v. Elliott, 73 Ill. 221; Smith v. Hall, 19 Ill. App. 17; Cooley v. Willard, 34 Ill. 68, 85 Am. Dec. 296; Fortune v. Stockton, 182 Ill. 454; Ortmeier v. Ivory, 208 Ill. 577; Hefferman v. Boteler, 87 Mo. App. 316; Western Security Co. v. Douglas, 14 Wash. 215; Rhodes v. Belchee, 36 Or. 141.

Attorney or conveyancer employed merely as a scrivener to draw the papers is not thereby made agent to subsequently receive payments. Mynick v. Bickings, 30 Pa. Super. 401.

Mere authority to find a purchaser for real estate (but not to make a contract or deed), confers no implied power to receive the purchase price. See ante, § 814; Halsell v. Renfrow, 14 Okl. 674, aff'd 202 U. S. 287, 50 L. Ed. 1032.

²² Trowbridge v. Ross, 105 Mich. 598; Wood v. Trust Co., 41 Ill. 267; Cadwell v. Evans, 5 Bush (Ky.), § 935. When implied from possession of the securities.—Authority to receive payment on securities is not necessarily to be implied merely from their possession by the assumed agent.

Thus, authority to receive payment of a bill or note payable to the order of the principal and not indorsed by him, cannot be presumed from the mere possession by the assumed agent.²³ But where the bill or note is made payable to bearer, or is indorsed in blank, its apparently lawful possession by one whose real relation is not known, may be sufficient evidence of title if not of agency to sustain a payment to him.²⁴

Possession, however, when coupled with other facts or acts indicating agency to manage, control or deal with the securities, may be very potent evidence of authority to receive payment.²⁵

§ 936. — Possession by agent who negotiated loan evidence of authority.—While the mere fact that the agent negotiated the loan, or has possession of the securities, may not alone be enough to create at least an apparent authority to receive payment upon them, the union of both circumstances seems to suffice.²⁶

380, 96 Am. Dec. 358; St. Paul Nat. Bank v. Cannon, 46 Minn. 95, 24 Am. St. R. 189; Dwight v. Lenz, 75 Minn. 78; Gas Co. v. Pinkerton, 95 Penn. St. 62; Ward v. Smith, 7 Wall. 447, 19 L. Ed. 207; Cheney v. Libby, 134 U. S. 68, 33 L. Ed. 818; Corey v. Hunter, 10 N. D. 5; Hollinshead v. Stuart, 8 N. D. 35, 42 L. R. A. 659; Stolzman v. Wyman, 8 N. D. 108; Cummings v. Hurd, 49 Mo. App. 139.

In Shaw v. Williams, 100 N. C. 272, it appeared that plaintiff and her brother and a sister owned land. An oral sale to defendant was arranged by the brother. All joined in the execution of a deed which, in the usual form, recited the receipt of the consideration. This deed was delivered to defendant by the sister's husband who received his share of the price. Instructions were given by the plaintiff not to collect her share of the price but to leave it with defendant until she called for it. Nevertheless the brother collected the residue of the price from defendant who was not informed of this direction, but the brother failed to pay plaintiff her share. Held, that plaintiff could recover her share from the defendant. The brother was merely a special agent. The mere fact that he negotiated the sale gave him no implied authority to collect. Defendant made no inquiries, and was not misled by any holding out on the part of plaintiff of her brother as her agent to receive the money.

²³ Doubleday v. Kress, 50 N. Y. 410, 10 Am. Rep. 502; Wardrop v. Dunlop, 1 Hun, 325, affirmed 59 N. Y. 634; Hair v. Edwards, 104 Mo. App. 213; Lawson v. Nicholson, 52 N. J. Eq. 821.

²⁴ See Woodbury v. Larned, 5 Minn. 339; Cone v. Brown, 15 Rich. (S. Car.) L. 262; Owen v. Barrow, 1 Bos. & Pul. N. R. 101; Whelan v. Reilly, 61 Mo. 565; Drinkall v. Movius State Bank, 11 N. D. 10, 95 Am. St. R. 693, 57 L. R. A. 341.

²⁵ Dawson v. Wombles, 111 Mo. App. 532.

²⁶ In Central Trust Co. v. Folsom, 167 N. Y. 285, it is said: "The reason why a payment to an agent who has made the loan and who continues to hold the security is good payment to the principal, and why, under such circumstances, the agent has apparent authority to collect the debt is not very clearly stated in either the text books or the earlier decided cases. It was first established in England, and doubtless there grew out of the general course of business as to loans made through attorneys or scriveners. The fact that the attorney or agent has made the loan does not give him authority to collect the debt, nor, it seems, does the mere possession of the security by the attorney give such authority (Doubleday v. Kress, 50 N. Y. 410, 10 Am. Rep. 502). Both conditions must concur, that the agent acted for the principal at the inception of the business and that he holds the securities."

Thus it is held that where a loan upon a note, or bond and mortgage has been negotiated, or such a security has been purchased, for the principal through an agent, and the security is left in the agent's possession and control, his authority to receive payments of principal or interest thereon as they accrue may, in the absence of directions to pay it elsewhere, be implied.²⁷ The reason for this rule, it has been said, "is founded upon human experience, that the payer knows that the agent has been trusted by the payee about the same business, and he is thus given a credit with the payer."²⁸ This reason is certainly not a very cogent one.

²⁷ Central Trust Co. v. Folsom, 167 N. Y. 285; Crane v. Gruenewald, 120 N. Y. 274, 17 Am. St. R. 643; Smith v. Kidd, 68 N. Y. 130, 23 Am. Rep. 157; O'Loughlin v. Billy, 95 App. Div. 99; Williams v. Walker, 2 Sandf. (N. Y.) Ch. 325; Hatfield v. Reynolds, 34 Barb. (N. Y.) 612; Van Keuren v. Corkins, 4 Hun (N. Y.), 129, aff'd 66 N. Y. 77; Union Trust Co. v. McKeon, 76 Conn. 508; Haines v. Pohlmann, 25 N. J. Eq. 179; Smith v. Landeck, 101 Ill. App. 248; Stiger v. Bent, 111 Ill. 328; Kranz v. Uedelhofen, 193 Ill. 477; Jolly v. Huebler, 132 Mo. App. 675.

See also, Sessions v. Kent, 75 Iowa, 601.

"Both conditions must concur, that the agent acted for the principal at the inception of the business, and that he holds the securities." Central Trust Co. v. Folsom, supra.

The rule applies to an agent who buys an existing security as well as to one who makes an original loan. Central Trust Co. v. Folsom, supra; Williams v. Walker, supra.

Limitations.—But this rule cannot apply in a case in which, though the alleged agent negotiated the transaction and retains possession of the securities, the securities belong to persons who can not be bound by ostensible authority-like minors, insane persons, etc., and his only authority to receive therefore depends upon some actual fact, such as the possession of an official authority which does not really exist. Thus, where an agent was intrusted with money to be deposited for the benefit of minors, and he took certificates payable to their order or to himself as guardian,—which position he did not occupy,—and he finally drew the money, pretending to act as guardian, and the bank requiring no proof of his authority,—it was held that the payment did not release the bank. McMahon v. German American Bank, 111 Minn. 313, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 67.

²⁸ In Doubleday v. Kress, 50 N. Y. 410, 10 Am. R. 502. See, also, Central Trust Co. v. Folsom, 167 N. Y. 285.

§ 937. — Possession indispensable.—The presumption in these cases is founded upon the negotiating agent's possession of the securities; it does not arise if the securities are not left in the agent's possession, and, if once created, it ceases when the securities are withdrawn by the principal.²⁹ It is incumbent, therefore, upon the debtor to assure himself on each occasion when a payment is made that they still continue in the agent's possession, for if they have been withdrawn the payment will not bind the principal, unless actual authority can be shown or his conduct has been such as to estop him to deny the agency.³⁰

It is not, it is held, essential that he shall actually see and examine the securities on each occasion; "if he have trustworthy information of the fact which he believes and relies upon and it shall prove to be true, there seems to be no reason why it should not avail him as well as a personal examination of the securities."³¹

²⁹ Guilford v. Stacer, 53 Ga. 618; Megary v. Funtis, 5 Sandf. Sup. Ct. (N. Y.) 376; Brown v. Blydenburgh, 7 N. Y. 141; Cooley v. Willard, 34 Ill. 68, 85 Am. Dec. 296; Strachan v. Muxlow, 24 Wis. 21; Garrels v. Morton, 26 Ill. App. 433.

Notice of the withdrawal is not necessary.

³⁰ Smith v. Kidd, 68 N. Y. 130, 23 Am. Rep. 157; Brown v. Blydenburgh, 7 N. Y. 141, 57 Am. Dec. 506; Kellogg v. Smith, 26 N. Y. 18; Purdy v. Huntington, 42 N. Y. 334, 1 Am. Rep. 532; Williams v. Walker, supra; Hatfield v. Reynolds, supra; Van Keuren v. Corkins, supra; Megary v. Funtis, supra; Haines v. Pohlmann, supra; Cooley v. Willard, supra; Brewster v. Carnes, 103 N. Y. 556; Security Co. v. Graybeal, 85 Iowa, 543, 39 Am. St. R. 311; Fortune v. Stockton, 182 Ill. 454; Stiger v. Bent, 111 Ill. 328; Western Security Co. v. Douglass, 14 Wash. 215; Bloomer v. Dau, 122 Mich. 522; Eaton v. Knowles, 61 Mich. 625; Lane v. Duhac, 73 Wis. 646; Frank v. Tuozzo, 26 N. Y. App. Div. 447; Corbet v. Waller, 27 Wash. 242; Bartel v. Brown, 104 Wis. 493; Walton Guano Co. v. McCall, 111 Ga. 114; Evans Co. v. Holder, 16 Tex. Civ. App. 300.

In Crane v. Gruenewald, supra, it was said by Parker, J.: "This rule comprises two elements: First, possession of the securities by the attorney with the consent of the mortgagee; and second knowledge of such possession on the part of the mortgagor. The mere possession of the securities by the attorney is not sufficient. The mortgagor must have knowledge of the fact. It would not avail him to prove that subsequent to a payment he discovered that the securities were in the actual custody of the attorney when it was made. For he could not have been misled or deceived by a fact the existence of which was unknown to him. It is the information which he acquires of the possession which apprises him that the attorney has apparent authority to act for the principal. It is the appearance of authority to collect, furnished by the custody of the securities which justifies him in making payment, and it is because the mortgagor acts in reliance upon such appearance, an appearance made possible only by the act of the mortgagee in leaving the securities in the hands of an attorney that estops the owner from denying the existence of authority in the attorney which such possession indicates."

³¹ Crane v. Gruenewald, supra.

It is not, of course, essential in these cases that the securities shall have been left with the agent for the express purpose of receiving payment,—that would create an actual authority;—their possession by the agent by the principal's act may create an appearance of authority to receive payment upon which the innocent payer may rely, even though they were in the agent's possession for some other purpose.³²

A payer who was not aware that the agent originally negotiated the transaction is held not to be within the protection of the rule.³³

§ 938. Authority by conduct independent of possession.—But although the authority to receive payment in these cases depends upon the subsequent possession of the securities, the principal may, by the course of dealing or other conduct, justify an inference of authority which will be independent of possession. Thus, where the principal has confided to a loan agent money to be invested and has relied upon the agent to select the security and determine upon the loan, has permitted him to receive payment of principal and interest when due, has allowed him to reinvest the proceeds from time to time, and has treated him as having general authority in the premises, payments of principal or interest to such agent have been held to justify a finding of authority in fact to bind the principal, even although the agent may not at the time have had possession of the securities.³⁴

³² See Lawson v. Carson, 50 N. J. Eq. 370. Here the conveyancer who negotiated the loan, but who did not keep possession of the securities, had been authorized to receive the interest and had done so frequently. Later the principal handed him a covered and sealed package containing papers for safe keeping merely, and without informing him of the contents. This bundle contained the securities in question. The bundle was opened by the attorney without authority. Later a subsequent purchaser from the mortgagor came in and paid the principal sum to the attorney who surrendered up the securities so obtained. The Vice Chancellor held that the principal was bound. But this was reversed by the Court of Errors in (sub. nom. Lawson v. Nicholson, 52 N. J. Eq. 821). The latter court held that, as to the present payer, the case could stand upon no higher ground than a payment to one in possession who had not negotiated the securities, and that, even upon this ground, it could not be said that the principal had put the agent into possession.

³³ In Lawson v. Nicholson, 52 N. J. Eq. 821, supra, where payment was made by a vendee of the original mortgagor—such vendee not knowing or relying upon the fact that he was dealing with the agent employed in the first instance—the rule did not apply.

³⁴ Thus in General Convention v. Torkelson, 73 Minn. 401, it appeared that a firm of loan agents, of the name of Kelley, residing in Minneapolis, and having various local agents throughout the state, had in sixteen years made about eighteen loans for one Fairbanks, who resided in Vermont. The Kelleys received the applications and passed upon them, determined upon the sufficiency of the security, and the question of insurance, and in general decided upon all the questions connected with the loan. The securities when completed were sent to Fairbanks, and the money was payable in Vermont but all principal and interest was in fact collected in Minneapolis, through the Kelleys. In nearly every instance, except the one in question, when principal was paid, the papers were sent on from Vermont, but, as the court found, rather to be delivered upon payment than as evidence of authority to receive payment. Torkelson had borrowed money of Fairbanks through the Kelleys, but there was nothing to indicate that he knew of or relied upon the foregoing facts. When the loan became due, he obtained a new loan, through the Kelleys, from another one of their clients, and out of the proceeds paid the Kelleys the amount due on the Fairbanks mortgage, but without receiving a surrender of the note and mortgage. Kelleys did not send the money to Fairbanks, but themselves paid the interest to Fairbanks for several years giving him various invented excuses for not obtaining the principal from Torkelson. Later the Kelleys failed and the facts came to light. This was an action to foreclose the mortgage given to Fairbanks, and assigned to plaintiff. Defense was payment. The court held that the payment was good, on the ground that the evidence tended to show actual authority on the part of Kelleys, partly express and partly implied, to receive the money.

§ 939. ——— Estoppel to deny authority.—So, even though the facts may not be sufficient to justify an inference of actual authority, as in the cases considered in the preceding section, there may nevertheless be such a course of conduct as to reasonably lead the debtor

At the same term, was decided Hare v. Bailey, 73 Minn. 409, wherein the same Kelleys had acted for defendant who also resided in Vermont. The facts were much the same as in the preceding case, and the court held that the facts here also justified an inference of actual authority to receive payment, without the possession of the securities.

See also, involving the same agents and reaching the same conclusion. Springfield Savings Bank v. Kjaer, 82 Minn. 180; Randall v. Eichhorn, 80 Minn. 344; Dexter v. Berge, 76 Minn. 216.

The court takes pains in the case in 82 Minn. 180, supra, to point out that in none of these cases has the court held that the evidence was in law or in fact sufficient to establish the agency, but only that from the facts stated a trier of the facts might properly find that the authority in fact existed.

Substantially similar are Quinn v. Dresbach, 75 Cal. 159, 7 Am. St. Rep. 138; Frost v. Fisher, 13 Colo. App. 322; Morgan v. Neal, 7 Idaho, 629, 97 Am. St. R. 264; Townsend v. Studer, 109 Iowa, 103; Harrison v. Legore, 109 Iowa, 618; Shane v. Palmer, 43 Kan. 481; Meserve v. Hansford, 59 Kan. 777; Fowle v. Outcalt, 64 Kan. 352; Doyle v. Corey, 170 Mass. 337; Wilson v. La Tour, 108 Mich. 547; Ziegan v. Stricker, 110 Mich. 282; Bissell v. Dowling, 117 Mich. 646; Johnston v. Investment Co., 46 Neb. 480; Thomson v. Shelton, 49 Neb. 644; Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Walter, 51 Neb. 182; Pine v. Mangus, 76 Neb. 83; Harrison Nat. Bank v. Williams, 2 Neb. Unoff. 400, 89 N. W. 245; Reid v. Kellog, 8 S. D. 596; Edinburgh-American Mtg. Co. v. Noonan, 11 S. D. 141; Campbell v. Gowans, 35 Utah, 268, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 414, 9 Ann. Cas. 660; Bantz v. Adams, 131 Wis. 152, 120 Am. St. R. 1030; Security Co. v.

to rely upon the agent's authority and which will protect him if he acts upon it.³⁵ In this case, however, unlike the preceding one, knowledge by the payer of the circumstances, and reasonable reliance upon them to his prejudice, are essential parts of his case.³⁶

§ 940. ——— Limitations.—The inference of an actual or apparent authority in these cases is quite easy to over draw, and the very hardship of many of the cases seems to furnish a strong temptation to do so. Nevertheless, it is an inference which should be drawn with caution. It is not ordinarily to be presumed, for example, that, where negotiable securities for the debt are outstanding, the creditor expects to demand, or the debtor to make, payments without the surrender or indorsement of the securities. So where the payment is secured by mortgage, it is not to be presumed that the debt is to be paid without a surrender and discharge of the mortgage.

The fact that the principal, though in a number of instances, may have expressly confided the securities to the agent for the purpose of receiving a payment upon them ought not to be construed as evidence of a general authority to receive payment at a time when they have not been so confided to him.³⁷ A fortiori would this be true where it

Richardson (U. S. C. C.), 33 Fed. 16.

All the more so is this true where, in addition to the facts indicated, the principal is not disclosed and the securities are taken in the name of the agent. Cheshire Provid. Inst. v. Fuesner, 63 Neb. 682.

³⁵ See the question discussed in Harrison v. Legore, 109 Iowa, 618, in which case it was held that where the principal, as the payer knew, had allowed the agent to deal in a very general way with reference to his loans; had permitted him to make collections when notes and coupons were sent to him for that purpose, but more frequently had permitted him to collect first and had sent him the papers afterwards; a payment of principal was binding although the agent did not have the papers in his possession for that purpose.

See also, Phillips v. McGrath, 62 Wis. 124; Midland Sav. & L. Co. v. Sutton, 30 Okl. 448.

³⁶ See Cannon v. Gibson, 162 Mo.

App. 386; Thomas v. Swanke, 75 Minn. 326.

³⁷ Budd v. Broen, 75 Minn. 316, distinguishing Hare v. Bailey and General Convention v. Torkelson, supra. To the same effect: Thomas v. Swanke, 75 Minn. 326; Schenk v. Dexter, 77 Minn. 15; Trull v. Hammond, 71 Minn. 172.

In Budd v. Broen, supra, the court said: "The fact that she [the principal] did not leave the securities with her loan agents, but retained them in her exclusive possession, is very potent evidence that she did not intend to confer upon them such general authority. By so retaining her securities, and sending them for collection only as they became due, she could keep a wholesome check upon her agents, and avoid the possibility of loss through them, except as to the particular securities sent for collection. If, in such cases, the money was not remitted or the papers returned within a reasonable time, she could investigate, and at once learn appeared that, in nearly all cases, the principal refused to send the securities to the agent until the money had first been paid to him.³⁸ So, though one, who has purchased mortgages from a loan company, at whose office they are made payable, may know "that the loan company was systematically trying to get the borrowers to discharge their duty to pay taxes and insurance and get the payments to the Boston office," he does not thereby make the loan company his agent to receive payment upon the securities which he retains in his own possession or sends to another agent for collection.³⁹ And so where a person, who has bought mortgages in this way, afterwards employs the loan company to collect the interest, in each case sending him the security due with specific instruction, he does not thereby make the loan company his agent for the collection of subsequent installments of interest and principal where the papers have not been sent and no authority for collection has been given.⁴⁰ whether her agents were in default. But if she conferred general authority upon them to collect the principal of any or all of her loans without first receiving the securities, she would hazard the whole of them, for she would then have no check upon her agents, or means of knowing when or what payments were made.

"The defendant, having paid his note and mortgage to the Kelleys without requiring a surrender of the securities, assumed the risk of establishing the authority, express or implied, of the agents to receive such payment for the plaintiff. We are unable to find in the record any evidence that justifies the finding that the agents were so authorized. Their authority was to receive payment for the plaintiff whenever she forwarded her securities for collection, and there is no evidence warranting the conclusion that she ever knew that the Kelleys ever assumed to collect the principal of her mortgage without having first actually received them from her; hence there is no evidence of ratification of their acts, or of actual implied authority to receive payment of the note and mortgage in question."

³⁸ Security Co. v. Graybeal, 85 Iowa, 543, 39 Am. St. R. 311; Western Security Co. v. Douglass, 14 Wash. 215.

³⁹ Bradbury v. Kinney, 63 Neb. 754.

⁴⁰ Joy v. Vance, 104 Mich. 97. To same effect: Trowbridge v. Ross, 105 Mich. 598; Bromley v. Lathrop, 105 Mich. 492; Church Assoc. v. Walton, 114 Mich. 677; Bacon v. Pomeroy, 118 Mich. 145; Terry v. Durand Land Co., 112 Mich. 665; Bartel v. Brown, 104 Wis. 493; Kohl v. Beach, 107 Wis. 409, 50 L. R. A. 600; Murphy v. Barnard, 162 Mass. 72, 44 Am. St. R. 340; Dexter v. Morrow, 76 Minn. 413; Hollinshead v. Stuart, 8 N. D. 35, 42 L. R. A. 659; Ilgenfritz v. Mutual B. L. Ins. Co., 81 Fed. 27; Mutual B. L. Ins. Co. v. Miles, 81 Fed. 32; United States Bank v. Burson, 90 Iowa, 191; Ortmeier v. Ivory, 208 Ill. 577.

See also Evans Co. v. Holder, 16 Tex. Civ. App. 300.

In Joy v. Vance, supra, the court said: "Vance [the debtor] admits he paid the interest to the company without taking the trouble to ascertain whether it had the mortgage or who owned it. When he paid the mortgage he was satisfied with the statement that the mortgage was

§ 941. Payment to agent of the owner of record.—Payment to one who had been the agent to receive payment upon a recorded note and mortgage but made after the record owner has transferred the note and mortgage to another by an unrecorded instrument,—the agent not being in fact the agent of the present holder, and neither he nor the former owner having possession of the securities, is not such a payment as will bind the present holder.⁴¹

§ 942. Payment to agent as ostensible principal.—Where the agent, with the principal's knowledge and consent, is permitted to appear as the ostensible owner of the securities, as where a loan agent is permitted to take all securities in his own name and generally to deal with them as though he were the owner, though he afterwards transfer them to his principal without notice to the debtor, the principal who subsequently intervenes must be held bound by all payments made to the agent while the principal was still undisclosed.⁴²

§ 943. Authority to receive proceeds of securities entrusted to agent for delivery.—Where the principal confides to an agent for delivery securities upon whose delivery money is to be loaned or paid to or for the principal, the agent, in the absence of anything to indicate a contrary intention, would have implied power to receive the money and payment to him would be effective even though through his subsequent default the money never came to the hands of the principal.⁴³ The case of an agent authorized to negotiate a loan to his principal and entrusted by the latter with the possession of the bond and mortgage which were to secure it, would be a typical illustration.⁴⁴

mislaïd, although he received a receipt which indicated that it did not belong to the company to which he was paying it. It was perhaps the natural thing for him to pay it, in reliance upon the statement of these men with whom he was acquainted and in whom he had confidence; but his rights must depend upon their authority to receive the money, not upon his confidence in them."

⁴¹ Bantz v. Adams, 131 Wis. 152, 120 Am. St. Rep. 1030 (distinguishing Marling v. Nommensen, 127 Wis. 363, 115 Am. St. R. 1017, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 412, 7 Ann. Cas. 364, on the ground that in the latter case the question arose in dealing with the land with reference to the state of the records); Wilson v. Campbell, 110 Mich. 580, 35 L. R. A. 544.

⁴² Cheshire Prov. Institution v. Feusner, 63 Neb. 682. See also McLeod v. Despain, 49 Or. 536, 124 Am. St. R. 1066, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 276.

⁴³ National Mortgage Co. v. Lash, 5 Kan. App. 633; Gosch v. Fire Ins. Ass'n, 44 Ill. App. 263.

But the delivery by a wife to her husband of a check payable to the order of a third person does not necessarily constitute the husband the agent of the wife to receive the amount of the check. Hunt v. Poole, 139 Mass. 224.

⁴⁴ National Mortgage Co. v. Lash, supra.

See Land, etc., Co. v. Preston, 119 Ala. 290.

So where an insurance company confides to an agent a policy for delivery, the agent has apparently implied authority to receive the premium.⁴⁵

§ 944. When authority implied from having sold the goods or land.—The presumption as to the authority to receive payment arising from the fact that the agent sold the goods for which the demand is due, has been considered in treating of the implied powers of an agent authorized to sell goods.⁴⁶

The same thing is true of agents for the sale of land.⁴⁷ It is not necessary to repeat these discussions here.

§ 945. Authority to receive interest does not authorize receipt of principal.—The mere fact that an agent is, either expressly or by implication, authorized to receive the interest upon a principal sum, will not justify the inference that the agent is authorized to receive the principal sum itself.⁴⁸ Thus where the payee of a promissory note, payable to her order, delivered it, unindorsed, to an agent with authority to receive the interest thereon, and to take a new note in renewal with an indorser, and the maker paid the principal and interest to the agent who embezzled the principal, it was held that the payment of the principal was unauthorized and did not discharge the liability of the maker to the payee.⁴⁹

And so, in many cases, it has been held that one to whom interest coupons have been sent for collection, or who has been authorized to receive, or who has been in the habit of receiving the periodical payments of interest, has therefrom no implied authority to receive the principal.⁵⁰ And even though the agent negotiated the loan, author-

⁴⁵ Gosch v. Fire Ins. Ass'n, supra.

⁴⁶ See ante, § 865, et seq.

⁴⁷ See ante, § 814.

⁴⁸ Doubleday v. Kress, 50 N. Y. 410, 10 Am. Rep. 502; Smith v. Kidd, 68 N. Y. 130, 23 Am. Rep. 157; Brewster v. Carnes, 103 N. Y. 556; Hoffmaster v. Black, 78 Ohio St. 1, 125 Am. St. R. 679, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 52, 14 Ann. Cas. 877; Burnham v. Wilson, 207 Mass. 378; Higley v. Dennis, 40 Tex. Civ. App. 133; Cunningham v. McDonald, 98 Tex. 316; Lester v. Snyder, 12 Colo. App. 351; Hefferman v. Boteler, 87 Mo. App. 316; Barstow v. Stone, 10 Colo. App. 396; Koen v. Miller, — Ark. —, 150 S. W. 411.

⁴⁹ Doubleday v. Kress, supra.

⁵⁰ The fact that the holder of a mortgage from time to time permitted a mortgage company to collect the interest coupons, on the same being forwarded to it for collection, is not sufficient to authorize the company to collect the principal upon the mortgages which had not been sent for collection. Wilson v. Campbell, 110 Mich. 580, 35 L. R. A. 544.

See also, Terry v. Durand Land Co., 112 Mich. 665; Porter v. Ourada, 51 Neb. 510; Trull v. Hammond, 71 Minn. 172.

Where there was evidence that the agents sometimes collected interest on loans before receiving the coupons, and frequently collected the principal before receiving the satis-

ity to receive payments of interest upon it will not justify the receipt of the principal where the agent is not entrusted with the possession of the securities.⁵¹ If he has possession also, a different rule, as has been seen, applies.⁵²

§ 946. Can receive nothing but money.—Where an agent is authorized merely to collect a demand or to receive payment of a debt, the law, in the absence of anything to indicate a wider authority, interprets this to mean a collection or payment in fact, and the agent cannot bind his principal by any arrangement short of an actual collection and receipt of the money.⁵³ He cannot, therefore, take in pay-

faction of the mortgage, and that they occasionally sent interest before they had collected it or received the coupons for it, but there was no evidence that the principal knew that they had ever assumed to collect the principal before receiving the mortgage or a satisfaction of it, it was held that there was not enough to show actual authority to receive principal without having the securities; and since there was also no evidence that the debtor knew or relied upon the facts above set forth at the time he paid the principal, there was no ground upon which the principal could be estopped to deny the agents' authority to receive the principal on securities not in possession of the agents. Thomas v. Swanke, 75 Minn. 326.

⁵¹ Koen v. Miller, — Ark. —, 150 S. W. 411; Richards v. Waller, 49 Neb. 639; Gilbert v. Garber, 62 Neb. 464; City Missionary v. Reams, 51 Neb. 225; Campbell v. O'Connor, 55 Neb. 638; Dewey v. Bradford, 2 Neb. Unof. 388, 89 N. W. 249; Ortmeier v. Ivory, 208 Ill. 577; Garrels v. Morton, 26 Ill. App. 433.

A loan was negotiated by an agent and was made payable at his office. Interest thereon was paid at that office and was never again demanded. Plaintiff called there to get the interest and, while she intended that he should reloan the money when it was collected, she never demanded the principal of him. He collected both principal and interest without production of the note and converted the principal. Held, no discharge. Klindt v. Higgins, 95 Iowa, 529, following Englert v. White, 92 Iowa, 97 [another case involving the same agent], and distinguishing Sax v. Drake, 69 Iowa, 760.

⁵² See ante, §§ 935-937.

⁵³ Bridges v. Garrett, L. R. 5 C. P. 454; Ward v. Evans, 2 Ld. Raym. 928; Hine v. Steamship Ins. Syndicate, 72 L. T. 79; Pearson v. Scott, 9 Ch. Div. 198; Pape v. Westacott, [1894] 1 Q. B. 272; Sweeting v. Pearce, 7 C. B. N. S. 449; Ward v. Smith, 7 Wall. (U. S.) 447, 19 L. Ed. 207; Fretz v. Stover, 22 Wall. (U. S.) 198, 22 L. Ed. 769; Powell's Adm'r v. Henry, 27 Ala. 612; Taylor v. Robinson, 14 Cal. 396; Rodgers v. Peckham, 120 Cal. 238; Hendry v. Benlisa, 37 Fla. 609, 34 L. R. A. 283; Holmes v. Langston, 110 Ga. 861; Padfield v. Green, 85 Ill. 529; Mathews v. Hamilton, 23 Ill. 470; Everts v. Lawther, 165 Ill. 487; Cooney v. U. S. Wringer Co., 101 Ill. App. 468; McCormick Harvesting Co. v. Breen, 61 Ill. App. 528; Corning v. Strong, 1 Ind. 329; Kirk v. Hiatt, 2 Ind. 322; McCormick v. Wood, etc., Co., 72 Ind. 518; Robinson v. Anderson, 106 Ind. 152; O'Conner v. Arnold, 53 Ind. 203; Aultman v. Lee, 43 Iowa, 404; Graydon v. Patterson, 13 Iowa, 256, 81 Am. Dec. 432; McCarver v. Nealey, 1 G. Greene (Iowa), 360; British & Amer. Mtg. Co. v. Tibbals, 63 Iowa, 468; Ruthven v. Clark, 109 Iowa, 25; Martin v. United States, 2 T. B. Mon-ment the note of the debtor payable either to himself⁵⁴ or to his prin-

roe (Ky.), 89, 15 Am. Dec. 129; Farmers' & Drovers' Bank v. Bennett, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 852, 47 S. W. 623; Baldwin v. Tucker, 112 Ky. 282, 57 L. R. A. 451; Woodruff v. Amer. Road Mach. Co., 23 Ky. L. Rep. 1551, 65 S. W. 600; Waterhouse v. Citizens' Bank, 25 La. Ann. 77; Rodick v. Coburn, 68 Me. 170; Kent v. Ricards, 3 Md. Ch. 392; Langdon v. Potter, 13 Mass. 319; Pitkin v. Harris, 69 Mich. 133; Woodbury v. Larned, 5 Minn. 339; Nichols & Shepard Co. v. Hackney, 78 Minn. 461; Greenwood v. Burns, 50 Mo. 52; Western White Bronze Co. v. Portrey, 50 Neb. 801; Moore v. Pollock, 50 Neb. 900; Holt v. Schneider, 57 Neb. 523; Gilbert v. Garber, 62 Neb. 464; Dixon v. Guay, 70 N. H. 161; Black v. Dundon, 83 App. Div. (N. Y.) 539; Sier v. Bache, 7 N. Y. Misc. 165; Williams v. Johnston, 92 N. C. 532, 53 Am. Rep. 428; First Nat. Bank v. Prior, 10 N. D. 146; Oliver v. Sterling, 20 Ohio St. 391; McCulloch v. McKee, 16 Pa. 289; Paul v. Grimm, 183 Pa. 330; Gooze v. Gaskill, 18 Pa. Sup. Ct. 39; Columbia Phosphate Co. v. Farmers' Alliance Store, 47 S. C. 358; Robson v. Watts, 11 Tex. 764; Rodgers v. Bass, 46 Tex. 505; Chattanooga Pipe Works v. Gorman, 12 Tex. Civ. App. 75; Schleicher v. Armstrong (Tex. Civ. App.), 32 S. W. 327; Western Mfg. Co. v. Maverick, 4 Tex. Civ. App. 535; Willis v. Gorrell, 102 Va. 746; Corbet v. Waller, 27 Wash. 242; Wiley v. Mahood, 10 W. Va. 206; Harper v. Harvey, 4 W. Va. 539; Whitney v. State Bank, 7 Wis. 620.

⁵⁴Corning v. Strong, 1 Ind. 329; McCulloch v. McKee, 16 Pa. 289; Robinson v. Anderson, 106 Ind. 152; Baldwin v. Tucker, 112 Ky. 282, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 1538, 57 L. R. A. 451; Hoffman v. Ins. Co., 92 U. S. 161, 23 L. Ed. 539; Holt v. Schneider, 57 Neb. 523; Cram v. Sickel, 51 Neb. 828, 66 Am. St. R. 478; Willis v. Gorrell, 102 Va. 746; Everts v. Lawther, 165 Ill. 487; Scott v. Gilkey, 153 Ill.

168; Davis v. Severance, 49 Minn. 528; McGrath v. Vanaman, 53 N. J. Eq. 459.

Especially, where the note is for more than the amount and the principal is expected to pay the difference. Moore v. Pollock, 50 Neb. 900.

The fact that the note is secured by a mortgage is immaterial. Moore v. Pollock, supra.

There are, indeed, some cases to the contrary; the most important one is Galbraith v. Weber, 58 Wash. 132, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 341. There the owner of a horse, which the owner valued at $3,000, put the horse into the hands of an agent for sale, with no specific instructions as to the amount of the price, although he evidently expected to receive therefor approximately $3,000; and he authorized the agent to sell the horse upon time and to take good notes. The agent, not being able to sell for $3,000, finally sold to the defendants for $1,000, and received in payment two time notes for $500 each, payable to himself. The agent immediately discounted these notes at a bank and absconded with the money; before doing so, however, he forged three notes for $900 each, in the names of the defendants, payable to the principal, and sent them to the principal who retained them until the forgery was discovered. In an action by the principal to recover the horse, it was held that the buyers had obtained a good title. After disposing of the question of the amount of the price, the court held that an agent, authorized to sell for cash or for notes, might bind his principal by taking notes payable to the agents own order. The argument was, not that the notes were a means of obtaining the cash like a check, but that there was no more danger to the principal in permitting the agent to take notes to his own order than there would be in allowing him to receive money; it would cipal;⁵⁵ or the note or bond of himself,⁵⁶ or of a third person;⁵⁷ or a draft or order on a stranger,⁵⁸ or horses, wheat, merchandise, services or other property of any kind;⁵⁹ nor can he set off a be no more easy to misappropriate the notes than the money. The court relied upon the dissenting opinion of three justices against four in Baldwin v. Tucker, 112 Ky. 282, 57 L. R. A. 451, wherein the argument of the dissenting justices was that, in many cases, agents for the sale of goods were required by their principals to take notes in the agents own names, and to indorse them to the principals, and that, in view of this practice, a person buying of the agent and required by the agent to give a note, in the agents name, might well suppose that this was in accordance with the principal's instructions.

The Washington court also relied upon a very briefly reported case, Schleicher v. Armstrong (Tex. Civ. App.), 32 S. W. 327, a case not officially reported. There, in upholding a sale in which notes had been taken in the agent's name, the court simply said that the agents, "being in lawful possession of and having authority to sell the engine, the fact that they may have violated their instructions and taken the purchase money notes payable to themselves" did not invalidate the sale.

⁵⁵ Miller v. Edmonston, 8 Blackf. (Ind.) 291; Smith v. Powell, 98 Va. 431; Nickelson v. Dial, 77 Kan. 8; West Pub. Co. v. Corbett, 165 Mo. App. 7.

He may not receive a time bill drawn by the agent upon the debtor and accepted by the latter. Hine v. Steamship Ins. Syndicate, 72 L. T. 79.

⁵⁶ McCarver v. Nealey, 1 G. Greene (Iowa), 360; Farmers' Bank v. Bennett (Ky.), 47 S. W. 623, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 852; Wilcox, etc., Organ Co. v. Lasley, 40 Kan. 521.

But in the last case it was held that the principal could not complain if the agent himself supplied the money which was received by the principal.

⁵⁷ Langdon v. Potter, 13 Mass. 319; Paul v. Grimm, 183 Pa. 330; Scully v. Dodge, 40 Kan. 395; Wilkinson v. Holloway, 7 Leigh (Va.), 277; Smock v. Dade, 5 Rand. (Va.) 639; Smith v. Lamberts, 7 Gratt. (Va.) 138; Wiley v. Mahood, 10 W. Va. 206.

Nor can he take an assignment of a mortgage in payment. Columbia Phosphate Co. v. Farmers' Store, 47 S. Car. 358.

⁵⁸ McCarver v. Nealey, 1 G. Greene (Iowa), 360; Drain v. Doggett, 41 Iowa, 682; Goldsborough v. Turner, 67 N. C. 403; Hine v. Steamship Ins. Syndicate, 72 L. T. 79; Rogers v. Tiedeman, 9 Ga. App. 811.

Unless the agent actually receives the money upon the draft in due course. See later section on checks. Gibson v. Ward, 9 Ga. App. 363.

⁵⁹ Rhine v. Blake, 59 Tex. 240; Wright v. Daily, 26 Tex. 730; Kent v. Ricards, 3 Md. Ch. 392; Harper v. Harvey, 4 W. Va. 539; Kirk v. Hiatt, 2 Ind. 322; Aultman v. Lee, 43 Iowa, 404; Martin v. United States, 2 T. B. Monr. (Ky.) 89, 15 Am. Dec. 129; Reynolds v. Ferree, 86 Ill. 570; Williams v. Johnston, 92 N. C. 532, 53 Am. Rep. 428; Pitkin v. Harris, 69 Mich. 133; Cram v. Sickel, 51 Neb. 828, 66 Am. St. R. 478; Hayes v. Colby, 65 N. H. 192; Block v. Dundon, 83 App. Div. (N. Y.) 539; McCormick Harvest Co. v. Breen, 61 Ill. App. 528; Wees v. Page, 47 Wash. 213.

Obviously, he may not take payment in goods delivered to the agent for his own use. Woodruff v. American Road Mach. Co. (Ky.), 23 Ky. L. Rep. 1551, 65 S. W. 600.

Or take payment in cancellation of a debt owing by himself. Grooms v. Neff Harness Co., 79 Ark. 401; Miller v. Springfield Wagon Co., 6 Ind. Ter. 115; Hook v. Crowe, 100 Me. 399; and other cases cited in § 354.

The fact that the agent is to sell the property so received and apply claim due from himself;⁶⁰ or take property for his own use in payment.⁶¹

The money which he is authorized to receive in payment is limited to that which the law declares to be a legal tender, or which by common consent is considered and treated as money and which passes as such at par.⁶² the proceeds upon the claim is immaterial. Woodruff v. Amer. Road Mach. Co. (Ky.), 65 S. W. 600, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 1551.

An agent authorized to collect money due upon a mortgage is not authorized to receive the mortgaged property in payment. Rodgers v. Peckham, 120 Cal. 238.

Can not take pay in services, especially for some other person of whom also he may chance to be agent. Gunter v. Robinson (Tex. Civ. App.), 112 S. W. 134.

But his authority may be broad enough to justify his taking lands in payment. Renwick v. Wheeler, 48 Fed. 431.

In Moore v. Murrell, 56 Ark. 375, an attorney was authorized to collect notes, with directions "to do with them the best that he can." Held, that such directions as matter of law did not authorize him to receive goods in payment, but that the question was for the jury.

⁶⁰ Whitney v. State Bank, 7 Wis. 620; Butts v. Newton, 29 Wis. 632; Stewart v. Woodward, 50 Vt. 78, 28 Am. Rep. 488; Rodick v. Coburn, 68 Me. 170; Greenwood v. Burns, 50 Mo. 52; McCormick v. Keith, 8 Neb. 143; Western Bronze Co. v. Portrey, 50 Neb. 801; Irwin v. Workman, 3 Watts (Penn.), 357; Coffman v. Hampton, 2 Watts & Serg. (Penn.) 377, 37 Am. Dec. 511; Bridges v. Garrett, L. R., 5 C. P. 454; Sykes v. Giles, 5 M. & W. 645; Scott v. Irving, 1 B. & Ad. 605; Catterall v. Hindle, L. R. 1 C. P. 187; Hurley v. Watson, 68 Mich. 531; Maloney Mercantile Co. v. Dublin Quarry Co. (Tex. Civ. App.), 107 S. W. 904; Parker v. Leech, 76 Neb. 135; Chattanooga Foundry v. Gorman, 12 Tex. Civ.

App. 75; Union, etc., Co. v. Mason, 3 S. D. 147; Smith v. James, 53 Ark. 135; St. John v. Cornwell, 52 Kan. 712; Deatherage v. Henderson, 43 Kan. 684; Hodgson v. Raphael, 105 Ga. 480; Stetson v. Briggs, 144 Cal. 511; Martin v. Mathews, 62 Hun, 620; Zang v. Hubbard Bldg. Co. (Tex. Civ. App.), 125 S. W. 85; Plano Mfg. Co. v. Doyle, 17 N. D. 386, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 606.

⁶¹ Williams v. Johnston, 92 N. C. 532, 53 Am. Rep. 428. In National Loan Co. v. Bleasdale, 140 Iowa, 695, an agent to rent premises was held to have no implied authority to set off board to himself against rent due.

⁶² Ward v. Smith, 7 Wall. (U. S.) 447, 19 L. Ed. 207; Fretz v. Stover, 22 Wall. (U. S.) 198, 22 L. Ed. 769.

Confederate money. — Where an agent was authorized to receive payment of a note, payable in one of the confederate states during the civil war although given to him for collection before the outbreak of the war and by one not a resident of any of the confederate states, he has authority to receive payment in confederate money, that being the currency of that section of the country at that time. Rodgers v. Bass, 46 Tex. 505; Burford v. Memphis Bulletin Co., 9 Heisk. (Tenn.) 691; Pidgeon v. William's Adm'rs, 21 Gratt. (Va.) 251; Hale v. Wall, 22 Gratt. (Va.) 424; Hendry v. Benlisa, 37 Fla. 609, 34 L. R. A. 283. But see, Alley v. Rodgers, 19 Gratt. (Va.) 366; Fretz v. Stover, 22 Wall. (U. S.) 198, 22 L. Ed. 769, where, under similar facts, it was held that payment in confederate money did not discharge the debt, as the agent was authorized to receive in payment only what was

He would, ordinarily, have no authority to receive more than was due and to bind his principal by independent contracts as to the excess.⁶³

§ 947. — Debt payable in goods.—Conversely, where a debt is expressly payable in goods, an agent authorized merely to receive the goods, would have no implied authority to accept other goods, or different qualities or quantities, or to accept a money payment in lieu of the goods.⁶⁴ Where, however, the agent has been given general authority in the matter, or has been held out as having authority to accept money his taking of cash instead of the goods may be deemed authorized.⁶⁵

§ 948. — Enlarged authority—Authority by conduct or ratification.—But while the general rule is as has been stated, the agent's authority over the subject-matter may be greater than that of a mere collecting or receiving agent, and he may be found to be vested with a discretion which will authorize him to receive payment otherwise than in cash. Thus, the general state agent of an implement company, having full authority to make settlements with the company's debtors, has been held to have implied authority to receive the note of a third person in payment.⁶⁶ So the conduct of the principal, his directions to the agent, or the exigency of the case, may justify the accepted as currency at the time the agent was given the notes to collect; that war having cut off all communication between principal and agent, the fact that the notes were left in the hands of the agent after Confederate money had become the money of the place of payment, did not give the agent implied authority to collect in that currency. In Harper v. Harvey, 4 W. Va. 539; and Waterhouse v. Citizens' Bank, 25 La. Ann. 77, where the facts were similar, it was held that payment to an agent in Confederate money was not a good payment, on the ground that the money was illegal.

See also Anderson v. Bank, Chase 535, Fed. Cas. No. 354; Bank of Kentucky v. Express Co., 1 Flip. 242, Fed. Cas. No. 889; Webster v. Whitworth, 49 Ala. 201; Mangum v. Ball, 43 Miss. 238, 5 Am. Rep. 488; Shuford v. Ramsour, 63 N. C. 622; Pilson v. Bushong, 29 Gratt. (Va.) 229.

May not accept Mexican money. Edwards v. Davidson (Tex. Civ. App.), 79 S. W. 48.

⁶³ While the agent is undoubtedly usually authorized to make change at the time in the ordinary way, it has been held that he may not bind his principal by agreeing at some future time to bring back the change. Pearks Stores v. Watt, [1907] Transvaal Sup. Ct. 755.

⁶⁴ Cushman v. Somers, 62 Vt. 132, 22 Am. St. Rep. 92.

⁶⁵ Cushman v. Somers, 62 Vt. 132, 22 Am. St. Rep. 92.

⁶⁶ Nichols & Shepart Co. v. Hackney, 78 Minn. 461. See also, Holmes v. Langston, 110 Ga. 861.

In Dusenberry v. McDole, 42 Wash. 470, a person, really agent for a non-resident principal, but not known to be such by the defendant here, loaned money of his principal to defendant agreeing to accept grain in payment from time to time.

exercise of a wider authority. Thus, an agent sent by a foreign creditor to endeavor to get pay from a debtor on the eve of bankruptcy, and given "full authority to act for us in the matter," was held to have implied authority to take property in payment.⁶⁷ So an agent sent "to receive such amount" as the debtor was able to pay upon the debt, was held to have implied authority to receive from the debtor an order for money about to become due to him.⁶⁸

And in any case, moreover, the principal, who with knowledge receives without objection the proceeds of the unauthorized method of collection, may be found to have ratified the same.⁶⁹

§ 949. No authority to take checks, certificates of deposit, etc.— Being authorized to receive nothing but money, the agent has ordinarily no implied power to accept checks as payment, that is, as satisfaction of the demand.⁷⁰ The check is not money; it is at most but the means of getting the money. If there are no funds, it is, of course, worthless for any purpose. If the check be drawn upon funds to the agent's order and he obtains the money upon it, it is a good payment⁷¹ even

Defendant signed notes payable to the principal without observing that they were not payable to the agent. For a period of ten years he made payments in grain without objection. Principal claimed that if agent took grain he had sold it and reported to principal in cash, and that principal had no knowledge of the agreement to accept grain. More payments in grain were claimed than the agent had reported. If the payments in grain were not counted, action on the notes was barred by the statute of limitations. Held, in an action on notes that principal was bound by payments in grain.

See also Eggleston v. Advance Thresher Co., 96 Minn. 241, where a sales agent had been allowed to act with large discretion. He accepted certain property in payment. Later the whole contract was rescinded by mutual consent. The agent did not return the property so received, and the company was held liable for its value.

⁶⁷ Oliver v. Sterling, 20 Ohio St. 391.

⁶⁸ Ruthven v. Clark, 109 Iowa, 25.

An agent directed by his principal to take anything he can get in settlement has authority to accept a promissory note. Mitchell v. Finnell, 101 Cal. 614.

⁶⁹ Billingsley v. Benefield, 87 Ark. 128; Sawyer v. Vermont Loan Co., 41 Wash. 524.

⁷⁰ Broughton v. Silloway, 114 Mass. 71, 19 Am. Rep. 312; Cooney v. U. S. Wringer Co., 101 Ill. App. 468; Bernheimer v. Herrman, 44 Hun (N. Y.), 110; Roberts, etc., Shoe Co. v. McKim (Nev.), 117 Pac. 13.

Where the agent is authorized to receive checks, but only those of a certain kind, i. e., "crossed cheques," the principal may lose his right to insist upon this requirement by permitting the agent to accept ordinary checks. International Sponge Co. v. Watt, [1911] App. Cas. 279.

⁷¹ Harbach v. Colvin, 73 Iowa, 638; Griffin v. Erskine, 131 Iowa, 444, 9 Ann. Cas. 1193; Bridges v. Garrett, L. R. 5 C. P. 451; Stevenson Co. v. Fox, 19 N. Y. Misc. 177; Cohen v. O'Connor, 5 Daly (N. Y.), 28, affirmed, 56 N. Y. 613; Prochownik v. Boyd, 48 Hun, 618, aff'd 119 N.

though the agent afterwards converts the money to his own use.⁷² In many cases it would make no practical difference to the principal if the check were not paid; because he would still have the liability of the debtor upon the check if not upon the original claim. But where goods were delivered, securities surrendered, liens discharged and the like, upon the receipt of the worthless check, the principal might sustain an immediate loss. In such a case, not only would the debtor remain liable to the principal, but as between the principal and the agent, the agent is liable to the principal for any loss resulting from receiving the check.⁷³

§ 950. — A deposit of money in a bank to the order of the principal, the deposit book of which was delivered to the agent, has also been held not to be the equivalent of money and therefore the receipt of the book by the agent did not constitute payment, it not appearing that either the agent or the principal ever received the money.⁷⁴

Where, however, the agent was a bank of deposit, it was held, while recognizing the general rule, that it might receive in payment one of its own certificates of deposit.⁷⁵

And so, it has been held, that an agent authorized to negotiate a note might accept in place of money a certificate of deposit payable on demand, issued by a solvent bank.⁷⁶

The principal, moreover, may in any of these cases be found to have ratified the unauthorized act, where, with knowledge, he has retained the proceeds without objection.

§ 951. — But while the agent may have no authority to receive a check or draft as payment,—that is in satisfaction of the debt,—he may, it is held, unless forbidden, receive it as conditional payment where he has good reason to believe that it will be paid upon presentation, and he takes it in the ordinary way as a convenient and usual method of getting the money.⁷⁷ If it be paid, the payment is effect-

Y. 641; Sage v. Burton, 84 Hun, 267. Or though drawn to the principal's order and endorsed without authority by the agent, if the agent actually receive the money upon it and was authorized to receive money, it is held a good payment to the principal. Case v. Kramer, 34 Mont. 142.

See also, Gibson v. Ward, 9 Ga. App. 363, where it was held that payment by draft on a third person was good, where the draft was paid and the proceeds came into the collecting agent's hands.

⁷² Cohen v. O'Connor, supra; Griffin v. Erskine, supra.

⁷³ Hall v. Storrs, 7 Wis. 253; Harlan v. Ely, 68 Cal. 522; Pape v. Westacott, [1894] 1 Q. B. 272.

⁷⁴ Dixon v. Guay, 70 N. H. 161.

⁷⁵ British, etc., Mortgage Co. v. Tibbals, 63 Iowa, 468.

⁷⁶ Poorman v. Woodward, 21 How. (U. S.) 266, 16 L. Ed. 151.

⁷⁷ Griffin v. Erskine, 131 Iowa, 444, 9 Ann. Cas. 1193; Cunningham v. Wabash R. Co., — Mo. App. —, 149 S. W. 1151.

ual; if it be not paid, the principal will ordinarily sustain no loss as he still retains his original demand.

§ 952. If authorized to take check or note, has no authority to indorse and collect it.—But even if the agent be authorized to accept check or note in payment of the demand, and has taken one to the order of his principal the agent has no implied authority to indorse it and collect the money thereon, and the bank paying the check so indorsed is still liable to the principal for the amount thereof.⁷⁸ The principal, moreover, is not liable upon the indorsement.⁷⁹

In like manner, an agent authorized to take a bill or note in the name of his principal, has no implied authority to indorse and transfer it so as to deprive the principal of his property,⁸⁰ or make him liable upon the indorsement.⁸¹

So an agent authorized to accept a note in settlement of a debt has no implied authority, after delivering it to his principal, to receive payment of the note.⁸²

⁷⁸ Jackson v. Nat. Bank, 92 Tenn. 154, 36 Am. St. Rep. 81, 18 L. R. A. 663; Robinson v. Bank of Winslow, 42 Ind. App. 350; Brown v. Peoples' Nat. Bank, — Mich. —, 136 N. W. 506; Dispatch Printing Co. v. National Bank, 109 Minn. 440; McFadden v. Follrath, 114 Minn. 85, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 201; Deering v. Kelso, 74 Minn. 41, 73 Am. St. R. 324; Graham v. United States Saving Inst., 46 Mo. 186; Thomson v. Bank of British, etc., 82 N. Y. 1; Robinson v. Chemical Bank, 86 N. Y. 404; Schmidt v. Garfield Nat. Bank, 64 Hun, 298, aff'd 138 N. Y. 631; Millard v. Republic Bank, 3 McArthur (D. C.), 54; Jackson Paper Mfg. Co. v. Com. Nat. Bank, 199 Ill. 151, 93 Am. St. R. 113, 59 L. R. A. 657; Sinclair v. Goodell, 93 Ill. App. 592; Goodell v. Sinclair, 112 Ill. App. 594.

Even if he takes the note without authority, he has no implied power to indorse and discount it. Lonier v. Ann Arbor Savings Bank, 162 Mich. 541, 127 N. W. 685.

⁷⁹ Jacoby v. Payson, 85 Hun, 367, 91 Hun, 480.

⁸⁰ Hogg v. Snaith, 1 Taunt. 347; McClure v. Evartson, 14 Lea

(Tenn.), 495; Holtsinger v. Nat. Bank, 6 Abb. (N. Y.) Pr. (N. S.) 292, 37 How. 203, affirmed by the Court of Appeals, 3 Alb. L. J. 305, 40 How. Pr. 720.

⁸¹ National Fence Mach. Co. v. Highleyman, 71 Kan. 347; Hamilton Bank v. Nye, 37 Ind. App. 464, 117 Am. St. R. 333; Essick v. Buckwalter, 1 Monag. 209 (Pa.). Distinguish from National Fire Ins. Co. v. Eastern Bldg. Loan, 63 Neb. 698, aff'd 65 Neb. 483, where an agent, authorized to adjust and collect insurance due, was held to have authority to indorse an order given him by the insurance company's adjustor on the company, and question was not liability on the endorsement but payment of the claim.

⁸² Draper v. Rice, 56 Iowa, 114, 41 Am. Rep. 88; Rhodes v. Belchee, 36 Or. 141.

An agent who has sold goods for the price of which a negotiable promissory note payable to his principal or order was given, has no implied authority, before the maturity of the note and without having the same in his possession, to allow a discount upon the amount

§ 953. — Any of these results, however, may be altered by the circumstances. Thus there may be express authority, or it may be an incident of the agent's position,⁸³ or the course of dealing may be such as to give the agent apparent authority to indorse and collect checks, and in such events the bank will not be liable to pay again.⁸⁴ And where there is such an apparent authority, the bank will not be affected by secret instructions which would limit the apparent power,⁸⁵ nor will the title of a third person who has relied thereon be affected.⁸⁶

Of course, where the agent is authorized to receive the check, the fact that he afterwards wrongfully indorses it and obtains the money upon it, does not destroy the effect of the check as payment by the drawer.⁸⁷

And though he was neither authorized to receive the check nor to indorse it, and does both, but turns the money over to the principal, it is held a good payment to the latter.⁸⁸

§ 954. No authority to release or compromise the debt.—It follows, as a corollary of the rules already stated, that an agent authorized merely to collect or receive payment, has no implied power to release the debt, in whole or in part, or to compromise the claim, with-of the note and receive payment of the balance. Holland v. Van Beil, 89 Ga. 223.

⁸³ As in the case of a general manager, and the like. Burstein v. Sullivan, 134 App. Div. 623; Morris v. Hofferberth, 81 App. Div. 512, aff'd 180 N. Y. 545.

⁸⁴ Lorton v. Russell, 27 Neb. 372; Levy v. First Nat. Bank, 27 Neb. 557.

An agent authorized to indorse and procure the discount of notes taken for goods sold, held to have authority to discount renewal notes. Marine Bank v. Butler Colliery Co., 52 Hun, 612, 125 N. Y. 695.

⁸⁵ Kansas City, etc., R. Co. v. Ivy Leaf Coal Co., 97 Ala. 705.

⁸⁶ Where an agent is put in general charge of the business of a principal, with power to sell its goods, collect for the same, make purchases, etc., it is a question for the jury to determine, whether the agent had apparent authority to pay for the goods so purchased, by indorsing checks payable to his principal. Graton & Knight Mfg. Co. v. Redelsheimer, 28 Wash. 370.

An agent was employed to sell goods and collect accounts. From the very first day he frequently indorsed checks received in payment and obtained the money, which was used in the principal's business. Later he endorsed such a check to the defendant and appropriated the money to his own use. In an action by the principal, held, that evidence of such a course of dealing was sufficient to justify a finding that the agent was authorized to indorse the check sued on. Best v. Krey, 83 Minn. 32. See also, Witcher v. McPhee, 16 Colo. App. 298.

⁸⁷ Burstein v. Sullivan, 134 App. Div. 623; Allen v. Tarrant, 7 App. Div. 172; Sage v. Burton, 84 Hun (N. Y.), 267; Morris v. Hofferberth, 81 App. Div. 512, aff'd 180 N. Y. 545.

⁸⁸ Case v. Kramer, 34 Mont. 142; Cf.: Dowdall v. Borgfeldt, 113 N. Y. Supp. 1069.

out payment in full;⁸⁹ neither has he any implied authority to discharge part of the debtors,⁹⁰ release liens,⁹¹ discharge sureties, or surrender securities⁹² except on full payment of the debt. He has no implied authority to allow for deficiencies, admit counterclaims or set-offs or recognize any other adverse claims.⁹³ An agent authorized merely to collect rents has no implied authority to accept a surrender of the lease, or to consent to the discharge of the tenant and the substitution of a stranger.⁹⁴ An agent to collect a bill is not authorized to receive conditionally less than the entire amount and to surrender the bill before learning whether the condition will be accepted.⁹⁵

§ 955. Authority to receive part payment.—Authority to collect or receive payment of a demand must ordinarily be construed as authorizing the receipt of the whole of the demand only, and not merely of a part of it, at least where receipt of a part only would be prejudicial to the principal's rights. Cases wherein there would be a reduction in interest, or the loss of a remedy, or the right to sue in a particular court, or where the right to costs would be affected would furnish

⁸⁹ Herring v. Hottendorf, 74 N. C. 588; McHany v. Schenk, 88 Ill. 357; Melvin v. Lamar Ins. Co., 80 Ill. 446, 22 Am. Rep. 199; Eaton v. Knowles, 61 Mich. 625; Baird v. Randall, 58 Mich. 175; Nolan v. Jackson, 16 Ill. 272; Whittington v. Ross, 8 Ill. App. 234; Danziger v. Pittsfield Shoe Co., 204 Ill. 145; First Nat. Bank v. Prior, 10 N. D. 146; Corbet v. Walser, 27 Wash. 242; Tompkins Mach. Co. v. Peter, 84 Tex. 627; Scales v. Mount, 93 Ala. 82; Craig Silver Co. v. Smith, 163 Mass. 262; Murphy v. Kastner, 50 N. J. Eq. 214; Ogilvie v. Lee, 158 Mo. App. 493; Hoster v. Lange, 80 Mo. App. 234.

⁹⁰ Torbit v. Heath, 11 Colo. App. 492. In Cram v. Sichel, 51 Neb. 828, 66 Am. St. R. 478, an attorney with authority to collect a claim against a partnership was held to have no authority to release the retired partner on consideration of security given by the continuing partner.

⁹¹ Couch v. Davidson, 109 Ala. 313.

But the power of the collecting agent over means and methods may be so great as to authorize him to permit a sale of mortgaged property in expectation of payment out of the proceeds; and if he does so, the fact that he does not receive payment as expected will not defeat the title of the purchaser. Winter v. Elevator Co., 88 Minn. 196; Partridge v. Elevator Co., 75 Minn. 496.

⁹² Knoche v. Whiteman, 86 Mo. App. 568; Robinson v. Nipp, 20 Ind. App. 156; Harrison v. Burlingame, 48 Hun, 212; Dugan v. Lyman (N. J. Eq.), 23 Atl. 657; Hutchings v. Clark, 64 Cal. 228.

⁹³ Johnson v. Wilson, 137 Ala. 468, 97 Am. St. R. 52; Bynum v. Pump Co., 63 Ala. 462; Railroad Co. v. Cogsbill, 85 Ala. 456; Gund Brewing Co. v. Peterson, 130 Iowa, 301.

A general agent may make an allowance on a bill, because of delays in performance. Stevenson Co. v. Fox, 19 N. Y. Misc. 177.

⁹⁴ See ante, § 836; Blake v. Dick, 15 Mont. 236, 48 Am. St. R. 671; Scanlan v. Hoerth, 151 Ill. App. 582; Wallace v. Dinniny, 11 N. Y. Misc. 317, aff'd 12 Misc. 635; Barkley v. Holt, 84 N. Y. Supp. 957. See also, Goldsmith v. Schroeder, 93 N. Y. App. Div. 206.

⁹⁵ Bank of Scotland v. Dominion Bank, [1891] App. Cas. 592.

illustrations.⁹⁶ But, on the other hand, there are many cases wherein the receipt of a part might fairly be deemed not only within the authority but also within the duty of the agent. Thus, claims are constantly put into the hands of agents for collection, under circumstances which clearly indicate that the principal desires and expects that, if the agent cannot collect the whole, he will collect as much as possible.⁹⁷

§ 956. May not extend time.—But although the agent may be authorized to receive payment in part, he has usually no implied authority, upon such payment, or in consideration of it, to extend the time of payment of the balance.⁹⁸

Express authority would ordinarily be requisite to extend the time in any case,⁹⁹ though it is clear that there may be such general authority, such a course of dealing between the parties, or such other ⁹⁶ In Lowenstein v. Bresler, 109 Ala. 326, is said that an agent to collect a check cannot receive a part payment upon it. Probably he could not if he would have to surrender the check or permit it to be stamped as paid, but otherwise it is not so clear.

⁹⁷ An attorney at law is authorized to receive partial payments on account of any claim put in his hands for collection. Pickett v. Bates, 3 La. Ann. 627. To same effect: Whelan v. Reilly, 61 Mo. 565.

In Williams v. Walker, 2 Sandf. (N. Y.) Ch. 325, where an agent who had made a loan upon bond and mortgage and was left in possession of the bond was held authorized to receive the principal as well as the interest, it was said by Sanford, V. C.: "I do not think that the authority thus implied is to be limited to a receipt of the whole principal in one sum. The implication is that the bond was left with him on the same footing as if it were left with an attorney for collection. In such a case if any discretion is to be exercised as to the receipt of a part only of the debt, it is a discretion with which the agent is clothed by the possession of the security."

So in Peck v. Harriott, 6 S. & R. (Pa.) 146, 9 Am. Dec. 415, it was said of an agent authorized to receive payment for land sold, "if he had power to receive the whole, he had power to receive any part."

That an agent authorized to collect a note may receive part payment of it, see also, Frost v. Fisher, 13 Colo. App. 322.

⁹⁸ Hutchings v. Munger, 41 N. Y. 155; Ritch v. Smith, 82 N. Y. 627; Gerrish v. Maher, 70 Ill. 470; Chappel v. Raymond, 20 La. Ann. 277; Karcher v. Gans, 13 S. D. 383, 79 Am. St. R. 893. Agent authorized simply to collect a note, has no implied authority to extend the time of payment, and thus discharge the sureties on the note. Lawrence v. Johnson, 64 Ill. 351.

To same effect: Behrns v. Rogers (Tex. Civ. App.), 40 S. W. 419.

The mere relation of attorney and client is not sufficient to empower the attorney to extend the time of payment of a mortgage debt. Hazleton v. Florentine Marble Co., 94 Fed. 701. In Mason v. Thompson Co., 94 Minn. 472, it was held that an attorney at law, with notes to collect, could not extend the time of payment thereon.

⁹⁹ See Behrns v. Rogers; Karcher v. Gans; and other cases cited in the preceding note; Powell v. Henry, 96 Ala. 412.

conduct, as to justify the inference that the agent is authorized to renew or extend.¹

§ 957. Or otherwise change the terms of the contract.—Neither has an agent authorized to receive payment any implied authority to change or alter any other of the terms and conditions of the contract. His authority is to receive payment on the contract as the parties made it, not to make a new contract for them or to change or alter the old one.² He may not therefore, for example, surrender the contract or consent to the substitution of debtors.³

§ 958. Not authorized to receive before due.—And even though an agent have authority to receive payment of an obligation, this would not ordinarily authorize him to receive it before it is due, and thus, for example, cut off future interest, or surrender a valuable security; or even expose the principal to the risk of a payment at a time when he had not bargained for it. A power to receive payment must, therefore, usually be construed as authority to receive payment at maturity and not before.⁴ A known usage of trade or course of business in a particular employment, or a habit of dealing between the parties,

¹ As where agent for the collection of notice has to the knowledge of the principal, been accustomed to take new notes and new securities. First Nat. Bank v. Ridpath, 47 Neb. 96.

See also McDonald v. Kingsbury, 16 Cal. App. 244, where a general agent's assurance that then would be no forfeiture because of delay in payment, was held binding.

² Halladay v. Underwood, 90 Ill. App. 130; Burgess v. Willis, 43 N. Y. Misc. 672; Ridgeley National Bank v. Barse Commission Co., 113 Mo. App. 696 (where the agent was held to have no authority to give the security he was authorized and directed to enforce and take another in its stead).

³ Blake v. Dick, 15 Mont. 236, 48 Am. St. R. 671; Wallace v. Dinniny, 11 N. Y. Misc. 317. In Board of Education v. Kelly, 126 Ga. 479, it was held that the clerk of a court authorized to collect costs and sheriff's fees had no authority to release a party owing such fees and charge the same against the party's attorney.

⁴ Smith v. Kidd, 68 N. Y. 130, 23 Am. Rep. 157; Doubleday v. Kress, 50 N. Y. 410, 10 Am. Rep. 502; Fellows v. Northrup, 39 N. Y. 117; Walsh v. Peterson, 59 Neb. 645; Bronson v. Ashlock, 2 Kan. App. 255; Madison v. Cabalek, 86 Ill. App. 450; Williams v. Pelley, 96 Ill. App. 346; Schenk v. Dexter, 77 Minn. 15; Security Co. v. Graybeal, 85 Iowa, 543, 39 Am. St. R. 311; U. S. Bank v. Burson, 90 Iowa, 191; Park v. Cross, 76 Minn. 187, 77 Am. St. Rep. 630; City Nat. Bank v. Goodloe-McClelland Com. Co., 93 Mo. App. 123; Lester v. Snyder, 12 Colo. App. 351; Little Rock & Ft. S. Ry. Co. v. Wiggins, 65 Ark. 385; Cunningham v. McDonald, 98 Tex. 316; Campbell v. Hassel, 1 Stark, 233; Parnter v. Gaitskill, 13 East, 437.

In Realty Transpr. Co. v. Kimball, 66 Misc. 185, payment to an agent authorized to collect rents of rent upon April 28 which was not due until May 1, was held not good.

may, however, extend the ordinary reach of the authority.⁵ Thus an agent to loan money may be given such general authority over the subject as to authorize him to re-invest, change the form or amount of securities, and receive payment upon securities before they are due.⁶ And many cases may be imagined, as, for example, the case of commercial claims bearing no interest, wherein an early payment would be to the principal's advantage, and in which the agent might fairly be deemed to be authorized to receive payment whenever he could obtain it.⁷

§ 959. Not authorized to accelerate maturity.—An agent authorized to collect and remit interest upon a note and mortgage which provides that, if default be made in the payment of any interest, the entire principal sum shall, at the option of the mortgagee, become at once due and payable, is held to have no implied authority in case of such default to exercise the option.⁸ The effect of this option, when exercised, being to entirely change and supersede the contract existing between the parties, it must be shown that the agent was authorized to exercise it.

⁵ Thompson v. Elliott, 73 Ill. 221; Noble v. Nugent, 89 Ill. 522; Thornton v. Lawther, 169 Ill. 228; McIntosh v. Ransom, 106 Ill. App. 172.

"The fact that the plaintiff forwarded coupons, and insisted on prompt payment of the principal, through the agent, weeks before the maturity, indicates that he intended the agent to receive the money when offered." Dilenbeck v. Rehse, 105 Iowa, 749. So where, though only upon one occasion a payment not due had been made to the agent and accepted by the principal without objection. Harrison v. Legore, 109 Iowa, 618.

So where a note is due after five years but the maker has the privilege of paying it after three years, an agent to receive payment is presumptively authorized to receive payment whenever the maker has the right to pay it. Frost v. Fisher, 13 Colo. App. 322.

A contract may often show by its terms that stipulations as to time of payment were intended merely for the convenience of the debtor, and in that event he may pay before. See per Brett, L. J., in Lancashire Waggon Co. v. Nuttall, 42 L. T. Rep. 465.

⁶ In Bleser v. Stedl, 135 Wis. 124, while the authority of a loan agent to mature the paper by taking payments before due was denied, the court held that he would have authority to receive payments a few days earlier or later to be counted as of the day of maturity. Here the money was due December 12. Payments made on December 7 and December 17 were held to be good.

An agent to manage his principal's money who "made loans and accepted re-payment, changed loans, collected interest, received money on loans before due and placed it again and generally transacted the business as he saw fit" may receive payment of a note before maturity and release a mortgage securing it. Peterson v. Fullerton, 106 Ill. App. 237.

⁷ See Bliss v. Cutter, 19 Barb. (N. Y.) 9.

⁸ Wilcox v. Eadie, 65 Kan. 459.

§ 960. Authority to collect does not authorize sale of debt.—Authority to an agent to collect or receive payment of a note or other demand, does not imply authority to sell, transfer, or otherwise dispose of it.⁹ Nor will authority to an agent to accept a note in settlement of a demand, imply authority in the agent to afterward sell the note so taken.¹⁰

§ 961. No authority to deal with funds collected.—An agent authorized to collect and transmit funds to his principal, has no implied authority to enter into any contract concerning the money in his hands, or to exchange it for other money with third persons.¹¹

A third person dealing with the agent with knowledge of the circumstances, could acquire no rights against the principal; and if the agent lost the money or took a counterfeit he would be liable to the principal.¹² An agent so possessed of funds, having no authority to borrow money, even for his principal's benefit, would have no implied authority to open a bank account in the name of his principal and make the principal liable for an overdraft.¹³ Neither would such an agent have implied authority to apply, or agree to apply, the money received, upon or in payment of a debt due by the principal.¹⁴

§ 962. May give receipt or discharge.—An agent authorized to collect has implied authority to give to the debtor upon payment such

⁹ Smith v. Johnson, 71 Mo. 382; Texada v. Beaman, 6 La. 84, 25 Am. Dec. 204; Hardesty v. Newby, 28 Mo. 567, 75 Am. Dec. 137; Quigley v. Mexico Southern Bank, 80 Mo. 289, 50 Am. Rep. 503; Moore v. Skyles, 33 Mont. 135, 114 Am. St. R. 801, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 136; Goodfellow v. Landis, 36 Mo. 168; Dingley v. McDonald, 124 Cal. 682; Rigby v. Lowe, 125 Cal. 613; Lederer v. Union Sav. Bank, 52 Neb. 133.

A fortiori he may not sell to himself. Appeal of Yard (Pa.), 12 Atl. 359. In Feiner v. Puetz, 77 Mo. App. 405, it was said that an attorney authorized to collect a note had prima facie no authority to sell it, but that in the case at bar this presumption was rebutted by evidence that the agent had authority to sell or do with it as he pleased, provided he did subject his principal to liability as an indorser.

¹⁰ Ames v. Drew, 31 N. H. 475.

¹¹ Such an agent has no authority to reloan the money after it has been collected. Haynes v. Carpenter, 86 Mo. App. 30.

¹² Darling v. Younker, 37 Ohio St. 487, 41 Am. Rep. 532; Kent v. Bornstein, 12 Allen (Mass.), 342; Greenwald v. Metcalf, 28 Iowa, 363.

¹³ Case v. Hammond Pack. Co., 105 Mo. App. 168. In Dixon v. Jackson Exch. Bank, 149 Mo. App. 585, an agent to collect notes, deposit the proceeds and check out for one specific purpose, was held to have no authority to draw out the funds for any other purposes.

¹⁴ Hill v. Van Duzer, 111 Ga. 867. In Dowlen v. Georgs Mfg. Co. (Tex. Civ. App.), 125 S. W. 931, a lessor assigned rents to defendant to collect and pay over to the plaintiff, a creditor of the lessor. Held, that the effect of the assignment was to make the defendant an agent to collect, and that in such capacity he had no authority to use money collected in making repairs.

a receipt or discharge as the payment entitles him to receive. Thus if the debt be evidenced by a note or other security the agent, upon payment, may deliver the security to the debtor.¹⁵

And where the transaction involves the adjustment of accounts or the settlement of disputes, the agent authorized to make it, has implied authority not only to agree upon the terms of the settlement, if fair and reasonable, but to bind the principal by inserting in the receipt the terms and conditions upon which the settlement was made.¹⁶ And while an agent, authorized to discharge a mortgage upon receiving payment, may, of course, do so, he can not bind his principal by giving a discharge when no payment had in fact been made.¹⁷

§ 963. Authority to sue.—While mere authority to demand or receive payment of a debt would not imply authority to sue for it, yet as every endowment of power carries with it implied authority to do those things which are usual and necessary to accomplish the object sought to be attained, an agent having general instructions to collect may, if it becomes necessary, sue upon the claim, cause execution to issue and direct the seizure of property.¹⁸ He has, however, no implied authority to instruct the sheriff to levy upon any particular property.¹⁹

Where the principal is a non-resident, an attorney instructed to sue upon a claim, has been held to have implied power, when necessary, ¹⁵ Padfield v. Green, 85 Ill. 529. See also, Lindley v. Lupton, 118 Mich. 466; Scammon v. Wells, Fargo, & Co., 84 Cal. 311.

May give discharge of mortgage or release of trust deed. Dawson v. Wombles, 111 Mo. App. 532.

¹⁶ Vogel v. Weissmann, 23 N. Y. Misc. 256.

¹⁷ Hutchings v. Clark, 64 Cal. 228.

¹⁸ Joyce v. Duplessis, 15 La. Ann. 242, 77 Am. Dec. 185; McMinn v. Richtmyer, 3 Hill (N. Y.), 236; Bush v. Miller, 13 Barb. (N. Y.) 481; Scott v. Elmendorf, 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 317; Hirshfield v. Landman, 3 E. D. Smith (N. Y.), 208.

Such an agent may properly secure a confession of judgment for his principal. Briggs v. Yetzer, 103 Iowa, 342.

But where a note is already in judgment, and is put into the hands of a collecting agency with express instructions not to sue, the principal is not bound by the bringing of a suit thereon by the agency. Satterlee v. First Nat. Bank, 78 Neb. 691.

¹⁹ Averill v. Williams, 4 Den. (N. Y.) 295, 47 Am. Dec. 252; Welsh v. Cochran, 63 N. Y. 181, 20 Am. Rep. 519; Oestrich v. Gilbert, 9 Hun (N. Y.), 242.

But see the chapter on Attorneys at Law.

Authority "to receive tenants for, receive rents, make contracts for . . . repairs to and insurance upon" a building does not authorize agent in having distress warrant levied on tenant's property. Fishburne v. Engledove, 91 Va. 548.

to indemnify the sheriff against the results of the seizure²⁰ as otherwise the attorney would not be able to accomplish his undertaking.

For the same reason, if the exigencies of the case demand immediate action, he may make the necessary affidavit, cause the issue of a writ of attachment, and execute in his principal's name the statutory bond therefor.²¹ But an attorney has not necessarily the authority to indemnify the surety upon an injunction bond,²² nor, it has been held, to execute a replevin bond in the name of his principal.²³

His authority to sue, however, must be confined to the institution of the ordinary and appropriate actions for the collection of the debt, and can not be deemed to justify unusual and inappropriate actions, such, as for example, a criminal proceeding.²⁴

§ 964. Authority to sue in his own name.—An agent authorized to collect a negotiable note or bill payable to bearer,²⁵ or indorsed in blank²⁶ for the purpose of collection, may sue thereon in his own name. Not so, however, if the note be payable to order and is not indorsed.²⁷

Such an indorsement and delivery for the purpose of collection passes the legal title in trust; and the trust is not terminated by the principal's death.²⁸

§ 965. Authority to foreclose mortgages.—Authority to foreclose mortgages is not one lightly to be inferred. The mere fact that a single interest coupon is sent to the agent for collection certainly does not justify it. And even the fact that one has acted as agent in negotiating the mortgage, or the fact that he has, from time to time, been ²⁰ Clark v. Randall, 9 Wis. 135, 76 Am. Dec. 252; Schoregge v. Gordon, 29 Minn. 367; (see also, Swartz v. Morgan, 163 Pa. 195, 43 Am. St. R. 786) but he has no authority to indemnify after the levy and sale have been made. Snow v. Hix, 54 Vt. 478.

See also American Bonding Co. v. Ensey, 105 Md. 211, 11 Ann. Cas. 883, where a letter written to the attorney was held to authorize him to procure a bond from plaintiff.

²¹ DePoret v. Gusman, 30 La. Ann. Part II, 930; Fulton v. Brown, 10 La. Ann. 350; Trowbridge v. Weir, 6 Id. 706; Alexander v. Burns, Id. 704.

²² White v. Davidson, 8 Md. 169, 63 Am. Dec. 699. But see post, chapter on Attorneys at Law.

²³ Narraguagus Land Proprietors v. Wentworth, 36 Me. 339. But see contra, Merrick v. Wagner, 44 Ill. 266, under a very general power of attorney. See generally the chapter on Attorneys at Law.

²⁴ Equitable L. Ass'n Society v. Lester (Tex. Civ. App.), 110 S. W. 499; Thompson v. Beacon Valley Rubber Co., 56 Conn. 493.

²⁵ Hotchkiss v. Thompson, 1 Morris (Iowa), 156.

²⁶ Orr v. Lacy, 4 McLean (U. S. C. C.), 243, Fed. Cas. No. 10,589; Brigham v. Gurney, 1 Mich. 348; Boyd v. Corbitt, 37 Mich. 52; Hazewell v. Coursen, 45 N. Y. Super. Ct. 22; Moore v. Hall, 48 Mich. 143.

²⁷ Padfield v. Green, 85 Ill. 529.

²⁸ Moore v. Hall, supra.

authorized to receive interest upon it, or the fact that interest coupons have been sent to him for collection as they matured,—the principal retaining all of the time the possession of the note and mortgage,—does not authorize the agent to foreclose. If, therefore, in such a case, without the principal's knowledge or consent, a foreclosure sale is had, the principal's title is not affected by it.²⁹ Where, however, in a long series of transactions, extending over a period of about fifteen years and involving about $135,000, the agent had been permitted to assume complete control over the investments, receiving and accepting applications, accepting payments before they became due, making changes in the mortgages, and reloaning, at his discretion, it was held that the agent, although not having possession of the securities, was so far authorized to foreclose that a foreclosure, at which the agent became the purchaser, and a redemption made to the agent, constituted payment, and destroyed the principal's lien, although the agent failed before accounting for the proceeds.³⁰

§ 966. May not submit claim to arbitration.—An agent authorized merely to collect or receive payment of a claim, has therefrom in case of dispute no implied authority to submit the claim to arbitration.³¹

§ 967. May employ counsel.—Where the agent is in fact authorized to collect, and by legal process if necessary, the agent may not only bring suit, but may employ appropriate counsel to conduct it.³²

§ 968. Authority to employ subagents.—The implied authority of an agent, authorized to collect, to employ a subagent, and his liability for the acts of such subagent, is a question which has been considered in other sections and need not be repeated here.³³

²⁹ Burchard v. Hull, 71 Minn. 430. To same effect: Dexter v. Morrow, 76 Minn. 413; White v. Meeker County Bank, 78 Minn. 286 (does not confer "ostensible authority" under the Code); Corey v. Hunter, 10 N. D. 5; Plummer v. Knight, 156 Mo. App. 321 (but an unauthorized foreclosure in such case may be ratified). Plummer v. Knight, supra.

³⁰ Springfield Sav. Bank v. Kjaer, 82 Minn. 180. See also, Alexander v. Alexander, 8 Kan. App. 571; Cur- tis v. Cutler, 22 C. C. A. 16, 76 Fed. 16, 37 L. R. A. 737.

³¹ See Manufacturers, etc., Ins. Co. v. Mullen, 48 Neb. 620; Mich. C. R. Co. v. Gougar, 55 Ill. 503; Allen v. Confederate Pub. Co., 121 Ga. 773.

³² Ryan v. Tudor, 31 Kan. 366; Davis v. Waterman, 10 Vt. 526, 33 Am. Dec. 216; Swartz v. Morgan, 163 Pa. 195, 43 Am. St. R. 786; Strong v. West, 110 Ga. 382.

³³ See ante, Delegation of Authority.

VII.

OF AGENT AUTHORIZED TO MAKE OR INDORSE NEGOTIABLE PAPER.

§ 969. An important power, not lightly inferred.—The power to bind the principal by the making, accepting or indorsing of negotiable paper is an important one, not lightly to be inferred. The negotiable instrument, in our law, is a contract which stands upon an independent footing. It is designed by its nature to circulate freely in the business world, and may come to persons and to places far remote from those of its creation. It may confer upon a subsequent holder rights which the original holder did not possess, and its transfer may impose upon the maker obligations, against which his defenses are unavailing. The authority to create such obligations is obviously a delicate one, easily susceptible of abuse, and, if abused, bringing disaster and financial ruin to the principal. Our law therefore properly regards such an authority as extraordinary, and not ordinarily to be included within the terms of general grants; and the rule is abundantly established that it can exist only when it has been directly conferred or is warranted by necessary implication.³⁴ To use the language of a learned judge: "The power of binding by promissory negotiable notes, can be conferred only by the direct authority of the party to be bound, with the single exception where, by necessary implication, the duties to be performed cannot be discharged without the exercise of such a power. To facilitate the business of note making and thus affect the interest and estates of third persons to an indefinite amount, is not within the object and intent of the law regulating the common duties of principal and agent; neither is the power to be implied because occasionally an instance occurs in which a note so made should in equity be paid."³⁵

³⁴ Paige v. Stone, 10 Met. (Mass.) 160, 43 Am. Dec. 420; Stock Exch. Bank v. Williamson, 6 Okl. 348; La-fourche Transp. Co. v. Pugh, 52 La. Ann. 1517; Connell v. McLoughlin, 23 Or. 230; Bank of Morganton v. Hay, 143 N. C. 326; Seattle Shoe Co. v. Packard, 43 Wash. 527, 117 Am. St. R. 1064.

In Morris v. Hofferberth, 81 N. Y. App. Div. 512, 520 (aff'd 180 N. Y. 545) it is said by Hiscock, J.: "It is perfectly understood as a matter of ordinary business observation and experience, that almost the last authority which a man confers upon his agent is the right to bind him by signing or indorsing his name upon negotiable paper. Very naturally men are reluctant to confer upon others an authority which, if misused, may be so injurious as this. I think the courts have respected and followed the general course and conduct of business men in dealing with this subject, for they have always been slow to infer a power to perform such acts unless it was clearly given or fairly to be implied.

³⁵ Hubbard, J., in Paige v. Stone, supra.

§ 970. How authority conferred.—Authority to execute negotiable instruments need not be conferred in any particular manner. Unless required by some statute it is not essential that authority to execute it be in writing.³⁶ It need not always be express:³⁷ as has been seen, it may arise from necessary implication.³⁸ The principal may also by his conduct either show that the act was really authorized, or he may estop himself from denying it,³⁹ and an unauthorized execution may be rendered valid by a subsequent ratification.

§ 971. When authority implied.—As has been seen, general words made use of in conferring authority must be limited to the legitimate scope of the business in the transaction of which it is to be exercised, and authority to bind the principal by negotiable paper will only be implied where it is practically indispensable to accomplish the object.⁴⁰

³⁶ People's Bank v. Scalzo, 127 Mo. 164; Fountain v. Bookstaver, 141 Ill. 461.

³⁷ Under the code in Louisiana, it is required to be express. La-fourche Transp. Co. v. Pugh, 52 La. Ann. 1517. See also, People's Bank v. Scalzo, supra.

³⁸ Gambrill v. Brown Hotel Co., 11 Colo. App. 529; Whitten v. Bank of Fincastle, 100 Va. 546.

³⁹ Thus where the principal in numerous instances or for considerable periods, has permitted the alleged agent to execute negotiate instruments, he will be liable to one who has dealt with the agent in reliance thereon. See Eoff v. Citizens Bank (Ark.), 112 S. W. 213; Bank of Ukiah v. Mohr, 130 Cal. 268; Greer v. First Nat. Bank (Tex. Civ. App.), 47 S. W. 1045; Witcher v. McPhee, 16 Colo. App. 298. See also, Taylor v. Angel, 162 Ind. 670; Appeal of Nat. Shoe and Leather Bank, 55 Conn. 469. Notes being among the usual instrumentalities to evidence a loan, if the principal requests a third person to loan the agent money to carry on the principal's business, the lender may properly assume that the agent is authorized to execute notes therefor. Lytle v. Bank of Dothan, 121 Ala. 215.

Principal honoring agent's drafts.—But the mere fact that the principal has honored drafts drawn upon him by his agent does not, it is held, show that the agent is authorized to draw drafts upon the principal. It may just as well be the fact that the agent had a deposit, or credit or commissions, in the principal's hands, and that he had drawn the drafts as owner and not as agent and that the principal had paid them for that reason only. Seattle Shoe Co. v. Packard, 43 Wash. 527.

See also Bank of Morganton v. Hay, 143 N. C. 326; Cook v. Baldwin, 120 Mass. 317, 21 Am. Rep. 517; Bank of Deer Lodge v. Hope Mining Co., 3 Mont. 146, 35 Am. Rep. 458.

But in Valiquette v. Clark Co., 83 Vt. 538, 138 Am. St. R. 1104, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 440, where the principal, though protesting to the agent, had paid within four weeks three drafts drawn by the agent in favor of the plaintiff without protesting to the latter, the court held him estopped to deny liability upon a fourth drawn within three weeks thereafter.

See also Greer v. First Nat. Bank (Tex. Civ. App.), 47 S. W. 1045.

⁴⁰ Bickford v. Menier, 107 N. Y. 490.

See Gardner v. Baillie, 6 T. R. 591; Howard v. Baillie, 2 H. Bl. 618.

Thus an authority to an agent "to accomplish a complete adjustment" of all the principal's concerns in a certain state does not authorize him to bind the principal by a promissory note,⁴¹ nor will authority given by a farmer to his agent to sign his name in the general transaction of his business, confer power upon the agent to sign the ⁴¹ Rossiter v. Rossiter, 8 Wend. (N. Y.) 494, 24 Am. Dec. 62. A power of attorney "to transact all such business as I may not be able to attend to in person, to take charge of and attend to the collection of all my outstanding debts, * * * to look after the collection of rents, make division of crops with tenants, make such compromises and settlements as in their judgment, is for my interest, make sale of such property as I may desire to dispose of from time to time, and generally to do and perform all acts that I might do were I in good health; and, for this purpose * * * to sign my name to bonds, receipts, and such other papers as may be necessary in the transaction of the business heretofore set forth," does not give authority to purchase mules and wagons and give promissory notes therefor. Born v. Simmons, 111 Ga. 869.

An agent placed in charge of a stock of goods which had been bought in by the principal to secure his debt against such agent, "with authority to transact any business in reference thereto that may be necessary and in accordance with the desire of or by agreement with said first party," has no authority, except in reference to that very stock, and hence may not buy goods on credit to replenish the stock and give a note therefor. Weekes v. Shapleigh Hdwe. Co., 23 Tex. Civ. App. 577.

Authority "to superintend . . . the Snyder mine and all other mines acquired by us by purchase or otherwise . . . and to preserve, manage, sell and dispose of any and all of the said mines, mills or other property in such manner as he shall deem meet and proper and for our best interest", does not authorize agent to give a promissory note for money paid to workmen in the mines and merchandise purchased for the mines, prior to its execution. Golinsky v. Allison, 114 Cal. 458.

A power of attorney "to ask, demand, receive, and recover all and every sum of sums of money whatsoever that are or is now due and owing . . . to investigate, adjust, settle and to compromise all accounts, debts, claims, disputes, and matters . . . to commence and prosecute and defend all actions, suits, claims, demands and proceedings . . . to give effectual receipts in full discharge of all claims; and generally to do, perform and execute all and every such act and acts, duty and duties, in and about the premises as he . . . shall think proper, as fully and as effectually to all intents and purposes whatsoever, as the said (principals) might or could do if personally present" does not empower the agent to indorse and negotiate a check which he has received in settlement of a claim belonging to his principal. Jacoby v. Payson, 71 Hun, 480. The court relied upon the case next stated as conclusive.

A power of attorney gave an attorney "full power to execute and deliver all needful instruments and papers, and to perform all and every act and thing whatsoever requisite and necessary to be done in and about the premises, as fully and completely, to all intents and purposes, as I might and could do if personally present." Held, that this did not authorize the attorney to indorse a draft in the name of his principal. Holtsinger v. Bank, 1

principal's name to a note;⁴² nor will authority to settle a controversy of itself imply power to bind the principal by a note given in settlement.⁴³

§ 972. — So an agent authorized to attend to and manage a grocery and provision store;⁴⁴ an agent employed in the manufacture of carriages;⁴⁵ a mere clerk employed in a merchant's store;⁴⁶ an agent authorized to manage his principal's farm;⁴⁷ an agent authorized to superintend his principal's mine;⁴⁸ and an agent employed generally to manage his principal's business;⁴⁹ has no implied power to bind his principal by the execution of negotiable paper.

An agent authorized to buy goods and pay for them, is not thereby authorized to give his principal's note, or to accept a bill of exchange drawn for the amount.⁵⁰

An insurance agent authorized merely to solicit risks and write policies, has no implied authority to borrow money upon promissory notes in the company's name.⁵¹ An agent authorized merely to deposit his principal's money in a bank, has therefrom no implied authority to Sweeny (N. Y. Super.), 64, 6 Abb. Pr. (N. S.) 292, 37 How. Pr. 203, and affirmed by court of appeals in 3 Abb. L. J. 305, 40 How. Pr. 720.

In McClure's Ex'r v. Corydon Bank (Ky.), 106 S. W. 1177, a power of attorney authorized an agent "to take charge of, manage, and control all of my business relating to my personal estate," justifies the agent in making a renewal of a note on which his principal was bound. Such renewal was only a continuance of a present obligation, and "related to her personal business."

See also American Savings Bank v. Helgesen, 64 Wash. 54.

⁴² Brantley v. Southern Ins. Co., 53 Ala. 554.

⁴³ Hills v. Upton, 24 La. Ann. 427.

⁴⁴ Smith v. Gibson, 6 Blackf. (Ind.) 369; Terry v. Fargo, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 114; Perkins v. Boothby, 71 Me. 91.

⁴⁵ Paige v. Stone, 10 Metc. (Mass.) 160, 43 Am. Dec. 420.

⁴⁶ Kerns v. Piper, 4 Watts (Penn.) 222; Terry v. Fargo, supra.

⁴⁷ Davidson v. Stanley, 2 M. & G. 721.

⁴⁸ New York Iron Mine v. Negau-

nee Bank, 39 Mich. 644; McCullough v. Moss, 5 Den. (N. Y.) 567; Sewanee Mining Co. v. McCall, 3 Head (Tenn.), 619.

⁴⁹ See post, § 926; Perkins v. Boothby, supra; New York Iron Mine v. Negaunee Bank, supra; Connell v. McLoughlin, 28 Or. 230; Jackson Paper Mfg. Co. v. Commercial Nat. Bank, 199 Ill. 151, 93 Am. St. R. 113, 59 L. R. A. 657; Fairly v. Nash, 70 Miss. 193.

But see Glidden Varnish Co. v. Interstate Bank, 69 Fed. 912, 16 C. C. A. 534; Lerch v. Bard, 153 Pa. 573; Whitten v. Bank of Fincastle, 100 Va. 546; Wimberly v. Windham, 104 Ala. 409, 53 Am. St. R. 70.

⁵⁰ Brown v. Parker, 7 Allen (Mass.), 337; Taber v. Cannon, 8 Metc. (Mass.) 456; Webber v. Williams College, 23 Pick. (Mass.) 302; Gould v. Norfolk Lead Co., 9 Cush. (Mass.) 338, 57 Am. Dec. 50; Emerson v. Providence Mfg. Co., 12 Mass. 237, 7 Am. Dec. 66.

⁵¹ Burlingame v. Aetna Ins. Co., 36 N. Y. App. Div. 358. Here it was done to pay what the agent owed the company.

draw checks upon the deposit.⁵² An agent authorized upon one occasion to get certain sum at a bank for a stated period, has thereby no implied authority to bind the principal by making promissory notes generally.⁵³

§ 973. Authority strictly construed.—Authority to execute negotiable instruments will be strictly construed, and the power will be held to extend only to those cases in which it is clearly given, or in which it is a manifestly necessary and customary incident to the act which the agent is called upon to perform.⁵⁴

§ 974. — Illustrations of acts not authorized.—Authority to sign the principal's name to promissory notes will be limited to notes drawn in the usual form, and will not authorize the execution of a note containing a provision that if not paid at maturity, an additional sum of ten per cent. would be paid.⁵⁵ Authority to an agent to draw a bill in the principal's name will not authorize a bill drawn in the joint names of the principal and the agent; nor will authority to draw a bill, authorize an agent to contract to indemnify the acceptor against the consequences of his acceptance;⁵⁶ nor will joint authority from several persons to indorse a bill in their names jointly, authorize several and successive indorsements.⁵⁷ Nor will authority to sign as surety authorize the signing as principal.⁵⁸ Authority to draw checks upon a certain bank will not justify the agent in overdrawing his principal's account.⁵⁹

Authority to indorse checks of the donor of the power for deposit in a certain bank, authorizes the indorsement of such checks as are the property of such donor but not those which are acquired by the donee of the power in an unauthorized manner.⁶⁰ Authority to draw

⁵² Heath v. New Bedford Safe Deposit Co., 184 Mass. 481. See also, Schmidt v. Garfield Nat. Bank, 64 Hun, 298 (aff'd 138 N. Y. 631); Exch. Bank v. Thrower, 118 Ga. 433.

⁵³ Stock Exch. Bank v. Williamson, 6 Okl. 348.

⁵⁴ Turner v. Keller, 66 N. Y. 66; Craighead v. Peterson, 72 N. Y. 279, 28 Am. Rep. 150; Brantley v. Southern Life Ins. Co., 53 Ala. 554; Hills v. Upton, 24 La. Ann. 427; Webber v. Williams College, 23 Pick. (Mass.) 302; Stainback v. Read, 11 Gratt. (Va.) 281, 62 Am. Dec. 648; Rossiter v. Rossiter, 8 Wend. (N. Y.) 494, 24 Am. Dec. 62; Avery v. Lauve, 1 La. Ann. 457; Nugent v.

Hickey, 2 Id. 358; Duconge v. Forgay, 15 Id. 37.

⁵⁵ First National Bank v. Gay, 63 Mo. 33, 21 Am. Rep. 430.

⁵⁶ Stainback v. Read, 11 Gratt. (Va.) 281, 62 Am. Dec. 648.

⁵⁷ Bank of United States v. Beirne, 1 Gratt. (Va.) 234, 42 Am. Dec. 551.

See also Union Bank v. Beirne, 1 Gratt. (Va.) 226; Bank of United States v. Beirne, 1 Gratt. (Va.) 539.

⁵⁸ Farmington Savings Bank v. Buzzell, 61 N. H. 612; Bryan v. Berry, 6 Cal. 394.

⁵⁹ Union Bank v. Mott, 39 Barb. (N. Y.) 180.

⁶⁰ Fay v. Slaughter, 194 Ill. 157, 88 Am. St. R. 148, 56 L. R. A. 564.

drafts upon the principal for goods purchased and received by the agent, involves no authority to draw drafts for goods not received.⁶¹ Authority to make a promissory note implies no authority, twelve years later, to make a small payment upon it in order to prevent the bar of the statute of limitations.⁶² Authority to make a prescribed and restrictive indorsement for the deposit of checks on the principal's account, involves no authority to indorse or discount them generally so as to permit the agent to collect the proceeds on his own account.⁶³ A special authority to negotiate a certain draft for cash at a reasonable discount, does not authorize the agent to negotiate it for cash and merchandise.⁶⁴ Authority to collect and remit the amount of a certain check confers no implied authority to transfer the check and bind his principal by a general indorsement.⁶⁵ Authority to insert a guaranty over an indorsement does not justify inserting an unqualified promise to pay.⁶⁶

§ 975. — Illustrations of acts authorized.—But authority to discount bills confers authority to indorse the same when necessary to accomplish the purpose.⁶⁷

Authority to manage and act generally for another in the conducting of his saloon business, including the depositing of money, and the drawing of checks, will justify the making of a note to secure a li-

⁶¹ Gray Tie & Lumber Co. v. Farmers' Bank (Ky.), 78 S. W. 207, 25 Ky. Law Rep. 1596.

⁶² Miller v. Magee, 49 Hun, 610.

⁶³ An agent authorized to indorse checks for deposit with a rubber stamp has no authority to indorse checks in blank, and collect the money thereon. Exchange Bank v. Thrower, 118 Ga. 433. To same effect: Schmidt v. Garfield Nat. Bank, 64 Hun, 298 (aff'd 138 N. Y. 631).

But when a bank upon which a check has been drawn by a customer pays it to an agent of the customer's creditor, which agent had authority to indorse the check for deposit and collection but whose limited authority to indorse for collection only, is unknown to the bank, and checks with similar indorsements had been previously paid through the clearing house without objection on the part of the agent's principal, this operates as a payment of the debt for the settlement of which the check was drawn, even though the agent absconds with the money so drawn. Kansas City, etc., R. R. v. Ivy Leaf Coal Co., 97 Ala. 705.

And where the bookkeeper of a corporation is authorized to endorse checks in blank, such endorsement to be used only for the purpose of depositing the check in the defendant bank to the account of the corporation, the bank is not liable if it pays a check so endorsed but negotiated by the bookkeeper for his own purposes, the limitation on the power to endorse being a secret limitation not known to the bank. Wedge Mines Co. v. Denver Nat. Bank, 19 Colo. App. 182.

⁶⁴ Dowden v. Cryder, 55 N. J. Law, 329.

⁶⁵ Nat. City Bank v. Westcott, 118 N. Y. 468, 16 Am. St. R. 771.

⁶⁶ Clymer v. Terry, 50 Tex. Civ. App. 300.

⁶⁷ Merchants' Bank v. Central Bank, 1 Ga. 418, 44 Am. Dec. 665.

cense for the saloon.⁶⁸ Authority from a wife to her husband "to transact all business of every nature, and to execute and deliver any and all papers, documents, deeds, or other instruments," justifies him in transferring a note belonging to her.⁶⁹ Power of attorney "to sell . . . and to convey . . . to change any of the mortgages upon any of said lands . . . or upon the payment of a part of any one of said mortgages to execute a new note and mortgage for the residue upon the same . . . or to renew any of said mortgages; but in no event to increase the incumbrances . . . or pay a greater interest" justifies the agent in executing a new note and mortgage to a person who, as surety on a prior note, was compelled to pay off the balance of the mortgage which had been given to secure it.⁷⁰ Authority by telegram "to indorse" a note, given in renewal of a note which had been indorsed with a guaranty and waiver of notice, justifies the indorsement of the note in question in the same manner.⁷¹

§ 976. Must be confined to principal's business.—Authority to make or indorse negotiable paper will be confined to the making or indorsing of such paper in the legitimate business of the principal or for his benefit. Such an agent cannot, therefore, bind his principal by making or indorsing notes for his own benefit or the benefit of third persons,⁷² subject, of course, to the rules governing the rights of bona fide purchasers for value.⁷³

⁶⁸ Flewellen v. Mittenthal (Tex. Civ. App.), 38 S. W. 234.

⁶⁹ Presnall v. McLeary (Tex. Civ. App.), 50 S. W. 1066.

⁷⁰ Barbour v. Sykes (Ky.), 1 S. W. 600.

⁷¹ State Bank v. Evans, 198 Mass. 11.

⁷² North River Bank v. Aymer, 3 Hill (N. Y.), 262; Stainer v. Tysen, Id. 279; Stainback v. Read, 11 Gratt. (Va.) 281, 62 Am. Dec. 648; Camden Safe Dep. Co. v. Abbott, 44 N. J. L. 257; Duncan v. Gilbert, 29 Id. 521; Hamilton v. Vought, 34 Id. 187; Gulick v. Grover, 33 Id. 463, 97 Am. Dec. 728; Bird v. Daggett, 97 Mass. 494; Wallace v. Branch Bank, 1 Ala. 565; Brantley v. Southern Life Ins. Co., 53 Ala. 554; Citizens' Savings Bank v. Hart, 32 La. Ann. 22; Odiorne v. Maxcy, 13 Mass. 178; Boord v. Strauss, 39 Fla. 381; Park Hotel Co. v. Fourth Nat. Bank, 86

Fed. 742; Merchant's Nat. Bank v. Detroit, 68 Mich. 620; Myers v. Walker, 104 Ga. 316.

Even if authorized to indorse, he cannot indorse to himself. Englehart v. Peoria Plow Co., 21 Neb. 41. Authority to borrow money, draw and endorse notes and execute deeds does not authorize drawing notes, making loans and executing deeds of trust to secure them, for the benefit and use of the agent individually. Mechanics' Bank v. Shaumburg, 38 Mo. 228. An agent authorized to sign his principal's name to "any paper" is not justified in signing paper outside of the principal's business. Camden Safe Deposit Co. v. Abbott, supra.

In First National Bank v. Bean, 141 Wis. 476, an agent was given a power of attorney to take general control of principal's affairs, make notes, and do every act which the

In accordance with the rule prevailing in New York, it is held that, if the question whether the paper is executed within the scope of the principal's business depends on extrinsic facts peculiarly within the knowledge of the agent, a third person, dealing with the agent in good faith, may rely upon the agent's representation as to the existence of those facts.⁷⁴

So where an agent is authorized to draw checks "for the use of" the principal and draws a check which appears to be, and which he declares is, for the use of the principal the bank is justified in paying even though the agent subsequently embezzles the funds. "The authority to sign checks for the use of the principal," said the court, "imposed no affirmative duty upon the bank to inquire into the purposes of the check or the use to which the money was to be put."⁷⁵

§ 977. Execution must be confined to limits specified.—Parties dealing with an agent assuming to be authorized to draw, accept, or indorse negotiable paper, must see to it that his authority is adequate, and both they and the agent must keep strictly within the limits fixed to the agent's authority or the principal will not be bound. Thus authority to draw and discount a note for a given purpose, implies no authority to draw and discount one for another and different purpose;⁷⁶ authority to bind the principal for a given sum will not au-business would require; the agent made a note in name of a Fruit Growers Association, indorsed the name of his principal thereon, discounted it, and kept the proceeds as a settlement of a claim for services against the association. Later the agent signed the principal's name to a guaranty of the same debt, and later made a mortgage to secure it. Held, that the authority conferred was restricted to management of the principal's affairs and that the note and mortgage were not authorized. In Mathis v. Bank (Ky.), 105 S. W. 157, a father about to leave on a short visit, gave his son a power of attorney to sign checks and notes. The son used the power for about three years, signing small checks and using proceeds for personal purposes. The son opened an account in his own name, over-drew to a considerable extent, and, to cover the deficit, checked on his father's account. There was evidence that the father may have known of the smaller checks from observation from time to time of his bank book. Held, that for the latter he was liable, but for others the father was not liable.

But in Moore v. Gould, 151 Cal. 723, where the payee of a note [now an agent] executed a renewal in the name of the maker as his agent, it was held that this rule did not apply, because the note had been negotiated away and the agent was not now dealing with himself but with third parties.

⁷³ Bryant v. La Banque du Peuple, [1893] App. Cas. 170.

⁷⁴ Warren Bank v. Butler Colliery Co., 52 Hun, 612, aff'd 125 N. Y. 695; Huie v. Allen, 87 Hun, 516, aff'd 156 N. Y. 658.

⁷⁵ Warren-Scharf Co. v. Com'l Nat. Bank, 38 C. C. A. 108, 97 Fed. 181.

⁷⁶ Callender v. Golsan, 27 La. Ann. 311; Nixon v. Palmer, 8 N. Y. 398;

thorize the binding for a greater sum;⁷⁷ power of attorney "to make deposits, draw, sign and indorse notes, checks, or bills of exchange" in the course of the principal's business and with one particular bank does not authorize the agent to execute notes to totally different bank for money which he has borrowed from it to use in his own individual business;⁷⁸ authority to do all things at a particular bank, which the principal could do if present, will not authorize the agent to draw money of his principal from another bank where the principal has an account;⁷⁹ authority to draw checks and notes payable at any bank where the principal has an account, will not justify making a note payable at a bank where the principal has no account;⁸⁰ authority to draw on a principal's funds will not empower the agent to draw upon the principal's credit;⁸¹ authority to draw checks on a bank for property purchased by the agent, implies no authority to borrow money;⁸² authority to execute notes gives no authority to renew them;⁸³ authority to make a note for a given time will not authorize the making of a note payable in a different time,⁸⁴ unless from the circumstances it is evident that the principal did not intend to fix an exact limit and the variance be not great;⁸⁵ authority to issue bonds does not authorize the issuing of notes;⁸⁶ authority to draw a bill does not of itself imply power to indorse,⁸⁷ or to accept one;⁸⁸ nor does authority to indorse empower the agent to accept a bill, or make a joint and several note;⁸⁹ authority to draw bills of exchange payable on time or at sight does not imply au-

Hortons v. Townes, 6 Leigh (Va.), 47.

See also, Great Western Elevator Co. v. White, 118 Fed. 406, 56 C. C. A. 388.

⁷⁷ Blackwell v. Ketcham, 53 Ind. 184; King v. Sparks, 77 Ga. 285, 4 Am. St. Rep. 85; Batty v. Carswell, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 48.

⁷⁸ Citizens' Savings Bank v. Hart, 32 La. Ann. 22.

⁷⁹ Sims v. United States Trust Co., 103 N. Y. 472.

⁸⁰ Craighead v. Peterson, 72 N. Y. 279, 28 Am. Rep. 150.

⁸¹ Breed v. First Nat. Bank, 4 Colo. 481.

⁸² Mordhurst v. Boles, 24 Iowa, 99.

⁸³ Ward v. Bank of Kentucky, 7 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 93.

⁸⁴ Batty v. Carswell, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 48; Tate v. Evans, 7 Mo. 419.

⁸⁵ Adams v. Flanagan, 36 Vt. 400; Bank v. McWillie, 4 McCord (S. C.), 438.

⁸⁶ School Directors v. Sippy, 54 Ill. 287; Bank of Deer Lodge v. Hope Mining Co., 3 Montana, 146, 35 Am. Rep. 458.

⁸⁷ Robinson v. Yarrow, 7 Taunt. 455; Murray v. East India Co., 5 B. & Ald. 204.

But in Marsh v. French, 82 Ill. App. 76, it is held that authority to an agent to draw upon the principal for amounts necessary to carry on the business will justify his procuring an endorser of drafts so drawn.

⁸⁸ Attwood v. Munnings, 7 B. & C. 278; Sewanee Mining Co. v. McCall, 2 Head (Tenn.), 619; Bank v. Hope Min. Co., supra.

⁸⁹ Cuyler v. Merrifield, 5 Hun (N. Y.), 559.

thority to draw post-dated bills; ⁹⁰ authority to execute a note does not of itself imply authority to pay it when due, or to receive demand of payment; ⁹¹ or to receive notice of dishonor; ⁹² authority to draw on A at Portland, or B at New York, does not authorize the agent to draw on A payable at New York; ⁹³ authority to make a particular draft on the principal payable "to the order of the court," will not empower him to make it payable to bearer. ⁹⁴

§ 978. Negotiable paper delivered to agent in blank.—The full discussion of the effect of the signing and delivering of blank paper or blank forms to a third person to be filled up or completed as negotiable instruments, belongs more appropriately to a treatise dealing with such instruments. ⁹⁵ In general however it may be said that a principal who delivers to his agent negotiable paper executed in blank, to be filled out by the agent according to certain instructions, will be liable upon the paper as the agent may fill it out, to one who takes it in good faith, for value and without notice, although the agent may have violated his instructions. ⁹⁶

But if the third person had notice of the instructions or if he does not take the paper for value, he will not be protected. ⁹⁷ Whether mere knowledge that the paper was delivered to the agent in blank is enough

⁹⁰ New York Iron Mine v. Citizens' Bank, 44 Mich. 344; Forster v. Macreth, L. R., 2 Exch. 163.

⁹¹ Luning v. Wise, 64 Cal. 410.

⁹² Bank of Mobile v. King, 9 Ala. 279.

⁹³ Lanusse v. Barker, 3 Wheat (U. S.) 101, 4 L. Ed. 343.

⁹⁴ Com'l Assur. Co. v. Rector, 55 Ark. 630.

⁹⁵ See Daniel on Neg. Inst. § 142, et seq.

⁹⁶ Davis v. Lee, 26 Miss. 505, 59 Am. Dec. 267; Johnson v. Blasdale, 1 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 17, 40 Am. Dec. 85; Putnam v. Sullivan, 4 Mass. 45, 3 Am. Dec. 206; Roberts v. Adams, 8 Port. (Ala.) 297, 33 Am. Dec. 291; Hall v. Bank of Commonwealth, 5 Dana (Ky.), 258, 30 Am. Dec. 685; Holland v. Hatch, 11 Ind. 497, 71 Am. Dec. 363; Gillaspie v. Kelley, 41 Ind. 158, 13 Am. Rep. 318; Blackwell v. Ketcham, 53 Ind. 186; Snyder v. Van Doren, 46 Wis. 602, 32 Am. Rep. 739; Friend v. Yahr, 126 Wis. 291, 110 Am. St. R. 924, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 891; Bank of Pittsburgh v. Neal, 22 How. (U. S.) 96, 16 L. Ed. 323; Frank v. Lillienfeld, 33 Gratt. (Va.) 377; Market Nat. Bank v. Sargent, 85 Me. 349, 35 Am. St. R. 376; Weidman v. Symes, 120 Mich. 657, 77 Am. St. R. 603; First Nat. Bank v. Mfg. Co., 61 Minn. 274; Ward v. Hackett, 30 Minn. 150, 44 Am. Rep. 187; De Pauw v. Bank of Salem, 126 Ind. 553, 10 L. R. A. 46; Bradford Nat. Bank v. Taylor, 75 Hun (N. Y.), 297; Binney v. Globe Nat. Bank, 150 Mass. 574, 6 L. R. A. 379; Boston Steel Co. v. Steuer, 183 Mass. 140, 97 Am. St. Rep. 426.

⁹⁷ Davidson v. Lanier, 4 Wall. (U. S.) 447, 18 L. Ed. 377; Johnson v. Blasdale, supra. Where the note bears evidence on its face that it is being delivered contrary to directions, it cannot be enforced by person to whom it is so delivered. Mills v. Williams, 16 S. C. 593.

to put third persons upon inquiry as to his instructions, is a question upon which the authorities differ, but the better opinion seems to be that it is not.⁹⁸

VIII.

OF AGENT AUTHORIZED TO MANAGE BUSINESS.

§ 979. What is meant.—The idea of management seems not to be one of precise legal import.⁹⁹ To manage is to direct, to control, to conduct, to carry on. The good manager is one who wisely directs and expedites an enterprise, conserving its resources, making the most of its opportunities, adding to its influence, increasing its efficiency,

⁹⁸ See Daniel Neg. Ins. § 147.

⁹⁹ Many attempts at definition have been made, not always with complete success.

In Hodges v. Bankers' Surety Co., 152 Ill. App. 372, a collection of definitions is given. The court says: "The powers of a manager are at least as broad and comprehensive as those of a general agent," quoting, "The term, in our judgment, when used in connection with such a corporation cannot, in the absence of any evidence on the subject, be presumed to mean anything more than that the person filling the position has general charge of those business matters for the carrying on of which the company was incorporated,"—from Washington Gas Light Co. v. Lansden, 172 U. S. 534, 547, 43 L. Ed. 543; and "Where a company is located in a state remote from that in which the insurance is effected, one intrusted with the general management of its business in the latter state should be regarded as a general agent (Southern Life Ins. Co. v. Booker, 9 Heisk. (Tenn.) 606, 24 Am. Rep. 344); and as possessing all the powers of those in charge of its business at the head or home office,"—from Hartford Life Ins. Co. v. Hayden, 90 Ky. 39, 47.

In Booker-Jones Oil Co. v. National Refining Co., — Tex. Civ.

App. —, 132 S. W. 815, the court quotes several judicial definitions, among which are the following: "The term 'general manager' of a corporation, according to the ordinary meaning of the term, indicates one who has general direction and control of the affairs of the corporation." Louisville, etc., Ry. Co. v. McVay, 98 Ind. 391, 49 Am. Rep. 770. "A general manager of a corporation is the person who has the most general control over the affairs of the corporation and who has knowledge of all of its business." Lee Mining Co. v. Omaha, etc., Smelting Co., 16 Colo. 118; and "The term 'general manager' is synonymous with general agent. A general manager is virtually the corporation itself." Atlantic, etc., R. Co. v. Reisner, 18 Kan. 458. It is said that the general manager of a corporation has "power prima facie to do any act which the directors of the corporation could authorize or ratify." Jenkins S. S. Co. v. Preston, 108 C. C. A. 473, 186 Fed. 609, citing other cases. "It will be presumed that he is authorized by the corporation to do any act that the corporation might lawfully do." Tourtlot v. Whithed, 9 N. D. 467, 474. See also the elaborate discussion in Sencerbox v. First Nat. Bank, 14 Idaho, 95.

and the like, as the nature, scope and purpose of the enterprise may properly require.

§ 980. Extent of authority depends on nature of business.—The extent of the implied or incidental authority of an agent who has general authority to manage his principal's business, must therefore be dependent largely upon the nature of the business and the degree to which it is placed under the agent's control. Thus it is obvious that the implied powers of the general manager of a great continental insurance company, while they might be of the same kind, would differ greatly in degree from those of a clerk in an inland store who is given general control of the business during his principal's absence.

In general terms, it may be said that the authority of such an agent will be presumed to be co-extensive with the business to be performed, and will include the authority to do all of those things which are necessary and proper to be done in carrying out the business in its usual and accustomed way, and which the principal could and would usually do in like cases if present.¹

His authority, moreover, in this respect must, as in other cases, be deemed to be what it is held out as being, and is not to be limited by private instructions of which the persons who deal with him have no notice.²

§ 981. Execution must be confined to principal's business and for his benefit.—It would seem to go without saying, however, that the exercise of such an agent's authority, broad though it may be, must still be confined to the scope of the business he is thus authorized to manage, and be availed of only for the principal's benefit. He is not to exercise his authority for the benefit or accommodation of third persons, even though indirectly a benefit may enure to his principal;³

¹ German Fire Ins. Co. v. Grunert, 112 Ill. 68; Lowenstein v. Lombard, 164 N. Y. 324; Tennessee R. Transp. Co. v. Kavanaugh, 101 Ala. 1; American Graphic Co. v. Railway Co., 44 Minn. 93; Havens v. Church, 104 Mich. 135; Byxbee v. Blake, 74 Conn. 607, 57 L. R. A. 222.

In Duncan v. Hartman, 143 Pa. 595, 24 Am. St. R. 570 (aff'd 149 Pa. 114), it is said that "an agency to manage implies authority to do with the property what has previously been done with it by the owners, or others with their express or implied consent; or further, to do with it what is usual and customary to do with property of the same kind in the same locality."

² Montgomery Furn. Co. v. Hardaway, 104 Ala. 100; Tice v. Russell, 43 Minn. 66; Hartford L. Ins. Co. v. Hayden, 90 Ky. 39; Allis v. Voigt, 90 Mich. 125; Levy v. First N. Bank, 27 Neb. 557; Cox v. Brewing Co., 56 Hun, 489; Benesch v. Ins. Co., 16 Daly, 394; Georgia Mil. Academy v. Estill, 77 Ga. 409.

³ Bullard v. DeGroff, 59 Neb. 783. An agent of a townsite corporation has no implied authority to purchase lumber or other material for private and, no more than any other agent, is he to exercise it on his account or for his own benefit.⁴

With these general principles in mind, attention will next be given to some illustrations of the construction of such a power. Thus—

§ 982. Authority to pledge principal's credit—Supplies for store or business.—An agent employed generally to manage his principal's store or business has usually implied authority, for the keeping up of the stock, to make reasonable and proper purchases of goods upon his principal's account on such terms as to credit and time of payment as are customary in the purchase of such goods in like cases,⁵ but this implied authority would not extend to goods of a kind or amount not usually kept or bought for such a business or store;⁶ and his authority by the terms of the grant, may be limited to the sale individuals to build houses upon lots which they had purchased of the company. Union Pac. Townsite Co. v. Page, 54 Kan. 363.

⁴See Clarke v. Kelsey, 41 Neb. 766; McClendon v. Bradford, 42 La. Ann. 160; Page v. Webb, 9 Ky. L. Rep. 868, 7 S. W. 308; Stewart v. Cowles, 67 Minn. 184.

⁵The general agent of barge and tow boat business has implied power to agree that a boat which he has chartered will stand at the risk of the charterer during the bailment. Dunwoody v. Saunders, 50 Fla. 202.

The manager of a quarry may buy necessary machinery. Dorsey v. Pike, 10 N. Y. Supp. 268. The manager of waterworks may purchase necessary pump. Goss v. Helbing, 77 Cal. 190; Banner Tobacco Co. v. Jenison, 48 Mich. 459; Schmidt v. Sandel, 30 La. Ann. 353; Pacific Biscuit Co. v. Dugger, 40 Or. 362; Louisville Coffin Co. v. Stokes, 78 Ala. 372.

The power to buy is coextensive with the business as actually conducted with the principal's apparent consent and approval. Witcher v. Gibson, 15 Colo. App. 163.

See also, Leshner v. London, 85 Mich. 52. In Keyes v. Union Pac. Tea Co., 81 Vt. 420, the power was sustained on long acquiescence.

One general manager of a retail drug store has implied authority to contract for telephone service at store. New York Telephone Co. v. Barnes, 85 N. Y. Supp. 327.

If the agency be to carry on a mercantile business, and to do this, it is necessary to rent a house, agent may do so. Baldwin v. Garrett, 111 Ga. 876. To same effect, see, Singer Mfg. Co. v. McLean, 105 Ala. 316.

A "bookkeeper" who is left in charge of an office during the absence of the regular manager has implied authority to direct a delivery of goods sold. Fitzgerald Cotton Oil Co. v. Farmers' Supply Co., 3 Ga. App. 212.

See also, Kramer v. Compton, 166 Ala. 216. The fact that the manager wrongfully appropriates the goods to his own use is immaterial if his act of purchasing them was within his authority. Austin v. Elk Merc. Co., 38 Wash. 365.

⁶An agent, having charge of a beer business, has no implied power to buy whisky in quantities, that not being an authority commonly incident to the principal business. Hackett v. Van Frank, 105 Mo. App. 384. See also Getty v. Milling Co., 40 Kan. 281.

District agent of an insurance company has no implied authority to buy furniture upon the company's credit to fit up an office. Beebe v. Equitable, etc., Ass'n, 76 Iowa, 129.

of goods which the principal may supply.⁷ One employed merely as "shop superintendent" may easily be found to have much less extensive authority, not including the authority to purchase.⁸

Limitations upon an implied authority to buy upon credit, resulting from the fact that the agent is supplied with funds and directed to buy only when he has funds to pay, are discussed in the earlier section dealing with agents to purchase.

§ 983. — Supplies for hotel.—An agent authorized to take charge of and manage his principal's hotel and to purchase the necessary supplies, may buy suitable and appropriate goods for use in the hotel upon his principal's credit;⁹ but he has no implied authority to bind his principal for the safe keeping and return of carriages furnished by a livery-stable keeper for use by guests of the hotel.¹⁰

§ 984. — Supplies for farm or plantation.—So though an agent authorized to manage a plantation or farm would have implied authority to purchase, on his principal's account, the necessary supplies therefor,¹¹ he would have no such authority to pledge the credit of his principal for supplies furnished to the "hands" engaged upon the plantation.¹²

§ 985. — Board and provisions for help.—Where it is customary in the business for the employer to board the workmen employed, such an agent may lawfully contract in his principal's name for the board of the men employed by him.¹³ So it is held that a mine superintendent, by virtue of his position, has the authority to bind his principal for the price of provisions furnished to the keeper of a boarding house at which the miners board, where it is necessary that the provisions be furnished in order that the mine may continue in opera-

The superintendent of one paper mill among several located at distant points, who has authority to buy pulp for his own plant, has no authority to buy for the others. Hinde & Dauch Paper Co. v. Atterbury Bros., 107 C. C. A. 296, 185 Fed. 76.

⁷ See, as to the effect of such a restriction upon persons not advised of it. Watteau v. Fenwick, [1893] 1 Q. B. 346.

⁸ Parr v. Northern Electrical Mfg. Co., 117 Wis. 278.

⁹ Beecher v. Venn, 53 Mich. 466; Cummings v. Sargent, 9 Metc. (Mass.) 172; Wallis Tobacco Co. v. Jackson, 99 Ala. 460; Fisk v. Greeley Elec. L. Co., 3 Colo. App. 319.

The general manager of a hotel, may bind his principal by a contract for ordinary advertising. Mullin v. Sire, 34 N. Y. Misc. 540; Calhoon v. Buhre, 75 N. J. L. 439; Kastor Adv. Co. v. Coleman, 6 Ont. W. R. 791.

¹⁰ Broekway v. Mullin, 46 N. J. L. 448, 50 Am. Rep. 442.

Nor has such an agent implied authority to make extensive alterations and renewals in the plant. Fisk v. Greeley Elec. L. Co., 3 Colo. App. 319.

¹¹ Jefferds v. Alvord, 151 Mass. 94. But see Meyer v. Baldwin, 52 Miss. 263.

¹² Carter v. Burnham, 31 Ark. 212.

¹³ Burley v. Kitchell, 20 N. J. L. 305.

tion; but the authority is limited to necessary provisions.¹⁴ But it is held that it is not incidental to the operation of a railway to board its employees; nor is it within the apparent scope of the authority of such an agent as a roadmaster to bind the company to pay for their board.¹⁵

§ 986. — Supplies procured by husband as manager of wife's business.—So where a husband is given by his wife the general management of her business, property or estate, or assumes the management with her knowledge and acquiescence, contracts which he makes for labor or supplies needed therefor in the ordinary course of events, or for improvements, buildings and the like added with her knowledge and apparent approval, will be binding upon her.¹⁶

But, as has often been pointed out, the husband has no authority simply because he is husband;¹⁷ his authority to bind her as manager of her affairs will not extend to supplies and labor for his own business or estate;¹⁸ nor can he by such authority charge her for goods and supplies which it is his duty as head of the family to furnish on his own account.¹⁹

His authority to bind her by borrowing money and giving negotiable paper would be as limited as that of any other managing agent.²⁰

§ 987. — Supplies procured by wife as domestic manager.—So it has been seen in a preceding section that, where a husband maintains a domestic establishment, and puts his wife in charge, she has therefrom implied authority to pledge her husband's credit for such supplies, service and the like, as are ordinarily procured by a wife placed in charge of a similar establishment.²¹ Many illustrations of this rule have already given.

"Walking-boss" of railway contractor whose duties are to superintend construction and see that sub-contractors complete their contracts and who has authority to compel the keeping of sufficient men at work to fulfill such contract may bind his principal by a promise to see that laborer's board bills are paid. Cannon v. Henry, 78 Wis. 167, 23 Am. St. Rep. 399.

¹⁴ Heald v. Hendy, 89 Cal. 632.

¹⁵ St. Louis, etc., Ry. Co. v. Bennett, 53 Ark. 208, 22 Am. St. R. 187.

¹⁶ Maxey Mfg. Co. v. Burnham, 89 Me. 538, 56 Am. St. Rep. 436; Roberts v. Hartford, 86 Me. 460; Arnold v. Spurr, 130 Mass. 347; Wheaton v.

Trimble, 145 Mass. 345, 1 Am. St. Rep. 463; Jefferds v. Alvord, 151 Mass. 94.

Compare Parker v. Collins, 127 N. Y. 185.

¹⁷ Ante, § 169.

¹⁸ Lime, etc., Clay Co. v. Hileman, 24 Pa. Co. Ct. 184; Collins v. Fairchild, 56 Sup. Ct. Rep. 609 (N. Y.).

¹⁹ Hutchinson v. Brooks, 15 Daly, 486.

²⁰ See ante, § 169; Taylor v. Angel, 162 Ind. 670; Witz v. Gray, 116 N. Car. 48; Lane v. Lockridge (Ky.), 17 Ky. L. Rep. 1082, 23 S. W. 730; McMurray v. Gage, 19 App. Div. 505.

²¹ See ante, § 162.

§ 988. — Hiring help.—A general manager, put in complete charge of a business in which servants, and the like, are ordinarily employed would have implied authority, within the range of what is reasonable and proper, to employ the necessary help.²² In doing so, he may make contracts of a usual and reasonable sort,²³ such as for example, the hiring of an employee for a year;²⁴ or the assumption of ²² Jenkins S. S. Co. v. Preston, 108 C. C. A. 473, 196 Fed. 609; King v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co., 140 N. C. 433. In Raike v. Rubber Mfg. Co., 127 Mo. App. 480, a territorial manager put in charge of the business in that territory and told that the principal looked to him for results and left the "ways and means" in his hands, was held to have implied authority to hire the necessary employees.

In Phillips v. Geiser Mfg. Co., 129 Mo. App. 396, a "secretary," in the offices of the general manager who did have authority, was found to have by acquiescence the same authority to hire necessary employees.

In Simpson v. Harris, — Ala. —, 56 So. 968, the general manager of a lumber firm was held to have at least apparent authority to contract for the cutting of timber belonging to the firm.

But in the late case of Stephens v. Roper Lumber Co., — N. C. —, 75 S. E. 933, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1141, it was held that the general superintendent of a lumber company had no implied authority to make a contract "by the terms of which plaintiff was to be dropped from the company's pay roll for an indefinite period, and cease all regular work for the company, and was to be paid during such time as he was unemployed $100 per month, and meantime was not to take other employment, but hold himself in readiness to resume work when notified."

If the principal has given apparent authority to here help, he will be bound although the agent violates his private instructions not to hire at all, or not to hire upon particular terms. Benesch v. Ins. Co., 16 Daly

(N. Y.), 394; Cox v. Brewing Co., 56 Hun, 489; Rice v. Jackson, 16 Pa. Cir. Ct. R. 15.

A station agent has no implied authority to employ a detective to investigate the robbery of cars at his station. Schlapbach v. Richmond R. R., 35 S. Car. 517; neither has a "superintendent of trucking" such a power. Rebenstein v. Frost, 116 N. Y. Supp. 681.

But in Grand Pacific Hotel v. Pinkerton, 217 Ill. 61, the general manager of a hotel was held to have authority to engage detective service.

A "route agent" of an express company directed to investigate a theft has no implied authority to make a special contract with a constable to pay the latter for services in aiding to detect the thief. Fee v. Adams Express Co., 38 Pa. Super. 83.

In Thiel Detective Service Co. v. McClure, 74 C. C. A. 122, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 843, a son acting under a very broad power of attorney to attend to his mother's affairs, was held to have no implied authority to procure a costly investigation by a detective agency of the affairs of a corporation in which she was a stockholder.

See also, Merritt v. Huber, 137 Iowa, 135; Blowers v. Southern Ry. Co., 74 S. Car. 221.

²³ Garner v. Brewing Co., 6 Utah, 332.

²⁴ Laming v. Peters Shoe Co., 71 Mo. App. 646; Roche v. Pennington, 90 Wis. 107; Cox v. Brewing Co., 56 Hun, 489; Armstrong v. Tyndall Quarry Co., 16 West. L. Rep. 111.

Or by the season. Tunison v. Copper Co., 73 Mich. 452, or for the balance of the season. King v. Seaboard Air L. R. Co., supra, or for the risk of the employee's competency to fill the position.²⁵ He would not, on the other hand, have any implied authority to contract to give the employee, as part of his compensation, an interest in the principal's business or its profits.²⁶

The questions of an implied authority, if there be any, to hire help in a sudden emergency,²⁷ and the liability of a master for the negligence of a third person assisting his servant,²⁸ are discussed in other places.

§ 989. Other incidental contracts.—A general agent charged with the exclusive management of a real estate loan business, which involved the examination of titles and the foreclosure of mortgages, has implied authority to direct the employment of a lawyer whenever the interests of his principal demand such professional assistance.²⁹ So the general manager of a mining company has implied authority to buy and sell personal property for use about the premises,³⁰ but such two seasons; Jenkins S. S. Co. v. Preston, 108 C. C. A. 473, 186 Fed. 609.

But, of course, not for a period which the employee knows is beyond the manager's actual authority. Francis v. Spokane Athletic Club, 54 Wash. 188.

²⁵ Roche v. Pennington, supra.

²⁶ Deffenbaugh v. Jackson Paper Mfg. Co., 120 Mich. 242.

²⁷ See ante, § 339.

²⁸ See post, Book IV, Chap. V.

²⁹ Davis v. Matthews, 8 S. D. 300. In Keenan v. Lauritzen Malt Co., 57 Wash. 367, a general territorial agent of a company engaged in manufacturing and selling an alleged nonintoxicating liquor was arrested and prosecuted for selling upon the ground that the liquor was really intoxicating and within a prohibitory statute: the goods in his possession were also seized. He employed an attorney to defend him and the goods on his principal's account, and advised the principal of what he had done. The principal made no objection. Held that the principal was liable to the attorney.

Manager of business of advertising in street cars has implied authority to agree that rival goods shall not be advertised in the cars if a particular contract for space is made. Stitt v. Ward, 142 App. Div. 626.

³⁰ Scudder v. Anderson, 54 Mich. 122.

The general manager of a mining company may employ necessary labor, purchase necessary tools and supplies, mine and sell the ore, and bind the company for bills necessarily contracted in the prosecution of the work (Lee S. M. Co. v. Smelting Co., 16 Colo. 118; Oro, etc., Co. v. Kaiser, 4 Colo. App. 219); but he may not bind the company by the purchase of an expensive mill. Victoria, etc., Co. v. Fraser, 2 Colo. App. 14.

See also, Gates Iron Works Co. v. Denver Eng. Works Co., 17 Colo. App. 15.

In Hodges v. Bankers' Surety Co., 152 Ill. App. 372, the defendant surety company had furnished a bond for faithful performance by a construction company of its part of a building, for which the plaintiff was general contractor. The construction company abandoned its agreement, whereupon the plaintiff and the Chicago agent of the surety company agreed that the plaintiff himself should complete the work, and be reimbursed for the same by the surety company. The agent, an agent has no implied authority to bind his principal for debts of a third person;³¹ nor has an agent, authorized to operate a shingle mill, and to contract for shingle bolts, negotiate for a right of way, and purchase timber, any implied authority to bind his principal by a contract for the building of a logging road;³² nor has an agent authorized to carry on his principal's farm any implied authority to permit a creditor to cut, remove and sell on execution, grass growing on the farm.³³ A conductor of a railroad train, as general manager thereof, has implied authority to hire a temporary brakeman if necessary in place of one taken suddenly ill upon the way;³⁴ but he would, on the other hand, have no general authority to hire, or to bind his principal to hire, laborers for construction work upon a remote part of the road.³⁵

§ 990. Authority to waive liens, rights, conditions, notices, etc.—It is not within the ordinary interpretation of authority to manage that the agent shall have any general authority to waive, surrender or upon whose directions this was done, was the general representative of the defendant company, an Ohio corporation; he described himself in business as "Manager for Illinois," and this was done with the knowledge of defendant. Held, that the agent had at least apparent authority to authorize a completion of the contract, and to charge his principal with expenditures incurred therein.

In Simpson v. Harris, — Ala. —, 56 So. 968, the manager of a lumbering firm was held to have authority to make a contract for the cutting and sawing of the principals' timber into lumber. In General Cartage & Storage Co. v. Cox, 74 Ohio St. 284, 113 Am. St. R. 959; the acting general manager of a storage company was held to have implied authority to agree that goods left in storage would be insured.

A mere "foreman" in charge of a piece of ordinary manual work has no implied power to make contracts for supplies or services respecting it. Langston v. Postal Tel. Co., 6 Ga. App. 833.

³¹ Ruppe v. Edwards, 52 Mich. 411; New York Iron Mine v. Negaunee Bank, 39 Mich. 644; Clayton v. Mar- tin, 31 Ark. 217; Meyer v. Baldwin, supra.

A managing agent in buying goods has no authority to agree that the seller shall charge and the manager allow an excessive price in order that the excess may be applied upon a debt owing by the principal's predecessor in the business. Pacific Lumber Co. v. Moffat, 67 C. C. A. 442, 134 Fed. 836.

³² Gregory v. Loose, 19 Wash. 599.

³³ Benjamin v. Benjamin, 15 Conn. 347, 39 Am. Dec. 384.

³⁴ Georgia Pac. R. Co. v. Probst, 83 Ala. 518, 85 Ala. 203.

See also, Newport News, etc., Ry. Co. v. Carroll, 17 Ky. Law Rep. 374, 31 S. W. 132.

But not when there was no emergency or unusual circumstance. St. Louis, etc., Ry. Co. v. Jones, 96 Ark. 558, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 418.

³⁵ Olson v. Great Northern Ry. Co., 81 Minn. 402. The action here was not upon the contract of employment, but for damages caused by inducing plaintiff to go to the place in question, and then failing either to give him work, provide for his accommodation or bring him back.

qualify his principal's rights, privileges, immunities or protective conditions. Management ordinarily involves control, preservation, due ordering, and not waiver, surrender or destruction. This is particularly true, of course, of rights and privileges which arise outside the domain of the agent's activities, but it is also ordinarily true of those which lie within. An agent authorized through management to acquire benefits for his principal, can have thereby no corresponding authority to give them up when once acquired.

There may, however, be cases in which a general authority of management may fairly include some power of waiver or surrender, as a natural incident of the business or affair to be managed—cases in which adjustment, compromise, or waiver of some things for the purpose of properly accomplishing the main end may easily be justified.

Thus the general manager of a lumber yard, authorized to sell lumber with or without security, for cash or on long or short credit, and having general management and conduct of the business, has been held to have implied authority to waive a mechanics lien, provided for by statute, for lumber sold by him, especially where he did it in order to secure payment by other means.³⁶

But, on the contrary, where such a lien has attached it has been said that "the ordinary duties of even a business manager would not authorize him to execute a release under seal, in the name of his employer, of a valid lien on real estate," the debt not having been paid, and no consideration having been given for the release.³⁷

§ 991. — There are many cases in which a general manager, a general superintendent or a general agent may properly make adjustments of questions arising in the business, may meet emergencies, and provide for unexpected exigencies; and these may involve waivers of time, or alteration of terms, or waivers of conditions, or surrender of technical rights, as mere natural and ordinary incidents.³⁸ Where the whole question of determining what contracts shall be made, and how; and what performance shall be provided or demanded, is con-

³⁶ Badger Lumber Co. v. Ballentine, 54 Mo. App. 172, citing White Lake Lumber Co. v. Stone, 19 Neb. 402. To same effect: Hughes v. Lansing, 34 Or. 118, 75 Am. St. R. 574.

³⁷ Deacon v. Greenfield, 141 Pa. 467. See also, Carr v. Greenfield, 134 Pa. 503.

³⁸ Thus, it has been held that the president of a manufacturing corporation, who has authority to make contracts, has implied authority to terminate or release contracts made. Indianapolis Rolling Mill v. St. Louis, etc., Ry., 120 U. S. 256, 30 L. Ed. 639. In Van Santvoord v. Smith, 79 Minn. 316, a "general contracting and travelling agent" was held to have implied authority to change by parol a term of the company's contract with a sales agent although the contract itself was in writing, fided to the agent, the same authority which might have shaped the transaction differently in the first instance seems ordinarily sufficient to mould its form accordingly afterwards.

So, in many cases in which notice is required to be given, and it is provided by the contract that it shall be given in some particular manner, as by writing, by registered mail, and the like, it has been held that an agent, authorized to receive the notice and actually receiving it, may waive compliance with the requirement that it shall be given in that particular manner.³⁹

§ 992. Contracts by architects, superintendents, etc.—An architect, engineer, or other superintendent employed to supervise the construction of a building, railroad, or other similar structure, is usually an agent with limited authority. His authority, of course, may be given a wider range,⁴⁰ but, in the absence of such an enlargement, his authority and duty are confined to seeing that the work is done in and expressly provided that modifications be submitted to the company for acceptance in writing.

In Burley v. Hitt, 54 Mo. App. 272, it was held that a general manager with power to conduct the business, and make contracts has authority to release, waive or vary contracts made. In Tice v. Russel, 43 Minn. 66, a son in general charge of his father's lumber business, and in charge of collections, had authority to extend the time within which a mortgagor could redeem after foreclosure sale.

See also Newberry v. Chicago Lumbering Co., 154 Mich. 84; Schultheis v. Caughey, 146 N. Y. App. Div. 102; Galveston, etc., Ry. v. House, 4 Tex. Civ. App. 263; Randall v. Fay Co., 158 Mich. 630; Herpolsheimer v. Harvester Co., 83 Neb. 53.

Many other cases of waiver by general sales agents will be found in the sections dealing with the authority of agents to sell personal property.

³⁹ See Western Union Tel. Co. v. Prevatt, 149 Ala. 617; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Cunningham, 99 Ala. 314; Syndicate Ins. Co. v. Catchings, 104 Ala. 176; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Blanchard, 68 Ga. 299, 45 Am. Rep. 480; Hill v. Western Union

Tel. Co., 85 Ga. 425, 21 Am. St. Rep. 166.

⁴⁰ See the excellent case of Michaia v. MacGregor, 61 Minn. 198. Here an agent, acting under a very general power of attorney in the construction of a building, was held to have authority, partly as a matter of emergency to make an additional contract with the contractors for the removal of rocks which were sunk below the surface and were unknown to either party at the time the original contract was made.

See also, Henderson Bridge Co. v. McGrath, 134 U. S. 260, 33 L. Ed. 934.

A superintendent put in charge of tunnel construction, and having to arrange for the disposition of the excavated material, held, to have implied authority to arrange with a broker to dispose of the earth and to give him all over a certain sum for his services. Thompson v. Mills, 45 Tex. Civ. App. 642.

A mere inspector or overseer employed by the architect cannot bind the owner by accepting performance of the contract. Louisville Foundry Co. v. Patterson (Ky.), 93 S. W. 22.

See also, Merrill v. Worthington, 155 Ala. 281. Cf. Rumble v. Cummings, 52 Or. 203.

accordance with the plans and specifications agreed upon. He has, therefore, no implied authority to alter the terms of the contract,⁴¹ or to waive compliance with its provisions. He has no implied authority to order extra work or materials,⁴² extend the time of performance,⁴³ make any change in the plans and specifications,⁴⁴ or accept different or inferior materials and bind his principal to pay for them.⁴⁵ Where the contract provides that payment shall be made upon his certificate of compliance, this goes no further than to authorize him to pass upon the manner of performance; it gives him no general authority to waive compliance with any of the substantial conditions of the contract, such, for example, as that the payments shall not be due until the work has been done to the architect's satisfaction.⁴⁶

§ 993. Contracts by station and ticket agents.—A railway station agent having general charge of the company's business at that station and authorized to receive and forward freight, has implied authority to bind the company by stating what is the rate of transportation of goods;⁴⁷ or to contract to furnish a certain number of cattle cars at his station on a specified day, the shipper being ignorant of any limitation upon his powers.⁴⁸ Such an agent has also been held to have implied authority, no rule or regulation to the contrary being shown.

⁴¹ Sweeney v. Indemnity Co., 34 Wash. 126; Watts v. Metcalf, 23 Ky. Law Rep. 2189; Forman v. Liddesdale, [1900] App. Cas. 190. But in Driver v. Galland, 59 Wash. 201, an agent having general authority to build a house, was held to have authority, after construction had begun, to alter the contract he had made, so far as the method of payment was concerned.

⁴² Starkweather v. Goodman, 48 Conn. 101, 40 Am. Rep. 152; Woodruff v. Railroad Co., 108 N. Y. 39; McIntosh v. Hastings, 156 Mass. 344; Gray v. La Societe Francaise, etc., 131 Cal. 566; Dodge v. McDonnell, 14 Wis. 553; Day v. Pickens County, 53 S. Car. 46; Carson v. Mitchell, 41 Ill. App. 241; Clark v. Bird, 46 Ill. App. 583; Miller v. Sullivan, 14 Tex. Civ. App. 112.

⁴³ Kelly v. Fejervary (Iowa), 78 N. W. 828.

⁴⁴ Adlard v. Muldoon, 45 Ill. 193; Mallard v. Moody, 105 Ga. 400.

⁴⁵ Glacius v. Black, 50 N. Y. 145, 10 Am. Rep. 449; Fitzgerald v. Moran, 141 N. Y. 419.

⁴⁶ Leverone v. Arancio, 179 Mass. 439. "An architect is not the general agent of the owner," said the court. See also, Lewis v. Slack, 27 Mo. App. 119.

His certificate, however, within the terms of the contract, binds the owner. Young v. Stein, 152 Mich. 310, 125 Am. St. R. 412, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 231.

⁴⁷ Ohio, etc., Ry. Co. v. Savage, 38 Ill. App. 148, so as to permit a recovery of excess after goods had been loaded in reliance upon the rate named.

⁴⁸ Harrison v. Missouri Pacific Ry. Co., 74 Mo. 364, 41 Am. Rep. 318; Nichols v. Railroad Co., 24 Utah, 83, 91 Am. St. R. 778; Wood v. Railway Co., 63 Iowa, 491, 56 Am. Rep. 861; Pittsburg, etc., R. Co. v. Racer, 10 Ind. App. 503; Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Hume, 87 Tex. 211; Easton v. Dud-

to bind the company by accepting cattle brought to the station for shipment (but which can not be shipped until the shipper procures a license), and undertaking to hold them as a depositary during the brief time required for obtaining the license.⁴⁹

So a railway ticket agent, authorized to sell tickets for berths in the cars of a sleeping car company, has been held to have implied authority to bind the latter company by undertaking, in response to a telegram, to reserve accommodations for a prospective passenger, in the ordinary way.⁵⁰

But neither the station agent,⁵¹ nor the baggage master,⁵² would have authority to incur obligations for transportation beyond the company's own lines, in the absence of some rule or custom so to do.⁵³ Nor has such an agent any authority to suspend the rules or waive the rights of the company.⁵⁴

§ 994. Contracts for medical aid or nursing.—Although as has been seen in an earlier chapter,⁵⁵ there is difference of opinion, the weight of authority concedes to the general manager or general superintendent of a railroad company an implied authority [difficult to sustain in legal theory], to secure on account of the company, medical care and treatment for employees, and perhaps for passengers, injured in the operation of the road.⁵⁶ Similar authority, however, is generally denied to subordinate employees such as station agents, yard

ley, 78 Tex. 236; Kansas Pac. Ry. Co. v. Bayles, 19 Colo. 348.

But not to furnish cars at some other station. Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Hodge, 10 Tex. Civ. App. 543.

⁴⁹ Flint v. Railroad Co., 73 N. H. 141.

He may also bind the company by agreeing to arrange for a prompt unloading of the goods at destination. Lake Erie, etc., R. Co. v. Rosenberg, 31 Ill. App. 47.

⁵⁰ Pullman Co. v. Nelson, 22 Tex. Civ. App. 223; Pullman Co. v. Willet, 27 Ohio Cir. Ct. 649, aff'd 72 Ohio St. 690.

⁵¹ Minter v. Railroad Co., 56 Mo. App. 282.

⁵² Marmorstein v. Railroad Co., 13 N. Y. Misc. 32.

⁵³ Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Cole, 8 Tex. Civ. App. 635.

⁵⁴ Harris v. Railroad Co., 91 Ga. 317.

⁵⁵ See ante, § 341.

⁵⁶ See the exhaustive discussion of the question by Prof. H. B. Hutchins, 2 Michigan Law Review 1; see also, Marquette, etc., R. Co. v. Taft, 28 Mich. 289; Southern Ry. Co. v. Brister, 79 Miss. 761; Cairo, etc., R. Co. v. Mahoney, 82 Ill. 73, 25 Am. Rep. 299; Indianapolis, etc., R. Co. v. Morris, 67 Ill. 295; Pacific R. Co. v. Thomas, 19 Kan. 256; Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Reeher, 24 Kan. 228; Union Pac. R. Co. v. Winterbotham, 52 Kan. 433; Terre Haute R. Co. v. Stockwell, 118 Ind. 98; Cincinnati, etc., R. Co. v. Davis, 126 Ind. 99, 9 L. R. A. 503. Cf. Hanscom v. St. R. Co., 53 Minn. 119, 20 L. R. A. 695.

As to the authority of the president in such cases see, Canney v. Railroad Co., 63 Cal. 501; Trenor v. Railroad Co., 50 Cal. 222.

No authority to employ aid for an injured passenger when the company was not at fault. U. P. Ry. Co. v. Beatty, 35 Kan. 265, 67 Am. Rep. 160.

masters, conductors and locomotive engineers in the absence of evidence of a subsequent ratification of their acts by some competent officer of the company,⁵⁷ unless it be in a case of sudden emergency when he is the highest representative upon the ground and immediate action is necessary.⁵⁸ His authority in these cases, however, is strictly construed,⁵⁹ and ends with the emergency.⁶⁰

A surgeon employed by a railroad company to attend upon persons injured by an accident, has no implied authority to bind the company by a promise to pay for meals and services furnished to those who were in attendance upon a party injured.⁶¹

In the case of mining, manufacturing and other similar enterprises, the authority of the general manager has usually been held not to be per se sufficient to warrant him in binding his principal to pay for medical services, and the like, furnished to injured employees.⁶² A

⁵⁷ St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Olive, 40 Ill. App. 82; Peninsular R. Co. v. Gary, 22 Fla. 356, 1 Am. St. Rep. 194 (disapproving Terre Haute, etc., R. Co. v. McMurray, post); Atlantic, etc., R. Co. v. Reisner, 18 Kan. 458; Tucker v. St. L., etc., Ry. Co., 54 Mo. 177; Sevier v. R. Co., 92 Ala. 258; St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Hoover, 53 Ark. 377; Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. McVay, 98 Ind. 391, 49 Am. Rep. 770; Patterson v. Consol. Trac. Co., 9 Pa. Dist. 362; Adams v. Southern Ry. Co., 125 N. Car. 565.

⁵⁸ In a few states, the authority of the subordinate employees is recognized in cases of emergency. See Terre Haute, etc., R. Co. v. McMurray, 98 Ind. 358, 49 Am. Rep. 752; Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Smith, 121 Ind. 353, 6 L. R. A. 320; Arkansas, etc., R. Co. v. Loughridge, 65 Ark. 300; Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Davis, 94 Ill. App. 54; Toledo, etc., R. Co. v. Mylott, 6 Ind. App. 438; Evansville, etc., R. Co. v. Freeland, 4 Ind. App. 207 (an emergency will not justify employment for any one but a passenger or employee; not as to a trespasser); Adams v. Southern Ry. Co., supra; Wills v. International, etc., R. Co., 41 Tex. Civ. App. 58.

⁵⁹ See Arkansas, etc., R. Co. v. Loughridge, supra.

⁶⁰ Evansville, etc., R. Co. v. Free- land, 4 Ind. App. 207; Toledo, etc., R. Co. v. Mylott, 6 Ind. App. 438; Bedford Belt R. Co. v. McDonald, 12 Ind. App. 620, s. c. 17 Ind. App. 492, 60 Am. St. R. 172.

⁶¹ Bushnell v. Chicago, etc., Ry. Co., 69 Iowa, 620.

An agent authorized to secure a doctor cannot authorize the doctor to employ other physicians. Bond v. Hurd, 31 Mont. 314, 3 Am. & E. Ann. Cas. 566. See also Mohlman v. American Grocery Co., 68 N. J. Eq. 602. A local doctor employed by a railroad company in a small town having in fact no authority to employ surgical aid did not bind the company in calling in another doctor when he had said to the other doctor that he did not have authority to make a contract but that he believed the company would pay a reasonable fee. Galveston, etc., R. R. v. Allen, 42 Tex. Civ. App. 576.

⁶² Holmes v. McAllister, 123 Mich. 493, 48 L. R. A. 396 (laundry); (see also Hodges v. Electric Co., 109 Mich. 547); Meisenback v. Cooperage Co., 45 Mo. App. 232; Swazey v. Union Mfg. Co., 42 Conn. 556; New Pittsburgh Coal & Coke Co. v. Shaley, 25 Ind. App. 282; Chaplin v. Freeland, 7 Ind. App. 676; Spelman v. Mining Co., 26 Mont. 76, 55 L. R. A. 640, 91 Am. St. R. 402; Bond v. Hurd, 31

fortiori would the power of the inferior servant be insufficient even in emergencies; but a few cases apply the same rule as in the case of railway companies.⁶³

§ 995. Implied authority to sell product of business.—The general manager of a business, whose product is designed or kept for sale, would ordinarily have implied authority to sell such product, in the ordinary way,⁶⁴ and to fix the terms and conditions of the sale within the limits permitted to any selling agent.⁶⁵ Thus an agent authorized to manage his principal's plantation may sell the product of it and collect the money therefor;⁶⁶ but he has no implied authority to agree to exchange such product for that of another plantation.⁶⁷ An agent, having general authority to manage the business of a lumber company, may not only employ the necessary workmen, but he may, if it become necessary, make a sale of lumber to pay them.⁶⁸

§ 996. Authority to collect or receive payment.—In like manner, the authority of a managing agent to collect or receive payment must depend upon the nature of the business. If it be one wherein debts are regularly being contracted and paid, the authority to receive payment of such debts would be unquestioned, as a part of the ordinary and expected course of business.⁶⁹ The collection of payment for goods sold, the getting in of the outstanding accounts, the looking

Mont. 314, 3 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 566 and note; Godshaw v. Struck, 109 Ky. 285, 51 L. R. A. 668; Malone v. Robinson (Miss.), 12 So. 709 (plantation). [Contra: Mt. Wilson Min. Co. v. Burbridge, 11 Colo. App. 487.]

A fortiori, where the injuries were not received while servant was in line of duty. Chase v. Swift & Co., 60 Neb. 696, 83 Am. St. R. 552; Dale v. Donaldson Lumber Co., 48 Ark. 188, 3 Am. St. R. 224.

As to settlement in consideration of such payment, see American Quarries Co. v. Lay, 37 Ind. App. 386.

The power of the president would be greater. Fraser v. San Francisco Bridge Co., 103 Cal. 79; Weinsberg v. St. Louis Cordage Co., 135 Mo. App. 553.

Husband not liable for services of a physician called by the wife during husband's absence to attend a farm servant shot in a personal altercation by their son. Baker v. Witten, 1 Okla. 160.

⁶³ See Texas Bldg. Co. v. Albert, 57 Tex. Civ. App. 638 (physician employed to attend an injured employee by the foreman of a "crew" of men employed by a building and construction company). See also note to The Kenilworth, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 49, 66.

⁶⁴ See Silver Mining Co. v. Omaha Smelting Co., 16 Colo. 118.

Cf. Asheville Supply Co. v. Machin, 150 N. Car. 738.

⁶⁵ See ante, § 854.

⁶⁶ Sentell v. Kennedy, 29 La. Ann. 679.

See Michell v. Samford (Mo. App.), 130 S. W. 99, where the general manager of a plantation was held to have implied authority to arrange that sub-tenants might purchase supplies to be paid for when the crop was sold.

⁶⁷ Ball v. Bender, 22 La. Ann. 493.

⁶⁸ Taylor v. Labeaume, 17 Mo. 338.

⁶⁹ See Long v. Jennings, 137 Ala. 190.

after delinquent debtors, and the like, would often constitute one of the chief duties of the manager. The reasonable adjustment of disputed claims and counterclaims would fall within the same rules.⁷⁰

His authority, of course, would not extend to other kinds of business, or to other departments than that entrusted to his care.

§ 997. Authority to revive debt barred by limitation.—The authority of a managing agent to revive debts barred by the statute of limitations, depends largely upon his authority to adjust and settle claims against his principal.⁷¹ He has, as has been seen, authority in many cases to pledge the credit of the principal for supplies and services furnished to the principal; but, as is pointed out by the court in Pennsylvania,⁷² "When the debt becomes due an entirely different question is presented; the renewal of it is not a matter of the operation of the business committed to the care of the agent, nor is it an exercise of the power of the agent to create new debts; a new promise to pay is an extension of the liability of the principal beyond the duration affixed to it by law. 'A debt may be taken out of the statute by the act of an agent done in the regular course of his business if he has specific authority for that purpose, or if such authority be necessarily implied from the nature of his duties, but this results not from the power to create new debts but from a distinct and independent power to settle and adjust old ones. These powers are not in their nature the same nor very much alike. The one is not a logical or legal consequence of the other.'"⁷³ aging agent were held to prevent the operation of the statute.

§ 998. Authority to make negotiable instruments.—As has been pointed out in a preceding section,⁷⁴ the authority to bind the principal as a party to negotiable paper is one which the law does not readily imply. Such a power may, however, be conferred expressly, it may ⁷⁰ In Grubbs v. Nixon, 93 Ark. 79, 137 Am. St. R. 78, in an action for goods sold, the defendant set up a settlement made with plaintiff's agent, by which a larger claim against the plaintiff, previously assigned to the defendant, was set off. The agent was in general charge of the plaintiff's retail grocery business. It was held that a manager in such a case would have authority to adjust claims, even where one owing was barred by the statute of limitations.

⁷¹ See Lilley v. Foad, [1899] 2 Ch. 107, where payments made by a man-

In Iowa Loan & Trust Co. v. McMurray, 129 Iowa, 65, an agent having general control of a borrower's affairs was held to have implied authority to agree to extensions of time which would prevent the bar of the statute.

⁷² Beal v. Adams Ex. Co., 13 Pa. Super. Ct. 143. But see Grubbs v. Nixon, cited in the preceding section.

⁷³ Citing, Watts v. Devor, 1 Grant (Pa.), 267.

⁷⁴ See ante, § 973.

result from an established course of dealing, or may arise by necessary implication. As many businesses may be, and constantly are, conducted without the exercise of this extraordinary power, the mere fact that one is authorized to manage a business does not of itself alone imply that he may bind his principal by making, accepting, or indorsing negotiable paper.⁷⁵ Where, however, the business is of a sort ordinarily conducted largely upon credit, and to which the making of negotiable paper may fairly be regarded as incident, an agent given a general authority of management may be found to have the authority to execute such paper. Thus, in one case,⁷⁶ it was said, "a general manager having the exclusive management and conduct of a manufacturing and commercial business, and admittedly having the power to purchase stock, contract debts, discount notes, may, when there is occasion for so doing, borrow money to pay debts or purchase goods, and give his principal's negotiable note therefor." So where the power under which the managing agent acts, for example, certain articles of partnership, clearly contemplates and provides that notes will be executed when necessary, the authority may be found to exist.⁷⁷ And so it has been held to be, where the authority was very general in its terms, authorizing the agent "to do and perform all the necessary acts in the execution and promotion" of the business "in as full

⁷⁵ New York Iron Mine v. Negaunee Bank, 39 Mich. 644; *Perkins v.
Boothby*, 71 Me. 91; Rossiter v. Rossiter, 8 Wend. (N. Y.) 494, 24 Am.
Dec. 62; Connell v. McLaughlin, 28
Ore. 230; Chicago Elec. Co. v. Hutchinson, 25 Ill. App. 476; *Jackson
Paper Mfg. Co. v. Commercial Nat.
Bank*, 199 Ill. 151, 93 Am. St. R. 113,
59 L. R. A. 657; Fairly v. Nash, 70
Miss. 193; Stock Exch. Bank v. Williamson, 6 Okla. 348; Golinsky v. Allison, 114 Cal. 458; Hazeltine v. Miller, 44 Me. 177; *Dobbins v. Etowah
Co.*, 75 Ga. 238; Paige v. Stone, 10
Met. 160, 43 Am. Dec. 420; *Whiting
v. Stage Co.*, 20 Iowa, 554; *Davidson
v. Stanley*, 2 M. & G. 721; *Brown v.
Parker*, 7 Allen (Mass.), 337; *Weekes
v. Shapleigh Hdwe. Co.*, 23 Tex. Civ.
App. 577; *Lafourche Transp. Co. v.
Pugh*, 52 La. Ann. 1517; *Helena Nat.
Bank v. Rocky Mt. Tel. Co.*, 20 Mont.
379, 63 Am. St. R. 628.

Thus the general managing agent of a mining company may not bind it by making promissory notes in its name (New York Iron Mine v. Ne-gaunee Bank, supra; *McCullough v.

Moss*, 5 Denio (N. Y.), 567); nor may he bind it by acceptance of a bill of exchange even to avoid the suspension of work of great importance. Sewanee Mining Co. v. Mc-Call, 3 Head (Tenn.), 619.

See also, In re Cunningham, 36 Ch.
Div. 532; *Johnston County Sav. Bank
v. Scroggin Drug Co.*, 152 N. C. 142,
136 Am. St. R. 821.

Manager of an insurance company has no implied authority to "kite" checks. Farmers, etc., Bank v. Germania Ins. Co., 150 N. C. 770.

⁷⁶ *Glidden Varnish Co. v. Interstate
Bank*, 69 Fed. 912, 16 C. C. A. 534 (Sanborn, J., dissenting on this point); Flewellen v. Mittenenthal (Tex. Civ. App.), 38 S. W. 234.

⁷⁷ See Lerch v. Bard, 153 Pa. 573.
See also, Presnall v. McLeary (Tex.
Civ. App.), 50 S. W. 1066.

and ample a manner" as the principal might if he were personally present.⁷⁸

§ 999. — The method of conducting the business, with the principal's knowledge and acquiescence, may also furnish sufficient evidence of the existence of the authority. Thus where the agent was given absolute control of a lumber business, "bought material, made all payments and collections, deposited the money received and checked against it, and used [the principal's] credit in the business as he saw fit," and had made other notes, of which the principal had knowledge and some of which he secured, there was held to be sufficient evidence to warrant the jury in finding that the agent had authority to give notes for lumber purchased for the business.⁷⁹ And even though the evidence may not be sufficient to show a general authority, the principal may be estopped from denying the authority as to a particular person who, on the faith of an open and long continued exercise of the authority, has dealt with the agent in reliance upon its real existence.⁸⁰

§ 1000. — Where the authority in a managing agent to issue bills or notes is shown, but no specific limitation upon it appears, a third person dealing with the agent, in good faith, is not bound by secret limitations, or by local or particular customs, of which he has no knowledge and of which he is not charged with notice.⁸¹ Where the authority of the agent is based upon apparent necessity, the fact that the necessity arose from a misuse by the agent of the principal's funds, of which fact the other party is ignorant, will be immaterial.⁸²

§ 1001. When may borrow money.—The question of the agent's implied authority to borrow money is closely associated with that of the execution of negotiable paper, as it is through the execution of such instruments that the power to borrow is ordinarily exercised. In this case, as in that, the authority is one reluctantly to be implied. As has been said in a recent case,⁸³ "Authority to borrow money is

⁷⁸ Wimberly v. Windham, 104 Ala. 409, 53 Am. St. R. 70. See also, Whitten v. Bank of Fincastle, 100 Va. 546.

⁷⁹ Witcher v. McPhee, 16 Colo. App. 298. See also, Shipman v. Byles, 65 Mich. 690; Buhl v. Smith, 69 Mich. 552.

⁸⁰ Collins v. Cooper, 65 Tex. 460; Friedlander v. Cornell, 45 Tex. 585.

⁸¹ Great Western Elevator Co. v. White, 56 C. C. A. 388, 118 Fed. 406.

⁸² Atlantic Mills v. Indian Orchard Mills, 147 Mass. 268, 9 Am. St. R. 698.

⁸³ Exchange Bank v. Thrower, 118 Ga. 433.

In Jacobs v. Morris, [1901] 1 Ch. 261 (aff'd, [1902] 1 Ch. 816), it is said, "there is a strong inherent improbability that a principal intends to give his attorney power to borrow money if he does not expressly state it." See also Harper v. God- among the most dangerous powers which a principal can confer upon an agent. Whoever lends to one, claiming the right to make or indorse negotiable paper in the name of another, does so in the face of all the danger signals of business. He need not lend or discount until assured beyond doubt that the principal has, in fact, appointed an agent who, by the stroke of a pen, may wipe out his present fortune and bind his future earnings. The very nature of the act is a warning; and, if the lender parts with his money, he does so at his own peril. If the power was not in fact conferred, he must bear the loss occasioned by his own folly. A power so perilous is not to be implied from acts which, in other matters less hazardous, might create an agency. It must be conferred in express terms, or be necessarily and inevitably inferable from the very nature of the agency actually created. So strict is the rule that it will not be presumed even from an appointment of one as general agent, unless the character of the business, or the duties of the agent, are of such a nature that he was bound to borrow in order to carry out his instructions and the duties of the office.”)

And so in a recent case⁸⁴ in the court of appeals of New York, it is said, “If the transaction of business absolutely required the exercise of the power to borrow money in order to carry it on, then that power was impliedly conferred as an incident to the employment; but it does not afford a sufficient ground for the inference of such a power, to say the act proposed was convenient or advantageous or more effectual in the transaction of the business provided for, but it must be sell, L. R. 5 Q. B. Cas. 422; Attwood v. Munnings, 7 B. & C. 278; Hawtayne v. Bourne, 7 M. & W. 595.

⁸⁴Bickford v. Menier, 107 N. Y. 490. Approved in Consolidated Nat. Bank v. Pacific Coast Steamship Co., 95 Cal. 1, 29 Am. St. R. 85. See also, Bryant v. Banque du Peuple, [1893] App. Cas. 170; Heath v. Paul, 81 Wis. 532; Schramm v. Liebenberg, 42 Colo. 516.

A general authority to buy goods does not authorize borrowing money and pledging the principal's property as collateral. Chicago, etc., Ry. Co. v. Chickasha Nat. Bank, 98 C. C. A. 535, 174 Fed. 923.

Authority to wind up a business does not authorize the agent to borrow money. Smith v. McGregor, 96 N. C. 101.

An agent authorized to buy horses may borrow money to buy feed for and take care of them after purchase and before shipment to his principal since it is necessary in order to carry on the business. Rider v. Kirk, 82 Mo. App. 120.

In Merchants' National Bank v. Nichols, 223 Ill. 41, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 752, a general sales agent of a Michigan corporation, who had charge of its business over a considerable portion of Illinois, who maintained a store room and office, a sales force and who made the collections for sales, and who was also authorized to open a banking account, overdrew the account. The principal was held not liable because the actual authority of its agent included no implied authority to borrow.

practically indispensable to the execution of the duties really delegated in order to justify its inference from the original employment."

§ 1002. — But even though, within these rules, the authority to borrow is not to be implied from the authority expressly given, it may yet arise as an actual incident to an established course of dealing; and the principal may also by his conduct estop himself from denying its existence as to persons really relying upon misleading appearances.⁸⁵

Where the authority to borrow is based upon necessity, the fact that the necessity arose from the wrongful act of the agent himself, would not necessarily defeat a recovery, where the other party was ignorant of it.⁸⁶

And, as will be seen in a later section,⁸⁷ even though an agent borrows money without authority, or exceeds the limit of his authority, while the principal will not be liable on the contract unless he ratifies it, still if the money be actually applied by the agent for the principal's benefit, as where he uses it to pay the principal's lawful debts, the principal may often be charged in equity or quasi contract for the benefit received.

§ 1003. May not make accommodation paper.—If the authority of the agent to bind his principal by negotiable instruments, executed in the principal's business and on his account, is thus so doubtful, a fortiori has he no authority to bind his principal by making, accepting or indorsing negotiable paper for the benefit of himself or third persons.⁸⁸ Nor can he pledge his principal's credit for the debt of third persons.⁸⁹

§ 1004. May not pledge or mortgage the property of his principal. An agent authorized to manage and carry on his principal's business has thereby no implied authority to pledge or mortgage the property in his possession. As is tersely said by a learned judge: "It is not carrying on the business of the company to pledge or mortgage the machinery used by the company and thereby suspend its operations; or place them at the will and pleasure of a mortgagee."⁹⁰

⁸⁵ Montaignac v. Shitta, 15 App. Cas. 357; Collins v. Cooper, 65 Tex. 460; McDermott v. Jackson, 97 Wis. 64.

A wife left at home to manage her husband's affairs and look after his family during his absence, may borrow small sums on his credit for immediate family needs. Meador v. Page, 39 Vt. 306.

⁸⁶ Compare Atlantic Mills v. Indian Orchard Mills, 147 Mass. 268, 9 Am. St. R. 698.

⁸⁷ See post (Agent authorized to borrow money).

⁸⁸ Gulick v. Grover, 33 N. J. L. 463, 97 Am. Dec. 728; Bank v. Johnson, 3 Rich. (S. C.) 42; Boord v. Strauss, 39 Fla. 381.

⁸⁹ Ruppe v. Edwards, 52 Mich. 411; Bullard v. DeGroff, 59 Neb. 783; Union Pac. Townsite Co. v. Page, 54 Kan. 363.

⁹⁰ Despatch Line v. Bellamy Mfg. Co., 12 N. H. 205, 37 Am. Dec. 203; Edgerly v. Cover, 106 Iowa, 670; Go-

§ 1005. May not sell or lease principal's land.—Neither has such an agent implied authority to sell his principal's land,⁹¹ even though it may have been acquired by him in the execution of the agency.⁹² And where he is authorized to manage an affair or conduct a business which contemplates or requires the continued use or occupancy of certain land, he will ordinarily have no implied authority to defeat that purpose by making a general lease of the land.⁹³ It would be otherwise, of course, with the management of land kept and designed to be leased. In that case he could make any usual or ordinary lease, but not an unusual one.⁹⁴

§ 1006. May not embark in new and different business.—Authority to carry on the principal's business already established, implies no authority in the agent to embark in a new and different business, or to attempt to use his principal's funds or credit in such a business.⁹⁵ His authority is to manage that business, not to establish another one.

§ 1007. May not sell the business or property.—For similar reasons, a general authority to manage a business or property clearly contemplates, in the ordinary case, that the business is to be continued or the property retained, and not disposed of. Such a power, therefore, ordinarily implies no authority to sell the business.⁹⁶

§ 1008. Authority to pay debts.—The authority and duty of a managing agent to pay the debts of his principal must depend largely upon the nature of the business confided to his care, and the extent of his authority over it. He would not ordinarily have implied authority to pay his principal's debts generally, or to pay debts arising beyond the scope of the business with which he is entrusted. Where, however, he is put in charge of a business in which debts are regularly inlinsky v. Allison, 114 Cal. 458; First Nat. Bank v. Kirby, 43 Fla. 376; Henson v. Keet Merc. Co., 48 Mo. App. 214; First Nat. Bank v. Bressler, 38 Ill. App. 499; First Nat. Bank v. Hicks, 24 Tex. Civ. App. 269.

⁹¹ Billings v. Morrow, 7 Cal. 171, 68 Am. Dec. 235; Saunders v. King, 119 Iowa, 291.

⁹² Smith v. Stephenson, 45 Iowa, 645; Watson v. Hopkins, 27 Tex. 637.

⁹³ Ward v. Thrustin, 40 Ohio St. 347.

⁹⁴ Duncan v. Hartman, 143 Pa. 595, 24 Am. St. R. 570, 149 Pa. 114.

⁹⁵ Campbell v. Hastings, 29 Ark. 512.

Manhattan Liquor Co. v. Magnus, 43 Tex. Civ. App. 463 (where manager of a saloon business undertook to buy a rival business and to bind his principals to pay the debts owing by the rival dealer).

⁹⁶ Vescelius v. Martin, 11 Colo. 391; Quay v. Presidio, etc., R. Co., 82 Cal. 1; Johnson Signal Co. v. Union Switch Co., 51 Fed. 85.

An agent authorized to manage a tanning business has no implied authority to sell the hides which have been purchased for use at the tannery. Holbrook v. Oberne, 56 Iowa, 324.

curred and paid, he would ordinarily have both authority and duty to pay, in the ordinary course, the debts so incurred.⁹⁷ His authority would ordinarily be to pay in money, and not in goods;⁹⁸ and it would require unusual circumstances of emergency and inability to obtain instruction, to justify him in practically terminating the business by turning over all the assets in satisfaction of the principal's debts.⁹⁹ Such an authority may, however, be expressly given, or fairly inferable from the situation in which the principal has placed the agent.¹

§ 1009. Authority to make assignment for creditors.—For reasons similar to those which usually forbid the general payment of debts by transferring the property, it would not ordinarily be within the implied authority of a general manager of a business, any more than it would in the case of a single partner, to make an assignment of all the property and business for the benefit of the principal's creditors,² though the terms of the power may be so broad as fairly to include such an authority.³ And there may be such circumstances of exigency and inability to obtain the principal's instructions, as would be deemed to justify it.⁴

§ 1010. Authority to sue.—The authority to manage a business or property, clearly, does not confer upon the agent any general authority to institute and maintain actions at law on account of his principal;⁵ but, on the other hand, there are many cases wherein the au-

⁹⁷ The creditor's general manager would ordinarily have authority to stipulate as to the application of the payments made to him. McCathern v. Bell, 93 Ga. 290.

⁹⁸ Claffin v. Continental Works, 85 Ga. 27.

⁹⁹ Claffin v. Continental Works, supra.

¹ Sails v. Miller, 98 Mo. 478, where the principal in failing circumstances, went away and left the agent in charge, and afterwards telegraphed him to sign a bill of sale to all the creditors concerned.

² Gouldy v. Metcalf, 75 Tex. 455, 16 Am. St. R. 912.

³ See Paul v. Cullum, 132 U. S. 539, 33 L. Ed. 430; Muir v. Westcott, 34 Wash. 463.

⁴ For partnership cases, see Loeb v. Pierpoint, 58 Iowa, 469, 43 Am. Rep. 122; Shattuck v. Chandler, 40 Kan. 516, 10 Am. St. R. 227; Williams v. Frost, 27 Minn. 255; Mayer

v. Bernstein, 69 Miss. 17; Sullivan v. Smith, 15 Neb. 476, 48 Am. R. 354; Claffin v. Evans, 55 Ohio St. 183, 60 Am. St. R. 686; Hill v. Postley, 90 Va. 200; Rumery v. McCulloch, 54 Wis. 565.

⁵ See McHenry v. Painter, 58 Iowa, 365; Howell v. Gordon, 40 Ga. 302.

Prosecution of Offenders. — In Bank of New South Wales v. Owston, 4 App. Cas. 270, it was held not to be within the implied authority of a bank manager to institute prosecutions for supposed offenses occurring in the conduct of the business and thereby subject the bank to action for a malicious prosecution. See also, Abrahams v. Deakin, [1891] 1 Q. B. 516; Hanson v. Waller, [1901] 1 Q. B. 390.

Many cases are collected in a later chapter dealing with the liability of a master for the malicious acts of his agent or servant.

thority to sue would undoubtedly be regarded as incidental to the authority of a managing agent. Thus in one case,⁶ of an agent left to manage a business while his principal was abroad, it was said, "The principal being out of the country, the general authority with which the agent was invested necessarily included authority to bring the suit. He had the sole management of the business, and authority to bring necessary suits to collect, and for insurance, in case of loss by fire, is indispensably incident to his general power, and essential to an efficient discharge of his duties." So it was held that a clerk in a country store, in his principal's absence, may receive payment of his principal's demands and in an emergency institute suits for their security and that therefore he may direct the levying of an attachment upon the goods of his principal's debtor and join with other creditors in employing an attorney to defeat a prior attachment upon them, since the latter powers are necessary to render the former effective.⁷ And an agent in charge of real estate, under a power of attorney giving him general responsibility and control, has been held to be authorized to sue out a writ of injunction to prevent a threatened trespass, and to execute in his principal's name the necessary bond.⁸

§ 1011. To employ attorney.—It would also be true that the managing agent would have, in many cases, either by virtue of his position or by force of circumstances, the authority to employ attorneys on the principal's account. Thus the general manager of a railroad would seem to have the power by virtue of his position;⁹ while an agent entrusted with the loaning of his principal's money, and charged with the duty of seeing that titles were good and securities in due form, would seem to have power to engage the necessary legal assistance as the result of the circumstances in which he was placed.¹⁰

He would not, however, ordinarily have authority to employ, on the principal's account, an attorney to defend himself against charges of unlawful conduct, though the act were done in the prosecution of the principal's business.¹¹ Cases might, nevertheless, be easily imagined wherein the prosecution of the agent was really a prosecution of the principal, and in which, in analogy to the principal's duty to indemnify, the employment of attorneys on the principal's account would be deemed authorized.

⁶ German Fire Ins. Co. v. Grunert, 112 Ill. 68.

⁷ Davis v. Waterman, 10 Vt. 526, 33 Am. Dec. 216.

⁸ State v. Banks, 48 Md. 513.

⁹ St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Grove, 39 Kan. 731.

¹⁰ Mason v. Taylor, 38 Minn. 32.

¹¹ Bush v. Southern Brewing Co., 69 Miss. 200.

IX.

OF AGENT AUTHORIZED TO SETTLE.

§ 1012. Of the nature of the authority.—An authority vested in an agent to settle claims and demands is an important one, involving often the exercise of much judgment and discretion. Although this expression may be used under circumstances showing that the agent was authorized simply to receive payment of a claim, without reduction, the authority to settle, as here used, involves more than the mere receipt of payment of an undisputed claim.¹² The very idea of settlement includes the notion of adjustment. It presupposes mutual, if not disputed and conflicting, claims. It involves often the necessity of compromise and concession. It may include the receipt in settlement of that which the law would not ordinarily regard as payment.

§ 1013. Burden of proof.—A debtor who claims that his debt has been discharged by settlement or compromise, made with the creditor's agent, has the burden of proving that the agent's authority was competent for the purpose;¹³ and the principal may, of course, show that the agent's authority was limited, and did not include the case in question.¹⁴ It must also appear, in any case, in order to sustain the compromise, that there was the same consideration for it which would have been required if the parties were negotiating in person.¹⁵

¹² In Scales v. Mount, 93 Ala. 82, it was said, "As a general rule, the authority of an agent will not be extended beyond that which is given in terms, or is necessary and proper to carry the authority given into full effect. An agent with general authority to collect, is not authorized to compromise a claim, or release the debtor, except upon payment of the full amount. Hall Safe and Lock Co. v. Harwell, 88 Ala. 441. Such authority will not be implied from the conjunctive use of the terms, to settle and collect. The latter word qualifies and limits the scope and meaning of the former, restricting it to its ordinary signification to adjust any matter that is or may be in dispute—authority to make a settlement and collect the amount as settled. Notwithstanding such is ordinarily the extent of the authority thus conferred, there may be circumstances which would enlarge the meaning, and show an intention to confer authority by the use of the terms, to settle and collect, to take a less amount than the entire debt in satisfaction, and upon its payment to discharge the debtor. There is evidence tending to show that defendants failing in business, notified plaintiffs and their other creditors of their failure, stating that they thought they could pay all creditors eighty cents on the dollar. If this be the fact, and upon receiving such notice, plaintiff sent Tatum to settle and collect the debt, authority to release defendants upon payment of eighty per cent. of their claim may well be inferred."

¹³ Barker v. Ring, 97 Wis. 53; Tompkins' Mach. Co. v. Peter, 84 Tex. 627.

¹⁴ Grubbs v. Ferguson, 136 N. C. 60.

¹⁵ Barker v. Ring, supra.

§ 1014. When authority exists.—By reason of its nature, an authority to settle is one not lightly to be inferred. As has been seen,¹⁶ for example, a mere agent to solicit orders for goods has ordinarily no implied authority even to receive payment, much less to compromise and settle disputed claims as to the price.¹⁷ So an agent authorized to receive payment, merely, has, as has been seen,¹⁸ ordinarily no implied authority to do anything but to receive full payment of the claim in money; he usually may not accept goods or securities, make concessions, or compromise disputed claims.

Authority to settle may, of course, be expressly conferred; but it is not essential that it shall be so. It may arise by implication, but the facts from which it is inferred must, obviously, be such as reasonably to warrant the deduction that this important power of adjustment, compromise, and settlement has been conferred.¹⁹

§ 1015. — Where, after considerable correspondence, the principal wrote to the other party saying, "I have asked Mr. S. to talk over your proposition to me with you. If you trade with him you can count the matter satisfactorily settled with me. Hoping the matter will be amicably settled, I am," etc., it was held that S. was authorized to effect a settlement.²⁰ Equally clear was it, where the principal wrote, "After consultation by mail with Mr. D. R., we have concluded to authorize him to adjust with you, and to collect the bal-

¹⁶ See ante, §§ 863, 869.

¹⁷ Lindow v. Cohn, 5 Calif. App. 388; Scarett-Comstock v. Hudspeth, 19 Okla. 429, 14 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 857.

¹⁸ See ante, §§ 946, 954, 955.

¹⁹ See Dabney v. McFarlin (Tex. Civ. App.), 34 S. W. 142; Cobb v. Fogg, 166 Mass. 466; Graves v. Miami S. S. Co., 29 N. Y. Misc. 645.

If the authority is to be proven by circumstances, the occurrence of one act would scarcely be sufficient, but the proponent may show all the circumstances and so prove the authority. Sariol v. McDonald Co., 127 N. Y. App. Div. 648.

In Northwest Thresher Co. v. Dahlgren, 50 Wash. 325, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 324, an agent from his general conduct of the transaction was held to have authority to settle, where the agent had sold goods for which notes in controversy were given, received the notes and payments thereon and conducted a foreclosure.

²⁰ Lindley v. Lupton, 118 Mich. 466. But see First Nat. Bank v. Wright, 104 Mo. App. 242.

Where after some correspondence the agent wrote asking the principal upon what terms he would settle, and the latter replied that he had full confidence in the agent and whatever he did would be all right, "whether it was one cent or a hundred cents on the dollar," it was held, in an action by the principal against the agent, sufficient to authorize the agent to make a settlement. Hussey v. Crass (Tenn. Ch.), 53 S. W. 986. Referring one person to another to settle or determine or decide a controversy, makes the latter agent to so act. Armstrong v. Crump, 25 Okla. 452. But see Hunt v. Johnson & Larimer Dry Goods Co., 7 Ind. Ter. 575.

ance of our account, or any part of the amount, and to make any change that you and he may deem necessary in the future advertisement of your business under our contract. He is on the spot, and will be able to make satisfactory arrangements with you.”²¹

So where, on receiving notice of a loss, the secretary of an insurance company wrote to the insured that he would arrange with the other companies so that adjusters could meet with him and “close the matter up as speedily as possible,” and later that its adjuster would be there on a certain day, and the adjuster assumed to have authority to agree upon a definite sum to be paid in satisfaction of the loss, it was held that the jury were justified in finding that the agent had the authority he assumed to exercise.²²

§ 1016. — A settlement, though unauthorized, may also be sustained by a subsequent ratification; and such a ratification may be effected, as in other cases, where the principal with knowledge accepts and retains the fruits of the settlement.²³

§ 1017. What terms of settlement binding.—The terms upon which the settlement shall be made, may of course be expressly prescribed by the principal, and if so, they will, unless amounting merely to secret instructions, be effective limitations upon the agent’s authority. Usually, however, the matter is, and from its nature must be, largely confided to the agent’s discretion; and in such a case, any settlement he makes within the limits of a fair and reasonable discretion, must be binding upon the principal. Thus, where a creditor wrote to his debtor, that the letter would be handed him by W. “who will see you in regard to bill of coffee due us, and has full authority to act for us in the matter,” the court said: “Words of authority, by an absent creditor to a present agent, in regard to any particular matter, could hardly be made broader. They seem to authorize any and all bona fide acts of the agent which had relation to the debt, and which the principal himself could lawfully perform. Had it been the actual intention to include the power to cancel the debt in whole or in part, by compromise, by payment, or satisfaction otherwise, at the discretion of the agent, it is difficult to see what other more appropriate general language could have been used. The letter specifies no particular act or acts which the agent is authorized to do in regard to the debt. If, for this reason it must be held as giving no authority

²¹ Kuhlman v. Hart (Tenn. Ch. App.), 59 S. W. 455.

²³ Dowagiac Mfg. Co. v. Hellekson, 13 N. D. 257; Zelenka v. Port Huron

²² Miller’s Nat. Ins. Co. v. Kinneard, 136 Ill. 199.

Mach. Co., 144 Iowa, 592.

to take property in payment of the debt, for the same reason it must be held as giving no authority to accept payment of it in money, to cause it to be secured, or to do any other specific act in relation to it. 'Full' authority to act 'in regard' to the debt seems to us to authorize either, any, and all of these, or the like acts of the agent. The plain reading of the letter is, that the 'matter' in regard to which the agent was authorized to act was the debt, the 'bill of coffee,' and not, as counsel assume, the securing of the debt. The letter equally omits to give specific authority to secure the debt, as it does to give specific authority to compromise, compound, or receive satisfaction of it in property."²⁴

§ 1018. — The terms assented to may, nevertheless, be so unreasonable and unfair to the principal as to properly arouse the suspicions of the other party, and put him upon inquiry as to the agent's authority.²⁵

§ 1019. — Illustrations.—An agent having "full authority to act for" a creditor in the matter of a debt, has implied authority to bind the creditor by agreeing to take personal property in payment.²⁶ A general agent with full authority to make settlements with his prin-

²⁴ Oliver v. Sterling, 20 Ohio St. 391.

Authority to agents to manage and settle certain contracts for the sale and delivery of cotton, "as if they were their own," binds the principal by the settlement adopted, in absence of any evidence of fraud or injury. Gruner v. Stucken, 39 La. Ann. 1076. In Keenan v. Empire State Surety Co., 62 Wash. 250, a surety company was notified by the owner that the contractors on a building contract had failed in performance, whereupon the surety replied that it had referred the matter to a certain person, without placing any limitations upon this person's authority. Held, that this person became an agent with authority to waive a condition precedent to the surety's liability on the contractor's bond.

In German American Provision Co. v. Jones, 87 Miss. 277, an agent sent to settle a controversy with a buyer who, having purchased a quantity of lard, contended that it was of an inferior quality, agreed with the buyer that it was of an inferior grade and authorized him to sell it as such. Held, to bind the principal.

In Pollock v. Cohen, 32 Ohio St. 514, an agent authorized to collect a certain bill, to receive notes therefor "or any way to settle" it, was held to have no implied authority to buy property of the debtor exceeding in value the amount of the bill and bind his principal to pay the excess. An agent authorized to settle doubtful claims may not do so by agreeing to set off the same against his own debt. McCormick v. Keith, 8 Neb. 142.

²⁵ Thus, in Mayor, etc. v. Dubois, 65 C. C. A. 590, 132 Fed. 752, the court speaks of a compromise made by the agent, as "a wanton or reckless sacrifice by him, of the substantial right" of the principal, and of the methods adopted, as "so unusual, unfair, and remarkable," as to impose upon the other party the necessity of ascertaining his authority to make it. See also, Kuhlman v. Hart (Tenn. Ch. App.), 59 S. W. 455.

²⁶ Oliver v. Sterling, 20 Ohio St.

principal's debtors, may bind his principal by agreeing to accept and receive the notes of a third person in payment of a debt.²⁷ An agent authorized to "adjust" with a debtor and "to collect the balance of our account or any part of the amount, and to make any change that you and he may deem necessary in the future advertisement of your business under our contract," is justified in making an entirely new contract, even though less advantageous to the principal, if "it does not, when the nature of the business to which it relates is considered, * * * carry on its face the evidence or inference that [the agent] in making it was betraying or selling out the interest of his employer."²⁸

An agent sent by the creditors of a debtor in failing circumstances, at his suggestion, to take a bill of sale of his stock and fixtures as security, if that was found advisable, may bind his principals by an understanding that the conveyance and possession which he takes of the goods shall not be absolute and unconditional, but temporary only, and that after the agent has sold enough of the goods to satisfy the claims, the balance shall be restored to the debtor.²⁹

§ 1020. — But the ordinary claim agent of a railroad, having general authority to settle claims against it, must, it is held, be

391. Or to take a small sum of money and a conveyance of lands in settlement. Lindley v. Lupton, 118 Mich. 466.

²⁷ Nichols & Shepard Co. v. Hackney, 78 Minn. 461.

An agent directed by his principal to take anything he can get in settlement has authority to accept a promissory note. Mitchell v. Finnell, 101 Cal. 614.

Under a very wide authority given to an agent to settle up matters connected with a construction contract, where it was found that the balance was against the principal rather than in his favor, and that he owed more than was coming to him, the agents were held authorized to apply the proceeds upon the debts so far as they would go, and to give the principal's notes for the balance due. Wapples-Platter Grocer Co. v. Kin-kaid, 86 Kan. 167.

²⁸ Kuhlman v. Hart (Tenn. Ch. App.), 59 S. W. 455.

²⁹ Rothschild v. Swope, 116 Cal. 670. Where an agent is sent out by the seller of fruit trees to deliver trees, make settlements, and secure notes therefor, he has implied authority to do the things necessary to entitle the principal to receive a note for the price in accordance with the original contract; and he may therefore renew the obligation of that contract (without which the buyer refused to give his note), that the seller will plant the trees, prune and care for them for four years, and replace any that fail to grow. Griffith v. Fields, 105 Iowa, 362.

In Sunset Orchard Land Co. v. Sherman Nursery Co., — Minn. —, 140 N. W. 112, where there was a controversy respecting the seller's obligation to replace trees which failed to live, and agent sent to settle it, to "try and get the matter adjusted," was held to have authority to bind the seller to replace a considerable portion of the trees.

limited to the employment of the usual and ordinary means of accomplishing a settlement, and has, therefore, no implied authority to settle with an injured employee, by agreeing to pay him a sum of money and to give him steady employment during good behavior, "There was no evidence," said the court, "that corporations are accustomed to give employment for life, or anything except money, for this purpose."³⁰ But even a local agent of a railway company, shown to have been generally entrusted with the settlement of claims of over charge arising in his territory, has been held to have apparent authority to waive the provision in a bill of lading that suit for an alleged over charge shall be brought within a certain number of days.³¹ So a claim agent of a railroad, sent to settle a personal injury case, has been held to have authority to agree that a claim for medical services rendered to the injured passenger will be paid by the company, even though the services had already been rendered, and though the agent had not done the hiring.³²

§ 1021. — A general authority to settle could very rarely be deemed sufficient to justify the agent in discharging the debtor without receiving anything.³³ But where an agent had been given "full powers to close the subscriptions to the permanent fund in such manner as he deems for the best interest of the college," the court said, "No language they could use would convey any more power to discharge without receiving pay than was used. They must have intended that he should learn their circumstances in each particular case, and act upon those circumstances as prudence should dictate. If he found the subscriber of doubtful responsibility, or the claim itself doubtful, he might obtain the best settlement he could and secure what he could. If he found the claim a nullity, he might discharge without payment."³⁴

Authority to settle claims against the principal, arising out of a contract between him and a third person, however, would not justify

³⁰ Bohanan v. Boston & M. R. R., 70 N. H. 526. But in Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Cox, 145 Ky. 667, an agent sent to make a settlement with an injured employe was held to have apparent authority to do so by agreeing to give him permanent employment. Some of the statements in the opinion, however, must doubtless be regarded as too wide.

³¹ Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. House,

4 Tex. Civ. App. 263, distinguishing Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Trawick, 80 Tex. 270.

³² Reynolds v. Chicago, etc., R. R., 114 Mo. App. 670.

³³ See Patterson v. Moore, 34 Pa. 69. See also, Hutchings v. Clark, 64 Cal. 228.

³⁴ Middlebury College v. Loomis, 1 Vt. 189.

the agent in binding his principal to pay that third person's debts to others.³⁵

§ 1022. May receive the proceeds.—An agent, given general authority to settle a demand of his principal, has implied authority, not only to agree upon and adjust the amount to be paid in settlement, but also to receive the amount; and the opposite party who pays it to the agent will be discharged, although the agent never pays it over to his principal.³⁶

§ 1023. May not submit to arbitration.—Authority conferred upon an agent to settle a dispute or demand, will be presumed to be so conferred in reliance upon the judgment and discretion of the agent, and unless there be clear evidence of a contrary intention, the agent will not be permitted to delegate the trust to another.³⁷ He cannot therefore submit the dispute or demand to the judgment of arbitrators, and, if he does so, the award will not be binding upon the principal.³⁸ Like other unauthorized acts, the submission may of course be ratified by the principal, and such a ratification will be presumed where, for example, with full knowledge of the facts, the principal accepts the award.

§ 1024. May not assign the demand.—For the same reasons, an agent employed to collect and settle his principal's demands has no implied authority to assign them to another for that purpose;³⁹

³⁵ Cleveland, etc., Ry. Co. v. Shea, 174 Ind. 303.

In Mead v. Owen, 80 Vt. 273, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 655, 13 Ann. Cas. 231, it was held that authority to arbitrate a dispute between a landlord and tenant did not include the implied authority to extend the time during which the tenant might hold over.

But compare Newberry v. Chicago Lumbering Co., 154 Mich. 84.

³⁶ New York, etc., R. Co. v. Bates, 68 Md. 184.

³⁷ Thus, where a lumber firm in Oregon, having a dispute on hand over the acceptance of a cargo of lumber sent to Chile, S. A., wrote to another firm in the same city in Oregon, "We will be satisfied with any settlement you may make for us in adjusting the matter at point of destination," knowing that the agent had an allied house in Chile, it was held that the agent was authorized to make the settlement through his house in Chile. Williamson v. North Pacific Lumber Co., 38 Or. 560. See also, cases under Delegation of Authority.

³⁸ Huber v. Zimmerman, 21 Ala. 488, 56 Am. Dec. 255; Scarborough v. Reynolds, 12 Ala. 252; Michigan Central R. R. Co. v. Gougar, 55 Ill. 503; Mayor, etc. v. Dubois, 65 C. C. A. 590, 132 Fed. 752.

³⁹ Even though it be done merely for the purpose of enabling the assignee to sue upon it. Rigby v. Lowe, 125 Cal. 613. But where the agent's authority over a claim for injuries received in a collision is not limited merely to a settlement, but he is given full power concerning the claim, it is held, that he may, if suit is necessary, employ an attorney and make a contract with him which should include assigning to him a nor can he pledge them in order to indemnify a surety for his principal.⁴⁰

So a power of attorney authorizing certain persons to "bring suit for, settle up, compromise, release, obtain or recover interest belonging to and owned" by the principal "in all lands or other property" situated in certain counties, gives them no implied authority to sell and convey the lands.⁴¹

§ 1025. May not assign or transfer proceeds.—When the agent has made the settlement authorized, and has received the proceeds thereof, if any, his authority in the matter will, ordinarily, be exhausted, the proceeds will become the property of the principal, and the agent will usually have no implied authority to deal further with them. Thus, if he has received a conveyance of land for his principal, he would have no implied authority to sell and convey the land. If he has received a promissory note or a check payable to the order of the principal, he will, like the agent to receive payment, already referred to,⁴² have ordinarily no implied authority to indorse and transfer the note, or to indorse and collect the check.⁴³

X.

OF AN AGENT AUTHORIZED TO BORROW MONEY.

§ 1026. When the authority exists.—As has been pointed out in a preceding section,⁴⁴ the power to borrow money on the principal's account, is everywhere regarded as a dangerous one, not readily to be implied. As has there been seen, it cannot usually exist unless it has been expressly given, or is justified by an established course of dealing, or is practically indispensable to the execution of some main authority conferred.⁴⁵ It is, of course, not impossible that the power to borrow may be implied, and, stated affirmatively, it may be, where the share in the cause of action to secure his fees. Tabet v. Powell (Tex. Civ. App.), 78 S. W. 997.

⁴⁰ Wood v. McCain, 7 Ala. 800, 42 Am. Dec. 612.

⁴¹ Connor v. Parsons (Tex. Civ. App.), 30 S. W. 83.

⁴² See ante, §§ 952, 953.

⁴³ Jacoby v. Payson, 91 Hun (N. Y.), 480.

⁴⁴ See ante, §§ 1001, 1002.

⁴⁵ See cases cited in § 1002, ante. See also, Hawtayne v. Bourne, 7 Mees. & Wels. 595; Martin v. Great Falls Mfg. Co., 9 N. H. 51; Ladd v. Indemnity Co., 128 Fed. 298, aff'd 135 Fed. 636; Chicago, etc., Ry. Co. v. Chickasha Nat. Bank, 98 C. C. A. 535, 174 Fed. 923; Consolidated Nat. Bank v. Pacific Coast S. S. Co., 95 Cal. 1, 29 Am. St. R. 85; Merchants Nat. Bank v. Nichols, 223 Ill. 41, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 752.

conduct of the principal or the course of dealing of the parties reasonably justifies it,⁴⁶ or perhaps, where it is practically impossible that the purpose contemplated should be accomplished without its exercise.⁴⁷ As in other cases based upon alleged emergency, the possibility of ⁴⁶ See Howe v. Finnegan, 61 App. Div. 610.

Authority to expend money does not justify borrowing money. Johns v. Cummings, 11 W. Austr. L. R. 14. A mere clerk in the office of a manufacturing company has no implied authority to borrow money for the company; and no appearance of authority can arise from the fact that he had, on a number of occasions, borrowed money, under special circumstances, if the lender did not know of, or rely upon that fact. Martin v. Great Falls Mfg. Co., 9 N. H. 51.

No ostensible authority results from previous borrowing of which the principal was ignorant. Consolidated Nat. Bank v. Pacific Coast S. S. Co., 95 Cal. 1, 29 Am. St. R. 85.

The fact that defendants had honored several drafts drawn by his traveling salesman for personal expenses and indorsed at his request by plaintiffs while he was yet in defendant's employment, did not bind defendant to pay another draft drawn and indorsed by the same parties after his discharge even though plaintiffs had no knowledge of such discharge. Groneweg v. Kusworm, 75 Iowa, 237, following Baudouine v. Grimes, 64 Iowa, 370.

Where a principal entrusts an agent with securities and instructs him to raise a certain sum upon them, and the agent borrows a larger sum upon the securities and fraudulently appropriates the difference (the lender acting bona fide and in ignorance of the limitation), the principal cannot redeem the securities without paying the lender all he has lent. Brocklesby v. Bldg. Society, [1895] App. Cas. 173. To same effect is Robinson v. Brewery Co., [1896] 2 Ch. 841, where an agent, authorized to borrow £3000 and entrusted with securities worth £8000, actually borrowed £6000, paid £3000 to his principal and kept the balance himself.

Authority to purchase for cash or on credit, and to make or indorse negotiable paper in connection with a business, does not imply authority to borrow generally. The language of the instrument is construed narrowly, and the power to make notes is limited to the scope of the business. Bryant v. Banque du Peuple, [1893] App. Cas. 170; Jacobs v. Morris, [1901] 1 Ch. 261, affirmed in [1902] 1 Ch. 816.

In Sublette v. Brewington, 139 Mo. App. 410, a principal made a note payable to the order of his agent for the purpose of enabling the agent to procure a loan. The agent failed to dispose of the note; and, when the principal asked for it, said that it had been destroyed. Thereafter the agent borrowed money, and delivered the note without indorsement as collateral security. The lender knew nothing of the agency or of the circumstances of the making of the note. Held, that the principal was liable, on the ground that he had equipped the agent with indicia of ownership.

⁴⁷ In Hawtayne v. Bourne, 7 M. & W. 595, Alderson, B., said: "There is no rule of law that an agent may, in a case of emergency suddenly arising raise money and pledge the credit of his principal for its repayment." Parke, B., to same effect. In this case, the managing agent of a mine, who, without applying to his principals, borrowed money in their name to pay the workmen, so as to prevent the closing of the mine by executions obtained by them, was held not authorized.

But see Bickford v. Menier, 107 N. Y. 490.

communicating with the principal and securing his directions, would usually have to be excluded before the authority would arise.

Authority to borrow, as an incident to the power to manage, has been considered in a preceding subdivision.⁴⁸

§ 1027. What execution authorized.—An agent authorized to borrow may be, and usually is, limited as to the amount, time, security, rate of interest and the like, and often as to the person with whom he shall deal. Where he is so limited, and the limitations are not simply secret instructions, the principal will not be bound where the authority is exceeded.⁴⁹ If, however, he has a general authority to borrow, or, though his authority is not general, if he is not limited in these respects, or, if any actual limitations are not such as the lender is bound to know, then the agent would apparently be authorized to select the lender, determine the amount, and agree upon the other terms,⁵⁰ subject only to the limitation of what is apparently fair and reasonable.⁵¹

⁴⁸ See ante, § 1001.

⁴⁹ Walsh v. Hunt, 120 Cal. 46, 39 L. R. A. 697 (where agent fraudulently altered the note before delivery). See also, Bryce v. Massey, 35 S. Car. 127, where there was a limited authority.

Where a person is deceived into giving to an agent a deed of land running to a third person, in order that a loan may be obtained from him for the owner, and the agent fraudulently uses it as security for outstanding debts of his own, the principal is not bound. McDonald v. Cool, 134 Cal. 502.

⁵⁰ Where the authority to borrow is known to be subject to a fixed pecuniary limit, then, under the doctrine of Mussey v. Beecher, 3 Cush. (Mass.) 511, ante, § 761, the principal would not be bound if that limit were exceeded. If, however, the authority is limited to be exercised only upon some condition, the existence of which is peculiarly within the knowledge of the agent, then, under the doctrine of Bank of Batavia v. New York, etc., R. Co., 106 N. Y. 195, 60 Am. Rep. 440, ante, §§ 759, 760, the principal would be bound though the condition did not in fact exist. The same rule would apply where the question was whether the money was being borrowed for the principal's benefit, or for use in his business, and the like. North River Bank v. Aymar, 3 Hill (N. Y.), 262, ante, §§ 759, 760.

And where an agent who was authorized to borrow money to carry on his principal's business, borrowed money ostensibly for that purpose but but upon somewhat unusual terms the House of Lords, in refusing to reverse the findings of the lower courts, held, that if, in an emergency, the agent might properly have made such a loan and upon such terms, it was not necessary for the lender to enquire whether or not the emergency had arisen in the particular case, and that if the money was advanced in good faith without notice that the agent was exceeding his authority, the principal would be liable. Montaignac v. Shitta, 15 App. Cas. 357.

⁵¹ Agents authorized merely to borrow would not be justified in an ordinary case, in paying bonuses or premiums or high rates of interest or in adopting any other extraordinary means of raising the money, without special authority. Shaw v. Stone, 55 Mass. (1 Cush.) 228. But

The authority, of course, is presumptively to be exercised only for the principal's benefit and in his business.

An agent authorized to borrow money and given a very broad authority to execute notes and mortgage as security therefor, may, it is held, obtain it by procuring accommodation notes from the lender,—the proceeds of which the principal receives,—and giving to the lender the principal's notes, secured by mortgage, as security.⁵²

§ 1028. Authority to give necessary securities.—A general authority to borrow would include, by implication, it is said, authority to give the lender, in the name of the principal, the appropriate and ordinary securities for the sum borrowed:⁵³ though it is obvious that this rule must, in certain cases, be subject to necessary exceptions; and that, where pledges, or mortgages of property are involved, it must in many cases be qualified by such considerations as the necessity of authority under seal or authority in writing.

Powers of attorney to borrow money upon the security of land, usually include the power to mortgage in express terms; but even if it were otherwise, the authority to make the necessary instruments would be implied. Where choice as to the form of the security is open, no particular form having been specified, the attorney may adopt any usual and proper form.⁵⁴

it would be otherwise where the local conditions justify it. Montaignac v. Shitta, 15 App. Cas. 357.

A bank desiring to obtain a loan or deposit of state funds offered a bond with certain sureties; the state treasurer objected to this bond, and another was executed with all but one of the sureties upon the first bond, and certain others. The treasurer objected to this one also. To procure the money, the cashier delivered both bonds. A surety on both bonds defended on the ground that the authority of the agent to deliver the first bond terminated with the rejection of it. Held, that the surety was liable. The court said that the refusal to loan upon the first bond only was not necessarily a rejection of it; but that, even if it had been, the whole matter was in the hands of the agent, and he was authorized to renew the application with the added security. Young v. Union Sav.

Bank & Trust Co., 23 Wash. 360. See Anglo-Californian Bank v. Cerf, 147 Cal. 393.

⁵² Burnet v. Boyd, 60 Miss. 627.

⁵³ Hatch v. Coddington, 95 U. S. 48, 24 L. Ed. 339; Belknap v. Davis, 19 Me. 455.

Authority to borrow money, and secure its payment by a note and mortgage justifies the agent in executing a note with such terms as are usual and proper, and in securing it by a mortgage with all necessary and usual covenants. Richmond v. Voorhees, 10 Wash. 316.

Where an agent is given a deed to secure a loan from a bank, the agent may agree that the security shall cover future advances as well as past, this being a reasonable agreement under the circumstances. Anglo-Californian Bank v. Cerf, 148 Cal. 393.

⁵⁴ Posner v. Bayless, 59 Md. 56. Held here that an agent who was authorized to sell, lease, or mortgage land, was, in giving security for money borrowed, not to be confined to a formal mortgage, but might convey in fee and take back a redeemable lease.

§ 1029. Authority to receive the money.—One employed merely to negotiate a loan to his principal and not entrusted with the securities to be delivered, would ordinarily have no implied power to receive the money ;⁵⁵ but such a power could be given him expressly⁵⁶ and would ordinarily be implied if he were entrusted to deliver the securities upon whose delivery the money was to be received.⁵⁷

Authority to change securities.—A principal, for the purpose of raising money, placed in the hands of her agent a note and mortgage made out to D; the loan, was not effected but the principal allowed the papers to remain in the custody of the agent. The principal, in pursuance of a sale, had placed with the vendor certain stock to secure the purchase price on an agreement that the form of security could be changed. In this transaction the agent had acted. The agent induced D to assign the note and mortgage to the vendor, and with these papers so assigned the agent effected an exchange of the mortgage for the stock as permitted by the contract of sale. The vendor who accepted this mortgage had no knowledge of the facts. Held that the note and mortgage were binding upon the principal. Brown v. Brown, 96 Ark. 456.

⁵⁵ See Henken v. Schwicker, 174 N. Y. 298; Higgins v. Moore, 34 N. Y. 417.

⁵⁶ In Edinburgh American Land Mortgage Co. v. Peoples, 102 Ala. 241, one P, desirous of obtaining a loan, applied to M, a local loan broker, to effect the loan, and signed this application: "I agree to pay M as my attorney a reasonable fee for taking this application, conducting correspondence, and making ample abstract of my land and in securing and paying over the money." M procured a loan, received the money, and embezzled it. Held, that the loss should fall upon P who had by the writing authorized M to receive the money. A like decision on virtually the same facts is found in America Mortgage Co. v. King, 105 Ala. 358, and to same effect, see Hamil v. American Freehold Co., 127 Ala. 90.

But in Land Mortgage Co. v. Preston, 119 Ala. 290, where no express application appeared, the broker was found on the facts not to be the agent of the borrower to receive the money. P applied to M a local broker to obtain a loan; the broker made application to the Alabama Loan Co., which was acting as general agent of several foreign investment companies, one of which was the lender in controversy. The notes and mortgage made out to the lender were forwarded to the Alabama Co., which notified the lending company of the receipt of the papers and was thereupon authorized to appropriate some of its funds in Alabama to the execution of the loan. The Alabama Co. in so doing paid the money to M who absconded with it. Held, that the Alabama Co., in paying over the money, was the agent of the lender, and that the loss caused by not paying over to the borrower P, or to an agent of P, must fall on the lender.

⁵⁷ Murphy v. Beeker, 101 Minn. 329; Henken v. Schwicker, 174 N. Y. 29; Pepper v. Cairns, 133 Pa. 114.

In Henken v. Schwicker, supra, the defendant, whose land was already mortgaged, applied to a broker to procure a new mortgage. The broker induced the plaintiff to advance the money, provided that a first mortgage be given to secure the loan; the broker promised the plaintiff that a first mortgage would be given, whereupon the plaintiff gave a check for the amount payable to the broker. The defendant, when apprised of the fact that a loan had been obtained, and that a first mortgage must be given, told the broker to pay off the existing mortgages, and delivered to the broker at the same time a new bond and mortgage. The broker used the funds for his own purposes without satisfying the old mortgages, and the question in suit was upon whom this loss should fall. Held: (1) that the broker was the defendant's agent to procure a loan, i. e., to produce a person ready to make a loan; (2) that, in paying the broker by check, the plaintiff made the broker his agent to see to the conveyance of the cash; (3) that finally when the defendant learned that the money was in the broker's possession, the defendant's instruction to pay off the old mortgages and to deliver the new bond and mortgage constituted the broker the agent of the defendant, and consequently a defalcation occurring thereafter and incident to the broker's last employment must be borne by the defendant.

§ 1030. Liability of principal for money borrowed without authority.—Where an agent borrows money having no authority whatever to borrow, or where, having some authority, he borrows in excess or disregard of limitations or conditions with knowledge of which the lender is charged, the principal cannot be held liable upon the contract,⁵⁸ unless, with full knowledge of the facts, he ratifies the act. That there may be such ratification is clear,⁵⁹ although, as is pointed out in an earlier section, the principal does not ratify merely by receiving a benefit, unless the benefit be received under circumstances indicating a confirmation of the act.⁶⁰

But in Figley v. Bradshaw, 35 Neb. 337, the intermediary who effected the loan was held to be the agent of the lender at the time the misappropriation occurred. Here B applied to C for a loan, B was to give a mortgage on premises which were already subject to liens. The lender gave C a draft, made payable to B, and instructed C to see that the liens were released. B endorsed the draft and left it in C's possession who said that he was to satisfy the liens out of the same. C cashed the draft and absconded with the proceeds. Held, that the loss fell on the lenders.

⁵⁸ See Spooner v. Thompson, 48 Vt. 259.

⁵⁹ Kirklin v. Atlas Sav. & L. Ass'n, 107 Ga. 313; Frye v. Menkins, 15 Ill. 339; Fitch v. Steam Mill Co., 80 Me. 34; Mohrfeld v. Bldg. Ass'n, 194 Pa. 488.

Where the principal, after receiving knowledge, voluntarily retains the money borrowed on his account, though he may not have had knowledge at the time he received it, this will ordinarily be evidence of a ratification. See Fitch v. Steam Mill Co., supra; Bank of Lakin v. National Bank of Commerce, 57 Kan. 183 (the general rule formulated by the court in this case is too wide); Willis v. St. Paul Sanitation Co., 53 Minn. 370; Perkins v. Boothby, 71 Me. 91; McDermott v. Jackson, 97 Wis. 64; Collins v. Cooper, 65 Tex. 460. See also, Calnan Constr. Co. v. Brown, 110 Iowa, 37.

Knowledge is essential. Thompson v. Laboringman's Merc. & Mfg. Co., 60 W. Va. 42, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 311; Swindell v. Latham, 145 N. C. 144, 122 Am. St. R. 430.

⁶⁰ See ante, § 437.

Where no authority or ratification can be shown, any recovery which may be had must be based on quasi-contractual principles, or upon some theory of equitable subrogation to the rights of those whose valid claims against the principal have been discharged with the lender's money.⁶¹

XI.

OF AGENT AUTHORIZED TO LEND MONEY.

§ 1031. When authority exists.—The authority of an agent to lend money for his principal may, like many others already considered, be conferred expressly, or arise by implication from the conduct of the principal or an established course of dealing. It would also, in many cases, be an incident to the authority of an agent given general authority to manage a business in which the loaning of money was a regular and customary occurrence.

An unauthorized loan may, of course, be subsequently ratified, and the ratification may be effected in a great variety of ways, as for example, by knowingly accepting and retaining the proceeds of a loan.⁶²

§ 1032. What execution authorized.—Like the agent to borrow, the agent authorized to lend may be, and often is, limited with respect of the amount of the loan, the rate of interest, the kind of security, or the particular person; and limitations of this sort where they are known, or where the borrower is charged with notice of them, would be binding upon the borrower, unless the lender should waive them.

But where no such limitations are imposed, or where (what is the same thing so far as the borrower is concerned), the agent is held out as having general authority to lend, the principal would be bound by the acts of the agent in fixing the amount, the time, the rate of interest, and the like, in selecting the borrower and in agreeing upon the fact been applied in paying legal debts and obligations of the principal, the lender is entitled to stand in the same position as if the money had originally been borrowed by the principal." Citing In re Wrexham, etc., Ry. Co., [1899] 1 Ch. 440.

⁶¹ Thus in Bannatyne v. MacIver, [1906] 1 K. B. 103, 2 Br. Rul. Cas. 735, it is said by Romer L. J.: "Where money is borrowed on behalf of a principal by an agent, the lender believing that the agent has authority, though it turns out that his act has not been authorized or ratified or adopted by the principal, then, although the principal cannot be sued at law, yet in equity to the extent to which the money borrowed has in

See also, Reversion Fund & Ins. Co. v. Maison Cosway, [1913] 1 K. B. 364, where Bannatyne v. MacIver, is explained and applied.

⁶² See First Nat. Bank v. Oberne, 121 Ill. 25.

form of security, subject, in all of these cases, to the limitation of what is ordinary and reasonable in such cases.⁶³

§ 1033. Authority to take usurious interest.—An agent authorized to loan money is presumed to be authorized to loan for lawful interest only, and he can therefore have no implied authority to stipulate for usurious interest, or for bonuses or commissions which with the interest stipulated for will make the interest usurious. If in such a case the agent does stipulate for usurious interest under the guise of commissions or otherwise, the principal who has not authorized it, and who is ignorant of it, and who has not participated in the act or ratified it, cannot be affected by the unlawful act of his agent.⁶⁴

§ 1034. Authority to receive payment.—As has been seen in an earlier section,⁶⁵ authority to receive payment of either principal or interest, does not arise from the mere fact that the person who received the payment had been agent to negotiate the loan, or from the fact that the money was payable at his office; but where in addition to the fact that he negotiated the loan, it appears that the principal has also entrusted him with the possession of the securities, an appearance of authority will arise which will continue as long as such possession continues. Other situations have also been there considered.⁶⁶

§ 1035. Authority to extend time or change terms.—An agent authorized merely to make a loan of money, would ordinarily have no implied authority to afterwards extend the time, or otherwise change the terms or conditions of the loan.⁶⁷ It may appear, however, that ⁶³ Where an agent of a building and loan association in making a loan agrees that, if a person who already has a first mortgage upon the property, will agree to make his mortgage second, the company will see that all the money which it loans will be used in making improvements upon the land, and he does so, the company is bound. Wayne Build. & L. Ass'n v. Moats, 149 Ind. 123.

So where the agent of the lender agrees that if the borrower, instead of paying off an existing mortgage and giving a new one for the entire amount borrowed, will consent to the assignment of the existing mortgage and the execution of a new one for the difference only, the lender upon receiving the assignment of the first mortgage will release a portion of the land covered by it, the lender is bound by the agreement. Gross v. Milligan, 176 Mass. 566.

⁶⁴ See Franzen v. Hammond, 136 Wis. 239, 128 Am. St. R. 1079, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 399; and many other cases cited post. Book IV, Chapter V, Liability of Principal for Criminal and Penal Acts of his Agent.

⁶⁵ See ante, § 934.

An authority given to reloan money already loaned would imply authority to receive payment of the first loan. Wales v. Mower, 44 Colo. 146, 96 Pac. 971.

⁶⁶ See ante, § 935.

⁶⁷ See Garth v. Runner (Ky.), 121 S. W. 681, where a mere loan agent was held to have no implied authority to release liens or accept new securities in substitution for those agreed upon and received.

his authority over the whole subject has been made so general as reasonably to warrant the inference of such an authority⁶⁸ or he may be so held out as possessing it as to estop the principal from denying it.

§ 1036. No authority to loan to himself.—Like other agents, the agent to loan has no implied authority to loan to himself either directly or indirectly, without the principal's full knowledge and consent,⁶⁹ and if he does so the principal may repudiate the transaction or affirm at his option.

§ 1037. Authority to purchase securities.—It has been held, that authority to loan his principal's money does not authorize the agent to purchase a promissory note;⁷⁰ but if the note were one of the kind upon which the agent would have been justified in loaning the money it is difficult to see any serious objection to it.

XII.

OF AGENT AUTHORIZED TO BIND PRINCIPAL AS SURETY.

§ 1038. When authority exists.—Authority to bind the principal as surety upon the obligation of a third person is, like certain others already considered, a dangerous one which ought not lightly to be inferred. The act is usually one done for accommodation merely, outside of the scope of the principal's business, for which he receives no consideration, and which subjects him to risk for the acts and faults of others over whom he has no control. In a few states, as has been seen,⁷¹ statutes expressly require such an authority to be conferred by

⁶⁸ Hurd v. Marple, 2 Ill. App. 402. See also, Moore v. Gould, 151 Cal. 723, where authority to renew or extend was found to exist under a broad power of attorney authorizing the agent to do any kind of business for the principal.

⁶⁹ See Keyser v. Adair, 127 Mo. App. 62. Here an agent authorized to loan money desired to borrow it for himself and his father; he made out a note leaving the name of the payee in blank; he and his father signed it; he then went to defendant and others and induced him and them to sign it as sureties upon his representation that the loan was to be for the benefit of a certain well known firm for whom defendant had acted as surety before; then he filled in the name of his principal as the payee and delivered the note to him telling him that the loan was being made to the persons who were really the sureties, and the principal advanced the money upon this understanding. The note not being paid, the principal sued; the defendant, one of the sureties, defended upon the ground that the misrepresentations made to him as to the real borrower were the misrepresentations of plaintiff's agent. Held, that when the agent undertook to borrow this money for himself and his father, his agency for the plaintiff ceased, and that defendant could not defend upon the grounds stated.

⁷⁰ Silvers v. Hess, 47 Mo. App. 507.

⁷¹ See ante, § 225.

writing;⁷² but, in the absence of such a statute, parol authority is sufficient.⁷³ And even the parol authority need not be express: it may be conferred by conduct, or be inferred from circumstances,⁷⁴ though, as has been suggested, the inference should not be drawn unless the circumstances clearly and fairly warrant it.

§ 1039. Authority strictly construed.—Powers of attorney to sign one's name as surety to obligations are properly subjected to a strict interpretation. As said in one case,⁷⁵ "the agent can do nothing which he is not expressly authorized to do by the instrument which is the exclusive source of his authority to act at all." If he is authorized to sign at a given time, or for one purpose, or for a stated amount, or for a particular person, he cannot bind his principal by signing at another time, or for a different purpose, person, or amount.⁷⁶ If he is authorized to sign an obligation with certain conditions, he cannot bind the principal where the conditions are different. Where he is authorized to sign upon one occasion, the authority is exhausted with its execution and cannot be treated as a continuing authority.⁷⁷

Where a power of attorney authorized the execution, for an executor, of "the bond required by the court," but the bond as executed contained also some provisions not required by the law, it was held

⁷² As in Kentucky. See, Ky. Stat. 1899, § 482. Simpson v. Commonwealth, 89 Ky. 412; Dickson v. Luman, 93 Ky. 614; Wilson v. Linville, 96 Ky. 50; Ragan v. Chenault, 78 Ky. 545.

⁷³ Banister v. Wallace, 14 Tex. Civ. App. 452.

⁷⁴ See Miller v. Farmers' State Bank, — Ind. App. —, 100 N. E. 119.

⁷⁵ Stuart v. Commonwealth, 91 Va. 152.

⁷⁶ Stovall v. Commonwealth, 84 Va. 246 (authority to sign bond for $25,000, bond for $40,000 not binding); Dugan v. Champion, etc., Co., 105 Ky. 821 (authority to sign bond for $6,000, bond for $8,667 not binding); Lovett v. Sullivan, 189 Mass. 535; authority to sign a guaranty of payment of X's bills during X's minority will not authorize execution of a guaranty to continue until cancelled by the guarantor.

In Redd v. Commonwealth, 85 Va. 648, a man who had been elected county treasurer was required to give a bond. A number of persons gave powers of attorney to sign their names as his sureties. These powers were unconditional and unambiguous. He did not qualify under the election, and a vacancy ensued. He was appointed to fill this vacancy, and these powers of attorney were used in making his bond to fill the vacancy. Held, that the sureties could not show that they intended the powers of attorney to be used only in making the bond under the election.

A power of attorney executed September 23, 1894, authorizing the execution of a bail bond for appearance at January term, 1894, held to be a clerical error and to authorize a bond for the January term, 1895. Commonwealth v. Perkins, 17 Ky. L. R. 542, 32 S. W. 134.

⁷⁷ Stuart v. Commonwealth, supra.

that these extra provisions, which were severable, could be disregarded and the bond held valid as an execution of the power.⁷⁸

XIII.

OF AGENT AUTHORIZED TO EMPLOY.

§ 1040. What here included.—The general questions of the delegation of authority by agents and their power to appoint subagents, have already been considered in another place.⁷⁹ The general question also of the agent's authority, not to delegate his own authority, but to employ other agents and servants for his principal, which is an entirely different one, has also been somewhat considered in the same chapter.⁸⁰ A few general rules upon the subject seem appropriate in this place, and will be given.

§ 1041. When authority exists.—Authority to employ agents and servants for the principal may, of course, be expressly conferred, or may arise by implication as a usual or necessary incident of some other authority conferred.⁸¹ Thus, as has been already seen, an agent to sell, may often employ a broker;⁸² an agent to collect, has often implied authority to employ an attorney;⁸³ the general manager of a business placed in complete charge thereof would ordinarily have implied authority to employ the necessary help;⁸⁴ and the foreman of a shop or farm may have such a general authority over its conduct as to authorize him to do the same.⁸⁵ Even where there was no precedent

⁷⁸ Yost v. Ramey, 103 Va. 117.

⁷⁹ See ante, § 304, et seq.

⁸⁰ See ante, § 334, et seq.

But neither evidence of authority to make a particular contract for the digging of a well nor evidence of a general authority as manager to enter into such contracts is sufficient to prove authority in the agent to dig the well himself, or to employ workmen to do it. Mundis v. Emig, 171 Pa. St. 417.

The employment of a person to collect the rents of a building does not give him authority to employ an engineer to take charge of the engine in such building. Crozier v. Reins, 4 Ill. App. 564.

In Nielsen v. Northeastern Co., 40 Wash. 194, an agent authorized to solicit prospectors to engage in the service of the principal was held to have no authority to make binding contracts of employment.

In Murphy v. Knights of Columbus Bldg. Co., 155 Mo. App. 649, the defendant company, being desirous of building, appointed a real estate committee with R as chairman, and instructed them "to go out and find an available site." R employed the plaintiffs (real estate brokers) who found for the company a satisfactory site. Held that R had implied authority to employ the plaintiffs.

⁸² See ante, § 316.

⁸³ See ante, § 316.

⁸⁴ See ante, § 983.

⁸⁵ The mere fact that one is "foreman" of a gang of men does not establish his authority to employ such men. Bonnell v. State, 64 Ind. 498; Langston v. Postal Tel. Co., 6 Ga. App. 333.

authority, an employment may, of course, be made good by subsequent ratification,⁸⁶ or the principal by his conduct may estop himself from denying its existence.⁸⁷

§ 1042. — As a general rule, however, it is entirely clear that one agent or servant has, from his mere position as such, no implied authority whatever to employ other agents or servants on his principal's account.⁸⁸ What servants or agents the principal shall have (for and to whom he is to assume responsibility), how and when they shall be selected, upon what terms and subject to what conditions, limitations or control they shall operate, and the like, are questions of the greatest importance, which the principal must ordinarily have the right to determine for himself. Unless it can be shown, therefore, that the principal has expressly or by proper implication given the authority to some one else, it must be deemed to reside in him alone.

Neither does the mere fact of some sudden emergency or exigency ordinarily alter the rule. The principal or master is usually the one to whom the emergency shall be reported and who shall decide how it shall be met.⁸⁹ If he is where he cannot be communicated with, either at all or in time to act, a narrow authority, limited by the exigency, may be recognized.⁹⁰

This latter doctrine more readily operates where the agent or servant who undertakes to employ is one charged with some degree of

⁸⁶ For evidence held insufficient to show authority or ratification, see Findlay v. Hildenbrand, 17 Idaho, 403, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 400.

⁸⁷ See Haluptzok v. Great Northern Ry. Co., 55 Minn. 446, 26 L. R. A. 739; Pardridge v. La Pries, 84 Ill. 51; Spencer Lumber Co. v. Marsh, 99 Ark. 358; Trollinger v. Fleer, 157 N. Car. 81.

⁸⁸ See ante, § 334, et seq. In the absence of an emergency, at any rate, the conductor of a freight train has no implied authority to employ assistants upon the train. St. Louis, etc., Ry. Co. v. Jones, 96 Ark. 558, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 418.

A railroad station agent has no implied authority to employ persons to guard the depot and other property there of the company. Lipscomb v. Houston, etc., Ry. Co., 95

Tex. 5, 93 Am. St. R. 804, 55 L. R. A. 869.

A physician engaged to attend an injured employee has no implied authority to employ assistants. Bond v. Hurd, 31 Mont. 314, 3 Ann. Cas. 566.

⁸⁹ Gwilliam v. Twist, [1895] 2 Q. B. 84.

⁹⁰ See Aga v. Harbach, 127 Iowa, 144, 109 Am. St. R. 377; Marks v. Rochester R. Co., 146 N. Y. 181; Goff v. Toledo, etc., R. Co., 28 Ill. App. 529; East Line, etc., R. Co. v. Scott, 71 Tex. 703, 10 Am. St. R. 804; Johnson v. Ashland Water Co., 71 Wis. 553, 5 Am. St. R. 243.

For the liability of the master for the negligence of a stranger assisting a servant, see post, Book IV, Chap. V.

management or control, and to whom some measure of discretion in dealing with emergencies may fairly be imputed.⁹¹

§ 1043. What employment authorized.—The authority of the agent to employ, may be either general or special. Where his authority is general, or apparently general, he may bind his principal by contract within the range of what is usual and reasonable in such cases.⁹² In deciding upon the quality or the quantity of the help to be employed, his range would be determined by the apparent, rather than by the actual need, where these were different. In fixing the duration of the employment he may agree for such a length of time as would, "under all the circumstances, be reasonable, considering the nature of the business, the season of the year in which it is usually prosecuted, and the length of time it is likely to take to complete the work."⁹³ In fix-

⁹¹ Conductor of a train may in an emergency employ a brakeman, fireman and the like. Georgia Pac. Ry. Co. v. Probst, 85 Ala. 203; Sloan v. Central Iowa Ry. Co., 62 Iowa, 728; Fox v. Chicago, etc., Ry. Co., 86 Iowa, 368, 17 L. R. A. 289.

⁹² In Farrington v. Hayes, 65 Vt. 153, defendant telegraphed his agent, "Employ Farrington and Post. Letter will follow." The agent employed F and B in accordance with the telegram, not knowing of any restriction in the letter, but showed F and B the telegram. The letter when it arrived contained instruction not to employ F and B unless they would do the work for $500. The agent never showed the letter to F and B, and they did work worth $1,720. Held, that the authority conferred by the telegram was absolute; that F and B were entitled to the reasonable value of their services; and that the statement that, "letter will follow" did not put them upon inquiry as to the agent's authority.

A special and temporary authority to employ men to work at a particular place (e. g. in a certain town) does not justify the employment of men to work at a different place (e. g., in another town or city). Williams v. Kerrick, 105 Minn. 254.

In Beaucage v. Mercer, 206 Mass. 492, 138 Am. St. R. 401, it is said:

"If, for instance, the authority real and apparent of Eagen [the agent who employed] was limited to the selection of only the necessary number of men, and he selected more, then the surplus men could not be regarded as the servants of the defendant; but if Eagen was empowered to send as many men as he thought necessary and acting under such authority he sent such men as he thought necessary but more than in fact were necessary, or if he was empowered to send as many men as he pleased and sent more than were necessary, in either case all the men so sent would be the servants of the defendant whether or not they were in fact needed."

⁹³ Drohan v. Merrill & Ring Lumber Co., 75 Minn. 251, where an employment for three winter months of a blacksmith and "handy man" in a lumber camp was held to be reasonable.

In World's Columbian Exposition v. Richards, 57 Ill. App. 601, an employment for the six months that the exposition was to remain open was held justified.

In Williams v. Getty, 31 Pa. 461, 72 Am. Dec. 757, it is said, "If it were such a business as it was apparent would last but six months, a contract for a year doubtless would not be binding on the principal, being the rate of compensation, where no other terms were prescribed, he would be governed by the market or customary rate or if none, by a reasonable rate.⁹⁴

XIV.

OF AGENT AUTHORIZED TO SHIP GOODS.

§ 1044. How authority arises.—The authority of an agent to ship goods, like that of other agents already considered, may be conferred expressly, or it may result from conduct or an established course of dealing.⁹⁵ An unauthorized shipment may also be rendered valid by a subsequent ratification.⁹⁶ cause the party employed would be acting in bad faith, in undertaking when it was apparent he would not be needed; and besides it would be equally apparent that such a contract was not necessary to the accomplishment of the object. So, if the business were such as would apparently last for months, an employment for one or more months would seem to all to be covered by the agent's implied authority, and would bind."

In Cohen v. Goldstein, 128 N. Y. Supp. 69 an agent with authority to hire was held to have power to hire for one year.

In Laming v. Peters Shoe Co., 71 Mo. App. 646, a hiring for one year was sustained.

In Roche v. Pennington, 90 Wis. 107, a general agent's undertaking, upon hiring an employee for a year, to take the risk of the employee's competency was sustained.

In Deffenbaugh v. Jackson Paper Mfg. Co., 120 Mich. 242, an agreement by the superintendent to give the employee an interest in the business was held not to be within his power.

⁹⁴ Cross v. R. R. Co., 141 Mo. 132. In the Ala. Great South. R. Co. v. Hill, 76 Ala. 303, it was said, "Power to employ an agent or servant, if there be no restrictive words, includes the authority to make a complete express contract, definite as to the amount of wages, as upon all other terms."

In Opinion of Justices, 72 N. H. 601, it was said, "Authority to employ agents and other persons necessarily implies power to contract with them for their compensation according to the method usual in matters of the kind."

Authority to employ would justify fixing a fair compensation, but not an agreement that the principal would also pay what was then owing to the employee by his former employer. Ricker Nat. Bank v. Stone, 21 Okla. 833. See also Holloway v. Stephens, 1 Hun (N. Y.), 380, 2 Thomp. & Cook (N. Y.), 562; where an extravagant contract was held unauthorized.

⁹⁵ See Hix v. Eastern S. S. Co., 107 Me. 357. No authority to ship.—The mere employment of a teamster to haul goods to a warehouse does not authorize him to ship them and take a shipping receipt therefor. Zoru v. Livesley, 44 Or. 501. So where a teamster was directed to take goods to a wharf, but not directed to ship them. Seller v. Steamship Pacific, 1 Or. 409, Fed. Cas. No. 12,644.

Written authority to an agent to represent his principal "in weighing my cattle" at a certain place in pursuance of a contract of sale, does not authorize him to ship them to another town to be weighed. Mann v. Dublin Cotton-Oil Co., 92 Tex. 377.

⁹⁶ Nelson v. Hudson R. R. Co., 48

Where the principal directs an agent to ship goods to some particular place, and no other method of transportation is provided for or contemplated, and there is a public carrier over whose line such goods would naturally and reasonably be transported, the direction to ship them would ordinarily be construed as a direction to ship them by such carrier.

Where there were several such carriers, the agent would doubtless bind his principal by a reasonable choice of one.

§ 1045. How authority to be exercised—Agreeing upon terms of shipment.—It would be entirely competent for the principal to direct the agent in the choice of a carrier, and as to the terms and conditions of the contract of carriage. Such directions would of course be binding on the agent, and upon all third persons charged with notice of them.⁹⁷ An agent, however, authorized to ship, and not known to be subject to any limitations, would have apparent authority to select the carrier and agree upon the terms and conditions of carriage, subject to the limitation of what is usual and reasonable in such cases.

§ 1046. ——— Agreements limiting liability of carrier.—Thus, it has been held in many cases that an agent, entrusted with the possession of goods and authorized to ship them, and being the only person on the ground with whom any contract which it is proper to make may be made, has apparent authority to do whatever is necessary and usual in such cases; and he may therefore bind his principal by his agreements respecting the ordinary terms and conditions of the carriage, and by his execution and delivery or acceptance of the cus-

N. Y. 498; Russell v. Erie R. Co., 70 N. J. L. 808, 67 L. R. A. 433, 1 Am. & E. Ann. Cas. 672.

⁹⁷ Where the principal in person had made an oral contract with the agent of an express company for the transportation and delivery of horses within a certain definite time, and later sent the horses by agent to be delivered to this agent of the carrier, he is not bound by a shipping receipt taken by his agent which, without the knowledge or consent of the principal, contained a clause exempting the carrier from liability for loss caused by delay. Waldron v. Fargo, 170 N. Y. 130. See also, Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Watson, 71 Kan. 696.

So an agent merely sent to ship goods has no apparent authority to ship upon different terms from those indicated by the principal's written directions which the agent brings with him. Russell v. Erie R. Co., 70 N. J. L. 808, 1 Am. & E. Ann. Cas. 672, 67 L. R. A. 433.

In Willborn v. Southern Ry. Co., 6 Ga. App. 151, an agent, authorized to carry goods to the railroad and load them, made a contract limiting the carrier's liability; the agent of the carrier knew that the person presenting the goods was not the shipper, but an agent. Held, that the shipper was not bound by the special contract.

tomary documents, including such releases of the carrier's liability as it is lawful and customary for the carrier to give or receive.⁹⁸

⁹⁸ California Powder Works v. Atlantic, etc., R. Co., 113 Cal. 329, 36 L. R. A. 648; Atchison, etc., Ry. Co. v. Baldwin, — Colo. —, 128 Pac. 449; 111 Cent. R. Co. v. Jonte, 13 Ill. App. 424; Brown v. L. & N. Ry. Co., 36 Ill. App. 140; Wabash R. Co. v. Curtis, 134 Ill. App. 409 (but see Merchants' Desp. Transp. Co. v. Joesting, 89 Ill. 152; Plaff v. Pacific Exp. Co., 159 Ill. App. 493, 251 Ill. 243); Adams Express Co. v. Byers, — Ind. —, 95 N. E. 513; Adams Exp. Co. v. Carnahan, 29 Ind. App. 606, 94 Am. St. R. 279; Hill v. Boston, etc., R. R. Co., 144 Mass. 284; Peirce v. American Exp. Co., 210 Mass. 383; Nelson v. Hudson River R. R. Co., 48 N. Y. 498; Skelton v. Transp. Co., 59 N. Y. 258; Jennings v. Grand Trunk Ry. Co., 127 N. Y. 438; Zimmer v. New York, etc., R. Co., 137 N. Y. 460; Donovan v. Standard Oil Co., 155 N. Y. 112; Root v. New York & N. E. R. Co., 76 Hun (N. Y.), 23; Smith v. Robinson Bros., 88 Hun (N. Y.), 148; Jones v. New York L. E. & W. R. R. Co., 3 N. Y. App. Div. 341; Knapp v. Wells, Fargo & Co., 134 N. Y. App. Div. 712; Addoms v. Weir, 56 N. Y. Misc. 487 (and cases cited); Smith Meat Co. v. Oregon Ry., 59 Ore. 206; Ryan v. M. K. & T. Ry. Co., 65 Tex. 13, 57 Am. Rep. 589; Missouri Pac. Ry. Co. v. International, etc., Ins. Co., 84 Tex. 149; Head v. Pacific Express Co., — Tex. Civ. App. —, 126 S. W. 682; Oregon Short Line Ry. Co. v. Blyth, 19 Wyo. 410; Aldridge v. Gt. Western Ry. Co., 15 Com. B. (N. S.) 582. [In the similar case of shipments by the seller of goods, see McElvain v. St. Louis, etc., Ry. Co., 151 Mo. App. 126; Lewis v. Imhof, 138 Mo. App. 370.]

In Brunner v. Platt, 50 N. Y. Misc. 571, plaintiff requested an express company to send to his house and obtain and transport a suitcase. The agent called at the house, obtained the suitcase from the maid, who paid the charges, and accepted a receipt containing a clause limiting liability. Held that the maid was an agent to ship, within the rule. On very similar facts, it was held in Wright v. Fargo, 59 N. Y. Misc. 416, that although the maid was the agent, her mere acceptance of the receipt left with her, in the absence of any reliance upon the receipt by the principal, did not make a binding contract with the principal which would preclude a right to sue upon the carrier's common-law liability. In Belger v. Dinsmore, 51 N. Y. 166, 10 Am. Rep. 575, the agent who delivered the goods and accepted the receipt was the shipper's wife. In Missouri, etc., Ry. Co. v. Patrick, 114 Fed. 632, 75 C. C. A. 434, the wife delivered the goods, and it was held that she acted as the agent of her husband and bound him by the release, although there was evidence that she could not read and did not appreciate the terms included in the receipt. There was also evidence here of ratification and acceptance of a reduced rate given in consideration of the release.

In Oregon, etc., Ry. Co. v. Blyth, 19 Wyo. 410, where household goods had been left with a storage company for shipment, the court said, "It is not contended . . . that the storage company was not the agent of Mr. Blyth for the shipment of these goods; and in fact, no such contention could be sustained under the evidence. In such case, where the owner of goods directs his agent to ship the same without further directions or restrictions, the law implies authority in the agent to make a reasonable contract with the carrier limiting the carrier's liability." So in Addoms v. Weir, 56 N. Y. Misc. 487, where the plaintiff told the bell-boy at her hotel to take a package to Adams Express and he took a receipt limiting liability where no value was declared, it was held that he had been, by her act, constituted her agent for all purposes necessary to the shipment, and that she could not base an action upon the receipt for her goods without being bound by the contract stated in the receipt.

§ 1047. — But such an agent would have no implied authority to change contracts of shipment already made by his principal,⁹⁹

⁹⁹ Jennings v. Grand Trunk Ry. Co., 127 N. Y. 438; Atchison, etc., Ry. Co. v. Watson, 71 Kan. 696; North- west Transp. Co. v. McKenzie, 25 Can. Sup. Ct. 38; Wilson v. Canadian Devel. Co., 33 Can. Sup. Ct. 432.

In Hix v. Eastern Steamship Co., 107 Me. 357, where the plaintiff had been a shipper of horses for many years and had several times accepted bills of lading signed in his name by the agent, it was held that he had held out the agent as having authority to bind him by the special contract embodied in the bill of lading and that he knew or ought to have known the terms of that contract.

An agent of a non-resident firm, in buying cotton and shipping it to his principal, may make any lawful and ordinary contract of shipment, and hence may agree that the carrier shall have the benefit of insurance on the goods. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co. v. International, etc., Ins. Co., 84 Tex. 149.

Shipment by truckman or drayman.—Where a drayman, whose regular duty it was to haul gunpowder to a depot for shipment, had also authority to ship it for the company to its destination, he may bind the principal by signing a shipping order limiting the liability of the carrier against loss by fire. California Powder Works v. Atlantic, etc., R. Co., 113 Cal. 329, 36 L. R. A. 648.

Compare Benson v. Oregon Short L. R. Co., 35 Utah, 241, 136 Am. St. R. 1052, 19 Ann. Cas. 803, post.

Plaintiff purchased a mirror, directing the seller to deliver it to defendant for transportation. Seller sent it by a cartman to defendant's depot. Defendant's agent refused to receive the mirror unless the cartman would sign a contract releasing liability for breakage. The cartman signed the contract, but on condition that defendant would not ship it until the next day, and then it should be returned if seller requested. The cartman made known the facts to the seller and delivered to him a duplicate contract. No dissent or request to return having been made by the latter, the mirror was shipped and was broken in transitu. Held, that the seller was authorized to make the contract on behalf of plaintiff, that there was a complete ratification by him of the cartman's acts, and that the contract made was valid and binding upon plaintiff. Nelson v. Hudson River R. Co., 48 N. Y. 498.

Part of the apparent conflict in these cases arises out of the question whether the mere acceptance of the receipt or release by shipper himself or by such drayman or truckman with authority to ship is binding as a special contract, limiting liability in the absence of any evidence of express assent. Such cases as Cohen v. U. S. Express Co., 81 N. J. L. 355; Hill v. Adams Express Co., 80 N. J. L. 604; Lansing v. N. Y. Central, etc., R. R. Co., 52 Misc. 334; Atlantic C. L. R. Co. v. Dexter, 50 Fla. 180, 111 Am. St. R. 116; seem to turn upon this question. In Hill v. Adams Express Co., 77 N. J. L. 19, the supreme court argued against the authority of the truckman but that case was reversed in the Court of Errors, 78 N. J. L. 333, though this court declined to pass and the carrier could not rely upon the contract where he knew, from previous dealings with the principal, of limitations upon the agent's upon this particular question since they found no evidence that the truckman was authorized to ship. In the final disposition of the case, in — N. J. L. —, 81 Atl. 859, the case is put upon the question of assent to the terms.

In Hailparn v. Joy Steamship Co., 50 N. Y. Misc. 566, the plaintiff told the truckman to deliver the goods to the defendant for shipment and get a receipt for them. The truckman took a bill of lading, giving his own name as "owner or shipper," and, at the request of the carrier's agent who knew that he was a "mere truckman," signed a release. The court held that there was no authority to bind the plaintiff by such a release.

In Benson v. Oregon Short Line R. Co., 35 Utah, 241, 136 Am. St. R. 1052, 19 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 803, the owner had employed a drayman to pack and ship the goods, and the drayman had made a contract limiting liability. Held, that the owner was not bound. The cases which it chiefly relies upon,—Nelson v. Hudson R. R. Co., 48 N. Y. 498, cited ante; Seller v. Steamship Pacific, 1 Or. 409, Fed. Cas. No. 12,644, also cited ante; and Russell v. Erie R. Co., 70 N. J. L. 808, 67 L. R. A. 433, 1 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 672, cited post, seem clearly distinguishable.

Rule in Illinois.—In Illinois, notwithstanding some conflict in the cases, it seems to be the rule that limitations upon the carrier's common-law liability can only be made when the shipper clearly assents to them; and that consequently, if the goods are shipped by an agent, his actual authority to assent to the limitations must be shown; it will not be inferred merely from his authority to ship. In the absence of any proof to the contrary, the presumption would be that he is to preserve the common-law liability, and not to waive it. See Merchants Despatch Transp. Co. v. Joesting, 89 Ill. 152; Plaff v. Pacific Express Co., 159 Ill. App. 493, 251 Ill. 243. Compare Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Jonte, 13 Ill. App. 424; Brown v. Louisville, etc., R. Co., 36 Ill. App. 140; Wabash R. Co. v. Curtis, 134 Ill. App. 409.

Contract by initial carrier with connecting carrier.—Where goods are delivered to the first of a series of carriers, without a special contract, the initial carrier has no implied authority to put a limited valuation upon the goods when delivering them to the connecting carrier. Adams Express Co. v. Byers, 176 Ind. —, 95 N. E. 513.

Authority of agent sent along with the goods.—A principal in an interior town in Illinois, who desired to ship property, including some horses, to a town in Minnesota, arranged for a through rate, but took a shipping receipt only to Chicago, at which place the property was to be transferred to another road. He sent an agent in charge of the property, and gave him money to pay freight from Chicago to destination. At Chicago, this agent made a contract with the second carrier, which contained a clause requiring claims for damages to be presented within 30 days. Held, that this contract bound the principal. Armstrong v. Chicago, etc., Ry. Co., 53 Minn. 183.

So, in a similar case, an agent sent in charge of a carload of hogs was held to bind his principal by a contract limiting the carrier's liability made at a connecting point upon the way. Squire v. New York, etc., R. Co., 98 Mass. 239, 93 Am. Dec. 162. But see Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. White (Tex. Civ. App.), 32 S. W. 322. But not so, where the person sent along is evidently a mere attendant, and the principal has already made an oral contract in the authority¹ or where the contract which the agent makes is obviously at variance with the instructions which he brings with him or with the terms of a contract prepared by the principal and sent by him with the goods to be executed by the carrier.²

XV.

OF AGENT AUTHORIZED TO CARE FOR PROPERTY.

§ 1048. Nature and extent of authority.—The authority of an agent authorized to care for property may, according to the circumstances, range from that of general manager to that of a mere bailee. Where the agent is merely a custodian or caretaker his authority to bind the principal by contract is very limited.³ "It is confined, at the most, to what is immediately and imperatively necessary for the protection of the premises;" and would not justify the making of extensive repairs and a fortiori general alterations and improvements.⁴ So, authority to an agent "to take good care of the property, and give [the principal] notice of any lien," does not justify the agent in employing another person to bid in the property at a sale upon a distress warrant in such wise as to bind the principal to receive the property and pay the bid.⁵ Authority to care for property will not justify selling or otherwise disposing of it⁶ and the like.

matter. Atchison, etc., Ry. Co. v. Watson, 71 Kan. 696.

¹ Waldron v. Fargo, 170 N. Y. 130.

² Russell v. Erie R. Co., 70 N. J. L. 808, 67 L. R. A. 433, 1 Am. & E. Ann. Cas. 672, where the agent brought with him a shipping order already made out by his principal for execution by the carrier.

³ An 18 year old daughter of a farmer, left in charge of his farm for a few hours, is not thereby authorized to resist by force an entry upon a part of the farm which has been legally condemned for public use. East Jersey Water Co. v. Slingerland, 58 N. J. L. 411.

⁴ It seems that a caretaker in charge of a city house has no implied authority to order repairs made to it beyond such as are immediately and imperatively necessary for its protection; and is not impliedly authorized to order extensive plumbing repairs, as a consequence of a leak in the pipes, where turning off the water would have prevented any damage. Hill v. Coates, 34 Misc. (N. Y.) 535.

⁵ Brisbane v. Adams, 3 N. Y. 129.

⁶ McGraw v. O'Neil, 123 Mo. App. 691.

A porter in a garage has no implied authority to receive for safe-keeping the sample case of a person who stored his car at the garage. Chesley v. Woods Co., 147 Ill. App. 588.

A person employed to care for and drive a race horse has no implied authority to receive a purse won by the horse. Snow v. Wathen, 112 N. Y. Supp. (App. Div.) 41.

A person sent to draw from the barrels and bring to his employer a few bottles of whiskey; the barrels being stored on the employer's premises, has no implied authority to deliver the barrels of whiskey to a person searching for whiskey unlawfully kept. Nash v. Noble, 46 Tex. Civ. App. 369.

As to liability of employer for false imprisonment or malicious

XVI.

OF AGENTS AUTHORIZED TO REPRESENT INSURERS.

§ 1049. Purpose of this subdivision.—It is the purpose of this subdivision to discuss briefly the construction of the authority of the agents who are appointed to represent those persons or companies who are engaged in the business of insuring others against the consequences of death, fire, accident, and other casualties. These agents are known, in popular language, as insurance agents. Although persons who desire insurance may appoint agents to represent them in obtaining it, and although such agents might be called insurance agents, they are not the ones popularly designated by that term, nor are they the ones who are here to be considered.

There is also a class of professional agents who make a business of procuring or furnishing insurance for their clients, as they may happen to be employed, but who are not the regularly appointed agents of any particular insurer. They are insurance brokers, and the questions concerning them will be dealt with in a later chapter on Brokers.⁷ The discussion here, as has been stated, is confined to the agents who regularly and exclusively act for those who are to furnish the insurance.

In this country, unlike some others, the insurance business is almost, if not quite wholly in the hands of incorporated companies, organized under local laws, and extending their business frequently over wide areas and having their agents in localities far removed from the place in which the company may be located and have its chief office and officers.

By reason of the fact that the company is thus often so far away, and the local agent is the only representative of it which the insured sees or deals with, the local agent takes on, in the minds of those who deal with him, a representative character which is not possessed by agents who operate in many other fields.

The insurance business has also a characteristic not possessed by any other, in the fact that it is usually not until after a loss has happened and it is entirely too late to restore the parties to their original position, that questions arise between the parties. To deny effect at that time, is, therefore, not only to greatly disappoint expectations, but to do so only when the opportunity for making new or more satisfactory arrangements is forever gone. The possibility of escaping responsibility for a loss incurred seems naturally to tempt the insurer to insist upon every technicality in its favor, and to make the most of every possible defence; and companies have often filled their policies with more or less obscure and narrow conditions which only come to the actual knowledge of the insured when they are urged after loss as a ground for escaping responsibility.

prosecution by caretakers, see Daniel v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 136 N. Car. 517, 67 L. R. A. 455, 1 Ann. Cas. 718; Thomas v. Canadian Pacific Ry. Co., 14 Ont. L. R. 55, 8 Ann. Cas. 324; and cases cited post, Book IV, Chapter V.

⁷ See post, Book V. BROKERS.

The making of contracts of insurance is also peculiar in this, that the average person acts without competent professional advice. If he were buying the property, he would have legal assistance, but in insuring the same property he trusts to his own judgment and the assurances which he receives from the agent of the opposite party.

As the result of these and other reasons which might be mentioned, there has developed a popular prejudice against defences by insurance companies, and a tendency on the part of courts to protect the insured wherever possible, which have tended to make the law respecting insurance agents a distinct branch of the law of agency. Doctrines which usually prevail are here often ignored, and rules of construction are here often extended, until it sometimes seems to be the fact that insurance litigation marks the vanishing point of many of the established principles of agency.

The whole question is very much in need of a thorough revision, but the field has now become so great and the number of cases to be dealt with is so enormous that it can not be undertaken here. All that will be here attempted is a brief statement of the more important rules which prevail upon the subject. No attempt to cite all of the cases will be made.

§ 1050. Classification of agents.—There is in the insurance business a variety of agents having some particular function to perform and deriving their special name from that function:—thus there is the appraiser, the adjuster, the medical examiner, etc., but these are not here to be considered. Apart from these, insurance agents as a whole may be roughly divided into two classes: 1. Issuing agents; 2. Soliciting agents. It is the scope of the authority of these agents that will be considered here.

1. The issuing agent, usually of a fire or casualty company, is an agent who is given express authority to accept risks, agree upon the terms of insurance, and carry them into effect by issuing and renewing policies. They are usually furnished with blank policies by the insurance company and are authorized to fill them up and deliver them without further preliminary consent on the part of the company. Of such agents there are two degrees determined by the geographical limits of their authority,—the local agent, representing the company within a limited territory, and the so-called general, district, or division agent representing the company over a large territory and often having supervisory and appointive powers over the local agents within his territory.

2. The soliciting agent, often called a special agent, usually of a life insurance company, is an agent who usually has no authority to make a binding contract, but who merely solicits applications for insurance and forwards them to be passed upon at the office of his company. In addition he often countersigns the policy if issued, delivers it and collects the premium. Of such agents there are also two kinds—the general and the local, bearing the same relation to each other as the corresponding issuing agents.

§ 1051. How relationship is created.—Insurance agents are usually appointed by a written commission, but it is not necessary that they be so appointed, and the relationship of principal and agent in this case, as in others, may be created in various ways other than by specific appointment. Thus the relationship may be actually created by the course of dealing between the principal and the alleged agent;⁸ it may be made to appear by the agent's being held out to the public as such;⁹ or its effect may be obtained by the acceptance and ratification of his acts by the principal.¹⁰ The statutory standard form of policy adopted in many of the states puts some limitations upon this rule, by provisions, not always uniform, that, for certain purposes at least, the agent must be authorized by writing.¹¹

§ 1052. Whose agent he is.—The insurance broker, as is pointed out elsewhere,¹² is ordinarily the agent of the insured. The discussion here is confined to the authority of the admitted agent of the company.

⁸ National Mutual Church Ins. Co. v. Trustee of M. E. Church, 105 Ill. App. 143; Hamilton v. Home Ins. Co., 94 Mo. 353; Rahr v. Manchester Fire Assur. Co., 93 Wis. 355.

⁹ Slater v. Capital Ins. Co., 89 Iowa, 628, 23 L. R. A. 181; Mannheim Ins. Co. v. Chipman, 124 Fed. 950; Hardin v. Alexandria Ins. Co., 90 Va. 413. See also, Dickerman v. Quincy Mutual Fire Ins. Co., 67 Vt. 609.

¹⁰ Keith v. Globe Ins. Co., 52 Ill. 518, 4 Am. Rep. 624; The Indiana Ins. Co. v. Hartwell, 123 Ind. 177;

McArthur v. Home Life Ass'n, 73 Iowa, 336, 5 Am. St. Rep. 634; Packard v. Dorchester Mutual Fire Ins. Co., 77 Me. 144.

¹¹ See Gazzam v. German Un. F. Ins. Co., 155 N. Car. 330, Ann. Cas. 1912 C. 362; Armstrong v. Western Manufac. Inv. Co., 95 Mich. 139; Burgeois v. Northwestern Nat. Ins. Co., 86 Wis. 606; Parker v. Rochester Ins. Co., 162 Mass. 479; Wood v. American F. Ins. Co., 149 N. Y. 382, 52 Am. St. Rep. 733.

¹² See post, Book V, Chap. III on Brokers.

As such he cannot, in accordance with the ordinary rules of loyalty, become the agent of the insured also without the company's consent. Insurance companies have frequently attempted by provisions in their applications or policies, to make their soliciting agent the agent of the insured in all that he does to secure the application, but, by the weight of authority, as will be seen hereafter, such provisions are usually held to be ineffective.¹³

Statutes in several states expressly declare that one who solicits applications, makes contracts, collects premiums, etc., for insurance in a given company shall prima facie be deemed to be the agent of that company.¹⁴

§ 1053. What kind of agent he is.—The issuing agent is almost universally held, so far as the nature and extent of his authority are concerned, to be a general agent of the company,¹⁵ and as such to have authority to bind it by any act within the usual and ordinary scope of such an authority, even though the particular act may be in violation of a limitation upon that authority not brought home to the person dealing with him.¹⁶ This is true whether the issuing agent be local or

¹³ See post, § 1071.

¹⁴ See post, § 1071.

¹⁵ German American Ins. Co. v. Hyman, 42 Colo. 156, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 77; Continental Ins. Co. v. Ruckman, 127 Ill. 364, 11 Am. St. Rep. 121; German Fire Ins. Co. v. Columbia Encaustic Tile Co., 15 Ind. App. 623; Miller v. Phoenix Ins. Co., 27 Iowa, 203, 1 Am. Rep. 262; Richard v. Springfield F. & M. Ins. Co., 114 La. 794, 108 Am. St. Rep. 359, 69 L. R. A. 278; Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Keating, 86 Md. 130, 63 Am. St. Rep. 499; Post v. Aetna Ins. Co., 43 Barb. (N. Y.) 351; Goode v. Georgia Home Ins. Co., 92 Va. 392, 53 Am. St. Rep. 817, 30 L. R. A. 842.

But see Lohnes v. The Insurance Company of North America, 121 Mass. 439; Ruthven v. American Fire Ins. Co., 92 Iowa, 316.

¹⁶ "An agent authorized to issue policies of insurance and consummate the contract, binds his principal by any act, agreement, representation or waiver within the ordinary scope and limit of insurance business which is not known by the assured to be beyond the authority granted to the agent." American Central Ins. Co. v. M'Lanathan, 11 Kan. 533; Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Fallow, 110 Tenn. 720.

Thus the agent's authority to bind the company is not restricted by unknown limitations that the agent is not to insure beyond a certain amount. Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Farrish, 73 Ill. 166; unknown limitations or instructions not to insure the particular property or character of property, Howard Ins. Co. v. Owen's Admr's, 94 Ky. 197; Hicks v. British Am. Assur. Co., 13 N. Y. App. Div. 444; unknown instructions not to insure mortgage interests. Woodbury Savings Bank v. Charter Oak, etc., Ins. Co., 31 Conn. 517; unknown limitations that the agent is not to write special risks for the present, Ruggles v. Am. Cent. Ins. Co., 114 N. Y. 415, 11 Am. St. Rep. 674; unknown instructions not to issue insurance on stocks of merchandise in the hands of married women, Queen Ins. Co. v. Young, 86 Ala. 424, 11 Am. St. Rep. 51; un-general, as those terms are used in insurance, the only difference in their authority being the territorial limits within which they are authorized to act.¹⁷

So, too, the soliciting agent is held to have general powers within the scope of his somewhat narrow authority.¹⁸

§ 1054. Authority to appoint sub-agents.—Certain agents of insurance companies, particularly those having general charge of a large territory, are usually expressly authorized to appoint sub-agents.¹⁹ And where an agent is given authority to represent a company in a territory so large that he obviously cannot perform his duties in person, it is held that he is impliedly authorized to appoint sub-agents.²⁰

The majority of cases have, however, taken even a broader view, and the decided weight of authority, following an early New York case,²¹ though contrary to what would naturally be expected to be held in such cases,²² seems to be that the business of an insurance agent, known limitations as to the form of renewals and renewal receipts, McCullough v. Hartford F. Ins. Co., 2 Pa. Super. 233; secret instructions not to issue an accident policy until approved by the home office, American Employers' Liability Ins. Co., 68 Fed. 873. See also, Franklin F. Ins. Co. v. Bradford, 201 Pa. 32, 88 Am. St. Rep. 770, 55 L. R. A. 408.

¹⁷ Farnum v. Phoenix Ins. Co., 83 Cal. 246, 17 Am. St. Rep. 233; Richard v. Springfield Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 114 La. 794, 108 Am. St. Rep. 359, 69 L. R. A. 278.

¹⁸ "It is not establishing a harsh or unreasonable rule in reference to insurance companies, to hold that their agents, authorized 'to take applications for insurance' are acting within the scope of their authority in everything which they do which may be necessary to complete such applications." Rowley v. The Empire Ins. Co., 36 N. Y. 550; Coombs v. Hannibal Savings and Ins. Co., 43 Mo. 148.

See also, Wright's Admr. v. Northwestern Mutual Life Ins. Co., 91 Ky. 208; Otte v. Hartford Life Ins. Co., 88 Minn. 423, 97 Am. St. Rep. 532. And in Illinois the soliciting agent has been held to be a general agent with power to waive forfeitures and conditions in the policy. Continental Casualty Co. v. Johnson, 119 Ill. App. 93; London Guaranty & Accident Co. v. Hartman, 122 Ill. App. 315; John Hancock Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Schlink, 175 Ill. 284.

¹⁹ Penn. Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Ornauer, 39 Colo. 498; Langdon v. Mutual Life Ins. Co., 14 Fed. 272; Otte v. Hartford Life Ins. Co., 88 Minn. 423, 97 Am. St. Rep. 532; Hamilton v. Home Insurance Co., 94 Mo. 353.

²⁰ "The power delegated to the agent in express terms, being such as to require the services of sub-agents, carries with it the power to appoint subagents whatever the nature of the service in respect of being in itself a personal confidence may be." Insurance Company of North America v. Thornton, 130 Ala. 222, 89 Am. St. Rep. 30, 55 L. R. A. 547; Mutual Life Insurance Company of New York v. Herron, 79 Miss. 381. See also, Gore v. Canada Life Assur. Co., 119 Mich. 136.

²¹ Bodine v. Exchange Fire Ins. Co., 51 N. Y. 117, 10 Am. Rep. 566.

²² See ante, 307. See also, § 317.

either issuing or soliciting, is not of such a discretionary or personal nature that it cannot be delegated.²³ It is said to be a matter of common knowledge, of which the company is, of course, aware, that the insurance business is carried on by agents largely through subordinates; that it cannot properly be carried on in any other way, and that therefore the ordinary local but so-called general agent may, as a matter of implied consent, appoint sub-agents and subordinates whose statements,²⁴ acts,²⁵ knowledge,²⁶ or receipt of notice,²⁷ within the ordinary course of the business and within the scope of the general agent's authority, will bind the company. And this is true even in the face of a provision in the policy that only persons appointed in a specified manner shall be deemed to be agents of the company.²⁸

But a special agent, such as an adjuster, appointed by reason of his personal skill and fitness, cannot, it is held, appoint a sub-agent whose acts will bind the company.²⁹

§ 1055. Authority to make oral contracts.—Since, in the absence of a statute to the contrary, there is no requirement that contracts of insurance shall be in writing, a general agent, with authority to himself issue a policy, may, it is held, make either a valid oral contract of ²³ London & Lancashire Fire Ins. Co. v. Gerteison, 106 Ky. 815; Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Spiers, 87 Ky. 285; Bodine v. Exchange Fire Ins. Co., supra; Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Fallow, 110 Tenn. 720.

Contra, Waldman v. North British Mercantile Ins. Co., 91 Ala. 170, 24 Am. St. Rep. 883; McClure v. Mississippi Valley Ins. Co., 4 Mo. App. 148. See also, Home Fire Ins. Co. v. Garbacz, 48 Neb. 827.

²⁴ Eclectic Life Ins. Co. v. Fahr-enkrug, 68 Ill. 463; International Trust Co. v. Norwich Union Fire Insurance Society, 71 Fed. 81.

²⁵ Manufacturers' & Merchants' Mutual Ins. Co. v. Armstrong, 45 Ill. App. 217; German Fire Ins. Co. v. Columbia Encaustic Tile Co., 15 Ind. App. 623; Pelican Assurance Company of New York v. Schild-knecht, 128 Ky. 351; Mutual Life Insurance Company of New York v. Herron, 79 Miss. 381; Bodine v. Exchange Fire Ins. Co., supra; Kuney

v. The Amazon Ins. Co., 36 Hun (N. Y.), 66; Massachusetts Life Ins. Co. v. Eshelman, 30 Ohio St. 647; Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Fallow, 110 Tenn. 720; Deitz v. Providence Washington Ins. Co., 33 W. Va. 526, 25 Am. St. Rep. 908.

²⁶ London & Lancashire Fire Ins. Co. v. Gerteisen, 106 Ky. 815; Steele v. German Ins. Co., 93 Mich. 81, 18 L. R. A. 85; Bergeron v. Pamlico Insurance and Banking Co., 111 N. Car. 45; McGonigle v. Susquehanna Fire Ins. Co., 168 Pa. 1; Harding v. Norwich Union Fire Ins. Co., 10 S. D. 64. See also, Prudential Fire Ins. Co. v. Alley, 104 Va. 356.

²⁷ Arff v. Star Fire Ins. Co., 125 N. Y. 57, 21 Am. St. Rep. 721, 10 L. R. A. 609.

²⁸ German Fire Ins. Co. v. Encaustic Tile Co., 15 Ind. App. 623; Arff v. Star Fire Ins. Co., supra.

²⁹ Albers v. Phoenix Ins. Co., 68 Mo. App. 543; Ruthven v. American Fire Ins. Co., 92 Iowa, 316.

present insurance,³⁰ certainly a temporary and provisional one, or an oral contract to issue a policy.³¹

But a mere soliciting agent, not being authorized to make binding contracts of any kind, has no such authority.³²

§ 1056. Authority to renew.—The ordinary issuing or general agent is usually given express authority to renew insurance, but even without such specific grant, he is held to have authority to renew a policy already issued,³³ and this he may do orally as well as in writing,³⁴ and ³⁰ Insurance Company of North America v. Thornton, 130 Ala. 222, 89 Am. St. Rep. 30, 55 L. R. A. 547; Commercial Union Assur. Co. v. State, 113 Ind. 331; Baker v. Commercial Union Assur. Co., 162 Mass. 358; Hicks v. British America Assur. Co., 162 N. Y. 284, 48 L. R. A. 424; Newark Machine Co. v. Kenton Ins. Co., 50 Ohio St. 549, 22 L. R. A. 768; Stickley v. Mobile Ins. Co., 37 S. Car. 56; Relief Fire Ins. Co. v. Shaw, 94 U. S. 574, 24 L. Ed. 291; Mathers v. Union Mutual Accident Ass'n, 78 Wis. 588, 11 L. R. A. 83; (mutual company) Loomis v. Jefferson County Patrons Fire Relief Ass'n, 92 N. Y. App. Div. 601; (by sub-agent) Pelican Assurance Co. of N. Y. v. Schildknecht, 128 Ky. 351; (of renewal) Baubie v. Aetna Ins. Co., 2 Dill. 156; Squire v. Hanover Fire Ins. Co., 162 N. Y. 552, 76 Am. St. Rep. 349.

³¹ Sanborn v. Fireman's Ins. Co., 16 Gray (Mass.), 448, 77 Am. Dec. 419; Ellis v. Albany City Fire Ins. Co., 50 N. Y. 402, 10 Am. Rep. 495; Rhodes v. Railway Passenger Ins. Co., 5 Lans. (N. Y.) 71; (to issue renewal policy) Brown v. Home Ins. Co., 82 Kan. 442; Post v. Aetna Ins. Co., 43 Barb. (N. Y.) 351; McCabe v. Aetna Ins. Co., 9 N. D. 19, 47 L. R. A. 641. Contra, Underwood v. Pennsylvania Fire Ins. Co., 134 N. Y. Supp. 105 (not under statutory standard policy). See Benner v. Fire Association of Philadelphia, 229 Pa. 75, 140 Am. St. Rep. 706; (where the particular statute under which the company was incorporated was held not to permit it); Caldwell v.

Virginia Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 124 Tenn. 593 (where the insured was charged with notice from former dealings that the agent's authority was confined to issuing policies upon the company's printed blanks).

³² O'Brien v. New Zealand Ins. Co., 108 Cal. 227; Winnesheik Ins. Co. v. Holzgrafe, 53 Ill. 516, 5 Am. Rep. 64; Embree v. German Ins. Co., 62 Mo. App. 132; Allen v. St. Lawrence County Farmers' Ins. Co., 88 Hun (N. Y.), 461; Haden v. Farmers' & Mechanics' Fire Ass'n, 80 Va. 683.

See also, Security Fire Insurance Company of New York v. Kentucky Marine & Fire Insurance Co., 7 Bush (Ky.), 81, 3 Am. Rep. 301; Starr v. Mutual Life Ins. Co., 41 Wash. 228; Baldwin v. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co., 182 Mass. 389.

And an oral contract between the insured and the agent to keep the insurance on the property renewed which practically makes the agent the agent of the insured also, will not be binding upon the company. Ramspeck v. Pattillo, 104 Ga. 772, 42 L. R. A. 197; Shank v. Glen Falls Ins. Co., 4 N. Y. App. Div. 516.

³³ Post v. Aetna Ins. Co., 43 Barb. (N. Y.) 351; Franklin F. Ins. Co. v. Massey, 33 Pa. 221.

See also, Benner v. Fire Ass'n, 229 Pa. 75, 140 Am. St. Rep. 706; International Trust Co. v. Norwich Union Fire Insurance Society, 71 Fed. 81; Carroll v. Charter Oak Ins. Co., 38 Barb. (N. Y.) 402; McCullough v. Hartford Ins. Co., 2 Pa. Super. Ct. 233.

³⁴ See ante, § 1055.

where he is authorized to renew in a prescribed manner, he will bind the company by a renewal, though made in a manner not authorized by the company, if the fact of the variance is not known to the insured.³⁵ But a mere soliciting agent has no authority to renew.³⁶

§ 1057. Authority to alter or waive terms—In general.—Two questions closely related, but in fact distinct, stand out as the most important in this general topic. The first of these is the extent of the authority of the agent to alter the printed policy, or waive a condition or provision of it, either at the time of, or after its issuance. Indissolubly bound up with this is the second, namely, the extent to which the principal will be estopped from enforcing a provision of the policy or will be held to have waived a forfeiture by reason of the imputation to it of the knowledge of its agent. Upon these two questions the cases are so numerous, and the results reached by the courts so extremely varied, that it is impossible here to attempt a classification which will include them all, or to state a principle which will explain their divergent results.³⁷ In the following sections, therefore, will be taken up only the larger groups into which they naturally fall.

§ 1058. Authority to alter policy or strike out a provision therein—At the time of issuance.—A general agent with authority to himself issue the policy, may, at the time he issues it, strike out of it or add to it such provisions and conditions, of the sort ordinarily left open to negotiation, as he and the assured may agree upon.³⁸ This is often spoken of as a case of waiver, but it would seem incorrectly so, since waiver presupposes the existence of an obligation which in this case is yet to be created.³⁹ It might more simply and properly be stated that since he has the authority to make the contract of insurance, he has authority to make it in the ordinary form, and may therefore embody

³⁵ Western Home Ins. Co. v. Hogue, 41 Kan. 524.

³⁶ Pacific Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Carter, 92 Ark. 378.

³⁷ "Upon this subject of the power of agents to waive conditions imposing on the party insured duties proper for the protection of the insuring company, there is a world of decisions, and they are a wilderness of conflicting cases, and to attempt anything like a review of them in detail would be only to grope and wander in that wilderness, and in the end lead to bewilderment." Brannon, J., in Maupin v. Scottish Union & National Ins. Co., 53 W. Va. 557.

³⁸ Gloucester Mfg. Co. v. Howard F. Ins. Co., 71 Mass. 497, 66 Am. Dec. 376 (clause added); Dayton Ins. Co. v. Kelly, 24 Ohio St. 345, 15 Am. Rep. 612 (clause erased).

³⁹ Continental Ins. Co. v. Ruckman, 127 Ill. 364, 11 Am. St. Rep. 121; (United Fireman's Ins. Co. v. Thomas, 82 Fed. 406, 47 L. R. A. 450; affirmed on rehearing, 92 Fed. 127, 47 L. R. A. 455).

in it or leave out of it such provisions of the sort in question as the parties may agree upon.⁴⁰

But a mere soliciting agent has no such authority, nor can it be said to be within his apparent authority, since the assured knows that the agent does not himself issue the policy.⁴¹

§ 1059. Parol waivers at time of issuance.—A far more difficult question is that of the authority of the agent to make a so-called parol waiver at the time he issues the policy. The main difficulty, and the cause of the irreconcilable conflict among the authorities, is, not the extent of the agent's authority, but the question whether the so-called Parol Evidence Rule, or some express limitation in the contract itself prevents the introduction of proof of this contemporaneous oral waiver.

So far as the simple question of the authority of the agent is concerned, it would seem clear that an agent with general authority to make the contract, and with ample authority to make it wholly oral if he sees fit, may make it partly written and partly oral by eliminating or waiving a condition of the written policy by an oral agreement.⁴²

The general nature and extent of the Parol Evidence Rule will not be discussed here. It is sufficient to say here that upon one ground or another most courts, as will be seen, have usually refused to give it effect.⁴³

§ 1060. — Waiving prepayment of premium.—One of the cases most frequently arising is that of the authority of the agent to waive the payment of the premium at the time of the delivery of the policy. The ordinary fire insurance policy in use in the United States does not expressly provide that the policy shall not become operative until the premium is paid in cash,⁴⁴ but life insurance policies and some others usually do so provide. With reference to the latter, it is fre-

⁴⁰ In American Cent. Ins. Co. v. McLanathan, 11 Kan. 533, Brewer, J., lays down the rule. "That an agent authorized to issue policies of insurance, and consummate the contract, binds his principal by any act, agreement, representation or waiver, within the ordinary scope and limit of insurance business, which is not known by the assured to be beyond the authority granted to the agent."

⁴¹ London Guaranty & Accident Co. v. Missouri & Illinois Coal Co., 103 Mo. App. 530.

But see Continental Casualty Co.

v. Johnson, 119 Ill. App. 93; London Guaranty & Accident Co. v. Hartman, 122 Ill. App. 315.

⁴² Continental Ins. Co. v. Ruckman, 127 Ill. 364, 11 Am. St. Rep. 121; Peoria M. & F. Ins. Co. v. Hall, 12 Mich. 202; Berry v. American Central Ins. Co., 132 N. Y. 49, 28 Am. St. Rep. 548; Murphy v. Royal Ins. Co., 52 La. Ann. 775.

But see Gillum v. Fire Ass'n, 106 Mo. App. 673.

⁴³ See post, §§ 1062, 1063.

⁴⁴ See Kollitz v. Equitable Mut. F. Ins. Co., 92 Minn. 234.

quently said that an agent having general authority and authorized to deliver the policy may waive this provision and give at least a short term of credit.⁴⁵ In most of the cases, however, wherein the authority to give credit has been sustained, the money has in fact been ultimately received; or there has been actual authority, or a course of dealing, or evidence of ratification; or the arrangement between the company and the agent has been such that the company charged the premium to the agent and looked to him for it, giving him at least tacit permission to trust the insured at his own risk.⁴⁶ In a late case in New York, it is held that there can be no such valid waiver in the face of an express provision in the application to the contrary.⁴⁷

⁴⁵ See Boehen v. Williamsburgh Ins. Co., 35 N. Y. 131, 90 Am. Dec. 787; Church v. Lafayette Fire Ins. Co., 66 N. Y. 222; Mississippi Valley L. Ins. Co. v. Neyland, 72 Ky. 430; N. Y. Life Ins. Co. v. McGowan, 18 Kan. 300.

In Triple Link, etc., Ass'n v. Williams, 121 Ala. 138, 77 Am. St. Rep. 34, it was held that the soliciting agent bound the company by accepting less than the known amount of the first payment.

⁴⁶ See United States L. Ins. Co. v. Lesser, 126 Ala. 568; Farnum v. Phoenix Ins. Co., 83 Cal. 246, 17 Am. St. Rep. 233; Jurgens v. N. Y. Life Ins. Co., 114 Cal. 161; Sheldon v. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co., 25 Conn. 207, 65 Am. Dec. 565; Mechanics, etc., Ins. Co. v. Mutual R. E. Ass'n, 98 Ga. 262; Young v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co., 45 Iowa. 377, 24 Am. Rep. 784; Bodine v. Exchange Fire Ins. Co., 51 N. Y. 117, 10 Am. Rep. 566; Long v. Ins. Co., 137 Pa. 335, 21 Am. St. Rep. 879; Cole v. Union Central Life Ins. Co., 22 Wash. 26, 47 L. R. A. 201.

⁴⁷ Russell v. Prudential Ins. Co., 176 N. Y. 178, 98 Am. St. Rep. 656.

⁴⁸ See Mississippi Valley L. Ins. Co. v. Neyland, 72 Ky. 430; New York L. Ins. Co. v. McGowan, 18 Kan. 300; Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Logan, 31 C. C. A. 172, 87 Fed. 637; Kilborn v. Prudential Ins. Co., 99 Minn. 176, seems to go as far as any case. There a life insurance agent took notes payable to his own order for the amount of the first premium at the time of receiving the application. He forwarded the application but not the notes to the home office, where the application was accepted, and the policy issued, and sent to the state agents for delivery. On the following day and before the delivery of the policy to the insured, he was killed. The state agents thereupon returned the policy to the home office and refused to receive the notes which the soliciting agent had taken. These notes were never collected or paid. Nevertheless, the beneficiary was allowed to recover upon the policy. The policy contained no provision that the first premium should be paid in cash only. It was held that the agent had apparent authority to give a short term of credit and to take a note for it.

In National Life Ins. Co. v. Twedell, 22 Ky. L. Rep. 881, 58 S. W. 699, the authority to take a note was upheld, the court saying that it was not only within the apparent scope of his authority but the company had frequently permitted him to do the same thing.

In Carson v. Jersey City Ins. Co., 43 N. J. L. 300, 39 Am. Rep. 584, the agent had taken a note with an endorser, but had had the note discounted at the bank and actually obtained the money upon it.

It is frequently said, and sometimes held, that such an agent may take a note in payment of the premium, though such a holding is contrary to the general rules of agency except under the most general authority or some special circumstances of custom, recognition, or the like, and the better considered cases so limit it.⁴⁸ It has also been said that the agent may accept the assured as his personal debtor, becoming himself liable to the company; but it would seem that this could not be true unless the company had expressly or impliedly consented to it.⁴⁹ It has also been said that he may accept his own debt in payment, but this also seems unsound without the consent of the company,⁵⁰ except to the extent to which the first premium may, under his contract with the company actually belong to the agent.⁵¹

In Provident Savings L. Ins. Soc. v. Oliver, 22 Tex. Civ. App. 8, the agent had on several occasions given credit or taken notes with the knowledge and approval of the general agent of the company.

In Michigan Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Hall, 60 Ill. App. 159, the note had been taken with the understanding that, if it was not accepted by the company, it would be returned. It was not returned, and the agent discounted it and obtained the money upon it.

In Pennsylvania Casualty Co. v. Bacon, 67 C. C. A. 497, 133 Fed. 907, it was said that, "The cases in the federal courts sanctioning this ruling were those in which it appeared that the instructions of the company to its general agents were, in substance, that it would hold them personally responsible for such premiums (Miller v. Life Ins. Co., 12 Wall. 285, 20 L. Ed. 398; Smith v. Provident Saving Society, 31 U. S. App. 163, 65 Fed. 765, 13 C. C. A. 284), or where it appeared that it was the practice of the company to charge the premium to the agent at the time of delivering to him the premium receipt (Fidelity Co. v. Getty's Administrators, 39 U. S. App. 599, 80 Fed. 497, 25 C. C. A. 593").

In Imbrie v. Manhattan L. Ins. Co., 178 Pa. 6, where the agent accepted notes and the company had some knowledge of the arrangement which was contrary to rule, it was held there was evidence of ratification.

In Jurgens v. N. Y. Life Ins. Co., 114 Cal. 161, where the company's solicitor took a note and discounted it and remitted the amount of the premium, less his commissions in cash, to the state agent, this was not in violation of a provision that no agent shall have authority to give credit. Similarly in Jacobs v. Omaha Life Ass'n, 146 Mo. 523, where a rule required the first premium to be in cash, and discounting the note and remittance of proceeds in due course by company's agent was held compliance with the rule. To same effect: Krause v. Equitable L. Assur. Society, 99 Mich. 461.

In Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Abbey, 76 Ark. 328, it was held that a mere local solicitor might not accept a note, but that the state agent might authorize it to be done. See also, Dunham v. Morse, 158 Mass. 132, 35 Am. St. Rep. 473.

⁴⁸ See Lebanon Mut. Ins. Co. v. Hoover, 113 Pa. 591, 57 Am. Rep. 511.

⁴⁹ See Tomasek v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 113 Wis. 114, 90 Am. St. Rep. 846, 57 L. R. A. 455; Hoffman v. Hancock Mut. L. Ins. Co., 92 U. S. 161, 23 L. Ed. 539.

⁵¹ Home Ins. Co. v. Gilman, 112 Ind. 7 (here the agent actually accounted to the company for the

§ 1061. Implied waiver at time of issuance.—Where a general agent, having full authority to make the contract of insurance, and being subject to no known restrictions in that regard, issues a policy with knowledge of an existing breach of one of its conditions, which, if insisted upon, would render it void ab initio, it is held that the agent has impliedly waived the condition, since he must be conclusively presumed to have intended to make a valid agreement.⁵²

§ 1062. Restrictions on authority to waive.—Insurance companies have quite generally attempted to avoid the results of waiver by inserting either in the application, or the policy, or in both, restrictions upon the authority of the agent to alter or waive any of the conditions or provisions of the policy or a restriction upon the manner of the alteration. In passing upon the validity and effect of such provisions, many courts have gone very far in their efforts to protect the assured and prevent a forfeiture. Where the restriction is contained in the application, it is held that the assured having notice of this limitation on the agent's authority is bound by it;⁵³ but where the provision is contained solely in the policy, many of the state courts have held it ineffectual on one or more of the following grounds: (1) that by its terms the restriction applies only to the right of an agent to waive or alter the terms of a completed contract and does not affect its formation;⁵⁴ (2) that at the time the policy is delivered and becomes a bind-money); Pythian Life Ass'n v. Preston, 47 Neb. 374 (here the agent was entitled to the first payment as his commission).

In Hancock Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Schlink, 175 Ill. 284, an agreement with the agent to turn the first premium upon his own debt to the extent of his interest in it was implied.

In Woody v. Old Dominion Ins. Co., 31 Grat. (Va.) 362, 31 Am. Rep. 732, such an arrangement was upheld upon the ground that, under the circumstances, it amounted merely to paying the money to the agent, and his immediately returning it to the insured.

⁵² Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Flemming, 65 Ark. 54, 67 Am. St. Rep. 900, 39 L. R. A. 789; American Central Ins. Co. v. M'Lanathan, 11 Kan. 533; Milwaukee Mechanics' Ins. Co. v. Brown, 3 Kan. App. 225; Leisen v. St. Paul

Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 20 N. D. 316, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 539; Hibernia Ins. Co. v. Malevinsky, 6 Tex. Civ. App. 81; Wood v. American Fire Ins. Co., 149 N. Y. 382, 52 Am. St. Rep. 733. See also, Van Schoick v. Niagara Fire Ins. Co., 68 N. Y. 434.

⁵³ New York L. Ins. Co. v. Fletcher, 117 U. S. 519, 29 L. Ed. 934; Russell v. Prudential Ins. Co., 176 N. Y. 178, 98 Am. St. Rep. 656; Weidert v. State Ins. Co., 19 Oreg. 261, 20 Am. St. Rep. 809; Chase v. Hamilton Ins. Co., 20 N. Y. 52. See also, Cole v. Union Cent. L. Ins. Co., 22 Wash. 26, 47 L. R. A. 201.

⁵⁴ "A waiver is the voluntary yielding up by a party of some existing right, but until the contract is consummated, the company has no rights which are susceptible of waiver, nor can any condition be properly said to be modified or stricken from a policy until there is a policy, that

ing contract, the assured has no notice of this limitation and it therefore is unavailing in the face of the agent's ostensible authority to waive; ⁵⁵ (3) that the agent, having complete authority to waive provisions, may waive the very provision limiting the mode or manner of waiver; ⁵⁶ (4) that since a corporation can only act through agents, and since it has undoubted power to alter its policy,—a provision that such alteration or waiver cannot be made by any agent is void.⁵⁷ In a number of these cases, the principles announced are confessedly peculiar to insurance contracts.⁵⁸

§ 1063. — On the other hand, courts of the highest authority have upheld such restrictions,⁵⁹ and the conclusion that a principal may not, by a restriction brought to the notice of the other party, limit the

is, until after the terms of the contract have been agreed upon and the policy issued. Clearly the clause in question was intended as a limitation upon the powers of agents to waive or modify the terms of a policy after it had been issued, and not upon their power to agree upon and settle the terms of the policy prior to its issue." Continental Ins. Co. v. Ruckman, 127 Ill. 364, 11 Am. St. Rep. 121; Farnum v. Phoenix Ins. Co., 83 Cal. 246, 17 Am. St. Rep. 233; Rickey v. German Guarantee Ins. Co., 79 Mo. App. 485; Crouse v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co., 79 Mich. 249; Wood v. American Fire Ins. Co., 149 N. Y. 382, 52 Am. St. Rep. 733; Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Keating, 86 Md. 130, 63 Am. St. Rep. 499; United Fireman's Ins. Co. v. Thomas, 82 Fed. 406, 47 L. R. A. 455; Johnson v. Aetna Ins. Co., 123 Ga. 404, 107 Am. St. Rep. 92; Medley v. German Alliance Ins. Co., 55 W. Va. 342, 2 Ann. Cas. 99.

⁵⁵ Young v. Hartford F. Ins. Co., 45 Iowa, 377, 24 Am. Rep. 784; Crouse v. Hartford F. Ins. Co., 79 Mich. 249; Cole v. Union Central L. Ins. Co., 22 Wash. 26, 47 L. R. A. 201.

⁵⁶ United States Life Ins. Co. v. Lesser, 126 Ala. 568; Young v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co., 45 Iowa, 377, 24 Am. Rep. 784; Orient Ins. Co. v. Mc-

Knight, 197 Ill. 190; German-American Ins. Co. v. Humphrey, 62 Ark. 348, 54 Am. St. Rep. 297; Western Assur. Co. v. Williams, 94 Ga. 128; Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Landfare, 63 Neb. 559.

⁵⁷ Farnum v. Phoenix Ins. Co., 83 Cal. 246, 17 Am. St. Rep. 233; Long Island Ins. Co. v. Great Western Manufacturing Co., 2 Kan. App. 377; Wilkins v. State Ins. Co. 43 Minn. 177; Home Ins. Co. v. Gibson, 72 Miss. 58.

⁵⁸ See, for example, Chismore v. Anchor Fire Ins. Co., 131 Iowa, 180; Spalding v. New Hampshire Fire Ins. Co., 71 N. H. 441; German Ins. Co. v. Shader, 68 Neb. 1, 60 L. R. A. 918; Welch v. Fire Association, 120 Wis. 456.

⁵⁹ Northern Assur. Co. v. Grand View Bldg. Ass'n, 183 U. S. 308, 46 L. Ed. 213; Liverpool, London & Globe Ins. Co. v. Richardson Lumber Co., 11 Okla. 585; Maupin v. Scottish Union & National Ins. Co., 53 W. Va. 557; Curtin v. Phoenix Ins. Co., 78 Cal. 619; Fidelity, etc., Co. v. Fresno Flume Co., 161 Cal. 466, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 322; Porter v. United States Life Ins. Co., 160 Mass. 183; Kyte v. Commercial Union Ins. Co., 144 Mass. 43; Wolf v. Dwelling House Ins. Co., 75 Mo. App. 337; Reese v. Fidelity Mutual Life Ass'n, 111 Ga. 482.

authority of his agent, or that an agent may waive the limitation known to rest upon his authority, is contrary to the fundamental principles of agency. The supreme court of the United States, particularly, has taken a very decided position upon the question. In its leading case,⁶⁰ it is said: "That contracts in writing, if in unambiguous terms, must be permitted to speak for themselves, and cannot by the courts, at the instance of one of the parties, be altered or contradicted by parol evidence, unless in case of fraud or mutual mistake of facts; that this principle is applicable to cases of insurance contracts as fully as to contracts on other subjects; that provisions contained in fire insurance policies, that such a policy shall be void and of no effect if other insurance is placed on the property in other companies, without the knowledge and consent of the company, are usual and reasonable; that it is reasonable and competent for the parties to agree that such knowledge and consent shall be manifested in writing, either by indorsement upon the policy or by other writing; that it is competent and reasonable for insurance companies to make it matter of condition in their policies that their agents shall not be deemed to have authority to alter or contradict the express terms of the policies as executed and delivered; that where fire insurance policies contain provisions whereby agents may, by writing indorsed upon the policy or by writing attached thereto, express the company's assent to other insurance, such limited grant of authority is the measure of the agent's power in the matter, and where such limitation is expressed in the policy, executed and accepted, the insured is presumed, as matter of law, to be aware of such limitation; that insurance companies may waive forfeiture caused by nonobservance of such conditions; that, where waiver is relied on, the plaintiff must show that the company, with knowledge of the facts that occasioned the forfeiture, dispensed with the observance of the condition; that where the waiver relied on is an act of an agent, it must be shown either that the agent had express authority from the company to make the waiver, or that the company subsequently, with knowledge of the facts, ratified the action of the agent."

Many of the state courts, however, have expressly refused to adopt this view or to follow the lead of the United States supreme court.⁶¹

⁶⁰ Northern Assur. Co. v. Grand View Bldg. Ass'n, supra.

⁶¹ See, for example, the elaborate discussion in Peoples' F. Ins. Ass'n v. Goyne, 79 Ark. 315, 9 Ann. Cas. 373, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1180. Also, Grand View Bldg. Ass'n v. Northern Assur. Co., 73 Neb. 149; Orient Ins. Co. v. McKnight, 197 Ill. 190; Chismore v. Anchor F. Ins. Co., 131 Iowa, 180.

§ 1064. Waivers by agent after issuance—Authority to waive forfeiture.—It is a well settled principle of agency, that the grant of general authority to make a contract does not necessarily include the right to subsequently alter its terms, and there seems to be no reason for a different rule in the case of an insurance agent. Nevertheless it is ordinarily held that a general issuing agent, in the absence of any restriction upon his authority brought home to the assured, may waive a condition in the policy subsequent to its issuance;⁶² or, as is more commonly the case, may waive the forfeiture resulting from the breach of a condition, either expressly⁶³ or by treating the contract as still in existence.⁶⁴ And he may correct the policy,⁶⁵ or, if it is an open policy, alter its terms.⁶⁶

But a mere soliciting agent, having no authority to make the contract, would ordinarily have no such authority.⁶⁷

§ 1065. — Express restrictions on the authority.—It would seem that a provision in the policy expressly restricting the authority of the agent to waive a provision should be binding on the assured as to any condition arising subsequent to its issuance, since after the delivery of the policy the assured must be held to have knowledge of its contents, and such has been the holding of the better considered cases.⁶⁸

⁶² Continental F. Ins. Co. v. Brooks, 131 Ala. 614; Carrugi v. The Atlantic Fire Ins. Co., 40 Ga. 135, 2 Am. Rep. 567; Viele v. The Germania Ins. Co., 26 Iowa, 9, 96 Am. Dec. 83; Manufacturers' and Merchants' Mutual Ins. Co. v. Armstrong, 45 Ill. App. 217; German Ins. Co. v. Gray, 43 Kan. 497, 19 Am. St. Rep. 150, 8 L. R. A. 70; Pechner v. Phoenix Ins. Co., 65 N. Y. 195; Fire Association of Philadelphia v. Masterson (Tex. Civ. App.), 83 S. W. 49. See Phenix Ins. Co. v. Hart, 149 Ill. 513.

Contra: Kyte v. Commercial Union Assur. Co., 144 Mass. 43.

⁶³ Richard v. Springfield Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 114 La. 794, 108 Am. St. Rep. 359, 69 L. R. A. 278; Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Fallow, 110 Tenn. 720; Miner v. Phoenix Ins. Co., 27 Wis. 693, 9 Am. Rep. 497; Walsh v. Aetna L. Ins. Co., 30 Iowa, 133, 6 Am. Rep. 664; Geib v. International Ins. Co., 1 Dil. 443, 10 Fed. Cas. p. 157.

⁶⁴ German American Ins. Co. v. Hyman, 42 Colo. 156, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 77; Viele v. The Germania Ins. Co., 26 Iowa, 9, 96 Am. Dec. 83; New England Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Springgate, 129 Ky. 627, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 227; Charter Oak Ins. Co., 40 Barb. (N. Y.) 292.

⁶⁵ Taylor v. State Ins. Co., 98 Iowa, 521, 60 Am. St. Rep. 210.

⁶⁶ Kennebec Co. v. Augusta Insurance & Banking Co., 6 Gray, 204; Day v. The Mechanics' & Traders' Ins. Co., 88 Mo. 325, 57 Am. Rep. 416.

⁶⁷ Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Abbey, 76 Ark. 328; Rockford Ins. Co. v. Boi-rum, 40 Ill. App. 129; Heath v. Springfield Fire Ins. Co., 58 N. H. 414; Duluth National Bank v. Knoxville Fire Ins. Co., 85 Tenn. 76, 4 Am. St. Rep. 937.

⁶⁸ Lippman v. Aetna Ins. Co., 120 Ga. 247; Kirkman v. Farmers' Ins. Co., 90 Iowa, 457, 48 Am. St. Rep. 454; Burlington Ins. Co. v. Gibbons, 43 Kan. 15, 19 Am. St. Rep. 118; Kyte

Many courts have, however, escaped this result by holding that the knowledge of the agent is imputed to the company, and therefore the company itself is estopped to assert, or is held to have waived, the forfeiture.⁶⁹

§ 1066. Knowledge of agent imputed to principal—In general.—The doctrine of imputed knowledge, more fully considered in a later chapter,⁷⁰ has been carried to its furthest extreme in insurance cases, and it is the general rule, applied in a vast number of cases, that knowledge of facts relative to the insurance, acquired by the agent while acting within the scope of his authority and during the course of his employment, will be imputed to the principal, either to form the basis for a waiver or to support an estoppel, whether such knowledge is acquired prior to, contemporaneously with, or subsequent to the issuance of the policy, as the case may happen to be.⁷¹

v. Commercial Union Assur. Co., 144 Mass. 43; Collins v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 32 Mont. 329, 108 Am. St. Rep. 578; McElroy v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 84 Neb. 866, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 968; Mersebau v. Phoenix Life Ins. Co., 66 N. Y. 274; Hankins v. Rockford Ins. Co., 70 Wis. 1; Carey v. German American Ins. Co., 84 Wis. 80, 36 Am. St. Rep. 907, 20 L. R. A. 267 (standard policy); Black v. Atlantic Home Ins. Co., 148 N. Car. 169, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 578.

Contra: Carrugi v. The Atlantic Fire Ins. Co., 40 Ga. 135, 2 Am. Rep. 567; Orient Ins. Co. v. McKnight, 197 Ill. 190; German Ins. Co. v. Gray, 43 Kan. 497, 19 Am. St. Rep. 150, 8 L. R. A. 70; Arkell v. Commerce Ins. Co., 7 Hun. 455; Fire Association of Philadelphia v. Master-son (Tex. Civ. App.), 83 S. W. 49; Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Fallow, 110 Tenn. 720; American Ins. Co. v. Gallatin, 48 Wis. 36; Springfield Steam Laundry Co. v. Traders' Ins. Co., 151 Mo. 90, 74 Am. St. Rep. 521; Beebe v. Ohio Farmers' Ins. Co., 93 Mich. 514, 32 Am. St. Rep. 519, 18 L. R. A. 481 (compare Sutherland v. Eureka F. Ins. Co., 110 Mich. 663); Wilson v. Commercial Union Assur. Co., 51 S. Car. 540.

⁶⁹ See post, § 1070.

⁷⁰ See post, § 1802 et seq.

⁷¹ Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Copeland, 90 Ala. 386; Fishbeck v. Phenix Ins. Co., 54 Cal. 422; Lumberman's Mutual Ins. Co. v. Bell, 166 Ill. 400, 57 Am. St. Rep. 140; Born v. Home Ins. Co., 120 Iowa, 299; Germania Ins. Co. v. Ashby, 112 Ky. 303, 99 Am. St. Rep. 295; Aetna, etc., Ins. Co. v. Olmstead, 21 Mich. 246, 4 Am. Rep. 483; Gristock v. Royal Ins. Co., 84 Mich. 161, s. c., 87 Mich. 428; Rivara v. Queen's Ins. Co., 62 Miss. 720; Pelkington v. Nat'l Ins. Co., 55 Mo. 172; Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Landfare, 63 Neb. 559; Forward v. Continental Ins. Co., 142 N. Y. 382, 25 L. R. A. 637; Insurance Co. v. Williams, 39 Ohio St. 584, 48 Am. Rep. 474; People's Ins. Co. v. Spencer, 53 Pa. 353, 91 Am. Dec. 217; American Central Ins. Co. v. McCrea, 8 Lea (Tenn.), 513. 41 Am. Rep. 647; Carrigan v. Lycoming F. Ins. Co., 53 Vt. 418, 38 Am. Rep. 687; Manhattan F. Ins. Co. v. Weill, 28 Gratt. (Va.) 389, 26 Am. Rep. 364; Staats v. Pioneer Ins. Ass'n, 55 Wash. 51; May v. Buckeye Mut. Ins. Co., 25 Wis. 291, 3 Am. Rep. 76; Gans v. St. Paul, etc., Ins. Co., 43 Wis. 108, 28 Am. Rep. 535; Bowden v. London, etc., Assur. Co., [1892] 2 Q. B. D. 534.

§ 1067. — Existing facts affecting the risk.—When the true state of facts affecting the risk is known to the issuing agent at the time he issues the policy, it is quite generally held that the assured will not be precluded from enforcing the policy by reason of such a fact violating a provision of the policy. The courts have reached this result on one or both of two totally distinct lines of reasoning, viz. (1) that already considered, namely, that the agent who issued a policy with knowledge of the violation of one of its provisions must be held to have waived such provision;⁷² or, if that view fails, then (2) the one now here in question, that the company itself is estopped to insist upon, or is held to have waived, a right of forfeiture by reason of a fact of which it is thus deemed to have had full knowledge at the time it issued the policy.⁷³

In order to sustain this conclusion, it is held that the provisions in the policy limiting waivers do not affect the power of the company to waive,—either upon the ground that the company cannot so limit its power,⁷⁴ or that the provision was not intended to apply to the company itself,⁷⁵ or that, being for the benefit of the company, it may

⁷² See ante, § 1061.

⁷³ Encumbrances.—Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Copeland, 86 Ala. 551, 4 L. R. A. 848; German-American Ins. Co. v. Yeagley, 163 Ind. 651, 2 Ann. Cas. 275; Gristock v. Royal Ins. Co., 84 Mich. 161; Renier v. Dwelling House Ins. Co., 74 Wis. 89; West v. Norwich Union Fire Ins. Society, 10 Utah, 442.

Occupation by Tenant.—Ohio Farmers' Ins. Co. v. Vogel, 166 Ind. 239, 117 Am. St. Rep. 382, 9 Ann. Cas. 91, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 966; Gandy v. Orient Ins. Co., 52 S. Car. 224.

Prior Insurance.—Strauss v. Phoenix Ins. Co., 9 Colo. App. 386; McElroy v. British American Assur. Co., 36 C. C. A. 615, 94 Fed. 990; Bennett v. Council Bluffs Ins. Co., 70 Iowa, 600; Hornthal v. Western Ins. Co., 88 N. C. 71; Hibernia Ins. Co. v. Malevinsky, 6 Tex. Civ. App. 81.

Interest of insured.—Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Keating, 86 Md. 130, 63 Am. St. Rep. 499; Wisotzkey v. Niagara Fire Ins. Co., 112 App. Div. 599; aff'd 189 N. Y. 532; Pope v. Glen Falls Ins. Co., 130 Ala. 356; Rhode Island Underwriters Ass'n v. Monarch, 98 Ky. 305; Crescent Ins. Co. v. Camp, 71 Tex. 503.

Vacancy of premises.—Aurora Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Kranich, 36 Mich. 288; Haight v. Continental Ins. Co., 92 N. Y. 51; Wilson v. Commercial Union Assur. Co., 51 S. Car. 540, 60 Am. St. Rep. 700.

Leased ground.—Springfield Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Price, 132 Ga. 687; Home Ins. Co. v. Stone River National Bank, 88 Tenn. 369; Welch v. Fire Ass'n, 120 Wis. 456.

Dangerous agencies on the property.—Reaper City Ins. Co. v. Jones, 62 Ill. 458. See also, Improved Match Co. v. Michigan Mutual Fire Ins. Co., 122 Mich. 256; German Ins. Co. v. Shader, 68 Neb. 1, 60 L. R. A. 918; Worachek v. New Denmark Mutual Home Fire Ins. Co., 102 Wis. 81.

⁷⁴ Rhode Island Underwriters Ass'n v. Monarch, 98 Ky. 305.

⁷⁵ Gandy v. Orient Ins. Co., 52 S. Car. 224; Hibernia Ins. Co. v. Malevinsky, 6 Tex. Civ. App. 81.

waive it,⁷⁶ or that it would be fraudulent to allow the company to take advantage of it.⁷⁷ It is also necessary, to sustain many of the cases, to hold that there may be an actual waiver by the company based upon imputed knowledge which never in fact came to any one except the local agent. It is also necessary to sustain the estoppel spoken of in many of the cases, to treat, as a representation by the company, the very act of the agent which the terms of the policy deny his authority to perform.⁷⁸

The same cases, however, which deny the authority of the agent to make a waiver in the face of an express limitation, would doubtless also refuse to accomplish the same result by holding the company estopped upon the basis of imputed knowledge.⁷⁹ This, however, is not a question of agency at all.

§ 1068. — The same rule which has been thus applied to the knowledge of the issuing agent has, by the same courts, been applied to the soliciting agent; and it is held that the knowledge of a soliciting agent of a fact regarding the risk solicited by him which violates a condition of the policy will be imputed to the company, and will raise an estoppel which will prevent the company from asserting a forfeiture on the ground of such violation.⁸⁰

⁷⁶ Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Frierson, 51 C. C. A. 424, 114 Fed. 56; Barnard v. National Fire Ins. Co., 38 Mo. App. 106; Williams v. Niagara Fire Ins. Co., 50 Iowa, 561; Carroll v. Charter Oak Ins. Co., 38 Barb. (N. Y.) 402; King v. Council Bluffs Ins. Co., 72 Iowa, 310; American Ins. Co. v. Yeagley, 163 Ind. 651.

⁷⁷ Union Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Wilkinson, 13 Wall. 222, 20 L. Ed. 617 (practically overruled, however, in Northern Assur. Co. v. Grand View Bldg. Ass'n, 183 U. S. 308, 46 L. Ed. 213); Wagner v. Westchester Fire Ins. Co., 92 Tex. 549; Wisotzkey v. Niagara Fire Ins. Co., 112 App. Div. 599; aff'd 189 N. Y. 532; Grabbs v. Farmers' Mutual Fire Ins. Ass'n, 125 N. C. 389.

⁷⁸ A striking illustration may be seen in Gandy v. Orient Ins. Co., 52 S. Car. 224. In many of the cases, the alleged estoppel seems to be nothing more than the mere refusal of the court to enforce what seems to it to be an inequitable defense; and they justify the comment of the court of appeal of Ontario, in Shannon v. Gore, etc., Ins. Co., 2 Ont. App. 396. "It is much easier to say, in the general terms used in some of the decisions in the United States upon which the plaintiff relies, that insurance companies ought not to be allowed to set up such a defence, than to define with precision the legal principles upon which this kind of estoppel is founded."

⁷⁹ See Northern Assur. Co. v. Grand View Bldg. Ass'n, 183 U. S. 308, 46 L. Ed. 213.

⁸⁰ London & Lancashire Fire Ins. Co. v. Gerteison, 106 Ky. 815; Berguson v. Pamlico Insurance & Banking Co., 111 N. Car. 45; McGonigle v. Susquehanna Fire Ins. Co., 168 Pa. 1; Harding v. Norwich Union Fire Ins. Co., 10 S. D. 64; Beebe v. Ohio Farmers' Ins. Co., 93 Mich. 514, 32 Am. St. Rep. 519, 18 L. R. A. 481; Lyon v. Insurance Co., 6 Dak.

And the delivery of a life insurance policy by a soliciting agent, authorized to solicit applications, collect premiums and deliver policies, will, it is held, operate to estop the company from enforcing a forfeiture for the violation of a condition precedent when the agent, at the time of such delivery, had knowledge of the violation.⁸¹

§ 1069. — Misstatements in application.—So it is held that knowledge by an agent who actually issues the policy that a statement in the application is false, prevents the company from taking advantage of a provision that such statements shall be considered warranties, and that the policy shall be void if any of them are false.⁸²

§ 1070. Subsequent grounds of forfeiture.—And a general agent's knowledge of a cause of forfeiture, arising subsequent to the issuance of the policy, and respecting insurance concerning which he is still acting as the company's agent, is usually imputed to the company, so that if it thereafter treats the policy as in existence, it will be held either to have waived the forfeiture or to be estopped to enforce it.⁸³ By the weight of authority the same rule is applied in the case of a soliciting agent.⁸⁴

§ 1071. — Express restriction.—Insurance companies frequently attempt to avoid the results of this rule by inserting provisions

67; Forward v. Continental Ins. Co., 142 N. Y. 382, 25 L. R. A. 637; St. Clara Female Academy v. Northwestern National Ins. Co., 98 Wis. 257, 67 Am. St. Rep. 805.

⁸¹ McGurk v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 56 Conn. 528, 1 L. R. A. 563; John Hancock Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Schlunk, 175 Ill. 284; Northwestern Life Ass'n v. Findley, 29 Tex. Civ. App. 494.

⁸² Beebe v. Ohio Farmers' Ins. Co., 93 Mich. 514, 32 Am. St. Rep. 519, 18 L. R. A. 481; Michigan Shingle Co. v. State Investment Ins. Co., 94 Mich. 389, 22 L. R. A. 319.

⁸³ Arnold v. American Ins. Co., 148 Cal. 660, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 6; Phenix Ins. Co. v. Grove, 215 Ill. 299, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1; Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Spiers, 87 Ky. 285; Bigelow v. Granite State Ins. Co., 94 Me. 39; Lamberton v. Connecticut Fire Ins. Co., 39 Minn. 129, 1 L. R. A. 222; Hamilton v. Home Ins. Co., 94 Mo. 353. See also, Metropolitan Life

Ins. Co. v. Sullivan, 112 Ill. App. 500. In Bigelow v. Granite State Ins. Co., supra, it is said that the rule is not affected by the existence of the statutory standard form of policy.

⁸⁴ Germania L. Ins. Co. v. Koehler, 168 Ill. 293, 61 Am. St. Rep. 108; Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. v. Sullivan, 112 Ill. App. 500; Walsh v. Aetna L. Ins. Co., 30 Iowa, 133, 6 Am. Rep. 664; Germania Ins. Co. v. Rudwig, 80 Ky. 223; Schmidt v. Charter Oak L. Ins. Co., 2 Mo. App. 339. See also, McGurk v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co., 56 Conn. 528, 1 L. R. A. 563; Northwestern Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Amerman, 119 Ill. 329, 59 Am. Rep. 799; Lorie v. Conn. Mut. L. Ins. Co., 15 Fed. Cas. 891.

Contra: Where the agent's entire authority with reference to that insurance ended when the policy was issued. American Ins. Co. v. Walston, 111 Ill. App. 133; Dickinson County v. Mississippi Valley Ins. Co., 41 Iowa, 286.

in their policy or application that the agent shall be the agent of the assured in all that he does in making out the application, or procuring the insurance. The most common of these is as follows: "It is a part of this contract that any person other than the assured who may have procured this insurance to be taken by the company, shall be deemed to be the agent of the assured named in this policy and not of this company under any circumstances whatever, or in any transactions relating to this insurance." Such provisions have, however, been quite generally held ineffective.⁸⁵ Statutes in several states expressly declare that a person who solicits applications, makes contracts, collects premiums, etc., shall prima facie be deemed to be the agent of the company whatever the policy or the application may say about it.⁸⁶

§ 1072. — Limitations on rule.—In accordance with the usual rule in regard to imputing the knowledge of the agent to his principal⁸⁷ the insurance company in any of the before mentioned situations will

⁸⁵ Commercial Ins. Co. v. Ives, 56 Ill. 402; Rogers v. The Phenix Insurance Co. of Brooklyn, 121 Ind. 570; Kausal v. Minnesota Farmers' Mutual Fire Ins. Ass'n, 31 Minn. 17, 47 Am. Rep. 776; Planters' Ins. Co. v. Myers, 55 Miss. 479, 30 Am. Rep. 521; Columbia Ins. Co. v. Cooper, 50 Pa. 331; Kister v. Lebanon Mutual Ins. Co., 128 Pa. 553, 15 Am. St. Rep. 696, 5 L. R. A. 646. See also, North British & Mercantile Ins. Co. v. Crutchfield, 108 Ind. 518; Grace v. American Central Ins. Co., 109 U. S. 278, 27 L. Ed. 932.

Contra: Rohrbach v. Germania Fire Ins. Co., 62 N. Y. 47, 20 Am. Rep. 451.

⁸⁶ Such statutes have been passed in Ala., Ga., Conn., Iowa, Me., Mass., Minn., Miss., Mo., Neb., N. H., N. D., Ohio, Tex., Vt., Wis.

Thus the Wisconsin statute provides that every person "who solicits insurance on behalf of any insurance corporation or person desiring insurance of any kind, or transmits an application for a policy of insurance, other than for himself, to or from any such corporation, or who makes any contract for insurance, or collects any premium for insurance, or in any manner aids or assists in doing either, or in transacting any business of like nature for any insurance corporation, or advertises to do any such thing, shall be held to be an agent of such corporation to all intents and purposes, unless it can be shown that he receives no compensation for such services."

A somewhat different type of statute, not materially different in effect, prevails in several states. As to the construction of such statutes, see United Fireman's Ins. Co. v. Thomas, 34 C. C. A. 240, 92 Fed. 127; Noble v. Mitchell, 100 Ala. 519, 25 L. R. A. 238; Continental Ins. Co. v. Ruckman, 127 Ill. 364, 11 Am. St. Rep. 121; Hancock L. Ins. Co. v. Schlink, 175 Ill. 284; People v. Insurance Exchange, 126 Ill. 466; St. Paul F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Shaver, 76 Iowa, 282; Wood v. Fireman's Ins. Co., 126 Mass. 316; Pollock v. German F. Ins. Co., 127 Mich. 460; Bankers L. Ins. Co. v. Robbins, 55 Neb. 117; Schomer v. Insurance Co., 50 Wis. 575; Hankins v. Insurance Co., 70 Wis. 1; Davis Lumber Co. v. Hartford F. Ins. Co., 95 Wis. 226; Costello v. Insurance Co., 133 Wis. 350; Continental L. Ins. Co. v. Chamberlain, 132 U. S. 304.

⁸⁷ See post, § 1848 et seq.

not be bound by the knowledge of its agent if it is acquired when transacting other business and not sufficiently close in time to justify the inference that he had it in mind;⁸⁸ or by his false statement if it is the result of collusion between him and the assured, to defraud the company.⁸⁹

§ 1073. Misconduct of agent in taking application.—Closely affiliated and often confused with the question discussed in the preceding sections is the further question of the effect of the misconduct of the soliciting agent in the taking of the application. Here it is held that if the agent leads the applicant to make a false statement, or permits him to set forth in the application statements of fact which the agent knows to be false, the company is estopped to take advantage of their falsity;⁹⁰ a fortiori, if facts are correctly stated to the agent and they are by him incorrectly inserted in the application either wilfully or negligently, the company cannot take advantage of such incorrectness;⁹¹ if the agent fills out the application from his own knowledge or from knowledge acquired from persons other than the applicant, the

⁸⁸ Stennett v. Pennsylvania F. Ins. Co., 68 Iowa, 674; St. Paul F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Parsons, 47 Minn. 352; Trenton v. Pothén, 46 Minn. 298, 24 Am. St. Rep. 225; Union Bank v. German Ins. Co., 18 C. C. A. 203, 71 Fed. 473. See also, Supreme Council v. Green, 71 Md. 263; Sanders v. Cooper, 115 N. Y. 279, 12 Am. St. Rep. 801, 5 L. R. A. 638.

⁸⁹ Ryan v. World L. Ins. Co., 41 Conn. 168, 19 Am. Rep. 490.

⁹⁰ Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Copeland, 86 Ala. 551, 4 L. R. A. 848; Dwelling House Ins. Co. v. Brodie, 52 Ark. 11, 4 L. R. A. 458; National Fire Ins. Co. v. Duncan, 44 Colo. 472, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 340; Stone v. Hawkeye Ins. Co., 68 Iowa, 737, 56 Am. Rep. 870; Mutual Benefit Life Ins. Co. v. Daviess, 87 Ky. 541; Follett v. United States Mutual Accident Ass'n, 110 N. C. 377, 28 Am. St. Rep. 693, 15 L. R. A. 668; Mullin v. Vermont Mutual Fire Ins. Co., 58 Vt. 113.

Contra: That the knowledge of the agent will not alter the rule if there be no actual fraud on the applicant. Iverson v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 151 Cal. 746, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 866; McCoy v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co.,

133 Mass. 82; Dimick v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co., 69 N. J. L. 384; Clemens v. Supreme Council, 131 N. Y. 485; Pottsville Mutual Fire Ins. Co. v. Fromm, 100 Pa. 347.

⁹¹ Creed v. Sun Fire Office of London, 101 Ala. 522, 46 Am. St. Rep. 134, 23 L. R. A. 177; Merchants' Mutual Fire Ins. Co. v. Harris, 51 Colo. 95; Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Stark, 120 Ind. 444; Taylor v. Anchor Mutual Fire Ins. Co., 116 Iowa, 625, 93 Am. St. Rep. 261, 57 L. R. A. 328; Continental Ins. Co. v. Pearce, 39 Kan. 396, 7 Am. St. Rep. 557; Wright v. Northwestern Mutual Life Ins. Co., 91 Ky. 208; Steele v. German Ins. Co., 93 Mich. 81, 18 L. R. A. 85; Chase v. People's Fire Ins. Co., 14 Hun (N. Y.), 456; Sternaman v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 170 N. Y. 13, 88 Am. St. Rep. 625, 57 L. R. A. 318; American Life Ins. Co. v. Mahon, 56 Miss. 180; Kister v. Lebanon Mutual Ins. Co., 128 Pa. 553, 15 Am. St. Rep. 696, 5 L. R. A. 646. See also, New York Life Ins. Co. v. Fletcher, 117 U. S. 519, 29 L. Ed. 934; Farmers' Ins. Co. v. Williams, 39 Ohio St. 584, 48 Am. Rep. 474.

company is bound by his answers;⁹² if the agent draws his own conclusions from the information furnished him by the applicant and inserts such conclusions in the application the company cannot question their correctness;⁹³ if the agent suppresses the application filled out by the applicant and substitutes an entirely spurious one, the company cannot escape liability.⁹⁴

Restrictions in the policy of the sort referred to in § 1071 above have constantly been appealed to in these cases, but they have generally been held to be ineffective to change the result.

§ 1074. Authority to waive proof or notice of loss.—While there is some conflict among the cases, the weight of authority seems to be that a general insurance agent, with full authority to issue policies, make contracts and collect premiums may waive proof or notice of loss, either expressly,⁹⁵ or by implication;⁹⁶ as may also any agent with express authority to adjust the loss.⁹⁷

⁹² People's Fire Ins. Co. v. Goyne, 79 Ark. 315, 9 Ann. Cas. 373, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1180; Menk v. Home Ins. Co., 76 Cal. 50; Germania Fire Ins. Co. v. Hick, 125 Ill. 361, 8 Am. St. Rep. 384; Roe v. National Life Ins. Ass'n, 137 Iowa, 696, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1144; Thomas v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co., 20 Mo. App. 150; Insurance Co. v. Wilkinson, 80 U. S. (13 Wall.) 222, 20 L. Ed. 617; Dunbar v. Phenix Ins. Co., 72 Wis. 492.

⁹³ Hough v. City Fire Ins. Co., 29 Conn. 10, 70 Am. Dec. 581; Miller v. Phoenix Mutual Life Ins. Co., 107 N. Y. 292; Langdon v. Union Mutual Life Ins. Co., 14 Fed. 273; Mutual Benefit Life Ins. Co. v. Robison, 58 Fed. 723, 22 L. R. A. 325; Continental Ins. Co. v. Chamberlain, 132 U. S. 304, 33 L. Ed. 341.

Conclusion as to title.—Duncan v. National Mutual Fire Ins. Co., 44 Colo. 472, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 340; Key v. Des Moines Ins. Co., 77 Iowa, 174; Phenix Ins. Co. v. Stocks, 149 Ill. 319; Western Assur. Co. v. Rector, 85 Ky. 294; Combs v. Hannibal Savings & Ins. Co., 43 Mo. 148, 97 Am. Dec. 383; Burson v. Philadelphia Fire Ass'n, 136 Pa. 267, 20 Am. St. Rep. 919; Home Ins. Co. v. Hancock, 106 Tenn. 513, 52 L. R. A. 665.

⁹⁴ Massachusetts Life Ins. Co. v. Eshelman, 30 Ohio St. 647.

⁹⁵ Indian River State Bank v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co., 46 Fla. 283; Phenix Ins. Co. v. Munger, 49 Kan. 178, 33 Am. St. Rep. 360; Phenix Ins. Co. v. Bowdre, 67 Miss. 620, 19 Am. St. Rep. 326; Nickell v. Phoenix Ins. Co., 144 Mo. 420; Perry v. Mechanics' Mutual Ins. Co., 11 Fed. 478; Snyder v. Dwelling House Ins. Co., 59 N. J. L. 544, 59 Am. St. Rep. 625.

Contra: Burlington Ins. Co. v. Kennerly, 60 Ark. 532; Lohnes v. Insurance Co. of N. A., 121 Mass. 439; Knudson v. Hekla Fire Ins. Co., 75 Wis. 198. See also, Smith v. Niagara Ins. Co., 60 Vt. 682, 6 Am. St. Rep. 144, 1 L. R. A. 216.

⁹⁶ Indian River State Bank v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co., 46 Fla. 283; Phenix Ins. Co. v. Searles, 100 Ga. 97; Citizens' Ins. Co. v. Stoddard, 99 Ill. App. 469; Commercial Union Assur. Co. v. State, 113 Ind. 331.

Contra: Ermentrout v. Girard Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 63 Minn. 305, 56 Am. St. Rep. 485, 30 L. R. A. 346; Hicks v. British Am. Ins. Co., 162 N. Y. 284, 48 L. R. A. 424.

⁹⁷ Ohio Farmers' Ins. Co. v. Vogel, 166 Ind. 239, 117 Am. St. Rep. 382, 9 Ann. Cas. 91, 3 L. R. A. (N.

But a mere soliciting agent, authorized only to take applications, deliver policies, and collect premiums, has no such authority.⁹⁸

Restrictions in the policy on the agent's authority to waive have ordinarily been held not to prevent waiver of proof of loss;⁹⁹ though a number of courts have held the contrary, particularly under the so-called standard form of policy.¹

§ 1075. Authority to adjust losses.—The adjustment of a loss not only requires special knowledge and ability, but also takes place after the policy of insurance has ceased to be a mere contract of indemnity. It is therefore held that general authority to agree upon the terms of insurance and to issue policies does not confer authority to adjust a loss.²

§ 1076. Authority to make admissions, representations, etc.—As will be more fully seen in a later chapter,³ it is ordinarily within the implied authority of an agent to make such admissions, statements, and representations to third persons as the nature of his duty requires, or as are the natural and ordinary incidents of his position, and therefore the insurance company will be bound by such representations made by its agent within the scope of his authority. Thus, for example, it has been held that the company is bound by a representation

S.) 966; O'Leary Brothers v. German American Ins. Co., 100 Iowa, 390; Little v. Phoenix Ins. Co., 123 Mass. 380, 25 Am. Rep. 96; McGuire v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co., 158 N. Y. 680. See also, Enos v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 4 S. D. 639, 46 Am. St. Rep. 796.

⁹⁸ American Ins. Co. v. Hornbarger, 85 Ark. 334; Bowlin v. Hekla Fire Ins. Co., 36 Minn. 433; Bush v. Westchester Fire Ins. Co., 63 N. Y. 531; Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Myers, 62 Ohio St. 529, 49 L. R. A. 760.

⁹⁹ "Such a stipulation applies only to those conditions and provisions in the policy which relate to the formation and continuance of the contract of insurance, and are essential to the binding force of the contract while it is running, and does not apply to those conditions which are to be performed after the loss has occurred, in order to enable the assured to sue on his contract, such as giving notice and furnishing preliminary proof of loss." New Orleans

Ins. Ass'n v. Matthews, 65 Miss. 301; Indian River State Bank v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co., supra; Citizens' Ins. Co. v. Stoddard, 197 Ill. 330; Indiana Ins. Co. v. Capehart, supra.

¹ See Smith v. Niagara Fire Ins. Co., supra; Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Myers, supra; Ruthven v. Insurance Co., 92 Iowa, 316; Kirkman v. Farmers Mut. F. Ins. Co., 90 Iowa, 457, 48 Am. St. Rep. 454; Wadhams v. Western Assur. Co., 117 Mich. 514 (not under standard policy); Barry Lumber Co. v. Citizens' Ins. Co., 136 Mich. 42.

² Ruthven v. American Fire Ins. Co., 92 Iowa, 316; Bush v. Westchester Fire Ins. Co., 63 N. Y. 531. See also, Smith v. Niagara Ins. Co., 60 Vt. 682, 6 Am. St. Rep. 144, 1 L. R. A. 216.

Contra: As to a general agent appointed to do business in the state without restrictions. Green v. Star Fire Ins. Co., 190 Mass. 586.

³ See post, §§ 1799, 1780.

as to the established interpretation of the policy;⁴ that an application has been accepted;⁵ that a policy has been renewed;⁶ as to the kind of policy issued;⁷ as to the proper method of obtaining a permit;⁸ or by a statement which lulls the assured into security and prevents him from bringing action within the specified time.⁹

§ 1077. Territorial limitations.—Insurance agents are ordinarily appointed to represent the company within a certain specified territory. Where such limitations are definite, and are known to the assured or the circumstances charge him with notice, an act outside of that territory will not be binding upon the company.¹⁰ But where such limitations are vague and the act appears reasonably to be within them, or where the limitations amount merely to secret instructions against an act otherwise apparently within the authority, the company will be bound.¹¹

§ 1078. May not act in his own behalf.—In accordance with well settled principles of agency, which have already been discussed, an insurance agent has no authority, without the full knowledge and consent of the company, to act in his own behalf. He may not therefore

⁴ Phenix Insurance Co. v. Hart, 149 Ill. 513; Continental Life Ins. Co. v. Chamberlain, 132 U. S. 304, 33 L. Ed. 341; Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Warttemberg, 24 C. C. A. 547, 79 Fed. 245.

⁵ Kimbrow v. New York Life Ins. Co., 134 Iowa, 84, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 421; Preferred Accident Ins. Co. v. Stone, 61 Kan. 48.

⁶ International Trust Co. v. Norwich Union Fire Ins. Society, 71 Fed. 81.

⁷ Summers v. Alexander, 30 Okla. 198, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 787.

⁸ Walsh v. Aetna Life Ins. Co., 30 Iowa, 133, 6 Am. Rep. 664. See Selva v. John Hancock Mutual Life Ins. Co., 12 Fed. 603.

⁹ Hall v. Union Central L. Ins. Co., 23 Wash. 610, 83 Am. St. Rep. 844, 51 L. R. A. 288; Metropolitan Accident Ass'n v. Froiland, 161 Ill. 30, 52 Am. St. Rep. 359; Williams v. German Ins. Co., 90 N. Y. App. Div. 413.

¹⁰ Insurance Co. of N. America v. Thornton, 130 Ala. 222, 55 L. R. A. 547; Mohr Distilling Co. v. Ohio Ins.

Co., 13 Fed. 74; Potter v. Phenix Ins. Co., 63 Fed. 382; Baldwin v. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co., 182 Mass. 389.

¹¹ Lightbody v. North Am. Ins. Co., 23 Wend. (N. Y.) 18; Hahn v. Guardian Assur. Co., 23 Oreg. 576, 37 Am. St. Rep. 709 (here an Oregon agent insured property in Washington, but the company received the premium, issued the policy and sent it to the agent for delivery); Ruggles v. American Cent. Ins. Co., 114 N. Y. 415, 11 Am. St. Rep. 674; Brownfield v. Phoenix Ins. Co., 26 Mo. App. 390; Aetna Ins. Co. v. Maguire, 51 Ill. 342 (here there was evidence of ratification); Howard Ins. Co. v. Owen, 94 Ky. 197 (act held to be within "vicinity"); St. Paul Ins. Co. v. Parsons, 47 Minn. 352 (same); German F. Ins. Co. v. Encaustic Tile Co., 15 Ind. App. 623; Continental Ins. Co. v. Ruckman, 127 Ill. 364, 11 Am. St. Rep. 121.

See also, Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. v. Rogers, 108 Ga. 191.

issue policies upon property which he owns individually,¹² or which belongs to a partnership of which he is a member,¹³ or to a corporation of which he is an officer or director,¹⁴ or in which he is interested as agent.¹⁵

¹² Salene v. Queen City Ins. Co., 59 Oreg. 297, 35 L. R. A. (N. S.) 438; Zimmerman v. Dwelling House Ins. Co., 110 Mich. 399, 33 L. R. A. 698; Bentley v. Columbia Ins. Co., 17 N. Y. 421.

¹³ Glen Falls Ins. Co. v. Hopkins, 16 Ill. App. 220; Ritt v. Washington Marine & Fire Ins. Co., 41 Barb. (N. Y.) 353.

¹⁴ Arispe Mercantile Co. v. Capital Ins. Co., 133 Iowa, 272, 12 Ann.

Cas. 93, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1084; Greenwood Ice & Coal Co. v. Georgia Home Ins. Co., 72 Miss. 46. See, Arispe Mercantile Co. v. Queen Ins. Co., 141 Iowa, 607, 133 Am. St. Rep. 180.

¹⁵ British American Assur. Co. v. Cooper, 6 Colo. App. 25; Utica Ins. Co. v. Toledo Ins. Co., 17 Barb. (N. Y.) 132. See also, Wildberger v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co., 72 Miss. 338, 48 Am. St. Rep. 558, 28 L. R. A. 220.

BOOK III.

OF THE EXECUTION OF THE AUTHORITY,

CHAPTER I

IN GENERAL

- | | |
|--|---|
| § 1079. Purpose of Book III. 1080. Primary purpose to bind principal and not agent. 1081. Must act within scope of authority. 1082. Necessity of proper Execution. 1083. How question determined. 1084. Execution within, and exceeding authority. | 1085. Slight Deviation does not invalidate. 1086. When separable, authorized part may stand. 1087. When execution lacks essential elements. 1088. Summary of the Rules. 1089. Should act in Name of the principal. |
|--|---|

§ 1079. Purpose of Book III.—In the preceding chapters it has been seen how authority may be conferred upon an agent, and by what standards the nature and extent of the authority so conferred are to be determined.

It is the purpose of Book III to ascertain in what manner the authority so conferred and so construed is to be executed. In what is said upon this subject, it is to be borne in mind that the authority of the agent to perform the given act is assumed to be established, and that the only question is as to the mode and sufficiency of the execution of it.

§ 1080. Primary purpose to bind principal and not agent.—It is the primary purpose of the creation of an agency to authorize the agent to act for and in behalf of the principal. It is, therefore, the primary duty of the agent in executing the authority to so act as to secure to the principal the benefits to be derived from the performance, and to impose upon him the responsibilities arising therefrom. In other words, it is the primary function of the agent to bind the principal, and not himself, to third persons, and likewise to bind such third persons to the principal and not to himself.

§ 1081. Agent must act within the scope of his authority.—The act of the agent, whether he be general or special, within the limits of his authority is binding upon the principal: his act beyond those limits, binds himself only, or no one. Hence arises the fundamental necessity that not only the extent, but the manner, of the execution be such as the authority conferred will warrant, and no other. Where precise and exact limits have been fixed, the performance of the agent should be kept scrupulously within them. When those limits have not so been fixed, it is still imperative that the reasonable and usual limits in such cases be determined, and that the manner and extent of the execution be made to conform to them.

§ 1082. Necessity of proper execution.—It is obvious, therefore, that attention to the proper execution of the authority is highly important, not only as respects the principal himself, but the agent also. Thus the agent in the attempted execution of the authority, may do, (a) exactly what he was authorized to do, or (b) more than he was authorized to do, or (c) less than he was directed to do, and the result of his performance may be that—

1. He will bind his principal only, or
2. He will bind himself only, or
3. His attempted execution will be wholly void;

whereas the first result was the only one contemplated by the parties at the time of the creation of the agency.

§ 1083. How question determined.—In determining the results of an attempted performance, four questions arise:

1. What authority did the agent possess?
2. Is the act assumed to be done by virtue of it, in reality within its scope?
3. Who was intended to be bound? and
4. Who as a matter of fact is bound?

The first two of these questions must be largely determined by the principles laid down in the preceding chapters. The last two are yet to be considered.

§ 1084. Execution within, and exceeding authority.—Where the agent keeps strictly within the limits of his authority, the only question that will arise will be as to the mode of execution,—whether it is such as to bind the principal, or the agent, or neither.

Where, however, the agent exceeds those limits, the question will depend somewhat upon the degree of excess. “It is evident,” as is observed by a learned writer, “to anyone who considers the matter, that the variance between the act done by the agent and the act authorized by the principal, may range through every degree of difference. The variance may be infinitesimal, or it may be so great as to make an absolute departure from the authority conferred. To determine the exact point between those two extremes at which a variance becomes substantial and material often gives rise to difficult questions. The result in each case must depend upon the circumstances of the particular case."¹

§ 1085. Slight deviation does not invalidate.—No inflexible rule can be laid down by which to determine when the act as performed exceeds the limits of the act as authorized. But keeping in mind the fundamental principle to which reference has so frequently been made, that the authority conferred includes incidental authority to employ all the usual modes and means of accomplishing the ends and purposes of the agency, it may be said that a slight deviation from the course of his duty will not vitiate his act, if the variation be immaterial and circumstantial only, and does not in substance exceed the limits fixed.²

§ 1086. When separable, authorized part may stand.—Although the agent may have exceeded his authority, yet if the act be separable, it may stand so far as it is authorized.³ "When a man," says Lord

¹ Evans' Agency, 168.

² Huntley v. Mathias, 90 N. C. 101, 47 Am. Rep. 516; Parker v. Kett, 1 Salk. 95. "Authorities by letter of attorney," says Holt, C. J., in this case, "are either general or special; thus a letter of attorney may be to sue in omnibus causis motis et movendis, or to defend a particular suit. Sir Philip Sidney, when he went to travel, gave a letter of attorney to Sir Thomas Walsingham to act and sell all his lands, and all his goods and chattels; and this was held good. Where the authority is particular the party must pursue it; if the act varies from it, he departs from his authority, and what he does is void; but that must be intended of a variance not in circumstances, but of a variance material and substantial, as where the person, the thing, or the date is mistaken."

³ Drumright v. Philpot, 16 Ga. 424, 60 Am. Dec. 738; Vanada v. Hopkins, Minn. 538; Stowell v. Eldred, 39 Wis. 1 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 285, 19 Am. Dec. 92; Dickerman v. Ashton, 21

614; Evans v. Wells, 22 Wend. (N. Y.) 341; Crozier v. Carr, 11 Tex. 376; Moore v. Thompson, 32 Me. 497; Jesup v. City Bank, 14 Wis. 331.

In Commonwealth v. Hawkins, 83 Ky. 246, in an action on a sheriff's bond, against the sureties, the bond included a covenant to indemnify former sureties on a former bond, and a covenant to indemnify the state for the sheriff's collection of revenue. It was held that, even though the agent who executed the bond had no authority to make the former covenant, yet, if there was authority for the latter covenant, it was separable and valid.

In Guaranty Trust Co. v. Koehler, 195 Fed. 669, the defendants were sued on a contract of guaranty executed by an agent. The authority of the agent extended to the guaranteeing of the repayment of $22,500 and interest, but not to the guaranteeing of the payment of interest on another amount of $40,000. The agent executed the contract, making both guarantees. Held, that the con-

Coke, "doth that which he is authorized to do and more, there it is good for that which is warranted, and void for the rest."⁴ So if the excess be merely superfluous it may be disregarded. Thus if an agent authorized to enter into a contract not under seal, executes it under seal, yet if the contract would be good without the seal, the seal may usually be disregarded and the contract be allowed to stand as written evidence of a simple contract.⁵

So if an agent in making an authorized sale, adds unauthorized covenants, the purchaser may enforce so much of the contract as conforms to the authority, or, at his option, may refuse to abide by the contract at all, if the principal repudiates the unauthorized covenants.⁶

On the other hand, where the act done is a single, entire and inseparable one, it cannot stand unless it can be deemed to be authorized as it was done.⁷

§ 1087. When execution lacks essential elements.—Where, however, the execution is defective by reason of the absence of some element essential to a complete performance, the principal is not bound. "Regularly," says Lord Coke, "it is true, that where a man doth less than the commandment or authority committed unto him, there (the commandment or authority being not pursued) the act is void."⁸ tract was valid as to the $22,500 guarantee, though the other guarantee was unauthorized.

⁴ Coke, Lit. 258a.

⁵ Morrow v. Higgins, 29 Ala. 448; Baum v. Dubois, 43 Penn. St. 260; Long v. Hartwell, 34 N. J. L. 116; Dutton v. Warschauer, 21 Cal. 609; Worrall v. Munn, 5 N. Y. 229, 55 Am. Dec. 330; Wood v. Auburn, etc., R. R. Co., 8 N. Y. 160; Thomas v. Joslin, 30 Minn. 388. See post, § 1098.

⁶ Vanada v. Hopkins, 1 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 285, 19 Am. Dec. 92; Smith v. Tracy, 36 N. Y. 79.

In Kane v. Sholars, 41 Tex. Civ. App. 154, where an agent, authorized by a power of attorney to convey by a quitclaim deed, gave a deed of special warranty, the deed was held valid to the extent of the agent's authority.

In Gillespy v. Hollingsworth, — Ala. —, 53 So. 987, where an agent to convey signed the deed "S. E. Jones, Att'y in fact for Jas. Gillespy," instead of signing in the name of Gillespy, the grantor, it was held that, though the deed was void at law, it created an equitable interest in the grantee.

⁷ Where an agent was authorized to sign an obligation of insurance to the extent of £100, and signed for £150, and it was urged that the obligation was enforceable to the extent of the £100, Martin, B., said: "As to the last point, I think it scarcely arguable. This is an entire and indivisible contract to pay £150, and it is not valid, because the broker had authority only to make a contract to the extent of £100." Baines v. Ewing, 4 H. & C. 511, s. c. L. R. 1 Ex. 320. Cases involving the same point, in the case of negotiable instruments, are referred to in Chapter III following.

⁸ Coke, Lit. 258a. See also Olyphant v. McNair, 41 Barb. (N. Y.) 446; Marland v. Stanwood, 101 Mass. 470.

§ 1088. Summary of the rules.—Where there is a complete execution of the authority and something ex abundanti is added which was not authorized, there the execution is good and the excess only is void; but where there is not a complete execution of the authority, or where the boundaries between the execution and the excess are not distinguishable, the whole must be held bad.⁹

§ 1089. Agent should act in name of principal.—It is also a general rule, subject to certain exceptions to be hereafter noticed, that the act of the agent should purport to be what it is intended to be,—the act of the principal,—and should be performed in his name by the agent as such.¹⁰ Where the character in which, and the person for whom, the act is done, are clearly expressed and understood at the time, many of the difficult questions, hereafter to be noted, which arise where these matters are left uncertain or ambiguous, will be avoided.

⁹ Alexander v. Alexander, 2 Ves. Sr. 640; Thomas v. Joslin, 30 Minn. 388.

¹⁰ White v. Cuyler, 6 T. R. 176; Brinley v. Mann, 2 Cush. (Mass.) 337, 48 Am. Dec. 669; Hale v. Woods, 10 N. H. 470, 34 Am. Dec. 176; Merchants' Bank v. Central Bank, 1 Ga. 418, 44 Am. Dec. 665; Clealand v. Walker, 11 Ala. 1058, 46 Am. Dec. 238; Wood v. Goodridge, 6 Cush. (Mass.) 117, 52 Am. Dec. 771.

CHAPTER II

OF THE EXECUTION OF SEALED INSTRUMENTS

- § 1090. Purpose of this chapter.
- 1091. The questions involved.
- 1092. Rules may differ with class of instrument.
- 1093. Deed by agent must purport to be made and sealed in the name of the principal.
- 1094. — Exceptions—Powers exercisable in name of donee of power.
- 1095. — Rule different in Texas.
- 1096. — Rule changed by statute in a few states.
- 1097. — Effect of statutes abolishing seals or making them unnecessary.
- 1098. — How where instrument valid without a seal.
- 1099. Instrument may bind neither principal nor agent.
- 1100. — Or be simply inoperative as conveyance — Agent's liability on covenants—Estoppel.
- 1101. Whose deed is a given deed—How question determined.
- 1102. Not enough to make deed the principal's that the agent is described as such.
- 1103, 1104. Not principal's deed where agent appears as grantor and signer.
- 1105. — Agent named as grantor but deed signed in name of principal.
- 1106, 1107. — Agent purporting to act "as agent for" or "in behalf of" the principal.
- 1108-1110. — Deed naming principal as grantor but signed by agent personally.
- 1111, 1112. — Mere descriptive words will not change personal grants or covenants.
- 1113. Distinction in case of public agents.
- 1114. Whether necessary that deed should purport to be executed by an agent.
- 1115-1117. — Further of this rule.
- 1118. — How in reason.
- 1119. Parol evidence not admissible to discharge agent.

§ 1090. Purpose of this chapter.—The manner of the execution of instruments under seal, such as deeds, bonds and other solemn writings, is of so much importance and has been so frequently discussed, as to merit the more extended treatment, which it is the purpose of this chapter to devote to it. The word "deed" herein is used to describe all instruments under seal, and not merely conveyances of land.

It is to be observed that the question here is not how authority to execute sealed instruments is to be conferred, but how such an authority is to be executed. It is assumed that the agent was authorized to bind his principal, but the question is, has he done so.

§ 1091. The questions involved.—The purpose which the parties have in mind in the execution of any of the instruments which are here involved, must undoubtedly be that the instrument shall have effect as an act in law. In order that it shall have the effect which the parties desire, it is essential that they shall know how such documents are actually dealt with in the legal world; for in no other way can they know how to frame the one in question in such form that it shall be given the effect in the legal world which they so desire. By the legal world, in this connection, must usually be meant the courts in their efforts to determine and enforce the rights of parties under instruments of this sort. It is therefore essential to know how the courts will read, or construe, or interpret the document, in order that that effect may then be given to it. In other words, it is essential that the parties shall know, either actually or constructively, how the courts interpret documents of this sort, in order that they may so frame the one in question that it shall be interpreted as they desire. The first question then will be, how are such instruments as this interpreted by the courts.

A second question will be, is the interpretation to be ascertained entirely from the document itself, or from the document in the light of its surrounding facts; or, if it appears that the rules of interpretation seem likely to lead to an unsatisfactory result, may resort be had to parol evidence to show what in this instance was actually meant.

§ 1092. Rules may differ with class of instrument.—It is entirely possible, and will in fact be found to be the case, that the rules of law affecting the questions here suggested will differ with the differing classes of instruments which the law recognizes; and that a different history, origin, purpose or theory respecting one class will lead to distinctions, important in fact, but which might otherwise, perhaps, have been thought of no real significance. This is strikingly illustrated in the cases which are here under consideration. Sealed instruments, negotiable instruments, and ordinary simple contracts in writing have each their peculiar rules, some of which perhaps make distinctions without a real and substantial difference, but which must nevertheless be taken into account. The instrument under seal, which is the subject of the present chapter, is peculiarly subject to special rules which must now be considered.

§ 1093. Deed by agent must purport to be made and sealed in the name of the principal.—It is a general rule in the law of agency that in order to bind the principal by a deed executed by an agent, the deed must upon its face purport to be made, signed and sealed in the name of the principal. If, on the contrary, though the agent describes himself as "agent," or though he add the word "agent" to his name, the words of grant, covenant and the like, purport upon the face of the instrument to be his, and the seal purports to be his seal, the deed will bind the agent if any one and not the principal.¹¹

So, in order to enable the principal to enforce the obligation against the other party, the same rule must be observed. For it is well settled by the strict rules of the common law, that no person can sue or be sued upon an instrument under seal unless he be named therein as a party to the same, and has also signed and sealed it.¹²

The rules, moreover, hereafter to be considered,¹³ which enable an undisclosed principal to sue or be sued upon a contract made by his agent, have, as will be seen, no application to instruments under seal.¹⁴

The general rule, however, while well settled, is highly technical in its nature, being founded upon the common-law theories of the effect of a seal, and like other rules based purely upon these theories, has encountered a strong tendency in recent cases to make the mere presence of a seal subordinate to the evident intention of the parties.¹⁵

§ 1094. — Exceptions—Powers exercisable in name of donee of power.—There are, however, several well settled exceptions to the rule that a power must be exercised in the name of the principal.

¹¹ Stinchfield v. Little, 1 Greenl. (Me.) 231, 10 Am. Dec. 65; Stone v. Wood, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 452, 17 Am. Dec. 529; Lutz v. Linthicum, 8 Pet. (U. S.) 165, 8 L. Ed. 904; Fullam v. West Brookfield, 9 Allen (Mass.), 1; Townsend v. Corning, 23 Wend. (N. Y.) 435, aff'd 4 Hill (N. Y.), 351; Briggs v. Partridge, 64 N. Y. 357, 21 Am. Rep. 617; Grubbs v. Wiley, 17 Miss. 29; Hopkins v. Mehaffy, 11 S. & R. (Penn.) 126; Webster v. Brown, 2 Rich. (S. C.) N. S. 428; Echols v. Cheney, 28 Cal. 157; Morrison v. Bowman, 29 Cal. 337; City of Providence v. Miller, 11 R. I. 272, 23 Am. Rep. 453; Elwell v. Shaw, 16 Mass. 42, 8 Am. Dec. 126; Brinley v. Mann, 2 Cush. (Mass.) 337, 48 Am. Dec. 669; Combe's Case, 9 Co. 76; Fowler v. Shearer, 7 Mass. 14; Carter v. Chaudron, 21 Ala. 72; Gillespy v. Hollingsworth, 169 Ala. 602; Bogart v. De Bussy, 6 Johns (N. Y.) 94; Martin v. Flowers, Leigh (Va.), 158; Mer- chants' Bank v. Central Bank, 1 Ga. 418, 44 Am. Dec. 665, and see cases cited in following sections.

¹² Buffalo Catholic Institute v. Bitter, 87 N. Y. 250; Klein v. Mechanics' Bank, 145 N. Y. App. Div. 615; Porter v. Baldwin, 139 N. Y. App. Div. 278; McColgan v. Katz, 29 N. Y. Misc. 136; Loeb v. Barris, 50 N. J. L. 382; Harms v. McCormick, 132 Ill. 104; Van Dyke v. Van Dyke, 123 Ga. 686. See also Potter v. Bassett, 35 Mo. App. 417.

¹³ See post, Undisclosed Principal.

¹⁴ Lenney v. Finley, 118 Ga. 718; Badger Silver Mining Co. v. Drake, 31 C. C. A. 378, 88 Fed. 48; Farrar v. Lee, 10 N. Y. App. Div. 130; Benham v. Emery, 46 Hun (N. Y.), 156; Equitable Life Assur. Soc. v. Smith, 25 Ill. App. 471.

¹⁵ See remarks of Henry, J., in McClure v. Herring, 70 Mo. 18, 35 Am. Rep. 404.

Thus in a leading case ¹⁶ in Massachusetts (where the general rule has been most strictly applied), it is said by Wells, J.: "When the power merely authorizes the donee to execute a deed in the name of the donor, or as his attorney, it must be so executed; and the deed of sale will then be the deed of the donor of the power and not of the donee. But a power may be given to be executed by the deed of the donee, as well as it may by his will. This was formerly the more common mode.¹⁷ When such is the case, the deed of sale not only may, but must, be executed under the hand and seal of the donee of the power. If the power be given in the alternative, as is often the case, the deed of sale may be executed in either form. In the present case [that of the execution of a power of sale under a mortgage], the power is 'to make, execute and deliver to the purchaser or purchasers thereof all necessary conveyances for the purpose of vesting in such purchaser or purchasers the premises so sold in fee simple absolute.' This is not a mere power of attorney to execute a deed in the name of the mortgagor: though the deed might not perhaps have been invalid if it had been executed in that manner; but it is a full power of sale and conveyance, which may properly be executed, as it was in this case, by the deed of the mortgagee, reciting the power, and signed and sealed with her own name and proper seal."

Cases of statutory or official powers may fall within the same rule. So also, as has been seen, cases of powers "coupled with an interest" have often been said to be those in which the power is capable of being exercised in the name of the donee. Cases of powers, properly executed, and expressly authorizing the donee to make the conveyance in his own name, may be within the same class. A few cases carry the rule still further, and sustain deeds made by the agent where they clearly show an intent to convey for the principal, though they are artificial in form.¹⁸

§ 1095: — Rule different in Texas.—A different rule from that first stated seems to prevail in Texas. There, it is held not to be

¹⁶ Cranston v. Crane, 97 Mass. 459, 93 Am. Dec. 106.

See "Survival of Powers as Unaffected by Statutes" by Professor A. M. Kales, 6 Illinois Law Review, 447.

¹⁷ Citing 1 Sugden on Powers (7th ed.), 286.

¹⁸ In Hubbard v. Swofford Bros. Dry Goods Co., 209 Mo. 495, 123 Am.

St. R. 488, there is a dictum to the effect that, in case of a power to sell and convey, a conveyance made by the donee indicating that he makes it in execution of the power is a valid execution of the power though made in the name of the donee. See also Donovan v. Welch, 11 N. Dak. 113.

essential that the agent shall refer to his power, and he may make the deed in his own name.¹⁹ "If the grantor has no estate in the land which can pass by the deed, but has a power to convey the title of another, his act will be referred to his power because the purchaser will be supposed to have bought in reliance on it." So it is held, that, if the attorney refers to one power which is invalid but he has another valid power not referred to, he will be presumed to have acted under the latter.²⁰ Whether, when he acts without reference to his power, he is to be deemed to be acting in pursuance of it, or independently of it and on his own account, seems to be a question of fact to be determined in view of all the circumstances of the case.²¹

§ 1096. — Rule changed by statute in a few states.—In a few of the states, the general rule has been changed by statutes which in substance provide that the fact that the attorney is named as the grantor, or that he signs instead of the principal, shall not prevent the taking effect of the deed as the deed of the principal, where that appears to have been the intention of the parties.²²

¹⁹ Thus in Trinity County Lumber Co. v. Pinckard, 4 Tex. Civ. App. 671, it is said, "The execution of a power by the attorney in his own name is at common law invalid; but that rule does not now, nor did it obtain in this state when the act in question was passed. Under the law of this state a power may be executed by the attorney without reference to his authority. Our law, in this particular at least, dispenses with the technical requirements of the common law, and if the attorney has the power to convey, the conveyance is binding upon the principal, and conveys his title, though the conveyance be made without reference to him. Hough v. Hill, 47 Tex. 148; Rogers v. Bracken, 15 Tex. 564; Link v. Page, 72 Tex. 592." See also Hill v. Conrad, 91 Tex. 341; Pool v. Foster (Tex. Civ. App.), 49 S. W. 923; Rye v. Petroleum Co., 42 Tex. Civ. App. 185; Neill v. Kleiber, 51 Tex. Civ. App. 552.

²⁰ Hough v. Hill, supra; Link v. Page, supra.

²¹ Thus in Hill v. Conrad, supra, where the agent in making the conveyance declared himself to be the owner, and referred to a conveyance to himself, it was held that his deed could not be sustained as an execution of the power.

²² Maine [1883] p. 605, § 15.—Deeds and contracts, executed by an authorized agent of a person or a corporation in the name of his principal, or in his own name for his principal are in law the deeds and contracts of such principal.

Mississippi (Code § 194).—Conveyances of land or contracts relating thereto, executed by an attorney in fact for his principal, and duly acknowledged or proved, shall have the same force and effect as if executed and acknowledged by the principal; and where a conveyance by an attorney is in execution of letters of attorney, it shall pass the interest of the principal though not formally executed in his name; but in all such cases the attorney must have been appointed by some writing duly executed by the principal.

Ohio (R. S. § 4110).—No deed of real estate executed by any person acting for another, under a power of § 1097. — Effect of statutes abolishing seals or making them unnecessary.—In several of the states, moreover, the rules affecting sealed instruments generally have been more or less modified by statute. Thus in Minnesota, where the statute provides that “the use of private seals on written contracts is hereby abolished, and the addition attorney duly executed, acknowledged and recorded, shall be held to be invalid or defective because he is named therein, as such attorney, as the grantor instead of his principal; nor because his name, as such attorney, is subscribed thereto, instead of the name of the principal; nor because the certificate of acknowledgment, instead of setting forth that the deed was acknowledged by the principal, by his attorney, sets forth that it was acknowledged by the person who executed it, as such attorney; but all such deeds so executed shall be as valid and effectual, in all respects, within the authority conferred by such powers of attorney, as if they had been executed by the principals of such attorneys, in their own proper persons.

Pennsylvania (Purdon's Dig. of Stat. 13th ed. p. 376 § 8).—Whenever any deed of conveyance or other instrument of writing has been heretofore executed or acknowledged, or both under any power sufficiently authorizing the same, which power shall have been recited in said deed or other instrument, shall have been informally executed by an attorney, in his own name, reciting his authority, instead of being executed in the name of the principal or principals, such deed or instrument shall be taken to be of the same validity and effect as if executed in the name and behalf of the principal or principals, as a party or parties thereunto.

Rhode Island (Gen. Laws [1909] p. 878 § 17).—The donee of a power of attorney may under and within the authority of the power if he think fit, execute or do any assurance, instrument, or thing in and with his own name and signature, and, where sealing is required, with his own seal; and every assurance, instrument, and thing so executed and done, shall be as effectual in law, to all intents, as if it had been executed or done by the donee of the power, in the name and with the signature or signatures and seal of the donor thereof.

Tennessee (Shan. Code § 3679).—Instruments in relation to real or personal property, executed by an agent or attorney, may be signed by such agent or attorney for his principal, or by writing the name of the principal by him as agent or attorney, or by simply writing his own name or his principal's name, if the instrument on its face shows the character in which it is intended to be executed. See McCreary v. McCorkle (Tenn. Ch.), 54 S. W. 53.

Virginia (Code § 2416).—If, in a deed made by one as attorney in fact for another, the words of conveyance or the signature be in the name of the attorney, it shall be as much the principal's deed as if the words of conveyance or the signature were in the name of the principal by the attorney, if it be manifest on the face of the deed that it should be construed to be that of the principal to give effect to its intent.

West Virginia (ch. 71 § 3).—If in a deed made by one as attorney in fact for another, the words of conveyance or the signature be in the name of the attorney, it shall be as much the principal's deed as if the words of conveyance or the signature were in the name of the principal by the attorney, if it be manifest on the face of the deed that it should be construed to be that of the principal to give effect to its intent.

of a private seal to an instrument in writing shall not affect its character in any respect," it was held that all the differences theretofore existing in the law between sealed and unsealed instruments were abolished, and that, notwithstanding the presence of a seal, an undisclosed principal could be charged upon parol evidence of his existence.²³

On the other hand, in Texas, where the statute declares that no private seal shall be necessary to the validity of any contract, bond or conveyance, "nor shall the addition or omission of a seal or scroll in any way affect the force and effect of the same," it was held, that this statute had not changed the rule.²⁴

§ 1098. — How where instrument valid without a seal.—Whether the rule excluding parol evidence to charge the real principal, should apply where the contract, though happening to be under seal, was not one to whose validity a seal was essential, is a question upon which the authorities are not entirely uniform. It is held in some cases that the evidence is as admissible under such circumstances as though no seal were in fact attached;²⁵ but in other cases it is held that the rule of exclusion applies, unless the interest of the principal appears upon the face of the contract, or unless, perhaps, the principal has ratified it and accepted the benefits of it.²⁶

The question will be more fully considered in a later section.²⁷

§ 1099. Instrument may bind neither principal nor agent.—It does not necessarily follow, of course, that either the principal or the

The English Conveyancing Act of 1881, § 46, provides that "The donee of a power of attorney may, if he thinks fit, execute or do any assurance, instrument, or thing in and with his own name and signature and his own seal, where sealing is required, by the authority of the donor of the power; and every assurance, instrument and thing so executed and done shall be as effectual in law, to all intents, as if it had been executed or done by the donee of the power in the name and with the signature and seal of the donor thereof."

²³ Streeter v. Janu, 90 Minn. 393. To same effect is Gibbs v. Dickson, 33 Ark. 107.

²⁴ Sanger v. Warren, 91 Tex. 472, 66 Am. St. R. 913. See also Jones v. Morris, 61 Ala. 518.

²⁵ Woolsey v. Henke, 125 Wis. 134; Stowell v. Eldred, 39 Wis. 614; Kirschbon v. Bonzel, 67 Wis. 178; Northern Nat. Bank v. Lewis, 78 Wis. 475; Lancaster v. Knickerbocker Ice Co., 153 Pa. 427; Wagoner v. Watts, 44 N. J. L. 126, aff'd 45 N. J. L. 184.

²⁶ Stanton v. Granger, 125 N. Y. App. Div. 174, affirmed without opinion, 193 N. Y. 656; Smith v. Pierce, 45 N. Y. App. Div. 628; Schaefer v. Henkel, 75 N. Y. 378; Briggs v. Partridge, 64 N. Y. 357, 21 Am. Rep. 617; Simson v. New York, etc., R. Co., 51 N. Y. Super. 419; Lenney v. Finley, 118 Ga. 718; Van Dyke v. Van Dyke, 123 Ga. 686. Compare Rand v. Moulton, 72 N. Y. App. Div. 236.

²⁷ See post, Book IV, Chap. V.

agent must always be bound upon the instrument. It may be so executed that neither will be bound. Thus, if the covenants are clearly the covenants of the principal, but the agent signs in his own name, and appends his own seal, neither the principal nor the agent will ordinarily be liable upon the instrument: the principal, because he has not signed, and the agent, because he has not covenanted.²⁸ For similar reasons, the reverse of the situation will be subject to the same rule, that is, where the grants and covenants are clearly those of the agent only but the signature and seal are those of the principal.²⁹ In general, as will be seen hereafter,³⁰ the agent cannot be liable upon the instrument itself unless it contains apt words to bind him personally; though in many cases, as will be seen, he will be liable upon an express or implied warranty of authority.

Courts have, however, in several cases declared that, ut res magis valcat, quam pereat, they would, where the principal could not be held, lean towards a construction which would make the agent personally liable.³¹

§ 1100. — Or be simply inoperative as conveyance—Agent's liability on covenants—Estoppel.—The instrument may also in many cases be simply inoperative, as a conveyance. Thus, where the agent undertakes in his own name to convey or lease that which clearly belongs to his principal, the conveyance or lease will be of no effect as such, and will not support the agreement of the other party to pay the purchase price or rent therein provided for.³² Where, however, the covenant, though made by the agent, is that the principal will convey, such a covenant is valid and furnishes a good consideration for the agreement of the opposite party to pay.³³

²⁸ Whitford v. Laidler, 94 N. Y. 145, 46 Am. Rep. 131; Bellas v. Hays, 5 S. & R. (Pa.) 427, 9 Am. Dec. 385; Hopkins v. Mehaffy, 11 S. & R. (Pa.) 126; Neufeld v. Beidler, 37 Ill. App. 34; Abbey v. Chase, 6 Cush. (Mass.) 54; Ellis v. Pulsifer, 4 Allen (Mass.), 165; Townsend v. Corning, 23 Wend. (N. Y.) 435, aff'd 4 Hill, 351; Morrison v. Bowman, 29 Cal. 337.

²⁹ Steele v. McElroy, 1 Sneed (Tenn.), 341.

But compare cases cited in § 1105, post.

³⁰ See post, Book IV, Chapter III.

³¹ See Hall v. Cockrell, 28 Ala. 507.

³² First Baptist Church v. Harper, 191 Mass. 196; Murray v. Armstrong, 11 Mo. 209; Potter v. Bassett, 35 Mo. App. 417; Bogart v. De Bussy, 6 Johns. (N. Y.) 94; Frontin v. Small, 2 Ld. Ray. 1418; Jones v. Morris, 61 Ala. 518; Fisher v. Salmon, 1 Cal. 413, 54 Am. Dec. 297; Echols v. Cheney, 28 Cal. 157; Casey v. Lucas, 2 Bush (Ky.), 57; Fowler v. Shearer, 7 Mass. 14; Elwell v. Shaw, 16 Mass. 42, 8 Am. Dec. 126; Holmes v. Carman, 1 Freem. Ch. (Miss.) 408; Locke v. Alexander, 2 Hawks (9 N. C.), 155, 11 Am. Dec. 750.

³³ Spencer v. Field, 10 Wend. (N. Y.) 87, distinguishing Bogart v. De Bussy, supra, and Frontin v. Small, supra.

But, though the instrument may be invalid as a conveyance, the agent may be liable upon any of the covenants contained in it, which may subsist without a transfer of the title.³⁴

The agent's personal covenant in such a case may, it is held, operate by way of estoppel to prevent the agent's setting up a subsequently acquired title to the same premises;³⁵ but he is not estopped by covenants made in the principal's name.³⁶

Returning now to the ordinary case of a deed, bond or other similar instrument executed by the agent and to the question of whose deed it is to be deemed to be—

§ 1101. Whose deed is a given deed—How question determined.—In determining whether a given deed is the deed of the principal, regard may be had, First, to the party named as grantor. Is the deed stated to be made by the principal or by some other person? Secondly, to the granting clause. Is the principal or the agent the person who purports to make the grant? Thirdly, to the covenants, if any. Are these the covenants of the principal? Fourthly, to the testimonium clause. Who is it who is to set his name and seal in testimony of the grant? Is it the principal or the agent? And Fifthly, to the signature and seal. Whose signature and seal are these? Are they those of the principal or of the agent?³⁷

³⁴ Lutz v. Linthicum, 33 U. S. (8 Pet.) 165, 8 L. Ed. 904; Mitchell v. Hazen, 4 Conn. 495, 10 Am. Dec. 169; Sumner v. Williams, 8 Mass. 162, 5 Am. Dec. 803.

But see Locke v. Alexander, 2 Hawks (N. C.), 155, 11 Am. Dec. 750.

³⁵ North v. Henneberry, 44 Wis. 306; Heard v. Hall, 16 Pick. (Mass.) 457.

³⁶ Kern v. Chalfant, 7 Minn. 487; Smith v. Penny, 44 Cal. 161.

³⁷ Whose seal is it.—Where the body of a deed appeared to be the grant of a corporation, and the deed was signed by the trustees, whose names were followed by scrolls, it was held that the scrolls or seals so used should be deemed to be the seal of the corporation, inasmuch as they had not been denominated the seals of the signees, and since this view was consonant with the general tenor of the instrument. Reynolds Heirs v. Trustees of Glasgow Acad- emy (1837), 6 Dana (Ky.), 37. And so in Hopkins v. Mehaffy (1824), 11 S. & R. (Pa.) 126, it was held that an agent was not bound where he had signed and sealed the instrument, since, as the court said, the sealing was as president and in behalf of the corporation. And in Montgomery v. Dorion (1834), 7 N. H. 475, an instrument was upheld, against the principals, to which the agent had put his hand and seal. The court said: "This seems tantamount to putting his hand and seal to the deed for them, which is sufficient."

On the contrary, it was held in Savings Bank v. Davis (1830), 8 Conn. 191, that a deed, executed by an agent, to be valid must be sealed with the corporate seal, and none other would suffice; the court regrets the inconvenience of such a rule but yields to unbroken precedents, citing: King v. North Duffield, 3 M. &

If upon such an analysis the deed does not upon its face purport to be the deed of the principal, made, signed, sealed and delivered in his name and as his deed, it cannot take effect as such.

§ 1102. Not enough to make deed the principal's that the agent is described as such.—It is not enough merely that the agent was in fact authorized to make the deed, if he has not acted in the name of the principal. Nor is it ordinarily sufficient that he describes himself in the deed as acting by virtue of a power of attorney or otherwise, or for or in behalf, or as attorney, of the principal, or as a committee, or as trustee of a corporation, etc.; for these expressions are usually but descriptio personæ, and if, in fact, he has acted in his own name and set his own hand and seal, the causes of action thereon accrue to and against him personally and not to or against the principal, despite these recitals.³⁸

But at the same time, no set form of words is necessary. The deed must be in the name, and purport to be the act and deed, of the principal; but whether such is the purport of the instrument, must be de-

S. 247; Randall v. Van Vechten, 19 Johns. (N. Y.) 60, 10 Am. Dec. 193; Bank of Columbia v. Patterson's Adm'rs, 7 Cranch (U. S.), 299, 3 L. Ed. 351; Damon v. Granby, 2 Pick. (Mass.) 345; Stinchfield v. Little, 1 Greenl. (Me.) 231, 10 Am. Dec. 65; Taft v. Brewster, 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 334, 6 Am. Dec. 280.

³⁸ Stinchfield v. Little, 1 Greenl. (Me.) 231, 10 Am. Dec. 65; Fowler v. Shearer, 7 Mass. 14; Tippets v. Walker, 4 Mass. 595; Tucker v. Bass, 5 Mass. 164; Taft v. Brewster, 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 334, 6 Am. Dec. 280; Lutz v. Linthicum, 8 Pet. (U. S.) 165, 8 L. Ed. 904; Fullam v. West Brookfield, 9 Allen (Mass.), 1; Duval v. Craig, 2 Wheat. (U. S.) 45, 4 L. Ed. 180; Deming v. Bullitt, 1 Blackf. (Ind.) 241; White v. Skinner, 13 Johns. (N. Y.) 307, 7 Am. Dec. 381; Quigley v. DeHaas, 82 Pa. 267; Briggs v. Partridge, 64 N. Y. 357, 21 Am. Rep. 617; Henricus v. Englert, 137 N. Y. 488; Kiersted v. Orange, etc., R. R. Co., 69 N. Y. 343, 25 Am. Rep. 199; Sargent v. Webster, 13 Metc. (Mass.) 497, 46 Am. Dec. 743; First Church v. Harper, 191 Mass. 196; Ehdsley v. Strock, 50 Mo. 508; Jones

v. Morris, 61 Ala. 518; Banks v. Sharp, 6 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 180; Locke v. Alexander, 2 Hawk. (N. C.) 155, 11 Am. Dec. 750; Scott v. McAlpin, 4 N. C. 587, N. C. Term Rep. 155, 7 Am. Dec. 703; Bellas v. Hays, 5 Serg. & R. (Penn.) 427, 9 Am. Dec. 385; Fisher v. Salmon, 1 Cal. 413, 54 Am. Dec. 297; Welsh v. Usher, 2 Hill Ch. (S. C.) 167, 29 Am. Dec. 63; Buffalo Catholic Institute v. Bitter, 87 N. Y. 250; Willis v. Bellamy, 52 N. Y. Super. Ct. 373; Sheridan v. Pease, 93 Ill. App. 219; Home Library Ass'n v. Witherow, 50 Ill. App. 117; Jackson v. Roberts, 95 Ky. 410; De Belran v. Gola, 64 Md. 262.

See also Cadell v. Allen, 99 N. Car. 542. Although the signature in this case sufficiently purported to be that of the principal the terms of the deed all read, "C., attorney for L." The court said: "He—not his principal—purported to convey the title, and, as a consequence, no title passed, for he had none to convey. The deed should, by its effective terms of conveyance, be and purport to be that of the principal, executed by his attorney, and to convey the estate of the principal."

terminated from its general tenor, and not from any particular clause. Such construction must be given, in this as well as in other questions arising on conveyances, as shall make every part of the instrument operative as far as possible; and when the intention of the parties can be discovered, such intention should be carried into effect, if it can be done consistently with the rules of law.³⁹

Thus in a leading English case, it is said by Grose, J.: "There is no particular form of words required to be used, provided the act be in the name of the principal, for where is the difference between signing J B by M W, his attorney, which must be admitted to be good, and M W for J B? In either case, the act of sealing and delivering is done in the name of the principal and by his authority. Whether the attorney put his name first or last cannot affect the validity of the act done."⁴⁰ The particular illustration used here, however, is not a very happy one; because, as will be seen,⁴¹ the form "M W for J B" is not always free from difficulty.

§ 1103. Not principal's deed where agent appears as grantor and signer.—Neither can the deed ordinarily be deemed to be the deed of the principal where the agent is the one who is named as the grantor or maker, and he is also the one who signs and seals it. Thus where a deed was executed by an agent in the following form, "Know all men, etc., that I, Josiah Little, of, etc., by virtue of a vote of the Pejebscot Proprietors, passed, etc., authorizing and appointing me to give and execute deeds for and in behalf of said proprietors, for and in consideration of the sum of thirty-seven pounds to me in hand paid by Thomas Stinchfield, of, etc., the receipt whereof I do hereby acknowledge, have given, granted, released, conveyed and confirmed unto him, the said Thomas Stinchfield, his heirs and assigns, two hundred acres, etc. To have and to hold, etc., hereby covenanting in behalf of said proprietors, their respective heirs, executors and administrators, to and with the said T. S., his heirs and assigns, to warrant, confirm and defend him and them in the possession of the said granted premises, against the lawful claims of all persons whatsoever. In testimony that this in-

³⁹ Hale v. Woods, 10 N. H. 470, 34 Am. Dec. 176; Jackson v. Blodget, 16 Johns. (N. Y.) 172; Bridge v. Wellington, 1 Mass. 219; Davis v. Hayden, 9 Mass. 514; Hatch v. Dwight, 17 Mass. 289, 9 Am. Dec. 147; Magill v. Hinsdale, 6 Conn. 464 a. 16 Am. Dec. 70; Hovey v. Magill, 2 Conn. 680.

⁴⁰ Wilks v. Back, 2 East, 142.

See the criticism on this language of Grose J., by David Hoffman, Esq. in 3 American Jurist, at p. 82 et seq.

⁴¹ See Dolan v. Alley, 153 Mass. 380; King v. Handy, 2 Ill. App. 212; Offutt v. Ayers, 7 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 356; Dawson v. Cotton, 26 Ala. 591.

strument shall be forever hereafter acknowledged by the said proprietors as their act and deed and be held good and valid by them, I, the said Josiah Little, by virtue of the aforesaid vote, do hereby set my hand and seal this day, etc." Signed "Josiah Little, Seal," it was held to be the deed of Josiah Little and that he, and not the Pejebscot Proprietors, was liable upon the covenants.⁴²

So where Jonathan Elwell executed to Joshua Elwell a power of attorney to convey the lands in question, and the latter, purporting to act in pursuance of it, executed a deed of the land, in which, after reciting the power, he proceeded: "Now know ye that I, the said Joshua, by virtue of the power aforesaid, in consideration, etc., do hereby bargain, grant, sell and convey unto the said (grantees) to have and to hold, etc., and I do covenant with the said (grantees) that I am duly empowered to make the grant and conveyance aforesaid; that the said Jonathan at the time of executing said power was, and now is, lawfully seized of the premises, and that he will warrant and defend the same, etc. In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set the name and seal of the said Jonathan this day, etc.," and signed "Joshua Elwell" and seal, the deed was held not be the deed of Jonathan.⁴³

§ 1104. — The same rules were applied in an early case in Massachusetts, although the facts were different, and the case might well have been deemed to fall within a different class later to be considered. Here one of two deeds which purported to be made by "New England Silk Company, a corporation, by Christopher Colt, Jun., their treasurer," was attested: "In witness whereof, I, the said Christopher Colt, Jun., in behalf of said company, and as their treasurer, have hereunto set my hand and seal," was signed and sealed "Christopher Colt, Jun., treasurer, New England Silk Company," and the acknowledgment was to the effect that "Christopher Colt, Jun., treasurer, etc., acknowledged the above instrument to be his free act and deed," and the other deed was like the first except that Colt was therein described as "treasurer of New England Silk Company, and duly authorized for that purpose," the court held each of them to be inoperative to convey the title of the Silk Company. In both of these deeds, as will be noticed, the principal was properly named as grantor but they were signed and sealed by the agent in his own name. "Both of these deeds," said Judge Metcalf, "were executed by C. Colt, Jun., in his own name, were sealed with his seal, and were acknowledged by him as his acts and deeds. In one of them, it is true, he declared that he acted in behalf of the company, and as their treasurer; and in the other he declared himself to be their treasurer, and to be duly authorized for the purpose of executing it. But this was not enough. He should have executed the deeds in the name of the company. He should also have affixed to them the seal of the company, and have acknowledged them to be the deeds of the company.”⁴⁴

⁴² Stinchfield v. Little (1821), 1 Greenl. (Me.) 231, 10 Am. Dec. 65.

⁴³ Elwell v. Shaw (1819), 16 Mass. 42, 8 Am. Dec. 126.

§ 1105. — Agent named as grantor but deed signed in name of principal.—Where, however, although the agent was named in the instrument as the party, the deed was properly signed in the name of the principal, it has been given effect as the deed of the principal, and not of the agent.⁴⁵ In this case a lease was made commencing as follows: “This indenture, made this 17th day of April, A. D. 1869, between Daniel R. Brant, of the city of Chicago, party of the first part, and Edward F. Lawrence, president of the Northwestern Distilling Company, of the same place, party of the second part.” Throughout the lease the parties were spoken of as persons and the covenants were personal covenants, and the instrument concluded as follows: “In testimony whereof, the said parties have hereunto set their hands and seals the day and year first above written. D. R. Brant. [Seal.] Northwestern Distilling Co. [Seal.] By Edward Lawrence, President.”

§ 1106. — Agent purporting to act “as” agent “for” or “in behalf of” the principal.—Where the agent has expressly declared that he was acting as such and for or in behalf of a described princi-

⁴⁴ Brinley v. Mann (1848), 2 Cush. (Mass.) 337, 48 Am. Dec. 669.

Compare Haven v. Adams, 4 Allen (Mass.), 80.

Where a deed was in form the deed of Stephen Smith [the principal] from the beginning to the end of the testimonium clause, but was signed “Stephen Henry Smith, attorney in fact of Stephen Smith,” it was held not to be the deed of Stephen Smith. Morrison v. Bowman, 29 Cal. 337.

⁴⁵ Northwestern Distilling Co. v. Brant (1873), 69 Ill. 658, 18 Am. Rep. 631. See also to the same effect: Shanks v. Lancaster (1848), 5 Gratt. (Va.) 110, 50 Am. Dec. 108; Butterfield v. Beall (1851), 3 Ind. 203.

Compare Hancock v. Younker, 83 Ill. 208; Cadell v. Allen, 99 N. Car. 542.

But where an agreement for the building of large rooms ran between “G. M. S. on the one part, and S. M. M., D. S. H., A. R. D., committee for Union Chapter No. 18, and W. S. S., S. S. G., N. K., committee for Jackson Lodge No. 68;” and “the before named committee on behalf of said Chapter and Lodge obligate themselves to pay” and was signed “G. M. S., [L. S.]; Union Chapter No. 18, [L. S.] by S. M. M., D. S. H., A. R. D., committee; Jackson Lodge, No. 68, [L. S.] by W. S. S., L. S. G., N. K., committee,” it was held that the agreement was between G. M. S. and the members of the committees personally and that the latter might therefore sue for its breach. Steele v. McElroy, 1 Sneed (Tenn.), 341.

pal, the deed has in many cases been given effect as such. Thus where a manufacturing company by vote had authorized one Arthur W. Magill to make a deed of the real estate of the company, and he, in pursuance of the authority, executed a deed, of which the granting part was as follows: "Arthur W. Magill, agent for the Middletown Manufacturing Company, being empowered by vote," etc., "for and in behalf of said company," etc., "do give, grant," etc., the covenant being: "I do hereby covenant for and in behalf of the said company," etc., "that said Middletown Manufacturing Company is well seized," etc., "and I do also bind the said Middletown Manufacturing Company to warrant and defend," etc., and the conclusion being as follows: "In witness whereof, I have hereto, for and in behalf of said Middletown Manufacturing Company, set my hand and seal at Middletown, this 29th day of March, A. D. 1817. Arthur W. Magill [L. s.], agent for the Middletown Manufacturing Company," it was held that this was the deed of the company and not of the agent.⁴⁶

And again, where the terms of the conveyance were: "I, Daniel King, as well for myself as attorney for Zachariah King, do for myself and the said Zachariah, remise, release and forever quit-claim" the premises, "together with all the estate, right, title, interest, use, property, claim and demand whatsoever, of me, the said Daniel, and said Zachariah, which we now have, or heretofore had at any time, in said premises. And we, the said Daniel and Zachariah, do hereby, for ourselves, our heirs and executors, covenant that the premises are free of all incumbrance and that the grantee may quietly enjoy the same without any claim or hindrance from us or any one claiming under us, or either of us. In witness whereof, we the said Daniel for himself and as attorney aforesaid, have hereunto set our hands and seals," etc., and signed "Daniel King" and "Daniel King, attorney for Zachariah King, being duly authorized as appears of record," with seals affixed to each signature, it was held that the grant conveyed the title of both.⁴⁷

§ 1107. — So where the deed of the land of T and S, his wife, was drawn as follows: "I, H, for myself, and as attorney for T and S, by their letters of attorney under their hands and seals, in consideration, etc., to us paid by L, do sell and convey to L, etc. And we the said T and S do covenant, etc. In witness whereof, I, H, in my own right have hereunto set my hand and seal, and as attorney for said

⁴⁶ Magill v. Hinsdale (1827), 6 Conn. 464 a, 16 Am. Dec. 70.

v. Back (1802), 2 East, 142, and Montgomery v. Dorion (1835), 7 N. H. 475.

⁴⁷ Hale v. Woods (1839), 10 N. H. 470, 34 Am. Dec. 176; citing Wilks

T and S have hereunto set their hands and seals," and was signed "H. [L. s.] T. [L. s.] S. [L. s.] By H, their attorney in fact," it was held that the deed was that of T and his wife S, and not of the agent H.⁴⁸

But where A gave to his wife B a power of attorney to execute a deed of land and she made the deed in the following form: "Know ye that I, B, of, etc., as attorney to A, of, etc., in consideration, etc., have granted, etc. In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and seal. B. [Seal]," the court held that it was not the deed of A.⁴⁹

§ 1108. — Deed naming principal as grantor but signed by agent personally.—Much clearer than any of the preceding cases are those in which the principal is named as the grantor or maker, though the agent then signs as agent. Thus where a lease purporting to be made by Mussey, was signed "John Hammond for B. B. Mussey, [Seal]" it was held that it was well executed as the lease of Mussey. Said the court: "The defendant does not deny Hammond's authority, but takes the ground that the lease is not the deed of Mussey but of Hammond. And the common learning is relied on, to wit, that when a deed is executed by attorney, it must be the act of the principal, done and executed in the principal's name. The only question is, What is an execution of a deed, by an attorney, in the name of the principal? We understand the execution of a deed to be the signing, sealing and delivering of it. These must be done in the name of the principal by the hand of the attorney. When the signing and sealing are in the name of the principal, the delivery will be presumed to have been so,

⁴⁸ McClure v. Herring (1879), 70 Mo. 18, 35 Am. Rep. 404; Hubbard v. Swafford Bros. Dry Goods Co., 209 Mo. 495, 123 Am. St. R. 488. To like effect see Donovan v. Welch, 11 N. D. 113 (a fully considered case though seals are abolished in that state); Mulford v. Rowland, 45 Colo. 172; Shanks v. Lancaster (1848), 5 Gratt. (Va.) 110, 50 Am. Dec. 108.

In the last case, the court said: "It is a sufficient execution of a deed by an attorney in fact for his principal, if he signs the name of the principal with a seal annexed, stating it to be done by him as attorney for the principal; as if he signs his own name with a seal annexed, stating it to be for the principal." See also, Bryan v. Stump, 8 Gratt. 241, 56 Am. Dec. 139.

In Hubbard v. Swofford Bros. Dry Goods Co., supra, the deed was made "between J. W. S. as agent for C. H., and M. H.," of the first part and the grantee. It closed: "In testimony whereof the said J. W. S. as agent for C. H. and M. H. * * * has hereunto set his hand and seal," and was signed "J. W. S. Atty. for C. H." The court said that "one would have to yield his common sense interpretation of this deed to a very narrow technical interpretation of it in order to reach the conclusion that it was intended otherwise than as the deed of H."

See also, Collins v. Hammock, 59 Ala. 448 (a bond).

⁴⁹ Fowler v. Shearer (1810), 7 Mass. 14.

unless the contrary is proved. But however clearly the body of the deed may show an intent that it shall be the act of the principal, yet unless it is executed by his attorney for him, it is not his deed, but the deed of the attorney or of no one.⁵⁰ The most usual and approved form of executing a deed by attorney is by his writing the name of the principal and adding 'by A B his attorney' or 'by his attorney A B.' But this is not the only form of execution which will make the deed the act of the principal. In Wilks v. Back,⁵¹ M. Wilks, attorney for J. Browne, executed a deed for himself and Browne in this form: 'Mathias Wilks' [Seal]; 'For James Browne, Mathias Wilks' [Seal]. The court of King's bench decided that the deed was well executed in the name of Browne. This decision has never been overruled, but has always been regarded as rightly made."⁵²

§ 1109. — So where the operative clauses of a deed were in the name of the corporation "by William Wallace, their agent," and the covenants were in the name of the corporation, but the signature was "William Wallace, Agent for the Flower Brook Manufacturing Company," the court held that the deed must be considered the deed of the corporation.⁵³

And where a contract under seal was made "between the C. I. Co. party of the first part by J. S. B. agent, and J. K. B. and E. C. B. parties of the second part:" the stipulations in the contract purporting to be between "the said party of the first part" and "the said parties of the second part," no names being given, and concluded, "In witness

⁵⁰ Lessee of Clarke v. Courtney (1831). 5 Pet. (U. S.) 319, 350, 8 L. Ed. 140.

⁵¹ 2 East, 142.

⁵² Mussey v. Scott (1851), 7 Cush. (Mass.) 215, 54 Am. Dec. 719, citing Wilburn v. Larkin (1832), 3 Blackf. (Ind.) 55; Hunter v. Miller (1846), 6 B. Mon. (Ky.) 612. And to the same effect are, Shanks v. Lancaster (1848), 5 Gratt. (Va.) 110, 50 Am. Dec. 108; Abbey v. Chase (1850), 6 Cush. (Mass.) 54; Tucker Mfg. Co. v. Fairbanks (1867), 98 Mass. 101.

Brinley v. Mann (1848), 2 Cush. (Mass.) 337, 48 Am. Dec. 669 cited in an earlier section seems opposed, and is undoubtedly too extreme. Compare Haven v. Adams (1862), 4 Allen (Mass.), 80.

⁵³ McDaniels v. Flower Brook Mfg.

Co. (1850), 22 Vt. 274; see also Martin v. Almond (1857), 25 Mo. 313, and Carter v. Chaudron, 21 Ala. 72, where throughout the body of the deed it purported to be between the principal and the third party, but was signed, "S. H. G. [Seal] Attorney in fact for J. K.," it was held, that the deed was well executed as the deed of J. K., the principal.

So in Sapp v. Cline, 131 Ga. 433, a deed given by an administrator which purported to be made by S. "administrator," etc., and in the testimonium clause recited that it was signed by S. "administrator;" but was signed by S. merely, was held to pass the property of the estate therein described of which S. was administrator. To same effect is Hart v. Lewis, 130 Ga. 504.

whereof the parties have hereunto affixed their hands and seals," and was signed "J. S. B. Agent [L. s.], J. K. B. [L. s.], E. C. B. [L. s.]," it was held to be the deed of the company.⁵⁴

So where a deed reading, "Know all men by these presents that the West Kansas Land Company, by Solomon Houck, President, and Theodore S. Case, Secretary, * * * has granted," etc., was signed "Solomon Houck, President [Seal], Theodore S. Case, Sect'y [Seal], W. K. Land Co. [Seal]," it was held to be the deed of the company.⁵⁵

§ 1110. — In the cases cited in the two preceding sections it will be noticed that the respective instruments purported to be made by and in the name of the principal. But where a bond beginning "I promise to pay," etc., and not mentioning any obligor's name, was signed, "Witness my hand and seal, H. S. Lucas, [Seal] for Charles Callender," the supreme court of North Carolina held Lucas personally responsible.⁵⁶ And so where a bond was signed "Thomas Dix, acting for James Dix," Chief Justice Ruffin said it was "unquestionably the bond of Thomas and not of James. The former seals it and he speaks in it throughout, and the latter not at all."⁵⁷ But the same judge in passing upon the liability of a party to a deed says: "It is not material in what form the deed be signed, whether A B by C D or C D for A B provided it appears in the deed, and by the execution that it is the deed of the principal."⁵⁸

§ 1111. — Mere descriptive words will not change personal grants or covenants.—Where however the grants or covenants are clearly personal, the mere addition of the word "agent," "trustee," etc., will not, as has been stated, change their character.

Thus where a bond was executed by certain persons, who signed and sealed the same as individuals, but added "Trustees of the Baptist Society of the Town of Richfield," the court said: "The bond must be considered as given by the defendants in their individual capacities. It is not the bond of the Baptist church; and if the defendants are not bound the church certainly is not, for the church has not contracted either in its corporate name or by its seal. The addition of 'Trustees'

⁵⁴ Bradstreet v. Baker, 14 R. I. 546. To same effect: Hancock v. Younker, 82 Ill. 208; Haven v. Adams, 4 Allen (Mass.), 80.

⁵⁵ City of Kansas v. Hannibal, etc., R. Co. (1882), 77 Mo. 180.

⁵⁶ Bryson v. Lucas (1881), 84 N. C. 680, 37 Am. Rep. 634.

⁵⁷ Oliver v. Dix, 1 D. & B. Eq. (N. Car.) 158.

⁵⁸ Redmond v. Coffin, 2 Dev. Eq. (N. Car.) 437. See also, Cadell v. Allen, 99 N. Car. 542.

to the names of the defendants is, in this case, a mere descriptio personarum.”⁵⁹

And for the same reason, where A, B, C and others, “trustees of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Jacksonville, their successors and assigns,” executed a bond, binding themselves, their heirs, executors and administrators, and signed it in their individual names, they were held personally liable.⁶⁰

So where a lease under seal describes the lessor as “H. B., agent of M. L.,” and it is signed “H. B. agent,” with his seal, the words “he” and “his” being used in all the terms and covenants which name the party of the first part, a declaration in the name of M. L. in an action upon the covenants is bad, on demurrer.⁶¹

§ 1112. — The same rules apply where the promise or conveyance is made to the agent as when made by him. Thus where a contract to convey recited that it was made between W. of the first part (who was to convey) and F., president, of the second part, and was signed and sealed “F., Pres. of Buffalo Catholic Inst.,” it was held, that the contract was that of F. and not of the corporation and that the corporation could not enforce specific performance of the agreement to convey.⁶²

So where a conveyance was made to “E. H. P. vice-president of the National Bank of the Republic,” it was held that, while a note running to “A. B. cashier” may be sued upon the bank, in accordance with a rule stated in the following chapter, the conveyance vested the title in E. H. P.⁶³

⁵⁹ Taft v. Brewster (1812), 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 334, 6 Am. Dec. 280. See Fullam v. West Brookfield (1864), 9 Allen (Mass.), 1.

⁶⁰ Dayton v. Warne (1881), 43 N. J. L. 659.

⁶¹ Loeb v. Barris, 50 N. J. L. 382.

⁶² Buffalo Catholic Inst. v. Bitter, 87 N. Y. 250. This case, however, was decided upon demurrer to the complaint, which relied upon the contract as one which on its face was a contract with the complainant. There was no averment in the complaint that F. was president of the complainant, or its agent, or made the contract as such, or that it was intended as a contract between W. and the complainant. “It is unnecessary to decide” said the court, “whether the written instrument might not be helped out by averment so as to entitle the plaintiff to relief by way of specific performance.”

⁶³ Greenfield v. Stout, 122 Ga. 303. In a conveyance to “A. L., administrator” the last word is merely descriptive. Love v. Love, 72 Kan. 658.

Where a corporation was properly named as the grantee in a deed, the fact that the habendum clause and warranties ran to “the president of” the corporation, naming it, does not defeat the deed. St. Stephen’s Church v. Pierce, 8 Del. Ch. 179.

See also, Hamlin v. Meeting House, 103 Me. 343.

§ 1113. Distinction in case of public agents.—A distinction has been made in the case of public agents, who have entered into agreements, not negotiable, for the performance of public duties. In such a case it is to be presumed that they did not undertake personally to assume the public burdens, and although they may have entered into covenants under seal, partaking of a personal nature, yet where the obligation is known to be a public one, they can only be held personally bound, if at all, where the intent is clearly apparent so to bind them.⁶⁴ Said Chief Justice Marshall: "The intent of the officer to bind himself personally, must be very apparent indeed to induce such a construction of the contract;"⁶⁵ and it is said by another learned judge that: "It is much against public policy to cast the obligations that justly belong to the body politic upon this class of officials."⁶⁶

These cases, however, are not to be confounded with the cases where the agents, like the trustees and officers of private corporations and

William P. O'Connor, attorney for Elizabeth McColgan, to lease any property which she owned individually, or as executrix of her husband John McColgan, made a lease, in her behalf, as "William P. O'Connor, as agent for Est. of John McColgan, as Landlord" and signed and sealed it "William P. O'Connor, agent." Held, that Elizabeth McColgan could not bring an action on the lease. McColgan v. Katz, 29 N. Y. Misc. 136.

Where a lease was made between W. G. M., for himself and as agent of E. L. S., A. R. B. and L. V. M., party of the first part," the covenants being made to and by "said party of the first part," and the lease was signed "W. G. M., seal," it was held to be the lease of W. G. M. personally, and that E. L. S., A. R. B. and L. V. M. could not sue upon it. Harms v. McCormick, 132 Ill. 104.

⁶⁴ Hodgson v. Dexter, 1 Cranch (U. S.), 345, 2 L. Ed. 130 (Secretary of War); Knight v. Clark, 48 N. J. L. 22, 57 Am. Rep. 534 (Township Trustees); Jones v. LeTombe, 3 Dallas (U. S.), 384, 1 L. Ed. 647 (Consul General of France); Fox v. Drake, 8 Cow. (N. Y.) 191 (Court House Commissioners); Tutt v. Hobbs, 17 Mo.

486 (School Trustees); Miller v. Ford, 4 Rich. (S. C.) L. 376, 55 Am. Dec. 687 (Commissioners of Roads); Simonds v. Heard, 23 Pick. (Mass.) 120, 34 Am. Dec. 41 (Committee of town held to be personally liable on the ground that the intent was clear to make them so). Brown v. Austin, 1 Mass. 208, 2 Am. Dec. 11 (Agent appointed to take depositions by committee of Congress). McClenticks v. Bryant, 1 Mo. 598, 14 Am. Dec. 310 (Town Commissioners held personally liable because they exceeded their authority); Belknap v. Reinhart, 2 Wend. (N. Y.) 375, 20 Am. Dec. 621 (Captain U. S. Army); Stinchfield v. Little, 1 Greenl. (Me.) 231, 10 Am. Dec. 65; Dawes v. Jackson, 9 Mass. 490 (Superintendent of States Prison); Freeman v. Otis, 9 Mass. 272, 6 Am. Dec. 66 (U. S. Collector of Customs); Walker v. Swartwout, 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 444, 7 Am. Dec. 334 (Quartermaster general U. S. Army); Wallis v. Johnson School Township, 75 Ind. 368 (Trustee of schools).

⁶⁵ In Hodgson v. Dexter, 1 Cranch (U. S.), 345, 2 L. Ed. 130.

⁶⁶ Beasley, C. J. in Knight v. Clark, 48 N. J. L. 22, 57 Am. Rep. 534.

religious bodies, are not public in their nature, nor with cases of negotiable instruments, which stand upon different ground.

§ 1114. Whether necessary that deed should purport to be executed by an agent.—Whether it is necessary to the validity of the deed that it should on its face purport to be executed by an agent, or whether the agent may act in the principal's name throughout with nothing to disclose the fact of the agency, are questions which have been much discussed.

Thus in Wood v. Goodridge the agent had executed a mortgage by simply signing the name of his principal with nothing to show that it was signed by an agent and not by the principal in person. Fletcher, J., was of the opinion that such a form of execution was not authorized, and said:—

Rule of Wood v. Goodridge.—"It should appear upon the face of the instruments that they were executed by the attorney, and in virtue of the authority delegated to him for this purpose. It is not enough that an attorney in fact has authority, but it must appear by the instruments themselves which he executes, that he intends to execute this authority. The instruments should be made by the attorney expressly as such attorney; and the exercise of his delegated authority should be distinctly avowed upon the instruments themselves. Whatever may be the secret intent and purpose of the attorney, or whatever may be his oral declaration or profession at the time, he does not in fact execute the instruments as attorney, and in the exercise of his power as attorney, unless it is so expressed in the instruments. The instruments must speak for themselves. Though the attorney should intend a deed to be the deed of his principal, yet it will not be the deed of the principal, unless the instrument purports on its face to be his deed. The authority given clearly is, that the attorney shall execute the deed as attorney but in the name of the principal."⁶⁷ The decision in the case, however, was placed upon other grounds.

How of this rule.—This rule, certainly, has much to commend it, as tending to the due and orderly execution of important instruments, and as facilitating greatly the proper preservation in the public records of the evidence of the authority and of its exercise. But at most, it was a mere dictum in the case, and its authority has not generally been conceded, even in its own state⁶⁸

⁶⁷ (1850) 6 Cush. (Mass.) 117, 52 Am. Dec. 771.

⁶⁸ Hunter v. Giddings, 96 Mass. 41, 93 Am. Dec. 54.

§ 1115. — Further of this rule.—In Forsyth v. Day,⁶⁹ speaking of this case, Rice, J., said: "No case, I apprehend, can be found in the books which will sustain the rule so broadly laid down by the learned judge in the case of Wood v. Goodridge. Nor can the doctrine be sustained on principle. It is difficult to perceive any sound reason why, if one man may authorize another to act for him and bind him, he may not authorize him thus to act for and bind him in one name as well as in another. As matter of convenience in preserving testimony, it may be well that the names of all the parties who are in any way connected with a written instrument should appear upon the instruments themselves. But the fact that the name of the agent by whom the signature of the principal is affixed to an instrument, appears upon the instrument itself, neither proves nor has any tendency to prove, the authority of such agent. That must be established aliunde, whether his name appears as agent, or whether he simply places the name of his principal to the instrument to be executed." This, however, was the case of a promissory note and not of a deed.

Again in Devinney v. Reynolds,⁷⁰ a deed commencing: "To all to whom these presents shall come, Know ye that Michael Hollman by William McAllister, his lawful and regularly deputed attorney in fact, etc., grants," etc., concluded, "In witness whereof, the said Michael Hollman, by his attorney aforesaid, hath hereunto set his hand and seal," etc. To this were appended the name and seal of Michael Hollman. Said the court: "The execution of the deed is in proper form, and, indeed, we seldom see such instruments executed so much in accordance with approved precedents. It would be useless to add the name and seal of the attorney, for it is what it purports to be, the deed of the principal and not the attorney, and therefore does not require his name and seal, but the name and seal of the principal only."

§ 1116. — So in Berkey v. Judd,⁷¹ a deed reciting that it was made by the principals by their attorney in fact, was signed and sealed

⁶⁹ (1856) 41 Me. 382.

⁷⁰ (1841) 1 Watts and Serg. (Penn.) 328.

In Tiger v. Button Land Co., 91 Neb. 433, the court, while approving the rule of this case, points out that where acknowledgment is a necessary part of execution, the acknowledgment must purport to be by agent, and the deed is not good if the agent has represented to the notary that he is acknowledging his own deed, though he does so under the name of the principal.

⁷¹ (1875) 22 Minn. 287. So in Tidd v. Rines, 26 Minn. 201, it was held, that a deed signed "A. B., (the name of the grantor) by C. D., his attorney in fact," sufficiently indicates that it was executed by an attorney in fact for and in the name of his principal, without reciting that fact in the body of the deed.

in the names of the principals, followed by the words, "By their attorney in fact." The court said: "As respects the execution of a deed by an attorney in fact, although it is usual and better for him to sign the name of his principal, and to add thereto his own signature, with proper words indicating that the act is done by him as such attorney, yet it is not in all cases necessary that he should so append his own name. When the deed on its face purports to be the indenture of the principal, made by his attorney in fact, therein designating by name, it may be properly executed by such attorney by his subscribing and affixing thereto the name and seal of his principal alone."⁷² In this case the deed purports on its face to be the indenture of the principals, and not that of the agent. It fully discloses that it was made for them and in their name by their attorney in fact who had full authority so to do. Its execution was properly acknowledged by him as such attorney in fact, and for and on behalf of his said principals. The neglect to sign his own name to the words 'by their attorney in fact' was a purely technical omission devoid of any legal effect whatever."

§ 1117. — In both of the cases last cited, however, it will be noticed that the fact that the deed was executed by an agent appeared from the face of the instruments.

In Wilks v. Back,⁷³ heretofore referred to, where the signature to the instrument, which was an arbitration bond, was: "For James Browne, Mathias Wilks," [Seal]. Lawrence, J., said: "Here the bond was executed by Wilks for and in the name of his principal; and this is distinctly shown by the manner of making the signature. Not even this was necessary to be shown; for if Wilks had sealed and delivered it in the name of Browne, that would have been enough without stating that he had so done."

Where the deed is to be signed in the presence and by the direction of the principal, mere parol authority is, as has been seen,⁷⁴ sufficient; and in such case there need be nothing in the deed to indicate that the signature was set by an agent and not by the principal.

§ 1118. — How in reason.—While the rule of Wood v. Goodridge is undoubtedly well founded in convenience and propriety, yet it is difficult in reason to perceive why even in those cases where nothing whatever appears upon the face of the instrument to indicate it, it may not be shown by evidence aliunde that it was in fact executed by an agent. It cannot be said that this is to contradict, add to or vary the deed by parol evidence, for its legal effect remains the same, and it is none the less afterward what it purported to be before,—the deed of the principal. Neither can it be said that in one case there is, while in the other there is not, evidence of the agency. In either event the agency must be proved as a fact. It cannot be established by mere recitals of authority or by any pretence of acting in that capacity.

⁷² Citing Devinney v. Reynolds, 1 Watts & Serg. (Penn.) 328; and Forsyth v. Day, 41 Me. 382.

⁷³ 2 East, 142.

⁷⁴ See ante, § 216.

§ 1119. Parol evidence not admissible to discharge agent.—Where the deed upon its face is the deed of the agent, parol evidence is not admissible to discharge the agent by showing that it was intended or understood to be the deed of the principal,⁷⁵ but where the deed is ambiguous, parol evidence may be resorted to, to show who was in fact the party intended to be charged.⁷⁶

⁷⁵ Willis v. Bellamy, 52 N. Y. Super. Ct. 373; Higgins v. Senior, 8 M. & W. 834; Beckam v. Drake, 9 M. & W. 79; Leadbitter v. Farrow, 5 M. & S. 345; Spencer v. Field, 10 Wend. (N. Y.) 87; Townsend v. Hubbard, 4 Hill (N. Y.), 351; Briggs v. Part- ridge, 64 N. Y. 357, 21 Am. Rep. 617; Schriner v. Dickinson, 20 S. D. 433; Williams v. Empire Ins. Co., 8 Ga. App. 303. See this subject fully discussed in following chapter.

⁷⁶ Shuetze v. Bailey, 40 Mo. 69.

CHAPTER III

OF THE EXECUTION OF SIMPLE CONTRACTS

§ 1120. Purpose of this chapter.

I. OF THE EXECUTION OF NEGOTIABLE PAPER.

1121. In general.

1. Form and Interpretation.

1122. In general.

1123. General rule as to form.

1124-1126. Method of signing.

1127. — The Negotiable Instruments Act.

1128. — Not necessary that agent's name appear.

1129-1132. Not enough that principal be named only in body of instrument.

1133, 1134. — Where intent to charge principal is manifest.

1135. — Effect of printed headings or titles on paper.

1136. — Effect of corporate seal.

1137, 1138. — Other evidences of intent — Direction to charge to principal.

1139-1142. When no principal is disclosed, agent is bound notwithstanding he signs as "Agent."

1143, 1144. Negotiable paper drawn upon an agent and accepted by him.

1145. Negotiable paper drawn payable to an agent and indorsed by him.

1146. — Paper payable to cashier of bank.

1147. — Other similar cases.

1148, 1149. How when made by Public Agents.

2. The Admissibility of Parol Evidence to show Intent.

1150, 1151. In general.

1152-1156. Cases holding such evidence admissible.

1157, 1158. Cases holding such evidence not admissible.

1159-1161. What rules applied.

1162. The true rules.

1163. Further of these rules.

II. OF THE EXECUTION OF OTHER SIMPLE CONTRACTS.

1164. In general.

1. Written Contracts.

1165. I. The proper manner.

1166. Intention of the parties as expressed in the instrument the true test.

1167. Principal alone bound by contract made in his name by an authorized agent.

1168. Presumption that known agent does not intend to bind himself.

1169. Agent bound who conceals fact of agency or name of principal.

1170, 1171. Known agent may bind himself by express words.

1172-1174. — Contrary intention manifest.

1175. Personal liability excluded by terms of contract.

1176. II. The admissibility of parol evidence to show intent.

1177. Right acquired under agent's contract.

1178. Contracts involving the Statute of Frauds.

2. Oral Contracts.

1179. How to be executed.

1180. Principal presumptively bound where agency disclosed.

1181. Agent may bind himself by special agreement.

1182. — How question determined.

1183. Or by failing to disclose his principal.

§ 1120. Purpose of this chapter.—It is intended in this chapter to discuss the manner of executing contracts not under seal, including therein such contracts whether written or unwritten. And as there are some special rules applicable to the execution of negotiable instruments, that subject will first be separately considered.

I.

OF THE EXECUTION OF NEGOTIABLE PAPER.

§ 1121. In general.—What was found to be true in the case of the instrument under seal with reference to the rules of interpretation, is also strikingly true here. It must be known what are the rules of interpretation which are applied to instruments of this sort, and what are the origins or reasons of those rules in order that safe directions for the execution of these instruments may be laid down.

It must also be known how far the results reached by the ordinary rules of interpretation may be affected by extrinsic evidence. In both of these respects, the negotiable instrument presents interesting and difficult problems.

1. Form and Interpretation.

§ 1122. In general.—Negotiable paper being intended to circulate in the commercial world as the representative of money, it is highly important that the character and liability of the parties to it, shall be disclosed with reasonable certainty upon the face of the paper itself. In no class of instruments is uncertainty, or ambiguity, or the necessity of making outside inquiry, so destructive to its mission, as in this.

Granting that the agent is authorized to execute negotiable paper—and that is what the present discussion assumes,—it will ordinarily be the purpose of the agent to so execute the paper that it shall bind his principal and not himself. In order to do this, it is obvious that the paper should be made in the name of the principal; that the promise should be his, and the signature his, though affixed by the hand of the agent. Unless it be so executed, it will not bind the principal, but will usually bind the agent personally.

It may, of course, ordinarily be assumed that when parties have taken the trouble to execute what purports to be a negotiable instrument, it was the intention that some one should be bound thereby. Such a result, however, is not indispensable, and it may be found that the instrument binds no one: not the principal, because the promise or the signature is not his; and not the agent for the same reason or because he has expressly excluded personal responsibility.

§ 1123. General rule as to form.—In dealing with this general question of how the paper may be so executed as to bind the principal but not to charge the agent it has been said by a learned judge, that "In order to exempt an agent from liability upon an instrument executed by him within the scope of his agency, he must not only name his principal, but he must express by some form of words that the writing is the act of the principal though done by the hand of the agent. If he expresses this, the principal is bound, and the agent is not. But a mere description of the general relation or office which the person signing the paper holds to another person or corporation, without indicating that the particular signature is made in the execution of the office and agency, is not sufficient to charge the principal, or to exempt the agent from personal liability."¹

§ 1124. Method of signing.—The method approved in the execution of instruments under seal can with great propriety be adopted here. Thus if the bill or note be drawn, accepted or indorsed, "A B, by C D, his attorney or agent," or "A B, by his attorney or agent C D," there can be no question as to who is the party to be charged. "A B by C D" is also unequivocal, though not so full.²

A form more rare, but equally unequivocal is "A (agent), per procuration, P (principal)," or "Per procuration, P, A." The words "per procuration" are frequently abbreviated to "per proc.," "per pro." or "p. p."³

¹ Gray, J., in Tucker Mfg. Co. v. Fairbanks, 98 Mass. 101.

² Tucker Mfg. Co. v. Fairbanks, 98 Mass. 101; Bradlee v. Boston Glass Co., 16 Pick. (Mass.) 347; Weaver v. Carnall, 35 Ark. 198, 37 Am. Rep. 22; Ballou v. Talbot, 16 Mass. 461, 8 Am. Dec. 146; Jefts v. York, 4 Cush. (Mass.) 371, 50 Am. Dec. 791; Page v. Wight, 14 Allen (Mass.), 182; Bar- low v. Congregational Society, 8 Allen (Mass.), 460; Emerson v. Providence Mfg. Co., 12 Mass. 237, 7 Am. Dec. 66.

³ See Attwood v. Munnings, 7 B. & C. 278, 1 M. & R. 66; Stagg v. Elliott, 12 C. B. (N. S.) 373. With reference to such a signature the negotiable Instruments Act (N. Y. § 40) provides, "A signature by 'procuration'

These forms, however, are not imperative. Thus, "C D agent for A B," "C D for A B," and "For A B, C D" are now quite generally regarded as sufficiently indicative of the intent, for although "agent for" a particular person or corporation may either designate the general relation which the person signing holds to another party, or show that the particular act in question is done in behalf of and as the very contract of that other, yet the court, if such is manifestly the intention of the parties will construe the words in the latter sense.⁴

"Pro A B, C D" is to the same effect and is also sufficient.⁵ "Agent of" however is not the equivalent of "agent for," but is mere descriptio personæ; ⁶ and even the words "agent for" may under some circumoperates as notice that the agent has but a limited authority to sign, and the principal is bound only in case the agent in so signing acted within the actual limits of his authority."

⁴ Ballou v. Talbot, 16 Mass. 461, 8 Am. Dec. 146; Tucker v. Fairbanks, 98 Mass. 101; Rice v. Gove, 22 Pick. (Mass.) 158, 33 Am. Dec. 724; Dolan v. Alley, 153 Mass. 380; Jefts v. York, 4 Cush. (Mass.) 371, 50 Am. Dec. 791; Bartlett v. Tucker, 104 Mass. 336, 6 Am. Rep. 240; Tiller v. Spradley, 39 Ga. 35; Rawlings v. Robson, 70 Ga. 595; Hovey v. Magill, 2 Conn. 680; King v. Handy, 2 Ill. App. 212; Shuetze v. Bailey, 40 Mo. 69; Roney v. Winter, 37 Ala. 277; Wheelock v. Winslow, 15 Iowa, 464; Bank of Commerce v. Cohen, 4 Sil. (N. Y.) 283, 54 Hun. 635; Alexander v. Sizer, L. R. 4 Exch. 102.

Contra: Offutt v. Ayers, 7 T. B. Monr. (Ky.) 356, where the note read, "I promise" and was signed, "For B. Ayres, W. B. Ayres;" Dawson v. Cotton, 26 Ala. 591, where the note read, "I promise to pay," and was signed, "B. Watson, Agent for Cyrus Cotton."

In Cook v. Sanford, 3 Dana (Ky.), 238, where the note read, "we promise to pay * * * Witness our hands and seals. V. M. Knight, for N. B. Cook & Co.," it was held that the note was clearly that of the principal, because of the plural forms.

In Owings v. Grubb's Admin., 6 J.

J. Marshall (Ky.), 31, where the note was signed "For Thomas Owings, James Grubb," it was held that although upon the face of the instrument it was the agent's note, parol evidence is admissible to show that the instrument sued on was not the contract of the party sued. Same effect: Early v. Wilkinson, 9 Gratt. (Va.) 68.

So in Webb v. Burke, 5 B. Monroe (Ky.), 51, where the note read "I promise" and was signed, "John B. Burke, for Samuel Burke" it was held that while prima facie it was the note of the agent, parol evidence was admissible to show whose the contract was intended to be.

In Garrison v. Combs, 7 J. J. Marshall (Ky.), 84, 22 Am. Dec. 120, it was said, "An agreement, to the validity of which a seal is not essential, signed by 'A B, agent for C D,' is in effect and by construction of law the agreement not of A B but of C D. Such an agreement differs materially from one signed by 'A B for C D,' the latter being considered the agreement of A B to do something for C D, and the former an agreement by C D himself."

⁵ Long v. Colburn, 11 Mass. 97, 6 Am. Dec. 160.

⁶ See Tucker Mfg. Co. v. Fairbanks, supra; Haverhill Ins. Co. v. Newhall, 1 Allen (Mass.), 130, and the many other cases cited in § 1139 post.

stances also be held to be merely a description of the person, as where they are not followed by the proper name of the principal. Thus a note signed "D. H., agent for the Churchman" (the name of the newspaper which the agent carried on in the behalf of his principal), was held to be the note of D. H., and not of his principal.⁷

In Colorado, after an exhaustive examination, the sufficiency of the form "C D, agent for A B," was denied altogether.⁸

§ 1125. — So "A B, C D, agent," has been held to be sufficient, for while it is common and proper to say by or per, it is not indispensable: that it was so done may be sufficiently obvious without saying so. This form is most frequently adopted in the case of corporations and is a common and familiar method of signing the corporate name. Thus where a note reading "we promise to pay," was signed "Massachusetts Steam Heating Company, L. S. Fuller, treasurer," the court said: "The name of the company is signed to the note. This signature could not be made by the corporation itself and must have been written by some officer or agent. It was manifestly proper that some indication should be given by whom the signature was made, as evidence of its genuineness; and Fuller added his own name, with the designation of his official character. And the whole taken together shows it to be the signature of the Massachusetts Steam Heating Company and not of Fuller."⁹

So where the note read, "we promise," and was signed, "Warrick Glass Works, J. Price Warrick, Pres." it was held to be the note of the corporation only.¹⁰ Said the court, "This conclusion seems to rest

⁷ De Witt v. Walton, 9 N. Y. 571 (but as to this case see Green v. Skeel, 2 Hun (N. Y.), 485); see also, Shattuck v. Eastman, 12 Allen (Mass.), 369.

⁸ Tannatt v. Rocky Mountain National Bank, 1 Colo. 278, 9 Am. Rep. 156.

⁹ Draper v. Massachusetts Steam Heating Co., 5 Allen (Mass.), 338.

¹⁰ Reeve v. First Nat. Bank, 54 N. J. Law 208, 33 Am. St. Rep. 675, 16 L. R. A. 143. So in Liebscher v. Kraus, 74 Wis. 387, 17 Am. St. Rep. 171, 5 L. R. A. 496, where the note ran, "We promise," and was signed, "San Pedro Mining and Milling Co., F. Kraus, President," it was held that the note was that of the corporation only. Said the court, "The corporation could not sign its own name, and it is not otherwise shown on the face of the note than that Kraus signed the corporate name, and by adding the word 'president' to his own name, he shows conclusively that, as president of the corporation, he signed the note, and not otherwise. Such is the natural and reasonable construction of these signatures, and so it would be generally understood. The affix 'cashier,' 'secretary,' 'president,' or 'agent,' to the name of the person sufficiently indicates and shows that such person signed the bank or corporate name, and in that character and capacity alone. The use of the word 'by' or 'per' or 'pro' would not add to the certainty of what is thus expressed.

upon rational ground. The name of the corporation signed first stands as a principal and that of the officer as agent. The name of a corporation, so placed, raises the implication of a corporate liability. To so place it requires the hand of an agent. The name of an officer of such corporation, to which name the official title is appended, put beneath the corporate name, implies the relation of principal and agent. It means that, inasmuch as every corporate act must be done by a natural person, this person is the agent by whose hand the corporation did the particular act. This form of signature is just as significant with respect to the notes in question as if the name the 'Warrick Glass Works' had been written, 'Per Warrick, Agent.' There are a few cases opposed. Thus where the note ran, "we promise," and was signed, "U. S. Desk Manufacturing Co., Wm. Lumley Sec'y," it was held that this was prima facie the note both of the manufacturing company and of Lumley.¹¹ Such a decision, however, ignores business usage and obvious intention and ought not to be followed.

§ 1126. — Where the names of two or more officers follow the corporate name, the case is not quite so clear. If the two officers who sign are those who usually and properly sign for a corporation, the instrument should be held to be that of the corporation only, in the absence of something further to show an intention to assume a personal liability.¹² There are, however, cases to the contrary. Thus,

It is not common to use these words in commercial business. It is sufficiently understood that the paper is signed by the officer or agent named, and for the corporation. But it is useless to prolong this discussion. It is almost too plain for argument. The note was that of the corporation alone, signed by Kraus at its president."

So a note reading "we promise to pay * * * at office Belfast Foundry Co.," and signed, "Belfast Foundry Company, W. W. Castle, President," binds the company. Castle v. Belfast Foundry Co., 72 Me. 167.

So a note reading "we promise to pay," and signed, "English S. M. Co., H. Pattberg, Manager," was held to be the note of the company. Chase v. Pattberg, 12 Daly (N. Y.), 171.

See also to the same effect: Falk v. Moebs, 127 U. S. 597, 8 Sup. Ct. 1319, 32 L. Ed. 266; Abbott v. Shaw- mut Ins. Co., 3 Allen (Mass.), 213; Atkins v. Brown, 59 Me. 90; Gleason v. Sanitary Milk Co., 93 Me. 544, 74 Am. St. R. 370; Latham v. Flour Mills, 68 Tex. 127; Williams v. Hipple, 17 Pa. Super. Ct. 81; Union Nat. Bank v. Scott, 53 N. Y. App. Div. 65; Miers v. Coates, 57 Ill. App. 216; Thompson v. Hasselman, 131 Ill. App. 257; Derby v. Gustafson, 131 Ill. App. 281.

So a note reading "we promise to pay," and signed "Pioneer Mining Company, John E. Mason, Supt." may be shown by parol to have been intended to bind the Company. Bean v. Pioneer Min. Co., 66 Cal. 451, 56 Am. Rep. 106.

So also, Swarts v. Cohen, 11 Ind. App. 20.

¹¹ Lumley v. Kinsella Glass Co., 85 Ill. App. 412.

¹² A note signed, "Globe Loan and Trust Co., H. O. Devries, Presdt. W.

where the note ran, "we promise," and was signed, "Independence Mfg Co., B. Brownell, Pres., D. B. Sanford, Secy.," it was held that the note, upon its face, purported to be the note of the corporation, of Brownell, and of Sanford.¹³ This conclusion also seems erroneous and has been repudiated in other states.¹⁴ So where the note ran, "I or we promise," and was signed, "Coleman & Ames White Lead Co., per C. I. Williams, Sec., Geo. J. Williams, Gen'l. Mangr.," and was sealed with the corporate seal, it was held by the appellate court of Illinois to be the note of the corporation and of Geo. J. Williams.¹⁵ The signature of C. I. Williams, through the use of the word "per," was clearly the signature of a mere agent, but the court thought that the per did not apply to the signature of Geo. J. Williams.¹⁶ This decision however was reversed by the supreme court,¹⁷ which said, "We think the word 'per' applies to both, and refers as much to one as to the other. If the obligation of a corporation is being executed by two of its officers, it would be both unusual and unnatural to place the word 'per' before each name, and where each one signs his own

B. Taylor, Secy.," is held to show on its face no personal liability on the part of Devries or Taylor. English, etc., Mortg. Co. v. Globe Loan and Trust Co., 70 Neb. 435. To same effect: American Nat. Bank v. Omaha Coffin Mfg. Co., 1 Neb. (Unof.) 322; Aungst v. Creque, 72 Ohio St. 551 (a well considered case); Northeastern Coal Co. v. Tyrrell, 133 Ill. App. 472.

A note signed, "The Kansas City & Olathe Electric Ry. Co., Wm. Lackman President, D. B. Johnson, Secretary," is, at least, so ambiguous as to admit parol evidence that Lackman and Johnson were not intended to be individually liable. Western Grocer Co. v. Lackman, 75 Kan. 34 (see also, Kline v. Bank, 50 Kan. 91, 34 Am. St. R. 107, 18 L. R. A. 533; Benham v. Smith, 53 Kan. 495).

Where the note is signed by the proper officers, e. g., the president and secretary, so as to bind the corporation, and is also signed by others who append to their names such titles as "stockholders," "directors," and the like, these latter signers are held to be personally bound, on the theory that the titles so added are merely descriptio personae. Taylor v. Reger, 18 Ind. App. 466, 63 Am. St. R. 352; Savings Bank v. Central Market Co., 122 Cal. 28.

To same effect: Briel v. Exchange Nat. Bank, 172 Ala. 475.

¹³ Heffner v. Brownell, 70 Iowa, 591, 75 Iowa, 341. This case was followed in McCandless v. Belle Plaine Canning Co., 73 Iowa, 161, 16 Am. St. Rep. 419, 4 L. R. A. 396; Lee v. Percival, 85 Iowa, 639; Matthews v. Dubuque Mattress Co., 87 Iowa, 246, 19 L. R. A. 676; Day v. Ramsdell, 90 Iowa, 731.

¹⁴ Thus in English, etc., Mortg. Co. v. Globe Loan and Trust Co., 70 Neb. 435; the court declared the doctrine of the Iowa cases supra to be contrary to the weight of American authority.

¹⁵ Harris v. Coleman, etc., Lead Co., 98 Ill. App. 27.

¹⁶ See also General Electric Co. v. Gill, 64 C. C. A. 99, 127 Fed. 241, 129 Fed. 349.

¹⁷ Williams v. Harris, 193 Ill. 501. There is a dictum to the contrary in General Electric Co. v. Gill, supra.

name it would be equally unnatural for the second one to connect his name with the first by the word 'and.' The word 'per' was placed opposite the name of the secretary merely because his name came first, and if the name of the general manager had been written first, the secretary, by the same reasoning insisted upon would be individually liable. * * * We do not regard the use of the words 'I or we,' in the body of the note, as affecting or changing the legal import of the instrument. There is no personal pronoun which is properly adapted to use by a corporation in making a note. A proper method is to repeat the name of the corporation in the body of the note, but the word 'we' is frequently used by a corporation. Whether the pronoun 'I' or the pronoun 'we' is used in the body of a note, if it is signed by the corporation acting by its officer or officers it is the obligation of the corporation."

§ 1127. — The negotiable instruments act.—Upon the same subject the Negotiable Instruments Act, which has now been adopted in about forty of our jurisdictions,¹⁸ provides as follows, "Where the instrument contains, or a person adds to his signature, words indicating that he signs for or on behalf of a principal, or in a representative capacity, he is not liable on the instrument if he was duly authorized; but the mere addition of words describing him as an agent, or as filling a representative character, without disclosing his principal, does not exempt him from personal liability."¹⁹

Unfortunately, this provision, which ought to give help, is so obscure, indefinite and inadequate, that it furnishes little aid. What the practical difference between the first clause and the second is, what words or what sort of words shall be deemed "words indicating" that the signer acts for a principal, etc., are not made clear, and it will require judicial interpretation to make this section definite. So far as it goes, however, the provision seems to be in the direction of the more recent cases. At present it is apparently necessary to still resort to the decisions which were made before the act was passed.²⁰

¹⁸ The last report available names Ala., Ariz., Colo., Conn., Del., D. C., Fla., Hawaii, Idaho, Ill., Iowa, Kan., Ky., La., Md., Mass., Mich., Mo., Mont., Neb., N. H., N. J., N. Mex., N. Y., Nev., N. Car., N. Dak., Ohio, Okla., Oreg., Pa., Philippine Islands, R. I., Tenn., Utah, Va., Wash., W. Va., Wis., Wyo.

¹⁹ Section 20 (39 in the New York act).

A trustee of an insolvent firm is not liable, under this statute, on a note, signed by him as "trustee," given for property known to be purchased from the payee for the benefit of the assigned estate. Megowan v. Peterson, 173 N. Y. 1. To same effect: Kerby v. Ruegamer, 107 N. Y. App. Div. 491.

²⁰ See Birmingham Iron Foundry

§ 1128. — Not necessary that agent's name appear.—Although reasons of convenience and propriety render it highly desirable that the fact that the note or bill is executed in the name of the principal by the agent, should appear on the face of the instrument, it cannot be regarded as indispensable, and the agent may sign the principal's name alone without adding anything to disclose the agency.²¹

This is also true where the principal is carrying on business in some other name than his own where that name has been adopted by him as his trade or business name.²²

§ 1129. Not enough that principal be named only in body of instrument.—It is not enough to relieve the agent that the person, for whom or on whose account the promise is made or the bill drawn, be named or stated in the body of the instrument alone. In such a case, as a rule, it will be presumed that only the person who signed intended to be charged, unless there is a clear indication to the contrary.

Thus where the form of the bill was, "Forty days after date, pay to the order of T. L. fifty pounds, value received, which place to the account of the Durham bank, as advised," signed "C. F.," it was held to be the bill of C. F., though he was known at the time to be the agent of the Durham bank. Said Lord Ellenborough: "Is it not an universal rule that a man who puts his name to a bill of exchange thereby makes himself personally liable, unless he states upon the face of the bill that he subscribes it for another, or by procuration of another, which are words of exclusion? Unless he says plainly 'I am the mere scribe,' he becomes liable. Now in the present case, although the plaintiff knew the defendant to be the agent of the Durham bank, he might not know but that he meant to offer his own responsibility. Every person, it is to be presumed, who takes a bill of the drawer, expects that his responsibility is to be pledged to its being accepted. Giving full effect to the circumstance that the plaintiff knew the defendant to be agent, still the defendant is liable, like any other drawer who puts his name to a bill without denoting that he does it in the character of a procurator."²³

v. Regnery, 33 Pa. Super. 54; American Trust Co. v. Canevin, 107 C. C. A. 543, 184 Fed. 657; Megowan v. Peterson, supra; Kerby v. Ruegamer, supra; Schumacher v. Dolan, — Iowa, —, 134 N. W. 624.

See also Germania Nat. Bank v. Mariner, 129 Wis. 544; Daniel v. Glidden, 38 Wash. 556.

²¹ First National Bank v. Gay, 63

Mo. 33, 21 Am. Rep. 430; Forsyth v. Day, 41 Me. 382.

²² Conroe v. Case, 79 Wis. 338, where the principal was carrying on business in what had formerly been the trade name of the agent.

²³ Leadbitter v. Farrow, 5 Maule & Sel. 345. To the same effect see: Penkivil v. Connell, 5 Exch. 381; Mayhew v. Prince, 11 Mass. 54.

§ 1130. — And again where a note was executed in these words: "For value received, we, the subscribers, jointly and severally promise to pay Messrs. J. and T. B. or order, for the Boston Glass Manufactory, thirty-five hundred dollars, on demand, with interest," and was signed, "J. H., S. G., C. F. K.," it was held to be the note of the signers and not of the manufactory. Chief Justice Shaw, in delivering the opinion of the court, said: "The main question in the present case, arises from the form of the contract; and the question is, whether in this form it binds the persons who signed it, or the company for whose use the money was borrowed. As the form of words in which contracts may be made and executed, are almost infinitely various, the test question is, whether the person signing professes and intends to bind himself, and adds the name of another to indicate the capacity or trust in which he acts, or the person for whose account his promise is made; or whether the words referring to a principal are intended to indicate that he does a mere ministerial act in giving effect and authenticity to the act, promise and contract of another. Does the person signing apply the executing hand as the instrument of another, or the promising and engaging mind of a contracting party?" ²⁴

And in a subsequent case in the same court, it is said: "It seems to be well settled in this court, and supported by English authority, that the mere insertion of 'for' or 'for and in behalf of' the principal, in the body of the note does not make it the contract of the principal if signed by the mere name of the agent without addition." ²⁵

§ 1131. — In accordance with the same rules, it was held that a note running "we, the trustees of the Methodist Episcopal Church," promise, etc., and signed by the trustees as individuals, with nothing to indicate that they signed as trustees, was their individual promise; ²⁶ and the same ruling was made where a note running "we,

²⁴ Bradlee v. Boston Glass Manufactory, 16 Pick. (Mass.) 347. See also, Morell v. Coddington, 4 Allen (Mass.), 403.

²⁵ Barlow v. Congregational Society, 8 Allen (Mass.), 460.

²⁶ Hypes v. Griffin, 89 Ill. 134, 31 Am. Rep. 71; but see the decision of the same court where the trustees added that word to their signatures, Powers v. Briggs, 79 Ill. 493, 22 Am. Rep. 175. See also Burlingame v. Brewster, 79 Ill. 515, 22 Am. Rep. 177.

In Tenbrook v. Ellars, 71 Ill. App. 328, where a note was in the common form, "we promise to pay," but before the signatures were the words, "signed by Trustees of I. O. O. F. Lodge No.," etc., and then followed the signatures of the respective parties, it was held that the instrument was the note of the individuals signing it and that the words "Trustees," etc., were merely descriptive.

In Morell v. Coddington, 4 Allen (Mass.), 403, where the note ran, the directors of the Big Eagle and Harrison Turnpike Company promise," was signed by those officers in their individual names.²⁷ § 1132. — But a contrary conclusion was reached in Maine, where a note, beginning "We, the subscribers, for the Carmel Cheese Manufacturing Company, promise to pay," etc., was signed by the makers in their individual names.²⁸ But this conclusion was based largely upon the provisions of a statute of that state, which as the court says in an earlier case:²⁹ "was passed soon after the decision of Stinchfield v. Little (to which reference has been made before), and was undoubtedly intended to modify the technical rule of the common law as declared by the court in that case." That statute provides that "deeds and contracts, executed by an authorized agent of an individ-

"We, the prudential committee for and in behalf of the Baptist Church in Lee" and was signed simply with the makers' names, it was held that they were personally bound.

In Pomeroy v. Slade, 16 Vt. 220, the note read, "We, in behalf of the First Methodist Episcopal Society in, etc., promise to pay," and was signed by the makers without any additions, and it was held to be prima facie, if not conclusively, the individual note of the makers.

In Kendall v. Morton, 21 Ind. 205, the note was in the following terms, "We the subscribers of etc., promise to pay, etc., on behalf of the Cambridge City Greys" signed "James M. Cockfair, Reese Kendall, David Conklin Sect.," and it was held, that the signers were individually liable.

²⁷ Pack v. White, 78 Ky. 243. Followed in Maffet v. Hampton, 17 Ky. L. Rep. 534, 31 S. W. 881.

In Yowell v. Dodd, 66 Ky. 581, 96 Am. Dec. 256, where a note read, "the president and directors of, etc., promise to pay," and was signed "E. J. Dodd, Pres.," and under his signature the signatures of the four directors, it was held that whether the note bound the corporation or the individuals is "a question of intention to be determined from what appears on the face of the writing" and the court concluded that in this case the intention was to bind the corporation only.

In Caphart v. Dodd, 66 Ky. 584, 96 Am. Dec. 258, where the note ran, "the president, by order of the board of, etc., promise to pay," and was signed, "E. J. Dodd, Pres.," and under his signature the signatures of the directors, it was held, that from the face of the instrument, the intention of the signers was to bind themselves individually and not to bind the corporation and hence the signers were personally bound.

²⁸ Simpson v. Garland, 72 Me. 40, 39 Am. Rep. 297.

In McKenney v. Bowle, 94 Me. 397, the note read, "The Trustees and Treasurer, or their Successors in office, of, etc., promise to pay," and was signed by five trustees; below their names was added the word "Trustees;" it was then signed by the treasurer, with the word "Treasurer" added. Held, that the signers were personally liable. This conclusion was reached partly on the ground that the Society for which they purported to act was not incorporated: but even if it were, the court said it would be regarded as the note of the signers. The name of the society was not "The trustees and Treasurer of," etc.

²⁹ Nobleboro v. Clark, 68 Me. 87, 28 Am. Rep. 22. See also, Purinton v. Insurance Co., 72 Me. 22.

ual or corporation in the name of the principal, or in his own name for his principal, are to be regarded as the deeds and contracts of such principal." "For his principal," says the court, "are the words used in our statute above cited, in regard to the proper execution of a contract by an agent; and 'for' when so used, means 'in behalf of.' * * * The words used in the body of the note, tending to show the meaning of the parties, should have the same force and effect as if following, or written against the defendants' signatures."

§ 1133. — Where intent to charge principal is manifest.— Where the body of the instrument discloses that it is evidently executed for or in behalf of a principal therein named, and the person signing adds to his signature such words as indicate that he was acting in a representative and not in a personal capacity, the instrument will be deemed to be the obligation of the principal. Thus where the contract ran "We, the undersigned committee for the first school district, promise in behalf of said district," etc., and was signed with the individual names of the committee with the addition of the word "committee," it was held that the intention to bind the district was apparent upon the face of the contract and that the members of the committee were not personally bound.³⁰

Again, a note reading, "We promise to pay," etc., "on account of the London and Birmingham Iron Hardware Company," and signed "J. M., H. W., J. W., Directors," and countersigned "E. G., Secretary," was held to be the note of the company;³¹ a note beginning "I, the subscriber, treasurer of the Dorchester Turnpike Corporation promise," etc., signed "A. B., treasurer of the Dorchester Turnpike Corporation," was held to be the note of the corporation and not of the treasurer;³² a note reading, "the president and directors of the Woodstock Glass Company promise," etc., and signed "W. H., President," binds the company and not the president individually;³³ a note beginning "we as Trustees of the Amador and Nevada Wagon Road Company promise," etc., and signed, "J. M. K., L. N., J. T., Trustees, of the Amador and Nevada Wagon Road Company," is the note of the company and not of the trustees;³⁴ and a note beginning "we, as the

³⁰ Andrews v. Estes, 11 Me. 267, 26 Am. Dec. 521.

³¹ Lindus v. Melrose, 2 Hurl. & Nor. 293.

³² Mann v. Chandler, 9 Mass. 335.

³³ Mott v. Hicks, 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 513, 13 Am. Dec. 550.

³⁴ Blanchard v. Kaull, 44 Cal. 440.

On the other hand, a note reading, "the Greenwood Gin Co. promise to pay," etc., signed "M. A. Wiers, Pres. of Company, W. A. Moore, Sec.," was said to be, if not manifestly the note of Wiers and of Moore, at least so ambiguous as to admit parol evidence to charge them personally.

trustees of the Methodist church, promise to pay," etc., and signed, "J. W. K., J. A. P., R. G. C., Trustees," is the note of the church and not of the trustees.³⁵ § 1134. — A note reading, "we, the trustees of the First Free Will Baptist Society of Chicago, promise," etc., and signed "Trustees of the First Free Will Baptist Society, of Chicago, Illinois, A. P. D., P. W. G.," and seven others, was held to be the note of the society;³⁶ while a note reading "we, the trustees of the Seventh Presbyterian Church, promise," etc., and signed "A. H. B., L. B. K., J. C. and F. D. M., Trustees," was held by the same court to be the individual note of the trustees, and not of the society;³⁷ the distinction being based upon the fact that in the first case the exact corporate name of the society, i. e. "The Trustees of the First Free Will Baptist Society, of Chicago," had been used both in the body of the note and in the signature, while in the second case it had not been, the corporate name there being "Trustees of the Society of the Seventh Presbyterian Church, of Chicago." The distinction here made cannot be reconciled with many of the cases cited above.

Where the note ran, "We, the Trustees of Musconetcong Grange, No. 114, known as W. Fleming and Company, promise," etc., and was signed "W. M. S., I. W., Trustees," it appearing that the words "the Trustees of Musconetcong Grange, No. 114," were the legal title of a corporation, the court said that, but for the words, "known as W. Fleming and Company," the note would be clearly the note of the corporation.³⁸ "What the significance of these added words is," said the court, "cannot be known without a resort to parol testimony," and the case was sent back for a new trial in order that such testimony might be introduced.³⁹

So where the note ran, "We, or either of us, Trustees of Dist. No. 6," etc., promise to pay to the order of A. T., "it being money borrowed of said T. to build a school house in said Dist. No. 6," and was signed, Wiers v. Treese, 27 Okla. 774. See also, Frankland v. Johnson, 147 Ill. 520, 37 Am. St. R. 224.

³⁵ Leach v. Blow, 8 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 221.

So, where the note read, "I, as treasurer of the Congregational Society, or my successors in office, promise," etc., and was signed: "S. S. R. Treasurer." Barlow v. Congregational Society, 8 Allen (Mass.), 460.

³⁶ New Market Savings Bank v. Gillett, 100 Ill. 254, 39 Am. Rep. 39.

See also, Frankland v. Johnson, 147 Ill. 520, 37 Am. St. R. 234.

³⁷ Powers v. Briggs, 79 Ill. 493, 22 Am. Rep. 175.

³⁸ Simanton v. Vliet, 61 N. J. L. 595.

³⁹ See Simanton v. Vliet, supra.

"T. W. W., L. F. G., Trustees," it was held to be clearly the note of the school district and not of the signers.⁴⁰

Where a note reading "The X company promises to pay," etc., is signed "A, Pres. of Company, B, Sec.," it seems so clearly the note of the company that it is surprising to find courts holding that it is no more than ambiguous; but that is the fact.⁴¹

§ 1135. — Effect of printed headings or titles on paper.— The fact that the note was given for or on account of a principal may sufficiently appear from titles or headings printed upon the instrument coupled with words indicating that the signers acted in an official capacity. Thus, where a check with the words "Ætna Mills" printed on the margin was given in payment of a debt due from the mills and was signed "I. D. F., Treasurer," the court held it to be manifestly the check of the mills and not the personal check of F.,⁴² saying, "the court has always laid hold of any indication on the face of the paper, however informally expressed, to enable it to carry out the intention of the parties." The same doctrine has been applied in numerous other cases in the same court.⁴³

On the other hand, where a note reading "We promise to pay," etc., and signed, "J. C., Prest., E. H. C., Treas." had printed across the end of it the words "Ridgewood Ice Co.," of which company they were respectively the officers, it was held to be the note of the individual signers, at least so far as "a holder taking bona fide and without notice of the circumstances of its making" was concerned. The official titles were held to be mere descriptio personæ, and "the appearance upon the margin of the paper of the printed name, 'Ridgewood Ice Company,' was not a fact carrying any presumption that the note was, or was intended to be one by that company."⁴⁴

§ 1136. — Effect of corporate seal.—The same effect may often be given to the presence of a corporate seal coupled with titles indicating action in an official capacity.⁴⁵ Thus where a note begin-

⁴⁰ Warford v. Temple, 24 Ky. Law Rep. 2268, 73 S. W. 1023.

⁴¹ Wiers v. Treese, 27 Okla. 774. See also, Frankland v. Johnson, 147 Ill. 520, 37 Am. St. R. 234.

⁴² Carpenter v. Farnsworth, 106 Mass. 561, 8 Am. Rep. 360. See also, Produce Exchange Trust Co. v. Bieberbach, 176 Mass. 577; La Salle Nat. Bank v. Tolu, etc., Co., 14 Ill. App. 141.

⁴³ See Fuller v. Hooper, 3 Gray

(Mass.), 334; Slawson v. Loring, 5 Allen (Mass.), 340, 81 Am. Dec. 750.

See also, Hitchcock v. Buchanan, 105 U. S. 416, 26 L. Ed. 1078.

⁴⁴ Casco Nat. Bank v. Clark, 139 N. Y. 307, 36 Am. St. Rep. 705. Same: First Nat. Bank v. Stuetzer, 80 Hun, 435, aff'd 150 N. Y. 455; First Nat. Bank v. Wallis, 84 Hun, 376, aff'd 156 N. Y. 663. See Daniel v. Glidden, 38 Wash. 556.

⁴⁵ See Hood v. Hallenbeck, 7 Hun

ning "We promise" and signed W. B. S., "Sec'y," had impressed upon it the seal of the company containing the words "Neal Manufacturing Co., Madison, Ind.," of which company S. was the secretary, it was held to be the note of the company and not of S.⁴⁶ And the same effect was given to the seal of the company in Oregon, Illinois and Massachusetts. Thus a note stating, "We promise to pay," etc., signed "J. I., Pres., J. J. I., Sec. G. M. Co.," which had impressed upon it the seal of the company containing the words, "Granger Market Co.," is the note of the company and not of the officers;⁴⁷ and so is a note reading "We promise to pay," etc., signed "S. L. K., Pres., Chicago Ready Roofing Co., W. H. K., Sec'y," impressed with the seal of the "Chicago Ready Roofing Company;"⁴⁸ and so is a note reading "We promise to pay," etc., and signed "John Rhodes, Treasurer," upon and around which signature was the impression of a corporate seal bearing the name of the corporation.⁴⁹

But a different conclusion was reached in England.⁵⁰

§ 1137. — Other evidences of intent—Directions to charge to principal.—A bill or note drawn by an agent with such directions or expressions upon its face as indicate that it is drawn upon, or is to be charged to, the account of his principal, and which is signed by the agent with such additions as to disclose that he is acting in his character as agent, will also be deemed to be a charge upon the principal and not upon the agent.

And it has been held that it is not necessary that the bill or note itself should unequivocally disclose the name of the principal in order to exonerate the agent; but that it will be sufficient if enough appears upon the face of the transaction to put a prudent man, before taking the bill or note, upon inquiry.⁵¹

Thus a bill drawn by an agent upon his principal concluding "and charge the same to the account of your agency at Natchez," and signed "J. D. H., Agent" sufficiently indicates that the agent was act-

(N. Y.), 362; Pitman v. Kintner, 5 Blackford (Ind.), 250, 33 Am. Dec. 469, and the following cases in this section.

⁴⁶ Means v. Swormstedt, 32 Ind. 87, 2 Am. Rep. 330.

⁴⁷ Guthrie v. Imbrie, 12 Ore. 182, 53 Am. Rep. 331.

⁴⁸ Scanlan v. Keith, 102 Ill. 634, 39 Am. Rep. 302. To same effect see

Reed v. Fleming, 209 Ill. 390. See also, Hood v. Hallenbeck, supra.

⁴⁹ Miller v. Roach, 150 Mass. 140, 6 L. R. A. 71.

⁵⁰ Dutton v. Marsh, L. R. 6 Q. B. 361. Compare Aggs v. Nicholson, 1 Hurls. & Nor. 165. See also Daniel v. Glidden, 38 Wash. 556.

⁵¹ Davis v. Henderson, 25 Miss. 549, 59 Am. Dec. 229; Mott v. Hicks, 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 513, 13 Am. Dec. 550.

ing in a representative character; ⁵² so a bill headed "Office of Tioga Navigation Company," concluding, "charge to motive power and account," and signed, J. R. W., "Pres. T. N. Co.," purports upon its face to be the bill of the corporation and not the individual bill of the signer; ⁵³ and a draft headed "New England Agency of the Pennsylvania Fire Insurance Company," having the words "Foster & Cole, General Agents for the New England States" printed in the margin, and appearing on its face to be drawn upon said insurance company in payment of a claim against it, is the draft of the company and not of Foster & Cole, although it is signed by them in their own names; ⁵⁴ and a bill headed "Office of Belleville Nail Mill Co.," and concluding, "charge same to account of Belleville Nail Mill Co., W. C. B., Pres., J. C. W., Sec'y," is the bill of the company. ⁵⁵

§ 1138. — So where a draft was headed "Pompton Iron Works" and directed that the amount should be placed "to the account of Pompton Iron Works," it was held to be clearly the draft of the Iron Works and not of Burtt, though it was signed "W. Burtt, Agt.," ⁵⁶ and a bill headed "Adams & Co.'s Express and Banking House," drawn on Adams & Co., concluding, "and charge same to account of this office," and signed "C. P. N. per G. W. C., Ag'ts," is the bill of the company. ⁵⁷

So where a bill headed "Office of Portage Lake Manufacturing Company" and concluding, "charge the same to account of the company, I. R. Jackson, Agt.," was drawn upon "E. T. Loring, Agent," and was accepted by him in the same manner, it was held in Massachusetts that so far as the drawer, Jackson, was concerned, there was enough upon the face of the instrument to show that the bill was drawn as agent of the company, but it was further held that this conclusion exhausted the operation of the words showing that intent, and that they could not be used again to indicate that the acceptance of Loring was made in the same capacity. ⁵⁸

But on the other hand, in accordance with cases cited in a preceding section, a draft concluding, "and charge the same to the account

⁵² Davis v. Henderson, supra.

⁵³ Olcott v. Tioga R. R. Co., 27 N. Y. 546, 84 Am. Dec. 298. See also La Salle Nat. Bank v. Tolu, etc., Co., 14 Ill. App. 141.

⁵⁴ Chipman v. Foster, 119 Mass. 189; to same effect, Tripp v. Swanze Paper Co., 13 Pick. (Mass.) 291.

⁵⁵ Hitchcock v. Buchanan, 105 U. S. 416, 26 L. Ed. 1078.

⁵⁶ Fuller v. Hooper, 3 Gray (Mass.). 334.

⁵⁷ Sayre v. Nichols, 7 Cal. 535, 68 Am. Dec. 280.

⁵⁸ Slawson v. Loring, 5 Allen (Mass.), 340, 81 Am. Dec. 750.

of Proprietors Pembroke Iron Works. Joseph Barrell," was held to be the draft of Barrell because he had not added anything to his signature to indicate that he was acting in a representative character.⁵⁹

§ 1139. When no principal is disclosed, agent is bound notwithstanding he signs as "agent," etc.—Where, however, the language used imports an individual promise and is signed by the agent in his own name the agent will, prima facie at least, be personally bound notwithstanding the fact that he adds the word "agent," "trustee," "president," "assignee," "administrator," etc., to his name. It is to be presumed that he intended to bind some one by the instrument, and as he has used no apt words to bind the principal and no other contracting party appears, he must be held to have intended to charge himself, and the words "agent," "trustee," etc., will be regarded as mere descriptio personæ.⁶⁰

⁵⁹ Bank of North America v. Hooper, 5 Gray (Mass.), 567, 66 Am. Dec. 390; and to the same effect is, Newhall v. Dunlap, 14 Me. 180, 31 Am. Dec. 45.

But where a trustee, or one in a like situation, who has no principal, makes a promise, the contract must be the contract of the trustee personally, unless the trustee stipulates that the promise is merely a charge on the trust estate. Hall v. Jameson, 151 Cal. 606, 121 Am. St. R. 137, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1190. As to his power expressly to exclude personal liability, see Bank v. Eaton, 100 Fed. 8, affirmed per curiam, 47 C. C. A. 140, 107 Fed. 1003.

⁶⁰ Drake v. Flewellen, 33 Ala. 106; Hobson v. Hassett, 76 Cal. 203, 9 Am. St. R. 193; Savings Bank v. Central Market, 122 Cal. 28; Hall v. Jameson, 151 Cal. 606, 121 Am. St. R. 137, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1190; Hopson v. Johnson, 110 Ga. 283; Saul v. Southern Seating Co., 6 Ga. App. 843; Chadsey v. McCreery, 27 Ill. 253; Bickford v. First Nat. Bank, 42 Ill. 237, 89 Am. Dec. 436; McNeil v. Shober, 144 Ill. 238; Haines v. Nance, 52 Ill. App. 406; Reed v. Fleming, 102 Ill. App. 668; Reddick v. Young, — Ind. —, 98 N. E. 813; Prescott v.

Hixon, 22 Ind. App. 139, 72 Am. St. R. 291; Dayries v. Lindsly, 128 La. 259; Blackstone Nat. Bank v. Lane, 80 Me. 165; Fowler v. Atkinson, 6 Minn. 578; Brunswick-Balke-Collender Co. v. Boutell, 45 Minn. 21; Penn. Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Conoughy, 54 Neb. 123; Western Wheeled Scraper Co. v. McMillen, 71 Neb. 686; Savage v. Rix, 9 N. H. 263; Barker v. Mechanics' Fire Ins. Co., 3 Wend. (N. Y.) 94, 20 Am. Dec. 664; Pentz v. Stanton, 10 Wend. (N. Y.) 271, 25 Am. Dec. 558; Hills v. Bannister, 8 Cow. (N. Y.) 32; Cortland Wagon Co. v. Lynch, 82 Hun (N. Y.), 173; Manufacturers', etc., Bank v. Love, 13 N. Y. App. Div. 561; Jenkins v. Phillips, 41 N. Y. App. Div. 389; New York State Banking Co. v. Van Antwerp, 23 N. Y. Misc. 38; Sutherland v. St. Lawrence County, 42 N. Y. Misc. 38; Collins v. Ins. Co., 17 Ohio, 215, 93 Am. Dec. 612; Robinson v. Kanawha Valley Bank, 14 Ohio, 441, 58 Am. Rep. 829; Ogden Ry. Co. v. Wright, 31 Or. 150; Kitchen v. Holmes, 42 Or. 252; Deroy v. Richards, 8 Pa. Sup. Ct. 119; Moss v. Johnson, 36 S. Car. 551; Warren v. Harrold, 92 Tex. 417; Rand v. Hale, 3 W. Va. 495, 100 Am. Dec. 761; and the other cases cited in this section.

Thus a note in the usual form, "I promise to pay," etc., signed "A. B., Treas. St. Paul's Parish;"⁶¹ "C. H., President of the Dorchester Avenue Railroad Company;"⁶² "J. S. E., Trustee of Sullivan Railroad;"⁶³ "A. B., Treasurer of Eagle Lodge;"⁶⁴ "W. H. E., Pres. and Treas. Chelsea Iron Foundry Company;"⁶⁵ "J. B., Agent for Lewis County;"⁶⁶ or a draft signed "W. P. C., Treas.,"⁶⁷ etc., with nothing in the body of the note to indicate that the promise is not the promise of the signer, will be held to be the personal obligation of him whose name is subscribed, notwithstanding the addition.

And, as is said by a learned judge, "Why should it not be so? That is the plain and direct import of the language he uses. 'I' is not the language of a corporation or association. It is that of an individual signer. If a signer appends to his signature a description of himself as agent, president, trustee, or treasurer of a corporation, it may import a declaration on his part that, having funds of such corporation in his possession, he is willing to be responsible, and accordingly makes himself responsible for a debt of theirs. And this descriptio personæ may aid him in the keeping and adjustment of his accounts with his different principals. But without some words in the contract importing that he promises for or on behalf of his principal, he cannot avoid the personal liability he has assumed."⁶⁸

§ 1140. — The same rule was applied though the note read, "we" promise to pay and was signed by a single individual, "D. P. L., Treas'r Hallowell Gaslight Co." Said the court, "We think the note must be construed to be the note of the defendant, and not of the corporation. It contains no apt words showing that the parties understood it to be the contract of the corporation and not of the defendant. It nowhere appears that the defendant made the promise for the corporation. The language used expresses his own promise, and what is added after the signature is descriptive of the person."⁶⁹

§ 1141. — What is true of one individual signer is also true of several, whether the form adopted be "I" or "we" promise. Thus a note in the usual form, signed by several with the addition "vestry-

⁶¹ Sturdivant v. Hull, 59 Me. 172, 8 Am. Rep. 409; Mellen v. Moore, 68 Me. 390, 28 Am. Rep. 77.

⁶² Haverhill M. F. Ins. Co. v. Newhall, 1 Allen (Mass.), 130.

⁶³ Fiske v. Eldridge, 12 Gray (Mass.), 474.

⁶⁴ Seaver v. Coburn, 10 Cush. (Mass.) 324.

⁶⁵ Davis v. England, 141 Mass. 587.

⁶⁶ Exchange Bank v. Lewis County, 28 W. Va. 273.

⁶⁷ Bank v. Cook, 38 Ohio St. 442.

⁶⁸ Barrows, J., in Sturdivant v. Hull, supra.

⁶⁹ McClure v. Livermore, 78 Me. 390. To same effect is Mellen v. Moore, 68 Me. 390, 28 Am. Rep. 77.

man, Grace Church" ⁷⁰ or "President and Directors of the P. and S. Cheese Co.," ⁷¹ or "Trustees of First Universalist Society," ⁷² or "Trustees of the A. Lodge," ⁷³ is the note of the individual signers.

§ 1142. — The same rule applies to indorsements. Thus the indorsement of a note by an individual who merely appends to his name the word "agent," "president of the X. Co.," etc., prima facie imports a personal obligation.⁷⁴

§ 1143. Negotiable paper drawn upon an agent and accepted by him.—The principles which control the obligation of an agent who signs a note, apply in general to the obligation of an agent who undertakes to accept a bill for his principal, and the cases present the same conflict. Where a bill was drawn in the name of a corporation, by its president, with directions to charge to the account of the corporation, upon F. D. H. "Treas.," and was accepted by the latter in the same form, it was held to evince clearly an intention to charge the corporation and not the acceptor personally.⁷⁵ The same conclusion was reached in a similar case where the bill was drawn upon L. S. and accepted, L. S. "Treas. of L. F. and Mining Co.," that company being the drawer.⁷⁶ So where the bill was drawn upon J. O. E. "Treasurer of the N. & N. W. Railroad Company" and was "accepted payable on return of March estimates. J. O. E. Treas.," it was held not to be the personal obligation of the acceptor.⁷⁷

§ 1144. — On the other hand where a draft was headed, "Office of Portage Lake Manufacturing Company," was signed I. R. J. "Agt.," drawn upon E. T. L. "Agent" and accepted by the latter in ⁷⁰ Tilden v. Barnard, 43 Mich. 376, 38 Am. Rep. 197.

⁷¹ Rendell v. Harriman, 75 Me. 497, 46 Am. Rep. 421. But contra, see Farmers' & Mechanics' Bank v. Colby, 64 Cal. 352, where a note reading "we promise," and signed "G. A. C., Pres. Pac. Peat Coal Co., D. K. T., Sec. pro tem." was held not to be the note of the officers personally and said to be the note of the company.

⁷² Burlingame v. Brewster, 79 Ill. 515, 22 Am. Rep. 177; to like effect: Powers v. Briggs, 79 Ill. 493, 22 Am. Rep. 175; Hypes v. Griffin, 89 Ill. 134, 31 Am. Rep. 71; Barlow v. Congregational Society, 8 Allen (Mass.), 460; Coburn v. Omega Lodge, 71 Iowa, 581; Hayes v. Brubaker, 65 Ind. 27.

⁷³ Richmond Locomotive Works v. Moragne, 119 Ala. 80; McClellan v. Robe, 93 Ind. 298; Williams v. Second National Bank, 83 Ind. 237.

⁷⁴ Terhune v. Parrott, 59 N. J. L. 16.

⁷⁵ Hager v. Rice, 4 Colo. 90, 34 Am. Rep. 68.

⁷⁶ Laflin & Rand Powder Co. v. Sinsheimer, 48 Md. 411, 30 Am. Rep. 472. In this and the preceding case it was also held, as will be seen in a later section that if there were any ambiguity it could be cleared up by parol evidence.

⁷⁷ Amison v. Ewing, 2 Cold. (Tenn.) 366. To same effect is Shelton v. Darling, 2 Conn. 435; Orpherts v. Smith, 62 N. Y. Supp. 409.

See also Louisville, etc., Ry. Co. v. Caldwell, 93 Ind. 245.

the same form, the court applied all of the words indicating corporate character in determining the liability of the drawer, declared that their effect was thus exhausted, and held the acceptance binding upon the acceptor personally.⁷⁸ So where a bill drawn by Kanawha and Ohio Coal Co. upon J. A. R. "Agent," was accepted by J. A. R. "Agent K. & O. C. Co." it was held to be the personal obligation of the acceptor.⁷⁹ So where a bill was drawn on, and accepted by, J. R. L. "President of the Rosendale Manufacturing Co.," but there was no proof that the president was authorized to bind the company by acceptances, it was held that the action was properly brought against the president personally.⁸⁰

§ 1145. Negotiable paper drawn payable to an agent and indorsed by him.—Where a bill or note is drawn payable to a certain person to whose name are appended words indicating official character or representative capacity, the question of the nature of the title acquired by him,⁸¹ and which may be transferred by his indorsement, is subject to the same conflict of authorities which has been seen in the preceding sections. Thus, a note payable to the order of "Geo. Moebs, Sec. & Treas.," signed, "Peninsular Cigar Co., Geo. Moebs, Sec. & Treas.," and indorsed, "Geo. Moebs, Sec. & Treas.," was held, by the supreme court of the United States, to be "drawn by, payable to, and indorsed by the corporation."⁸²

On the other hand, in a case substantially identical, where a note was made payable to the order of "Adolph Pike, Pres.," and was indorsed by him in the same manner, it was held by the supreme court

⁷⁸ Slawson v. Loring, 5 Allen (Mass.), 340, 81 Am. Dec. 750.

⁷⁹ Robinson v. Kanawha Valley Bank, 44 Ohio St. 441, 58 Am. Rep. 829.

⁸⁰ Moss v. Livingston, 4 N. Y. 208.

In Nicholls v. Diamond, 9 Exch. 154, a bill of exchange, directed to "J. D., purser, West Downs Mining Company," was accepted by him: "J. D. per proc. West Downs Mining Co." J. D. was a member of the company which was not incorporated. Held, that J. D. was personally liable on this acceptance.

In Walker v. Bank, 9 N. Y. 582, where a bill of exchange was drawn by the Empire Mills, and addressed to "E. C. Hamilton, Esq." and "Accepted, * * * Empire Mills, by E. C. Hamilton, Treas.," it was held that the acceptance did not bind E. C. H. personally.

⁸¹ Paper payable to agent.—The question of who may sue to enforce payment of such paper is discussed in later chapters dealing with the rights of action of agents against third persons.

⁸² Falk v. Moebs, 127 U. S. 597, 32 L. Ed. 266.

To same effect: Nichols v. Frothingham, 45 Me. 220, 71 Am. Dec. 539.

Where a foreign corporation is represented by a local manager called "Commercial director," a note made to him in that name by one who knows the facts, is the note of the company. Societe des Mines v. Mackintosh, 5 Utah, 568.

of Illinois, denying the preceding case, that the word "Pres." was mere descriptio personæ, and that the note was payable to and indorsed by Pike individually.⁸³

§ 1146. — Paper payable to cashier of bank.—In the case of banks, paper drawn payable to A. B. "cashier," "Cash.," or "Cas.," is quite universally considered as payable to the bank itself and the cashier's signature in the same form, in drawing or indorsing such paper, binds the bank and not himself personally.⁸⁴ The Negotiable Instruments Act now covers this point.

§ 1147. — Other similar cases.—So where a note ran to C. W. S., "Treasurer of the I. M. B. Co.," and was indorsed in the same way, it was held to be the note of the company and to be indorsed by it.⁸⁵ And the same conclusion was reached where the note was payable to the order of L. M. "President of the Metropolitan Fire and Marine Insurance Company" and indorsed in the name of the company by L. M., "President."⁸⁶

So where a note or bill payable to a corporation by its corporate name has been indorsed by an authorized agent or official, with the title of his office appended, it is regarded as the indorsement of the corporation; as where a note was payable to the "Globe Mutual Insurance Co. or order," and was indorsed "L. G., President."⁸⁷

⁸³ Hately v. Pike, 162 Ill. 241, 53 Am. St. R. 304.

See also Maier v. First Nat. Bank, 93 Ill. App. 404.

Ambiguous — Parol evidence. — In Souhegan Nat. Bank v. Boardman, 46 Minn. 293, where a note was made payable to "A. J. Boardman, Treasurer," and was indorsed by him in the same manner, it was held that the indorsement was prima facie the individual contract of the defendant, but that parol evidence was admissible to show that he made it only in his official capacity as treasurer of the maker corporation, and as its indorsement.

⁸⁴ Bank v. Wheeler, 21 Ind. 90; Nave v. Lebanon Bank, 87 Ind. 204; Burnham v. Webster, 19 Me. 232; Bank of Genesee v. Patchin Bank, 19 N. Y. 312; Bank of New York v. Bank of Ohio, 29 N. Y. 619; First Nat. Bank v. Hall, 44 N. Y. 395, 4

Am. Rep. 698; Robb v. Bank, 41 Barb. (N. Y.) 586; Houghton v. First Nat. Bank, 26 Wis. 663, 7 Am. Rep. 107; Baldwin v. Bank, 1 Wall. (U. S.) 234, 17 L. Ed. 534; Farrar v. Gilman, 19 Me. 440, 36 Am. Dec. 766; Ballston Spa Bank v. Marine Bank, 16 Wis. 120; Rockwell v. Elkhorn Bank, 13 Wis. 653; Mechanics' Bank v. Bank of Columbia, 5 Wheat. (U. S.) 326, 5 L. Ed. 100.

⁸⁵ Vater v. Lewis, 36 Ind. 288, 10 Am. Rep. 29. To same effect: Babcock v. Beman, 11 N. Y. 200.

⁸⁶ Nichols v. Frothingham, 45 Me. 220, 71 Am. Dec. 539.

⁸⁷ Elwell v. Dodge, 33 Barb. (N. Y.) 336; same point, Russell v. Folsom, 72 Me. 436; Northampton Bank v. Pepon, 11 Mass. 287; Nicholas v. Oliver, 36 N. H. 218; McIntyre v. Preston, 5 Gil. (Ill.) 48, 48 Am. Dec. 321.

§ 1148. How when made by public agents.—As has been seen, in the preceding chapter,⁸⁸ contracts made by public agents while acting in the exercise of their public functions are presumed to be made in behalf of the public, and are not binding upon them personally unless the intent to be so charged is very clear. Whether the same rule applies to the execution of negotiable instruments by public agents is not so clear, although in reason, it would seem that it should, as between the immediate parties where the principal is known or disclosed, and as against third persons where enough is shown to fairly put a prudent man upon his guard.

The cases upon this subject are not harmonious and in many of them the distinction between public and private agents does not seem to have received attention. Thus where a note reading, "I promise to pay," etc., was signed by G. H. and A. P., "School trustees," it was held that the note was the individual obligation of the signers, and that the words "School trustees" were but descriptive of the persons;⁸⁹ and a similar ruling was made where the paper was headed "State of Iowa, County of Jones, Township of Hale," and was signed, W. H. G., "Pres. School Board" and I. B. S., "Sec'y School Board."⁹⁰ So where notes were signed J. B., "Agent for Lewis County" it was held that J. B. was personally bound.⁹¹ So a note reading "For value received as treasurer of the town of Monmouth, I promise to pay," etc., and signed "Wm. G. Brown, Treasurer," was held to be the individual note of Brown.⁹²

So individuals who promised "as committeemen for the erection of a school house in Dist. No. 1," but signed in their own names were held personally liable;⁹³ and where a note reading "For value received in policy No. 138,181, * * * issued by the American Insurance Company * * * we promise to pay to said company," etc., was ⁸⁹ Village of Cahokia v. Rautenberg, 88 Ill. 219. To the same effect, see Fowler v. Atkinson, 6 Minn. 579.

⁸⁸ See ante, § 1113.

And so where one De Merolla, the Italian Vice Consul at Baltimore, borrowed money and gave a promissory note headed "Royal Consular Agency of Italy," dated "Baltimore, 2 June, 1882," and reading "Received from Charles Gola, Esq., for the use of this Vice Consulate of Italy, one thousand, five hundred dollars, to be returned within ninety days, with the usual interest and commissions," signed "E. De Merolla," and sealed "Royal Consular Agency of Italy, Baltimore," it was held to be simply the personal obligation of De Merolla. De Beblan v. Gola, 64 Md. 262.

⁹⁰ Wing v. Glick, 56 Iowa, 473, also reported in note to 37 Am. Rep. 142.

⁹¹ Exchange Bank of Virginia v. Lewis County, 28 W. Va. 273.

⁹² Ross v. Brown, 74 Me. 352.

⁹³ Bayliss v. Pearson, 15 Iowa, 279.

signed E. G., "president," J. A. C., "secretary," and E. G. "director," it was held that it was the individual note of the persons named.⁹⁴

So again, where a note reading, "For value received I promise to pay," etc., "for causing full page view of the Leonard graded school building to be printed in the atlas of Clearfield County," was signed J. T. L., "President Sch. Bd." which was found to mean President of the School Board, it was held that L. was personally bound.⁹⁵

So, where an instrument in the form of an order headed with the name of the state, county, and school district, read "Treasurer of School Dist. No. 16, in said county and state, will pay * * * out of any money belonging to said district. For [here were enumerated a number of school books and appliances]. Issued by authority of officers of said district and payment guaranteed by B. M., W. F. P., school officers," it was held to be the personal obligation of the signers, and the words "school officers" to be mere descriptio personæ.⁹⁶

§ 1149. — But upon the ground that they were public agents, it was held, where two notes headed "Monticello, Ind." and reading "we promise to pay," etc., were signed, one, H. P. A., W. S. H., C. W. K., "Trustees of Monticello School," and the other H. P. A., C. W. K., "School trustees," that the words "Trustees of Monticello School," and "School trustees," were not mere descriptio personæ, but indicated an intent to charge the school town,⁹⁷ and this doctrine is reaffirmed in later cases in the same court.⁹⁸ A fortiori would the rule of this case apply where a note reading "I promise to pay," etc., "to be paid out of the township funds" is signed F. K. M., "Trustee of Johnson Tp." ⁹⁹

⁹⁴ American Ins. Co. v. Stratton, 59 Iowa, 696.

These cases in Iowa must evidently be distinguished from certain others in the same state. Thus, where a note reading, "We, the undersigned, directors of school district No. 4, Montpelier township, promise to pay;" etc., was signed by the individual names of the officers, it was held not binding on them personally. Baker v. Chamblis, 4 Greene (Iowa), 428. So, where a similar note reading, "We, the board of school district No. 1," promise to pay, etc., was signed in the individual names. Lyon v. Adamson, 7 Iowa, 509.

The court in these cases holds that, under the Code, the form adopted is the proper form in which to pledge the responsibility of the district. The same Code, however, provides a different name by which districts shall be known and by which they shall make contracts, be sued, etc.

⁹⁵ Forcey v. Caldwell (Pa.), 9 Atl. 466.

⁹⁶ Merrill v. Young, 5 Kan. App. 761.

⁹⁷ School Town of Monticello v. Kendall, 72 Ind. 91, 37 Am. Rep. 139.

⁹⁸ Moral School Tp. v. Harrison, 74 Ind. 93.

⁹⁹ Wallis v. Johnson School Tp., 75 Ind. 368.

And where a sealed note reading "we, A. S. C., W. M. C., and J. H. K., members of the township committee of the township of Harrison, * * * and our successors in office promise to pay" was signed by the parties in their individual names, the court applied the doctrine in regard to public agents and held the signers not personally liable.¹

Where a note reading, "We, as trustees of School Dist., No. 10," promise to pay, etc., was signed with the individual names of the makers, the court held that there could not well be any doubt that it was the promise of the district and not of the persons signing it, but that, if there was, it could be removed by showing the intention.²

So, where a note ran, "We, or either of us, trustees of district No. 6, * * * promise to pay to the order of Adam Temple, * * * it being money this day borrowed of said Temple to build a school house in said district No. 6," and was signed "T. W. W., L. F. G., Trustees," it was held that the note was clearly the obligation of the school district.³

The same question arises where a note is made payable to a public agent and by him indorsed: the agent in such a case is not liable as indorser. Thus where the note of a city was made payable "to the order of J. V. F., City Treas.," was negotiated and indorsed in blank thus, "J. V. F., City Treas.," it was held, that the agent was not personally liable for "it is plain that his name was used only to give the notes currency."⁴

2. The Admissibility of Parol Evidence to Show Intent.

§ 1150. In general.—Passing now to the second question suggested, namely, how far the interpretation of the instrument may be affected by parol evidence. The question of the admissibility of parol evidence to show who was intended to be bound by a negotiable instrument executed by an agent is one not free from difficulty, and the decisions are in conflict.

Where the instrument upon its face is apparently the promise of the agent only, there being nothing in the body of the instrument or appended to his signature to suggest the existence of a principal; and

¹ Knight v. Clark, 48 N. J. L. 22, 57 Am. Rep. 534.

² Sanborn v. Neal, 4 Minn. 126, 77 Am. Dec. 502.

³ Warford v. Temple, 24 Ky. Law Rep. 2268, 73 S. W. 1023.

⁴ Citizens' Savings Bank v. City of Newburyport, 95 C. C. A. 232, 169 Fed. 766.

where on the other hand the promise is, with equal clearness, the promise of the principal alone, the instrument needs no explanation, it binds him only whom it purports to bind, and parol evidence is inadmissible to discharge the apparent maker or to charge some one not disclosed.⁵

Where, however, the face of the paper itself suggests a principal as well as an agent, where the agent adds to his signature words indicating a representative capacity, or where otherwise the paper upon its face is ambiguous and capable of more than one interpretation, a resort to parol evidence to show the real intention will be suggested.

§ 1151. — In a recent case in Minnesota,⁶ it was said by Mitchell, J., "Where both the names of a corporation and of an officer or agent of it appear upon a bill or note, it is often a perplexing question to determine whether it is in legal effect the contract of the corporation or the individual contract of the officer or agent. It is very desirable that the rules of interpretation of commercial paper should be definite and certain; and, if the courts of the highest authority on the subject had laid down any exact and definite rules of construction for such cases, we would, for the sake of uniformity, be glad to adopt them. But, unfortunately, not only do different courts differ with each other, but we are not aware of any court whose decisions furnish any definite rule or system of rules applicable to such cases. Each case seems to have been decided with reference to its own facts. If what the courts sometimes call 'corporate marks' greatly predominate on the face of the paper, they hold it to be the contract of the corporation, and that extrinsic evidence is inadmissible to show that it was the individual contract of the officer or agent. If these marks are less strong, they hold it prima facie the individual contract of the officer or agent, but that extrinsic evidence is admissible to show that he executed it in his official capacity in behalf of the corporation; while in still other cases they hold that it is the personal contract of the party who signed it; that the terms 'agent,' 'secretary,' and the like, are merely descriptive of the person, and that extrinsic evidence is not admissible to show the contrary. This court has in a line of decisions held that where a party signs a contract, affixing to his signature the term 'agent,' 'trustee,' or the like, it is

⁵ Shuey v. Adair, 18 Wash. 188, 39 L. R. A. 473, 65 Am. St. R. 879; Sparks v. Despatch Trans. Co., 104 Mo. 531, 24 Am. St. R. 351, 12 L. R. A. 714; Bulwinkle v. Cramer, 27 S. Car. 376, 13 Am. St. R. 645; Phelps

v. Borland, 30 Hun (N. Y.), 362; Auburn Bank v. Leonard, 40 Barb. (N. Y.) 119; Babbett v. Young, 51 N. Y. 238.

⁶ Souhegan Nat. Bank v. Boardman, 46 Minn. 293.

prima facie his individual contract, the term affixed being presumptively merely descriptive of his person, but that extrinsic evidence is admissible to show that the words were understood as determining the character in which he contracted."

§ 1152. Cases holding such evidence admissible.—In a large and increasing number of cases wherein the instrument bore upon its face some reference to a principal, or some suggestion that the signer was acting in a representative capacity, parol evidence has been admitted to show who was the party intended to be bound.

Thus, in the Minnesota case⁷ already quoted from, where a note signed by a corporation was made payable to the order of A. J. B. "Treasurer," and was indorsed by him in the same way, it was held that, though upon its face this was the indorsement of the defendant personally, extrinsic evidence was admissible to show that he made the indorsement only in his official capacity as the indorsement of the corporation.

Many other cases from the same state are to the same effect.⁸

So where an agent drew a bill upon his principal, signing it "T. R. T., agent for S. T.," and there was nothing in the body of the bill to show that it was drawn as the act of the principal, the supreme court of Colorado held, 1. That, contrary to the preponderance of authority that the form "C D, agent for A B," is sufficient to bind the principal, it was the individual obligation of T. R. T.; and, 2. That even as between the original parties, parol evidence was not admissible to prove that the bill was drawn in a representative capacity, and not individually, and that the payee had full knowledge of this fact.⁹

But this case was practically overruled by a subsequent case in the same court, where it was held that in the case of a bill drawn upon "T. D. H., Treas." and accepted by him in the same form, parol evidence was admissible, to exonerate the agent, in an action between the original parties, to show that the acceptance was in an official capacity and was known by the payee to be so.¹⁰ And the same ruling was made in a similar case in Maryland.¹¹

⁷ Souhegan Nat. Bank v. Boardman, 46 Minn. 293.

⁸ Citing Pratt v. Beaupre, 13 Minn. 187; Bingham v. Stewart, 13 Minn. 106, and 14 Minn. 214; Deering v. Thom, 29 Minn. 120; Rowell v. Oleson, 32 Minn. 288; Peterson v. Homan, 44 Minn. 166, 20 Am. St. R. 564; Brunswick Balke Co. v. Boutell, 45 Minn. 21; Kraniger v. Peoples Bldg. Soc., 60 Minn. 94.

⁹ Tannatt v. Rocky Mt. Nat. Bank (1871), 1 Colo. 278, 9 Am. Rep. 156.

¹⁰ Hager v. Rice (1877), 4 Colo. 90, 34 Am. Rep. 68.

¹¹ Lafin & Rand Powder Co. v. Sinsheimer (1877), 48 Md. 411, 30 Am. Rep. 472.

And in accordance with these cases, the supreme court of Mississippi held that where a bill was drawn upon an agent and accepted by him, "Accepted, W. S. B., agent of H. W. H.," parol evidence was admissible, as between the original parties, to show that it was the intent at the time to bind H., the principal, only.¹²

§ 1153. — Where the note read "we, the president and directors" of a turnpike company "promise to pay," etc., and was signed by C. T. H., "President," J. H. H. and J. G. D., "directors" and E. R. S., "secretary," the court of appeals of Maryland held that parol evidence was admissible as between the original parties to exonerate the agent by showing that the signers of the note did so as the agents of the company and not as individuals and that the note was accepted as the note of the company.¹³

So where a note reading "We promise to pay," etc., was signed "Pioneer Mining Company, John E. Mason, Supt.," parol evidence was held, by the supreme court of California, to be admissible in an action by the payee to charge Mason to show that it was understood by the payee to have been the note of the company alone and to have been given for a consideration passing to the company.¹⁴

So where a bill was signed "John Kean, President Elizabethtown & Somerville R. R. Co.," the court of errors and appeals of New Jersey held that parol proof was admissible, in an action against Kean by a party who was apprised of that fact when he took it, to show that the bill was the bill of the company, and not of Kean, individually.¹⁵

In Kentucky, where a due bill was signed "for Thomas D. Owings, James Grubbs," parol evidence was held to be admissible as against the payee, to show that Grubbs was the manager of Owings' works, and that he executed and delivered the due bill as the obligation of Owings;¹⁶ and the same ruling as against the payee was made in Connecticut, where a note was signed A. W. M., "agent for the Middletown Manufacturing Company."¹⁷

¹² Hardy v. Pilcher (1879), 57 Miss. 18, 34 Am. Rep. 432. See also Martin v. Smith, 65 Miss. 1. (The point in this case however was, more properly, not whether the principal could be held upon the acceptance, but rather, since he drew the paper on his own agent, it was not really to be regarded as his promise.)

¹³ Haile v. Peirce (1869), 32 Md. 327, 3 Am. Rep. 139; and see Lafin

& Rand Powder Co. v. Sinsheimer, supra.

¹⁴ Bean v. Pioneer Mining Co. (1885), 66 Cal. 451, 56 Am. Rep. 106.

¹⁵ Kean v. Davis (1847), 21 N. J. L. 683, 47 Am. Dec. 182.

¹⁶ Owings v. Grubbs, 6 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 31; Webb v. Burke, 5 B. Mon. (Ky.) 51.

¹⁷ Hovey v. Magill, 2 Conn. 680.

In Missouri, where a note reading "I promise to pay," etc., "for building a schoolhouse in Dist. No. 3," was signed by P. T. R., "Local Director," it was held in an action by the payee against the director that he might show by parol evidence that it was not intended to be his note but that of the district.¹⁸ And the same ruling as against the payee has been made in Alabama,¹⁹ Kansas,²⁰ South Dakota,²¹ Oklahoma,²² Texas,²³ Montana,²⁴ Virginia.²⁵

§ 1154. — In Michigan, where the note read, "I promise," and was signed simply, W. S. W. "Agt." it was held, in an action by the payee, that while upon its face it was the promise of W., it could be shown by parol evidence to exonerate him, that the parties had had many dealings together and that this form of execution had come to be the recognized form for binding the principal.²⁶

In Indiana, where a variety of views had been expressed,²⁷ the court has held in an action by an indorsee that a note headed "Midland Steel

¹⁸ McClellan v. Reynolds, 49 Mo. 312; and the same ruling was made in other cases, Shuette v. Bailey, 40 Mo. 69; Musser v. Johnson, 42 Mo. 74, 97 Am. Dec. 316; Washington Ins. Co. v. Seminary, 52 Mo. 480; Klostermann v. Loos, 58 Mo. 290; Turner v. Thomas, 10 Mo. App. 338.

See also Sparks v. Dispatch Transfer Co., 104 Mo. 531, 24 Am. St. R. 351, 12 L. R. A. 714, where there was nothing at all on the face of the note to indicate agent, and it was held that parol evidence was not admissible.

¹⁹ Lazarus v. Shearer, 2 Ala. (N. S.) 718. See also Baker v. Gregory, 28 Ala. 544, 65 Am. Dec. 366; Drake v. Flewellen, 33 Ala. 106; May v. Hewitt, 33 Ala. 161; Ware v. Morgan, 67 Ala. 461.

²⁰ The note read "I promise," and was signed W. M. B., "President Odd Fellows Hall Association." A. T. L. "Secretary." Benham v. Smith, 53 Kan. 495. See also Kline v. Bank of Tescott, 50 Kan. 91, 34 Am. St. R. 107, 18 L. R. A. 533; Western Grocer Co. v. Lackman, 75 Kan. 34.

²¹ Miller v. Way, 5 S. Dak. 468, the note read, "We the directors of the Custer County Agricultural, etc., Association promise to pay * * * Signed by directors Custer Co. Agricultural, etc., Association." A. S. W., T. L. M., J. F. B., L. F. S., J. L. B., E. S., P. P., G. C. B.

²² James v. Citizens' Bank, 9 Okla. 546. The note read, "We promise to pay" and was signed R. W. P., J. G. "President of Enid Town Co.," F. J. "Secretary Enid Town Co."

²³ Traynham v. Jackson, 15 Tex. 170, 65 Am. Dec. 152, the note read, "We, the trustees of Chappell Hill College, promise to pay," and was signed by eight persons. See also Texas L. & C. Co. v. Carroll, 63 Tex. 48, though the paper here was held to be non negotiable.

²⁴ Knippenberg v. Greenwood Min. Co., 39 Mont. 11.

²⁵ Early v. Wilkinson, 9 Gratt. (Va.) 68; Richmond, etc., R. R. Co. v. Snead, 19 Gratt. (Va.) 354, 100 Am. Dec. 670. (The action was not upon the note or due bill but upon the common counts, against the principal, and the due bill was admitted as evidence of the indebtedness of the latter.)

²⁶ Keidan v. Winegar, 95 Mich. 430, 20 L. R. A. 250.

²⁷ In Second Nat. Bank v. Midland Steel Co., 155 Ind. 581, 52 L. R. A. 307, the court said, "The decisions in this state upon the question presented here cannot easily be Company," and reading, "We promise," and signed R. J. B. "President," while it may be prima facie the note of B., may still be shown by parol evidence to have been intended to be the note of the company.²⁸

§ 1155. — In Nebraska, it seems that parol evidence will not support a plea at law denying liability on the notes, but that such evidence would support an action for rectification in equity.²⁹ In New York, where the makers of a note designated themselves "Trustees of the First Baptist Society of the Village of Brockport," it was held that while prima facie they were personally liable, yet, in an action by the payees, the presumption might be rebutted by parol evidence that the note was, to the knowledge of the payees, given as the obligation of the Society,³⁰ and this principle was reaffirmed in later cases.³¹

§ 1156. — Such evidence has also been freely admitted by the supreme court of the United States. Thus where a check headed "Mechanics' Bank of Alexandria," drawn on the cashier of the Bank reconciled or distinguished. Among those holding that extrinsic evidence is not admissible to show that a contract executed by one who adds to his signature the words, 'president,' 'secretary,' 'agent,' 'trustee,' etc., is not the contract of the party so signing, but the obligation of another party, are the following: Prather v. Ross, 17 Ind. 495; Kendall v. Morton, 21 Ind. 205; Wiley v. Shank, 4 Blackf. (Ind.) 420; Mears v. Graham, 8 Blackf. (Ind.) 144; Hays v. Crutcher, 54 Ind. 260; Williams v. Second Nat. Bank, 83 Ind. 237; Willson v. Nicholson, 61 Ind. 241; Hayes v. Brubaker, 65 Ind. 27; Avery v. Dougherty, 102 Ind. 443, 52 Am. Rep. 680; Hobbs v. Cowden, 20 Ind. 310; Jackson Sch. Twp. v. Farlow, 75 Ind. 118. A different view seems to have been taken in other cases. Means v. Swormstedt, 32 Ind. 87, 2 Am. Rep. 330; McHenry v. Duffield, 7 Blackf. (Ind.) 41; Pitman v. Kintner, 5 Blackf. 250, 33 Am. Dec. 469; Kenyon v. Williams, 19 Ind. 44; Bingham v. Kimball, 17 Ind. 396; Ind., etc., R. Co. v. Davis, 20 Ind. 6, 83 Am. Dec. 303; Gaff v. Theis, 33 Ind. 307; Vater v. Lewis, 36 Ind. 288, 10 Am.

Rep. 29; Pearse v. Welborn, 42 Ind. 331; Neptune v. Paxton, 15 Ind. App. 284; Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Caldwell, 98 Ind. 245; Second Baptist Church v. Furber, 109 Ind. 492; Swarts v. Cohen, 11 Ind. App. 20; Hunt v. Listenberger, 14 Ind. App. 320."

²⁸ Second Nat. Bank v. Midland Steel Co., 155 Ind. 581, 52 L. R. A. 307.

²⁹ Western Wheeled Scraper Co. v. McMillen, 71 Neb. 686. See also Western Wheeled Scraper Co. v. Stickleman, 122 Iowa, 396.

³⁰ Brockway v. Allen, 17 Wend. (N. Y.) 40.

³¹ See White v. Skinner, 13 Johns. (N. Y.) 307; Barker v. Mechanic Ins. Co., 3 Wend. (N. Y.) 94, 20 Am. Dec. 664; Babcock v. Beman, 11 N. Y. 200; Bank of Utica v. Magher, 18 Johns. (N. Y.) 342; Bank of Genessee v. Patchin Bank, 19 N. Y. 312; Randall v. Van Vetchen, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 60, 10 Am. Dec. 193; Newman v. Greeff, 101 N. Y. 663; Schmittler v. Simon, 114 N. Y. 176, 11 Am. St. R. 621; First National Bank v. Wallis, 150 N. Y. 455.

of Columbia, was signed "Wm. Paton, Jr.," parol evidence was held to be admissible to show that Paton was the cashier of the Mechanics' Bank; that he drew the check as such cashier and that the Bank of Columbia knew it;³² but where a note drawn payable to the order of "Geo. Moebs, Sec. and Treas.," by the "Peninsular Cigar Co., Geo. Moebs, Sec. and Treas.," was indorsed "Geo. Moebs, Sec. and Treas.," it was held that the indorsement was clearly that of the cigar company and that parol evidence was not admissible to show that the indorsement was intended to be that of Moebs personally.³³

§ 1157. Cases holding such evidence not admissible.—But in Massachusetts, where a draft headed "Office of Portage Lake Manufacturing Company," drawn upon "E. T. Loring, Agent," and concluding "and charge the same to the account of the company," was signed by "J. R. Jackson, Agt.," and was accepted as follows, "Accepted June 15, E. T. Loring, Agent," it was held in an action by the payee against the acceptor, that parol evidence was not admissible to show that the defendant was in fact the agent of the company named on the face of the draft, that the plaintiff knew that he was so, and that the defendant had no personal interest in the company. In this case, as has been seen, the court construed the words disclosing the name of the company and upon whose account the bill was drawn, as showing that the bill was drawn as the bill of the company, and that

³² Mechanics' Bank v. Bank of Columbia, 5 Wheat. (U. S.) 326, 5 L. Ed. 100; see also, Baldwin v. Bank of Newbury, 1 Wall. (U. S.) 234, 17 L. Ed. 534, where, in an action on a note reading "Five months after date, I promise to pay to the order of O. C. Hale, Esq., Cashier, Thirty-five hundred dollars, payable at either bank in Boston, value received," it was held that parol evidence was admissible to show that Hale was cashier of the plaintiff bank, and that in taking the note he acted as the cashier and agent of the corporation, and Metcalf v. Williams, 104 U. S. 93, 26 L. Ed. 665, where it is held that where a check was signed "W. G. Williams, V. Pres't," parol evidence was admissible to show that the person taking it, took it as the check of the corporation of which Williams was vice-president.

³³ Falk v. Moebs, 127 U. S. 597, 32

L. Ed. 266. "We conclude, therefore," says Mr. Justice Lamar, in this case, "that the notes involved in this controversy, upon their face, are the notes of the corporation. In the language of the court below, they were 'drawn by, payable to and indorsed by, the corporation.' There is no ambiguity in the indorsement, but, on the contrary, such indorsement is, in terms, that of the Peninsular Cigar Company. This being true, it follows that the court below was right in excluding from the jury the evidence offered to explain away and modify the terms of such indorsement." Citing White v. Bank, 102 U. S. 658, 26 L. Ed. 250; Martin v. Cole, 104 U. S. 30, 26 L. Ed. 647; Metcalf v. Williams, Id. 93.

See also American Trust Co. v. Canevin, 107 C. C. A. 543, 184 Fed. 657.

they could not be again used to show that it was also accepted in that character;³⁴ and where a note reading "I promise to pay," etc., was signed by W. H. E., "Pres. and Treas. Chelsea Iron Foundry Company," the same court held that it was the individual promise of W. H. E., and that it was erroneous in an action by the payee to admit oral testimony to show that at the time the note was given and afterwards, it was understood and agreed by the parties that it was the note of the foundry company.³⁵

So in Iowa, where a note containing an individual promise was signed "E. G., President, J. A. C., Secretary, E. S., Director," it was held that it was the individual promise of the signers and that parol evidence was not admissible in an action by the payee to show that it was intended to be the promise of the school district of which the signers were the respective officers indicated.³⁶

Many other cases in that state are to the same effect.³⁷

§ 1158. — In Maine, where a note was drawn "we promise to pay," etc., and was signed by four individuals, adding "President and Directors of the Prospect and Stockton Cheese Company," the court held that evidence was not admissible even between the original parties, to show that it was intended to be the obligation of the company.³⁸

In Illinois, where the note ran, "we, the trustees of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Lebanon, promise to pay," etc., and was signed with the individual names of the makers, the court decided that it was the individual note of the signers and that parol evidence could not be admitted in an action by the payee's administrator to show "that it was well understood by the payee when the makers executed the note, they were acting in their capacity as trustees of the church; that they intended to obligate the church corporation, having full au-

³⁴ Slawson v. Loring, 5 Allen (Mass.), 340, 81 Am. Dec. 750.

³⁵ Davis v. England, 141 Mass. 587. To like effect: Tucker Mfg. Co. v. Fairbanks, 98 Mass. 101; Bartlett v. Hawley, 120 Mass. 92.

As to the reformation of the instrument, see Eustis Mfg. Co. v. Saco Brick Co., 198 Mass. 212.

³⁶ American Ins. Co. v. Stratton, 59 Iowa, 696.

³⁷ See, Heffner v. Brownell, 70 Iowa, 591, 75 Iowa, 341; McCandless

v. Belle Plaine Canning Co., 78 Iowa, 161, 16 Am. St. R. 429, 4 L. R. A. 396; Lee v. Percival, 85 Iowa, 639; Matthews v. Dubuque Mattress Co., 87 Iowa, 246, 19 L. R. A. 676.

But see Western Wheeled Scraper Co. v. Stickelman, 122 Iowa, 396, where the court, as now constituted, expresses doubt as to the correctness of the earlier rule.

³⁸ Rendell v. Harriman, 75 Me. 497, 46 Am. Rep. 421.

thority in that regard, and did not intend to bind themselves personally or individually by their writing.”³⁹

In Ohio where a bill was accepted by J. A. R., “Agent K. & O. C. Co., parol evidence was rejected in an action by an indorsee to show that he was the duly authorized agent of Kanawha & Ohio Coal Company; that he accepted the bill for and on account of the company and that the payee knew these facts.”⁴⁰

Similar rulings have been made in South Carolina,⁴¹ Vermont,⁴² and perhaps other states.⁴³

§ 1159. What rules applied.—The trouble that has been experienced in dealing with this question does not arise so much from a lack of appreciation of the proper principle involved, as from the difficulty of applying it, although the courts have not always agreed even upon the principle.

Thus the rule has been stated by a learned judge in this way: “Ordinarily, no extrinsic testimony of any kind is admissible to vary or explain negotiable instruments. Such paper speaks its own language, and the meaning which the law affixes to it cannot be changed by any evidence aliunde. One of the few exceptions to this rule is where anything on the face of the paper suggests a doubt as to the party bound, or the character in which any of the signers has acted in affixing his name: in which case, testimony may be admitted between the original parties to show the true intent. Thus, where one has signed as agent of another, while the prima facie presumption is that the words are merely descriptio personæ, and that the signer is individually bound, yet it may be shown in a suit between the parties that it was not so intended, but that, on the contrary, the true intention was that the payee should look to the principal whose name was disclosed in the signature of his agent, or who was well known to be the true party to be bound. The principle, though not recognized in all the cases, is, we think, a sound one, and supported by the weight of authority.”⁴⁴

³⁹ Hypes v. Griffin (1878), 89 Ill. 134, 31 Am. Rep. 71. But see Frankland v. Johnson, 147 Ill. 520; La Salle Nat. Bank v. Tolu Rock and Rye Co., 14 Ill. App. 141.

⁴⁰ Robinson v. Kanawha Valley Bank, 44 Ohio St. 441, 58 Am. Rep. 829; see also to same effect: Collins v. Insurance Co., 17 Ohio St. 215, 93 Am. Dec. 612; Titus v. Kyle, 10 Ohio St. 444.

But see Aungst v. Creque, 72 Ohio St. 551.

⁴¹ Moore v. Cooper, 1 Spears (S. Car.), 87; Fash v. Ross, 2 Hill (S. Car.), 294; Taylor v. McLean, 1 McMul. (S. Car.) 352.

⁴² Arnold v. Sprague, 34 Vt. 402.

⁴³ In Georgia see, Cleaveland v. Stewart, 3 Ga. 283; Bedell v. Scarlett, 75 Ga. 56.

⁴⁴ Chalmers, J., in Hardy v. Pil-

And the principle has been asserted in another case as follows: "The established rule seems to be, that an agent, in making a promise for his principal, is liable on the promise unless it be expressed in terms which show that it was made for and on behalf of the principal; and where an agent makes a promissory note to a third person, in terms sufficient to bind himself as principal, the mere addition of the word 'agent' or other description of his office or capacity, to his signature, does not change or vary the legal effect of the promise itself.⁴⁵ * * * But sometimes the agent may attach to his signature the character in which he signs the instrument without any correspondent or other description in the body of the note—or he may, in the body of the instrument, disclose the name of his principal and sign his own individual name without any additional description whatever,—or he may sign his own name, without apt terms to charge himself, and in the body of the note use doubtful expressions to describe the principal, leaving the precise meaning of the instrument to be gathered from the terms on its face, so ambiguous or obscure as to render its interpretation, per se, too difficult and uncertain for just and sound construction. When the note is of this last description, that is where its language or terms are so unintelligible as to admit of no rational interpretation of the meaning, or are not sufficiently decisive of the intention of the parties, but, on the contrary, are equivocal and uncertain, extraneous proof, as between the original parties, may be admitted to show the true character of the instrument, and what party,—the principal or the agent, or both,—is liable.

"Where individuals subscribe their proper names to a promissory note, prima facie they are personally liable, though they add a description of the character in which the note is given; but such presumption of liability may be rebutted, as between the original parties, by proof that the note was in fact given by the makers, as agents, with the payee's knowledge."⁴⁶

And still again it has been said that "The rule is that when words which may be either descriptive of the person, or indicative of the character in which he contracts, are affixed to the name of the contracting party, prima facie they are descriptive of the person only, but the fact that they were not intended by the parties as descriptive of cher, 57 Miss. 18, 34 Am. Rep. 432, citing 1 Dan. on Neg. Inst. § 418; Haile v. Peirce, 32 Md. 327, 3 Am. Rep. 139; McClellan v. Reynolds, 49 Mo. 312; Baldwin v. Bank, 1 Wall. (U. S.) 234, 17 L. Ed. 534; Mechanics' Bank v. Bank of Columbia, 5 Wheat. (U. S.) 326, 5 L. Ed. 100.

⁴⁵ Citing Sumwalt v. Ridgely, 20 Md. 114.

⁴⁶ Haile v. Peirce, 32 Md. 327, 3 Am. Rep. 139.

the person, but were understood as determining the character in which the party contracted, may be shown by extrinsic evidence; but the burden of proof rests upon the party seeking to change the prima facie character of the contract.”⁴⁷ § 1160. ——— In Kean v. Davis,⁴⁸ where the form of signature was “John Kean, President Elizabethtown and Somerville R. R. Co.,” Chief Justice Green said: “It is at best, upon the face of the instruments, doubtful by whom they were executed. It is not clear who was the contracting party, whether the obligation was assumed by the agent, or whether he contracted on behalf of his principal. May extrinsic evidence be resorted to, to remove this doubt? Is parol evidence admissible to show by whom this contract was in fact made,—whether it is the contract of the agent or the contract of the principal?

“If this were a verbal and not a written contract, it is not questioned that the evidence offered is both pertinent and competent to discharge the agent, and fix the liability upon the principal. The objection urged to the evidence is, that the contract is in writing; that the construction of a written agreement is matter of law, to be settled by the court upon the terms of the instrument itself; and that evidence aliunde cannot be received to contradict or to vary the terms of a valid written instrument.

“It is material to observe that the body of this instrument contains not a word indicating by whom the contract was made. The language of the instrument is equally applicable to a contract made by the individual or by the corporation. It cannot be said that this evidence will either contradict or vary the terms of the instrument. The whole difficulty lies, not in the construction of the instrument, but in the import of the signature. That signature, as we have seen, may import either the act of the company or of the individual. The terms of the instrument are neither varied nor contradicted by proof that it was the contract of the one or of the other.

“The question is not what is the true construction of the language of the contracting party, but who is the contracting party? Whose language is it? And the evidence is not adduced to discharge the agent from a personal liability which he has assumed, but to prove that in fact he never incurred that liability. Not to aid in the construction of the instrument, but to prove whose instrument it is.

“Now it is true that the construction of a written contract is a question of law, to be settled by the court upon the terms of the instrument. But whether the contract was in point of fact executed, when it was made, where it was made, upon what consideration it was made, and by whom it was made, are questions of fact to be settled by a jury, and are provable in many instances by parol even though the proof conflicts with the language of the instrument itself."

⁴⁷ Pratt v. Beaupre, 13 Minn. 187.

⁴⁸ 21 N. J. L. 683, 47 Am. Dec. 182.

So in the United States Supreme Court, Mr. Justice Bradley said: "The ordinary rule doubtfully is that if a person merely adds to the signature of his name the word 'agent,' 'trustee,' 'treasurer,' etc., without disclosing his principal, he is personally bound. The appendix is regarded as a mere descriptio personæ. It does not of itself make third persons chargeable with notice of any representative relation of the signer. But if he be in fact a mere agent, trustee or officer of some principal, and is in the habit of expressing in that way his representative character in his dealings with a particular party, who recognizes him in that character, it would be contrary to justice and truth to construe the documents, thus made and used, as his personal obligations contrary to the intent of the parties."⁴⁹

§ 1161. — The reasons given for the contrary ruling are numerous. Thus in the Colorado case above cited,⁵⁰ the court said: "If the defendant is liable as drawer of this negotiable instrument, that liability must be determined by the instrument itself. Parol evidence can never be admitted for the purpose of exonerating an agent who has entered into a written contract in which he appears as principal, even though he should propose to show, if allowed, that he disclosed his agency and mentioned the name of his principal at the time the contract was executed. When a simple contract, other than a bill or note, is made by an agent, the principal whom he represents may, in general, maintain an action upon it in his own name, and parol evidence is admissible, although the contract is in writing, to show that the person named in the contract was an agent, and that he was acting for his principal. Such evidence does not deny that the contract binds those whom on its face it purports to bind, but shows that it also binds another."

In Massachusetts, the court says: "The rule excluding all parol evidence to charge any person as principal, not disclosed on the face of a note or draft, rests on the principle that each person who takes negotiable paper makes a contract with the parties on the face of the instrument, and with no other person.”⁵¹

⁴⁹ Metcalf v. Williams, 104 U. S. 33, 26 L. Ed. 665.

⁵⁰ Tannatt v. Rocky Mountain National Bank, 1 Colo. 273, 9 Am. Rep. 156. See contra: Hager v. Rice, 4 Colo. 90, 34 Am. Rep. 68.

In Maine, the court recognize the rule that an ambiguity may be made plain by the use of parol evidence, but deny that where a note beginning “We promise to pay,” etc., is signed by several individuals, adding the words “President and Directors of the Prospect and Stockton Cheese Company,” any such ambiguity exists.⁵² And the general doctrine in this state as expressed by the court is, “that the liability or non-liability of the parties must be determined by an inspection of the note itself; that resort cannot be had to parol evidence to show an intention other than that expressed by the instrument itself.”⁵³

In Illinois it is said “Whatever may be the decisions elsewhere on analogous questions, the authorities in this state are full to the point that a party will not be permitted to show by oral testimony that his written agreement, understandingly entered into, was not in fact to be binding upon him. Accordingly it was held in Hypes v. Griffin,⁵⁴ mainly on the authority of Powers v. Briggs,⁵⁵ that where trustees of a church corporation made a note in their individual names, although they described themselves as trustees of the church, parol evidence was inadmissible to show it was the intention of the parties that it was to be the note of the church corporation and not the note of the trustees executing it. The principle running through that and other cases is that such instruments will be construed as the parties made them without the aid of extrinsic evidence. That rule of interpretation would seem to be as well settled in this state as any rule can be.”⁵⁶

§ 1162. The true rules.—To extract general principles from these cases whose conflict is so great as to amount, in the language of a recent case, almost to anarchy, is manifestly difficult. It will be obvious that the question is of importance in two classes of cases:

1. Those involving the rights of the immediate parties to the instrument only.
2. Those involving the rights of third persons.

⁵¹ Slawson v. Loring, 5 Allen (Mass.), 340, 81 Am. Dec. 750; Williams v. Robbins, 16 Gray (Mass.), 77; Forster v. Fuller, 6 Mass. 58; Thacher v. Dinsmore, 5 Mass. 299; Fuller v. Hooper, 3 Gray (Mass.), 334; Bank of British N. A. v. Hooper, 5 Gray (Mass.), 567, 66 Am. Dec. 390; Draper v. Mass. Steam Heat Co., 5 Allen (Mass.), 338; Davis v.

England, 141 Mass. 587; Bartlett v. Hawley, 120 Mass. 92.

⁵² Rendell v. Harriman, 75 Me. 497, 46 Am. Rep. 421.

⁵³ Sturdivant v. Hall, 59 Me. 172, 8 Am. Rep. 409; Mellen v. Moore, 68 Me. 390, 28 Am. Rep. 77.

⁵⁴ 89 Ill. 134, 31 Am. Rep. 71.

⁵⁵ 79 Ill. 493, 22 Am. Rep. 175.

⁵⁶ Scanlan v. Keith, 102 Ill. 634, 40 Am. Rep. 624.

Respecting this question, however, these general rules⁵⁷ may be evolved:

I. Where the paper on its face is the undertaking of the agent only, no reference being made on its face to representative capacity,⁵⁸ and where the paper on its face is unmistakably the principal's,⁵⁹ parol evidence will not be received, in the one case to exonerate, and in the other to charge the agent. So also upon paper apparently made by the agent only, an undisclosed principal cannot be held,⁶⁰ however much he may be liable, as between the original parties, upon the acts or facts which constitute the consideration.⁶¹

II. But, where the paper bears on its face some reference to a principal, or some appellation indicating representative character, while it is undoubtedly true that the mere addition of the word "agent," "trustee," "treasurer" and the like, or the mere recital in the body of the instrument that the person signing is such agent, treasurer, or trustee of a principal named or unnamed, is, as has been seen, to be regarded prima facie, as descriptio personæ merely and not as characterizing the act as one done in a representative capacity; and while it is also true, as a general rule, that parol evidence is not admissible to exonerate an agent from a contract into which he has personally entered, yet it is believed that the preponderance of authority will warrant the statement of the rule that:

I. Between the immediate parties to a bill or note, parol evidence is admissible to show:

a. That, by a course of dealing between the parties, that form of execution had come to be the recognized and adopted form by which the obligation of the principal is entered into, whether the purpose be to discharge the agent or to charge the principal;⁶² or ⁵⁷ Quoted and approved: Keidan v. Winegar, 95 Mich. 430, 20 L. R. A. 705; Janes v. Citizens Bank, 9 Okla. 546; Knippenberg v. Greenwood Min. Co., 39 Mont. 11.

⁵⁸ Shuey v. Adair, 18 Wash. 188, 63 Am. St. R. 879; Phelps v. Borland, 30 Hun (N. Y.), 362; Auburn Bank v. Leonard, 40 Barb. (N. Y.) 119; Babbett v. Young, 51 N. Y. 238; Hancock v. Fairfield, 30 Me. 299; Brown v. Parker, 7 Allen (Mass.), 337; Baumann v. Manistee Salt Co., 94 Mich. 363; Condon v. Pearce, 43 Md. 83.

⁵⁹ Falk v. Moebs, 127 U. S. 597, 32

L. Ed. 266; Liebscher v. Kraus, 74 Wis. 387, 17 Am. St. Rep. 171, 5 L. R. A. 496.

⁶⁰ Sparks v. Dispatch Transfer Co., 104 Mo. 531, 24 Am. St. R. 351, 12 L. R. A. 714; Webster v. Wray, 19 Neb. 558, 56 Am. Rep. 754; New York L. Ins. Co. v. Martindale, 75 Kan. 142, 121 Am. St. R. 362, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1045, 12 Ann. Cas. 677.

⁶¹ Coaling Co. v. Howard, 130 Ga. 807.

⁶² Says Mr. Justice Bradley, "But if he be in fact a mere agent, trustee or officer of some principal, and is in the habit of expressing, in that way,

b. That the instrument was, to the knowledge of the parties, intended to be the obligation of the principal and not of the agent, and that it was given and accepted as such, certainly where the purpose is to exonerate the agent,⁶³ or, by many authorities, to charge the principal.⁶⁴ his representative character in his dealings with a particular party, who recognizes him in that character, it would be contrary to justice and truth to construe the documents, thus made and used as his personal obligations, contrary to the intent of the parties." Metcalf v. Williams, 104 U. S. 93, 99, 26 L. Ed. 665. See also, Hovey v. Magill, 2 Conn. 680; La Salle Nat. Bank v. Tolu, etc., Co., 14 Ill. App. 141; Milligan v. Lyle, 24 La. Ann. 144; Gerber v. Stuart, 1 Montana, 172.

So it may be shown that the principal was doing business in the agent's name or that he has adopted the agent's name as his own. Bank of Rochester v. Monteath, 1 Denio (N. Y.), 402, 43 Am. Dec. 681; Devendorf v. West Virginia, etc., Co., 17 W. Va. 135; Pease v. Pease, 35 Conn. 131, 95 Am. Dec. 295; National Shoe & Leather Bank's Appeal, 35 Conn. 469; Crocker v. Colwell, 46 N. Y. 212; Chandler v. Coe, 54 N. H. 561; Melledge v. Boston Iron Co., 5 Cush. (Mass.) 158, 51 Am. Dec. 59; Conroe v. Case, 79 Wis. 338, 48 N. W. 480.

⁶³ Says Gray, J.: "As a general proposition, it is undoubtedly true, that one who signs a writing as agent, trustee or president is to be regarded as merely describing himself, and hence is to be held personally liable. But where a writing is thus executed, with full authority from the principal, the party upon whose account it is executed is alone liable." Bank of Genesee v. Patchen Bank, 19 N. Y. 312. See also, Brockway v. Allen, 17 Wend. (N. Y.) 40; Keldan v. Winegar, 95 Mich. 432, 20 L. R. A. 430; Crandall v. Rollins, 83 App. Div. 618; American Trust Co. v. Canevin, 107 C. C. A. 543; Knippenberg v. Greenwood Min. Co., 39

Mont. 11; Owings v. Grubbs, 6 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 31; McClellan v. Reynolds, 49 Mo. 312; Markley v. Quay, 14 Phila. 164.

See also the cases cited in detail in the preceding section.

See also Whitney v. Wyman, 101 U. S. 392, 25 L. Ed. 1050.

Contra: Collins v. Ins. Co., 17 Ohio St. 215, 93 Am. Dec. 612, where it is held that the agent cannot be exonerated, though perhaps the principal might be held.

⁶⁴ In Burkhalter v. Perry, 127 Ga. 438, 119 Am. St. R. 343, the payee was allowed to recover of the principal upon a note signed "D. C. N. Burkhalter, Agent," where it was alleged that the note sued on was the note of the principal, signed by his duly constituted agent, with intent thereby to charge the principal. But the court also said that, if the agent had been sued, he could not have shifted the responsibility by showing that it was intended to be the note of the principal. In Lockwood v. Coley, 22 Fed. 192 (before the U. S. circuit court in Georgia), recovery was also allowed to the payee against the principal upon a note signed "J. A. D. Coley, Agt.," he being shown to have been the agent of the defendant his wife. Almost identical in facts and holding is Green v. Skeel, 2 Hun (N. Y.), 485. (But there has been a good deal of question about this case. See Merchants Bank v. Hayes, 7 Hun, 530; Crandall v. Rollins, 83 App. Div. 618; Cortland Wagon Co. v. Lynch, 82 Hun (N. Y.), 73). Moore v. McClure, 8 Hun (N. Y.), 557 is also identical in facts and holding. See also Baker v. Gregory, 28 Ala. 544, 65 Am. Dec. 366.

c. That an instrument which is so ambiguous upon its face as to render it uncertain who was intended to be bound, was known to be intended to be the obligation of the principal, and this whether the purpose be to exonerate the agent or to charge the principal.⁶⁵

Where parol evidence is thus admissible to exonerate the agent, counter evidence of the same sort is also admissible to charge him by showing that it was the intention to bind him personally.⁶⁶

2. Between one of the original parties and a third party, such evidence is admissible to make either of the lines of proof mentioned above:

a. Where the third person is not a bona fide holder for value and without notice;⁶⁷ or

In Brenner v. Lawrence, 27 Misc. (N. Y.) 755, where a firm of bankers directed their cashier to draw a check on their account which he signed "H. M. Moore, Cashier," the principals were held liable (but Cashier paper has always stood upon somewhat distinct ground).

In Washington Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. St. Mary's Seminary, 52 Mo. 480, the payee recovered assessments upon an insurance note signed "Daniel McCarthy, President." (See the comments on this case in Sparks v. Despatch Trans. Co., 104 Mo. 531, 24 Am. St. R. 351, 12 L. R. A. 714).

In May v. Hewitt, 33 Ala. 161, the endorsee of a bill was allowed to recover of the principal upon a bill drawn upon "Owners of S. B. Messenger," and "accepted by B. W. Bell, Capt."

In Ferris v. Thaw, 72 Mo. 446, parol evidence was admitted to charge the members of a lodge upon a note signed by C. T. "W. M. [Worshipful Master] Polar Star Lodge No. 79; J. W. L. Treasure."

In Brown v. Tainter, 114 N. Y. App. Div. 446, it is held that where money is loaned upon the express condition that a certain person shall endorse the note and he does so, he cannot afterwards be held as an undisclosed principal though he got the benefit of the loan.

⁶⁵ This principle does not seem to be strongly controverted, but, as has been seen, the courts have not always agreed as to what constitutes such an ambiguity. It is certainly sustained by the great weight of authority. Kean v. Davis, 21 N. J. L. 683, 47 Am. Dec. 182; Haile v. Peirce, 32 Md. 327, 3 Am. Rep. 139; Early v. Wilkinson, 9 Gratt. (Va.) 68; Lazarus v. Shearer, 2 Ala. 718; Hardy v. Pilcher, 57 Miss. 18, 34 Am. Rep. 433; Martin v. Smith, 65 Miss. 1; Hager v. Rice, 4 Colo. 90, 34 Am. Rep. 68; Lacy v. Dubuque Lumber Co., 43 Iowa, 510; Mechanics' Bank v. Bank of Columbia, 5 Wheat. (U. S.) 326, 5 L. Ed. 100; Baldwin v. Bank of Newbury, 1 Wall. (U. S.) 234, 17 L. Ed. 534; Dunbar Box Co. v. Martin, 53 Misc. (N. Y.) 312; Souhegan Bank v. Boardman, 46 Minn. 293.

For cases holding that the principal is bound where the agent signs and the note is "ambiguous" see: Lacy v. Dubuque Lumber Co., 43 Iowa, 510; Washington Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. St. Mary's Seminary, 52 Mo. 480; May v. Hewitt, 33 Ala. 161.

⁶⁶ Wiers v. Treese, 27 Okla. 774; Lafin, etc., Powder Co. v. Sinsheimer, 48 Md. 411; Black River Lumber Co. v. Warner, 93 Mo. 374 [the last was not a case of negotiable instrument].

⁶⁷ Metcalf v. Williams, 104 U. S. 93, 26 L. Ed. 665 (where the plaintiff had full knowledge of the facts and was not allowed to recover of one

b. Where the instrument bears sufficient evidence upon its face, or is so ambiguous, as to fairly put a reasonably prudent man upon inquiry.⁶⁸

As to this last subdivision it may be said that the mere addition of the word "agent," "trustee," etc., without disclosing the principal is not sufficient to make third persons chargeable with notice of any representative relation of the signer;⁶⁹ but the form of executing may be such as to well awaken the suspicion of third persons.⁷⁰ Thus where a check was signed "W. G. Williams, V-Pres." and "E. P. Aistrop, Sec'y," the supreme court of the United States said: "The fact that it bore two official signatures, that of the complainant as vice-president, and of Aistrop as secretary, is so unusual on the hypothesis of its being an individual transaction and points so distinctly to an official origin, that it may very well be doubted whether any holder could claim to be innocently ignorant of its true character."⁷¹

III. As between the principal and the agent, the more modern cases hold that it is competent for the agent to show that what appears to be the agent's obligation is in fact the principal's.⁷² known to be acting in a representative capacity); Condon v. Pearce, 43 Md. 83, where as against a purchaser without notice an indorser who had not added any thing to his signature to show that he acted in a representative capacity was not permitted to show that fact); Markley v. Quay, 14 Phila. 164 (where the court say that of course such a defence could not be set up against a stranger who had taken the paper in ignorance of the facts).

§ 1163. Further of these rules.—Consideration of these rules will show that they are not in conflict with established principles. They are not for the purpose, nor have they the effect, to exonerate the agent from a liability assumed by him. They go deeper than that. They permit the agent to show that what appears upon its face to be his contract never was his contract, but is in reality the contract of another; and the rule is limited in its operation to those who either had actual knowledge of the true state of the case at the time of its inception, or who have taken the paper under such circumstances as would put a reasonably prudent man upon inquiry.

⁶⁸ Metcalf v. Williams, supra.

⁶⁹ Metcalf v. Williams, supra; Slawson v. Loring, 5 Allen (Mass.), 340, 81 Am. Dec. 750.

⁷⁰ Metcalf v. Williams, supra; Davis v. Henderson, 25 Miss. 549, 59 Am. Dec. 229; Mott v. Hicks, 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 513, 13 Am. Dec. 550.

⁷¹ Metcalf v. Williams, supra.

⁷² Castrique v. Buttigieg, 10 Moore, P. C. 94; Sharp v. Emmet, 5 Whart. (Penn.) 288, 34 Am. Dec. 554; Lewis v. Brehme, 33 Md. 412, 3 Am. Rep. 190; Miles v. O'Hara, 1 Serg. & R. (Penn.) 32; Whitlock v. Hicks, 75 Ill. 460.

Same as between receiver, assignee, etc., of principal, and the agent. Neptune v. Paxton, 15 Ind. App. 284.

So far as it has any effect, the provision of the Negotiable Instrument Act is in the line of these suggestions.

The difficulty with any rule which permits the liability upon the paper to be affected by parol evidence, is that under its operation the holder of the paper may sometimes fail to recover of any one. Cases may easily be imagined, for example, in which the holder first sues the agent in one jurisdiction or before one jury and fails to recover, and then sues the principal in another jurisdiction or before another jury and, through differing rules or differing views as to the effect of the evidence, again fails to recover.

The answer to this objection may be that such miscarriages of justice sometimes happen under the most carefully devised rules; and, chiefly, that if due care were taken to see that these instruments were properly executed such contingencies would be very rare.

II.

OF THE EXECUTION OF OTHER SIMPLE CONTRACTS.

§ 1164. In general.—Having considered the manner of executing instruments under seal and negotiable instruments (as to each of which, peculiar rules have been found to be applicable), it now remains to consider the proper manner of executing ordinary simple contracts. These may be divided into two classes, the written and the oral. Inasmuch as the former not only take on more definite form, but are subject to the operation of the rules governing the admissibility of parol evidence to affect a written contract, they will be considered first.

In this field will be found the same two problems as in the foregoing ones, namely, the question of interpretation and the question of the admissibility of parol evidence; or, in other words, (1) how will the written contract be interpreted, and (2) how far may its interpretation be affected by extrinsic evidence of intention.

1. Written Contracts.

§ 1165. I. The proper manner.—As has already been pointed out, the first question here to be considered is what shall be the form of execution in order that the contract shall be interpreted in accordance with the real intention of the parties. Much that has been said in preceding sections in reference to the proper method of executing contracts applies here.

All considerations of propriety and convenience suggest such a clear and unequivocal statement of the character and purpose of the act, that there can be no misunderstanding. Hence a proper and formal execution would require that the relations of the parties be set forth, and that the instrument be declared to be the contract of the principal executed by his agent. As to the method of signing, the forms found to be sufficient for the execution of negotiable instruments may appropriately be followed.

Notwithstanding this, however, it is a matter of every-day experience that in the haste and press of business, contracts are drawn not only in inartificial, but frequently in equivocal and ambiguous language, and by persons ignorant not only of the technical meaning of legal phrases, but often of the accepted construction of the vernacular. From the very necessities of the case, therefore, as well as from a desire to give effect to the intention of the parties, courts look with indulgent eyes upon such contracts. The strict rules of the common law which govern the execution of solemn instruments under seal, do not apply here; neither is there the same necessity that they should tell their own story in that direct and positive manner that has been seen to be required of negotiable paper.⁷³

§ 1166. Intention of the parties as expressed in the instrument the true test.—In determining whether a given form of execution is sufficient to bind the principal, the primary consideration is, What is the true intention of the parties as expressed in this contract? In settling this question it must be borne in mind that no particular form of words is required, and that the intention is to be gathered from the whole instrument and not from any isolated portion of it.⁷⁴ The situation of the parties and the circumstances of the case are to be taken into consideration. So, too, a valid usage or custom may be resorted to, in the proper cases, to aid in arriving at the intention, but not to contradict or vary the terms expressly employed.⁷⁵

If, upon a survey of the whole instrument, it can be collected that

⁷³ See Merchants' Bank v. Central Bank, 1 Ga. 418, 44 Am. Dec. 665; Andrews v. Estes, 11 Me. 267, 26 Am. Dec. 521; New England Insurance Co. v. De Wolf, 8 Pick. (Mass.) 56; Rice v. Gove, 22 Pick. (Mass.) 158, 33 Am. Dec. 724.

⁷⁴ Rogers v. March, 33 Me. 106; Whitney v. Wyman, 101 U. S. 392, 25 L. Ed. 1050; Pentz v. Stanton, 10 Wend. (N. Y.) 271, 25 Am. Dec. 558;

Magill v. Hinsdale, 6 Conn. 464, 16 Am. Dec. 70; Hovey v. Magill, 2 Conn. 682; Spencer v. Field, 10 Wend. (N. Y.) 87; New England Ins. Co. v. De Wolf, 8 Pick. (Mass.) 56; City of Detroit v. Jackson, 1 Doug. (Mich.) 106; Fowle v. Kerchner, 87 N. C. 49.

⁷⁵ Oelricks v. Ford, 23 How. (U. S.) 49, 16 L. Ed. 534.

the true object and intent of it are to bind the principal and not the agent, courts of justice will adopt that construction of it, however informally it may be expressed.⁷⁶

§ 1167. Principal alone bound by contract made in his name by an authorized agent.—It is ordinarily not only the duty, but also the interest of the agent to so execute the contract as to secure to the principal the benefits, and to impose upon him the obligations. This he may do by keeping within the scope of his authority, and executing the contract in the name of his principal. If he does so, the principal alone will be bound. The agent will not be bound upon the contract because the contract does not purport to bind him, and he will not be liable in any other form because he has done no more than he was legally authorized to perform.⁷⁷

§ 1168. Presumption that known agent does not intend to bind himself.—Here, as elsewhere, it is the presumption that a known agent, authorized to act, who discloses his principal and avowedly purports to act for him, does not intend to bind himself personally.⁷⁸ Nevertheless, as will be seen, there are many cases in which he may, wittingly or unwittingly, do so: clearly, where his agency is not disclosed, and even where it is disclosed, if the agent so frames the un-

⁷⁶ Merchants' Bank v. Central Bank, 1 Ga. 418, 44 Am. Dec. 665; Abbey v. Chase, 6 Cush. (Mass.) 56, and cases cited in note 74, above.

In Whitney v. Wyman, 101 U. S. 392, 25 L. Ed. 1050, Mr. Justice Swayne says: "Where the question of agency in making a contract arises, there is a broad line of distinction between instruments under seal and stipulations in writing not under seal, or by parol. In the former case the contract must be in the name of the principal, must be under seal, and must purport to be his deed and not the deed of the agent covenanting for him. Stanton v. Camp, 4 Barb. (N. Y.) 274.

"In the latter cases the question is always one of intent; and the court, being untrammelled by any other consideration, is bound to give it effect. As the meaning of the law-maker is the law, so the meaning of the contracting parties is the agreement. Words are merely the symbols they employ to manifest their purpose that it may be carried into execution. If the contract be unsealed and the meaning clear, it matters not how it is phrased, nor how it is signed, whether by the agent for the principal or with the name of the principal by the agent or otherwise.

"The intent developed is alone material, and when that is ascertained it is conclusive. Where the principal is disclosed and the agent is known to be acting as such, the latter cannot be made personally liable unless he agreed to be so."

⁷⁷ Davis v. Lee, 52 Wash. 330, 132 Am. St. R. 973.

⁷⁸ See Whitney v. Wyman, 101 U. S. 392, 25 L. Ed. 1050; Jones v. Gould, 123 N. Y. App. Div. 236; Hall v. Lauderdale, 46 N. Y. 70; Blount v. Tomlinson, 57 Fla. 35; Durham v. Stubbings, 111 Ill. App. 10; and many other cases cited in subsequent sections.

dertaking as to make himself, according to the established principles of interpretation, the contracting party to the obligation.

§ 1169. Agent bound who conceals fact of agency or name of principal.—If the agent would bind the principal he must, of course, disclose, not only the fact of the agency, but also the name of the principal, and make the contract in the principal's name. If, instead of doing so, he conceals both facts and makes the contract as though he were himself the principal, he will ordinarily be personally liable upon it.⁷⁹ So if, though disclosing the fact that he is an agent, he does not disclose who his principal is, but keeps the latter's identity concealed, the agent will ordinarily be personally liable⁸⁰ unless he has clearly excluded such a result.⁸¹ The principal, as will be more fully seen hereafter, may also be liable upon the contract when discovered, in both of the cases above referred to; but that fact does not relieve the agent if the other party prefers to hold him.

As will be seen hereafter,⁸² also, it is not enough to relieve the agent that the other party had the means of ascertaining the name of the principal.⁸³ And the principal must be known at the time of making the contract; his subsequent disclosure will not suffice to relieve the agent.⁸⁴

§ 1170. Known agent may bind himself by express words.—But although where an agent acts within the scope of his authority and

⁷⁹ See Book IV, Chap. III; Amans v. Campbell, 70 Minn. 493, 68 Am. St. R. 547; Bacon v. Rupert, 39 Minn. 512; Pugh v. Moore, 44 La. Ann. 209; Kneeland v. Coatsworth, 9 N. Y. Supp. 416; Bassett v. Perkins, 65 Misc. 103.

⁸⁰ Long v. McKissick, 50 S. Car. 218; Macdonald v. Bond, 195 Ill. 122; Magruder v. Belt, 12 App. D. C. 1151; Good v. Rumsey, 50 N. Y. App. Div. 280; Nichols v. Weil, 30 N. Y. Misc. 441.

A complaint which alleges that W. E. Harter, the defendant, conducted a business as the agent of his wife, in the name of "W. E. Harter, agent;" that in the conduct of such business he purchased from the plaintiff, and they delivered to him as such agent, certain goods; that at the time he purchased said goods he did not disclose the name of his principal, was held to state no cause of action against W. E. Harter, personally, since the complaint, not only alleged that he purchased the goods as agent, but as agent of his wife. "If in the complaint the plaintiff had stopped by alleging that W. E. Harter agent, had purchased the goods, that he did not, and never has disclosed as agent for whom he had purchased the goods, the defendant, W. E. Harter, could not have successfully demurred." Pope v. Harter, 66 S. Car. 54.

⁸¹ As in Oglesby v. Yglesias, El. Bl. & El. 930; Carr v. Jackson, 7 Exch. 382; Lyon v. Williams, 5 Gray (71 Mass.), 557.

⁸² See post, Book IV, Chap. III.

⁸³ Cobb v. Knapp, 71 N. Y. 349, 27 Am. Rep. 51; Nelson v. Andrews, 19 N. Y. Misc. 623; De Remer v. Brown, 165 N. Y. 410; Meyer v. Redmond, 141 N. Y. App. Div. 123.

⁸⁴ Cobb v. Knapp, supra; Nelson v. Andrews, supra.

in the name and behalf of his principal, he is not personally liable; still it is entirely competent for him to pledge his individual responsibility, and if by the terms of the contract he binds himself personally, and engages expressly in his own name to pay money or to perform other obligations, he will be personally responsible even though he was known to be an agent,⁸⁵ and did not really intend to bind himself, and though he describes himself as "agent," etc.⁸⁶ As in the case of negotiable paper, the mere recital of the fact of agency, and the mere addition to his signature of the title of his representative character, are prima facie to be construed as descriptive of the person only, and not as indicating an intention to charge a principal; and if, in such a case, the contract contains apt words to bind the agent personally, he will be held individually liable.

⁸⁵ Where an agent, although known to be acting in a representative capacity, makes the written contract in his own name, without adding thereto any indicia of representative capacity, or without indicating in any manner his agency, he will be bound personally; and parol evidence is not competent to vary the writing and discharge him of his liability. Sadler v. Young, 78 N. J. L. 594; Goodridge v. Wood, 133 Ill. App. 483; Meyer v. Redmond, 141 N. Y. App. Div. 123; Jones v. Gould, 197 N. Y. 580; Gordon Malting Co. v. Bartels Brewing Co., 206 N. Y. 528; Leterman v. Charlottesville Lumber Co., 110 Va. 769; McConnell v. Holderman, 24 Okla. 129; American Alkali Co. v. Bean, 125 Fed. 823.

Although a person recites in a contract that he makes it "for a bridge company to be organized and incorporated," but otherwise makes and signs it in his own name, he is personally liable. O'Rorke v. Geary, 207 Pa. 240. See also Kelner v. Baxter, L. R. 2 C. P. 174.

⁸⁶ Simonds v. Heard, 23 Pick. (Mass.) 120, 34 Am. Dec. 41; Andrews v. Estes, 11 Me. 267, 26 Am. Dec. 521; Burrell v. Jones, 3 Barn. & Ald. 47; Fiske v. Eldridge, 12 Gray (Mass.), 474; Morell v. Coddington, 4 Allen (Mass.), 403; Guernsey v.

Cook, 117 Mass. 548; Miller v. Early, 22 Ky. Law Rep. 825, 58 S. W. 789; Campbell v. Porter, 61 N. Y. Supp. 712; Laramie v. Tanner, 69 Minn. 156; Marx v. Co-Operative Ass'n, 17 Tex. Civ. App. 408; Dockarty v. Tillotson, 64 Neb. 432; Lewis v. Weidenfeld, 114 Mich. 581; Bell v. Teague, 85 Ala. 211; Mead v. Altgeld, 136 Ill. 298; Florida, etc., R. Co. v. Varnedoe, 81 Ga. 175; Candler v. De Give, 133 Ga. 486; Ziegler v. Fallon, 28 Mo. App. 295; Hick v. Tweedy, 63 Law T. 765. See also, Fowler v. McKay, 88 Neb. 387; Hard v. Kelley, 19 S. D. 608; Cox v. Borstadt, 49 Colo. 83; In re Miley, 187 Fed. 177 (citing many West Virginia cases).

Where an offer was made "to Messrs. Gill & Co. (for the National Umbrella Co.);" and there was a written acceptance signed,

"Gill & Company,
By Sidney S. Gill,
W. B. Gill,
T. Harvey Gill."

W. B. Gill being not a partner of Gill and Company, it was held that he could not be regarded as an agent for Gill and Company, nor could he be assumed to represent the Umbrella Company, and must, therefore, be held liable as a joint contractor. Gill v. General Electric Co., 64 C. C. A. 99, 129 Fed. 349.

Thus where the committee of a town entered into a contract stated to be made "between Horace Heard, Eli Sherman and Newell Heard, committee of the town of Wayland, on the one part, and William Simonds and John Chapin on the other part," and in and by which, after a specific description of the work to be done, the committee promised as follows: "Said committee are to pay said Simonds & Chapin the sum of three hundred and seventy-five dollars when said work is completed," etc., and signed it as individuals, it was held that the members of the committee had made themselves personally liable. Said the court, by Shaw, Chief Justice: "Two things are here observable, the first is that they do not profess to act in the name or behalf of the town, otherwise than as such an intention may be implied from describing themselves as a committee. But such description, although it may have some weight, is far from being conclusive; and in many of the cases a similar designation was used, which was held to be a mere descriptio personarum, and designed to show for whose account the contract was made, and to whose account the amount paid under such contract should be charged. The second and more decisive circumstance respecting this contract is, that here is an express undertaking on the part of the committee to pay, 'Said committee are to pay said Simonds & Chapin,' etc. Having described themselves as a committee, this undertaking is as strong and direct as if the names had been repeated, and Heard, Sherman and Heard had promised to pay. The court are therefore of the opinion that by the terms of this contract, the committee intended to bind themselves and did become personally responsible, and that the action is well brought against them." ⁸⁷

§ 1171. — So where a contract was made "between T. W. Matthews, Secretary of the Mutual Endowment Association of Baltimore, Md., and S. T. Jenkins, of Atlanta, Ga.," and all the agreements were in the form "The said Matthews agrees," etc., and the ⁸⁷ Simonds v. Heard, supra. In Cutler v. Ashland, 121 Mass. 588, where the specifications for the building of a road was signed W. M., W. A. "Road Commissioners for Ashland Mass.," and appended to the specifications was a writing which ran "We, the subscribers, the road commissioners aforesaid, agree to pay," and signed W. M., W. A. "Commissioners of Ashland" the court distinguished Simonds v. Heard on the ground that in that case the contract was signed in their individual names, and said that here it was just as if the words had been transposed to read, "For Ashland, Mass., Warren Morse, William Aldrich, Road Commissioners."

contract was signed "T. W. Matthews, S. T. Jenkins," it was held to be the personal contract of Matthews.⁸⁸

So, where an agreement to arbitrate recited that controversies existed between "the firm of C. A. McDonald and Co., general agents," and Edward L. Bond, and proceeded: "Now therefore we, the said firm of C. A. McDonald & Co. and Edward L. Bond do hereby mutually covenant and agree, to and with each other, to submit," etc. "and, we do mutually covenant and agree, to and with each other, that the award to be made * * * shall in all things and in every respect, by us, and each of us, * * * be well and faithfully kept, observed, and performed," and was signed, "C. A. McDonald & Co. [Seal]. Edward L. Bond [Seal]," it was held, that C. A. McDonald & Co. were liable upon the agreement, and not the insurance company of which they were general agents.⁸⁹

§ 1172. — Contrary intention manifest.—But where, notwithstanding the failure to use precise and appropriate language, it still can be gathered from the whole instrument that the agent acted in a representative character, and made the contract as the contract of his principal, the words used will be regarded as employed with that intention, and not merely as descriptive of the person.⁹⁰

Thus where a lease began "This agreement, made this 25th day of December, 1880, between Randolph Marshall, agent of Oliver Dougherty," etc., and was signed "Randolph V. Marshall, agent of O. R. Dougherty," the supreme court of Indiana, while recognizing the general rule that such expressions are ordinarily regarded as descriptive of the person, said: "While accepting the general rule to be that stated, the American authorities agree that if the contract itself shows that the words were not used as merely descriptive of the person they will not be so regarded, but will be assigned their real meaning. In the instrument before us it clearly appears that Marshall was the agent of the lessor, and acted as such, for we find this recited, 'That the said Marshall, agent as aforesaid, has rented, etc.' There are other provisions in the instrument clearly showing that Marshall executed the

⁸⁸ Matthews v. Jenkins, 80 Va. 463. See also, Grau v. McVicker, 8 Biss. (U. S. C. C.) 13 Fed. Cas. No. 5,708.

⁸⁹ Macdonald v. Bond, 195 Ill. 122.

⁹⁰ Rogers v. March, 33 Me. 106; Goodenough v. Thayer, 132 Mass. 152; Green v. Kopke, 18 C. B. 549 (9 J. Scott); Cook v. Gray, 133 Mass. 106; Lyon v. Williams, 5 Gray (Mass.), 557; McGee v. Larramore, 50 Mo. 425; Smith v. Alexander, 31 Mo. 193; Ogden v. Raymond, 22 Conn. 379, 58 Am. Dec. 429; Hall v. Huntoon, 17 Vt. 244, 44 Am. Dec. 332; Traynham v. Jackson, 15 Tex. 170, 65 Am. Dec. 152; Texas Land & Cattle Co. v. Carroll, 63 Tex. 48; Frambach v. Frank, 33 Colo. 529; Jones v. Gould, 123 N. Y. App. Div. 236.

lease as the agent of Dougherty, and we have no doubt that it should be treated as having been executed by him."⁹¹

And where an order for goods, beginning "our company being so far organized, by direction of the officers, we now order from you," etc., was signed "Charles Wyman, Edward P. Ferry, Carlton L. Storrs, Prudential Committee, Grand Haven Fruit Basket Co.," and was accepted by a letter addressed to the "Grand Haven Fruit Basket Company," the supreme court of the United States held, in an action brought to charge the members of the committee personally, that it was entirely clear that both parties understood and meant that the contract was to be, and in fact was, with the corporation, and not with the committee.⁹²

§ 1173. — So where an agreement recited that it was between W., "superintendent of the Keets Mining Company, and P.," and was signed, W., "Supt. Keets Mining Co." and by P., it was held to be the contract of the company.⁹³

So where a charter for the hiring of a boat, between W. L. M. "party of the first part, hereinafter called the owner," and C. S. L. "party of the second part, herein after called the hirer," all of whose covenants were made by "the hirer," signed C. S. L. "For the Sun Printing and Publishing Association," was accompanied by an agreement of suretyship made in the name of the Sun Printing and Publishing Company, also signed C. S. L. "For Sun Printing and Publishing Association," and had appended a certificate of acknowledgment ⁹¹ Avery v. Dougherty (1885), 102 Ind. 443, 52 Am. Rep. 680.

Where a lease recited that it was made "between J. B. party of the first part and the Rochester Boot and Shoe Company, by N. N. president, party of the second part, and was signed, N. N., "Pres't [seal]," it was held that the agent was not personally liable. Neufeld v. Beidler, 37 Ill. App. 34.

So, in Wheeler v. Walden, 17 Neb. 122, where a lease recited that it was "between M. A. W. of the first part and L. E. W. of the second part" and was signed, D. A. W. "agent," it was held to be the agreement of the principal.

In Baker v. Chambliss, 4 Greene (Iowa), 428, where a lease ran, "We, the undersigned directors of school district, etc., promise to pay," and was signed, G. W. B., V. W. N., S. L., it was held that, the school district alone was bound.

⁹² Whitney v. Wyman, 101 U. S. 392, 25 L. Ed. 1050.

See also, State v. Commissioners of Cass County, 60 Neb. 566, where a loan was made to an unincorporated religious society on a mortgage of lands belonging to the society, executed by the trustees holding the legal title to the lands, and securing bonds executed by the trustees, in their own names, adding "Trustees M. E. Church South," the trustees were held not personally liable on the bonds. Elwell v. Tatum, 6 Tex. Civ. App. 397.

⁹³ Post v. Pearson, 108 U. S. 418, 27 L. Ed. 774.

in which the notary certified that said C. S. L., known to him to be the managing editor of the Sun Printing and Publishing Company, acknowledged that he executed the agreement as the act and deed of said company under its authority, it was held, by the supreme court of the United States, that this also was the agreement of the company.⁹⁴

§ 1174. — So again, where there was a proposal in writing, directed "to the Building Committee of the Baptist Church," to build a church building for a certain sum, and a written acceptance reading "Bid accepted * * * to complete the church" etc., signed, "I. A. W., R. B.," who were in fact the building committee, though nothing in the acceptance or the signatures indicated it, and all the payments thereafter made were made through the pastor of the church, it was held that this did not bind the signers personally.⁹⁵

And so where an agent received goods for carriage under a receipt which stated that "the several railroads between Boston and Zanesville agree to transport over their lines," and which he signed in his own name "for the corporations," it was held that the agent was not personally liable, although the names of the corporations were not stated.⁹⁶

§ 1175. Personal liability excluded by terms of contract.—It is entirely possible that, though the form of the contract is such as would ordinarily bind the agent personally, there are terms in it which expressly exclude that liability, and such terms will be given effect. Even though the contract as so modified should not be sufficient to bind the principal, it will not, on that account only, bind the agent. As has often been pointed out, it is not indispensable that either one should be bound.⁹⁷

Thus where a charter party, which was executed in such a form as ordinarily to bind the agent, contained a clause that as the charter was concluded by the agent "for another party, the liability of the former [the agent] in every respect and as to all matters and things" should cease as soon as the cargo was shipped, it was held that the agent was not liable for demurrage at the port of discharge.⁹⁸

⁹⁴ Sun Printing, etc., Ass'n v. Moore, 183 U. S. 642, 46 L. Ed. 366.

⁹⁵ Johnson v. Welch, 42 W. Va. 18.

⁹⁶ Lyon v. Williams, 5 Gray (71 Mass.), 557. (But compare O'Rourke v. Geary, 207 Pa. 240; Groom v. Parkinson, 10 Vict. L. R. 14; Sprent v. Bowes, 1 Aust. J. R. 111).

See also numerous dicta that a broker is not personally liable (in the absence of a custom) where he stipulates "for his principal" though he does not name him. Dale v. Humfrey, El. B. & El. 1004; Fleet v. Murton, L. R. 7 Q. B. 126; Pike v. Orgley, 18 Q. B. Div. 708; Southwell v. Bowditch, 1 Com. Pl. Div. 374.

⁹⁷ See Walker v. Bank, 9 N. Y. 582.

⁹⁸ Oglesby v. Yglesias, El. B. & El. 930; Carr v. Jackson, 7 Exch. 382.

§ 1176. II. The admissibility of parol evidence to show intent.—

The remaining question here, as in the preceding subdivisions, is, how far the rules governing the use of parol evidence to affect a written contract, will permit extrinsic evidence to alter the conclusions which the rules of interpretation would otherwise require. The generally accepted results upon this question may be shortly stated. Where an agent has entered into a contract which in terms charges himself, parol evidence is not admissible to discharge him by showing that he intended to charge the principal,⁹⁹ (although in a doubtful case it is admissible to show that it was the intention to charge himself personally),¹ but where the contract bears upon its face evidence that the person signing was in fact an agent,² and where the contract is so framed as to render it uncertain whether the agent or the principal was intended to be bound,³ parol evidence may be received to show that it was the intention to bind the principal and not the agent.⁴

But although parol evidence may not in other cases be admissible to release the agent, it may be made use of to charge the principal. Thus the principal, as will be seen hereafter, may be charged as such by parol evidence upon a simple contract made by his agent, even though the contract gives no indication on its face of an intention to charge any other person than the signer. And this doctrine applies as well to those contracts which are required to be in writing as to

⁹⁹ Bryan v. Brazil, 52 Iowa, 350; Western Publishing House v. Murdick, 4 S. Dak. 207, 21 L. R. A. 671.

¹ Black River Lumber Co. v. Warner, 93 Mo. 374; Candler v. De Give, 133 Ga. 486.

² Deering v. Thom, 29 Minn. 120; Pratt v. Beaupre, 13 Minn. 187; Haile v. Peirce, 32 Md. 327, 3 Am. Rep. 139. In Deering v. Thom, the agent gave the purchaser of a machine an instrument as follows: "If the Marsh harvester don't work to his satisfaction, he, W. Thom, can return the machine to me, and I will return his note for the same. A. M. Schnell, agent." Gilfillan, C. J., said: "The memorandum signed by Schnell is standing alone and without anything to explain it prima facie his contract, and not that of his principal, and the word 'agent' affixed to his signature is prima facie, descriptio personæ and not as determining the character in which he contracted. But it was open to proof that it was the intention to bind his principal and not himself. Bingham v. Stewart, 13 Minn. 106, s. c. 14 Minn. 214; Pratt v. Beaupre, 13 Minn. 187."

³ Mechanics' Bank v. Bank of Columbia, 5 Wheat. (U. S.) 326, 5 L. Ed. 100; Deering v. Thom, supra.

⁴ Southern Pac. Co. v. Von Schmidt Dredge Co., 118 Cal. 368; Eddy v. American Amusement Co., 9 Cal. App. 624; Southern Badge Co. v. Smith (Tex. Civ. App.), 141 S. W. 185 (compare Marx v. Luling Co-op. Ass'n, 17 Tex. Civ. App. 408, where the instrument was held not ambiguous and therefore not open to parol evidence); Ziegler v. Fallon, 28 Mo. App. 295.

those to whose validity a writing is not essential.⁵ This rule is not obnoxious to the principle which forbids the contradiction of written instruments by parol testimony, for the effect is not to show that the person appearing to be bound is not bound, but to show that some other person is bound also.⁶

Where a contract was made in the name of the principal and was signed in the name of the principal, by the agent, so that upon its face it appeared to be clearly and solely the contract of the principal, it was held that parol evidence was not admissible to show that it was really intended to be the contract of the agent. There was no ambiguity, and no lack of authority was alleged, the name of the principal was not a fictitious one, nor was the form of signature one which would be adopted where one person is doing business in the name of another.⁷

§ 1177. Right acquired under agent's contract.—The same general principles will apply where the question is, not who is liable, but who has acquired rights under the agent's contract. The proper method where an agent is commissioned to acquire rights under a contract for his principal is, of course, to take the instrument by which they are acquired, in the name of the principal. In the cases of simple contract, now being considered, much liberality would be exercised in so interpreting the language as to preserve the principal's rights.⁸

⁵ Byington v. Simpson, 134 Mass. 169, 45 Am. Rep. 314; Briggs v. Partidge, 64 N. Y. 357, 21 Am. Rep. 617; Huntington v. Knox, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 371; Eastern Railroad v. Benedict, 5 Gray (Mass.), 561, 66 Am. Dec. 384; Lerner v. Johns, 9 Allen (Mass.), 419; Hunter v. Giddings, 97 Mass. 41, 93 Am. Dec. 44; Exchange Bank v. Rice, 107 Mass. 37, 9 Am. Rep. 1; National Ins. Co. v. Allen, 116 Mass. 398; Texas Land & Cattle Co. v. Carroll, 63 Tex. 48; Higgins v. Senior, 8 M. & W. 834.

⁶ See Higgins v. Senior, supra.

⁷ Heffron v. Pollard, 73 Tex. 96, 15 Am. St. Rep. 764. The contract in this case stated, that it was "made and entered into by, and between John W. Fry, on the one part," and other persons on the other part. It was signed, "John W. Fry, per Heffron." The action was to hold Heffron personally liable.

⁸ "Where a chattel mortgage is given to an agent, the principal, though undisclosed may assert his rights as if named in the mortgage; the relation of principal being shown by parol." State ex rel. Carpenter v. O'Neill, 74 Mo. App. 134.

A deed, which recited that in consideration of a sum "paid by R. W. agent" for plaintiff, the other party sold and conveyed a stock of goods, but which did not expressly state to whom the conveyance was so made, was held to vest the title in the principal and not in the agent. And this is true even though the bill of sale was made in pursuance of a contract made by the same agent who described himself as "agent for" the plaintiff, but signed and sealed the contract in his own name. Hayes Woolen Co. v. McKinnon, 114 N. Car. 661.

In Kelly v. Thuey, 143 Mo. 422, an

And even though the contract is made in the agent's name, so that the agent might sue upon it, the principal's right, as will be more fully seen hereafter, is usually paramount, and he may ordinarily intervene and bring the action in his own name.⁹

§ 1178. Contracts involving the Statute of Frauds.—The fact that the contract was one which the Statute of Frauds requires to be in writing, makes no difference. Such a contract may be signed for the principal by a person thereunto lawfully authorized, and though the agent sign in his own name alone, the principal may still charge or be charged by parol evidence.¹⁰ The rule is otherwise, however, where the agent has entered into a contract in his own name and under seal.¹¹

2. Oral Contracts.

§ 1179. How to be executed.—Although the agent undertakes to make a mere unwritten contract, there is still the same necessity, if he would execute it properly so as to bind his principal and not to charge himself, that he shall fully disclose his agency, and bargain in the name and on the account of his principal.

This case, however, is very much more free from difficulties than the preceding ones. Here are no formal and technical rules of interpretation to be considered, and no parol evidence rule to hamper the determination of the real intention of the parties.

§ 1180. Principal presumptively bound where agency disclosed.—Where an agent, who has fully disclosed his agency, or whose relation to the subject matter is otherwise known, undertakes to make a contract, or do some other act with reference to the principal's business undisclosed principal was allowed specific performance of a contract made for him by his agent, overruling Kelly v. Thuey, 102 Mo. 522.

⁹ See post. § —.

¹⁰ Neaves v. North State Mining Co., 90 N. C. 412, 47 Am. Rep. 529. In this case it was held that a draft for the purchase money of land, drawn by an agent without disclosing his principal's name, is a sufficient memorandum to charge the principal under the Statute of Frauds.

It is not necessary, to satisfy the Statute of Frauds, that a contract for the sale of land shall name or describe the vendor so long as it is signed for him by his agent. White v. Dahlquist, 179 Mass. 427. To same effect see, Gowen v. Klous, 101 Mass. 449; Tobin v. Larkin, 183 Mass. 389. Same in respect to chattels: Lerned v. Johns, 9 Allen (Mass.), 419; Sanborn v. Flagler, 9 Allen, 474; Wiener v. Whipple, 53 Wis. 298, 40 Am. Rep. 775.

See Karns v. Olney, 80 Cal. 90, 13 Am. St. R. 101.

¹¹ Briggs v. Partridge, 64 N. Y. 357, 21 Am. Rep. 617; Providence v. Miller, 11 R. I. 272, 23 Am. Rep. 453.

See also, Bourne v. Campbell, 21 R. I. 490.

and within the scope of the agent's authority, it is constantly to be presumed that he is doing so on his principal's account; that the benefits to enure from the contract are to belong to the principal, and that the obligations which it imposes are to be assumed by the principal and not by the agent. An intention, on the agent's part, to obtain rights or incur obligations is not to be presumed, and can only be established by clear evidence to that effect.¹² Where the contract or act is one which can only be lawfully performed on the principal's account, the presumption that the agent intends to act for the principal is obviously stronger.¹³

The mere fact that the principal cannot be held upon the contract does not, as will be seen, necessarily make the agent liable upon the contract;¹⁴ he will often be liable upon a warranty of authority though he may exclude even this by the form of dealing.

¹² Meeker v. Claghorn, 44 N. Y. 349; Hall v. Lauderdale, 46 N. Y. 70; Covell v. Hart, 14 Hun (N. Y.), 152; Thompson v. Irwin, 76 Mo. App. 418; Anderson v. Timberlake, 114 Ala. 377; Owen v. Gooch, 2 Esp. 567; Colloty v. Schuman, 73 N. J. L. 92.

In Owen v. Gooch, supra, it was said by Lord Kenyon: "We must keep distinct the cases of orders given by the parties themselves, and by others as their agents. If the mere fact of ordering goods was to make the party who ordered them liable, no man could give an order for a friend in the country, who might request him to do it, without risk to himself. If a party orders goods from a tradesman, though in fact they are for another, if the tradesman was not informed at the time that they were for the use of another, he who ordered them is certainly liable, for the tradesman must be presumed to have looked to his credit only. So if they were ordered for another person, and the tradesman refuses to deliver to such person's credit, but to his credit only who orders them, there is then no pretext for charging such third person; or if the goods are ordered to be delivered on account of another, and after delivery the person who gave the order refuses to inform the tradesman who the person is, in order that he may sue him, under such circumstances he is himself liable. But wherever an order is given by one person for another, and he informs the tradesman who that person is for whose use the goods are ordered, he thereby declares himself to be merely an agent, and there is no foundation for holding him to be liable."

¹³ Thus where the action is to charge the cashier of a bank on a contract which if made, could only be made by him, as an officer, and on account of the bank, namely, to apply the proceeds of certain lands upon a note held by the bank, the presumption is that it was made in his official capacity and bound the bank, and not the cashier personally. Pease v. Francis, 25 R. I. 226.

¹⁴ See Michigan College of Medicine v. Charlesworth, 54 Mich. 522. Here a tramp had been run over in a railway yard. Some one called a physician who telephoned to the superintendent and asked if he should go. The latter said, yes. Nothing was said about pay, and the superintendent had no authority to employ a physician for this purpose at the company's expense. Held, that the superintendent was not personally liable upon a contract of employment.

§ 1181. Agent may bind himself by special agreement.—It is nevertheless possible, as has often been pointed out, for a known agent to bind himself personally. The agent may proffer, or the other party may demand, and receive the agent's responsibility instead of or even in addition to that of a known principal; and where this is the case the agent will be personally bound.¹⁵

Here, also, as in the preceding cases, it is possible for the agent to bind himself without having had any intention so to do, or even though he had a clearly defined intention not to do so. If he has given the ordinary external evidences of assent to his personal responsibility, he may be bound, whatever his real intention.

§ 1182. — How question determined.—Whether the agent has thus bound himself in these cases is usually a question of fact to be determined in view of all the circumstances of the case. The intention of the parties as evidenced by their words and conduct is the thing to be discovered, and technical rules of construction have but little place. To whom did the promisee give credit, and to whom did the promisor reasonably understand the credit to be given, are usually the crucial questions in the case.¹⁶

§ 1183. Or by failing to disclose his principal.—As has been elsewhere pointed out, it is indispensable to the agent's immunity that his principal shall have been disclosed. Hence, if the agent conceals the fact of his agency and presents himself as the ostensible principal, the

¹⁵ Meeker v. Claghorn, 44 N. Y. 349; Hall v. Lauderdale, 46 N. Y. 70; Dahlstrom v. Gemunder, 198 N. Y. 449, 19 Ann. Cas. 771; Ross v. McAnaw, 72 Mo. App. 99; Mickleberry v. O'Neal, 98 Ga. 42; Dockarty v. Tillotson, 64 Neb. 432; Watle v. Thayer, 56 Ill. App. 282; McIntosh-Huntington Co. v. Rice, 13 Colo. App. 393; Long v. McKissick, 50 S. C. 218; Bell v. Teague, 85 Ala. 211; Mead v. Altgeld, 136 Ill. 298; Miller v. Early, 22 Ky. Law Rep. 825, 58 S. W. 789; Johnson v. Welch, 42 W. Va. 18.

¹⁶ See Hall v. Lauderdale, 46 N. Y. 70; Worthington v. Cowles, 112 Mass. 30; Whitney v. Wyman, 101 U. S. 392, 25 L. Ed. 1050; Hovey v. Pitcher, 13 Mo. 191; Fleming v. Hill,

62 Ga. 751; Phinizy v. Bush, 129 Ga. 479.

In Paterson v. Gandasequi, 15 East, 62, where the question was whether the agent or the principal (both of whom had taken part in the negotiations) was bound, the court took the question from the jury. Held, error. In Addison v. Gandasequi, 4 Taunt. 574, a case growing out of the same transaction, the case was left to the jury who found that the credit had been extended to the agent. Held, that the evidence justified the verdict. In Williamson v. Barton, 7 H. & N. 899, the four judges of the Exchequer were equally divided on the question of fact whether credit was given to the agent or to his principal.

agent must ordinarily be held personally responsible.¹⁷ So, though the agent discloses the fact of the agency, if he fails or refuses to disclose who his principal is, he must ordinarily be held personally liable unless such liability be expressly excluded.¹⁸ It is of course true, as will be seen hereafter, that the undisclosed principal when discovered may also be held liable but this is an alternative liability and does not of itself relieve the agent.¹⁹

¹⁷ Amans v. Campbell, 70 Minn. 493, 68 Am. St. R. 547; Bacon v. Rupert, 39 Minn. 512; Cobb v. Knapp, 71 N. Y. 348, 27 Am. Rep. 51.

218; Good v. Rumsey, 50 N. Y. App. Div. 280.

¹⁹ The whole question of the liability of the agent to third persons will be found more fully discussed, post, Book IV, Chapter III.

¹⁸ Long v. McKissick, 50 S. Car.

BOOK IV.

OF THE RIGHTS, DUTIES AND LIABILITIES ARISING OUT OF THE RELATION

CHAPTER I

IN GENERAL

§ 1184. Purpose of Book IV.
1185. What parties interested.
1186. How subject divided.

1187. In general—Duty the measure of liability.

§ 1184. Purpose of Book IV.—Having heretofore considered how the relation of principal and agent may be created; by what rules the nature and extent of the authority conferred shall be determined; and in what manner the authority so conferred and construed shall be executed, it remains to consider in this book, what are the rights, duties and liabilities of all of the parties concerned, growing out of, or based upon, the actual or attempted execution of the agency.

§ 1185. What parties interested.—It will be obvious that the persons who are interested in this inquiry are numerous, involving all of the possible parties to the transaction, and that their several rights, duties and liabilities inter sese will not always be identical or reciprocal, or determined by the same standards. Thus, as has already been seen, the circumstances may be such that a given act of the agent must, in questions arising between the principal and third persons, be deemed to be fully authorized; while the same act, in questions arising between the principal and the agent, may be deemed to be wholly unauthorized. So, as has been seen, the acts of one, who was before a mere stranger to an assumed principal, may become, by the latter's words or conduct, binding upon him as an actual principal; while the acts of an agent fully authorized, may from defective or excessive execution fail to bind the principal at all, and be binding only upon the agent himself in some cases, and in others, upon no one.

When the agent has fully and properly executed his authority in the name and for the benefit of his ostensible principal, his mission is performed and his rights and liabilities are determined. Henceforth his principal is entitled to the benefits and is subject to the liabilities arising from the transaction.

Where, however, he has executed his authority in his own name, or so ambiguously as to render it uncertain upon the face of the transaction in what character and capacity he acted, it will be found in many cases that dual rights and liabilities have been created, and that one or other of the parties is entitled to elect upon whom to fasten the liability.

§ 1186. How subject divided.—Such being the general nature of the subject, it will be found convenient to treat it under the following heads:

1. The duties and liabilities of the agent to his principal.
2. The duties and liabilities of the agent to third persons.
3. The duties and liabilities of the principal to the agent.
4. The duties and liabilities of the principals to third persons.
5. The duties and liabilities of third persons to the agent.
6. The duties and liabilities of third persons to the principal.

No separate consideration of the rights of the parties is intended, because, as will be seen, the duties and liabilities of one party are generally reciprocally the rights of the other.

CHAPTER II

OF THE DUTIES AND LIABILITIES OF THE AGENT TO HIS PRINCIPAL

I. TO BE LOYAL TO HIS TRUST.

1188. Loyalty to his trust, the first duty of the agent.
- 1189-1190. May not put himself in relations antagonistic to his principal.
1191. May not deal in business of his agency for his own benefit.
1192. Agent authorized to purchase for his principal may not purchase for himself.— Agent charged as trustee.
1193. — Same principle applies to leases.
1194. — What evidence of trust, sufficient.
- 1195, 1196. — When rule does not apply.
1197. Agent authorized to sell can not sell for himself.
1198. Agent authorized to sell, exchange, or lease may not become the purchaser or lessee.
1199. — Injury to principal not test—Sale at fixed price.
1200. — Public sale equally voidable.
1201. — Effect of fraud or concealment.
1202. To what agents this rule applies.
1203. Further of this rule—Indirect attempts.
1204. Agent authorized to insure may not issue policies to himself.
1205. Agent authorized to purchase or hire may not purchase or hire of himself.
1206. Double agency—Agent may not represent other party also without consent of principal.
1207. Agent must fully inform the principal.
1208. Agent liable for misrepresentations.
1209. Agent may not take advantage of confidential information acquired in the business to make profit at principal's expense.
1210. — After termination of agency.
1211. — Information respecting trade secrets, names of customers, etc.
1212. — Ordinary experience, learned in the business.
1213. — Information leading to outside profit.
1214. — Information leading to patents or inventions.
1215. Agent employed to settle claim, may not buy and enforce it against his principal.
- 1216, 1217. Agent may not acquire rights against his principal based on his own neglect or default.
- 1218, 1219. Agent may not acquire adverse rights in principal's property confided to his care.
1220. These rules can not be defeated by usage.
1221. Agent may purchase, sell, etc., with principal's consent.
1222. Principal may ratify act.
1223. Gratuitous agents — Volunteers.
- 1224, 1225. Profits made in the course of the agency belong to the principal.

- 1226. — Illustrations.
- 1227. — Further illustrations—
Rebates, Commissions, Rewards, Over-charges.
- 1228. — Profits must be fruits of the agency.
- 1229. Whether principal entitled to agent's earnings.
- 1230. — Work out of hours.
- 1231. — Gratuities.
- 1232. Representing other principals—Exclusive service.
- 1233, 1234. Remedies of the principal.
- 1235. Agency must exist.
- 1236. — Other limitations.
- 1237. — Proof of the agency.
- 1238. Against whom trust enforced.
- 1239. Principal must not have consented to, waived or condoned the act.

II. NOT TO EXCEED HIS AUTHORITY.

- 1240. Duty of agent not to exceed his authority.
- 1241. Duty of principal to make clear the extent of authority.
- 1242. Duty of agent to know extent of authority.
- 1243. Liability of agent for exceeding his authority.

III. TO OBEY INSTRUCTIONS.

- 1244. Agent's duty to obey instructions.
- 1245, 1246. Results of disobedience—Agent liable for losses caused by it.
- 1247-1252. — Illustrations.
- 1253. Form of action—When agent liable in trover.
- 1254. — Mere breach of instructions.
- 1255, 1256. — Conversion.
- 1257. — The rule stated—Intent immaterial.
- 1258. How when agency is gratuitous.
- 1259. Exceptions to rule requiring obedience.

1260. — Agent not bound to perform illegal or immoral act.

1261. — Agent not bound to impair own security.

1262, 1263. — Departure from instructions may be justified by sudden emergency.

1264. — Limitations.

1265. Where the authority has been substantially pursued, agent not liable for immaterial departure.

1266, 1267. — Where instructions are ambiguous, and agent acts in good faith.

1268. How affected by custom.

1269. — When presumption as to custom conclusive.

1270. No presumption of disobedience.

1271. Measure of damages.

1272. Ratification.

1273. Liability for subagents.

IV. NOT TO BE NEGLIGENT.

- 1274. In general.
- 1275. Agent bound to exercise ordinary and reasonable care.
- 1276. Agent bound to exercise usual precautions.
- 1277. — But not liable for mere accident or mistake.
- 1278. — Not bound to exercise highest care.
- 1279. — Good faith—Reasonable diligence.
- 1280. When agent warrants possession of skill.
- 1281. How when agency is gratuitous.
- 1282. — When employed in a capacity which implies skill.
- 1283. — Bound to exercise the skill he possesses.
- 1284. Agent not liable for unforeseeable dangers.
- 1285. But liability increased if special risks disclosed.
- 1286. Agent presumed to have done his duty.
- 1287. Agent not liable if principal also negligent.

1288. When agent liable for neglect of subagent.
 1289. When agent liable for neglect of co-agent.
 1290. Effect of ratification upon the agent's liability.
 1291. The measure of damages.
 1292. — Judgments, costs, counsel fees.
 1293. The principal's remedies.
 1294. Illustrations of agent's liability.
- 1. Neglect of agents in making loans and investments.*
1295. Degree of care required.
 1296. Liability for resulting loss.
- 2. Neglect of agent to effect insurance.*
1297. When duty to insure arises.
 1298. What the duty requires.
- 3. Neglect of agent in making collections.*
1299. Liable for loss from negligence.
 1300. Forms of negligence.
 1301. Negligence as to medium of payment.
 1302. — Illustrations.
 1303-1306. Negligence in proceedings.
 1307. Neglect to give principal notice of material facts.
 1308. Neglect in granting or permitting delays, extensions, or forbearances.
 1309. Neglect in keeping the money.
 1310. Neglect in making remittances.
 1311. Liability for neglect of correspondents and subagents.
 1312. Liability of attorneys.
 1313. — For the neglect of the notary.
 1314. — For the neglect of a correspondent bank.
 1315. Liability of attorneys.
 1316-1318. Liability of mercantile or collection agencies.
 1319. Liability of express companies.
1320. The measure of damages for agent's negligence.
 1321. Principal's right of action against subagent.
 1322. Del credere agents—How liable of principal.
- 4. Neglect of agent in making sales.*
1323. Nature of duty.
 1324. When agent liable for selling to irresponsible parties.
 1325. Conditions of agent's liability.
- 5. Neglect of agent in making purchases.*
1326. Nature of duty.
- V. TO ACCOUNT FOR MONEY AND PROPERTY.
1327. In general.
 1328. Account only to principal—Joint principals.
 1329. Accounting by joint agents.
 1330. Subagents—Account to whom.
 1331. Agent may not dispute his principal's title.
 1332. May not allege illegality of transaction to defeat principal's claim.
 1333. When may maintain interpleader.
 1334. Agent's duty to keep correct accounts.
 1335. Duty to keep principal's property and funds separate from his own—Liability for commingling.
 1336-1338. At what time agent should account.
 1339. Necessity for demand before action.
 1340. Exceptions.
 1341. When agent liable for interest.
 1342. Form of action.
 1343. — When equitable.
 1344. The burden of proof.
 1345. Proof of amount due—Special method agreed upon—Conclusiveness of agent's accounts.
 1346-1348. When liability barred by statute of limitations.

- | | |
|---|---|
| 1349. Of the agent's right of set-off. | VI. TO GIVE NOTICE TO PRINCIPAL OF |
| 1350. How far principal may follow trust funds. | MATERIAL FACTS. |
| 1351. Conclusiveness of account—Failure to object—Account stated. | 1353. Duty of agent to give principal notice of facts material to agency. |
| 1352. — Reopening account—Impeachment for fraud or mistake. | |

§ 1187. In general—Duty the measure of liability.—It is evident that the extent of the liability of the agent to his principal is to be determined by ascertaining the nature and scope of the duty owed to him. Liability follows from the non-performance of a legal duty; and if, in what shall be hereafter said, that fact may not in each instance be mentioned, it must be constantly understood.

The duties which the agent owes his principal are numerous, and many of them are peculiar. It is scarcely within the limits of an ordinary treatise to enter minutely into all the questions that may arise, but it is possible to so group them under the respective principles that govern them as to furnish a rule, not only for the same states of fact, but also for similar ones.

I.

TO BE LOYAL TO HIS TRUST.

§ 1188. Loyalty to his trust, the first duty of the agent.—Loyalty to his trust is the first duty which the agent owes to his principal. Without it, the perfect relation cannot exist. Reliance upon the agent's integrity, fidelity and capacity is the moving consideration in the creation of all agencies; in some it is so much the inspiring spirit, that the law looks with jealous eyes upon the manner of their execution, and condemns, not only as invalid as to the principal, but as repugnant to the public policy, everything which tends to destroy that reliance.¹

§ 1189. May not put himself in relations antagonistic to his principal.—It follows as a necessary conclusion from the principle last stated, that the agent must not put himself into such relations that his own interests or the interests of others whom he also represents become antagonistic to those of his principal. Indeed, this rule is but a re-statement of the previous one, and is based upon the same fundamental principles. The agent will not be permitted to serve two masters, without the intelligent consent of both.² As is said by a learned judge: "So careful is the law in guarding against the abuse of fiduciary relations, that it will not permit an agent to act for himself and his principal in the same transaction, as to buy of himself, as agent, the property of his principal, or the like. All such transactions are void, as it respects the principal, unless ratified by him with a full knowledge of all the circumstances. To repudiate them, he need not show himself damnified. Whether he has been or not is immaterial. Actual injury is not the principle the law proceeds on in holding such transactions void. Fidelity in the agent is what is aimed at, and as a means of securing it, the law will not permit the agent to place himself in a situation in which he may be tempted by his own private interest to disregard that of his principal."³ "This doctrine," to speak again in the beautiful language of another, "has its foundation, not so much in the commission of actual fraud, as in that profound knowledge of the human heart which dictated that hallowed petition 'Lead us not into temptation but deliver us from evil,' and that caused the announcement of the infallible truth that 'a man cannot serve two masters.'"⁴

¹ Keighler v. Savage Mfg. Co., 12 Md. 383, 71 Am. Dec. 600.

§ 1190. — "The general interests of justice and the safety of those who are compelled to repose confidence in others," it is further said, in another, "alike demand that the courts shall always inflexibly maintain that great and salutary rule which declares that an agent employed to sell cannot make himself the purchaser, nor, if employed to purchase, can he be himself the seller. The moment he ceases to be the representative of his employer and places himself in a position towards his principal where his interests may come in conflict with those of his principal, no matter how fair his conduct may be in the particular transaction, that moment he ceases to be that which his service requires and his duty to his principal demands. He is no longer an agent but an umpire; he ceases to be the champion of one of the contestants in the game of bargain, and sets himself up as judge to decide, between his principal and himself, what is just and fair. The reason of the rule is apparent; owing to the selfishness and greed of our nature, there must, in the great mass of the transactions of mankind, be a strong and almost ineradicable antagonism between the interests of the seller and the buyer, and universal experience has shown

² Bentley v. Craven, 18 Beav. 76; European, etc., Ry. Co. v. Poor, 59 Me. 277, re-reported in note to 59 Am. Rep. 468.

³ Manning, J., in People v. Township Board, 11 Mich. 222.

Quoted with approval in Jansen v. Williams, 36 Neb. 869, 20 L. R. A. 207.

⁴ Caruthers, J., in Tisdale v. Tisdale, 2 Sneed (Tenn.), 596, 64 Am. Dec. 775.

that the average man will not, where his interests are brought in conflict with those of his employer, look upon his employer's interests as more important and entitled to more protection than his own."⁵

§ 1191. May not deal in business of his agency for his own benefit.—Akin to these rules and founded upon the same principles, is the other rule that the agent may not deal in the business of his agency for his own benefit. His duty to his principal requires that his efforts shall be in the behalf and for the benefit of his principal. He cannot perform this duty if he is constantly attempting to use his agency for his own purposes.⁶

Following these principles into details, we have:—

§ 1192. Agent authorized to purchase for his principal may not purchase for himself—Agent charged as trustee.—An agent instructed to purchase property for his principal and relied upon to buy it in the principal's name and for his direct account, will not be permitted, without his principal's knowledge and consent, to become the purchaser of the same property for himself. If the property be land and is purchased with the principal's money, the agent will clearly be a trustee;⁷ and even though he purchased with his own money, he will, nevertheless, be considered as holding the property in trust for his principal, and the latter upon repaying or tendering him the amount of the purchase price and his reasonable compensation,⁸ may by proper proceeding in equity compel a conveyance to himself,⁹ or where eject-

⁵ Porter v. Woodruff, 36 N. J. Eq. 174.

⁶ Switzer v. Skiles, 3 Gilman (Ill.), 529, 44 Am. Dec. 723; Bunker v. Miles, 30 Me. 431, 50 Am. Dec. 632; Miller v. Davidson, 3 Gilman (Ill.), 518, 44 Am. Dec. 715.

⁷ Kraemer v. Deustermann, 37 Minn. 469; Reitz v. Reitz, 80 N. Y. 538; Balloch v. Hooper, 6 Mack. (D. C.) 421; Gashe v. Young, 51 Ohio St. 376; and cases cited in the following note.

⁸ He will not be entitled to compensation where he acts in bad faith. Harrison v. Craven, 188 Mo. 590; Trice v. Comstock, 57 C. C. A. 646, 121 Fed. 620.

⁹ Rhea v. Puryear, 26 Ark. 344; McMurry v. Mobley, 39 Ark. 309; Sandfoss v. Jones, 35 Cal. 481; Church v. Sterling, 16 Conn. 383; Chastain v. Smith, 30 Ga. 96; Hitchcock v. Wat- son, 18 Ill. 289; Dennis v. McCagg, 32 Ill. 444; Bryant v. Hendricks, 5 Iowa, 256; Judd v. Mosely, 30 Iowa, 424; Krutz v. Fisher, 8 Kan. 90; Fisher v. Krutz, 9 Kan. 501; Rose v. Hayden, 35 Kan. 106, 57 Am. Rep. 145; Matthews v. Light, 32 Me. 305; Kendall v. Mann, 11 Allen (93 Mass.), 15; Jackson v. Stevens, 108 Mass. 94; McDonough v. O'Neil, 113 Mass. 92; Snyder v. Wolford, 33 Minn. 175, 53 Am. Rep. 22; Winn v. Dillon, 27 Miss. 494; Soggins v. Heard, 31 Miss. 426; Gillenwaters v. Miller, 49 Miss. 150; Cameron v. Lewis, 56 Miss. 76; Harrison v. Craven, 188 Mo. 590; Johnson v. Hayward, 74 Neb. 157; Morrison v. Hunter, 74 Neb. 559; Von Hurter v. Spengeman, 17 N. J. Eq. 185; Bennett v. Austin, 81 N. Y. 308; Wood v. Rabe, 96 N. Y. 414, 48 Am. Rep. 640; Parkist v. Alexander, 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 394; Van Horne

ment is an equitable remedy, he may maintain that action.¹⁰ If the property be personalty the same considerations will ordinarily apply, though a resort to equity will less frequently be necessary, and the principal may maintain replevin or trover against the agent, or against any one holding through or for him, who is not a purchaser for value.¹¹

And what the agent cannot do directly he will not be permitted to do indirectly, as by causing the property to be purchased ostensibly by another, but in reality for his own benefit. The court will look behind the appearance sought to be put upon the transaction, and determine the case according to its true inwardness.¹²

v. Fonda, 5 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 388; Sweet v. Jacobs, 6 Paige (N. Y.), 355, 31 Am. Dec. 252; Van Epps v. Van Epps, 9 Paige (N. Y.), 237; Torrey v. Bank of Orleans, 9 Paige (N. Y.), 649; Burrell v. Bull, 3 Sanford (N. Y.), Ch. 15; Sanford v. Norris, 4 Abb. App. Dec. (N. Y.) 144; Hargrave v. King, 5 Ired. (N. C.) Eq. 420; Eshleman v. Lewis, 49 Pa. 410; Smith v. Brotherline, 62 Pa. 461; Seichrist's Appeal, 66 Pa. 237; Wolford v. Herrington, 74 Pa. 311, 15 Am. Rep. 548; Peebles v. Reading, 8 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 484; Barziza v. Story, 39 Tex. 354; Pinnock v. Clough, 16 Vt. 500, 42 Am. Dec. 521; Wellford v. Chancellor, 5 Gratt. (Va.) 39; Jackson v. Pleasonton, 95 Va. 654; Onson v. Cown, 22 Wis. 329; McMahon v. McGraw, 26 Wis. 615; Ringo v. Binns, 10 Pet. (35 U. S.) 269, 9 L. Ed. 420; Rothwell v. Dewees, 2 Black (67 U. S.), 613, 17 L. Ed. 309; Jenkins v. Eldredge, 3 Story, 181, Fed. Cas. No. 7,266; Baker v. Whiting, 3 Sumner, 475, Fed. Cas. No. 787.

¹⁰ Rose v. Hayden, supra; McKay v. Williams, 67 Mich. 547, 11 Am. St. R. 597.

¹¹ Plaintiffs in Boston engaged F to go to Ogden to purchase hides for them. By the written contract, plaintiffs agreed to pay all of F's expenses and F agreed to give his entire services to the employment and to engage in no other business. Money was advanced by plaintiffs upon drafts drawn upon them by F and collected through Odgen banks, F rendering the plaintiffs periodical statements. F became connected with P. C. & Co., a firm engaged in the slaughtering business and advanced them money, the proceeds of plaintiff's drafts, which they used to purchase cattle, the hides being subsequently delivered to F. P. C. & Co. being indebted to the defendants, who were bankers in Odgen, F to secure this indebtedness, gave defendants a bill of sale of all the hides in his possession. Plaintiffs demanded the hides of the defendants who refused to deliver and sold them to satisfy the indebtedness. Held, that upon delivery of the hides to F title to them vested in plaintiffs, and that F having no authority to pledge them, the plaintiffs could recover their value. Edwards v. Dooley, 120 N. Y. 540.

An agent to purchase wheat for his principal, who was to supply funds whenever requested, bought wheat as agent but did not ask for funds and refused to deliver the wheat to the principal. Held, that the wheat belonged to the principal, the refusal was a conversion, and the principal may recover for the loss of profits. Nading v. Howe, 23 Ind. App. 690.

¹² Cameron v. Lewis, 56 Miss. 76; Eldridge v. Walker, 60 Ill. 230; Hughes v. Washington, 72 Ill. 84; Rogers v. Rogers, 1 Hopk. (N. Y.) 524 (aff'd 3 Wend. 503); Kruse v. Steffens, 47 Ill. 112; Forbes v. Hal-

If, in such a case, the agent colludes with a third person to buy the property, in order to sell it to the principal at an advance in which the agent is to share, the agent will be responsible to the principal for the loss thereby sustained.¹³

§ 1193. — Same principle applies to leases.—This principle is of course not confined to transactions involving an absolute purchase; it includes leasings and other similar arrangements as well. And it is immaterial that the agent was not directly employed to procure the lease; he will not, it is held, be permitted to avail himself of the knowledge, acquired through the agency, that his principal desires or is attempting to negotiate such a transaction, in order to forestall him or to make a profit to himself.

An illustration of this principle is found in a case in California. There a warehouseman, occupying premises under a lease about to expire, was negotiating for a renewal. His clerk, who from his access to his principal's books and papers and his knowledge of the business, knew of these facts, secretly obtained a lease of the premises to himself and another person, who was a party to the scheme, by telling the landlord that his principal would probably give up the premises at the expiration of his term. But the court directed a conveyance to the principal, saying that an agent should not, any more than a trustee, adopt a course that will operate as an inducement to postpone the principal's interest to his own; and that an agent or sub-agent who uses the information he has obtained in the course of his agency as a means of buying or leasing for himself will be compelled to convey to the principal.¹⁴

And the same result was reached in a similar case in Illinois, where a confidential agent of the lessee of a theater, shortly before his principal's lease would expire, secretly procured a lease of the theater for a new term to himself, though at a larger rent, denying to his principal that he was trying to secure the lease. The court held that the lease was acquired in violation of the agent's duty, and presumably because of his peculiar means of knowledge of the profits of the business, and that a personal benefit thus obtained by an agent would, in equity, inure to the benefit of the principal.¹⁵

sey, 26 N. Y. 53; Davoue v. Fanning, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) Ch. 257; Beaubien v. Poupard, Harr. (Mich.) Ch. 206.

¹³ Boston v. Simmons, 150 Mass. 461, 15 Am. St. R. 230.

¹⁴ Gower v. Andrew (1881), 59 Cal. 119, 43 Am. Rep. 242.

¹⁵ Davis v. Hamlin (1883), 108 Ill. 39, 48 Am. Rep. 541. See also Grumley v. Webb, 44 Mo. 444, 100 Am. Dec. 304; Vallette v. Tedens, 122 Ill. 607, 3 Am. St. Rep. 502; Prebble v. Reeves, [1909] Vic. L. R. 436, affirmed [1910] Vic. L. R. 88.

Other cases involving the question of taking advantage of information acquired during the agency, are referred to in a later section.¹⁶

§ 1194. — What evidence of trust sufficient.—In order to establish a trust in real estate, as against the agent, if the trust be denied, it has been said to be the settled rule that the evidence of it must, to satisfy the statute of frauds, be in writing, or the principal must have paid or furnished the purchase money.¹⁷ But in a case in Kansas, it is held after an elaborate resumé of the authorities that, though the agent was orally employed, and though he purchased with his own money, the trust arose from the relation, and that the principal on tendering the amount so paid, and a reasonable compensation for his services, could, if the agent refused to convey to him, recover

Gower v. Andrew, and Davis v. Hamlin, were followed in the late case of Essex Trust Co. v. Enwright, — Mass. —, 102 N. E. 441, and in Pikes Peak Co. v. Pfuntner, 158 Mich. 412.

See also the partnership cases of Mitchell v. Reed, 61 N. Y. 123, 19 Am. Rep. 252; Knapp v. Reed, 88 Neb. 754, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 869, Ann. Cas. 1912 B. 1095; Williamson v. Monroe, 101 Fed. 322.

¹⁶ See post, § 1209.

¹⁷ "Where a man merely employs another person by parol, as an agent to buy an estate, who buys it for himself and denies the trust, and no part of the purchase money is paid by the principal, and there is no written agreement, he cannot compel the agent to convey the estate to him, as that would be directly in the teeth of the statute of frauds." 2 Sugden on Vendors (14th Ed.), 703, followed in James v. Smith, [1891] 1 Ch. 384. Same rule: Burden v. Sheridan, 36 Iowa, 125, 14 Am. Rep. 505; Bartlett v. Pickersgill, 1 Eden, 515, cited in 1 Cox, 15, 4 East, 577, note, 4 Burr. 2255; Botsford v. Burr, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) Ch. 405; Perry v. McHenry, 13 Ill. 227; Collins v. Sullivan, 135 Mass. 461; Kendall v. Mann, 11 Allen (Mass.), 15; Davis v. Wetherell, 11 Allen (Mass.), 19; Parsons v. Phelan, 134 Mass. 419; Barnard v. Jewett, 97 Mass. 87; Dodd v. Wakeman,

26 N. J. Eq. 484; Fickett v. Durham, 109 Mass. 419; Firestone v. Firestone, 49 Ala. 128; Allen v. Richard, 83 Mo. 55; Nixon's Appeal, 63 Penn. St. 279; Steere v. Steere, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) Ch. 1, 9 Am. Dec. 256; Walter v. Klock, 55 Ill. 362; Watson v. Erb, 33 Ohio St. 35; Pinnock v. Clough, 16 Vt. 500, 42 Am. Dec. 521; Hidden v. Jordan, 21 Cal. 92.

¹⁸ Rose v. Hayden, 35 Kan. 106, 57 Am. Rep. 145. In this case Valentine, J., says: "The controlling question in this case is not whether the principal advanced the purchase money or not, but it is whether in equity and good conscience the agent who in fact purchased the property with his own money in his own name, in violation of his agreement with his principal and in abuse of the confidence reposed in him by his principal, can be allowed to retain the fruits of his perfidy. The weight of authority is, we think, that he cannot. Sandford v. Norris, 4 Abb. N. Y. Ct. App. 144; Wellford v. Chancellor, 5 Gratt. (Va.) 39; Onson v. Cown, 32 Wis. 329; Winn v. Dillon, 27 Miss. 494; Cameron v. Lewis, 56 Miss. 76; Gillenwaters v. Miller, 49 Miss. 150; Chastain v. Smith, 30 Ga. 96; Heard v. Pilley, L. R., 4 Ch. App. 548; Lees v. Nuttall, 1 Russ. & M. Ch. 53; same cases affirmed on appeal, 2 Myl. & K. Ch. 819; Taylor v. Salmon, 4 Myl. & C. Ch. 134; Cave v. Macken-

the land,¹⁸ and that he might even recover in ejectment, ejectment being in that state an equitable as well as a legal remedy.¹⁹

The same question arises in the case of alleged partnerships to deal in lands. The weight of authority seems to be that the relation may be shown by parol, and that the trust may arise from the relation;²⁰ but there are numerous cases to the contrary.²¹

§ 1195. — When rule does not apply.—But where the agent is not employed to obtain the conveyance, but for an entirely collateral matter,—as to bring his principal into communication with some one who would lend him the money with which to make the purchase, although the agent, with secret intention to buy the land himself, dissuades the principal from seeking other assistance in finding the money,—no trust is created which would be violated if the agent purchases the land himself with his own money;²² and so it has been said that even though the agent had been employed to buy certain land, still if he first expressly and unequivocally relinquishes his agency,²³ or if his agency has otherwise expired,²⁴ or if he has first exhausted

zie, Fisher Ann. Dig. (1877), 400; Baker v. Whiting, 3 Sumner (U. S. C. C.) 476; Snyder v. Wolford, 33 Minn. 175, 53 Am. Rep. 22; Peebles v. Reading, 8 Serg. & R. (Penn.) 484; Burrell v. Bull, 3 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 15."

See also, Boswell v. Cunningham, 22 Fla. 277, 21 L. R. A. 54, citing in addition to cases above given, Firestone v. Firestone, 49 Ala. 128; McMurray v. Mobley, 39 Ark. 309; Church v. Sterling, 16 Conn. 388; Cotton v. Holliday, 59 Ill. 176; Switzer v. Skiles, 3 Gilm. (Ill.) 529, 44 Am. Dec. 723; Reed v. Warner, 5 Paige Ch. (N. Y.) 650; Sweet v. Jacocks, 6 Paige Ch. (N. Y.) 355, 31 Am. Dec. 352; Wolford v. Herrington, 74 Pa. 311, 15 Am. Rep. 548; Jenkins v. Eldredge, 3 Story, 181; Benson v. Heathorn, 1 Younge & C. (Eng.) 326.

¹⁹ Rose v. Hayden, supra.

²⁰ See Gilmore on Partnership, 94, and note in 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 427, where the cases are fully cited. Morgart v. Smouse, 103 Md. 463, 115 Am. St. R. 367.

²¹ See Gilmore on Partnership, 94; Schener v. Cochem, 126 Wis. 209, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 427; Nester v. Sullivan, 147 Mich. 493; Norton v. Brink, 75 Neb. 566, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 945.

²² Collins v. Sullivan, 135 Mass. 461, distinguishing Lees v. Nuttall, 1 Russ. & Myl. 53, s. c., 2 Myl. & K. 819, and Parkist v. Alexander, 1 Johns. (N. Y.) Ch. 394, on the ground that there the principal had a previous interest in the land, at least honorary, as by oral agreement with the owner, and the agent was employed for the very purpose of procuring or completing the title.

²³ First Nat. Bank v. Bissell, 2 McCrary (U. S. C. C.), 73, 4 Fed. 694 (not a very authoritative case upon this point).

The agent's renunciation of the agency in such a case must be open and unequivocal, and the burden is upon him to show that it was so. Bergner v. Bergner, 219 Pa. 113. A merely colorable renunciation will not suffice. Witte v. Storm, 236 Mo. 470.

See also dicta in McMahon v. McGraw, 26 Wis. 614; Baker v. Whiting, 3 Sumn. 475, Fed. Cas. No. 787.

But compare Trice v. Comstock, 57 C. C. A. 646, 121 Fed. 620, 61 L. R. A. 176, and other cases cited §§ 1209, 1210 post.

²⁴ Lamb Knit-Goods Co. v. Lamb, 119 Mich. 568; Bemis v. Plato, 119 Iowa, 127; Dennison v. Aldrich, 114 Mo. App. 700; Evans v. Evans, 196

all reasonable efforts to buy on the terms fixed by the principal,²⁵—there being no sharp practice or unfairness,—and he afterwards buys with his own funds, no trust will arise.

So where three parties agreed to make a purchase for their joint benefit, but one of them when called upon to furnish his share of the necessary funds declined to do so, and the two others went on and made the purchase, it was held that no trust could arise in favor of the one who had not joined.²⁶

§ 1196. — The rule is also to be modified where it is the expectation that the agent will acquire title in his own name and in his own present right, though the principal is ultimately to acquire it by paying the agent. Thus it is said "that where a commercial correspondent advances his own money or credit for a principal for the purchase of property for such principal, and takes the bills of lading in his own name, looking to the property as security for reimbursement, such correspondent becomes the owner of the property, instead of the pledgee, up to the moment when the original principal shall pay the purchase price, and the correspondent occupies the position of an owner under a contract to sell and deliver when the purchase price is paid."²⁷

§ 1197. Agent authorized to sell can not sell for himself.—For similar reasons an agent, authorized to sell or lease property for his principal, has no right to substitute his own property and sell or lease it for himself. If he does so, the principal may at least have damages against him, or, in cases where it could be ascertained, the profit made by the agent at the expense of the principal.²⁸

§ 1198. Agent authorized to sell, exchange or lease may not become the purchaser or lessee.—For the same reasons, an agent authorized to sell, exchange or lease his principal's property, may not without the latter's consent, become the purchaser or lessee.³⁰ If he

Mo. 1; Board of Trustees v. Blair, 45 W. Va. 812; Learmonth v. Bailev, 1 Vic. L. R. (Eq.) 122.

²⁵ Pearsall v. Hirsh, 59 N. Y. Super. Ct. 410.

²⁶ Yeager's Appeal, 100 Pa. 88.

²⁷ Drexel v. Pease, 133 N. Y. 129; Moors v. Kidder, 106 N. Y. 32; Farmers' Bank v. Logan, 74 N. Y. 568.

²⁸ In Gladiator Consol. Gold Min. Co. v. Steele, 132 Iowa, 446, an agent for the sale of stock belonging to the principal, upon receiving an order for stock accompanied by drafts in payment, instead of supplying the principal's stock, furnished stock of his own of the same sort, and kept the drafts in payment for it. Held, that he must account to his principal for the drafts.

³⁰ McKinley v. Irvine, 13 Ala. 681; White v. Ward, 26 Ark. 445; Forrester, etc., Co. v. Evatt, 90 Ark. 301; Curry v. King, 6 Cal. App. 568; Burke v. Bours (Cal.), 26 Pac. 102; Banks v. Judah, 8 Conn. 145; Church does so, the principal may repudiate the act and recover back his property,³¹ or, if the agent has disposed of it at a profit, the principal, guilty of no laches, may compel an accounting for the profits.³² Here, too, as in the preceding cases, the law looks at the natural and legitimate tendency of such transactions, and not at the motive of the agent in any given case. This tendency is demoralizing, and the fact that in a certain case the agent's motive was honorable, or that the result is more beneficial to the principal, will make no difference if the latter chooses to repudiate it.³³ Said a learned judge: "If such contracts were to be held valid, until shown to be fraudulent or corrupt, the rev. Sterling, 16 Conn. 388; Hodgson v. Raphael, 105 Ga. 480; Merryman v. David, 31 Ill. 404; Kerfoot v. Hyman, 52 Ill. 512; Cottom v. Holliday, 59 Ill. 176; Mason v. Bauman, 62 Ill. 76; Hughes v. Washington, 72 Ill. 84; Stone v. Daggett, 73 Ill. 367; Tewksbury v. Spruance, 75 Ill. 187; Francis v. Kerker, 85 Ill. 190; Cornwell v. Foord, 96 Ill. App. 366; Sturdevant v. Pike, 1 Ind. 277; Green v. Peeso, 92 Iowa, 261; Fisher v. Lee, 94 Iowa, 611; Rogers v. French, 122 Iowa, 18; Krhut v. Phares, 80 Kan. 515; Butcher v. Krauth, 14 Bush. (Ky.) 713; Robertson v. Western F. & M. Ins. Co., 19 La. 227, 36 Am. Dec. 673; Florence v. Adams, 2 Rob. (La.) 556, 38 Am. Dec. 226; McClendon v. Bradford, 42 La. Ann. 160; Matthews v. Light, 32 Me. 305; Parker v. Vose, 45 Me. 54; Copeland v. Mercantile Ins. Co., 6 Pick. (Mass.) 198; Clute v. Barron, 2 Mich. 194; Dwight v. Blackmar, 2 Mich. 330, 57 Am. Dec. 130; Moore v. Mandlebaum, 8 Mich. 433; People v. Township Board, 11 Mich. 222; Powell v. Conant, 33 Mich. 396; Merriam v. Johnson, 86 Minn. 61; Grumley v. Webb, 44 Mo. 444, 100 Am. Dec. 304; Meek v. Hurst, 223 Mo. 688, 135 Am. St. R. 531; Rockford Watch Co. v. Manifold, 36 Neb. 801; Jansen v. Williams, 36 Neb. 869, 20 L. R. A. 207; Ruckman v. Bérgholz, 37 N. J. L. 437; Moore v. Moore, 5 N. Y. 256; Bain v. Brown, 56 N. Y. 285; Cumberland Coal Co. v. Sherman, 30

Barb. (N. Y.) 553; Clark v. Bird, 66 N. Y. App. Div. 284; Evans v. Wren, 93 N. Y. App. Div. 346; Van Dusen v. Bigelow, 13 N. D. 277, 67 L. R. A. 288; Clendenning v. Hawk, 10 N. D. 90 (lease); Rich v. Black, 173 Pa. 92; Tynes v. Grimstead, 1 Tenn. Ch. 508; Shannon v. Marmaduke, 14 Tex. 217; Scott v. Mann, 36 Tex. 157; Mosley v. Buck, 3 Munf. (Va.) 232, 5 Am. Dec. 508; Segar v. Edwards, 11 Leigh (Va.), 213; Colbert v. Shepherd, 89 Va. 401; Chezum v. Kreighbaum, 4 Wash. 680 (but cf. Robinson v. Easton, 93 Cal. 80, 27 Am. St. R. 167); Stewart v. Mather, 32 Wis. 344; Marsh v. Whitmore, 21 Wall. (U. S.) 178, 22 L. Ed. 482; Robertson v. Chapman, 152 U. S. 673, 38 L. Ed. 592; Blank v. Aronson, 109 C. C. A. 327, 187 Fed. 241. But in Mississippi see Union Planters' Bank v. Edgell (Miss.), 33 So. 409.

³¹ Louisville Bank v. Gray, 84 Ky. 565, and other cases cited in preceding note.

³² Forrester, etc., Co. v. Evatt, 90 Ark. 301; Rich v. Black, 173 Pa. 92; Cornwell v. Foord, 96 Ill. App. 366; Merriam v. Johnson, 86 Minn. 61; Smitt v. Leopold, 51 Minn. 455; McNutt v. Dix, 83 Mich. 328, 10 L. R. A. 660; Pommerenke v. Bate, 3 Sask. L. R. 51.

See also Tyler v. Sanborn, 128 Ill. 136.

³³ People v. Township Board, 11 Mich. 222.

sult, as a general rule, would be that they must be enforced in spite of fraud or corruption. Hence the only safe rule in such cases is to treat the contract as void, without reference to the question of fraud in fact, unless affirmed by the opposite party. This rule appears to me so manifestly in accordance with sound public policy as to require no authority for its support."³⁴

The prohibition applies, of course, as much to indirect violations as to direct ones.³⁵

§ 1199. ——— Injury to principal not test—Sale at fixed price.—

It is immaterial here that the principal has not been injured, or that the agent gave him as good terms as anybody would give.³⁶ Neither is the situation altered, ordinarily, by the fact that the principal had fixed a price at which he was willing to sell, and that the agent buys at that price.³⁷ Even in such a case, there may be a conflict between duty and interest. The agent may know that more can be obtained, and it would ordinarily be his duty to obtain it. So, "if before a sale is made, the land, to the knowledge of the agent, is greatly increased in value, or if he learns of a fact increasing the value, not known to the principal at the time of making the price, or if, before selling at the fixed price, he should receive an offer of a larger price, no one

³⁴ Christiancy, J., in People v. Township Board, supra.

³⁵ Hodgson v. Raphael, 105 Ga. 480; Webb v. Marks, 10 Colo. App. 429; Smith v. Tyler, 57 Mo. App. 668; Blank v. Aronson, 109 C. C. A. 327.

But if agent later purchases from one who bought without any arrangement to resell to the agent, the agent may keep. Learmonth v. Bailey, 1 Vic. L. R. (E.) 122.

³⁶ Where the agent, by misrepresenting the price he paid for property, has induced the principal to pay him the larger sum, the principal may recover the excess from the agent even though the principal has sold the property at a profit over the amount so misrepresented. Salsbury v. Ware, 183 Ill. 505.

³⁷ Porter v. Woodruff, 36 N. J. Eq. 174; Tilleny v. Wolverton, 46 Minn. 256; Merriam v. Johnson, 86 Minn. 61; Colbert v. Shepherd, 89 Va. 401; Meek v. Hurst, 223 Mo. 688, 135 Am. St. R. 531; Rich v. Black, 173 Pa. 92;

McNutt v. Dix, 83 Mich. 328; Albright v. Phoenix Ins. Co., 72 Kan. 591.

But in Selover v. Isle Harbor Land Co., 91 Minn. 451, it was said that "where lands were offered for sale at a stipulated figure which a commission was allowed, there is no rule of law to prevent the party, who in good faith earns and receives such commission by effecting a sale, from being at the same time interested as a purchaser. Quite another question would arise if no fixed price had been established, and the agent was relied upon and expected to obtain the best figure possible for the lands," citing Merriam v. Johnson, supra.

See also Carpenter v. Fisher, 175 Mass. 9, holding that one who has had an option to purchase land but elects not to exercise it, is not thereby disqualified to act as agent for another purchaser.

would suppose that the agent might sell at the fixed price without informing the principal of what had come to his knowledge.”³⁸

§ 1200. — Public sale equally voidable.—It is immaterial, also, that the sale which the agent is authorized to make, or cause to be made, is to be a public one.³⁹ And even though the sale be one which the agent does not cause, and which he is not able to prevent, as where the land which he is authorized to sell is being sold upon the foreclosure of a mortgage, and the like, he will still, ordinarily, it is held, be incompetent to purchase.⁴⁰ His interest as purchaser, to buy as cheaply as possible, would conflict with the principal’s interest to secure the highest price obtainable. A fortiori would this be so if he resorts to schemes or practices to prevent competition.⁴¹

§ 1201. — Effect of fraud or concealment.—Since the sale or lease, when voidable at all, is voidable notwithstanding the fact that the agent acted in good faith, it is all the more impeachable, if such a thing be possible, where the agent has been guilty of fraud or sharp practice, or has concealed his relations to the transaction, or has failed to disclose to the principal material facts within the agent’s possession affecting the value or situation of the property.⁴²

§ 1202. To what agents this rule applies.—This rule is of frequent application, not only to agencies which are strictly private in their nature, but to those which are public or quasi-public as well.

³⁸ Tilleny v. Wolverton, supra.

³⁹ See the numerous cases cited in § 1202, post.

⁴⁰ Kimball v. Ranney, 122 Mich. 160, 446 L. R. A. 403, 18 Am. St. R. 548; Adams v. Sayre, 70 Ala. 318; Albright v. Phoenix Ins. Co., 72 Kan. 591.

⁴¹ Adams v. Sayre, 70 Ala. 318.

⁴² Pierce v. Beers, 190 Mass. 199; Jansen v. Williams, 36 Neb. 869, 20 L. R. A. 207; Merriam v. Johnson, 86 Minn. 61; Fisher v. Lee, 94 Iowa, 611; Green v. Peeso, 92 Iowa, 261; Rogers v. French, 122 Iowa, 18; Clark v. Bird, 66 N. Y. App. Div. 284; Cornwell v. Foord, 96 Ill. App. 366; Burke v. Bours, 92 Cal. 108; Van Dusen v. Bigelow, 13 N. D. 277, 67 L. R. A. 288; Webb v. Marks, 10 Colo. App. 429; Williams v. Moore-Gaunt Co., 3 Ga. App. 756; Prince v. Dupuy, 163 Ill. 417.

Where the agent undertakes to get property for himself at a reduced price by falsely representing to his principal that the goods are for another to whom the principal is willing for special reasons to make a reduction, the agent is liable for the difference to the principal. Pierce v. Beers, supra.

Where agent to sell plaintiff’s hotel, induced plaintiff to exchange the same for a farm of little value, by misrepresenting the character of it, having a secret agreement with the owner of the farm that, on the consummation of the trade, the owner of the farm would convey the hotel to the agent at a price representing the real value of the farm, and thus in effect get the hotel for much less than its value, plaintiff was held entitled to a reconveyance of the hotel. White v. Leech (Iowa), 96 N. W. 708.

Thus an administrator,⁴³ executor,⁴⁴ guardian,⁴⁵ sheriff,⁴⁶ deputy sheriff,⁴⁷ trustee,⁴⁸ assignee,⁴⁹ or commissioner in bankruptcy,⁵⁰ judge of probate,⁵¹ county treasurer,⁵² commissioner to sell land,⁵³ school director or trustee,⁵⁴ members of the board of health,⁵⁵ etc., will not be permitted, either directly or indirectly, to purchase of himself the rights or property which he is authorized in that capacity to sell.⁵⁶ A public or private agent⁵⁷ authorized to let a contract will not be permitted to let it to himself. A railroad agent authorized to furnish an excursion train to third persons, will not be permitted to furnish one ostensibly to a third person but in reality for his own benefit.⁵⁸

These rules also apply to the directors and officers of corporations. The former are regarded in equity as trustees, and the ministerial officers occupy the relation of agents.⁵⁹

⁴³ Dwight v. Blackmar, 2 Mich. 330, 57 Am. Dec. 130; Pearson v. Moreland, 7 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 609, 45 Am. Dec. 319; Scott v. Free-land, 7 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 409, 45 Am. Dec. 310; Planters' Bank v. Neely, 7 How. (Miss.) 80, 40 Am. Dec. 51; McGowan v. McGowan, 48 Miss. 553; Hoffman v. Harrington, 28 Mich. 106; Obert v. Hammel, 3 Har. (N. J. L.) 74; Coat v. Coat, 63 Ill. 73; Kruse v. Steffens, 47 Ill. 112; Smith v. Drake, 23 N. J. Eq. 302.

⁴⁴ Rogers v. Rogers, 1 Hopk. (N. Y.) 524; Schenck v. Dart, 22 N. Y. 420; Winter v. Geroe, 5 N. J. Ch. 319; Dunlap v. Mitchell, 10 Ohio, 117; Worthy v. Johnson, 8 Ga. 236, 52 Am. Dec. 399; Scott v. Gorton, 14 La. 115, 33 Am. Dec. 578.

⁴⁵ Ward v. Smith, 3 Sandf. (N. Y.) Ch. 592.

⁴⁶ Harrison v. McHenry, 9 Ga. 164, 52 Am. Dec. 435; Carr v. Houser, 46 Ga. 477; Flury v. Grimes, 52 Ga. 343; Mayor of Macon v. Huff, 60 Ga. 228.

⁴⁷ Perkins v. Thompson, 3 N. H. 144.

⁴⁸ Robertson v. Western F. & M. Ins. Co., 19 La. 227, 36 Am. Dec. 673; Green v. Winter, 1 Johns. (N. Y.) Ch. 26, 7 Am. Dec. 475; Davoue v. Fan-ning, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) Ch. 252.

⁴⁹ Ex parte Lacey, 6 Ves. Jr. 626.

⁵⁰ Ex parte Bennett, 10 Ves. Jr. 382.

⁵¹ Walton v. Torrey, Har. (Mich.) Ch. 259.

⁵² Clute v. Barron, 2 Mich. 192; Pierce v. Boughman, 14 Pick. (Mass.) 356.

⁵³ Ingerson v. Starkweather, Walk. (Mich.) Ch. 346.

⁵⁴ Currie v. School District, 35 Minn. 163.

⁵⁵ Fort Wayne v. Rosenthal, 75 Ind. 156, 39 Am. Rep. 127.

⁵⁶ People v. Township Board, 11 Mich. 222.

⁵⁷ Flint, etc., R. R. Co. v. Dewey, 14 Mich. 477.

⁵⁸ Pegram v. Charlotte, etc., R. R. Co., 84 N. C. 696, 37 Am. Rep. 639.

⁵⁹ Cook v. Berlin Woolen Mills Co., 43 Wis. 433; Cumberland Coal Co. v. Hoffman Steam Coal Co., 30 Barb. (N. Y.) 159; Hodges v. New England Screw Co., 1 R. I. 312, 53 Am. Dec. 624; Jackson v. Ludeling, 21 Wall. (U. S.) 616, 22 L. Ed. 492; Wilbur v. Lynde, 49 Cal. 290, 19 Am. Rep. 645; City of San Diego v. San Diego, etc., R. R. Co., 44 Cal. 106; Commissioners, etc. v. Reynolds, 44 Ind. 509, 15 Am. Rep. 245; Bedford Coal Co. v. Parke County Coal Co., 44 Ind. App. 390; Greenfield Savings Bank v. Simons, 133 Mass. 415.

That officers or directors of a private corporation may stand in such a fiduciary relation to the shareholders as to require them to disclose

And the principle is applied not only to the agent himself, but to sub-agents, clerks and assistants appointed by him;⁶⁰ and it extends also to his partner in business.⁶¹ Whatever disabilities the agent labors under attach equally to those whom he employs under him.

§ 1203. Further of this rule—Indirect attempts.—It seems scarcely necessary to repeat here, what has already been emphasized, that what the agent cannot do directly, he will not be permitted to do indirectly, as by having the property acquired ostensibly by another, but in reality for his own benefit.⁶²

§ 1204. Agent authorized to insure may not issue policies to himself.—The same principles apply to the agent who is authorized to furnish insurance. Such an agent may not, directly or indirectly, without the full knowledge and consent of his principal, issue policies to himself, or insure his own property. If he does so, the principal may repudiate the act.⁶³ The same rule has been applied to cases where, although the agent was not the sole or individual owner, he was yet in some manner beneficially interested in the property insured.⁶⁴ But information respecting the value of the shareholders' stock which they propose to purchase, see Strong v. Repide, 213 U. S. 419; Oliver v. Oliver, 118 Ga. 362; Stewart v. Harris, 69 Kan. 498, 105 Am. St. R. 178, 66 L. R. A. 261, 2 Ann. Cas. 873. Contra: Hooker v. Midland Steel Co., 215 Ill. 444, 106 Am. St. R. 170; Board of Commissioners v. Reynolds, 44 Ind. 509, 15 Am. Rep. 245; Walsh v. Goulden, 130 Mich. 531; Carpenter v. Danforth, 52 Barb. (N. Y.) 581; O'Neile v. Ternes, 32 Wash. 528.

⁶⁰ Gardner v. Ogden, 22 N. Y. 327, 78 Am. Dec. 192.

⁶¹ New York Cent. Ins. Co. v. National Protection Ins. Co., 14 N. Y. 85.

⁶² Ellridge v. Walker, 60 Ill. 230; Merriam v. Johnson, 86 Minn. 61; Euneau v. Rieger, 105 Mo. 659; Webb v. Marks, 10 Colo. App. 429. Or by a third person for the joint benefit of himself and such third person. Hughes v. Washington, 72 Ill. 84; Fry v. Platt, 32 Kan. 62 (the third person was supposed to be another agent to sell); Finch v. Conrade, 154 Pa. 326. Mere fact that purchaser is brother-in-law of the agent will not of itself invalidate the sale. Walker v. Carrington, 74 Ill. 446. Held invalid where deeded to agent's wife. Reed v. Aubrey, 91 Ga. 435, 44 Am. St. R. 49; Green v. Hugo, 81 Tex. 452, 26 Am. St. R. 824; Winter v. McMillan, 87 Cal. 256, 22 Am. St. R. 243 (to agent and wife jointly).

See also Tyler v. Sanborn, 128 Ill. 136.

⁶³ Zimmerman v. Dwelling-House Insurance Co., 110 Mich. 399, 33 L. R. A. 698; Bentley v. Columbia Insurance Co., 19 Barb. (N. Y.) 595; Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. v. McGreevy, 55 C. C. A. 543, 118 Fed. 415.

⁶⁴ Ritt v. Washington Marine Ins. Co., 41 Barb. (N. Y.) 353 (agent was one of several tenants in common of a boat); Glenn Falls Ins. Co. v. Hopkins, 16 Ill. App. 220 (agent a partner of firm whose goods he insured); Wildberger v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co., 72 Miss. 338, 28 L. R. A. 220, 48 Am. St. R. 559 (agent insured goods which were in his possession as receiver, and of which he had the legal title by assignment for purposes of the trust); Green-

if the principal, with full knowledge of the facts, assents to the act, the insurance becomes binding.⁶⁵

§ 1205. Agent authorized to purchase or hire may not purchase or hire of himself.—An agent authorized to purchase or hire property for his principal, will not, without the intelligent consent of his principal, be permitted to purchase or hire of himself; and if he does so, the principal is not bound, but may repudiate the transaction. This rule is founded upon the same principles as the preceding ones. The law will not permit the agent to put himself in a position where there is such abundant opportunity, if not temptation, to take advantage of his relations for his own benefit.⁶⁶

And it makes no difference that the intention of the agent was honest and the result of his action might be to the advantage of his principal; the latter may still repudiate it. The tendency of such transactions is bad, and a good intention in a particular case will not save it, unless the principal sees fit to affirm it.⁶⁷

And what was said in a preceding section applies here also. The agent may not accomplish by indirect and covert means what he could not do directly and openly.

The remedy of the principal in such a case is usually the repudiation of the transaction. He cannot, it is held, recover, as a profit made by the agent, the difference between the amount at which the agent sold to him and the price which the agent may have paid for the property before the agency was created,⁶⁸ though he may recover the difference between the price paid by the principal and the fair value.⁶⁹ wood Ice Co. v. Georgia Home Ins. Co., 72 Miss. 46 (agent was a stockholder, director and vice-president of the corporation whose property he insured).

⁶⁵ Pratt v. Dwelling-House Ins. Co., 130 N. Y. 206, reversing 53 Hun (N. Y.), 101.

⁶⁶ Taussig v. Hart, 58 N. Y. 425; Tewksbury v. Spruance, 75 Ill. 187; Harrison v. McHenry, 9 Ga. 164, 52 Am. Dec. 435; Florence v. Adams, 2 Rob. (La.) 556, 33 Am. Dec. 226; Ely v. Hanford, 65 Ill. 267; Conkey v. Bond, 36 N. Y. 427; Beal v. McKiernan, 6 La. (O. S.) 407; Keighler v. Savage Mfg. Co., 12 Md. 383, 71 Am. Dec. 600; Baird v. Ryan, 17 Ky. L. Rep. 1417, 35 S. W. 132; Disbrow v.

Secor, 58 Conn. 35; Oliver v. Lansing, 48 Neb. 338; Friesenhahn v. Bushnell, 47 Minn. 443; Whitehead v. Lynn, 20 Colo. App. 51, aff'd 45 Colo. 427.

⁶⁷ Taussig v. Hart, 58 N. Y. 425; Harrison v. McHenry, 9 Ga. 164, 52 Am. Dec. 435; People v. Township Board, 11 Mich. 222; Montgomery v. Hundley, 205 Mo. 138, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 122.

⁶⁸ Whitehead v. Lynn, 20 Colo. App. 51.

⁶⁹ Oliver v. Lansing, 48 Neb. 338. In Watson v. Bayliss, 62 Wash. 329, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1210, an agent had obtained an option before his employment by the principal; the agent was hired to purchase the prop-

§ 1206. Double agency—Agent may not represent other party also without consent of principal.—The principal has a right to assume when he employs an agent, unless he is advised to the contrary, that the agent is in a situation to give to his principal that undivided allegiance and loyalty which the proper performance of the agency requires, and that he will remain in that situation. If the agent has, or acquires, in the subject-matter, any interest of his own which may conflict with that of his principal, or if, by reason of being or becoming the agent of the opposite party, he has an interest of the latter to protect which may conflict with the interest of the principal, it is his duty to fully advise his principal of the circumstances, and not to undertake to act without the principal's consent.⁷⁰ If, after a full and frank disclosure, the principal is willing to confide his interests to him, the principal cannot afterwards object. Otherwise, it is the practically invariable rule that the agent may not, in the same transaction, be both agent and opposite party, or while agent of one, become the agent of the other party whose interests may conflict. If, without such knowledge and consent, he does undertake to contract, the law deems the principal in that transaction to be practically unrepresented, and any bargain in his name, or act done on his account, is usually voidable at the principal's option. He need not show himself injured, and his right to repudiate the transaction is not affected by the good faith of the opposite party. The effect of these double dealings, however, as between the principal and the other party, will be more fully considered in a later chapter.⁷¹ The effect as between the principal and the agent,—the only matter under consideration here,—is that the agent violates his duty to his principal, is entitled to no compensation for his services, must account for any profits made from the principal, and must indemnify his principal against any loss thereby sustained.⁷² Commissions which are paid by the principal to erty for the principal, and, in so doing, misrepresented the price at which it was obtainable, and thus made a profit to himself of the difference between the price at which he had acquired the option and the price which the principal gave. Held, that agent was liable to his principal for this difference.

See also Primeau v. Granfield, 180 Fed. 847.

⁷⁰ Marsh v. Buchan, 46 N. J. Eq. 595; Morey v. Laird, 108 Iowa, 670; St.

Louis Electric, etc., Co. v. Edison, 64 Fed. 997; Cameron v. Blackwell, 53 Tex. Civ. App. 414.

⁷¹ See post Book IV, Chap. VII.

⁷² As to forfeiture of compensation for disloyalty, see post Book IV, Chap. IV; Little v. Phipps, 208 Mass. 331; Lemon v. Little, 21 S. D. 628; Andrew v. Ramsay, [1903] 2 K. B. 635.

In Warren v. Burt, 58 Fed. 101, it was said, "No man, whether he be principal or agent, can be a vendor and a purchaser at the same time;

the agent before the discovery of the double agency may be recovered back.⁷³

As between the principal and the agent at least, however it may be as between the principals themselves, the rules above given apply as well to one of the two principals as to the other. Each may demand of the agent that he shall both be and remain loyal to that principal's interests, and may have remedies against the agent if he does not do so.

§ 1207. Agent must fully inform the principal.—It is always the duty of an agent, as will be more fully seen hereafter,⁷⁴ to fully inform the principal of all facts relating to the subject-matter of the agency which come to the knowledge of the agent, and which it is material for the principal to know for the protection of his interests. This duty, moreover, has a specific application in this connection which justifies a reference to it here. As has been already seen, it is absolutely essential, when an agent undertakes to sustain dealings with his own principal, that it shall appear that the agent frankly and freely gave to his principal full information respecting, not only the agent's relation to the contract, but also, the various conditions respecting time, value, situation, condition and the like, which may fairly be deemed to be material in determining upon the desirability of entering into the contract.⁷⁵ But even where the agent is not personally interested in the contract, his duty to give the principal full information of all the material facts relating to the transaction, which are within his knowledge, still exists. A failure to perform this duty, while not necessarily rendering transactions with third persons void-and an agent of the vendor who intentionally becomes interested as a purchaser in the subject matter of his agency, violates his contract of agency, betrays his trust, forfeits his commission as agent, and is liable to his principal for all the profits he makes by his purchase." (Citing, Michoud v. Girod, 4 How. 503; Crump v. Ingersoll, 44 Minn. 84; Hegenmeyer v. Marks, 37 Minn. 6, 5 Am. St. Rep. 808; Jacobus v. Munn, 37 N. J. Eq. 48; Moore v. Zabriskie, 18 N. J. Eq. 51; Bank v. Tyrrell, 27 Beav. 273, 10 H. of L. Cas. 26; Panama, etc., Tel. Co. v. India Rubber, etc., Co., 10 Ch. App. 515; Bent v. Priest, 86 Mo. 475). See also Williams v. Moore-Gaunt Co., 3 Ga. App. 756.

In Hogle v. Meyering, 161 Mich.

472, where the agent having an undisclosed option upon property, misrepresented to the principal the price at which it could be purchased and procured its purchase by the principal for a price higher than the option price, keeping the surplus himself, it was held that he forfeited his commission and must restore it, and must also restore the surplus amount of his principal's money which he had so obtained. See also Watson v. Bayliss, 62 Wash. 329, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1210.

⁷³ Burnham City Lumber Co. v. Rannie, 59 Fla. 179; Cannell v. Smith, 142 Pa. St. 25, 12 L. R. A. 395.

⁷⁴ See Subd. VI of this chapter.

⁷⁵ See Neilson v. Bowman, 29 Gratt. (Va.) 732; Newstead v. Rowe, 3 Sask. L. R. 176.

able, as it would do if the agent were himself personally interested, will still make the agent liable to the principal for any losses which he has proximately sustained thereby.⁷⁶ Frequent illustrations are found in the cases in which agents for the sale of property, and the ⁷⁶ See, Hegenmyer v. Marks, 37 Minn. 6, 5 Am. St. Rep. 808; Smitz v. Leopold, 51 Minn. 455; Schick v. Suttle, 94 Minn. 135; Holmes v. Cathcart, 88 Minn. 213, 97 Am. St. Rep. 513, 60 L. R. A. 734; Carpenter v. Fisher, 175 Mass. 9; Emmons v. Alvord, 177 Mass. 466; Prince v. Dupuy, 163 Ill. 417; Kramer v. Winslow, 130 Pa. 484, 17 Am. St. Rep. 782; Humbird v. Davis, 210 Pa. 311; Calmon v. Sarraille, 142 Cal. 638; Duryea v. Vosburgh, 138 N. Y. 621; Williams v. Moore-Gaunt Co., 3 Ga. App. 756; Leonard v. Omstead, 141 Iowa, 485; Durward v. Hubbell, 149 Iowa, 722; Rorebeck v. Van Eaton, 90 Iowa, 82; Hindle v. Holcomb, 34 Wash. 336; Warren v. Burt, 7 C. C. A. 105, 58 Fed. 101; Ritchey v. McMichael (Cal.), 35 Pac. 151.

Duty to disclose identity of purchaser.—The identity of the purchaser may often be a matter of consequence to the principal, and when it appears to be so the agent should disclose it. But an agent authorized to sell to any purchaser he could find, is not guilty of fraud in not disclosing the identity of a prospective purchaser, where the principals did not ask or make any inquiry concerning who such purchaser was and some of them, at least, admitted that they did not care. Rank v. Garvey, 66 Neb. 767. To like effect: Ranney v. Henry, 160 Mich. 597. Compare Spinks v. Clark, 147 Cal. 439.

Duty to disclose identity of seller. Agent as seller. Where, without the knowledge and consent of the principal, an agent to buy property sells his own property to the principal, the latter may rescind and recover what he paid. Disbrow v. Secor, 58 Conn. 35.

Where an agent for the exchange of lands puts his own land in without his principal's knowledge or consent, the trade is voidable. McLain v. Parker, 229 Mo. 68.

Duty of broker seeking employment to disclose facts respecting a proposed purchaser.—In Larson v. Thoma, 143 Iowa, 338, it was held that the broker was not under such duty to disclose where his prior information consisted merely of the facts that a particular person was desirous of obtaining land of that sort, that he was aware of the location of principal's tract, and intending to inspect the same, and that he had applied to the broker in regard to buying such a tract.

Duty to disclose agent's previous relations to property.—Where a person has an option to purchase land but elects not to exercise it, he is not thereafter disqualified to become the agent of another person to purchase the land, and the existence of this former option is held not to be such a material fact that he is bound in good faith to disclose it to such principal, where there was no difference between the option price and the price at which the principal bought. Carpenter v. Fisher, 175 Mass. 9.

Failure of agent to disclose that he was indorser upon notes assumed and paid by principal.—An agent acting for his principal in the exchange of lands was already an endorser of notes secured by a mortgage upon the land which his principal received, and which mortgage the principal assumed and afterwards paid. The agent did not disclose the fact of such endorsement to his principal. Held, that while this was a circumstance which might be taken into account, it did not constitute fraud per se; neither did it show that the agent had brought about the satisfaction of his debt with the property or funds like, have permitted the principal to sell his property at a certain price without informing him of what the agent knew, namely, that he could procure better terms.⁷⁷

§ 1208. Agent liable for misrepresentations.—A fortiori will the agent be liable to his principal where, to induce the principal to make the contract, in order, for example, that the agent may earn his commissions, the agent has made false representations to the principal concerning the material facts relating to the transaction, and has thereby induced the principal to deal to his detriment.⁷⁸ of the principal. Beatty v. Bulger, 28 Tex. Civ. App. 117.

Failure to inform principal that agent was paying taxes which debtor should have paid.—Where agents for collection of interest upon a loan secured by mortgage neglected to inform the principal for several years that the debtor was not paying the interest or taxes, and that the agent himself was paying the money, any loss by depreciation of the security during this time (in which the principal could have foreclosed if he had known the facts) must fall upon the agent. Bush v. Froelich, 14 S. D. 62.

Duty to disclose facts relating to proposed change in contract with agent.—While the agent is negotiating with his proposed principal with reference to becoming his agent the parties are dealing at arm's length and no fiduciary relation as yet exists, but, when the relation is once entered upon, a fiduciary relation is created, and it is then the duty of the agent to fully disclose the facts where he is seeking to uphold a subsequent modification of the contract in his favor. Neilson v. Bowman, 29 Gratt. (Va.) 732.

Sub-agents and assistant attorneys "are the agents and attorneys of the principal and client, it matters not by whom they were employed, and are subject to all the obligations of agency or attorneyship toward their principal or client, in so far as the information acquired by them during the exercise of the agency, is concerned." Dorr v. Camden, 55 W. Va. 226, 65 L. R. A. 348.

An agent to sell owes no duty to report to his principal an offer which the principal has already said he would not accept. Burchell v. Gourie, etc., Collieries, [1910] A. C. 614.

⁷⁷ See Holmes v. Cathcart, Leonard v. Omstead, and many other cases cited in the preceding note. Also Snell v. Goodlander, 90 Minn. 533.

⁷⁸ Varner v. Interstate Exchange, 138 Iowa, 201; Tate v. Aitken, 5 Cal. App. 505.

Agent who misrepresents the price at which property can be purchased, and keeps the excess, is liable to the principal for the amount. Pouppirt v. Greenwood, 48 Colo. 405; Hindel v. Holcomb, 34 Wash. 336. Principal may also recover the commissions paid the agent. Palmer v. Pirson, 4 N. Y. Misc. 455. The measure of damages for false representations made by an agent is the difference between the value as represented and the value in fact. Durward v. Hubbell, 149 Iowa, 722.

Where an agent for the purchase of land for the joint account of himself and his principal, misrepresents the price to be paid, tells the principal that he is himself contributing as much as the principal, whereas he buys the land for one-third of the principal's contribution, keeps the residue, and pays nothing himself, he is liable to the principal for the whole amount. McLain v. Parker, 229 Mo. 68.

And where the principal, before the discovery of the agent's double dealing, has bound himself by contract to the other party, he need not, it is held, rescind the contract, but may perform it, and then recover of the agent damages for the loss he has sustained.⁷⁹

§ 1209. Agent may not take advantage of confidential information acquired in the business to make profit at principal's expense.—Moreover, it is frequently said that an agent will not be permitted, during the continuance of his agency, to take advantage of the knowledge of the principal's situation, needs, or desires, which knowledge he acquires by reason of his employment and in a confidential capacity, to compete with or undermine his principal's interest by acquiring for himself that which the principal deems it necessary or desirable to acquire for his own interest or protection.

Whether so wide a proposition as that can be maintained or not, there seem to be a variety of cases in which the law will not permit the agent to acquire for himself rights or estates in which the principal has a present or potential interest, and which, though the agent may not owe a duty to his principal to acquire for him, the duty of loyalty will forbid his acquiring for himself to the prejudice of the principal. Thus, such an agent will not be permitted to acquire, on his own account, a lease of the principal's premises which he knows the principal desires and intends to renew.⁸⁰ An agent, employed to investigate and make an abstract of his principal's title, will not be permitted to conceal a defect therein which he thus discovers, and buy in and enforce the outstanding claim on his own account.⁸¹ An agent

Where an agent, employed in the sale of land, represented to his principal that he had received the cash deposit called for by the contract, whereas he had taken the worthless note of the vendee, the agent is liable to the principal for the amount of the deposit; and it is immaterial that the principal, on the vendee's default, resold at such a price that he lost nothing by the breach of that contract. Wood v. Blaney, 107 Cal. 291.

⁷⁹ Great Western Gold Co. v. Chambers, 153 Cal. 307.

⁸⁰ Davis v. Hamlin, 108 Ill. 39, 48 Am. Rep. 541; Essex Trust Co. v. Enwright, — Mass. —, 102 N. E. 441. See also, Grumley v. Webb, 44 Mo. 444, 100 Am. Dec. 304.

An agent hired to give his entire time to securing oil land leases for his principal will not be permitted while so employed to take and hold leases on his own account except with the full knowledge and consent of the principal. Fox v. Simons, 251 Ill. 316.

But in Lempriere v. Ware, 2 Vict. 1, it was held that an agent, who in the course of his agency had learned the value of lands, was not thereby disqualified from buying them at a public sale, thereby being no duty on his part to pay them for the principal, and it not being a case in which the principal had a preferential right.

⁸¹ Ringo v. Binns, 10 Peters (35 U. S.) 269, 9 L. Ed. 520; Vallette v. Te-

of a mining company who discovers defects in the location of its claim will not be permitted to take advantage of the situation, to re-locate it in his own name.⁸²

§ 1210. — After termination of agency.—Even though the relation has terminated, the disability in this respect may still continue. Thus in one case it is said: "The duty of an attorney to be true to his client, or of an agent to be faithful to his principal, does not cease when the employment ends, and it cannot be renounced at will by the termination of the relation. It is as sacred and inviolable after as before the expiration of its term." In this case it was held that an agent who, by reason of his employment to assist his principals in selling lands in a tract on which they had an option and which they were exploiting, had learned of the location, value and possibilities of the tract and who were its owners, would not be allowed, by resigning his agency, to purchase the land on his own account and thus defeat his principal's purposes. He was charged as a trustee.⁸³

§ 1211. Information respecting trade secrets, names of customers, etc.—So where the agent acquires information respecting trade secrets, formulae, lists of customers, and the like, under an express or implied contract not to disclose it,⁸⁴ or under such circumstances as

dens, 122 Ill. 607, 3 Am. St. Rep. 502.

Same effect: Eoff v. Irvine, 108 Mo. 378, 32 Am. St. Rep. 609.

⁸² Largey v. Bartlett, 18 Mont. 265. See also Fisher v. Seymour, 23 Colo. 542; Lockhart v. Rollins, 2 Idaho, 540.

See also Cragin v. Powell, 128 U. S. 691, 32 L. Ed. 566.

⁸³ Trice v. Comstock, 57 C. C. A. 646, 121 Fed. 620, 61 L. R. A. 176. To same effect: Dennison v. Aldrich, 114 Mo. App. 700.

In Eoff v. Irvine, 108 Mo. 378, 32 Am. St. Rep. 609, the same doctrine was applied to prevent an attorney from buying and holding land in which his client was interested, merely by terminating his relation as attorney.

Where an agent has sold to his principal the benefit of certain information he cannot be allowed later to use it to his own advantage to defeat the principal. Winn v. Dillon, 27 Miss. 494.

In Bemis v. Plato, 119 Iowa, 127, a former agent for the payment of taxes was permitted to hold under a tax title acquired by him where it appeared that the agency had ended before this tax matured and its non-payment was due to no fault on his part.

⁸⁴ See Thum v. Tloczynski, 114 Mich. 149, 68 Am. St. Rep. 469, 38 L. R. A. 200 (injunction granted to restrain defendant from disclosing the processes of manufacture of a sticky fly paper in violation of implied contract); Fralich v. Despar, 165 Pa. 24 (injunction granted against disclosure of trade secrets, there being an express written contract never to divulge the same); Reichenbach v. Eastman Kodak Co., 79 Hun (N. Y.), 183 (injunction granted where defendants, some of whom were under express agreement, had organized a company to use the trade secrets in question, and to compete with the plaintiff company); Peabody v. Nor- made it confidential,⁸⁵ he, and his confederates usually, may be restrained, either during or after the determination of the agency, from practically appropriating this property of the principal by using the information so acquired to the principal's detriment.

§ 1212. — Ordinary experience learned in the business.— This rule, however, will not apply to the experience, skill or training which the agent acquires in the ordinary course of his agency. "Every agent," it is said, "has a lawful right to carry with him into a new employment all the skill and knowledge acquired in his previous engagements and nothing short of an express contract on his part not to do so, will debar him, and then only under the strict rules of law especially established to protect trade secrets."⁸⁶ folk, 98 Mass. 452, 96 Am. Dec. 664 (injunction granted; express contract not to disclose); Wiggins Sons Co. v. Cott-A-Lap Co., 169 Fed. 150 (injunction not allowed because it did not appear that there was immediate danger of a disclosure as alleged); Salomon v. Hertz, 40 N. J. E. 400 (injunction granted restraining a disclosure of tanning processes, but as to information regarding customers and prices the court held that the restriction thereon lasted only during the continuance of the employment).

See also Vulcan Detinning Co. v. American Can Co., 72 N. J. Eq. 387, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 102; Stone v. Goss, etc., Co., 65 N. J. Eq. 756, 103 Am. St. Rep. 794, 63 L. R. A. 344; Philadelphia Extracting Co. v. Keystone Extracting Co., 176 Fed. 830; Lord v. Smith, 109 Md. 42; Little v. Gallus, 4 N. Y. App. Div. 569; Morison v. Moat, 9 Hare, 241.

But in Taylor Iron Co. v. Nichols, 73 N. J. E. 684, 133 Am. St. R. 753, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 933, an injunction to restrain disclosure of secrets was denied, because, the contract not to divulge was too broad; and because, the time limit in the contract did not correspond with the time of the plaintiff's exclusive control of some of the secrets in question.

⁸⁵ In a variety of cases, the former agent has been restrained from using lists of customers, codes, diagrams, patterns, catalogues, price lists, etc., which constituted the principal's property, and which the agent acquired or copied, without his principal's consent to their subsequent use, while he was in the principal's employment. See Merryweather v. Moore, [1892] 2 Ch. 518 (patterns); Robb v. Green, [1895] 2 Q. B. 1, 315 (list of customers); Louis v. Smellie, 73 L. T. Rep. 226 (list of agents); Lamb v. Evans, [1893] 1 Ch. 218 (memoranda, lists, and material from principal's catalogues); Simmons Hardware Co. v. Waibel, 1 S. D. 488, 36 Am. St. R. 755, 11 L. R. A. 267 (code of price marks); Stevens v. Stiles, 29 R. I. 399, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 933, 17 Ann. Cas. 140 (list of patrons); Summers v. Boyce, 97 L. T. Rep. 505.

See also Kirchner v. Gruban, [1909] 1 Ch. 413.

Agent will not be allowed to register as his own the principal's trade marks. Munoz v. Struckmann, 9 Philipp. 52.

⁸⁶ New Era Gas Co. v. Shannon, 44 Ill. App. 477.

As to the right of the agent, after the termination of his agency, to solicit the business of the patrons of his former principal with whom he had become acquainted during the agency, see Proctor v. Mahin, 93 Fed. 875 (holding that he may do so). Compare Trego v. Hunt, [1896] App. Cas. 7.

§ 1213. — Information leading to outside profit.—In a partnership case, in which the firm claimed the right to profits made by one partner as the result of information which he acquired as a partner, it was said by Lindley, L. J., "As regards the use by a partner of information acquired by him in the course of the transaction of partnership business, or by reason of his connection with the firm, the principle is that if he avails himself of it for any purpose which is within the scope of the partnership business, or of any competing business, the profits of which belong to the firm, he must account to the firm for any benefits which he may have derived from such information, but there is no principle or authority which entitles a firm to benefits derived by a partner from the use of information for purposes which are wholly without the scope of the firm's business."⁸⁷

§ 1214. — Information leading to patents or inventions.—So far as patents for inventions made by others than the agent are concerned, they stand upon no different footing with respect of the questions considered in this chapter than any other species of property; but patents for inventions made by the agent, even though made during the agency, and even though the agent's attention to the matter was the result of the knowledge or information acquired in the principal's business, are not regarded as a fruit of the agency within the rules here being dealt with, and the principal cannot have them merely as the result of the relation. There must be an employment to make the inventions or a contract that the principal shall have them.⁸⁸

§ 1215. Agent employed to settle claim, may not buy and enforce it against his principal.—The principles now being considered find further illustration in the rule that an agent, who is employed to settle or compromise a claim against his principal, will not be permitted to avail himself of the benefit of a favorable settlement, by purchasing the claim himself at a discount and enforcing it against his principal for the full amount.⁸⁹

⁸⁷ Aas v. Benham, [1891] 2 Ch. 244. Followed in Latta v. Kilbourn, 150 U. S. 524, 37 L. Ed. 1169.

See also Trego v. Hunt, supra.

⁸⁸ American Circular Loom Co. v. Wilson, 198 Mass. 182, 126 Am. St. Rep. 409; Dalzell v. Dueber Watch Case Co., 149 U. S. 315, 37 L. Ed. 749; Hapgood v. Hewitt, 119 U. S. 226, 30 L. Ed. 369; Solomons v. United States, 137 U. S. 342, 34 L. Ed. 667;

Pressed Steel Car Co. v. Hansen, 71 C. C. A. 207, 137 Fed. 403, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1172; Deane v. Hodge, 35 Minn. 146, 59 Am. Rep. 321; Burr v. De La Vergne, 102 N. Y. 415.

See also National Wire Bound Box Co. v. Healy, 110 C. C. A. 613, 189 Fed. 49.

⁸⁹ Davis v. Smith, 43 Vt. 269; Case v. Carroll, 35 N. Y. 385; Albertson v. Fellows, 45 N. J. Eq. 306, 17 Atl. 816;

Thus where two partners who were financially embarrassed employed an agent to assist them in settling with their creditors, and the agent, while so employed, purchased an outstanding claim against the firm, at a large discount, but did not disclose the fact of the discount to his employers, who gave him their note for the full amount of the claim, it was held that the benefit of the discount inured to the principals, and that there was a failure of consideration of the notes to that extent.⁹⁰

§ 1216. Agent may not acquire rights against his principal based on his own neglect or default.—It is the duty of the agent to protect the interest of his principal confided to his care. He will not therefore, be permitted to build up in himself rights and interests against his principal based upon his own neglect or default in the performance of his duty.

Thus an agent whose duty it is to pay the taxes or other charges upon his principal's lands, cannot by neglecting to pay such taxes or charges acquire a valid title to the lands upon a sale of them for the non-payment thereof, and, if such purchase be made, the agent will be deemed to hold it in trust for his principal.⁹¹ This rule applies although the duty of paying the taxes is not directly imposed. It is enough that such a course puts the interests of the agent, in the course of his agency, in conflict with those of the principal,—a result which it is his duty to avoid. Thus an agent authorized to care for, or to manage, or to sell his principal's real estate, will not be permitted to acquire adverse interests by purchasing the same at a tax sale.⁹² Nor

Quinn v. Le Due (N. J. Eq.), 51 Atl. 199; Smith v. Brotherline, 62 Pa. 461; Reed v. Norris, 2 Myl. & C. 361.

⁹⁰ Noyes v. Landon, 59 Vt. 569.

⁹¹ Curts v. Cigna, 7 Biss. (U. S. C. C.) 260, Fed. Cas. No. 3,507; Franks v. Morris, 9 W. Va. 664; Barton v. Moss, 32 Ill. 50; Oldhams v. Jones, 5 B. Mon. (Ky.) 458; Krutz v. Fisher, 8 Kan. 90; Matthews v. Light, 32 Me. 305; Huzzard v. Trego, 36 Pa. 9; Bartholemew v. Leech, 7 Watts (Penn.), 472; Young v. Goodhue, 106 Iowa, 447; Stanley v. McConnell, 64 Ill. App. 591; Fox v. Zimmerman, 77 Wis. 414; McMahon v. McGraw, 26 Wis. 614; Curtis v. Borland, 35 W. Va. 124; Siers v. Wiseman, 58 W. Va. 340; Backus v. Cowley, 162 Mich. 585; Hudson v. Herman, 81 Kan. 627;

Gamble v. Hamilton, 31 Fla. 401; Knupp v. Brooks, 200 Pa. 494.

In Enslen v. Allen, 160 Ala. 529, an agent authorized to manage property, collect rents, etc., arranged and hastened the foreclosure of an outstanding mortgage, and bought in the property at the sale. Held, that the agent was constructive trustee for the principal.

That agency involving payment of taxes may be found from conduct and circumstances and the presumed continuance of prior agency. See Siers v. Wiseman; Gamble v. Hamilton; Knupp v. Brooks, supra.

⁹² Ellsworth v. Cordrey, 63 Iowa, 675; Collins v. Rainey, 42 Ark. 531; Woodman v. Davis, 32 Kan. 344.

will an agent employed to loan money on mortgage securities, and owing a duty to look after and supervise such loans, and collect and remit installments of principal and interest, be permitted to undermine the securities so taken by buying, for himself or another, the mortgaged property at tax sales.⁹³

§ 1217. — The mere fact that the principal has not furnished the agent with the money with which to pay the taxes, makes no difference,⁹⁴ nor will the neglect of the principal to reimburse the agent for money expended in such a purchase, authorize him to acquire and hold the title, unless he has first made a full and complete renunciation of his agency.⁹⁵

Where the agent was supplied with funds, either directly or through collections, etc., in his hands, and available for the purpose, with which to pay the taxes, the principal may compel a cancellation or conveyance without tendering to the agent the amount paid by him;⁹⁶ but, where the agent was not so supplied, a tender of reimbursement is essential.⁹⁷

For reasons similar to those which apply to the tax case, an agent employed to do the annual assessment work on a mining claim, will not be permitted, after having thus lulled his principal into a sense of security, to defeat his interests by omitting to do the work and thereby causing his principal's claim to lapse, and then relocating the mine in his own name and on his own account.⁹⁸

⁹³ Abrams v. Wingo (Kan. App.), 59 Pac. 661; Dana v. Duluth Trust Co., 99 Wis. 663; Bush v. Froelich, 14 S. D. 62; Gonzalia v. Bartelsman, 143 Ill. 634.

⁹⁴ Bowman v. Officer, 53 Iowa, 640; Page v. Webb (Ky.), 7 S. W. 308.

⁹⁵ Bowman v. Officer, supra; McMahon v. McGraw, 26 Wis. 614; Krutz v. Fisher, 8 Kan. 90.

But in Eckrote v. Myers, 41 Iowa, 324, where an attorney was retained to foreclose a mortgage and in so doing expended money for necessary fees which the client not only refused to pay, but made no response whatever to repeated demands, it was held that the attorney, after a lapse of three years, was entirely justified in purchasing the property at a tax sale and that the client could not, seven years subsequently, have the deed set aside.

Although an attorney employed to collect a note may be liable in damages for not properly docketing a judgment so as to make it a lien upon the debtor's land, he is not, because of such negligence, to be charged as a trustee if, after the termination of the relation and the death of the client, he buys the land at a tax sale. Farrand v. Land & River Impr. Co., 30 C. C. A. 128, 86 Fed. 393.

⁹⁶ Fox v. Zimmerman, 77 Wis. 414, 46 N. W. 533; Dana v. Duluth Trust Co., 99 Wis. 663, 75 N. W. 429; Young v. Goodhue, 106 Iowa, 447, 76 N. W. 822.

⁹⁷ Bush v. Froelich, 14 S. D. 62, 84 N. W. 230.

⁹⁸ Argentine Mining Co. v. Benedict, 18 Utah, 183, 55 Pac. 559; O'Neill v. Otero, 15 N. M. 707, 133 Pac. 614.

§ 1218. Agent may not acquire adverse rights in principal's property confided to his care.—The rule stated in the preceding section may be given a still wider range. For, it is well settled that the agent may not, during the continuance of his agency, acquire adverse rights in the property or interests of his principal which were confided to his care and which would be defeated or impaired by the enforcement of the interest acquired by the agent. To hold otherwise is to say that an agent, who has undertaken a duty with reference to certain interests of his principal, may practically render the performance of that duty impossible by acquiring for himself that which formed the occasion and foundation of it. Even though there may be no specific duty like that to pay taxes, referred to in the preceding section, the general duty to protect his principal's property, and to be loyal to his interests, requires that any acquisition of outstanding rights or interests in the principal's property concerning which the agent has undertaken a duty, the performance of which would be inconsistent with the agent's claims, shall be deemed to have been made on the principal's account, and the principal may have the benefit on reimbursing the agent for his outlay.⁹⁹

§ 1219. — Thus, as stated in the preceding section, the agent authorized to sell, care for, or manage his principal's lands or securities will not be permitted to acquire and hold adverse tax titles, even though he was not charged specifically with the duty to pay taxes.¹⁰⁰ So an agent authorized to manage and sell lands will not be permitted to acquire a title to them by bidding them in at a mortgage sale.¹ Nor, as has been seen, will an agent whose duty it is to buy up and remove an outstanding claim against his principal's title, be permitted to buy it in his own name and enforce it against his principal.² Nor can an agent employed to settle a debt against his ⁹⁹ Robertson v. Chapman, 152 U. S. 673, 38 L. Ed. 592; Dana v. Duluth Trust Co., 99 Wis. 663; Bush v. Froelich, 14 S. Dak. 62; Abrams v. Wingo, 9 Kan. App. 884; McKinley v. Williams, 20 C. C. A. 312, 74 Fed. 94.

An agent to rent lands and have the care of the property cannot make himself a tenant of any part of the land or the owner of a crop grown thereon without his principal's consent. Paige v. Akins, 112 Cal. 401; Moneta v. Hoffman, 249 Ill. 56.

¹⁰⁰ Dana v. Duluth Trust Co., 99

Wis. 663; Bush v. Froelich, 14 S. Dak. 62; Abrams v. Wingo, 9 Kan. App. 884.

¹ Adams v. Sayre, 70 Ala. 318.

Agent owing duties to acquire, sell or manage a mining claim will not be permitted to relocate it for himself. Largey v. Bartlett, 18 Mont. 265; Fisher v. Seymour, 23 Colo. 542; Lockhart v. Rollins, 2 Idaho, 503.

² Smith v. Brotherline, 62 Pa. 461; Case v. Carroll, 35 N. Y. 385; Witte v. Storm, 236 Mo. 470.

principal, be permitted to take an assignment of it to himself and enforce it against his principal.³

So, if an agent discovers a defect in his principal's title, he cannot use it to acquire a title for himself; and if he does so, he will be deemed to be a trustee holding for his principal.⁴

If an agent wishes to acquire such a title, he must first make an unambiguous relinquishment of his agency,⁵ and if any doubt exists as to whether he had done so, it will be solved in the principal's favor.⁶

§ 1220. These rules cannot be defeated by usage.—The law will not permit these important safeguards to be easily defeated. Hence it has been held that the rule that an agent who undertakes to act for his principal may not, without the latter's consent, in the same matter act for himself, cannot be avoided upon the authority of any local or temporary usage of which the principal was ignorant and which he had no reason to anticipate.⁷

§ 1221. Agent may purchase, sell, etc., with principal's consent.—It is not to be inferred, however, that there is any inherent incapacity in an agent to purchase from his principal or to sell to him. Where the facts are fully disclosed, and the agent acts in good faith, taking no advantage of his situation, the principal may, if he sees fit, deal with the agent as with any other person.⁸

The same thing is true where the question is as to the capacity of the agent to buy for himself that which it would ordinarily be his duty to buy for his principal. If the principal, with full knowledge, consents to it, there can be no objection.⁹

But, as is said in a recent case,¹⁰ "while a transaction of the character disclosed is not necessarily voidable at the election of the prin-

³ Reed v. Norris, 2 My. & C. 361.

⁴ Ringo v. Binns, 10 Pet. (U. S.) 269, 9 L. Ed. 420; Vallette v. Tedens, 122 Ill. 607, 3 Am. St. Rep. 502.

⁵ Continental L. Ins. Co. v. Perry, 65 Iowa, 709.

⁶ Fountain Coal Co. v. Phelps, 95 Ind. 271.

⁷ Butcher v. Krauth, 14 Bush (Ky.), 713; Ferguson v. Gooch, 94 Va. 1; Robison v. Mollett, L. R., 7 H. of L., 802; reversing same case, L. R., 5 C. P. 646, and L. R., 7 C. P. 84; Commonwealth v. Cooper, 130 Mass. 285; Farnsworth v. Hemmer, 1 Allen (Mass.), 494, 79 Am. Dec. 758; Walker v. Osgood, 98 Mass. 348, 93

Am. Dec. 168; Raisin v. Clark, 41 Md. 158, 20 Am. Rep. 66; Bartram v. Lloyd, 88 L. T. 286.

See also Van Dusen-Harrington Co. v. Jungeblut, 75 Minn. 298, 74 Am. St. R. 463, where a custom of the particular market was held to justify it.

⁸ Rochester v. Levering, 104 Ind. 562; Fisher's Appeal, 34 Pa. 29; Uhllich v. Muhlke, 61 Ill. 499; Burke v. Bours (Cal.), 26 Pac. 102.

⁹ American Mortgage Co. v. Williams, — Ark. —, 145 S. W. 234.

¹⁰ Rochester v. Levering, supra, citing: McCormick v. Malin, 5 Blackf. (Ind.) 509, 522; Cook v. Burlin, etc., Co., 43 Wis. 433; Porter v. Woodruff, principal, a court of equity, upon grounds of public policy, will nevertheless subject it to the severest scrutiny. Its purpose will be to see that the agent, by reason of the confidence reposed in him by the principal, secures to himself no advantage from the contract. When the transaction is seasonably challenged, a presumption of its invalidity arises, and the agent then assumes the burden of making it affirmatively appear that he dealt fairly, and in the strictest of faith imparted to his principal all the information concerning the property possessed by him. The confidential relation and the transaction having been shown, the onus is upon the agent to show that the bargain was fair and equitable; that he gave all the advice within his knowledge pertaining to the subject of the sale and the value of the property; and that there was no suppression or concealment which might have influenced the conduct of the principal."

If, therefore, it does not appear that the principal was fully informed,¹¹ and a fortiori where the agent has practiced concealment, evasion, or misrepresentation, the transaction cannot stand.¹²

36 N. J. Eq. 174; Young v. Hughes, 32 N. J. Eq. 372; Farnum v. Brooks, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 212; Moore v. Mandelbaum, 8 Mich. 433.

¹¹ The burden is upon the agent to show that the principal had knowledge and gave his free consent. Tyler v. Sanborn, 128 Ill. 136, 15 Am. St. Rep. 97, 4 L. R. A. 218; Webb v. Marks, 10 Colo. App. 429; Rubidoex v. Parks, 48 Cal. 215; Alwood v. Mansfield, 59 Ill. 496; McKinley v. Williams, 74 Fed. 94, 20 C. C. A. 312; Boyd v. Jacobs, 7 Tex. Civ. App. 131; Wells v. Cochran, 84 Neb. 278; Ingle v. Hartman, 37 Iowa, 274; Green v. Peeso, 92 Iowa, 261; and cases cited in preceding note.

Purchase by agent who was not agent to sell.—In Collar v. Ford, 45 Iowa, 331, it was held that a person who had been requested by a non-resident owner of land to ascertain and report the amount of taxes due upon it, did not thereby become such an agent that, if he bought the land, he was bound to disclose its value. (See comments in Green v. Peeso, 92 Iowa, 261.)

And in Douglass v. Lougee, 147

Iowa, 406, it is held that one who was merely agent to lease and collect rents was not obliged, on buying the property of his principal, to disclose to the principal what he knew about its value. But this case is not very convincing, to say the least.

¹² Jansen v. Williams, 36 Neb. 869, 20 L. R. A. 207; Van Dusen v. Bigelow, 13 N. D. 277, 67 L. R. A. 288; Rogers v. French, 122 Iowa, 18; Clark v. Bird, 66 App. Div. (N. Y.) 284; McKinley v. Williams, supra.

An agent for sale of lands, by misrepresenting to his principal the value and prospect of sale, secured conveyance to himself of land and crops for much less than value. Held, sale may be set aside. Green v. Peeso, 92 Iowa, 261, relying particularly upon Savage v. Savage, 12 Ore. 459, and Rochester v. Levering, 104 Ind. 562.

See also Fisher v. Lee, 94 Iowa, 611, where sale to agent was set aside because he had not disclosed all the facts affecting value. So in Cornwell v. Foord, 96 Ill. App. 366, where agent purchased, not disclosing better offers which he had received.

§ 1222. Principal may ratify act.—It is not infrequently said, in discussing the questions now under consideration, that the agent's act is void. No more is meant by this, however, than that the act is voidable at the principal's election. The rule is designed for the principal's protection, and, like other similar rules, its benefit may be waived if the principal sees fit to do so.¹³ If he is satisfied with the act, after full knowledge, no one else can complain. He may expressly approve and enforce the contract against the agent; or here, as in other cases, his ratification may be presumed if he does not repudiate it within a reasonable time after the facts come to his knowledge.¹⁴

It does not lie in the agent's mouth to say, when his principal elects to stand by the contract, that the contract was void because of his own default or breach of duty.

§ 1223. Gratuitous agents—Volunteers.—The fact that the agent acted gratuitously makes no difference in the application of these rules.¹⁵ Neither does the fact that he was a volunteer whose services had been accepted.¹⁶ In either case if he undertakes to act as agent, he must act with loyalty to the principal's interest. He must, however, actually be agent; otherwise no confidential relation will arise.¹⁷

§ 1224. Profits made in the course of the agency belong to the principal.—The well settled and salutary principle that a person who undertakes to act for another shall not, in the same matter, act for himself, results also in the other rule, that all profits made and advantage gained by the agent in the execution of the agency belong

¹³ Boyd v. Jacobs, 7 Tex. Civ. App. 131; Bartelson v. Vanderhoff, 96 Minn. 184.

¹⁴ Marsh v. Whitmore, 21 Wall. (U. S.) 178, 22 L. Ed. 482; Eastern Bank v. Taylor, 41 Ala. 72; Bassett v. Brown, 105 Mass. 551; Disbrow v. Secor, 58 Conn. 35; Wenham v. Switzer, 51 Fed. 351; U. S. Rolling Stock Co. v. Atlantic, etc., R. Co., 34 Ohio St. 450, 32 Am. Rep. 380; Anderson v. First Nat. Bank, 5 N. Dak. 451.

But full knowledge of the facts is indispensable. Boyd v. Jacobs, 7 Tex. Civ. App. 131, and long silence will not amount to a ratification where there was neither actual knowledge nor anything to arouse suspicion. Barnett v. Daw, 55 N. Y. App. Div. 202.

But where the principal with knowledge refuses to act while the matter is still executory, he cannot afterward complain. Bartelson v. Vanderhoff, 96 Minn. 184.

¹⁵ Hunsaker v. Sturgis, 29 Cal. 142; Bergner v. Bergner, 219 Pa. 113; Rankin v. Porter, 7 Watts (Pa.), 387; Smitz v. Leopold, 51 Minn. 455; Thalman v. Canon, 24 N. J. Eq. 127; Battelle v. Cushing, 21 D. C. 59; Marshall v. Ferguson, 94 Mo. App. 175; Criswell v. Riley, 5 Ind. App. 496.

¹⁶ Salisbury v. Ware, 183 Ill. 505; Dennis v. McCagg, 32 Ill. 429; Watson v. Steel Co., 15 Ill. App. 509; Kevane v. Miller, 4 Cal. App. 598; Satterthwaite v. Loomis, 81 Tex. 64. But compare Walton v. Dore, 113 Iowa, 1, cited post, § 1235.

¹⁷ Brinson v. Exley, 122 Ga. 8; Walton v. Dore, supra.

to the principal. And it matters not whether such profit or advantage be the result of the performance or of the violation of the duty of the agent if it be the fruit of the agency. If his duty be strictly performed, the resulting profit accrues to the principal as the legitimate consequence of the relation; if profit accrues from his violation of duty while executing the agency, that likewise belongs to the principal, not only because the principal has to assume the responsibility of the transaction, but also because the agent cannot be permitted to derive advantage from his own default.¹⁸

It is only by rigid adherence to this rule that all temptation can be removed from one acting in a fiduciary capacity, to abuse his trust or seek his own advantage in the position which it affords him.

§ 1225. — It matters not how fair the conduct of the agent may have been in the particular case, nor that the principal would have been no better off if the agent had strictly pursued his authority, nor that the principal was not in fact injured by the intervention of the agent for his own benefit. The result is still the same. If the agent dealing legitimately with the subject-matter of his agency, acquires a profit; or if by departing from his instructions, he obtains a better result than would have been obtained by following them, the principal may claim the advantage thus obtained, even though the agent may have contributed his own funds or responsibility in producing the result. All profits and every advantage beyond lawful compensation, made by the agent in the business, or by dealing or speculating with the effects of his principal, though in violation of his duty as agent, and though the loss, if one had occurred, would have fallen on the agent, will, wherever they can be regarded as the fruit or the outgrowth of the agency, be deemed to have been acquired for the benefit of the principal.¹⁹

¹⁸ See Graham v. Cummings, 203 Pa. 516; Humbird v. Davis, 210 Pa. 311, and cases cited in following note.

¹⁹ Leake v. Sutherland, 25 Ark. 219; Forlaw v. Augusta Naval Stores Co., 124 Ga. 261; Jas. T. Hair Co. v. Dailey, 161 Ill. 379; Salsbury v. Ware, 183 Ill. 505; Snow v. Macfarlane, 51 Ill. App. 448; Lafferty v. Jelley, 22 Ind. 471; Ackburg v. McCool, 36 Ind. 473; Krhut v. Phares, 80 Kan. 515; Holmes v. Cathcart, 88 Minn. 213, 97 Am. St. R. 513, 60 L. R. A. 734; Snell v. Goodlander, 90 Minn. 533; Schick

v. Suttle, 94 Minn. 135; Dodd v. Wakeman, 26 N. J. Eq. 484; Davoue v. Fanning, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) Ch. 252; Moore v. Moore, 5 N. Y. 256; Gardner v. Ogden, 22 N. Y. 327, 78 Am. Dec. 192; Dutton v. Willner, 52 N. Y. 312; Price v. Keyes, 62 N. Y. 378; Duryea v. Vosburgh, 138 N. Y. 621; Wilson v. Wilson, 4 Abb. (N. Y.) App. Dec. 621; Densmore v. Searle, 7 N. Y. App. Div. 45; Bartholemew v. Leech, 7 Watts (Pa.), 472; Simons v. Mining Co., 61 Pa. 202, 100 Am. Dec. 628; Coursin's Appeal, 79 Pa. 220; Graham v. Cum-

In such a case the principal may at his option compel the agent to account for or convey to him the profits thus acquired.²⁰ And even though the transaction was outside of the actual purview of the agency, yet if the agent at the time professed to act for the principal and in his behalf, the benefit of the transaction will inure to the principal.²¹

§ 1226. — Illustrations.—In accordance with this rule, where one who while pretending to act as the agent of the purchaser of certain real estate, was in reality acting as the agent of the seller, and received as his compensation from the seller a note given by the purchaser as part of the purchase price, it was held that he should be restrained from enforcing payment of the note, and that it should be delivered up and cancelled.²²

And if the agent, while secretly negotiating a sale of his principal's land or other property to third persons for a large sum, by concealment of the facts as to the value and demand of the property, obtains from his principal a conveyance of it to himself for less than it is worth, and then conveys it to third persons, he will be held to account to his principal for the excess so received.²³

mings, 208 Pa. 516; Moinett v. Days, 56 Tenn. (1 Baxter) 431; Ringo v. Binns, 10 Pet. (35 U. S.) 269, 9 L. Ed. 420; Sandoval v. Randolph, 222 U. S. 161, 56 L. Ed. 48; Keech v. Sandford, 3 Eq. Cas. Abr. (Eng.) 741; Hall v. Noyes, 2 Bro. Ch. (Eng.) 483; Crowe v. Ballard, 2 Bro. Ch. 117; York Buildings Co. v. McKenzie, 3 Paton (Scot.), 378; Herzfelder v. McArthur, [1908] Transv. L. R., S. C. 332.

²⁰ Greenfield Savings Bank v. Simons, 133 Mass. 415; Holman v. Holman, 66 Barb. (N. Y.) 222; Gardner v. Ogden, 22 N. Y. 327, 78 Am. Dec. 192; Dutton v. Willner, 52 N. Y. 312.

²¹ Salsbury v. Ware, 183 Ill. 505; Dennis v. McCagg, 32 Ill. 429; Watson v. Union Iron & Steel Co., 15 Ill. App. 509.

²² Moinett v. Days, 1 Baxt. (Tenn.) 431.

²³ Stoner v. Weiser, 24 Iowa, 434. Defendant undertook to act as agent for non-resident owners of land, supposed to be heavily encumbered with taxes and to be of small value. He assured them he would do for them

"the same as he would for his own folks." Later he reported that he had an offer of $100 (probably mythical, the court thought) and advised plaintiffs to accept it. Acting on his advice, they did so, and, to facilitate the transfer as he claimed, made a deed to his wife. He sent the $100. The proposed sale did not go through, but defendant did not advise plaintiffs of this fact, and kept the deed. Two years later, he recorded this deed to his wife, and sold the land, which had greatly increased in value, to a bona fide purchaser for $6,588. Later he obtained from plaintiffs a new deed, without consideration, "to perfect the title of the purchaser" first reported. He did not advise plaintiffs of the new facts. Held, that he must account for the profits. Smitz v. Leopold, 51 Minn. 455.

In Snell v. Goodlander, 90 Minn. 533, where the agent had taken in his own name the principal's contract to sell land, having represented to him that the real purchaser was buying also one-third of the standing crops, it was held that the agent was not

So if an agent who is authorized to sell land or other property at a given price, succeeds in realizing more than that price for it, the excess belongs to his principal;²⁴ or if, being authorized to purchase at a entitled to the crops under the contract, after the land had been conveyed to the real purchaser.

So where an agent to buy land falsely represented that the seller insisted upon a deed to another lot owned by the principal and thereby secured the principal's signature to a deed made out to himself, it was held that the principal could set aside the deed. Calmon v. Sarraille, 142 Cal. 638.

An agent, having induced his principals to accept in exchange a piece of land which he grossly misrepresented as to value, secured that land, through confederates, and shared in the profits made by later trading of the land of the principals. Held, that the principals were entitled to the profits. Warren v. Burt, 7 C. C. A. 105, 58 Fed. 101.

See also, Duryea v. Vosburgh, 138 N. Y. 621; Prince v. Du Puy, 163 Ill. 417; Smith v. Tyler, 57 Mo. App. 668; Bain v. Brown, 56 N. Y. 285; Savage v. Savage, 12 Ore. 459; Northern Pacific R. R. Co. v. Kindred, 14 Fed. 77; Thompson v. Hallet, 26 Me. 141; Moseley v. Buck, 3 Munf. (Va.) 232, 5 Am. Dec. 508; Bell v. Bell, 3 W. Va. 183; Tate v. Aitken, 5 Cal. App. 505.

²⁴ Merryman v. David, 31 Ill. 404; Kerfoot v. Hyman, 52 Ill. 512; Lewis v. Dennison, 2 App. D. C. 387; Barbar v. Martin, 67 Neb. 445; Tilden v. Blackwell, 94 Ill. App. 605.

In Mulvane v. O'Brien, 58 Kan. 463, the stockholders of a corporation put their stock in the hands of the president with authority to sell at par. He so manipulated as to make a large profit. Held, that he must account to the stockholders for this profit.

In Merrill v. Sax, 141 Iowa, 386, the defendant was entrusted by a group of the stockholders, with the duty of selling their stock. He received an offer which his principals authorized him to accept. To facilitate the sale, the stock itself was assigned to the defendant. The defendant exacted from the purchaser a large bonus. Held, that he must account for this bonus and that the fact that the price was fixed, and that defendant acted gratuitously did not change the result.

See also, Graham v. Cummings, 208 Pa. 516, where the defendant was held to account for a large bonus which he had procured in selling out the stock of himself and the plaintiff to another corporation.

In Humbird v. Davis, 210 Pa. 311, several persons combined to raise a fund to buy a mine; the money was put in the hands of one of the group with authority to purchase. He bought and reported a purchase at a larger sum than, in fact, had been paid. Held, that the agent was bound to answer to his associates for this profit.

In Clifford v. Armstrong, — Ala. —, 58 So. 430, where the agent used the principal's bond of an insolvent company to pay the bonus required for refunding his own stock in the company, it was held that the new stock secured belonged entirely to the principal.

But in Illingworth v. De Mott, 59 N. J. Eq. 8, affirmed, 61 N. J. Eq. 672, it is held that if the agent of the seller fraudulently enters into the employment of the buyer, the latter, while he might rescind the contract or have an action against the agent for damages, can not recover from the agent the profits which the agent received from the seller. "To hold that the purchaser, defrauded by dishonesty of this kind in a person who assumed to act as his agent, can recover the profits fraudulently received as money which belongs to him as given price, he makes the purchase for less;²⁵ or if being employed to settle a claim at a given sum, he obtains a reduction,²⁶ the amount saved belongs to the principal. The same thing is true where an agent to deal upon the best terms he can get, reports less favorable terms than those actually secured, and keeps the difference.²⁷

So where the treasurer of a savings bank who was directed to sell certain rights for not less than a certain price, and to buy shares in a national bank with the proceeds, bought the rights for himself and others at the minimum price, although they could easily have been sold for more, it was held that he must account to his principal for the difference between the minimum price and the price for which they might have been sold.²⁸

As has already been pointed out the fact that the agent acts gratuitously ordinarily makes no difference.²⁹

§ 1227. — Further illustrations—Rebates, commissions, rewards, overcharges.—So where a purchasing agent secures from principal, is to affirm as legal an agency which in its origin was illegal and dishonest. The remedy of the principal in such case is a rescission of the contract for fraud, or an action to recover the loss he has sustained by reason of the fraud. But he cannot recover as money belonging to him in his character as principal, the profits received by an agent who was the seller's agent, and afterwards fraudulently assumed to act as his agent."

²⁵ Bunker v. Miles, 30 Me. 431, 50 Am. Dec. 632; Kanada v. North, 14 Mo. 615; Dolinski v. First Nat. Bank, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 122 S. W. 276; Laurence v. Kilgore, 154 Cal. 310; Hutchinson v. Fleming, 40 Can. S. C. 134.

An agent to buy who, by misrepresentations to his principal as to the price asked by the seller, succeeds in getting a conveyance to himself and then selling to his principal at an advance, must account for the difference. Rorebeck v. Van Eaton, 90 Iowa, 82. To same effect see, Hindle v. Holcomb, 34 Wash. 336.

So where an agent permitted his principal to make an exchange of lands at a certain price, without informing him that the other party would take less for his land, and then bought the land given up by his principal from the other party on the basis of netting to the other party the lower price, thereby making a profit, it was held that the agent must account to the principal for that profit. Leonard v. Omstead, 141 Iowa, 485; White v. Leech (Iowa), 96 N. W. 709, is similar.

One who has undertaken to act as agent to purchase at not exceeding a certain price cannot then avail himself of a previous unexpired option and purchase the property himself at a less price, turn it over to his principal, and keep the difference as profit. Sandoval v. Randolph, 222 U. S. 161, 56 L. Ed. 142.

²⁶ Ante, § 467, and cases cited.

²⁷ Malden & Melrose Gas L. Co. v. Chandler, 211 Mass. 226; Sandoval v. Randolph, 222 U. S. 161, 56 L. Ed. 142 (where agent bought in Mexican money but reported in U. S. money).

²⁸ Greenfield Savings Bank v. Simons, 133 Mass. 415.

²⁹ Merrill v. Sax, 141 Iowa, 386; Smitz v. Leopold, 51 Minn. 455, and other cases cited, ante, § 1223.

those with whom his principal dealt, commissions in consideration of buying goods from them, the principal is entitled to recover from the agent the amount of the commissions thus received.³⁰

Clearly, also, agents for the purchase of land or goods, or the letting of contracts, and the like, who have arranged with the sellers or bidders to increase the expected price and to pay to or divide with the agent this excess, may be compelled to account to the principal for the sums so received.³¹

In the former cases, where what the agent has received is money or property before then belonging to the other party, but which the law gives the principal the right to demand, the agent may be compelled to account for such property or money, but he cannot be charged as a trustee. In the latter cases, however, wherein the agent, through collusion with the other party, receives what was before the principal's property or money, he may be charged as a trustee, and the property or money may be followed as a trust fund.³²

So money paid to the agents of the insured by the agents of the insurer, for taking out the insurance in the companies of the latter, belongs to the principal as a profit of the agency, even though the cost of the insurance to the principal was not thereby enhanced.³³

And one who employs another to pursue and capture a horse thief and pays the person so employed for his services and expenses, will be entitled to receive a reward offered for the apprehension of the thief, which the agent earns by such apprehension.³⁴

³⁰ Lister v. Stubbs, 45 Ch. Div. 1. See also, to same effect: Hay's Case, L. R. 10 Ch. 593; Archer's Case, [1892] 1 Ch. 322; Andrews v. Ramsay, [1903] 2 K. B. 635; Merrill v. Sax, supra; United States v. Carter, 217 U. S. 286, 54 L. Ed. 769; Findlay v. Pertz, 66 Fed. 427, 13 C. C. A. 559, 29 L. R. A. 188; Webb v. McDermott, 3 Ont. W. R. 365 (but see 5 id. 566).

The agent was also held to forfeit his commissions in several of these cases.

See also, Little v. Phipps, 208 Mass. 331, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1046.

³¹ United States v. Carter, 217 U. S. 286, 54 L. Ed. 769; Clinkscales v. Clark, 137 Mo. App. 12; Hogle v. Meyering, 161 Mich. 472; McMillan v. Arthur, 98 N. Y. 167; Weruth v. Lashmett, 82 Neb. 375.

An agent to trade land may be compelled to turn over "boot" money received from third party unless he satisfies the burden of proving that his principal with full knowledge consented. Wells v. Cochran, 84 Neb. 278.

³² See Lister v. Stubbs, supra; United States v. Carter, supra. In Powell v. Jones, [1905] 1 K. B. 11, it is held that the principal cannot recover of the agent a commission which he has stipulated for but not yet received—at least, where the other party was not a party to the action.

³³ Patterson v. Missouri Glass Co., 72 Mo. App. 492.

³⁴ Montgomery County v. Robinson, 85 Ill. 174. In Mitchell v. Sparling,

§ 1228. — Profits must be fruits of the agency.—But in order to entitle the principal to the profits, they must, as stated, be the fruits of the agency. Of transactions outside the scope of the agency and not done as agent, the principal cannot demand the profits, nor charge the agent as a trustee. Even though the agent may have agreed not to do these outside acts, or that, if he did them, he would divide with his principal, he is not to be charged as a trustee. The remedy must be to recover damages for the breach of the contract.³⁵

§ 1229. Whether principal entitled to agent's earnings.—Where the agent undertakes to give his entire time and energies to the principal's business, it will be a breach of duty for him, without the principal's consent, to use the time belonging to the principal in performing services for third persons.³⁶ If, nevertheless, the agent does so, the principal is clearly entitled to damages for any injury thereby caused to his business. Instead of damages, he is, it is held, entitled to receive what the agent has earned,³⁷ and may compel the agent to account to him for it.³⁸ But, as a universal rule, this may not be entirely free from doubt.³⁹

3 Sask. L. R. 213, after an agent for the purchase of land had completed the purchase, the vendor gave the agent five acres of land. There was no proof of any agreement for it or of any corruption; nevertheless, the principal was allowed to recover the amount for which the agent had sold the five acres.

³⁵ Latta v. Kilbourn, 150 U. S. 524, 37 L. Ed. 1169; Sheppard Pub. Co. v. Harkins, 9 Ont. L. R. 504.

³⁶ Jackson v. Seevers, 115 Iowa, 370; Clarke v. Kelsey, 41 Neb. 766; Atlantic Compress Co. v. Young, 118 Ga. 868; Adams Express Co. v. Trego, 35 Md. 47; Gardner v. McCutcheon, 4 Beav. 534.

³⁷ Thompson v. Havelock, 1 Camp. 527; Stansbury v. United States, 1 Ct. of Cl. 123; Leach v. Hannibal, etc., R. R. Co., 86 Mo. 27, 56 Am. Rep. 408; Jaques v. Edgell, 40 Mo. 77.

³⁸ Jackson v. Seevers, supra; Clarke v. Kelsey, supra.

In Sumner v. Nevin, 4 Cal. App. 347, it is held that where an agent, under obligation to give his entire time to his principal, makes a contract for service with third persons, the principal may not compel an assignment of that contract to himself, or a holding of it in trust for himself, if it is based upon personal considerations; but he may compel the agent to account for his earnings under it.

Official salary received by agent.—An agent appointed postmaster through the efforts of the principal, and who maintains the postoffice in the principal's store without being charged for rent, heat or light, is, nevertheless, entitled, as against the principal, to the salary as postmaster. The law would not imply a contract that the principal should have the salary, and an express contract to that effect would ordinarily be opposed to public policy. Bailey v. Sibley Quarry Co., 166 Mich. 321.

³⁹ If the agent totally abandons the service and accepts service with some one else, the principal may have damages, but he could not recover the earnings in the new employment. If the agent remains in the service, but uses the principal's time to earn

Clearly, it would be a breach of duty for such an agent, without the principal's knowledge or consent, to carry on a business competing with the principal's, and thus to divert to himself the profits which otherwise might have accrued to the principal. If he does so, the principal may lawfully discharge him,⁴⁰ or may compel him to account for the profits of the business thus secretly carried on.⁴¹

Where, however, the other service is performed as a distinct undertaking, with the principal's knowledge and apparent consent, and especially where the principal is himself interested in having it performed, he will ordinarily not be permitted to recover the earnings.⁴²

§ 1230. — Work out of hours.—Even if the rule were that the principal is entitled to the outside earnings of an agent who has undertaken to give him his entire time and effort, it would not, of course, apply to earnings made in time not fairly belonging to the principal, and in no way affecting his interests. As has been pointed out in one case,⁴³ there must, in practically every business, be seasons of leisure and circumstances under which the principal's business cannot be done. What the agent earns at such times, in no way competing with the principal, or injuring the service, the principal will not be entitled to recover.⁴⁴ money for himself, the principal may certainly have damages, but may he, if he prefers, have the earnings? The reasons in favor of such a rule which seem strongest are the policy of the law to remove temptation from the agent to sacrifice the principal's interests to his own, and the difficulty under which the principal may labor in showing the loss to himself. Shall he be confined to the mere pro rata cost to him of the agent's time?

What would be said if the agent abandons the service for a day or two in order to do profitable work for some one else, and then resumes his original service? Shall the principal have the earnings or merely damages?

⁴⁰ Adams Express Co. v. Trego, supra.

⁴¹ Where a manager of a company individually undertakes a contract which the company could and would have accepted, he must account to the company for the profits. Transvaal Cold Storage Co. v. Palmer, [1904] Transv. L. R. S. C. 4.

An agent under contract to sell only the goods of his principal, sold goods of his principal's competitors. Held, that he was liable to his principal for all the profits made on such sales. Nitedals Taendstikfabrik v. Buster, [1906] 2 Ch. 671; Reis v. Volek, 151 N. Y. App. Div. 613, 136 N. Y. Supp. 367.

⁴² In Reid v. MacDonald, 4 Com. L. R. (Austra.), 1572, the plaintiff, who was manufacturer of ice making machines, employed defendant as manager, with the knowledge and without objection of plaintiff, the defendant promoted the formation of an ice skating rink company and became its consulting engineer. Through this connection, plaintiff was enabled to sell machinery to the skating rink company. When the work was completed, the latter company gave defendant for his services certain paid up shares in the company. Plaintiff claims these shares. Held, that he is not entitled to them.

⁴³ Geiger v. Harris, 19 Mich. 209.

⁴⁴ Hillisboro Nat. Bank v. Hyde, 7

§ 1231. ——— Gratuities.—So, the rule that all profits and advantage made by the agent in the course of his agency belong to the principal, does not apply to mere personal gratuities or gifts from third persons to the agent, which neither he nor the principal had any right to expect, and which did and could offer no inducement to the agent to violate his duty, although they were made in consideration of benefits incidentally derived from the performance of the agent.

This principle was applied where the agent of an insurance company had been presented with a sum of money by another company in recognition of the benefit the latter company had derived from an adjustment of a loss by the agent for his own company.⁴⁵

N. D. 400; Jones v. Linde Refrig. Co., 2 Ont. L. R. 428.

And a clerk and book-keeper in an insurance office who, outside of business hours, and sometimes during business hours but with his employer's consent, performs the services of an accountant for a person other than his employer, may recover for such services. Wallace v. De Younge, 98 Ill. 638, 38 Am. Rep. 108. But see Atlantic Compress Co. v. Young, 118 Ga. 868.

An agent employed to give his full time to the purchase or leasing of property for his principal will not be allowed while so employed to take and keep title in himself unless he shows that he did so with the full knowledge and consent of his principal. Fox v. Simons, 251 Ill. 316.

⁴⁵ Aetna Ins. Co. v. Church, 21 Ohio St. 492. "Tips" given to an employee at a shoe polishing stand belong to him, and if he has mistakenly paid them over to the employer he may recover them back. Polites v. Barlin, 149 Ky. 376, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1217; Zappas v. Roumeliote (Iowa), 137* N. W. 935. In The Blaireau, 2 Cranch (U. S.), 240, 2 L. Ed. 266, a master of a vessel was held not to be entitled to salvage awarded apprentices on the vessel. "The right of the master to the earnings of his apprentice, in the way of his business, or of any other business which is substituted for it, is different from a right to his extraordinary earnings which do not interfere with the profits the master may legitimately derive from his service. Of this latter description is salvage. It is an extra benefit, the reception of which does not deduct from the profits the master is entitled to from his service."

In Lamb Knit Goods Co. v. Lamb, 119 Mich. 568, an agent properly completed his undertaking. Later he received from the party with whom he had dealt as agent certain stock of the par value of $200, which was apparently given in recognition of a moral consideration arising out of other dealings. Held, that the principal was not entitled to it. To same effect, Ginn v. Almy, 212 Mass. 486.

In Gay v. Paige, 150 Mich. 463, agent was employed to go wherever directed to aid local agents in writing insurance. In an action by his employer to obtain a sum received by the agent from a certain solicitor, held that if it was a gratuity, given voluntarily and in good faith, agent might retain it. But in Mitchell v. Sparling, 3 Sask. L. R. 213, the principal was allowed to recover an alleged gratuity from the agent.

Property found by agent does not usually belong to principal. Burns v. Clark, 133 Cal. 634, 85 Am. St. Rep. 233, and cases.

Obviously, of course, the rule does not apply to gratuities received by the agent as his own, with the express or implied approval of the principal. If, for example, as seems to be common in these days, it is the expectation that a servant or agent shall receive part or all of his compensation in "tips" or gratuities from third persons, it could scarcely be contended that the principal or master has the right to demand them from the servant or agent. The established customs of the business, in accordance with which the parties have presumptively dealt, may work the same result.

§ 1232. Representing other principals—Exclusive service.—The amount of time which an agent is required to devote to his principal's interests in order to satisfy the requirement of loyalty, must, of course, depend upon the circumstances of the case. Where he has agreed to give his entire time, as in the cases referred to in the preceding sections, the rules applicable are those there considered. Where there is no such agreement, a general rule is difficult to state other than that there shall be a fair and reasonable devotion to the business of the principal. Loyalty on the part of an attorney does not require that the attorney shall refuse the business of any other client. A real estate agent may have many properties on his list and endeavor to sell all of them. An auctioneer need not spend his entire time in endeavoring to sell the goods of a single principal. A commission merchant or sales agent may receive and attempt to sell the goods of many principals. The mere fact that he is made the "exclusive" agent, or is given an "exclusive" territory, does not justify the inference that he is to give to any principal his entire time or effort.⁴⁶ On the other hand, a commercial traveler would not usually be deemed

⁴⁶ In Hichhorn v. Bradley, 117 Iowa, 130, the defendant was made sole distributor of a certain brand of plaintiff's cigars, and agreed to use his best efforts to promote the sale of them, but did not agree to give his exclusive efforts. Defendant was held not to have broken his contract by selling cigars of his own make while he was engaged in selling the cigars of the plaintiff.

In McGeehan v. Gaar, Scott & Co., 122 Wis. 630, plaintiff agent was given a territory in which he was to have exclusive right to sell defendant's threshing machines. Plaintiff was permitted to recover commissions for a sale made by an intruding agent, although plaintiff had before and during the term of employment been representing in like capacity other manufacturers of threshing machinery, and although in the very transaction for which commission is sought the plaintiff had also endeavored to sell a competitor's machine.

In Butterick Pub. Co. v. Boynton, 191 Mass. 175, the defendant dry goods merchants in consideration of being made "special agents" for distribution of plaintiff's patterns agreed: "to keep the patterns on the ground floor; to give proper attention to the sale of the patterns; to endeavor at all times to conserve the best interests of the agency; not to justified in attempting to represent two or more houses in the same line, or even in carrying "side lines." In the former cases there is no contract for entire time, and the compensation usually takes the form of a commission. In the latter case there is usually a contract of hiring for a definite period, and the compensation is ordinarily a fixed salary.⁴⁷

§ 1233. Remedies of the principal.—In most of the cases which have arisen in the field now being considered, the remedy which the principal has sought has been an equitable one, to rescind or set aside transfers, to obtain an accounting, or to charge the agent as a trustee. The principal's right to these remedies in a proper case is abundantly established, but there are other remedies also of which he may avail himself. And in cases in which specific property has been transferred to a bona fide purchaser, or has otherwise passed beyond recall, some other remedy is desirable. In practically every case wherein the principal has proximately suffered loss, the principal may sustain an action of tort against the agent based upon the latter's breach of duty.⁴⁸ In such an action he may join, as codefendants, third persons who have colluded or conspired with the agent to defraud the principal.⁴⁹ He may also recover back money which the agent has obtained from him in violation of his duty,⁵⁰ and where the agent has in his hands the remove the stock from its original location nor to assign the agency." Defendants accepted the agency for a rival pattern company and plaintiff sought to enjoin defendants from selling any patterns except plaintiff's own. Injunction refused, "Conserving best interests" does not mean agreement not to act as agent for competitor.

In Amber Petroleum Co. v. Breech (Tex. Civ. App.), 111 S. W. 668, an agent who undertook to get "some" oil leases for a principal, and who obtained some for him but more for himself, was held not obliged to account for the latter.

⁴⁷ In Reis v. Volck, 136 N. Y. App. Div. 613, where a salesman on commission, who had agreed to give his exclusive services, sold a line of similar articles, it was held that the principal could recover the commissions earned on the competing line without proving special damage from the breach of contract.

⁴⁸ It is an actionable tort, for which the principal may recover damages, for a real estate broker to understate the purchaser's offer to the principal and appropriate the difference between the real offer and the offer as he stated it. Emmons v. Alvord, 177 Mass. 466. See also Pierce Co. v. Beers, 190 Mass. 199.

It is an actionable wrong for agent employed to purchase property at the lowest price obtainable, to misrepresent the price and retain the difference. Hindle v. Holcomb, 34 Wash. 336; Pouppirt v. Greenwood, 48 Colo. 405.

⁴⁹ Emmons v. Alvord, supra; Boston v. Simmons, 150 Mass. 461, 15 Am. St. Rep. 230, 6 L. R. A. 629; Rundell v. Kalbfus, 125 Pa. 123.

⁵⁰ McMillan v. Arthur, 98 N. Y. 167; Ritchey v. McMichael (Cal.), 35 Pac. 151; Kramer v. Winslow, 130 Pa. 484, 17 Am. St. Rep. 782.

proceeds of property wrongfully acquired and disposed of, the principal may waive the tort and recover as for money had and received to his use.⁵¹ Where, before the principal can recover it, specific property to which the principal would be entitled has been conveyed by the agent or by his manipulation to a bona fide purchaser, so that the principal cannot recover it specifically, he may have compensation from the agent for its value.⁵²

§ 1234. — In practically any case in which an action of tort for breach of duty might be maintained, an action of assumpsit could be used instead, based upon the theory that wherever a duty arises from the relation there is a promise, either implied in fact or created by mere operation of law, to perform that duty.⁵³

⁵¹ Chaliss v. Wylie, 35 Kan. 506.

⁵² Moneta v. Hoffman, 249 Ill. 56; Dennis v. McCagg, 32 Ill. 429; Cornwell v. Foord, 96 Ill. App. 366.

⁵³ The syllabus is Reeside's Ex'r v. Reeside, 49 Pa. 322, 88 Am. Dec. 503, well shows the holdings of the court. It follows:

"1. Where a duty arises out of an implied undertaking to do an act requiring skill or fidelity, an action of assumpsit upon the special promise or an action upon the special case for the tort will lie for breach.

"2. If an agent who receives money from his principal to perform a certain trust wholly neglects to perform his duty and converts the money, he is liable to an action in form ex delicto, or to an action for money had and received to plaintiff's use.

"3. But neither action will lie against the agent for an alleged balance of moneys intrusted to be laid out in a special manner where he actually enters upon and performs the duties of his trusts; the remedy is by bill in equity or account render.

"4. The nature of the duty to be performed by the agent determines the form of action against him on the part of the principal: if the trust be to pay to him directly, then assumpsit is the proper action; but where it is one of outlay, requiring an exhibit of the sums expended, assumpsit will not lie until it be ascertained in an action of account render that a balance is due."

[The common-law action of account render is now obsolete in most states.]

Where an agent undertaking to sell the stock of a number of owners obtained a secret profit for himself, an action at law for money had and received may be maintained by each principal for his share, and he need not resort to equity. Graham v. Cummings, 208 Pa. 516.

(In this case, the court says that the "contract" is one arising ex lege.) But where several persons unite to create a joint fund which they put into the hands of an agent to buy property, all may unite in an action at law to recover a secret profit. Humbird v. Davis, 210 Pa. 311.

Where a sales agent makes sales to himself at a lower price than he was authorized to make them, under the false pretence that they were really made to a wholesale agent of the principal [which agent was entitled to a reduced rate] and there-

In practically any case, also, in which the agent has received money which equitably and in good conscience belongs to the principal, an action for money had and received might be maintained.⁵⁴

In any case, also, in which the principal would have an action at law he may, instead of maintaining an action thereon as plaintiff, avail himself of it by way of defence if sued by the agent for compensation, reimbursement or the like.⁵⁵

Moreover, as will be seen in a later section, the agent may often forfeit all right to compensation by his disloyalty; and, if the principal has paid him before discovering the facts, he may, upon discovery, maintain an action against the agent to recover back the amount so paid.⁵⁶

It has been held in Illinois that where the principal has conveyed to the agent under such circumstances as to entitle the principal to rescind, he may do so by conveying to a third person, and that the latter may then maintain a bill against the agent to quiet the title.⁵⁷

§ 1235. Agency must exist.—It must be constantly borne in mind that, in order to make the rules here dealt with applicable, the relation of agency must exist between the person claiming the benefit of the rule and the person against whom the rule is sought to be enforced.⁵⁸ by induced the principal to receive lower payments than he was entitled to receive, the principal may maintain an action [in this case of contract with counts in tort] to recover the difference. Pierce Co. v. Beers, 190 Mass. 199.

⁵⁴ Sandoval v. Randolph, 222 U. S. 161, 56 L. Ed. 142; Reeside's Ex'r v. Reeside, supra; Graham v. Cummings, supra; Moore v. Petty, 68 C. C. A. 306, 135 Fed. 668; Boston Deep Sea Fishing Co. v. Ansell, 39 Ch. Div. 339.

"It would be a great scandal if a principal betrayed by his agent might not declare in assumpsit without relying upon fraud and deceit in an action for damages. * * * Neither is it contended that an agent who makes a secret profit in the execution of his agency may not be compelled to disgorge, and required to do so in an action upon an implied promise." Sandoval v. Randolph, supra.

See also McLain v. Parker, 229 Mo. 68.

⁵⁵ Shick v. Shuttle, 94 Minn. 135.

⁵⁶ See Little v. Phipps, 208 Mass. 331, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1046; Andrews v. Ramsay, [1903] 2 K. B. 635; Myerscough v. Merrill, 12 Ont. W. R. 399; Webb v. McDermott, 3 Ont. W. R. 365; Pommerenke v. Bate, 3 Sask. L. R. 51; Hutchinson v. Fleming, 40 Can. Sup. Ct. 134. Many other cases are cited post.

⁵⁷ Prince v. Du Puy, 163 Ill. 417.

⁵⁸ Walton v. Dore, 113 Iowa, 1; Bartleson v. Vanderhoff, 96 Minn. 184; State v. State Journal Co., 75 Neb. 275, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 174, 13 Ann. Cas. 254.

In Walton v. Dore, supra, there was a judgment outstanding against plaintiff. The defendant, a stranger, proposed to buy it for plaintiff, saying he thought he could buy at a discount and would buy it as cheap as he could. Plaintiff "told him to go ahead and do so." Plaintiff gave

In general, with respect of interests acquired before the commencement of the agency, one will not be charged as a trustee, but such an interest may easily disqualify one from becoming an agent where such interest would conflict with interests of the principal; and the duty of disclosure may require that either interests or knowledge, acquired before the commencement of the agency, should be made known to the principal.⁵⁹

With reference to what occurs after the agency is ended, it is, in general, true that the duty and responsibility of the agent terminate with the agency.⁶⁰ On the other hand, there is, as has been seen, a considerable class of cases in which it is held that an agent will not be permitted, after the termination of his agency, to take advantage of information which he acquired in a confidential capacity during the agency, respecting the principal's business, plans, or purposes, to obtain for himself rights or interests which he thus learned that the principal intended to acquire, and the acquisition of which by the agent would defeat the purposes of the principal. If the agent does so acquire them, he may be charged as trustee for the principal.⁶¹ defendant no money to pay for the judgment, did not promise to do so, and did not promise to take the judgment from defendant if he bought it. Defendant did buy it. Plaintiff seeks to have the benefit, upon reimbursing defendant. Held, that plaintiff is not entitled to it. There was no agency created, and defendant's promise to buy for plaintiff was without consideration. But compare this case with those cited ante, § 1223.

Agent or optionee.—In Robinson v. Easton, 93 Cal. 80, 27 Am. St. Rep. 167, where real estate agents were given authority to sell at a net price, to receive as commission all that they could get over that price, it was held that a contract of sale was made by them on their own account as purchasers and not as agents, and that they were under no duty to account for money received under it.

⁵⁹ In Larson v. Thoma, 143 Iowa, 338, a real estate broker who had a customer in view for a certain piece of land obtained employment from the owner, as agent to sell it. Held, that he was entitled to commissions for negotiating the sale. He was not the agent of the buyer, and he owed no duty to disclose to his principal the fact of his prospective buyer.

See also Pneumatic Weigher Co. v. Burnquist, 128 Iowa, 709, as to duties arising before the relation began.

⁶⁰ An agent to sell bought the land from his principal, and resold it next day at a profit. Principal was held not entitled to the profits, as the agent disclosed to his principal that he himself was buying, and had not obtained information of the purchaser, and had not opened negotiations for the second sale, until after his purchase from the principal. Rathke v. Tyler, 136 Iowa, 284.

⁶¹ See ante, § 1210; Trice v. Comstock, 57 C. C. A. 646, 121 Fed. 620, 61 L. R. A. 176; Eoff v. Irvine, 108 Mo. 378, 32 Am. St. Rep. 609; Dennison v. Aldrich, 114 Mo. App. 700.

One person suggested to another that the latter act as the former's agent to get oil leases. The proposed agent took some of the former's

§ 1236 ——— Other limitations.—And not only must there be agency, but it must also be agency for the person who now claims protection as the principal.⁶² Thus it has been held that the agent of one of two tenants in common cannot be charged as trustee for the other tenant, where he was not the agent of that tenant and his own principal consented to what he did.⁶³

The agency also must be one which involves a duty having some reference at least to the subject-matter of the claim now made. If there be no agency, and hence no duty, with reference to that subject-matter, no duty of loyalty arises in respect of it, and no foundation of any rights growing out of that duty can be laid.⁶⁴

§ 1237. ——— Proof of the agency.—That the agent was acting as such in the case in question, may be shown by the facts and circumstances, or result from the presumed continuance of a prior relation.⁶⁵

Even though the alleged agent may contend that he never was, nor ever intended to be, agent in the transaction, his conduct, in leading the assumed principal to rely upon his undertaking to act as such, may estop him from denying it.⁶⁶ And where one who purports to act as blanks and said "if he could he would get him some leases." He procured a number of leases, most of which he took in his own name and sought to keep; a few were taken in the principal's name. In an action by the principal to compel him to turn over the others. Held, that there was no exclusive agency and no duty to turn over all the leases. Amber Petroleum Co. v. Breech (Tex. Civ. App.), 111 S. W. 668.

⁶² Illingworth v. De Mott, 59 N. J. Eq. 8, aff'd 61 N. J. Eq. 672.

⁶³ Hill v. Coburn, 105 Me. 437.

⁶⁴ In Kellogg Lumber Co. v. Webster Mfg. Co., 140 Wis. 341, the superintendent of a lumber company bought a tax title of land belonging to the company; it was not his duty to pay taxes. Held, that the act was not impeachable.

In Collar v. Ford, 45 Iowa, 331, it was held that a person who had been requested to ascertain and report to the owner, who lived in another state, the amount of taxes upon certain land did not thereby become such an agent that, upon buying the land of the principal, he owed him any duty to disclose its real value.

Douglass v. Lougee, 147 Iowa, 406, holds the same where one, who had been merely an agent to rent and collect rents, bought the land of the principal. Sed quare.

⁶⁵ See Siers v. Wiseman, 58 W. Va. 340; Knupp v. Brooks, 200 Pa. 494; Gamble v. Hamilton, 31 Fla. 401.

⁶⁶ Walters v. Bray (Tex. Civ. App.), 70 S. W. 443; Siers v. Wiseman, supra; but in Brinson v. Exley, 122 Ga. 11, it was held that the principal could not maintain an action of deceit where the only agency possible was one by estoppel and where the conduct constituting the estoppel was negligent not fraudulent.

In Dennis v. McCagg, 32 Ill. 429, it is said that a volunteer agent is as much subject to the duties of the relation as any other agent, and many other cases are to the same effect. Salsbury v. Ware, 183 Ill. 505.

agent for a principal, receives a benefit intended for him, it is held that the principal may compel a transfer to himself.⁶⁷

§ 1238. Against whom trust enforced.—As in other similar trusts, the trust in behalf of the principal, when such a trust exists, may be enforced, not only against the agent himself, but also against his heirs, creditors, legal successors, confederates and purchasers with notice.⁶⁸

§ 1239. Principal must not have consented to, waived or condoned the act.—Finally, it must be observed that, in any case in which the principal complains of the misconduct or breach of loyalty of his agent, the principal cannot, even as against the agent, recover where he himself has consented to, waived or condoned the act. And where, while the whole matter still remains executory, he learns of the proposed act and does nothing to prevent it or even to object to it, he cannot afterwards, it is held, recover damages for it.⁶⁹ "To allow a person who has discovered the fraud, while the contract is still wholly executory, to go on and execute it, and then sue for the fraud, looks very much like permitting him to speculate upon the fraud of the ⁶⁷ Robertson v. Rawlins County, 84 Kan. 52. In Virginia Pocahontas Coal Co. v. Lambert, 107 Va. 368, 122 Am. St. Rep. 860, a person who was not agent, but who pretended to be agent of complainant to obtain from third persons conveyances of land, which they made because they supposed they were necessary to perfect titles previously conveyed by those persons to the complainant, was charged as a trustee ex maleficio, although it was held that there could be no ratification which would make him agent since he had not really acted as such. Rollins v. Mitchell, 52 Minn. 41, 38 Am. St. Rep. 519; and Hanold v. Bacon, 36 Mich. 1, were relied upon.

In Garvey v. Jarvis, 46 N. Y. 310, 74 Am. Rep. 335, it appeared that one Malcom had a judgment against Garvey. He offered to Garvey to discharge it for a certain sum less than its face, but Garvey did not accept. In this situation, it was alleged that defendant by falsely representing that he was a friend of plaintiff and acting for him, induced Malcom to assign the judgment to defendant for this smaller sum, and defendant then began to enforce the judgment against the plaintiff for the full amount. Held, that the only one who was injured was Malcom, and that plaintiff was not entitled to the benefit of the purchase.

⁶⁸ Trust enforced against heirs. Siers v. Wiseman, 58 W. Va. 340; Hudson v. Herman, 81 Kan. 627; Walters v. Bray (Tex Civ. App.), 70 S. W. 443.

Enforced against agent's widow to whom he had made a voluntary conveyance. Pansing v. Warner, 43 Wash. 531.

Against purchaser with notice. Young v. Iowa Protective Ass'n, 106 Iowa, 447.

Secret and roundabout purchase set aside. Carry v. King, 6 Cal. App. 568.

⁶⁹ Bartleson v. Vanderhoff, 96 Minn. 184. See also Webb v. McDermott, 5 Ont. W. R. 566.

other party. It is fraudulent to allow a man to recover for self-inflicted injuries."⁷⁰

II.

NOT TO EXCEED HIS AUTHORITY.

§ 1240. Duty of agent not to exceed his authority.—It is the duty of the agent, in all of his acts and contracts, to keep within the limits of his authority, and he must, in general, indemnify his principal against the consequences of not doing so.⁷¹ Where the failure to keep within the authority conferred upon him takes the form of a failure to obey instructions, the question is considered under a separate head;⁷² where it takes the form of a negligence, that also is separately considered;⁷³ but there are many cases in which no specific instructions are given, and which can not be disposed of merely upon the ground of negligence in the execution of the authority and those are the cases which are considered here.

The measure of the authority as between the principal and third persons, as has already been seen in many places, is not by any means necessarily the measure as between the principal and the agent. To the actual authority as it exists between the latter, the principal may have added by his conduct. Personal estoppels may operate in favor of third persons which would not be available to the agent. Usages and appearances may as to third persons extend the apparent range of the authority to a point to which the agent knows it was not intended to go. The agent himself may also, in certain cases, by representations concerning extrinsic facts on which his authority depends, bind his principal even though in doing so he knowingly exceeds the authority with which he has actually been endowed.

§ 1241. Duty of principal to make clear extent of authority.—It is, of course, the duty of the principal, as between himself and his agent, to make clear to the latter the nature and extent of the authority he is to exercise. The principal usually takes the initiative; it is his will and his purpose which the agent is to execute; and the principal can ordinarily not complain that the agent has not kept within the scope of his authority if the principal himself has failed to make rea-

⁷⁰ Per Mitchell, J., in Thompson v. Libby, 36 Minn. 287.

⁷¹ Pape v. Westacott, [1894] 1 Q.

B. 272; Rush v. Rush, 170 Ill. 623; Holmes v. Langston, 110 Ga. 861.

⁷² See post, § 1244 et seq.

⁷³ See post, § 1274 et seq.

sonably clear and certain what was the extent of the authority and the circumstances and conditions under which it was to be exercised.⁷⁴

§ 1242. Duty of agent to know extent of authority.—It must also be the duty of the agent, ordinarily, to know the extent of his authority. Commonly there can be no excuse for not knowing. If there are doubts, the principal is usually where he can be communicated with, and the doubts may be removed. If new issues present themselves, the principal is ordinarily at hand to give new directions.

A number of considerations, however, may affect the matter. The authority may have been couched in ambiguous terms, and the ambiguity may not be patent. Emergencies may arise when the principal cannot be consulted. The proper construction of the authority may be uncertain, and may require expert or professional aid for its determination, which the agent cannot command.

The law, of course, in these cases will make no unreasonable requirements, much less impose impossible demands; and the agent will not be held responsible where he cannot be deemed at fault.

§ 1243. Liability of agent for exceeding his authority.—Where the agent, through a culpable failure to regard the limits set to his authority, has caused loss to his principal, he will be liable to the latter for the loss thereby sustained.⁷⁵ The measure of damages will ordinarily be the amount of the loss which is the natural and proximate result of the wrongful act complained of; but the circumstances may be such as to justify a recovery for other losses, if they can fairly be deemed to have been within the contemplation of the parties at the time the service was undertaken.

III.

TO OBEY INSTRUCTIONS.

§ 1244. Agent's duty to obey instructions.—It is also a fundamental duty of the agent to obey all of the reasonable and lawful instructions given him by his principal. That the agent shall, for the time being, put his own will under the direction of another, is one of the primary elements in the relation. It is the idea, the desire, the purpose, perhaps the mere whim or caprice of the principal, and not of the agent, that is to be executed; and it is ordinarily to be executed in the manner, although perhaps capricious, which the principal directs. It is not within the province of the agent to call in question the prudence of the instructions, or to inquire as to the facts or motives which induced the principal to give them, provided the instructions are explicit and intelligible, and the principal furnishes him with the means necessary to execute them.⁷⁶ As said in one case,⁷⁷ "When an agent acts under a general authority, he is bound to act for his principal as he would act for himself; when he acts under a particular authority and for a special purpose he has no discretion. If he thinks fit to accept such a commission, he must perform that commission according to his duty."

⁷⁴ See ante, § 792.

Cooper v. Cooper, 90 Neb. 209; Per-

⁷⁵ Pape v. Westacott, [1894] 1 Q. B. 272; Rush v. Rush, 170 Ill. 623; Sons v. Smith, 12 N. Dak. 403.

§ 1245. Results of disobedience—Agent liable for losses caused by it.—It being thus the duty of the agent to obey the instructions of his principal, he should, in general, so long as the instructions are lawful, perform that duty and leave the consequences of performance to the principal. If he fails to perform, whether by exceeding, violating, or neglecting his instructions, he will, ordinarily, be liable to the principal for the loss sustained thereby, unless the violation has been waived or the wrongful act has been ratified.⁷⁸ The fact that the agent acted in good faith, or with the intention of benefiting the principal, is entirely immaterial.⁷⁹ Instructions may ordinarily be

⁷⁶ See Coker v. Ropes, 125 Mass. 577.

⁷⁷ Bertram v. Godfray, 1 Knapp Pr. C. 381.

So in Kraber v. Union Ins. Co., 129 Pa. 8, it was said, "Where an agent is charged with the performance of some particular duty or the conduct of some undertaking and is left without instructions as to the manner in which the work is to be done, he must exercise his own judgment in the premises, with good faith towards his principal. Porter v. Patterson, 15 Pa. 229; Conway v. Lewis, 120 Pa. 215, 6 Am. St. Rep. 600. But when the principal gives instructions, they are binding on the agent and he must follow them. He has no legal right to sit in judgment on the wisdom or the expediency of the directions that are given him. His duty as agent is to execute the orders of his principal, with reasonable promptness and with fidelity."

⁷⁸ Whitney v. Merchants Union Express Co., 104 Mass. 152, 6 Am. Rep.

207; Scott v. Rogers, 31 N. Y. 676; Wilts v. Morrell, 66 Barb. (N. Y.) 511; Adams v. Robinson, 65 Ala. 58; Dodge v. Tileston, 12 Pick. (Mass.) 333; Dickson v. Screven, 23 S. C. 212; Magnin v. Dinsmore, 62 N. Y. 35, 20 Am. Rep. 442; Frothingham v. Everton, 12 N. H. 239; Amory v. Hamilton, 17 Mass. 103; Harvey v. Turner, 4 Rawle (Pa.), 223; Brown v. Arrott, 6 Watts & S. (Pa.) 402; Blot v. Boiceau, 3 N. Y. 78, 51 Am. Dec. 345; Northern Assurance Co. v. Borgelt, 67 Neb. 282; Cave v. Lougee, 134 Ga. 135; McAnow v. Moore, 163 Mo. App. 598.

Infant agent—In Vasse v. Smith, 10 U. S. (6 Cranch) 226, it is held that infancy in the agent is a bar to liability for breach of instructions, but not for conversion.

See also post, Chapters on Attorneys, Auctioneers, Brokers and Factors: and see cases cited in notes to following section.

⁷⁹ Rechtsherd v. Bank, 47 Mo. 181; Dickson v. Screven, 23 S. C. 212.

obeyed at the risk of the principal; they will ordinarily be disobeyed at the risk of the agent.

§ 1246. — Where the agent refuses or neglects to follow the instructions given, one, or either, or both of two remedies may be open to the principal, as the peculiar circumstances of the case may determine. Thus if the disobedience be such as affects merely the manner of the execution but does not affect the result, and causes the principal no loss or injury, no substantial damages could be recovered from the agent, though he might be liable to nominal damages, unless the departure from the line marked out were so insignificant as to fall within the domain of the maxim de minimis non curat lex. The principal might, however, very properly refuse to longer continue the relation with an agent who habitually disregarded his instructions, even though no actual loss or injury had ensued.⁸⁰

But if the disobedience be not such as affects the manner only, but results in actual loss or injury to the principal, the latter may, subject to the exceptions to be hereafter named, recover from the agent such substantial damages as he can show he has sustained by reason of such disobedience. He may also remove the agent from his trust.⁸¹

§ 1247. — Illustrations.—Thus if an agent who was instructed to collect a claim by the employment of certain methods, elects to pursue other methods and the claim is lost thereby, he will be liable for the loss, and it will be no defense that he used reasonable diligence in the prosecution of the claim according to the method of his own selection.⁸²

So where an agent authorized to collect at a distant place, was instructed to remit the proceeds to his principal by express, but made the remittance by check of a third person who failed before payment, it was held that the loss must fall upon the agent;⁸³ and the same result was reached where such an agent, being instructed to send the money in fifty or one hundred dollar bills sent it in smaller bills, which were lost;⁸⁴ and where, being instructed to remit by draft, the agent sent the money in a letter which was lost.⁸⁵

§ 1248. — So if, being instructed to ship goods at a certain time, or by a designated carrier, the agent ships at another time or by a different carrier, and loss thereby results, the agent will be liable.

⁸⁰ See ante, Chapter on Termination of the Relation.

⁸¹ See idem.

⁸² Butts v. Phelps, 79 Mo. 302.

⁸³ Walker v. Walker, 5 Heisk. (Tenn.) 425.

⁸⁴ Wilson v. Wilson, 26 Pa. St. 393.

⁸⁵ Foster v. Preston, 8 Cow. (N. Y.) 198; Kerr v. Cotton, 23 Tex. 411. See Buell v. Chapin, 99 Mass. 594, 97 Am. Dec. 58.

By pursuing his own notions in opposition to the express instructions of his principal, the agent will be held to have assumed the risks incident thereto and will be treated as an insurer of the goods.⁸⁶

So if an agent is instructed and agrees to store goods in a warehouse for his principal at a particular place, but he stores them at another place, where, though without any negligence on his part, they are destroyed by fire, the agent will be responsible for their loss.⁸⁷

§ 1249. — So if being expressly instructed to sell only to persons of undoubted responsibility, the agent sells to persons notoriously insolvent, the principal may recover of the agent for the loss thereby occasioned.⁸⁸ And in such a case it will be no defense to the agent that he acted in pursuance of an alleged custom among similar agents to rely upon the purchaser's statements as to his own responsibility, without making further inquiry.⁸⁹ But where the principal with knowledge of the facts has retained the notes taken by the agent for an unreasonable period, as for instance for two years, without complaint, he will not then be permitted to allege that the agent violated his instructions by selling to irresponsible parties.⁹⁰

An agent instructed to sell for cash, who gives credit, or accepts a note or check payable, for example, the next day,⁹¹ or ten days,⁹² after the sale, will be liable for the loss, if the buyer does not pay or the drawer fails before the note or check can be paid.⁹³ And a local custom to give such credit,⁹⁴ or treat such checks as cash, will not avail him.⁹⁵

He will also be liable where, being instructed not to deliver goods

⁸⁶ Johnson v. New York Cent. Transp. Co., 33 N. Y. 610, 88 Am. Dec. 416; Ackley v. Kellogg, 8 Cow. (N. Y.) 223.

See also, Buck v. Reed, 27 Neb. 67.
⁸⁷ Lilley v. Doubleday, 7 Q. B. Div. 510. The judges declined to consider whether he was liable for conversion; they treated it as a breach of contract.

⁸⁸ Robinson Machine Works v. Vorse, 52 Iowa, 207; Osborne v. Rider, 62 Wis. 235; Clark v. Roberts, 26 Mich. 506.

See also, Nichols v. Wadsworth, 40 Minn. 547; Tate v. Marco, 27 S. Car. 493; Robson v. Sanders, 25 S. Car. 116.

⁸⁹ Robinson Machine Works v. Vorse, supra.

⁹⁰ Plano Mfg. Co. v. Buxton, 36 Minn. 203.

⁹¹ Hall v. Storrs, 7 Wis. 253.

⁹² Harlan v. Ely, 68 Cal. 522.

⁹³ Pape v. Westcott, [1894] 1 Q. B. 272; Hall v. Storrs, supra; Harlan v. Ely, supra; Bliss v. Arnold, 8 Vt. 252, 30 Am. Dec. 467; Sheffield v. Linn, 62 Mich. 151.

An agent, authorized to sell his principal's land for money, who accepts bonds in payment, which afterwards prove worthless, is liable to the principal. Paul v. Grimm, 165 Pa. 139, 183 Pa. 330.

⁹⁴ Bliss v. Arnold, supra.

⁹⁵ Hall v. Storrs, supra.

until he receives payment or security, he permits the goods to be taken without either, whereby the principal sustains loss.⁹⁶

If he be instructed not to sell for less than a certain price,⁹⁷ or to sell when the goods reach a certain price,⁹⁸ or to sell only in certain lots or quantities,⁹⁹ or to sell at a certain time,¹ and, without sufficient excuse, disobeys the instructions he will be liable to the principal for the resulting loss.

If the agent be instructed to take the goods for sale to a particular place or market, and does not take them at all, or takes them to a different place, he will be liable to the principal for a loss of market sustained, or for additional expense incurred.²

§ 1250. — An agent instructed to insure property, who neglects without sufficient reason to do so, or to give his principal timely information of his inability to effect the insurance, will be liable, if a loss occurs, for the full insurable value of the property less the amount of the premiums, unless the amount of insurance was limited to a less sum.³ And where the agent of an insurance company was instructed by his principal to cancel a certain policy of insurance, but, without sufficient reason, delayed for a number of days to do so, in which time

⁹⁶ Case Threshing Machine Co. v. Folger, 136 Wis. 468.

But the agent would not be liable under the contract where the only sale made by him was made before he was appointed agent. Pneumatic Weigher Co. v. Burnquist, 128 Iowa, 709.

⁹⁷ Sargeant v. Blunt, 16 Johns. (N. Y.) 74; Dufresne v. Hutchinson, 8 Taunt. 117; Union Hardware Co. v. Plume Mfg. Co., 58 Conn. 219; Highland Buggy Co. v. Parker, 27 Ohio Cir. Ct. 115.

⁹⁸ Bertram v. Godfray, 1 Knapp, 381.

⁹⁹ Where a wholesale dealer consigned for sale a lot of about twenty-five tons of shells, with directions to sell at a certain price per ton for the "total consignment," the agent is not justified in selling four tons selected from the lot, even though he sells for more than the rate fixed, and the average value of the residue is not affected. By such a sale, which put it out of the agent's power to return the whole shipment, the agent was held to make himself liable for the whole shipment at the rate originally fixed. Levison v. Balfour, 34 Fed. 382.

Under a written contract to sell for the owner a team of horses with wagon and harness for a certain sum, and to forward the proceeds, less commissions and certain advances, within a certain time, the agent will be liable when he sells the horses to one person and the wagon and harness to another for sums aggregating less than the price fixed. Henry v. Buckner, 13 Colo. 18.

¹ Zimmerman v. Heil, 156 N. Y. 703.

² Fuller v. Ellis, 39 Vt. 345, 94 Am. Dec. 327.

³ Park v. Hamond, 4 Camp. 344; Perkins v. Washington Ins. Co., 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 645; DeTastett v. Crousillat, 2 Wash. (U. S. C. C.) 132; Thorne v. Deas, 4 Johns. (N. Y.) 84; Shoenfeld v. Fleischer, 73 Ill. 404; Sawyer v. Mayhew, 51 Me. 398; Kaw Brick Co. v. Hogsett, 73 Mo. App. 432.

See also Backus v. Ames, 79 Minn. 145.

the property was destroyed by fire and the company was compelled to pay the loss, it was held that the company could recover from the agent the amount so paid.⁴ Other cases involving the same principle are cited in the notes.

§ 1251. — An agent to loan money with instructions to loan it to a particular person, or upon particular security, or upon stated terms, as to duration, rate of interest, and the like, must obey the instructions so given, and will be liable to the principal for any loss which he may proximately sustain by reason of their violation.⁵

So if, in taking security, he prejudices the principal by securing his own claim equally with that of the principal, and, a fortiori, if he gives preference to his own claim over that of the principal, he will be liable to the principal for any loss thereby sustained.⁶ So where an agent, directed to foreclose a mortgage, and to purchase the property at the sale, unless third persons bid therefor a specified sum, permits the property to be sold for a less sum, he will be liable to the principal for the difference between the amount for which the property sold and its market value.⁷

§ 1252. — An agent for the purchase of goods of a certain sort who finds the purchase of such goods impracticable, is not thereby authorized, without having communicated with his principal, to purchase goods of an inferior sort; and if he does so he will be liable to his principal for a loss thereby sustained.⁸

⁴ Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Frissell, 142 Mass. 513. See also to the same effect: Franklin Ins. Co. v. Sears, 21 Fed. 290; Kraber v. Union Ins. Co., 129 Pa. 8.

Same, where the instructions were to reduce the amount. Queen City F. Ins. Co. v. First Nat. Bank, 18 N. Dak. 603; British American Ins. Co. v. Wilson, 77 Conn. 559.

Same, where agent issued policy in violation of instructions and fraudulently failed to report it to the company. Continental Ins. Co. v. Clark, 126 Iowa, 274, citing many cases.

Agent held not liable where under ambiguous authority the company did not promptly direct cancellation. Mechanics Ins. Co. v. Rion (Tenn. Ch.), 62 S. W. 44.

See also, Franklin Fire Ins. Co. v. Bradford, 201 Pa. 32, 88 Am. St. R.

770, 55 L. R. A. 408, where an insurance agent was held liable for insuring a forbidden kind of property, through his sub-agent. In Bradford v. Hanover Ins. Co., 43 C. C. A. 310, 102 Fed. 48, 49 L. R. A. 530, the same agent was held not liable but upon the ground that the act of the sub-agent was not one for which he was responsible.

⁵ Welsh v. Brown, 8 Ind. App. 421. See also Bank of Owensboro v. Western Bank, 13 Bush. (Ky.) 526, 26 Am. Rep. 211.

⁶ Marshall v. Ferguson, 78 Mo. App. 645, 94 Mo. App. 175, 101 Mo. App. 653.

See also, Knape v. Nunn, 81 Hun (N. Y.), 349 (aff'd 151 N. Y. 506); Lunn v. Guthrie, 115 Iowa, 501.

⁷ Dazey v. Roleau, 111 Ill. App. 367.

⁸ Lissberger v. Kellogg, 78 N. J. L. 85.

§ 1253. Form of action—When agent liable in trover.—The form of action in which the liability of the agent is determined is usually assumpsit or a special action on the case, but there are cases in which trover is the proper remedy, as where the conduct of the agent amounts to a conversion.

Conversion has been defined to be an unauthorized assumption and exercise of the right of ownership over goods belonging to another, to the exclusion of the owner's rights.⁹ A constructive conversion takes place when a person does such acts in reference to the goods of another as to amount in law to an appropriation of the property to himself. Every unauthorized taking of personal property, and all intermeddling with it beyond the extent of the authority conferred, in case a limited authority has been given, with intent so to apply and dispose of it as to alter its condition or to interfere with the owner's dominion, is a conversion.¹⁰

In many cases it becomes difficult to determine whether the misconduct of the agent consists in a mere breach of instructions or amounts in law to a conversion; and the distinctions made in many cases seem to be exceedingly technical. A distinction is, nevertheless, to be made.

§ 1254. — Mere breach of instructions.—Thus it has been held that if property be delivered to an agent with instructions to sell it at a certain price, and he sells it for less than that price, he is not liable in trover as for conversion. In such a case the agent had a right to sell and deliver, and in that respect did no more than he was authorized to do. He disobeyed instructions as to price only, and was liable for misconduct but not for conversion of the property.¹¹ So where an agent was authorized to deliver goods on receiving sufficient security, but delivered them on inadequate security, it was held that trover would not lie.¹² So where an agent, instructed to sell for cash only, makes a sale on credit, it is held that there was a breach of instructions merely and not a conversion.¹³ So where he is author-

⁹ Adams v. Robinson, 65 Ala. 586; Myers v. Gilbert, 18 Ala. 467.

¹⁰ Bouv. Law Dict. "Conversion;" Laverty v. Snethen, 68 N. Y. 522, 23 Am. Rep. 184.

¹¹ Sarjeant v. Blunt, 16 Johns. (N. Y.) 74; Dufresne v. Hutchinson, 3 Taunt. 117; Palmer v. Jarman, 2 M. & W. 282.

¹² Cairnes v. Bleeker, 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 300.

Text quoted with approval in Minneapolis Trust Co. v. Mather, 181 N. Y. 205.

¹³ Loveless v. Fowler, 79 Ga. 134, 11 Am. St. R. 407. "Certainly not," the court added, "unless it appears that the purchaser had notice of the limitation in the agent's instructions." Clark v. Cumming, 77 Ga. 64, 4 Am. St. R. 72, was distinguished.

ized to sell, and is to account for the proceeds, it has been held that the mere failure of the agent to pay over or account to his principal, for the money received, will not constitute a conversion, since the agent is not bound to pay over the identical money received, and the transaction creates merely the relation of debtor and creditor between the agent and his principal.¹⁴

So where an agent, who is instructed to foreclose securities in his possession and, if necessary, bid in the property "for something near its present value," bids it in at an excessive price, so that the principal loses the benefit of any claim for deficiency, the agent is liable for the loss so sustained, but he is not liable as for a conversion of the securities.¹⁵

§ 1255. ——— Conversion.—On the other hand, where the agent has no right to debit himself with the proceeds, but the principal is entitled to receive, and the terms of employment of the agent require him to pay over, the very money received, and the agent fails to do so, it is held that an action of trover will lie for its conversion.¹⁶

So where a factor in Buffalo was directed to sell wheat at a certain specified price on a particular day, or if not so sold to ship to New York, and did not sell or ship it on that day, but sold it the next day at the price named, it was held to be a conversion.¹⁷ So where an agent, intrusted with goods to sell when directed by his principal and account for the proceeds, wrongfully refuses to sell or account when directed, and wrongfully retains possession against the will of the principal, he is held liable for conversion.¹⁸ So where goods were put into the custody of a bank to be delivered after a sale by the agent, only when the principal directed, and upon the actual receipt of the price by the bank, it was held that if the agent obtains possession of the goods without the consent of the principal and sells them for less than the

¹⁴ Royce v. Oakes, 20 R. I. 418, 39 L. R. A. 845. See also, Borland v. Stokes, 120 Pa. 278; Vandelle v. Rohan, 36 N. Y. Misc. 239; Wright v. Duffie, 23 N. Y. Misc. 338; Greentree v. Rosenstock, 61 N. Y. 583; Walter v. Bennett, 16 N. Y. 250. But in New York, see now Britton v. Ferrin, 171 N. Y. 235, holding that where the money is received in a fiduciary capacity, an action of tort will lie under the code. See also, Jones v. Smith, 65 N. Y. Misc. 528.

¹⁵ Minneapolis Trust Co. v. Mather, 181 N. Y. 205.

¹⁶ Salem Light & Traction Co. v. Anson, 41 Ore. 562; Farrelly v. Hubbard, 148 N. Y. 592.

See Bunger v. Roddy, 70 Ind. 26; Wells v. Collins, 74 Wis. 341, 5 L. R. A. 531.

This was held to be the situation here, where the defendant was agent to collect money due the plaintiff, but with no authority or duty except to turn it over to his principal.

¹⁷ Scott v. Rogers, 31 N. Y. 676.

¹⁸ Coleman v. Pearce, 26 Minn. 123. Laverty v. Snethen, supra, was relied upon.

price fixed, he is liable for conversion.¹⁹ So where an agent who is entrusted with the possession of the property, but instructed not to sell until the price had been submitted to and approved by the principal, sells without such approval, he is held liable for conversion.²⁰

§ 1256. — So where the plaintiff delivered to the defendant a promissory note to get it discounted, but with instructions not to let it go out of his hands without receiving the money; and the defendant, without wrongful intent, delivered it to F, who promised to get and return the money on it, but who, having obtained the money, appropriated it to his own use, it was held that the defendant was liable for the conversion of the note. The court said that the defendant had a right to sell the note, and if he had sold it for less than the price stipulated, he would not have been liable in trover, but he had no right to deliver it to F, to take away, any more than he had to pay his own debt with it.²¹

So where the principal entrusts money to an agent, to be loaned or invested by him in the principal's name, but the agent loans it in his own name and for his own benefit, he has been held liable for conversion.²²

And so where an agent, who had collected money for his principal under directions to pay it to a third person, paid it neither to that person nor to the principal, but applied it to his own use, he was held liable for conversion.²³

§ 1257. — The rule stated—Intent immaterial.—The result of the authorities may be said to be, that if the agent parts with the property in a way or for a purpose or upon an event not authorized, that is to say, if he makes a disposition of a kind not contemplated, or before his authority to make the disposition had matured,—as because a condition precedent had not been complied with,—or after it had ¹⁹ Chase v. Baskerville, 93 Minn. 402.

²⁰ Comley v. Dazian, 114 N. Y. 161. "The agent," said the court, "did not simply depart from his instructions as to the manner of making the sale, but he had no right to sell at all until his principals had consented. His power to sell depended upon their consent, which he never received."

To like effect is Kennedy v. State Bank, — N. Dak. —, 132 N. W. 657, where an agent (the bank) was said to be liable in conversion for delivering a draft without receiving a deed and abstract showing good title.

²¹ Laverty v. Snethen, 68 N. Y. 522, 23 Am. Rep. 184. "If one man who is intrusted with the goods of another, put them into the hands of a third person contrary to orders, it is a conversion." Syeds v. Hay, 4 T. R. 260. Same point, Spencer v. Blackman, 9 Wend. (N. Y.) 167.

²² Farrand v. Hurlbut, 7 Minn. 477.

²³ Wells v. Collins, 74 Wis. 341, 5 L. R. A. 531. See Kidder v. Biddle, 13 Ind. App. 653.

expired, he is liable for a conversion; but if he parts with it in accordance with his authority, that is to say, if he makes the very disposition of it that he was authorized to make, but makes it in a different manner, as where he sells it at a less price, or takes inadequate security, and a fortiori where the default was merely in the performance of that which he was to do after the disposition had been made, as where he misapplies the proceeds, he is not liable for a conversion of the property, but only in an action for damages on account of the misconduct.²⁴

In such cases the question of good faith is not involved. A wrongful intent is not an essential element of the conversion. It is enough if the owner has been deprived of his property by the act of another assuming an unauthorized dominion and control over it.²⁵

§ 1258. How when agency is gratuitous.—The rules heretofore laid down are those which apply to cases where the service is to be performed for a reward. Where, however, the service is to be gratuitous (meaning by gratuitous here, not merely where no compensation is to be paid, but where there is no other consideration to support a contract), certain other considerations become important.

If in such a case the agent refuses to enter upon and perform the service at all; if his default consists in the mere not doing of a thing which he had promised to perform, and it be not a case where the law imposes upon him the duty to perform it, the fact that the performance was to be gratuitous, that the promise to perform was entirely with-²⁴ Lavery v. Snethen, 68 N. Y. 522, 23 Am. Rep. 184. "Trover," says Bronson, J., "may be maintained when the agent has wrongfully converted the property of his principal to his own use, and the fact of the conversion may be made out by showing either a demand and refusal, or that the agent has without necessity sold or otherwise disposed of the property contrary to his instructions. Where an agent wrongfully refuses to surrender the goods of his principal, or wholly departs from his authority in disposing of them, he makes the property his own and may be treated as a tortfeasor." McMorris v. Simpson, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 610. See also, Galbreath v. Epperson (Tenn.), 1 S. W. 157.

In Comley v. Dazian, 114 N. Y. 161, supra, where the agent's instructions were not to sell until the price had been approved by the principal, the court said that the agent "did not simply depart from his instructions as to the manner of making the sale, but he had no right to sell at all until his principals had consented. His power to sell depended upon their consent, which he never received. His authority was limited to negotiating a sale, subject to their approval as to price and until that approval was obtained, he had no right to complete the sale or deliver the property. An unauthorized sale of personal property, with delivery of possession is a conversion."

²⁵ Lavery v. Snethen, 68 N. Y. 522, 23 Am. Rep. 184; Scott v. Rogers, 31 N. Y. 676.

out consideration, will furnish a complete defense to a claim for damages on account of such default.²⁶ This is upon the familiar ground that the non-performance of a gratuitous executory contract constitutes no cause of action.

But where, on the other hand, the agent has entered upon the performance of the service, although it be gratuitous, it then becomes his duty to conform to the instructions given. If he were not willing to do so, he should have declined to serve; but having entered upon the performance of the service, he must obey instructions, and a failure to do so, will subject him to liability for the loss or damage occasioned thereby.²⁷

§ 1259. Exceptions to rule requiring obedience.—This rule which requires adherence to the instructions of the principal is subject to certain exceptions, growing out of the nature of the duty to be performed, or the necessities or circumstances of the case. Thus—

§ 1260. ——— Agent not bound to perform illegal or immoral act.—The law will not lend its sanction to the commission of an illegal or immoral act. An agent therefore cannot be held responsible for the disobedience of instructions which required the performance of an act illegal or immoral in itself, or opposed to public policy or one whose natural and legitimate result would be of that nature.²⁸

²⁶ Balfe v. West, 13 C. B. 466, 22 Eng. L. & Eq. 506; Elsee v. Gatward, 5 T. R. (Eng.) 143; Thorne v. Deas, 4 Johns. (N. Y.) 84; Spencer v. Towles, 18 Mich. 9; McGee v. Bast, 6 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 453; Fellowes v. Gordon, 8 B. Monroe (Ky.), 415.

See Nixon v. Bogin, 26 S. C. 611; Benden v. Manning, 2 N. H. 289.

²⁷ Passano v. Acosta, 4 La. 26, 23 Am. Dec. 470; Williams v. Higgins, 30 Md. 404; Short v. Skipwith, 1 Brock. (U. S. C. C.) 103, Fed. Cas. No. 12,809; Walker v. Smith, 1 Wash. (U. S. C. C.) 152, Fed. Cas. No. 17,086; Spencer v. Towles, 18 Mich. 9; McGee v. Bast, 6 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 453; Fellowes v. Gordon, 8 B. Monroe (Ky.), 415; Marshall v. Ferguson, 94 Mo. App. 175; Criswell v. Riley, 5 Ind. App. 496; Battelle v. Cushing, 21 D. C. 59.

Thus if a person undertakes, even voluntarily and gratuitously, to invest money for another, and disregards positive instructions given as to the specific character of the security to be taken, he is liable if the investment should fail on that account. Williams v. Higgins, 30 Md. 404. But where agency is gratuitous, an agent is not liable for not collecting without proof of negligence. Nixon v. Bogin, 26 S. C. 611.

In Baxter v. Jones, 6 Ont. L. R. 360, an insurance agent gratuitously undertook the care of plaintiff's insurance, and, in one instance, to get an increase of insurance; when this increase was obtained, plaintiff directed the agent to give notice thereof to other companies in which the plaintiff was insured, and which the agent represented. The agent did not give proper notices; and the plaintiff failed to recover on certain policies. Held, that the agent was liable.

²⁸ Brown v. Howard, 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 119; Davis v. Barger, 57 Ind. 54; Elmore v. Brooks, 6 Heisk. (Tenn.) 45.

§ 1261. — Agent not bound to imperil his own security.— So an agent, for example, a factor, who has made advances to his principal, or incurred obligations for him, upon the security of the principal's goods or property in the agent's possession, is not obliged to obey instructions to sell or otherwise dispose of the property in such a way as to imperil his security, if the principal fails to reimburse or indemnify him or to furnish him with other acceptable security.²⁹

§ 1262. — Departure from instructions may be justified by sudden emergency.— Another exception to this rule is based upon the necessities of the case, as where, without the agent's fault or neglect, some sudden emergency or supervening necessity arises, or some unexpected event happens, which will not admit of delay for communication or consultation with the principal, and a literal adherence to instructions becomes impossible or would defeat the very object sought to be attained. In such a case if the agent, exercising prudence and sound discretion, in good faith adopts the course which seems best under the circumstances as then existing, he will be justified although subsequent events may demonstrate that some other course would have been better.³⁰

Clearly, of course, if the performance of the agency in any way becomes wholly impossible, without the agent's fault, he will be excused.³¹

§ 1263. — The English cases³² manifest a tendency to limit the doctrine rather more narrowly, perhaps, than the American. The

²⁹ See post, Book V, Chap. IV.

³⁰ See Milbank v. Dennistoun, 21 N. Y. 386; Greenleaf v. Moody, 13 Allen (Mass.), 363; Williams v. Shackelford, 16 Ala. 318; Bernard v. Maury, 20 Gratt. (Va.) 434; Jervis v. Hoyt, 2 Hun (N. Y.), 637; Shipmaster's, supercargoes and other similar cases. Forrestier v. Bordman, 1 Story (U. S. C. C.), 43, Fed. Cas. No. 4,945; Judson v. Sturges, 5 Day (Conn.), 556; Goodwillie v. McCarthy, 45 Ill. 186; Catlin v. Bell, 4 Camp. 183; Foster v. Smith, 2 Cold. (Tenn.) 474, 88 Am. Dec. 604; Dusar v. Perit, 4 Binn. (Penn.) 361; Drummond v. Wood, 2 Cal. (N. Y.) 310; Lotard v. Graves, 3 Cal. (N. Y.) 226; Lawler v. Keaquick, 1 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 175; Gould v. Rich, 7 Metc. (Mass.) 538.

Cases involving other agents. Greenleaf v. Moody, 13 Allen (Mass.), 363; Bartlett v. Sparkman, 95 Mo. 136, 6 Am. St. Rep. 35; Milbank v. Dennistoun, 21 N. Y. 386; Jervis v. Hoyt, 2 Hun (N. Y.), 637; Harter v. Blanchard, 64 Barb. (N. Y.) 617; Perez v. Miranda, 7 Martin N. S. (La.) 493.

³¹ Weakley v. Pearce, 5 Heisk. (Tenn.) 401.

³² Thus in Gwilliam v. Twist, [1895] 2 Q. B. 86, it was said by Lord Esher, "I am very much inclined to agree with the view taken by Eyre, C. J., in the case of Nicholson v. Chapman, 2 H. Bl. 254, and Hawtayne v. Bourne, 7 M. & W. 595, to the effect that this doctrine of authority by reason of necessity is confined to case most commonly arising is that of a master of a ship who finds himself confronted with an emergency at a time when communication with his principal is impracticable. The rule, however, is not confined to such cases. Thus, where a messenger, sent in haste to procure a physician and told to call Dr. A., found that Dr. A was absent, and therefore summoned Dr. B., under circumstances making communication with the principal impracticable, and having reason to suppose that some physician rather than a particular one was needed, and having no reason to suppose that Dr. B. would not be acceptable, the employment of Dr. B. was held to be authorized.³³

§ 1264. — Limitations.—But while extraordinary circumstances may thus justify the assumption of extraordinary powers, it does not necessarily follow that an agent may assume any or all extraordinary powers, and bind his principal by acts done under such assumed powers. The same general principles apply here that govern the implication of authority from circumstances in other cases. The powers assumed must not exceed the exigencies of the occasion. They must be limited both in nature and extent by the necessities of the case, and must bear as close relationship as possible to the authority actually conferred.³⁴

Thus where an agent was employed to transfer wheat upon a river boat, and the boat sank in shallow water, it was held that, while the agent would have authority in such an emergency to take care of the wheat, and to employ hands or take such other steps as were necessary to preserve it, he was not justified in selling the wheat, and certainly certain well-known exceptional cases, such as those of the master of a ship or the acceptor of a bill of exchange for the honor of the drawer;" and by Smith, L. J., "To constitute a person an agent of necessity he must be unable to communicate with his employer; he cannot be such an agent if he is in a position to do so. The impossibility of communicating with the principal is the foundation of the doctrine of an agent of necessity. I adopt the passage in Carver's Carriage of Goods by Sea, § 299, where he says in relation to the sale of cargo by the master of the ship as being an agent of necessity: 'If there is a fair expectation of obtaining directions, either from the owners of the goods or from agents known by the master to have authority to deal with the goods, within such time as would not be imprudent, the master must make every reasonable endeavor to get those directions, and his authority to sell does not arise until he has failed to get them.'"

See also Sims v. Midland Ry. Co., [1913] 1 K. B. 103. Authority by necessity has been discussed in several of the preceding sections. See § 320.

³³ Bartlett v. Sparkman, 95 Mo. 136, 6 Am. St. Rep. 35.

³⁴ Foster v. Smith, 42 Tenn. (2 Cold.) 474, 88 Am. Dec. 604.

not justified in selling it to the carrier in consideration of the small sum due to the latter for the transportation.³⁵

§ 1265. Where the authority has been substantially pursued, agent not liable for immaterial departure.—As has been already stated, no substantial damages can be recovered from the agent for a purely circumstantial departure from instructions, not affecting the result.³⁶ Where it is shown that the instructions have not been followed and that a loss has ensued, the burden of proving that the departure from the course prescribed was immaterial and did not cause the loss, is upon the agent.³⁷ The very fact that the principal gave directions is evidence that he regarded them as material, and if the agent, except in the case of sudden emergency before referred to, voluntarily elects to disregard them and pursue a course of his own election, he must be prepared to show that the instructions were not in fact material. And it is evident from the very nature of the case that such proof is often difficult to make.

Thus in a case above referred to, if the agent had made his remittance in large bills as directed, the letter containing them might have been lost in the same manner that the more bulky package containing the larger number of small bills was lost; but it was obviously impossible to prove that as a matter of fact it would have been lost; and the court properly held that the agent was the insurer of the safety of the method which he adopted.³⁸ In such cases, it has been said, that every doubtful circumstance will be construed against the agent.³⁹ In short, as has been stated, instructions are followed at the principal's risk; they are violated at the risk of the agent.

§ 1266. — Where instructions are ambiguous, and agent acts in good faith.—If the principal desires his instructions to be pursued, it is obviously necessary that he should make them intelligible and clear. If however they are so ambiguous as to be fairly capable of two interpretations, and the agent in good faith and with due diligence adopts one of them, he cannot be held liable to the principal for a loss that may result, upon the latter's claim that he meant the other.⁴⁰

³⁵ Foster v. Smith, supra. Compare Jervis v. Hoyt, 2 Hun (N. Y.), 637.

³⁶ See ante, § 1085.

³⁷ Wilson v. Wilson, 26 Pa. 393; Walker v. Walker, 5 Heisk. (Tenn.) 425.

³⁸ Wilson v. Wilson, supra.

³⁹ Adams v. Robinson, 65 Ala. 586.

⁴⁰ Bessent v. Harris, 63 N. C. 542;

National Bank v. Merchants Bank, 91 U. S. 92, 23 L. Ed. 208; Shelton v. Merchants Dispatch Transp. Co., 59 N. Y. 258; Le Roy v. Beard, 8 How. (U. S.) 451, 12 L. Ed. 1151; Lorraine v. Cartwright, 3 Wash. (U. S. C. C.) 151, Fed. Cas. No. 8,500; DeTastett v. Crousillat, 2 Wash. (U. S. C. C.) 132, Fed. Cas. No. 3,828; Pickett v. Pearsons, 17 Vt. 470; Minnesota Lin-

This subject has been discussed in a preceding section, and what is there said is applicable here.⁴¹

§ 1267. — “But,” as is said in a recent case⁴² “because an agent’s instructions will admit of different interpretations, he is not thereby authorized to disregard them entirely, and substitute his own judgment in the place thereof. If he acts at all in such cases, he must follow one of the interpretations reasonably derivable from the uncertain terms of the instructions. In this case defendant did neither; but, on the contrary, substituted its own ideas of what was proper under the circumstances, thereby acting directly antagonistic to its instructions.”

§ 1268. How affected by custom.—As has been already seen, it is not only within the agent’s power, but it is also his duty, in the absence of countervailing circumstances, to conform to such valid and established usages and customs as apply to the subject-matter or the performance of his agency. One who makes a contract in the face of an established custom relating to the matter, will, in the absence of anything to the contrary, be presumed to have made it subject to the custom. So a person who employs another to act for him in a particular place or market, where he knows that local customs prevail, or where it is reasonable to anticipate that they may prevail, will be presumed, when nothing appears to indicate a different intent, as intending that the business to be done, will be done according to the usage or custom of that place or market.⁴³

Custom cannot, however, as between the principal and his agent, override positive instructions to the contrary.⁴⁴ If, in such a case, the agent is not able, or does not wish, to conform to the instructions, he should refuse to accept, or should renounce the trust.

seed Oil Co. v. Montague, 65 Iowa, 67; Very v. Levy, 13 How. (U. S.) 345, 14 L. Ed. 173, 1 Myer’s Fed. Dec. § 458; Mechanics’ Bank v. Merchants’ Bank, 6 Mete. (Mass.) 13; Foster v. Rockwell, 104 Mass. 167; Long v. Pool, 68 N. Car. 479; Marsh v. Whitmore, 21 Wall. (U. S.) 178, 22 L. Ed. 482; Anderson v. First Nat. Bank, 4 N. D. 182; Oxford Lake Line v. First Nat. Bank, 40 Fla. 349; Hopwood v. Corbin, 63 Iowa, 218; Berry v. Haldeman, 111 Mich. 667; Bevis v. Big Bend Abstract Co., 62 Wash. 513; Falsken v. Falls City Bank, 71 Neb. 29.

⁴¹ See ante, §§ 792, 793.

⁴² Oxford Lake Line v. First Nat. Bank, supra.

⁴³ Bailey v. Bensley, 87 Ill. 556; Lyon v. Culbertson, 83 Ill. 33, 25 Am. Rep. 349; United States L. Ins. Co. v. Advance Co., 80 Ill. 549; Byrne v. Schwing, 6 B. Mon. (Ky.) 199; De Lazardi v. Hewitt, 7 B. Mon. (Ky.) 697; White v. Fuller, 67 Barb. (N. Y.) 267; Smythe v. Parsons, 37 Kan. 79.

⁴⁴ Wanless v. McCandless, 38 Iowa, 20; Robinson Machine Works v. Vorse, 52 Iowa, 207; Osborne v. Rider, 62 Wis. 235; Greenstine v.

So, as has been seen, a custom, unless shown to have been known and assented to, will not justify the changing of the essential character of the relation between the principal and his agent,⁴⁵ nor can it operate to authorize the making of an invalid instead of a valid contract, or to bind the principal to take one thing when he has ordered another.⁴⁶

But, as has already been stated, where no contrary instructions are given, it is the duty of the agent to conform to the custom, and failure to do so will subject him to liability for such losses as may result therefrom.⁴⁷

§ 1269. — When presumption as to custom conclusive.— How far the presumption, that the parties had the custom in contemplation, is conclusive, is a question not always easy of determination. Some customs are so well established and so universally recognized as to have become a part of the law of the land and a party will not be heard to allege his ignorance of them. Others, however, are so restricted as to locality or trade or business, that ignorance of them is a valid reason why a party may not be held to have contracted in reference to them.

Not only the existence of such a custom, but whether knowledge of it exists in any particular case, are questions of fact for the jury. It is for them to determine, under proper instructions from the court, whether from the evidence as to the existence, duration and other characteristics of the custom, and as to the knowledge thereof by the parties, there is shown a custom of such age and character that the law will presume that the parties knew of, and contracted in reference to, it; or whether the custom is so local and particular that knowledge in the party to be charged must be affirmatively shown and may be negated.⁴⁸

Borchard, 50 Mich. 434, 45 Am. Rep. 51; Barksdale v. Brown, 1 Nott. & M. (S. C.) 517, 9 Am. Dec. 720; Hall v. Storrs, 7 Wis. 253; Bliss v. Arnold, 8 Vt. 252, 30 Am. Dec. 467; Hutchings v. Ladd, 16 Mich. 493; Leland v. Douglass, 1 Wend. (N. Y.) 490; Clark v. Van Northwick, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 343; Catlin v. Smith, 24 Vt. 85; Day v. Holmes, 103 Mass. 306; Parsons v. Martin, 11 Gray (Mass.), 112; Ledyard v. Hibbard, 48 Mich. 421, 42 Am. Rep. 474; Morton v. Morris, 27 Tex. Civ. App. 262.

⁴⁵ Robinson v. Mollett, L. R. 7 H. L. 802.

⁴⁶ Perry v. Barnett, 15 Q. B. Div. 388.

⁴⁷ Greely v. Bartlett, 1 Greenl. (Me.) 172, 10 Am. Dec. 54.

⁴⁸ Walls v. Bailey, 49 N. Y. 464, 10 Am. Rep. 407; Williams v. Gilman, 3 Greenl. (Me.) 276; Bradley v. Wheeler, 44 N. Y. 500; Higgins v. Moore, 34 N. Y. 425; Dawson v. Kittle, 4 Hill (N. Y.), 107; Caldwell v. Dawson, 4 Metc. (Ky.) 121; Barnard v. Kellogg, 10 Wall. (U. S.) 383, 19 L.

§ 1270. No presumption of disobedience.—The law does not presume that the agent has not obeyed his instructions or that he does not intend to obey them. "It matters not what the intent or supposition of the principal may be, the law will presume that the agent obeyed the instructions that were given and as they were given, and if the contrary is alleged, it must be proved."⁴⁹

§ 1271. Measure of damages.—The general rules applicable to the recovery of damages in other cases obtain here. Thus the losses for which damages are sought must not be too remote, nor of a purely speculative or problematical character. They must, in other words, be the natural and proximate result of the act complained of.⁵⁰ As is said by a learned judge: "It is the first duty of an agent whose authority is limited, to adhere faithfully to his instructions, in all cases to which they can be properly applied. If he exceeds, or violates, or neglects them, he is responsible for all losses which are the natural consequence of his act."⁵¹

Many illustrations have already been seen, and more will hereafter arise, especially in the case of brokers who have disregarded instructions to buy or sell.⁵²

§ 1272. Ratification.—Even though the agent may have violated his instructions, it is still possible that the principal may so far ratify his act as to relieve the agent from liability.⁵³ This ratification may

Ed. 987; Martin v. Maynard, 16 N. H. 166; Dodge v. Favor, 15 Gray (Mass.), 82; Fisher v. Sargent, 10 Cush. (Mass.) 250; Stevens v. Reeves, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 200; Citizens Bank v. Grafflin, 31 Md. 507; 1 Am. Rep. 66; McMasters v. Pennsylvania R. R. Co., 69 Pa. 374, 8 Am. Rep. 264; Farnsworth v. Chase, 19 N. H. 534, 51 Am. Dec. 206; Randall v. Smith, 63 Me. 105, 18 Am. Rep. 200.

⁴⁹ Brewer, J., in Bangs v. Hornick, 30 Fed. 97. Citing Bartlett v. Smith, 13 Fed. 263; Kirkpatrick v. Adams, 20 Fed. 287.

⁵⁰ 3 Sutherland on Damages, 6.

⁵¹ Colt, J., in Whitney v. Merchants Union Exp. Co., supra.

⁵² See post, Brokers.

⁵³ Lunn v. Guthrie, 115 Iowa, 501; Evans v. Lawton, 34 Fed. 233; Plano Mfg. Co. v. Buxton, 36 Minn. 203.

Defendant, who was a salesman of plaintiff, collected, without authority, the price of certain goods sold. Plaintiff sued the customer, but, upon discovering that defendant had collected the bill, discontinued that action and brought this one against the salesman for a conversion. Held, that he was liable; that their suing him ratified his collection of the money only, but not his retention of it thereafter, and that it was his duty to pay to them the identical money he had collected. Schanz v. Martin, 37 N. Y. Misc. 492; Carver v. Creque, 48 N. Y. 385, was cited as being nearest in point.

But see Anderson v. First Nat. Bank, 5 N. D. 451, holding that waiving the tort and suing in assumpsit for a wrongful disposition of property is not to be deemed a ratification of the original act.

be express, or it may arise by implication as in other cases.⁵⁴ What the conditions are under which ratification may become effective, as between the principal and the agent, has already been considered in a previous section, and need not be repeated here.

§ 1273. Liability for sub-agents.—The same considerations apply to the agent's liability for breach of instructions by his sub-agents as in other cases.⁵⁵ If the sub-agent is the agent of the agent, the latter must answer for his disobedience where any other principal would be liable;⁵⁶ if he is the principal's agent, then the intermediate agent is not responsible where he is free from fault.⁵⁷

IV.

NOT TO BE NEGLIGENT.

§ 1274. In general.—Many of the questions that might fall under this head would also properly be classed under the preceding. That is, the negligence complained of may be the result of a failure to observe positive instructions, as well as of a failure to perform the general duties, which pertain to the undertaking, but which were not the object of express directions. No harm can come, however, if strict lines of demarcation be not always drawn.

§ 1275. Agent bound to exercise ordinary and reasonable care.—It is the duty of every agent, when no other arrangement is made, to bring to the performance of his undertaking, and to exercise in such performance, that degree of skill, care and diligence which the nature of the undertaking and the time, place and circumstances of the performance ordinarily and reasonably demand. A failure to do this, whereby the principal naturally and proximately suffers loss or injury, constitutes negligence for which the agent is responsible.⁵⁸

⁵⁴ Osborne v. Durham, 157 N. C. 262.

⁵⁵ See ante, § 333.

⁵⁶ So held in Cowley v. Fabien, 204 N. Y. 566. (There was also evidence of ratification and approval by the agent of the act of the subagent.) Franklin Fire Ins. Co. v. Bradford, 201 Pa. 32, 88 Am. St. Rep. 770. Compare Bradford v. Hanover Ins. Co., 43 C. C. A. 310, 102 Fed. 48, 49 L. R. A. 530, where, on the same facts, it was held that the agent was not liable, because the act of the sub-agent was not such an one as would make a principal liable.

⁵⁷ Ante, §§ 332, 333.

⁵⁸ Leighton v. Sargent, 27 N. H. 460, 59 Am. Dec. 388; Gill v. Middleton, 105 Mass. 477, 7 Am. Rep. 548; Holly v. Boston Gaslight Co., 8 Gray (Mass.), 123, 69 Am. Dec. 233; Gaither v. Myrick, 9 Md. 118, 66 Am. Dec. 316; Whitney v. Martine, 88 N. Y. 535; Heinemann v. Heard, 50 N. Y. 35.

§ 1276. Agent bound to exercise usual precautions.—The agent is also bound to exercise and observe all the precautions ordinarily pursued in relation to the particular business in which he is employed,⁵⁹ and according to the known usages of the place, and the circumstances of the times, within which the business is to be transacted.⁶⁰ If, therefore, the usage of the business in which he is engaged imposes upon such an agent the performance of a certain duty, it will be presumed, in the absence of anything to indicate the contrary, that the duty existed in his case; and for failure to perform it, he will be liable to the principal for the loss thereby sustained.⁶¹ The customs of the particular principal must also be observed, where the agent knows them, and was evidently expected to conform to them.⁶²

§ 1277. — But not liable for mere accident or mistake.—But the agent is not liable for losses resulting from his action or non-action, if he was guilty of no negligence or other breach of duty. Mere accident or mistake, in this sense, imposes no liability upon the agent.⁶³

§ 1278. — Not bound to exercise highest care.—Except in those cases in which he voluntarily and without sufficient reason, violates express instructions, the agent is not ordinarily an insurer.⁶⁴ Unless he expressly agrees to do so, he is not bound to exercise the highest possible degree of care. Unless he professes to be an expert, he is not ordinarily bound to bring his performance up to the standard of an expert. If he be, for example, a general practitioner in the country, he cannot be required to have and exercise that high degree

⁵⁹ In Williams Co. v. Dotterer, 111 La. 822, a receiver of a railroad who was given charge of plaintiff's goods to store pending further shipment, was held liable for surrendering the goods pursuant to an invalid order of stoppage in transit.

⁶⁰ Wright v. Central R. R. Co., 16 Ga. 38.

⁶¹ An agent employed to take care of property, who neglected the precautions shown to be customary when buildings were vacant, held responsible to his principal for loss caused by the bursting of heating pipes and radiators in freezing weather. Cameron v. Real Estate Co., 76 Mo. App. 366.

⁶² Beach v. Travelers' Insurance Co., 73 Conn. 118.

⁶³ "An agent is never liable to his principal for a mere mistake in the performance of a duty within the general scope of his authority." Briere v. Taylor, 126 Wis. 347.

⁶⁴ "It is the duty of an agent to obey the instructions of his principal, and exercise in his employment reasonable skill and ordinary diligence. But he is not an insurer, and is only liable for losses arising from a neglect of such duties." Rice v. Longfellow, 82 Minn. 154. To same effect: Norton v. Melick, 97 Iowa, 564; Willson v. Fertilizer Co., 67 S. Car. 467; Caruthers v. Ross (Tex. Civ. App.), 63 S. W. 911.

of skill to which the specialist of the metropolis attains, and which can only be reasonably expected from one in his position.⁶⁵

§ 1279. ——— Good faith—Reasonable diligence.—But the agent is, in all cases, bound to act in good faith, and to exercise reasonable diligence, and such care and skill as are ordinarily possessed by persons of common capacity engaged in the same business.⁶⁶ As was said by Judge Cooley: "Whoever bargains to render services for another undertakes for good faith and integrity, but he does not agree that he will commit no errors. For negligence, bad faith or dishonesty, he would be liable to his employer; but if he is guilty of neither of these, the master or employer must submit to such incidental losses as may occur in the course of the employment, because these are incident to all avocations, and no one, by any implication of law, ever undertakes to protect another against them."⁶⁷

Further than this, general statements of the principle cannot usefully go. The principle is not an uncertain one, though the question of what is reasonable in any given case is not one which can ordinarily be measured by any pre-established inflexible standard. There are cases, it is true, where a limit must be fixed, and one so fixed, though purely arbitrary, is to be observed. But there is a growing tendency on the part of courts, and it is in furtherance of justice, to measure each case by the more flexible standard of its own facts and circumstances. "Care and diligence should vary according to the exigencies which require vigilance and attention, conforming in amount and de-⁶⁵ Small v. Howard, 128 Mass. 131, 35 Am. Rep. 363; Leighton v. Sargent, 27 N. H. 460, 59 Am. Dec. 388.

⁶⁶ Leighton v. Sargent, 27 N. H. 460, 59 Am. Dec. 388; Whitney v. Martine, 88 N. Y. 535; Heinemann v. Heard, 50 N. Y. 35; Gaither v. Myrick, 9 Md. 118, 66 Am. Dec. 316; Fletcher v. Boston & Maine R. R., 1 Allen (Mass.), 9, 79 Am. Dec. 695; Varnum v. Martin, 15 Pick. (Mass.) 440; Stimpson v. Sprague, 6 Greenl. (Me.) 470; Crooker v. Hutchinson, 1 Vt. 73; Holmes v. Peck, 1 R. I. 242; Wilson v. Russ, 20 Me. 421; Grannis v. Branden, 5 Day (Conn.), 260, 5 Am. Dec. 143; Landon v. Humphrey, 9 Conn. 209, 23 Am. Dec. 333; Howard v. Grover, 28 Me. 97, 48 Am. Dec. 478; Myles v. Myles, 6 Bush

(Ky.), 237; Kempker v. Roblyer, 29 Iowa, 274; Stevens v. Walker, 55 Ill. 151; Chandler v. Hogle, 58 Ill. 46; Deshler v. Beers, 32 Ill. 368, 83 Am. Dec. 274; Phillips v. Moir, 69 Ill. 155; Babcock v. Orbison, 25 Ind. 75; Leverick v. Meigs, 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 645; Van Alen v. Vanderpool, 6 Johns. (N. Y.) 69, 5 Am. Dec. 192; Howatt v. Davis, 5 Munf. (Va.) 34, 7 Am. Dec. 681; Greely v. Bartlett, 1 Greenl. (Me.) 172, 10 Am. Dec. 54; Folsom v. Mussey, 8 Greenl. (Me.) 400, 23 Am. Dec. 522.

⁶⁷ In Page v. Wells, 37 Mich. 415. Agent may be held liable to principal for deceit. Miller v. John, 111 Ill. App. 56; Hindle v. Holcomb, 34 Wash. 336; Wood v. Blaney, 107 Cal. 291.

gree to the particular circumstances under which they are to be exerted.”⁶⁸

§ 1280. When agent warrants possession of skill.—Wherever the undertaking of the agent is one which in its nature requires the possession and exercise of professional skill, the law will presume, in the absence of anything to the contrary, an undertaking on the part of the agent that he possesses and will exercise a reasonable and competent degree of the skill required.⁶⁹

And the same rule applies to any other case requiring special or peculiar skill. If the agent undertakes, for a reward, the performance of such a duty, without possessing a reasonable and competent degree of skill, of which fact the principal is ignorant, he will be liable to the principal for the loss or injury resulting therefrom.⁷⁰ If, however, the principal had notice or knowledge of the deficiency at the time of the employment, the agent who has not expressly promised more will not be so liable.⁷¹ The same thing is true where the agent is employed out of the line of his known employment. If the principal sees fit to employ an auctioneer to conduct his case in court, he cannot complain of his attorney’s want of skill, unless the latter expressly warranted that he possessed it.

§ 1281. How when agency is gratuitous.—Where the duty to be performed by the agent is purely voluntary in its nature, a somewhat different rule applies. Friends and neighbors are every day rendering mutual services for the accommodation and convenience of each other, with no thought of exacting or receiving a reward. These services, too, are often of such a nature that professional or skilled agents might well have been employed if they were accessible or within the means of the parties; as where, in rural districts, neighbors render for each other simple medical aid or give each other assistance, counsel or advice, in the transaction of their affairs.

⁶⁸ Merrick, J., in Holly v. Boston Gaslight Co., 8 Gray (Mass.), 131, 69 Am. Dec. 233.

⁶⁹ Wilson v. Brett, 11 M. & W. 113; Stanton v. Bell, 2 Hawks (N. C.), 145, 11 Am. Dec. 744; Leighton v. Sargent, 27 N. H. 460, 59 Am. Dec. 388; Varnum v. Martin, 15 Pick. (Mass.) 440; Stimpson v. Sprague, 6 Greenl. (Me.) 470; Crooker v. Hutchinson, 1 Vt. 73; Holmes v. Peck, 1 R. I. 242; Grannis v. Branden, 5 Day (Conn.), 260, 5 Am. Dec. 143; Howard v. Grover, 28 Me. 97, 48 Am. Dec. 478, and see cases cited in preceding section.

⁷⁰ Kirtland v. Montgomery, 1 Swan (Tenn.), 452; McDonald v. Simpson, 4 Ark. 523, 38 Am. Dec. 45; Wilson v. Brett, 11 M. & W. 113; Money-penny v. Hartland, 1 Car. & P. 352, s. c. 2 Id. 378; McFarland v. McClees (Pa.), 5 Atl. 50, and see generally cases cited in preceding section.

⁷¹ Felt v. School District, 24 Vt. 297.

In these cases it is evident that it is not contemplated that the party so acting possesses any peculiar skill or that he undertakes to exercise any. The reasonable degree of skill which such an agent could be held accountable for, is obviously very small, and the negligence which would make him liable must be of that degree which is often, for want of a better term, characterized as gross.⁷²

Thus where B, a general merchant, who was about to export a case of leather, being applied to by A to ship a case for him at the same time, voluntarily and without any compensation, and by agreement with A, made one entry of both cases at the custom house, but under an improper designation, by reason of which both cases were seized, it was held that he was not liable for the loss sustained by A.⁷³

Such an agent would, however, be liable if his negligence was of such a nature and degree that it might justly be characterized as gross or wilful or malicious.⁷⁴

So even though the agent be possessed of professional skill, yet if under the circumstances, there was no express or implied undertaking to exercise it, he cannot be held liable. Thus if an attorney, in reply to a casual inquiry made upon the street or elsewhere, without any intention to mislead, gives erroneous advice to one to whom he sustains no professional relations, he cannot be held liable.⁷⁵

§ 1282. — When employed in a capacity which implies skill. But where a person holds himself out to the public as possessing professional, peculiar or competent skill, or offers his services in a profession, occupation or capacity, which from its nature implies the possession of such skill, he will be liable to those who employ or rely upon him in that capacity and upon that supposition, to the same extent as though the services were to be rendered for a reward.⁷⁶

⁷² Briere v. Taylor, 126 Wis. 347; Hammond v. Hussey, 51 N. H. 40, 12 Am. Rep. 41; Shiells v. Blackburne, 1 H. Bl. 158; Beardslee v. Richardson, 11 Wend. (N. Y.) 25, 25 Am. Dec. 596; Foster v. Essex Bank, 17 Mass. 479, 9 Am. Dec. 168; Stanton v. Bell, 2 Hawks (N. C.), 145, 11 Am. Dec. 744; Haynie v. Waring, 29 Ala. 265; Skelley v. Kahn, 17 Ill. 171; Lamplsey v. Scott, 24 Miss. 533; Eddy v. Livingston, 35 Mo. 493; Bissell v. New York, etc., R. R. Co., 29 Barb. (N. Y.) 602; Needles v. Howard, 1 E. D. Smith (N. Y.), 62; Grant v. Ludlow, 8 Ohio St. 43.

⁷³ Shiells v. Blackburne, supra.

⁷⁴ Hammond v. Hussey, supra; Charlesworth v. Whitlow, 74 Ark. 277.

⁷⁵ Fish v. Kelly, 17 Com. Bench (N. S.) 194.

⁷⁶ Isham v. Post, 141 N. Y. 100, 38 Am. St. Rep. 766, 23 L. R. A. 90; Shiells v. Blackburne, 1 H. Blackstone, 158; Williams v. McKay, 40 N. J. Eq. 189, 53 Am. Rep. 775; McNeveins v. Lowe, 40 Ill. 209; Hord v. Grimes, 13 B. Mon. (Ky.) 188; Harlow v. Bartlett, 170 Mass. 584; Carpenter v. Blake, 60 Barb. (N. Y.) 488; s. c. 50 N. Y. 696; Howard v. Grover,

This principle is of constant application to the cases of attorneys and physicians,⁷⁷ but it is not confined to the so-called learned professions.

Thus if a bank has undertaken the collection of a note or other demand, and through its negligence the claim is lost, it is no defense that the collection was to be made gratuitously.⁷⁸

So where a landlord had undertaken gratuitously to make certain repairs upon the premises of his tenant, but so negligently and unskillfully performed the work that the tenant's wife was injured it was held that, in assuming to make the repairs at the request of the tenant, he must be considered as professing to have the requisite skill as a mechanic, and as undertaking to select and furnish the kind and quality of materials appropriate to the accomplishment of the desired object.⁷⁹

And so one who holds himself out as a banker, and by his circulars advertises himself as dealing in "choice stocks," and promises his customers "careful attention" in all their financial transactions, is "required to exercise the skill and knowledge of a banker, engaged in loaning money for himself and for his customers," notwithstanding the services in the particular case are rendered without compensation.⁸⁰

§ 1283. — Bound to exercise the skill he possesses.—So where an agent possesses a competent degree of skill and enters upon the performance of an undertaking requiring its exercise, he will be liable if he neglects to use it, although the service is to be gratuitous.

Thus in a case which has been often cited⁸¹ it appeared that the plaintiff had intrusted his horse to the defendant, requesting him to ride it for the purpose of showing it to a prospective purchaser. The defendant accordingly rode the horse and for the purpose of showing it, took it into a race ground, where in consequence of the slippery nature of the ground, the horse slipped and fell several times, and in falling broke one of its knees. It was proved that the defendant was 28 Maine, 97, 48 Am. Dec. 478; Craig v. Chambers, 17 Ohio St. 253; Ben-den v. Manning, 2 N. H. 289; Thorne v. Deas, 4 Johns. (N. Y.) 84; First Nat. Bank of Lyons v. Ocean Nat. Bank, 60 N. Y. 278, 19 Am. Rep. 181.

⁷⁷ McNevins v. Lowe, supra.

⁷⁸ Durnford v. Patterson, 7 Martin (La.), 460, 12 Am. Dec. 514; Smedes v. Bank of Utica, 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 372, s. c. 3 Cow. 662.

⁷⁹ Gill v. Middleton, 105 Mass. 477, 7 Am. Rep. 548. Se also Steamboat "New World" v. King, 16 How. (U. S.) 469, 14 L. Ed. 1019.

⁸⁰ Isham v. Post, 141 N. Y. 100, 38 Am. St. Rep. 766, 23 L. R. A. 90; Baxter v. Jones, 6 Ont. L. Rep. 360.

⁸¹ Wilson v. Brett, 11 Mees. & Wels. 113.

a person conversant with and skilled in the use of horses. The trial court left it to the jury to say whether the nature of the ground was such as to render it a matter of culpable negligence in the defendant to ride the horse there; and instructed them, that under the circumstances the defendant, being shown to be a person skilled in the management of horses, was bound to take as much care of the horse as if he had borrowed it, and that if they found that the defendant had been negligent in going upon the ground where the injury was done, or had ridden the horse carelessly while there, they should find for the plaintiff, which they accordingly did. Upon appeal, this direction was approved.

§ 1284. Agent not liable for unforeseeable dangers.—It follows as a corollary from the principles above stated, that while the agent is bound to exercise, for the protection of the principal, a reasonable degree of care and skill, and will be liable for any loss or damage which the principal may sustain on account of a failure so to do, yet the agent can not be held responsible for unforeseen and unexpected losses or damage out of the ordinary course of business or of natural events, and which could not be guarded against by reasonable diligence or foresight.⁸²

§ 1285. But liability increased if special risks disclosed.—But, on the other hand, the liability of the agent may be increased beyond that existing in the ordinary case, where the agent, at the time of undertaking the service, is informed of special circumstances demanding more than ordinary care or diligence. Frequent illustrations are found in the case of sheriffs and attorneys who undertake to serve process or collect claims in view of special exigencies disclosed to them, making delays dangerous. For similar reasons, a merchandise broker employed to enter goods at the custom house⁸³ or to bring suit for the recovery of excessive duties exacted,⁸⁴ and apprised of circumstances making unusual diligence necessary, may be held liable, even though he does all that would be required of him if no unusual circumstances were present. As pointed out in such a case, "the term negligence is a relative one, and whether or not it exists is to be decided by the situation of affairs at the time the defendant is required

⁸² Johnson v. Martin, 11 La. Ann. 27, 66 Am. Dec. 193.

⁸³ In Vernier v. Knauth, 7 N. Y. App. Div. 57, brokers were held liable under rather extraordinary circumstances, for not entering a delayed cargo before a new tariff was to go into effect.

They acted in the usual way, but the circumstances disclosed demanded unusual action. The result was a loss of $6,800.

⁸⁴ Bowerman v. Rogers, 125 U. S. 585, 31 L. Ed. 815.

to act. The degree of diligence which any contractor is called upon to exercise is proportionate to the duty imposed, and the existence of negligence depends upon the failure to exercise the degree of diligence which the peculiar conditions require. Whether in any given case a party has been guilty of negligence necessarily depends then upon what is required of him in the particular case, and it is a trite saying that what would be due diligence in one case might, under other conditions with regard to the same kind of business, be serious negligence.”⁸⁵

§ 1286. Agent presumed to have done his duty.—The law does not presume negligence on the part of the agent. On the other hand, it presumes that the agent has done his duty, until the contrary appears, and the burden of proof is upon him who alleges a misfeasance, to establish it.⁸⁶

§ 1287. Agent not liable if principal also negligent.—The ordinary rules of contributory negligence apply to the question under consideration. If therefore the principal has by his own negligence, contributed to cause the injury, or if, by the use of reasonable diligence on his own part, he could have prevented the injury, the agent can not be held responsible for it.⁸⁷ Thus the failure of the principal to apprise the agent of the existence of special circumstances making unusual diligence necessary,⁸⁸ or the failure of the principal to give the agent correct information, where this information was to be the foundation of the agent’s actions,⁸⁹ will relieve the agent from liability which might otherwise be incurred.

§ 1288. When agent liable for neglect of sub-agent.—The question of the liability of the agent for the misconduct of a sub-agent, has already been considered in an earlier portion of the work to which the reader is referred.⁹⁰ As has there been seen, the material question is, whose agent is the sub-agent. If, under the circumstances, the agent

⁸⁵ Vernier v. Knauth, 7 N. Y. App. Div. 57. for negligently felling a tree so that it injured the master’s team, ⁸⁶ Gaither v. Myrick, 9 Md. 118, 66 Am. Dec. 316; Lampley v. Scott, 24 Miss. 533.

See also, Emerson v. Turner, 95 Ark. 597.

⁸⁷ Sioux City, etc., R. R. Co. v. Walker, 49 Iowa, 273.

Contributory negligence of fellow servant—A servant is liable to his master for injuries caused by his negligence to the master’s property, e. g., although the negligence of another servant, e. g., the driver of the team, not joined in the action, contributed to produce the injury. Zulkee v. Wing, 20 Wis. 408, 91 Am. Dec. 425.

⁸⁸ Freeholder v. State Bank, 32 N. J. Eq. 467.

⁸⁹ Chapman v. Union Bank, 32 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 95.

⁹⁰ Ante, §§ 332, 333.

was authorized, either expressly or by implication, to employ sub-agents, on the principal's account, then the sub-agent is the agent of the principal only, and the agent is not responsible unless he has been negligent in the selection of the sub-agent. If, on the other hand, the sub-agent can be regarded as the employee of the agent only, then the latter is responsible to the principal for the negligence of the sub-agent.⁹¹

§ 1289. When agent liable for neglect of co-agent.—As has been seen in an earlier section,⁹² the principal may often employ several agents to act independently respecting the same subject-matter, or, on the other hand, he may employ two or more agents who jointly and collectively undertake to perform the act in question. Where, as in the former case, they are merely co-agents, one is not ordinarily responsible to the principal for the neglect of his co-agent, if he is himself free from fault.⁹³

But where they are joint agents a different rule applies. "It is familiar law," it is said in one case, "that where two or more persons undertake to execute a private agency together, they are jointly liable each for the acts of the other; nor is it any defense that one of them wholly transacted the business with the knowledge of the principal. Each is liable for the whole, if they jointly undertake the agency, notwithstanding an agreement between themselves to the contrary, or that one shall have all the profits."⁹⁴

So although the relation would ordinarily appear to be that of co-agents or fellow servants merely, it may yet appear in the particular ⁹¹ Appleton Bank v. McGilvray, 4 Gray (Mass.), 518, 64 Am. Dec. 92; Sexton v. Weaver, 141 Mass. 273; Campbell v. Reaves, 3 Head (Tenn.), 226; Commercial Bank v. Jones, 18 Tex. 811; Barnard v. Coffin, 141 Mass. 37, 55 Am. Rep. 443; Warren Bank v. Suffolk Bank, 10 Cush. (Mass.) 582; Pownall v. Bair, 78 Penn. St. 403; Darling v. Stanwood, 14 Allen (Mass.), 504; Stephens v. Babcock, 3 B. & Adol. 354; McCants v. Wells, 4 S. C. 381; Hoag v. Graves, 81 Mich. 628; Davis v. King, 66 Conn. 465, 50 Am. St. Rep. 104; Morris v. Warlick, 118 Ga. 421. An agent is liable to his principal for funds received for the principal and misapplied by the agent's clerk. St. Louis, etc., Ry. Co. v. Smith, 48 Ark. 317.

⁹² See ante, § 195.

⁹³ An agent employed by the trustees of an estate to collect its income is not responsible for the loss of funds through the misconduct of an assistant employed at the suggestion, with the consent, and by the authority of the trustees. The assistant was simply a fellow-agent and not defendant's agent. Nor was defendant liable because he failed to discover the default of his fellow-agent, as the responsibility for supervision was not on him but upon the trustees. Sergeant v. Emlen, 141 Pa. 580. To same effect: Regents v. Rose, 45 Mich. 284.

⁹⁴ Milwaukee Harvester Co. v. Finnegan, 43 Minn. 133.

case that one was charged with the duty of supervision and control over the other, or even that he was employed for the very purpose of protecting his principal from the negligence of the other, and in such a case responsibility for the negligence of the other, which proper supervision would have prevented, may well entail responsibility.⁹⁵

§ 1290. Effect of ratification upon the agent's liability.—This question also has been already discussed in a previous chapter,⁹⁶ and nothing need be added here in reference to it, beyond recalling that by a ratification under the conditions there referred to, the principal absolves the agent from all responsibility to him for the loss or injury resulting from the unauthorized act.

§ 1291. The measure of damages.—The question of the measure of the damages to be recovered for the agent's neglect is substantially the same that arises where an injury has been sustained by reason of a violation of instructions. The principal is entitled to full compensation; to be put into that situation in which he would have been if the agent had performed his duty. In other words, he is entitled to recover such damages as naturally and proximately result from the wrongful act complained of. Profits which are possible or speculative merely, are not to be recovered, but at the same time, it is not necessary that the loss or damage should be directly or immediately caused by the default, if such loss or damage can fairly be considered as the natural result or just consequence of it.⁹⁷ Losses, however, cannot be included which were not the natural and proximate result of the default in question.⁹⁸

The burden of showing loss is upon the principal, and more than nominal damages, at least, cannot be recovered without proof of actual injury.⁹⁹

§ 1292. ——— Judgments, costs, counsel fees.—The principal may often be made liable in actions brought against him by third per-

⁹⁵ Memphis, etc., Railroad Co. v. Greer, 87 Tenn. 698, 4 L. R. A. 858. Here a conductor was held liable to the company for the amount of a judgment, recovered against the company, for the negligence of other servant causing injury to one permitted upon the train by the conductor in violation of his duty.

⁹⁶ See ante, § 491 et seq.

⁹⁷ Bell v. Cunningham, 3 Peters (U. S.), 69, 7 L. Ed. 606; Gilson v. Collins, 66 Ill. 136; Walker v. Walker, 5

Heisk. (Tenn.) 425; Memphis, etc., Railroad Co. v. Greer, 87 Tenn. 698, 4 L. R. A. 858; Wilson v. Wilson, 26 Pa. 393; First Nat. Bank v. Hayes, 64 Ohio St. 100.

⁹⁸ Hurley v. Packard, 182 Mass. 216. So if the servant has injured a third party, and the master makes a settlement for more than the actual damage, he can hold the servant only for the actual damage. Smith v. Foran, 43 Conn. 244, 21 Am. Rep. 647.

⁹⁹ Emerson v. Turner, 95 Ark. 597.

sons to recover damages for some wrong or injury sustained by them solely by reason of the agent's neglect or default in the performance of his duty to his principal, in which actions the principal may not only be charged in damages, but may be compelled to pay costs and counsel fees incurred in the defense. The question thereupon arises how far such judgment, costs and expenses can be regarded as proper elements of damage in an action by the principal against the agent based upon the same neglect and default.

Of course where the act which caused the injury or damage was done with the express or implied consent or direction of the principal, or has been subsequently ratified by him, or if it was contributed to by some neglect or default on the part of the principal himself, no recovery can be had by him against the agent.

Where, however, the act was purely and wholly the result of a violation by the agent of his duty to his principal, the agent is bound to indemnify the principal for the damages he is compelled to pay therefor,¹ and the latter upon being sued therefor, may notify the agent of the pendency of the action and call upon him to defend it, and if he fails to defend, he may be held liable to the principal not only for the amount of damages and costs recovered, but for all reasonable and necessary counsel fees and other expenses incurred in such defense.²

§ 1293. The principal's remedies.—The remedy of the principal may be found in an action directly against the agent for negligence, or the principal may recoup his damages against the agent in an action brought by the latter for his compensation.³

§ 1294. Illustrations of agent's liability.—It is not within the limits of the present work to exhibit in detail all of the various cases in which these principles have been applied. Enough may, however, be given to sufficiently illustrate their application to the law of agency.

¹ The principal has no action against the servant until he has been compelled to pay the injured party. Newbury v. Conn., etc., R. R. Co., 25 Vt. 377; Grand Trunk Ry. Co. v. Latham, 63 Me. 177; Smith v. Foran, 43 Conn. 244, 21 Am. Rep. 647. The statute of limitations begins to run only after judgment in favor of the third person. Gaffner v. Johnson, 39 Wash. 437. See also, Merlette v.

North, etc., Steamboat Co., 13 Daly (N. Y.), 114.

² Wilson v. Greensboro, 54 Vt. 533; Inhabitants of Westfield v. Mayo, 122 Mass. 100, 23 Am. Rep. 292; Chesapeake, etc., Co. v. County Commissioners, 57 Md. 201, 40 Am. Rep. 430; Brooklyn v. Railway Co., 47 N. Y. 475, 7 Am. Rep. 469; Grand Trunk Ry. Co. v. Latham, 63 Me. 177.

³ Gilson v. Collins, 66 Ill. 136.

1. Neglect of Agents in Making Loans and Investments.

§ 1295. Degree of care required.—An agent who has undertaken to make loans or investments for his principal is not a guarantor of them unless he has expressly agreed to be.⁴ In the absence of such an agreement his duty includes,⁵ but extends no further than, the exercise of ordinary and reasonable care.⁶ If, however, the agent has been instructed to loan only in a certain way, or upon certain conditions, or to a particular person, a duty arises to obey the instructions which will involve a liability for losses caused by the disregard of such instructions.⁷

§ 1296. Liability for resulting loss.—Following the general rule a little more fully into details it may be said to be the duty of an agent who undertakes to loan money for his principal to exercise reasonable care and prudence in the selection of the security;⁸ in the examination

⁴ Haines v. Christie, 28 Colo. 502; Kennedy v. McCain, 146 Pa. 63.

⁵ An agent who receives money to loan is bound to exercise reasonable care and prudence. McFarland v. McClees (Pa.), 5 Atl. 50; Bronnenburg v. Rinker, 2 Ind. App. 391; Van Cott v. Hull, 11 N. Y. App. Div. 89; Isham v. Post, 141 N. Y. 100, 38 Am. St. Rep. 766, 23 L. R. A. 90; Texas Loan Agency v. Swayne (Tex. Civ. App.), 27 S. W. 183; Bannon v. Warfield, 42 Md. 22.

⁶ An instruction that he is bound to use the "greatest degree of care," is erroneous. Caruthers v. Ross (Tex. Civ. App.), 63 S. W. 911.

Where an agent in good faith recommended a borrower to his principal after careful inquiry, which elicited nothing but favorable expressions, he is not liable to his principal because the borrower proved to be insolvent and a forger of the deed in reliance upon which the loan was made. Texas Loan Agency v. Swayne (Tex. Civ. App.), 27 S. W. 183.

An agent who makes a loan in another state is not necessarily liable because he relied on the application, the report of his local correspondent as to the general character of the country, and his own general knowledge of the country, without making an investigation of the value of the particular land upon which the loan was made. Momsen v. Atkins, 105 Wis. 557.

See also, Wagner v. Phillips, 12 S. Dak. 335.

⁷ Where the principal puts money into the hands of his agent to be loaned to a certain person when the latter executes a mortgage upon certain land unincumbered, and the agent in disregard of this instruction makes the loan with a prior mortgage upon it, he is liable to his principal for the loss thereby sustained "to the extent of a sum not exceeding the amount of the pre-existing mortgage." Welsh v. Brown, 8 Ind. App. 421. To same effect: Bank of Owensboro v. Western Bank, 13 Bush (Ky.), 526, 26 Am. Rep. 211.

The agent is liable who, being instructed to take a trust deed running to his principal, includes a debt owing to himself thereby impairing the principal's security: a fortiori, if he gives his own debt the preference. Marshall v. Ferguson, 78 Mo. App. 645, 94 id. 175, 101 id. 653.

⁸ It is the duty of the agent to loan the money "on good security or such as a person of common prudence and of the title; in the procuring of proper conveyances; in making the necessary records, and in the performance of those other acts which may be necessary under the circumstances to perfect and protect the security. If he fails in the performance of this duty, and loss thereby results to his principal, the agent is responsible for the amount of the loss.

Where the negligence complained of is the acceptance of forged securities, the agent may show that other persons who were careful business men were similarly deceived;⁹ but where reliance upon securities insufficient in point of law was complained of, it was held incompetent to show that careful business men relied upon the same kind.¹⁰

The fact that the agent acted in good faith is no defence, because it

skill in business would esteem good." Bank of Owensboro v. Western Bank, 13 Bush (Ky.), 526, 26 Am. Rep. 211.

Clearly he is liable if he makes the loan without any security to an insolvent person. Hitchcock v. Cosper, 164 Ind. 633; Bronnenburg v. Rinker, 2 Ind. App. 391. Especially where he does so, and fails to enforce payment, in order to promote the payment of a claim due to himself. Samonset v. Mesnager, 108 Cal. 354. So if he loans without any other knowledge of the security than the borrower's own statement, when the borrower was a stranger to him. Van Cott v. Hull, 11 N. Y. App. Div. 89. So if he accepts the statements as to value of persons not shown to have any experience as land valuers or otherwise competent to make an estimate. Lowenburg v. Wolley, 25 Can. Sup. Ct. 51. So if he loans on second mortgage and fails to record it so that principal loses an opportunity to protect himself by not being notified of a foreclosure of the first mortgage. DeHart v. DeHart, 70 N. J. Eq. 774.

To loan $1,200 on land worth $2,300 and already mortgaged for $1,800, justifies a finding of negligence. Harlow v. Bartlett, 170 Mass. 534.

See also, Bannon v. Warfield, 42 Md. 22.

⁹ Isham v. Post, 141 N. Y. 100, 38 Am. St. Rep. 766, 23 L. R. A. 90.

To the same effect: Rand v. Johns (Tex. Civ. App.), 15 S. W. 200 (where it was held competent to show that a bank whose officers were competent men had been deceived in the same way).

¹⁰ Thus where the agent relied upon the security of the debtor's wife, who could not legally bind herself in that way, it was held incompetent to show that business men generally considered that the wife could be held. Murrah v. Brichta (Tex.), 9 S. W. 185.

Where all that the agent undertook to do for his principal was to exercise such care on the latter's loans as the agent was accustomed to take in his own, the agent will not be liable if he honestly does that, although a loss results. Goodwin v. Kraft, 23 Okla. 239. Here the agent was in the habit of passing upon the abstracts of title without professional advice, and in this case made a mistake as to the effect of the homestead laws.

In La Banque Provinciale v. Charbonneau, 6 Ont. L. R. 302, where the local manager of the plaintiff's branch bank altered a note in an endeavor to correct a prior error, but with the result that the parties thereto were discharged, it was held that he had not failed to exercise the skill required of one in his position.

is negligence and not bad faith which is imputed to him;¹¹ nor, as has been seen, is it a defence that he acted without compensation.¹²

Where the agent fraudulently makes misrepresentations to his principal concerning the security, it is no defense that the principal "had full opportunity to test their correctness by examining the land for herself."¹³

2. Neglect of Agent to Effect Insurance.

§ 1297. When duty to insure arises.—The same general rules apply to the case of an agent whose duty it is to insure the property of his principal. This duty may arise as has been seen,¹⁴ from express instructions; but while, in other cases, the duty does not arise from the mere fact of agency, it will arise wherever the agent has in his possession property of his principal of a kind which it is the usage to insure,¹⁵ or which it has been the agent's habit to insure,¹⁶ or which reasonable care and prudence requires shall be protected against loss.¹⁷

Where a sales agent was, by his contract, required to effect insurance, but no time was fixed for its continuance, it was held that the agent was not obliged to continue the insurance after the normal sales period and into a time in which the principal might reclaim the goods at any time without reimbursing the agent for the premiums, even though the goods remained unclaimed in the possession of the agent.¹⁸ And where an agent who had undertaken to insure failed to do so, and the principal thereupon took the matter into his own hands, the agent was held not liable for losses thereafter occurring.¹⁹

¹¹ Murrah v. Brichta (Tex.), 9 S. W. 185.

¹² See ante, § 1281; Isham v. Post, 141 N. Y. 100, 38 Am. St. R. 766, 23 L. R. A. 90; Murrah v. Brichta, supra; Samonset v. Mesnager, 108 Cal. 354.

¹³ Rubens v. Mead (Cal.), 53 Pac. 432.

¹⁴ § 1245.

¹⁵ Kingston v. Wilson, 4 Wash. (U. S. C. C.) 310, Fed. Cas. No. 7,823; Shircliff v. Whitfield, 2 Brev. (S. C.) 71, 3 Am. Dec. 701; Berthoud v. Gordon, 6 La. 579, 538; Ralston v. Barclay, 6 Martin (La.), 649, 12 Am. Dec. 483; Lee v. Adsit, 37 N. Y. 78; Schoenfeld v. Fleisher, 73 Ill. 404; Schaeffer v. Kirk, 49 Ill. 251; Brisban v. Boyd, 4 Paige (N. Y.), Ch. 17.

¹⁶ Schoenfeld v. Fleisher, supra; Schaeffer v. Kirk, supra; Lee v. Adsit, supra; Brisban v. Boyd, supra; Ralston v. Barclay, supra; Berthoud v. Gordon, supra.

¹⁷ Ante, §§ 1276, 1279.

¹⁸ Milburn Wagon Co. v. Evans, 30 Minn. 89. But where the contract expressly required the agent to keep the property insured while in his custody, it was held that he must maintain insurance on property left in his control, even though the period of his agency had expired. Prichard v. Deering Harv. Co., 117 Wis. 97.

¹⁹ Brant v. Gallup, 111 Ill. 487, 53 Am. Rep. 638.

§ 1298. What the duty requires.—The duty of the agent when not otherwise limited by express instructions, requires the exercise on his part of reasonable care and prudence in the selection of the insurer;²⁰ in the determination of the duration and amount of the risk; in procuring proper and sufficient policies²¹ or contracts and in inserting such special stipulations and provisions as the circumstances of the case reasonably require.²² But unless expressly instructed so to do, he would not be bound to insure against unusual and unforeseen dangers, but only against such as an ordinarily prudent man would select under the circumstances. If the agent is unable to procure the insurance,²³ or if after having been in the habit of insuring upon his own motion, he determines no longer to do so,²⁴ he should promptly notify his principal in order to give the latter an opportunity to insure. Failing in the performance of his duty, the agent is liable for the full amount of the insurance which he should have effected, less the premium.²⁵

His duty is not performed if he selects underwriters who are notoriously in bad credit or insolvent;²⁶ or if he accepts of manifestly insufficient or invalid policies.²⁷ If the principal has by express instructions fixed the amount of the insurance and such amount might, by reasonable diligence, have been obtained, the agent who neglects to ²⁰ Strong v. High, 2 Rob. (La.) 103, 38 Am. Dec. 195.

²¹ He must procure written policies and not expose his principal to the risks and uncertainties of oral contracts. Manny v. Dunlap, 1 Wool. 372, 16 Fed. Cas. p. 658.

²² Mallough v. Barber, 4 Camp. 150.

²³ Callander v. Oelrichs, 5 Bing. N. C. 58; Smith v. Lascelles, 2 T. R. 187.

²⁴ Area v. Milliken, 35 La. Ann. 1150.

²⁵ Storer v. Eaton, 50 Me. 219, 79 Am. Dec. 611; Mallough v. Barber, 4 Camp. 150; Park v. Hamond, 4 Camp. 344; Perkins v. Washington Ins. Co., 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 645; DeTastett v. Crousillat, 2 Wash. (U. S. C. C.) 132, Fed. Cas. No. 3,828; Thorne v. Deas, 4 Johns. (N. Y.) 84; Shoenfeld v. Fleisher, 73 Ill. 404; Callender v. Oelrichs, 5 Bing. N. C. 58; Gray v. Murray, 3 Johns. (N. Y.) Ch. 167.

Where the insurance fails because the agent who has taken charge of the matter, although acting gratuitously, fails to give notice of subsequent insurance, the agent will be liable to his principal for the loss. Baxter v. Jones, 6 Ont. L. R. 360.

In a tort action for the alleged negligence of an insurance broker in failing to replace two policies of fire insurance, held, that, until he had exhausted all reasonable efforts to replace the policies, the broker was under no duty to give notice to the principal of his inability to do so, and if the loss occurs before such time arrives, it would be idle for him to give notice. Backus v. Ames, 79 Minn. 145.

²⁶ Strong v. High, 2 Rob. (La.) 103, 38 Am. Dec. 195.

²⁷ Mallough v. Barber, supra.

insure is liable for that amount as on a valued policy.²⁸ Where no amount is so fixed, the agent should ordinarily procure insurance to the full insurable value.²⁹

3. Neglect of Agent in Making Collections.

§ 1299. Liable for loss from negligence.—The liability of an agent employed to collect a demand, depends largely upon the nature of his undertaking. Such an agent may, undoubtedly, by express contract, impose upon himself the absolute duty to collect the demand in any event. In such a case he becomes, practically, a guarantor of the debt and is liable as such.

Where no such express contract is made, however, the agent by assuming the collection of the claim, undertakes that he will exercise reasonable care, skill and diligence in making the money. If he does this, and is unable to collect the demand, he is not liable; but if from his neglect to exercise this degree of care, skill and diligence, the claim or any part of it is lost, the agent is liable for the loss.³⁰

This rule imposes upon the agent the duty to take all the precautions and avail himself of all the remedies, which are reasonable and proper under the circumstances,—which a reasonably prudent and careful man would avail himself of under like circumstances.³¹

§ 1300. Forms of negligence.—The forms in which the negligence of an agent, who has undertaken to make collections, may manifest itself, are obviously very numerous, and no attempt can be made to deal with all of them. The cases, however, which most commonly arise, have usually to do either with the medium of payment which the agent has accepted, or with the various steps and proceeding necessary to secure payment, and it is possible to classify most of the cases which arise with reference to this distinction.

²⁸ Miner v. Tagert, 3 Binn. (Pa.) 204.

An instruction to secure a policy covering "all risks" means one which actually and not merely one so described by insurance agents. Yuill v. Robson, [1907] 1 K. B. 685.

²⁹ Beardsley v. Davis, 52 Barb. (N. Y.) 159; Betteley v. Stainsby, 12 C. B. (N. S.) 499; Douglass v. Murphy, 16 U. C. Q. B. 113.

³⁰ Allen v. Suydam, 20 Wend. (N. Y.) 321, 32 Am. Dec. 555; Buell v.

Chapin, 99 Mass. 594, 97 Am. Dec. 58; Reed v. Northrup, 50 Mich. 442; Fick v. Runnels, 48 Mich. 302; Capitol State Bank v. Lane, 52 Miss. 677; Oil Well Supply Co. v. Exchange Nat. Bank, 131 Pa. 100. In order to recover against the agent for failure to collect it is sufficient to show that debtor was solvent, and that with proper exertion, claim could have been collected. Wiley v. Logan, 95 N. C. 358.

³¹ Allen v. Suydam, supra.

§ 1301. Negligence as to medium of payment.—It has been seen in an earlier section³² that an agent authorized to receive payment or to collect debts, has ordinarily no implied authority to receive anything but money in satisfaction of the demand. He cannot, therefore, usually bind his principal by accepting checks, notes, drafts and similar documents, on the one hand, or merchandise or property of any kind, on the other. In most cases, the result of the agent's violation of his duty in this regard, would simply be that the demand was not paid, and the principal could proceed to enforce his original claim without reference to such an unauthorized attempt to discharge it.³³ There may be cases, however, in which the principal has parted with some right, waived some claim, or surrendered some security, upon such an unauthorized payment, in such a form that his original demand is extinguished, and he will have no remedy unless he can find it against the defaulting agent.

§ 1302. — Illustrations.—Thus, as a typical and not uncommon case, if an agent who is authorized to sell and deliver goods for cash, sells the goods to an irresponsible purchaser and delivers them for a check which proves to be worthless, so that both the goods and the price are lost to the principal, the agent will be liable.³⁴ So if an agent who is authorized to deliver a conveyance, release a lien, give a consent, execute a license, and the like, only upon receiving payment, does so upon the receipt of a worthless check, note or other security, and the principal sustains loss, the agent will be responsible.³⁵ So, for like reasons, if an agent authorized to collect a check or note or draft, surrenders it to the principal's detriment, upon receiving some other check or note or draft, instead of the money, he will be answerable to the principal for the loss.³⁶ So, if the agent takes goods in payment and turns them into money at a loss, he must answer for the loss.³⁷

³² Ante, § 946.

³³ See Western Brass Mfg. Co. v. Maverick, 4 Tex. Civ. App. 535.

³⁴ Harlan v. Ely, 68 Cal. 522; Hall v. Storrs, 7 Wis. 253.

³⁵ Pape v. Westacott, [1894] 1 Q. B. 272. In this case a landlord had agreed to consent to an assignment of the lease upon the payment of a certain amount of rent. He executed the consent and put it into the hands of an agent to be delivered upon the receipt of the money. The agent delivered the consent upon receipt of a check which proved to be worthless, and the agent was held liable.

³⁶ Fifth National Bank v. Ashworth, 123 Pa. 212, 2 L. R. A. 491; Hazlett v. Commer. Nat. Bank, 132 Pa. 118; Merchants' Nat. Bank of Philadelphia v. Goodman, 109 Pa. 422, 58 Am. Rep. 728; Marine Bank v. Fulton Bank, 2 Wall. 252, 17 L. Ed. 785; Gowling v. American Express Co., 102 Mo. App. 366.

³⁷ Rush v. Rush, 170 Ill. 623. See also, Holmes v. Langston, 110 Ga. 861.

§ 1303. Negligence in proceedings.—If certain proceedings are, by law, required to be taken, for the protection of his principal, the agent must see that these requirements are complied with. Thus it is the duty of an agent who receives negotiable paper to collect, to so act as to secure and preserve the liability thereon of all parties prior to his principal; and if he fails in this duty, and thereby causes loss to his principal, he becomes liable for such loss.³⁸ Such an agent must therefore present the bill or note for acceptance without delay and present it for payment at maturity. If the bill or note be not duly accepted or paid, he must cause it to be immediately protested, where protest is necessary, and cause notice to be duly given of its dishonor.

Whether the agent shall give notice of the dishonor to prior parties directly, or to his principal only, but in time to enable him to give such notice to prior parties, is a question upon which the authorities are not harmonious. The weight of authority, however, seems to be that the agent is only bound to notify his principal.³⁹ For the purposes of notice, therefore, a banker or other agent to whom a note or bill has been transmitted for collection, is to be considered as though he were the real holder, and his principal a prior indorser. The agent may therefore notify his principal only, and the latter has the same time to notify prior parties.⁴⁰

§ 1304. — But this is not the utmost limit of the agent's duty and liability. He may so act as to charge all of the parties to the paper, and yet become liable to his principal for a loss occasioned by his negligence. The rule which will measure the diligence which is exacted of a holder of such paper in order to charge the prior parties, ³⁸ First National Bank of Meadville v. Fourth National Bank of N. Y., 77 N. Y. 320, 33 Am. Rep. 618; Allen v. Merchants' Bank, 22 Wend. (N. Y.) 215, 34 Am. Dec. 289; Chapman v. McCrea, 63 Ind. 360; Oil Well Supply Co. v. Exchange Nat. Bank, 131 Pa. 100; City Nat. Bank v. Clinton County Bank, 49 Ohio St. 351; Borup v. Ninninger, 5 Minn. 523; Jagger v. National Germ.-Am. Bank, 53 Minn. 386; West v. St. Paul Nat. Bank, 54 Minn. 466; Roanoke Nat. Bank v. Hambrick, 82 Va. 135.

³⁹ Colt v. Noble, 5 Mass. 167; First Nat. Bank of Lynn v. Smith, 132 Mass. 227; United States Bank v. Goddard, 5 Mason (U. S. C. C.), 366, Fed. Cas. No. 917; Farmers' Bank v. Vail, 21 N. Y. 485; Bank of Mobile v. Huggins, 3 Ala. (N. S.) 206; Mead v. Engs, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 303; Phipps v. Millbury Bank, 8 Metc. (Mass.) 79; Howard v. Ives, 1 Hill (N. Y.), 263; Seaton v. Scovill, 18 Kan. 433, 26 Am. Rep. 779. Contra, Thompson v. Bank of South Carolina, 3 Hill (S. Car.), Law, 77, 30 Am. Dec. 354; Smedes v. Bank of Utica, 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 372; Merchants' Bank v. Stafford Bank, 44 Conn. 565; McKinster v. Bank of Utica, 9 Wend. (N. Y.) 46.

⁴⁰ Seaton v. Scovill, 18 Kan. 433, 26 Am. Rep. 779, and cases, supra.

will not always measure the diligence which is required of a collecting agent in the discharge of his duty to his principal.⁴¹

Thus it is said by a learned judge: "Suppose an agent receives for collection from the payee, a sight draft. No circumstance can make it his duty, in order to charge the drawer, to present it for payment until the next day. He has entered into no contract with the drawer, is not employed or paid by him to render him any service, and owes him no duty to protect him from loss. What is required to be done to charge the drawer is simply a compliance with the condition attached to the draft, as if written therein; and that condition is in all cases complied with by presentation, demand and notice on the next day after receipt of the draft. But suppose the agent, on the day he receives the draft, obtains reliable information that the drawee must fail the next day, and that the draft will not be paid unless immediately presented; what then is the duty he owes his principal whose interests, for a compensation, he has agreed with proper diligence and skill, to serve, in and about the collection of the draft? Clearly, all would say, to present the draft at once; and if he fails to do this, and loss ensues, he incurs responsibility to his principal; and yet the drawer would be charged if it was not presented until the next day. Where an agent receives a bill for collection, payable some days or months after date, in order to charge the drawer, he need not present it for acceptance until it falls due; and if he then presents it and demands payment, and protests it and gives the notice, the drawer is held; and yet in such a case he owes his principal the duty to present the bill for acceptance at once, and if he fails in such duty and loss ensues to his principal he becomes liable for such loss."⁴²

§ 1305. — In accordance with these principles it was held that an agent intrusted, for collection, with a draft or bill payable on a particular day, is liable for any unnecessary delay in presenting it for acceptance, although it may not be yet due.⁴³ So the defendant, a bank in New York, received for collection a draft upon a firm in that city upon the morning of a certain day and, upon presentation, received in payment the drawee's check upon another bank in the same city, and delivered up the draft. The check, however, was not presented until the next day, and then through the clearing house.

⁴¹ First National Bank v. Fourth Nat. Bank, 77 N. Y. 320, 33 Am. Rep. 618; Smith v. Miller, 43 N. Y. 171, 3 Am. Rep. 690, again reported in 52 N. Y. 545.

⁴² First Nat. Bank v. Fourth Nat. Bank, supra.

⁴³ Allen v. Suydam, supra.

On that day, and before it was presented for payment, the drawers of the check failed and payment was refused. The defendant thereupon returned the check to the drawers, got back the draft, made a formal demand for its payment, caused it to be protested, and, on the next day, gave due notice of its dishonor. It appeared that the bank upon which the check was drawn paid all of the drawer's checks down to the time of the failure, and that the check would have been paid if presented, as it might easily have been, for payment upon the day it was given. Upon this state of facts it was held that, though the action of the defendant bank might have been sufficient to charge prior parties, it was negligent in not securing payment of the check on the day that it was drawn, and hence was liable for the loss.⁴⁴ Indeed, as has been seen,⁴⁵ there is no implied authority, in an agent to collect, to receive a check in payment at all. It is, undoubtedly, a common practice among business men in their own transactions, to give and receive checks in payment of demands. This is, however, a matter of convenience only, and the check does not constitute payment unless expressly received as such. But this practice falls short of a usage applying to the collection of drafts for absent parties. And it is not a reasonable usage that one who undertakes to collect a draft for an absent party should be allowed to give it up to the drawee, and sacrifice the claim which the owner may have on prior parties upon the mere receipt of a check which may turn out to be worthless.⁴⁶

§ 1306. — And not only must the agent, as has been seen, duly present the paper for acceptance in proper cases, but he must also exercise reasonable care, at least, to see that the acceptance is in proper form and so executed as to bind the drawee.⁴⁷ For negligence in ascertaining the identity of the parties,⁴⁸ or in determining the au-

⁴⁴ First Nat. Bank v. Fourth Nat. Bank, supra.

A collecting bank accepted from the debtor a check on another bank in the same city. That night, at close of banking hours, the second bank suspended payment. It was held to be the duty of the collecting bank to present checks so received for payment within banking hours of the day received; failing to do so, it is liable to the drawer thereof. Morris v. Eufaula Nat. Bank, 106 Ala. 383, s. c. 122 Ala. 580, 82 Am. St. Rep. 95.

⁴⁵ Ante, § 949.

⁴⁶ Whitney v. Esson, 99 Mass. 308, 96 Am. Dec. 762.

⁴⁷ "Where the holder of a bill of exchange transmits it to his agent for presentment to the drawee, such agent has no right to receive anything short of an explicit and unequivocal acceptance, without giving notice to the holder, as in case of non-acceptance; and he will be liable for any loss the holder may sustain in consequence of his neglect so to do." Walker v. The Bank of the State of New York, 9 N. Y. 582.

⁴⁸ A bank sent paper for collection

thority of one who assumes to act for the drawee, he would also be liable. A fortiori would he be liable where he takes an acceptance from one known by him to have no authority to bind the drawee, and gives the principal no notice so that he may otherwise protect himself.⁴⁹

§ 1307. Neglect to give principal notice of material facts.—It is also the duty of the agent here, as in other cases, to give the principal timely notice of facts within the agent's knowledge and essential for the principal's protection. Thus if unexpected contingencies arise, if unusual delays occur, if the usual and expected course cannot be pursued, and the like, it is the duty of the agent to give notice to the principal, so that he may either take the steps necessary for his own protection, or give fresh instructions to the agent in view of the altered circumstances. For a failure in this respect, from which the principal suffers loss, the agent will be responsible.⁵⁰

It must be borne in mind, however, in dealing with this question that, unlike the case of giving notice of dishonor, this is not a matter concerning which the law has prescribed any particular time within which notice shall be given. It is simply a question of what should reasonably have been done under the circumstances of the case; and among these circumstances the general usage in such cases and even at times the custom of the particular place, may be material.⁵¹

§ 1308. Neglect in granting or permitting delays, extensions or forbearances.—The agent also will clearly be liable where loss has happened to the principal because the agent has failed to press the collection with due diligence, has granted unauthorized extensions or permitted other unjustifiable delays. Thus where a bank which had received a draft for acceptance and collection was authorized to grant an extension for twenty days, but granted an extension for thirty to its correspondent bank, knowing there was another person of the same name as the endorser in that vicinity, but not informing its correspondent of the fact. Held, that the bank having the information and not divulging it, is liable for the loss incurred through the mistake. Borup v. Ninninger, 5 Minn. 523.

But where a bank received for protest a note indorsed by one John Becker, and notice of protest was sent to one John Becker, who lived in that vicinity and was the only person of that name known to the bank or its officers. Held, that the bank is not liable for loss occasioned through no notice of protest being sent to the indorser. Mount v. First Nat. Bank, 37 Iowa, 457.

⁴⁹ Kirkeys v. Crandall, 90 Tenn. 532.

⁵⁰ See Omaha Nat. Bank v. Kiper, 60 Neb. 33; Dern v. Kellogg, 54 Neb. 560; Mound City Paint Co. v. Commercial Nat. Bank, 4 Utah, 353; Krafft v. Citizens' Bank, 139 N. Y. App. Div. 610; Selz v. Collins, 55 Mo. App. 55.

⁵¹ See Sahlén v. Bank, 90 Tenn. 221; Bank of Washington v. Triplett, 1 Pet. (U. S.) 25, 7 L. Ed. 37.

days, without notice to or authority from the principal, mislaid and ignored the draft for a number of days and took no steps to collect until after the drawee had failed, not even notifying the principal of his failure until more than a week after it occurred, it was held that the bank was properly chargeable for the loss sustained.⁵²

So where a bank permitted a draft sent to it for collection, to lie unaccepted and unpaid from February 19 until March 7, without notice to the principal, and then before the principal had been heard from, took a conveyance to itself of all the debtor's property to secure other claims, the bank was likewise held.⁵³

So where a bank held a sight-draft without any notification to the principal and without taking any steps to collect it, for forty-seven days, during which time it might probably have been collected, and then returned it as uncollectible, the bank was held.⁵⁴ And so, again, where the collecting bank sent the paper directly to the drawee, by a letter which actually miscarried, but which otherwise should have been heard from in two days, and the bank waited nineteen days without any inquiry and until the drawee had failed, the bank was held liable.⁵⁵

§ 1309. Neglect in keeping the money.—The agent having received the money, question may arise respecting his liability if the money be lost while yet under his control. If the money were kept in violation of express instructions or a clear duty to remit it to his principal or to make some other disposition of it, the agent would ordinarily be liable for the loss. But if the agent were not thus in default, and no special arrangement respecting its care existed, the agent would not be responsible except for failure to exercise reasonable and ordinary care.⁵⁶

If, however, having received the money for the principal the agent

⁵² Omaha Nat. Bank v. Kiper, 60 Neb. 33.

⁵³ Dern v. Kellogg, 54 Neb. 560. The court said it was an act of charity to designate the defendant's conduct as negligence; "a harsher term might be more appropriate."

⁵⁴ Mound City, etc., Co. v. Commercial Nat. Bank, 4 Utah, 353.

⁵⁵ First Nat. Bank of Trinidad v. First Nat. Bank of Denver, 4 Dill. (U. S. C. C.) 290, Fed. Cas. No. 4,810.

⁵⁶ The agent of a railroad received money which he was unable to send in on the day collected because the last train had gone before it was received. On leaving at the end of the day, he locked it up in the office safe, provided by the company, and fastened the windows and locked the door of the office. Held, not answerable to his principal for a loss occasioned by burglary that night. Louisville, etc., R. C. v. Buffington, 131 Ala. 620. In American Express Co. v. Stuart, 134 Ill. App. 390, it was held that a druggist, who sold plaintiff's money orders, was not liable for a loss which occurred through the theft by a drug clerk who had learned the combination of the safe, where it was kept.

without the principal's authority, returns it to the payer upon a claim which proves to be unfounded, he must answer for it to the principal.⁵⁷

And where the agent, a bank, having received money for a non-resident principal, was served with garnishment or attachment process respecting it, at the suit of an adverse claimant, and gave to the principal such misleading and indefinite information respecting the proceedings that the principal's money was lost, the agent was held liable.⁵⁸

§ 1310. Neglect in making remittances.—Where, as has been seen, the principal directs his agent to send the money in a certain way or through a particular channel, transmitting it in a different mode is evidence of disobedience.⁵⁹ But unless so bound by express instructions, the agent is held only for reasonable skill and diligence in sending the money.⁶⁰

Thus where the principal sent a claim of about sixty dollars to his agent by mail, with instructions to the agent to "forward" the proceeds, it was held that the agent was warranted in believing that he was authorized to transmit the proceeds in the same way.⁶¹ Said Gray, J.: "There is no rule of law that the postoffice established by the government for the purpose of carrying letters is a less safe or appropriate means of forwarding money than a private carrier or banker. Whether it is so in any particular case is a question of fact, depending upon the amount to be sent, the proportionate expense of different modes of transmission, the time and distance intervening, the prevailing usage in similar cases, and other circumstances surrounding the transaction, all of which are proper for the consideration of the jury."⁶²

Where the agent in ordinary course remits by bill or draft bought by him for that purpose without negligence, and in so doing indorses it, he is not, as between himself and his principal, liable upon his indorsement.⁶³

⁵⁷ An agent sold land and received a deposit from the purchaser; purchaser claimed that the principal's title was imperfect, and agent returned the deposit after notification by the principal not to do so; agent held liable to the principal for the amount of the deposit, principal's title being perfect. Montgomery v. Pacific Coast Land Bureau, 94 Cal. 284, 28 Am. St. R. 122.

⁵⁸ Krafft v. Citizens' Bank, 139 N. Y. App. Div. 610.

⁵⁹ Ante, § 1247.

⁶⁰ Buell v. Chapin, 99 Mass. 594, 97 Am. Dec. 58; Kingston v. Kincaid, 1 Wash. (U. S. C. C.) 454, Fed. Cas. No. 7,822; Mechanics' Bank v. Merchants' Bank, 6 Mete. (Mass.) 26.

⁶¹ Buell v. Chapin, supra; Morgan v. Richardson, 13 Allen (Mass.), 410.

⁶² In Buell v. Chapin, supra.

⁶³ Sharp v. Emmet, 5 Whart. (Pa.) 288, 34 Am. Dec. 554; Byers v. Harris, 66 Tenn. (9 Heisk.) 652.

§ 1311. Liability for neglect of correspondents and sub-agents.—

As has been already stated, the principle which runs through the cases, is that if an agent employs a sub-agent for his principal and by his authority, express or implied, then the sub-agent is the agent of the principal and is responsible directly to the principal for his conduct. In such a case the agent is not liable for the negligence of the sub-agent, unless he has failed to exercise due care in the selection of such sub-agent. But where the agent, having undertaken to do the business for his principal, employs a servant or sub-agent on his own account to assist him in what he has undertaken, then the sub-agent or servant is the representative of the agent only, and is responsible to him for his conduct, and the agent is responsible to the principal for the manner in which the business has been done, whether by himself or by his servant or agent.⁶⁴ In the latter case, the agent stands in the position of an independent contractor, at liberty to perform the undertaking by the agencies of his own selection, and is responsible to his principal for the due execution of the enterprise by the means he has selected. As has been seen, the authority of the agent to employ a sub-agent on his principal's account, may, in certain cases, be implied.⁶⁵ The application of these principles to the case of collecting agents has not been altogether harmonious, yet the preponderance of authority is believed to be in accordance with them.

§ 1312. Liability of banks.—There can be no question of course, that the bank is liable for the neglect of its own immediate officers and servants;⁶⁶ these are the direct executive actors of the bank through whom all of its transactions must necessarily be performed.

But when it becomes necessary to employ an independent agency, such as a notary public to protest the paper, or another bank when the demand is payable in a distant town, other questions arise.

§ 1313. — For the neglect of the notary.—The doctrine was established in New York at an early period and has since been maintained, that a bank receiving negotiable paper for collection, in the absence of an express agreement or recognized custom limiting its liability, stands in the attitude of an independent contractor, and that if, in the course of the performance, it employs a notary to present the paper for payment and give the proper notice to charge the parties, the notary is the agent of the bank and not of the depositor or owner

⁶⁴ See ante, § 333.

⁶⁵ See ante, § 314 et seq.

⁶⁶ Bank is liable also for defaults of its branch banks. Bird v. Louisiana State Bank, 93 U. S. 96, 23 L. Ed. 818.

of the paper at least so far as those acts are concerned which, like mere presentment and notice, may be done by unofficial agents.⁶⁷ The bank is therefore liable for his negligence. The same rule formerly prevailed in Louisiana⁶⁸ and South Carolina,⁶⁹ but has since been overruled. It appears to be approved in Indiana⁷⁰ and is unqualifiedly indorsed in New Jersey.⁷¹ It is also approved in Kansas.⁷²

But the weight of authority is believed to be that if the notary is employed in the line of his office—even though an official act, like protest, is not indispensable—and the bank exercises due care in the selection of a competent notary, it is not liable for his neglect in the performance of the duty entrusted to him.⁷³ Where, however, the bank employs a notary by the year, and takes from him a bond for the faithful discharge of his duties, he is to be regarded as an officer of the bank, and the bank will be liable for his negligence or default.⁷⁴

And where the president and manager of the bank himself acts as the notary, the bank will be responsible for his default.⁷⁵

§ 1314. — For the neglect of a correspondent bank.—The same conflict of authority exists as to the liability of a bank which receives, in the ordinary manner, a note or bill payable at a distant place, and sends it to its correspondent there for collection. It is well estab-

⁶⁷ Ayrault v. Pacific Bank, 47 N. Y. 570, 7 Am. Rep. 489.

⁶⁸ Miranda v. City Bank, 6 La. 740, 26 Am. Dec. 493, overruled in Hyde v. Planters' Bank, 17 La. 560, 36 Am. Dec. 621; Baldwin v. Bank of Louisiana, 1 La. Ann. 13.

⁶⁹ Thompson v. Bank of South Carolina, 3 Hill L. 77, 30 Am. Dec. 354.

⁷⁰ American Express Co. v. Haire, 21 Ind. 4, 83 Am. Dec. 334. The point was not directly involved, but the court seems to approve the doctrine of the New York cases. The question at issue was the liability of an express company, which, having undertaken the collection of a bill of exchange caused it to be protested too soon. It was held to be liable. See Tyson v. State Bank, 6 Blackf. (Ind.) 225.

⁷¹ Davey v. Jones, 42 N. J. L. 28, 36 Am. Rep. 505.

⁷² Bank of Lindsborg v. Ober, 31 Kan. 599.

⁷³ Tiernan v. Commercial Bank, 7 How. (Miss.) 648, 40 Am. Dec. 83; Agricultural Bank v. Commercial Bank, 7 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 592; Bowling v. Arthur, 34 Miss. 41; Third National Bank v. Vicksburg Bank, 61 Miss. 112, 48 Am. Rep. 78; Bellemire v. Bank of U. S., 4 Whart. (Pa.) 105, 33 Am. Dec. 46; Warren Bank v. Suffolk Bank, 10 Cush. (Mass.) 582; Stacy v. Dane County Bank, 12 Wis. 629; Britton v. Nichols, 104 U. S. 757; Bank v. Butler, 41 Ohio St. 519, 52 Am. Rep. 94; Citizens' Bank v. Howell, 8 Md. 530, 63 Am. Dec. 714; First National Bank v. German Bank, 107 Iowa, 543, 70 Am. St. R. 216, 44 L. R. A. 133.

See also, May v. Jones, 88 Ga. 308, 30 Am. St. R. 154, 15 L. R. A. 637.

⁷⁴ Gerhardt v. Boatmen's Savings Inst., 38 Mo. 60, 90 Am. Dec. 407.

⁷⁵ Wood River Bank v. First Nat. Bank, 36 Neb. 744.

lished in New York⁷⁶ that in such a case the correspondent bank is the agent of the bank from which it received the paper, and not of the depositor or owner of the paper. The transmitting bank is, therefore, liable for the neglect or default of the correspondent bank in making the collection and transmitting the proceeds. This rule prevails also in Georgia,⁷⁷ Kansas,⁷⁸ Louisiana,⁷⁹ Michigan,⁸⁰ Minnesota,⁸¹ Montana,⁸² New Jersey,⁸³ Ohio,⁸⁴ the supreme court of the United States⁸⁵ and in England.⁸⁶ It is based upon the principle that the home bank having undertaken the collection of the paper stands in the attitude of an independent contractor who is left at liberty to select and does select his own agents and correspondents, and is, therefore, liable for their default.⁸⁷

But in the majority of the states, however, a different rule prevails, and it is held that the liability of the home bank, in the absence of instructions or an agreement to the contrary, extends merely to the selection of a suitable and competent agent at the place of payment and the transmission of the paper to such agent with proper instructions, and does not involve responsibility for the default or misconduct of the correspondent bank. This rule was early established in Massachusetts, and is often called the Massachusetts rule.⁸⁸ It is

⁷⁶ Ayrault v. Pacific Bank, 47 N. Y. 570, 7 Am. Rep. 489; Bank of Orleans v. Smith, 3 Hill (N. Y.), 560; Montgomery County Bank v. Albany City Bank, 7 N. Y. 459; Commercial Bank v. Union Bank, 11 N. Y. 212; Allen v. Suydam, 22 Wend. (N. Y.) 321, 32 Am. Dec. 555; Allen v. Merchants' Bank, 22 Wend. (N. Y.) 215, 34 Am. Dec. 289.

⁷⁷ Bailie v. Augusta Savings Bank, 95 Ga. 277, 51 Am. St. R. 74.

⁷⁸ First Nat. Bank v. Craig, 3 Kan. App. 166.

⁷⁹ Martin v. Hibernia Bank, 127 La. 301.

⁸⁰ Simpson v. Waldby, 63 Mich. 439.

⁸¹ Streissguth v. Nat. Germ. Am. Bank, 43 Minn. 50, 19 Am. St. Rep. 213, 7 L. R. A. 363.

⁸² Power v. First Nat. Bank, 6 Mont. 251. This case contains a very full resume of the cases.

⁸³ Titus v. Mechanics' Nat. Bank, 35 N. J. L. 588.

⁸⁴ Reeves v. State Bank, 8 Ohio St. 465. See this case discussed and explained in Bank v. Butler, 41 Ohio St. 519, 52 Am. Rep. 94.

⁸⁵ Exchange Nat. Bank v. Third Nat. Bank, 112 U. S. 276, 28 L. Ed. 722, limiting Britton v. Nicolls, 104 U. S. 757, 26 L. Ed. 917; Hoover v. Wise, 91 U. S. 308, 23 L. Ed. 392. At the Circuits see Kent v. Dawson Bank, 13 Blatchf. 237, Fed. Cas. No. 7,714; Taber v. Perrot, 2 Gall. 565, Fed. Cas. No. 13,721; First Nat. Bank of Trinidad v. First Nat. Bank, 4 Dill. 290, Fed. Cas. No. 4,810; Hyde v. Bank, 7 Biss. 156, Fed. Cas. No. 6,970.

⁸⁶ Mackersy v. Ramsays, 9 Clark & F. 818 (House of Lords); Van Wart v. Woolley, 3 B. & C. 439.

⁸⁷ See Exchange National Bank v. Third National Bank, supra.

⁸⁸ Dorchester, etc., Bank v. New England Bank, 1 Cush. (Mass.) 177; Fabens v. Mercantile Bank, 23 Pick. (Mass.) 330, 34 Am. Dec. 59.

adopted also in Connecticut,⁸⁹ Illinois,⁹⁰ Indiana,⁹¹ Iowa,⁹² Maryland,⁹³ Mississippi,⁹⁴ Missouri,⁹⁵ Nebraska,⁹⁶ Pennsylvania,⁹⁷ South Dakota,⁹⁸ Tennessee,⁹⁹ and Wisconsin.¹

This rule is based upon the theory that, from the nature of the case, there is necessity for the appointment of a sub-agent, that the principal impliedly authorizes the appointment of one on his account, and that in this, as in other cases, the agent fulfills his duty when he uses due care in the selection of the sub-agent.²

A bank, however, does not exercise due care in the selection of its correspondent when it sends the paper for collection to the debtor himself, as, for example, to the very bank upon which the check or draft is drawn. In such a case the bank is liable for a loss occasioned by the failure of the drawee.³

And where a note is, by its terms, payable at the banking office of the bank to which it is sent for collection, that bank, it is held, has no implied authority to send it on for collection to another bank nearer ⁸⁹ Lawrence v. Stonington Bank, 6 Conn. 521; East Haddam Bank v. Seovil, 12 Conn. 303.

⁹⁰ Aetna Ins. Co. v. Alton City Bank, 25 Ill. 243, 79 Am. Dec. 328.

⁹¹ Irwin v. Reeves Pulley Co., 20 Ind. App. 101.

⁹² Guelich v. National State Bank, 56 Iowa. 434, 41 Am. Rep. 110.

⁹³ Jackson v. Union Bank, 6 Har. & J. (Md.) 146; Citizens' Bank v. Howell, 8 Md. 530, 63 Am. Dec. 714.

⁹⁴ Tiernan v. Commercial Bank, 7 How. (Miss.) 648, 40 Am. Dec. 83; Agricultural Bank v. Commercial Bank, 7 Sm. & M. (Miss.) 592; Bowling v. Arthur, 34 Miss. 41; Third National Bank v. Vicksburg Bank, 61 Miss. 112, 48 Am. Rep. 78.

⁹⁵ Daly v. Butchers' & Drovers' Bank, 56 Mo. 94, 17 Am. Rep. 663.

But in Landa v. Traders' Bank, 118 Mo. App. 356, it was held that where there was an agreement to collect for a consideration, the other rule applied.

⁹⁶ First Nat. Bank v. Sprague, 34 Neb. 318, 33 Am. St. Rep. 644, 15 L. R. A. 498.

⁹⁷ Merchants' National Bank v. Goodman, 109 Pa. 422, 58 Am. Rep. 728; Bank v. Earp, 4 Rawle (Pa.), 386; Bellemire v. Bank of U. S., 4 Whart. (Pa.) 105, 33 Am. Dec. 46; Wingate v. Mechanics' Bank, 10 Pa. 104.

⁹⁸ Plymouth County Bank v. Gilman, 9 S. Dak. 278, 62 Am. St. Rep. 868; Fanset v. Garden City Bank, 24 S. Dak. 248.

Compare Sherman v. Port Huron Engine Co., 8 S. Dak. 343.

⁹⁹ Bank of Louisville v. First National Bank, 8 Baxt. (Tenn.) 101, 35 Am. Rep. 691.

¹ Stacy v. Dane County Bank, 12 Wis. 629.

² See Guelich v. National State Bank, 56 Iowa, 434, 41 Am. Rep. 110.

³ Drovers' National Bank v. Anglo-American, etc., Co., 117 Ill. 100, 57 Am. Rep. 855; Merchants' National Bank v. Goodman, 109 Pa. 422, 58 Am. Rep. 728; Farwell v. Curtis, 7 Biss. C. C. 162, Fed. Cas. No. 4,690; First Nat. Bank of Evansville v. Bank of Louisville, 56 Fed. 967; German Nat. Bank v. Burns, 12 Colo. 539, 13 Am. St. Rep. 247; Anderson v. Rodgers, 53 Kan. 542, 27 L. R. A. 248.

See also, McIntosh v. Tyler, 47 Hun (N. Y.), 99. The case of Indig v. National City Bank, 80 N. Y. 100, as to the residence of the maker, in such wise as to constitute the latter the agent of the payee, or to make a payment to the latter bank a payment to the payee.⁴

§ 1315. Liability of attorneys.—The liability of an attorney for the neglect or default of other attorneys or agents employed by him in the collection of claims, depends upon the nature of his undertaking. He is, of course, liable for the neglect or default of his own immediate clerks or agents, employed by him to assist him in the collection. And where he undertakes the collection of a claim at a place distant from that in which he does business, his liability usually extends to the neglect or default of another attorney or agent to whom he transmits the claim for collection, and is not limited to the selection of, and transmission to, a suitable and proper agent. In this respect his liability differs from that which, as has been seen, is, by a majority of the courts, imposed upon banks for the defaults of their correspondents, though many of the cases which have arisen have turned upon the peculiar language of the engagements entered into. He may, of course, in such a case limit his liability by express agreement, but in the absence of such an agreement, an attorney taking a claim "for collection" is looked upon as an independent contractor, and is therefore liable for the default of his correspondent.⁵

§ 1316. Liability of mercantile or collection agencies.—The same rules which have been applied to attorneys who undertake the collection of claims, apply to the so-called commercial or collection agencies, through which a large portion of the collection business is now transacted. In a leading case⁶ upon this subject the defendants gave the interpreted by Judge Scholfield in Drovers' National Bank v. Anglo-American, etc., Co., supra, is not in conflict with the statement in the text; nor as interpreted by the judge who wrote the opinion and by the court which pronounced it, in the later case of Briggs v. Central National Bank, 89 N. Y. 182, 42 Am. Rep. 285, does it conflict.

⁴ Sherman v. Port Huron Engine Co., 8 S. Dak. 343.

⁵ Cummins v. Heald, 24 Kan. 600, 36 Am. Rep. 264; Walker v. Stevens, 79 Ill. 193; Abbott v. Smith, 4 Ind. 452; National Bank v. Old Town Bank, 112 Fed. 726; Lewis v. Peck, 10 Ala. 142; Riddle v. Poor- man, 3 Pa. 224; Cox v. Livingston, 2 Watts & Serg. (Pa.) 103, 37 Am. Dec. 486; Krause v. Dorance, 10 Pa. 462, 51 Am. Dec. 496; Rhines v. Evans, 66 Pa. 192, 5 Am. Rep. 364; Pollard v. Rowland, 2 Blackf. (Ind.) 22; Cummins v. McLain, 2 Ark. 402; Wilkinson v. Griswold, 12 Smedes & Marsh. (Miss.) 669. See also, Bradstreet v. Everson, 72 Pa. 124, 13 Am. Rep. 665, and Sanger v. Dun, 47 Wis. 615, 32 Am. Rep. 789; Dale v. Hepburn, 11 N. Y. Misc. 286; cited in the following section.

⁶ Bradstreet v. Everson, 72 Pa. 124, 13 Am. Rep. 665. To same effect see Hoover v. Wise, 91 U. S. 308, 23

plaintiffs a receipt stating that certain claims had been received "for collection." Defendants sent the claims to their agent in Memphis, who collected the money but failed to pay over the proceeds. The court held the defendants liable, saying, "It is argued, notwithstanding the express receipt 'for collection,' that the defendants did not undertake for themselves to collect, but only to remit to a proper and responsible attorney, and made themselves liable only for diligence in correspondence, and giving the necessary information to the plaintiffs; or in briefer terms, that the attorney in Memphis was not their agent for the collection, but that of the plaintiffs only. The current of decision, however, is otherwise as to attorneys at law sending claims to correspondents for collection, and the reasons for applying the same rule to collection agencies are even stronger. They have their selected agents in every part of the country. From the nature of such ramified institutions we must conclude that the public impression will be, that the agency invited customers on the very ground of its facilities for making distant collections. It must be presumed, from its business connections at remote points, and its knowledge of the agents chosen, the agency intends to undertake the performance of the service which the individual customer is unable to perform for himself. There is good reason, therefore, to hold that such an agency is liable for collections made by its own agents, when it undertakes the collection by the express terms of the receipt. If it does not so intend, it has it in its power to limit responsibility by the terms of the receipt."

§ 1317. — Limitations of the kind indicated by the court in the passage just cited are valid. Thus in an action⁷ brought against a similar agency it appeared that the defendants had given and the plaintiffs had accepted a receipt for the claim, stating that it was to be transmitted to an attorney by mail for collection or adjustment, at the risk and on the account of the plaintiffs. Plaintiffs had also signed a memorandum to the same effect upon the defendants' books. It was contended on behalf of the plaintiffs not only that the receipt was not sufficient in terms to limit the defendant's liability to a mere transmitter of the claim, but that even if it would bear this construction it would permit the defendants to take advantage of their own wrong and was void as opposed to public policy, and that therefore the defendants were liable for the negligence or misconduct of the attorney

L. Ed. 392; Weyerhauser v. Dun, 100 N. Y. 150.

A person who puts claim in charge of collection agency for collection is not responsible for the fees of an attorney employed by the agency. Dale v. Hepburn, 11 N. Y. Misc. 286.

⁷ Sanger v. Dun, 47 Wis. 615, 32 Am. Rep. 789.

whom they employed and who had collected the money and appropriated it to his own use. In answer to this contention the court said: "It well may be that such would be the responsibility of the defendants, were it not for the restrictive clause in the receipts. But that clause, if any effect is given to it, clearly limits that liability; for it provides that the account is to be transmitted to an attorney for collection at the risk of the plaintiffs. Such being the case, we think the defendants are not liable for the acts or default of the attorney employed by them, unless in the selection of such attorney they were guilty of gross negligence; for it seems to us it was competent for the parties, by express contract, to limit the liability which the law would otherwise impose upon the defendants for the acts of the attorney employed by them to make the collection. We are not aware of any principle of law or public policy which condemns such a contract."

§ 1318. — Where, however, the agency retains the right to control the means and methods of collection, it will be held liable for the faithful performance of the sub-agencies it employs, in the absence of such a stipulation to the contrary. Thus where the claim was taken "to be forwarded by us for collection by suit or otherwise, at our discretion," the agency was held liable for the default of its sub-agent.⁸

§ 1319. Liability of express companies.—The same general principles are applied to express companies which undertake the collection of demands. Thus where the plaintiff at Brockport, New York, delivered to the American Express Co. a note made by a resident of San Francisco, with instructions to take it to San Francisco, demand payment, and, if not paid, to have suit instituted at once for its collection (the plaintiff supposing the company's line to extend to San Francisco, although in fact it did not), and the express company carried the note to the termination of its line and there delivered it to another company, whose line extended the remainder of the distance, with the instructions, to be by the latter company carried out, it was held that the first company was responsible for a loss occurring from the negligence of the latter company in making the collection.⁹

So where an express company having undertaken the collection of a bill, delivered it to a notary for protest, it was held that the company was responsible for a loss occasioned by the notary's protesting it too soon.¹⁰

⁸ Morgan v. Tener, 83 Pa. 305.

¹⁰ American Express Co. v. Haire,

⁹ Palmer v. Holland, 51 N. Y. 416, 21 Ind. 4, 83 Am. Dec. 334.

10 Am. Rep. 616.

§ 1320. The measure of damages for agent's negligence.—The measure of damages in an action against an agent for negligence in collection is the actual loss sustained.¹¹ The negligence being established, and it appearing with reasonable probability that but for such negligence the loss would not have happened, that loss prima facie is the amount of the claim,¹² but the agent may show that, notwithstanding his negligence, the principal has suffered no loss, and the recovery can then be for nominal damages only. Thus he may show in reduction of damages that if he had used the greatest diligence, the debt could not have been collected;¹³ or that the principal's claim against the debtor is delayed only and not lost,¹⁴ or that he is wholly or partially protected by securities which he holds,¹⁵ or that though the principal's claim against certain of the parties is lost, there are still others liable who are amply responsible, from whom the debt can be collected.¹⁶

The burden of making such showing seems to rest upon the agent. Thus in a recent case to recover damages against a bank for negligence, it was said: "It is claimed that there was no proof of damages; that is, that it was not shown that had the bank been diligent the drafts could have been collected. In such cases it is usually impossible to show with certainty that if due care had been observed the collection would have been made. The law is not so rigid in its requirements for the protection of the negligent agent. It is only necessary to show a reasonable probability that with due care the collection would ¹¹ Paul v. Grimm, 183 Pa. 330. Here an agent for the sale of land accepted in payment bonds which proved to be worthless. Held, that the amount named in the deed as the consideration received was not conclusive of the amount of the loss, and that the agent might show that the amount so named had been inflated in view of the doubtful character of the bonds.

¹² Allen v. Suydam, 20 Wend. (N. Y.) 321, 32 Am. Dec. 555; Durnford v. Patterson, 7 Mart. (La.) 460, 12 Am. Dec. 514; Miranda v. City Bank, 6 La. 740, 26 Am. Dec. 493; Bank of Washington v. Triplett, 1 Pet. (U. S.) 25, 7 L. Ed. 37; First National Bank v. Fourth National Bank, 77 N. Y. 320, 33 Am. Rep. 618; Dern v. Kellogg. 54 Neb. 560; Omaha Nat. Bank v. Kiper, 60 Neb. 33; Fahy v. Fargo, 17 N. Y. Supp. 344; First Nat. Bank of Trinidad v. First Nat. Bank of Denver, 4 Dillon (U. S.), 290, Fed. Cas. No. 4,810.

But compare Fox v. The Davenport Bank, 73 Iowa, 649; Collier v. Pulliam, 13 Lea (Tenn.), 114; Bruce v. Baxter, 7 Lea (Tenn.), 477; Sahlien v. Bank, 90 Tenn. 221.

¹³ First National Bank v. Fourth National Bank, 77 N. Y. 320, 33 Am. Rep. 618.

¹⁴ Van Wart v. Woolley, 3 Barn. & Cress. 439.

¹⁵ Borup v. Nininger, 5 Minn. 523.

¹⁶ First Nat. Bank v. Fourth Nat. Bank, 77 N. Y. 320, 33 Am. Rep. 618.

have resulted. The burden then rests on the defendant to show that there was no damage."¹⁷

§ 1321. Principal's right of action against sub-agent.—Whether the principal may hold the sub-agent directly responsible is a question upon which there is also much conflict of authority. The question may present itself in two forms: I. Whether the principal may hold the sub-agent directly liable for his negligence, and II. Whether the principal may recover from the sub-agent the proceeds of the collection then in his hands.

I. The determination of first form must depend largely upon the view which shall be taken of the general relations of the parties as discussed in the preceding sections. If the sub-agent is to be treated as the agent of the agent only, then there is no privity between them upon which such an action can be based;¹⁸ but if on the other hand the sub-agent is to be treated as the agent of the principal, the principal may proceed against him directly for his default.¹⁹ This conclusion is in accordance with the general principles governing the appointment of sub-agents which have been heretofore stated.

II. The determination of the second form must also rest upon the same general principles, so far as the remedy sought depends upon privity of contract between the principal and the sub-agent; but privity of contract is not always required. The fact of the negotiable or non-negotiable character of the claim is also material. The decisions of the courts have not been harmonious, nor have the decisions of the same court always been in harmony upon both forms of the question. It is therefore difficult to extract uniform principles from them, but the following may be said to be supported by a preponderance of authority, most of the cases being those in which the claim was in the form of negotiable paper:

¹⁷ Dern v. Kellogg, 54 Neb. 560. Quoted and followed in Omaha Nat. Bank v. Kiper, 60 Neb. 33. To same effect: Allen v. Suydam, 20 Wend. (N. Y.) 321, 32 Am. Dec. 555; Miranda v. City Bank, 6 La. 740, 26 Am. Dec. 493; First Nat. Bank v. Fourth Nat. Bank, 77 N. Y. 320, 33 Am. Rep. 618; Fahy v. Fargo, 17 N. Y. Supp. 344.

In Talcott v. Cowdry, 17 N. Y. Misc. Rep. 333, it was said that "very slight evidence of the collectibility of the whole of the plaintiff's demand would be sufficient to throw upon the collecting agents the burden of showing that the amount was not collectible."

But compare Fox v. The Davenport Bank, 73 Iowa, 649; Collier v. Pulliam, 13 Lea (Tenn.), 114; Bruce v. Baxter, 7 Lea (Tenn.), 477; Sahlien v. Bank, 90 Tenn. 221.

¹⁸ See ante, § 333.

See also Steenkamp v. Du Toit, [1910] Transv. L. R. 171.

¹⁹ See ante, § 333.

1. That where, by special arrangement or custom of dealing between the owner of the paper and the bank or the agent undertaking the collection, the latter at once places the amount thereof to the credit of the owner, upon which he thereupon draws or is entitled to draw as cash, this works a transfer of the title to the paper in such a way as to prevent the owner from following the paper or its proceeds into the hands of a third party who has received the paper in good faith and due course of business from the agent for collection.²⁰

2. That, except as above, the bank or agent actually making the collection may be held responsible directly to the true owner, unless, before receiving notice of the owner's claim, it has paid over the proceeds to the bank or agent from which it received the paper, or unless it has made advances or given credit to the bank or agent from which it received the paper in such a way as to make it a bona fide holder of the paper for value.²¹ Unless it be a bona fide purchaser of it for

²⁰ Ayres v. Farmers' & Merchants' Bank, 79 Mo. 421, 49 Am. Rep. 235. In this case the plaintiff deposited with the Mastin bank for collection and credit on his account a check drawn on defendant in favor of a third person. Under an express arrangement the amount of the check was immediately passed to the credit of the plaintiff, who drew upon it the same day. The Mastin bank sent the check to defendant who charged it to the maker and credited the Mastin bank. The Mastin bank in the meantime had failed, but defendant did not know it. Plaintiff then sued defendant to recover the amount of the check, but was held not entitled to recover. The arrangement between the plaintiff and the Mastin bank was held by the court to amount to a purchase of the paper by the latter.

²¹ Thus bank A, the owner of a check drawn on bank D, indorsed and transmitted it for collection and credit on its account to bank B. Bank B did not, however, give bank A credit for the check, but entered it on its collection register merely, and indorsed and transmitted it for collection to bank C, with directions to credit bank B with the proceeds.

Bank B on the same day failed in debt to bank A. Bank C collected the check and credited the proceeds to bank B, which was in debt to bank C. Before the collection the cashier of bank C had heard of bank B's failure, but did not inform bank D, which was ignorant of it. The United States band examiner having taken charge of the affairs of bank B, without the knowledge of bank A, credited bank A and charged bank B with the amount on the books of bank B. Bank A sued bank C to recover the amount of the check.

Upon this state of facts it was held that bank C was the agent of bank B for the purposes of the collection; that the form of the indorsement from bank A to bank B was sufficient to apprise bank C that bank B was not the owner of the check, but an agent for collection merely; that the insolvency of bank B, of which bank C had notice, was sufficient to revoke the authority conferred by bank A upon bank B, to mingle the proceeds with the general funds of bank B, by entering the amount to the credit of bank A, even if it did not revoke bank B's authority to collect altogether; that bank A was therefore entitled to recover the proceeds from value or for advances made upon it in good faith without notice of any defect in the title, the bank or agent actually making the collection acquires no better title to the paper or its proceeds than was possessed by the bank or agent from whom it was received.²²

3. That in the last mentioned case, the sub-agent cannot be deemed to be such a bona fide holder where the paper bears upon its face evidence that the bank or agent from which it was received was an agent for collection merely.²³ bank C, and that the fact that bank C had credited the amount on its books to bank B did not defeat the recovery. "No objection," said the court, "can be successfully made on the ground of want of privity. There is some discrepancy in the decisions as to whether the collecting agent, or the subagent, should be sued by the holder of paper for the failure of the subagent to perform some duty, or for some negligence whereby the debt is lost. See 1 Dan. Neg. Inst. § 344 and notes. But the rule scarcely admits of an exception that where one has in his hands money which rightfully belongs to another, the latter may sue for and recover it." First National Bank of Crown Point v. First National Bank of Richmond, 76 Ind. 561, 40 Am. Rep. 261, citing Hall v. Marston, 17 Mass. 574. In Hyde v. First Nat. Bank, 7 Biss. C. C. 156, Fed. Cas. No. 6,970, the rule laid down in subdivision 2 of the text is thought to be overruled by Hoover v. Wise, 91 U. S. 308, 23 L. Ed. 392, but in First National Bank of Chicago v. Reno County Bank, 3 Fed. Rep. 257, Judge McCrary reaches the opposite conclusion as to the effect of Hoover v. Wise, and announces the same rule as is laid down in Indiana, saying, "I fully approve the doctrine announced by the Supreme Court of Massachusetts in Hall v. Marston, 17 Mass. 574, as follows: 'Whenever one man has in his hands the money of another which he ought to pay over, he is liable in this action (assumpsit) although he has never seen or heard of the party who has the right. When the fact is proved that he has the money, if he cannot show that he has legal or equitable grounds for retaining it, the law creates the privity and the promise.' This doctrine is not in conflict with the decision of the Supreme Court in Hoover v. Wise."

The doctrine of the text has since been recognized and applied by the Supreme Court of the United States. Evansville Bank v. German Am. Bank, 155 U. S. 556, 39 L. Ed. 259; Commercial Bank v. Armstrong, 148 U. S. 50, 37 L. Ed. 363. To the same effect: Armstrong v. National Bank of Boyertown, 90 Ky. 431, 9 L. R. A. 553; The National Butchers, etc., Bank v. Hubbell, 117 N. Y. 384, 15 Am. St. Rep. 515, 7 L. R. A. 852; Manufacturers' Bank v. Continental Bank, 148 Mass. 553, 12 Am. St. Rep. 598, 2 L. R. A. 699; Freeman's Bank v. National Tube Works, 151 Mass. 413, 21 Am. St. Rep. 461, 8 L. R. A. 42; Commercial National Bank v. Hamilton National Bank, 42 Fed. 880.

See also Wallis v. Shelly, 30 Fed. 747; Elliott v. Swartwout, 10 Pet. (U. S.) 137, 9 L. Ed. 373; Gaines v. Miller, 111 U. S. 395, 23 L. Ed. 466; Milton v. Johnson, 79 Minn. 170, 47 L. R. A. 529.

²² Dickerson v. Wason, 47 N. Y. 439, 7 Am. Rep. 455; McBride v. Farmers' Bank, 26 N. Y. 450; Stevenson v. Fidelity Bank, 113 N. C. 485.

²³ First National Bank of Crown Point v. First National Bank of Richmond, 76 Ind. 561, 40 Am. Rep. 261; City Bank v. Weiss, 67 Tex. 333, 60 Am. Rep. 29; First National Bank v. Bank of Monroe, 33 Fed. Rep. 408; In re Armstrong, 33 Fed. Rep. 405;

4. That the bankruptcy of the bank or agent which has taken the paper for collection and credit when collected, before it has received the funds from the sub-agent, terminates the authority to so receive the proceeds and credit them to the account of the owner.²⁴

§ 1322. Del credere agents—How liable to principal.—Whenever an agent, in consideration of additional compensation, guarantees to his principal the payment of the debts that become due through his agency, he is said to act under a del credere commission.

Whether the legal effect of such a commission is to make the agent primarily liable in all events for the proceeds of the goods as for goods sold to him, or whether he is a mere surety for the vendee to pay for the goods if the latter does not, is a question upon which there has been great conflict of authority. After much vacillation, the doctrine is settled in the English courts that he is not liable to his principal in the first instance, but is only to answer for the solvency of the vendee and to pay the money if the vendee does not.²⁵

But the prevailing doctrine in the United States seems to be in accordance with the more stringent rule, that he is absolutely liable in the first instance for the payment of the price of the goods sold by him, to the same extent and in the same manner as if he were himself the purchaser.²⁶ His liability is thus made an original and not a collateral one, and his undertaking is not, therefore, a promise to answer for the debt of another within the contemplation of the Statute of Frauds and void if not in writing.²⁷

Evansville Bank v. German American Bank, 155 U. S. 556, 39 L. Ed. 259; Commercial Bank v. Armstrong, 148 U. S. 50, 37 L. Ed. 363; Armstrong v. National Bank of Boyertown, 90 Ky. 431, 9 L. R. A. 553; National Butchers, etc., Bank v. Hubbell, 117 N. Y. 384, 15 Am. St. Rep. 515, 7 L. R. A. 852; Manufacturers' Bank v. Continental Bank, 148 Mass. 553, 12 Am. St. Rep. 598, 2 L. R. A. 699; Freeman's Bank v. National Tube Works, 151 Mass. 413, 21 Am. St. Rep. 461, 8 L. R. A. 42; Commercial National Bank v. Hamilton National Bank, 42 Fed. 880; Milton v. Johnson, 79 Minn. 170, 47 L. R. A. 529.

²⁴ See cases cited in preceding note.

²⁵ Hornby v. Lacy, 6 Maul. & Sel. 166; Morris v. Cleasby, 4 Maul. & Sel. 566; Couturier v. Hastie, 8 Ex. 40; Peele v. Northcote, 7 Taunt. 558.

See earlier cases, contra, Grove v. Dubois, 1 T. R. 112; Mackenzie v. Scott, 6 Bro. P. C. 280; Houghton v. Matthews, 3 Bos. & Pul. 489.

²⁶ Lewis v. Brehme, 33 Md. 412, 3 Am. Rep. 190; Wolff v. Koppel, 2 Denio (N. Y.), 368, 43 Am. Dec. 751; Swan v. Nesmith, 7 Pick. (Mass.) 220, 19 Am. Dec. 282; Cartwright v. Greene, 47 Barb. (N. Y.) 16; Sherwood v. Stone, 14 N. Y. 268; Leverick v. Meigs, 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 645; Blakely v. Jacobson, 9 Bosw. (N. Y.) 140.

Contra, Thompson v. Perkins, 3 Mason (U. S. C. C.), 232, Fed. Cas. No. 13,972.

²⁷ Wolff v. Koppel, 5 Hill (N. Y.), 458; Swan v. Nesmith, supra; Sherwood v. Stone, supra; Bradley v. Richardson, 23 Vt. 720.

4. Neglect of Agent in Making Sales.

§ 1323. Nature of duty.—It is, of course, the duty of the agent charged with the sale of goods or other property to exercise reasonable care, skill and diligence in the performance of his undertaking. Often and perhaps usually his course will be governed by express instructions with which it is his duty to conform, and many illustrations of his liability for a failure to do so have been given in another place. Where no such instructions have been given, the general duty of reasonable care and diligence will apply as to all various aspects of time, place, quality, price, terms, parties, and the like.²⁸ Most of these require no separate consideration; but one question arises so frequently as to justify more extended treatment in the following section.

§ 1324. When agent liable for selling to irresponsible parties.—It is the duty of an agent, intrusted with goods to be sold, to sell them, in the absence of a usage or of authority to the contrary, for cash only;²⁹ and even when authorized to sell upon credit, he is bound to exercise reasonable care and prudence in selling only to responsible purchasers. For a loss occurring from his failure to observe his duty in this regard, the agent is liable.³⁰

Contracts for the employment of sales agents not infrequently contain minute and precise provisions respecting the class of persons to whom the agent shall sell, the terms upon which he may extend credit, and the kinds of securities which he is permitted to receive. Such provisions it is, of course, in general, the duty of the agent to observe, and for a loss occasioned by his failure to do so, he will be responsible to the principal.³¹ Thus if under the agent's contract it is his duty to sell for cash if possible, but if he gives credit at all, to do so only to those who are good and responsible, and to take no paper but that ²⁸ Loss of order because countermanded before sent in by agent. Where a salesman neglected to write out a complicated order until fourteen days after it had been taken and it was in the meantime countermanded by the buyer, it was held that even if this was negligent, the countermanding was not an event which was reasonably foreseeable, so he was not liable. Hurley v. Packard, 182 Mass. 216.

²⁹ See ante, § 353.

³⁰ Tate v. Marco, 27 S. C. 493; Frick v. Larned, 50 Kan. 776; Morris v. Bradley, 20 N. Dak. 646; Singmaster v. Beckett, 86 Kan. 494.

See Phillips v. Moir, 69 Ill. 155, where the agent was held to have exercised reasonable care and was therefore not liable.

The delivery man of a laundry is not liable for giving credit to customers where that was the custom of all other delivery men of the principal to the latter's knowledge. Shovelton v. Hanson, 30 Quebec S. C. 360.

³¹ Tate v. Marco, supra; Frick v. Larned, supra; Clark v. Roberts, 26 Mich. 506; Osborne v. Rider, 62 Wis. 235; Robinson Machine Works v. Vorse, 52 Iowa, 207; Harlow v. Bartlett, 170 Mass. 584.

which is good and collectible, he will be liable if he negligently takes the notes of purchasers who are not responsible.³² So if he is required to obtain property statements or to verify those received, he will be responsible for a loss resulting from his failure to comply.³³ Where the contract requires him to verify the statements, he cannot escape his responsibility for not doing so by offering to show a general custom among such agents, to rely upon the buyer's statement without further inquiry.³⁴

§ 1325. Conditions of agent's liability.—In such a case, however, if the principal would take advantage of the agent's negligence or disobedience, he must act within a reasonable time, and if he does not, he cannot afterwards complain.³⁵

So where the agent under his contract with the principal agreed that, upon request of the principal, he would receive back for collection any of the notes taken by him, and the principal took control of the notes and made efforts of his own to collect them, but neither offered to return them to the agent nor requested him to collect them, it was held that the agent could not be charged with the amount remaining uncollected.³⁶ And so, under a similar contract, which the court construed as making the agent a guarantor of collection rather than a surety, it was held that if the principal retained the notes and neither returned them to the agent nor authorized him to collect them, and if while so retained by the principal they might with due diligence have been collected, the agent could not afterwards be held responsible for their amount.³⁷

³² Clark v. Roberts, 26 Mich. 506; Osborne v. Rider, supra; Frick v. Larned, supra; Robinson Machine Works v. Vorse, supra; McCormick Harvesting Co. v. Carpenter, 1 Neb. (Unoff.) 273.

³³ Frick v. Larned, supra; Osborne v. Rider, supra; Robinson Machine Works v. Vorse, supra.

An agent who agrees to verify the purchaser's property statement from the public records, and who endorses on the statement that he has made such personal examination will be bound to the principal as though he had done so. Avery Planter Co. v. Murphy, 6 Kan. App. 29.

³⁴ Osborne v. Rider, supra; Robinson Machine Works v. Vorse, supra.

³⁵ Plano Mfg. Co. v. Buxton, 36 Minn. 203. In this case it was held that the principal who had for two years retained notes taken by the agent could not complain that he had sold to irresponsible parties.

³⁶ Tate v. Marco, 27 S. C. 493.

See also, McCormick Harvesting Machine Co. v. Haug, 38 Ill. App. 674.

³⁷ Piedmont Mfg. Co. v. Morris, 86 Va. 941. An agent who has agreed to be responsible for all goods sold by him during his conduct of the principal's business, is not a surety but a guarantor, and therefore is not discharged from that liability by the fact that the principal renews a note taken by the agent during his con-

5. Neglect of Agent in Making Purchases.

§ 1326. Nature of duty.—Similar considerations control the question of negligence on the part of a purchasing agent. He owes a duty of reasonable care in securing goods or other property of the kind, amount, quality, and condition which he is authorized to purchase; in agreeing upon price, terms, and conditions; in examining into the matter of the seller's title and freedom from incumbrances where this is involved in the purchase; in looking after the question of securing delivery of the property purchased, and at the time and place, and under the conditions, agreed upon wherever he is relied upon to receive the delivery; and generally in doing all of those acts which are confided to him and which are necessary to be done in order to properly safe-guard the principal's interests.³³

V.

TO ACCOUNT FOR MONEY AND PROPERTY.

§ 1327. In general.—It may be stated as a general rule that the agent is bound to account to his principal for all money and property which may come into his hands by virtue of the agency.³⁹ This rule embraces not only such money and property as may be received directly from the principal, but also that which comes into the agent's hands for the principal as the result of his agency. As has been seen in a previous section,⁴⁰ to the principal ordinarily belong all profits and advantages made by the agent, beyond lawful compensation, duct of the business, it not being contended that either note has been paid. Buelterman v. Meyer, 132 Mo. 474.

³³ Agent for the purchase of land who contracted for the assumption of incumbrances as part of the purchase without ascertaining essential terms affecting their amount, held liable to the principal for his negligence. Hinricks v. Brady, 20 S. D. 599.

Broker for the purchase of bonds is liable for negligence in buying bonds which are subject to so many prior liens that they must be deemed "a hopeless speculative purchase." Hopkins v. Clark, 158 N. Y. 299.

Agent instructed to purchase is not liable to his principal for doing so after revocation of his authority but before he was notified of it. Dart v. Coward Inv. Co., (Manitoba) 14 West. L. R. 52.

³⁹ Baldwin v. Potter, 46 Vt. 403; Taul v. Edmonson, 37 Tex. 556; Bedell v. Janney, 4 Gilm. (Ill.) 193; Armstrong v. Smith, 3 Blackf. (Ind.) 251; Heddens v. Younglove, 46 Ind. 212; Jett v. Hempstead, 25 Ark. 462; Whitehead v. Wells, 29 Ark. 99; Haas v. Damon, 9 Iowa, 589; Robson v. Sanders, 25 S. C. 116; Hartmann v. Schrug, 113 App. Div. 254, affirmed 188 N. Y. 617; Wasey v. Whitcomb, 167 Mich. 58; Coffin v. Craig, 89 Minn. 226.

⁴⁰ Ante, §§ 1224-1228.

whether such profit or advantage be the fruit of the performance or of the violation of the agent's duty, or whether they are the result of transactions within or beyond the scope of his authority, provided the acts from which they accrue were assumed to be done in the behalf and for the benefit of the principal.⁴¹ The principal, in such cases, may by ratification, make the act his own, and he is then entitled to its proceeds as though he had originally authorized it.⁴² If, however, he repudiates the act, he cannot claim its proceeds, but must seek his remedy against the agent in some other form.⁴³

Money or property put into the agent's hands to be used for a purpose which failed or was abandoned or countermanded by the principal before the agent had parted with or become liable to third persons for the property or money, is also clearly within the rule.⁴⁴ So also is money or property put into the agent's hands for a certain use and appropriated by him to some unauthorized use.⁴⁵

§ 1328. Account only to principal—Joint principals.—As a rule, the agent is bound to account to his principal only,⁴⁶ and where there are several common principals he will not be held to account to each separately.⁴⁷ He may, however, either expressly or by implication assume the duty to account to each separately, and in that event each may demand an accounting for his respective interest.⁴⁸

§ 1329. Accounting by joint agents.—Where two or more agents have jointly undertaken to act, the duty to account lies usually as much upon one as upon another.⁴⁹ But one will not ordinarily be liable for the default of another which he did not sanction and did not

⁴¹ Graham v. Cummings, 208 Pa. 516; Sherman v. Morrison, 149 Pa. 386; Salsbury v. Ware, 183 Ill. 505; Hindle v. Holcomb, 34 Wash. 336; McClendon v. Bradford, 42 La. 160; Aultman v. Loring, 76 Mo. App. 66; Beale v. Barnett, 23 Ky. L. R. 1118, 64 S. W. 838; Kimball v. Ranney, 122 Mich. 160, 80 Am. St. Rep. 548, 46 L. R. A. 403.

⁴² Thus where an agent for the collection of a note, took in settlement thereof certain horses, and his principal ratified the transaction, it was held that the latter could maintain an action against the agent to recover them. Hormann v. Sherin, 6 S. D. 82. (Compare Antiseptic Fiber Package Co. v. Klein, 119 Mich. 225.) See also, Snow v. Carr, 61 Ala. 363, 32 Am. Rep. 3; Milttenberger v. Beacom, 9 Pa. St.

198; Anderson v. First Nat. Bank, 4 N. D. 182.

⁴³ Perkins v. Hershey, 77 Mich. 504.

⁴⁴ See § 1447.

⁴⁵ Where principal gives money to an agent to buy certain property and the agent buys other property, the principal is not obliged to accept the latter and may recover the amount from the agent. Allison v. Byrne, 3 Vict. L. R. 155.

⁴⁶ Attorney-General v. Chesterfield, 18 Beav. 596.

⁴⁷ Trustees, etc., v. Dupuy, 31 La. Ann. 305.

⁴⁸ Lawless v. Lawless, 39 Mo. App. 539.

⁴⁹ Mason v. Wolkowick, 80 C. C. A. 435, 150 Fed. 699, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 765.

participate in, and which was not made possible by any neglect of his own.⁵⁰

§ 1330. Sub-agents—Account to whom.—The principles governing in this case have already been referred to in preceding sections. Wherever the appointment of the sub-agent is by the express or implied consent of the principal, such a privity exists between them as makes the sub-agent liable directly to the principal.⁵¹ Where, however, the sub-agent is to be regarded as the agent only of one who stood in the relation of independent contractor to the principal, there, as has been said, there is ordinarily no privity by virtue of which the sub-agent can be held accountable to the principal.⁵² Yet even in this case, as has also been seen, where funds of the principal come into the hands of a sub-agent or other third person who has no duty in respect to them but to pay them over to the person to whom they belong, the principal, by timely information as to his claim, may recover them directly from such sub-agent or other third party.⁵³

§ 1331. Agent may not dispute his principal's title.—It is a general principle in the law of agency that the agent may not dispute his principal's title. Having assumed the performance of the agency by virtue of which he has received the property or money of his principal, he will not be permitted, when called upon by his principal to account for the property or money so received, to deny his principal's title to it.⁵⁴ This general principle, however, is subject to certain ex-

⁵⁰ See (cases of co-trustees), Colburn v. Grant, 16 App. D. C. 107; Barroll v. Forman, 88 Md. 188, 12 Am. St. Rep. 764; Bruen v. Gillett, 115 N. Y. 10, 4 L. R. A. 529; Graham's Estate, 218 Pa. 344.

⁵¹ Ante, § 333. Guelich v. National State Bank, 56 Iowa, 434, 41 Am. Rep. 110; Sergeant v. Emlen, 141 Pa. 580. Agents employed to secure a loan for a commission, with the consent of their principal, employed a subagent to assist them and promised to divide the commission with him. The subagent knew the fact of the agency. The subagent secured the loan, and also received from the lenders a secret bonus. Held, that there was privity between the principals and the subagent, but even if there were none there was such a fiduciary relation between the principals and the subagent that the former could compel the latter to account to them for this bonus. Powell v. Jones, [1905] 1 K. B. 11.

⁵² Ante, § 333. Guelich v. National State Bank, supra; Sergeant v. Emlen, supra; New Zealand, etc., Land Co. v. Watson, 7 Q. B. Div. 374.

⁵³ Ante, § 1321.

⁵⁴ Monongahela Nat. Bank v. First National Bank, 226 Pa. 270, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1098; Collins v. Tillou, 26 Conn. 368, 68 Am. Dec. 398; Holbrook v. Wight, 24 Wend. (N. Y.) 169, 35 Am. Dec. 607; Marvin v. Ellwood, 11 Paige (N. Y.), 365; Roberts v. Ogilby, 9 Price, 269; Kieran v. Sandars, 6 Ad. & El. 515; Day v. Southwell, 3 Wis. 657; Von Hurter v. Spengeman, 17 N. J. Eq. 185; Witman v. Felton, 28 Mo. 601; Hungerford v. Moore, 65 Ala. 232; Wilt v. Redkey, 29 Ind. App. 199.

ceptions as well settled as the principle itself. It is always competent for the agent to show in his own defense that he has been divested of the property by, or has yielded to, a title paramount to that of his principal.⁵⁵ He may also show that since the delivery to him the title of his principal has been terminated⁵⁶ or that the principal has transferred his interest or title to another under whom the agent claims.⁵⁷

Where the principal demands an accounting from the agent, of moneys received from a third person, the agent may show that it was paid to him under a mistake and that he has returned it to the payer upon the latter's demand.⁵⁸

§ 1332. May not allege illegality of transaction to defeat principal's claim.—An agent who has received money from, or in behalf of, his principal, can not defeat an action brought by the principal to recover it, upon the ground that the contract under which the money was paid, or the transaction from which it was realized, or the purpose to which it was to be devoted, was illegal, if the alleged illegal transaction was separate and distinct and the maintenance of the action in no wise involves the enforcement or recognition of the illegal act.⁵⁹ The agent, having received the money under an express or implied promise to pay it to his principal, will not be allowed to keep it for himself by alleging that it was unfit for the principal to receive because its source was tainted.

⁵⁵ Moss Merc. Co. v. First Nat. Bank, 47 Oreg. 361, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 657, 8 Ann. Cas. 569; Western Transportation Co. v. Barber, 56 N. Y. 552; Biddle v. Bond, 6 Best & Smith 224; Bliven v. Hudson River R. R. Co., 36 N. Y. 406; Doty v. Hawkins, 6 N. H. 247, 25 Am. Dec. 459; Burton v. Wilkison, 18 Vt. 186, 46 Am. Dec. 145; King v. Richards, 6 Wharton (Pa.), 418, 37 Am. Dec. 420; Bates v. Stanton, 1 Duer (N. Y.), 79.

⁵⁶ Marvin v. Ellwood, 11 Paige (N. Y.), 365.

⁵⁷ Duncan v. Spear, 11 Wend. (N. Y.) 56; Harker v. Dement, 9 Gill (Md.), 7, 52 Am. Dec. 670; Snodgrass v. Butler, 54 Miss. 45; Roberts v. Noyes, 76 Me. 590.

⁵⁸ See post, §§ 1432, 1433.

An agent of an insurance company when called upon by the latter to pay over premiums collected cannot defend upon the ground that the company has not performed a term of the contract with him, namely, to advance money to him to be used as a deposit, where the agent has incurred no personal liabilities, and the company is unquestionably financially responsible. Equitable Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. McCrae, 156 Ill. App. 467.

⁵⁹ O'Bryan v. Fitzpatrick, 48 Ark. 487; First Nat. Bank v. Leppel, 9 Col. 594; Crescent Ins. Co. v. Bear, 23 Fla. 50, 11 Am. St. Rep. 331; Snell v. Pells, 113 Ill. 145; Daniels v. Barney, 22 Ind. 207; Reed v. Dougan, 54 Ind. 307; Wilt v. Redkey, 29 Ind. App. 199, and other Indiana cases there cited; Chinn v. Chinn, 22 La. Ann. 599; Gilham v. Brown, 43 Miss. 641; Decell v. Hazelhurst, 83 Miss. 346; Souhegan Bank v. Wallace, 61 N. H. 24; Supervisors v. Bates, 17 N. Y. 242; Murray v. Vanderbilt, 39 Barb. (N. Y.) 140; Boehmer v. Schuylkill, 46 Pa. 452; Monongahela Nat. Bank v. First Nat.

Thus a collector of taxes cannot deny the right of his principal to receive them on the ground that they were illegally levied;⁶⁰ an agent who in unlawful speculations has received money belonging to his principal can not refuse, on that ground, to pay it to him;⁶¹ nor can an agent who has received money from his principal to be employed for an unlawful purpose, but who has not so employed it, refuse to return the money to his principal because of the illegality of the purpose contemplated.⁶²

Where, however, the duty to account arises out of or was a part of the illegal transaction itself, so that to require an accounting involves the recognition and enforcement of the illegal contract, the courts will give no aid.⁶³

§ 1333. When may maintain interpleader.—An agent being bound to recognize and respect his principal's title can not, in general, compel his principal to interplead with a stranger who claims, by a paramount and adverse title, the property or funds intrusted to the agent by the principal.⁶⁴ Where, however, the third person claims under a Bank, 226 Pa. 270, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1098; Baldwin v. Potter, 46 Vt. 402; Cheuvront v. Horner, 62 W. Va. 476; Kiewert v. Rindskopf, 46 Wis. 481, 32 Am. Rep. 731; Brooks v. Martin, 2 Wall. (69 U. S.) 70, 17 L. Ed. 732; Gilbert v. American Surety Co., 57 C. C. A. 619, 121 Fed. 499, 61 L. R. A. 253; In re Dorr, 108 C. C. A. 322, 186 Fed. 276; Cambridge Corporation v. Sovereign Bank, 18 Que. K. B. 423.

See also De Leon v. Trevino, 49 Tex. 88, 30 Am. Rep. 101, with criticisms in the note.

See also the cases next cited.

⁶⁰ Placer County v. Astin, 8 Cal. 303; Clark v. Moody, 17 Mass. 145; Hammond v. Christie, 5 Robt. (N. Y.) 160; Galbaith v. Gaines, 10 Lea (Tenn.), 568. So a county treasurer receiving money from an illegal sale of bonds. Boehmer v. Schuykill, 46 Pa. 452; Indianapolis v. Skeen, 17 Ind. 628.

⁶¹ Norton v. Blinn, 39 Ohio St. 145; Bridger v. Savage, L. R. 15 Q. B. D. 363; (money won on bets made as plaintiff's agent); Lovejoy v. Kaufman, 16 Tex. Civ. App. 377; O'Bryan v. Fitzpatrick, 48 Ark. 487.

⁶² Kiewert v. Rindskopf, 46 Wis. 481, 32 Am. Rep. 731; Clarke v. Brown, 77 Ga. 606, 4 Am. St. Rep. 98; Gilbert v. American Surety Co., 57 C. C. A. 619, 121 Fed. 499, 61 L. R. A. 253; Ware v. Spinney, 76 Kan. 289, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 267, 13 Ann. Cas. 1181.

⁶³ Leonard v. Poole, 114 N. Y. 371, 11 Am. St. 667, 4 L. R. A. 728; Central Trust Co. v. Respess, 112 Ky. 606, 99 Am. St. Rep. 317, 56 L. R. A. 479; Lemon v. Grosskopf, 22 Wis. 447, 99 Am. Dec. 58; Buck v. Albee, 26 Vt. 184, 62 Am. Dec. 564.

It is not unlawful or immoral for a principal, desiring to secure concessions from a foreign government, to pay the legitimate expenses involved; and if he puts money into the hands of his agents for that purpose but the agent does not so apply it, the principal may require the agent to account for it. Allen v. O'Bryan, 118 App. Div. 213.

⁶⁴ Crawshay v. Thornton, 2 My. & Cr. 1; Smith v. Hammond, 6 Sim. 10; Atkinson v. Manks, 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 691; United States Trust Co. v. Wiley, 41 Barb. (N. Y.) 477; Lund v. Sea-

title derived from the principal and created by the latter's own act subsequently to the time the agent was intrusted with the possession—as through an assignment, sale, mortgage or lien made or given by the principal—the agent may compel the parties to interplead.⁶⁵ In this case, there is no denial of the original right or title; the only dispute is as to the effect of the subsequent act.

§ 1334. Agent's duty to keep correct accounts.—As a necessary consequence of the agent's duty to account, it is his duty to keep and preserve and at all proper times to be ready to produce, true and correct accounts and statements of the business with which he is intrusted, together with all such receipts, vouchers and evidences of dealing as may be necessary to fully and fairly disclose the details of the transaction and not only to protect the principal from future liability, but also to furnish the means for the complete settlement between themselves.⁶⁶ man's Bank, 37 Id. 129; Vosburgh v. Huntington, 15 Abb. (N. Y.) Pr. 254; Bank v. Bininger, 26 N. J. Eq. 345; Tyus v. Rust, 37 Ga. 574, 95 Am. Dec. 365; Hatfield v. McWhorter, 40 Ga. 269; Crane v. Burntrager, 1 Ind. 165.

⁶⁵ Gibson v. Goldthwaite, 7 Ala. 281, 42 Am. Dec. 592; Bechtel v. Sheaffer, 117 Pa. 555; McFadden v. Swinerton, 36 Ore. 336; Sammis v. L'Engle, 19 Fla. 880; Roselle v. Farmers Bank, 119 Mo. 84; Hechmer v. Gilligan, 28 W. Va. 750; Brock v. Southern R. Co., 44 S. C. 444; Smith v. Hammond, 6 Sim. 10; Wright v. Ward, 4 Russ. 215; Crawford v. Fisher, 1 Hare, 436; Tanner v. European Bank, L. R. 1 Exch. 261.

⁶⁶ In Dodge v. Hatchett, 118 Ga. 883, it was said to be "the duty of the agent to keep and render to his principal an account of all receipts and disbursements, and, whenever reasonably requested to do so, to make and present to his principal a full and complete statement of his dealings and the state of the account between them."

In Chicago Title & Trust Co. v. Ward, 113 Ill. App. 327, it is said that "it is the duty of an agent to keep and preserve true and correct accounts between himself and his principal, and to furnish him detailed and itemized statements of receipts and expenditures. The statements must be of such a character as to enable the principal to make some reasonable test of their honesty and accuracy."

To same effect see Brigham v. Newton, 106 La. 280; In re Pierson's Estate, 19 N. Y. App. Div. 478; Riley v. Bank, 57 S. C. 98; Boyce v. Boyce, 124 Mich. 696; Keighler v. Savage Mfg. Co., 12 Md. 383, 71 Am. Dec. 600; Haas v. Damon, 9 Iowa, 589; Clark v. Moody, 17 Mass. 145; Kerfoot v. Hyman, 52 Ill. 512; Matthews v. Wilson, 27 Mo. 155; Dunwidie v. Kerley, 6 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 501; Schedda v. Sawyer, 4 McLean (U. S. C. C.), 181, Fed. Cas. No. 12,443; Ridder v. Whitlock, 12 How. (N. Y.) Pr. 208; Chinn v. Chinn, 22 La. Ann. 599; Holmes v. Murdock, 125 La. 916.

Principal's right to inspect agent's books.—The agent's duty to keep and render proper accounts "involves the right of the principal to assure himself that the accounts are proper and correct. Measures taken in good faith by the principal to secure a proper accounting and to assure himself of its propriety, are there-

Technical nicety of bookkeeping is not, of course, in general to be expected. What is a reasonable fulfillment of the agent's duty in this case as in others, depends upon the particular circumstances requiring care and diligence.⁶⁷

So while it is thus the agent's duty to keep correct accounts yet if the principal himself has by his own interference or looseness of methods created, or so contributed to, such confusion as to render an absolutely satisfactory accounting impossible, the agent ought not to be held to the most rigid rule;⁶⁸ and where the principal has, either expressly or by implication, assured the agent or reasonably led him to believe that no formal accounts would be required, or that a particular method of accounting would be satisfactory, he cannot complain that the agent, if he has acted in good faith, has not kept the accounts with the strictness which might otherwise have been required.⁶⁹

The duty to keep correct accounts of course includes the requirement that they shall be true and honest. The agent who knowingly renders false accounts, charging his principal with more than the true amount or crediting him with less, is guilty of such disloyalty as to justify his discharge and to forfeit his right to compensation.⁷⁰

§ 1335. Duty to keep principal's property and funds separate from his own—Liability for commingling.—It is the duty of the agent to keep the property and funds of his principal separate from his own. If, without necessity, he has so commingled the goods or funds of his principal with his own that he cannot discriminate between the two, the whole mass so undistinguishable must be held to belong to the principal.⁷¹ If, without authority, he commingles in his dealings the goods of his principal and of himself, the principal will have the first charge upon the proceeds.⁷² So if he mingles the funds of his prinfore not in violation of the contract, although they may not be within its express terms." Walker v. Hancock Mut. L. Ins. Co., 80 N. J. L. 342, Ann. Cas. 1912 A, 526, 35 L. R. A. (N. S.) 153.

⁶⁷ Makepeace v. Rogers, 34 L. J. Ch. 367.

⁶⁸ Robbins v. Robbins (N. J. Eq.), 3 Atl. 264; Macauley v. Elrod (Ky.), 28 S. W. 782.

⁶⁹ See Carrau v. Chapotel, 47 La. 408; Succession of Borge, 44 La. 1; Hamilton v. Hamilton, 15 N. Y. App. Div. 47.

⁷⁰ See post, Book IV, Chap. IV. Little v. Phipps, 208 Mass. 331, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1046; Boston Deep Sea Fishing Co. v. Ansell, 39 Ch. Div. 339; Hutchinson v. Fleming, 40 Can. Sup. Ct. 134.

⁷¹ Hart v. Ten Eyck, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) Ch. 62; Jewett v. Dringer 30 N. J. Eq. 291; Atkinson v. Ward, 47 Ark. 533; Allsopp v. Hendy Machine Works, 5 Cal. App. 228; First Nat. Bank v. Schween, 127 Ill. 573, 11 Am. St. Rep. 174; Lance v. Butler, 135 N. Car. 419.

⁷² Kennesaw Guano Co. v. Wappoo

principal with his own and the whole is lost, the loss must fall upon the agent.⁷³

This rule is of frequent application in cases where the agent has deposited money of his principal in a bank. In case it becomes necessary to make such a deposit, the agent will escape personal liability if he deposits it in the name of his principal in a bank of good credit, or if he so distinguishes it on the books of the bank as to indicate in some way that it is the money of his principal.⁷⁴ If on the contrary he deposits it in his own name, or with his own funds, he will, in case of a failure of the bank, be liable to the principal for his money.⁷⁵

This rule has been carried to the extent of holding that an attorney who deposits his client's money in a solvent bank in his own name, though in a separate account, but with no indication of the trust, is liable for a loss occasioned by the subsequent failure of the bank, notwithstanding he was prevented from transmitting the money by garnishment proceedings against him.⁷⁶

§ 1336. At what time agent should account.—Where at the creation of the agency the time of accounting is expressly agreed upon, or where, from the circumstances of the case, an agreement to account at a particular time is to be implied, such agreement will of course govern. In the absence of such an express or implied agreement, the time when an accounting should be made will depend largely upon the facts of each case. In general terms, however, it may be said that an agent is ordinarily bound to account upon demand, and in all events within a reasonable time.⁷⁷

It is the duty of an agent who has received goods to sell for his

Mills, 119 Ga. 776; Simmons v. Looney, 41 W. Va. 738.

⁷³ In re Hodges Estate, 66 Vt. 70; Mass. Life Ins. Co. v. Carpenter, 32 N. Y. Super. 734; Pinckney v. Dunn, 2 S. C. 314; Cartmell v. Allard, 7 Bush (Ky.), 482, and cases cited in following notes.

In Bartlett v. Hamilton, 46 Me. 435, it is said that at least the burden of proof is on the agent to show that the identical money of the principal was lost.

Where an agent takes a single note running to himself for the combined proceeds of the sale of his own and his principal's goods commingled, he is chargeable at least with a technical conversion of his principal's goods.

Kennesaw Guano Co. v. Wappoo Mills, supra.

⁷⁴ Norwood v. Harness, 98 Ind. 134, 49 Am. Rep. 739; State v. Greensdale, 106 Ind. 364, 55 Am. Rep. 753.

⁷⁵ Williams v. Williams, 55 Wis. 300, 42 Am. Rep. 708; Norris v. Hero, 22 La. Ann. 605; Mason v. Whitthorne, 2 Cold. (Tenn.) 242; Jenkins v. Walter, 8 Gill & J. (Md.) 218, 29 Am. Dec. 539; State v. Greensdale, 106 Ind. 364, 55 Am. Rep. 753; Naltner v. Dolan, 108 Ind. 500, 58 Am. Rep. 61; Cartmell v. Allard, 7 Bush (Ky.), 482.

⁷⁶ Naltner v. Dolan, 108 Ind. 500, 58 Am. Rep. 61.

⁷⁷ Leake v. Sutherland, 25 Ark. 219.

principal, to account for the proceeds within a reasonable time, and without demand in cases where a demand would be impracticable or extremely inconvenient, so that factors abroad or at a distance who have received goods to sell, without special instructions as to the mode of remittance, are bound, it is held, according to the course of business, to render an account of their sales or pay over the proceeds thereof within a reasonable time, and if they neglect to do this such negligence is a breach of contract and subjects them to an action.⁷⁸

§ 1337. — It is the duty of an agent who has collected money for his principal to give him notice thereof within a reasonable time after its receipt.⁷⁹ This affords the principal opportunity to give such directions in regard to its transmission as he may desire. Such directions are, indeed, usually given at the time of the employment of the agent, and whenever they are given, it is the duty of the agent, as has been seen, to observe them.

Where no such instructions are given, it has been said that good faith on the part of the agent requires that he should, after deducting his commission, remit the money to his principal by some safe and appropriate means within a reasonable time;⁸⁰ but where he acts for a foreign principal, he is not bound to take the risk of the remittance by methods of his own selection, but having advised the principal of the collection, the agent may await the principal's directions as to the manner in which the remittance shall be made.⁸¹

§ 1338. — Upon the termination of the agency, it would be the duty of the agent to return or otherwise properly account for all of the property, equipment and the like, which belongs to the principal and which came into the agent's possession because of the agency.⁸² The same rule would apply to land which the agent or servant was allowed to use as such, but which he did not hold as a tenant.⁸³

⁷⁸ Eaton v. Welton, 32 N. H. 352; (N. Y.) 590; Henbach v. Rother, 2 Clark v. Moody, 17 Mass. 145. But see Cooley v. Betts, 24 Wend. (N. Y.) 203; Green v. Williams, 21 Kan. 64; Lyle v. Murray, 4 Sandf. (N. Y.) 590.

⁷⁹ Jett v. Hempstead, 25 Ark. 463; Whitehead v. Wells, 29 Ark. 99; Dodge v. Perkins, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 368; Williams v. Storrs, 6 Johns. (N. Y.) Ch. 353, 10 Am. Dec. 340.

⁸⁰ Bedell v. Janney, 9 Ill. (4 Gilm.) 193; Lillie v. Hoyt, 5 Hill (N. Y.), 395, 40 Am. Dec. 360.

⁸¹ Ferris v. Paris, 10 John. (N. Y.) 285, 286; Lyle v. Murray, 4 Sandf.

(N. Y.) 590; Henbach v. Rother, 2 Duer (N. Y.), 227; Clark v. Moody, 17 Mass. 145.

⁸² Applied to a license taken out in the agent's name but belonging to the principal. Levian v. Fabian, 28 New Zeal. L. R. 569.

⁸³ Principal may require servant or agent to leave his premises upon discharge, and may use reasonable force to eject him if he refuses to go upon proper demand. Noonan v. Luther, 206 N. Y. 105, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 761; Foye v. Sewell, 21 Abb. N. Cas. 15 (domestic servants).

The fact that the relation was terminated without right by the principal would ordinarily be immaterial.⁸⁴ Only where the agent had a lien or a power coupled with an interest, or some right of that sort, would the case be otherwise.

§ 1339. Necessity for demand before action.—No action can, ordinarily, be maintained against an agent for money received by him for his principal until after a demand has been made upon him for its payment, with which he has refused or neglected to comply.⁸⁵ The agent is not as such a mere debtor. He ordinarily holds the property or money for the principal and subject to his order. It may fairly be supposed that he is ready to pay or deliver upon demand.

Such a demand and refusal or neglect to pay are therefore essential averments in the declaration or complaint, without which the action cannot ordinarily be sustained.⁸⁶

"As a general rule in such cases, it may be presumed," it has been

Same doctrine applies to discharged clergyman. Conway v. Carpenter, 80 Hun (N. Y.), 428. Farm servant occupying house on farm. Bowman v. Bradley, 151 Pa. 351, 17 L. R. A. 213; Hayward v. Miller, 3 Hill (N. Y.), 90. Minister occupying parsonage. Chataud v. O'Donovan, 80 Ind. 20, 41 Am. Rep. 782. Compare Bristol v. Burr, 120 N. Y. 427, 8 L. R. A. 710.

See also Hanford v. People, 7 N. Y. Weekly Dig. 528; Kerrains v. People, 60 N. Y. 221.

⁸⁴ Hayward v. Miller, supra; Conway v. Carpenter, supra; Clark v. Vannort, 78 Md. 216.

⁸⁵ Cummins v. McLain, 2 Ark. 412; Sevier v. Holliday, 2 Ark. 512; Palmer v. Ashley, 3 Ark. 75; Taylor v. Spears, 6 Ark. 381, 44 Am. Dec. 519; Warner v. Bridges, Id. 385; Roberts v. Armstrong, 1 Bush (Ky.), 263, 89 Am. Dec. 624; Baird v. Walker, 12 Barb. (N. Y.) 298, 301; Colvin v. Holbrook, 2 N. Y. 130; Williams v. Storrs, 6 Johns. (N. Y.) Ch. 353, 10 Am. Dec. 340; Haas v. Damon, 9 Iowa, 589; Burton v. Collin, 3 Mo. 315; Waring v. Richardson, 11 Ired. (N. C.) L. 77; Cockrill v. Kirkpatrick, 9 Mo. 688; Cole v. Baker, 16 S. D. 1; Armstrong v. Smith, 3 Blackf. (Ind.) 251; Judah v. Dyott, Id. 324, 25 Am. Dec. 112; English

v. Devarro, 5 Id. 588; Hannum v. Curtis, 13 Ind. 206; Jones v. Gregg, 17 Ind. 84; Black v. Hersch, 18 Ind. 342, 81 Am. Dec. 362; Catterlin v. Sommerville, 22 Ind. 482; Bougher v. Scobey, 23 Ind. 583; Nutzenholster v. State, 37 Ind. 457; Heddens v. Younglove, 46 Ind. 212; Pierce v. Thornton, 44 Ind. 235; Terrell v. Butterfield, 92 Ind. 1; Claypool v. Gish, 108 Ind. 424; State v. Sims, 76 Ind. 328. But see contra, Lillie v. Hoyt, 5 Hill (N. Y.), 395, 40 Am. Dec. 360.

⁸⁶ Claypool v. Gish, supra. This averment is so essential that a motion to arrest will be sustained on account of its absence. Pierce v. Thornton, supra; Eberhart v. Reister, 96 Ind. 478.

In King v. Mackellar, 109 N. Y. 215, no demand was alleged in the complaint, but demand was proved without objection; held, "that the omission of the averment was not available as an objection" in the Appellate Court; "also that it would have been competent for the court to admit evidence of demand on the trial if objection had been raised, allowing an amendment of the complaint."

The demand may be informal. Egerton v. Logan, 81 N. Car. 172.

See also, Judith Inland Transp. Co. v. Williams, 36 Mont. 25.

said, "that payment has been delayed by reason of the want of safe and convenient means of transmission or of some other good and sufficient cause, and that the recipient of the money, still considering himself entitled to no more than enough to reasonably compensate him for his services in collecting, will pay it over on demand."⁸⁷ This rule, however, presupposes that the agent has duly performed his duty of notifying the principal of the receipt of the money.⁸⁸

But where he has not given such notice, and so long a time has elapsed since the collection of the money as to rebut the presumption above referred to, "he may well be considered as having appropriated it to his own use, and then neither law nor reason requires that before he can be sued for his non-feasance, he should be requested to do what his conduct sufficiently indicates his determination not to do."⁸⁹

§ 1340. — Exceptions.—But if the rule requiring demand be based upon the assumption that until such demand the agent does not know the principal's pleasure, and therefore can be subject to no duty to pay over, many circumstances may exist which would show the existence of such a duty without an expressed demand. Thus if it be the established course of business to pay over without waiting for a demand,⁹⁰ or if the agent has agreed to pay upon receipt or at a particular time,⁹¹ or if he has been instructed by his principal so to pay,⁹² the agent's course is clear, his duty is independent of demand, and no demand is necessary.

The general rule is also said to be subject to the exception that no demand is necessary where it would be impracticable or extremely inconvenient, as in the case above referred to, of a factor resident abroad,⁹³ though there are cases to the contrary.⁹⁴

⁸⁷ Bedell v. Janney, 9 Ill. 193.

⁸⁸ Jett v. Hempstead, 25 Ark. 463; Haas v. Damon, 9 Iowa, 589; Ferris v. Paris, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 285; Cooley v. Betts, 24 Wend. (N. Y.) 203; Drexel v. Raimond, 23 Pa. 21.

⁸⁹ Bedell v. Janney, supra.

⁹⁰ Brown v. Arrott, 6 W. & S. (Pa.) 402. So, in the case of an agent to sell goods, after the lapse of a reasonable time from the receipt of goods and a neglect to account for them, the fair presumption is that the goods have been sold and the money received for them, and an action for money had and received may be maintained without a demand. Clark v. Moody, 17 Mass. 145; Langley v.

Sturtevant, 7 Pick. (Mass.) 214; Eaton v. Welton, 32 N. H. 352.

⁹¹ Brown v. Arrott, supra; Haebler v. Luttgen, 2 N. Y. App. Div. 390; affirmed, 158 N. Y. 693; Mast v. Easton, 33 Minn. 161; Campbell v. Roe, 32 Neb. 345; Stacy v. Graham, 14 N. Y. 492; Campbell v. Boggs, 48 Pa. 524.

⁹² Clark v. Moody, 17 Mass. 145; Ferris v. Paris, 10 Johns. 285; Haas v. Damon, 9 Iowa, 589.

⁹³ Clark v. Moody, 17 Mass. 145; Eaton v. Welton, 32 N. H. 352.

⁹⁴ See Cooley v. Betts, 24 Wend. (N. Y.) 203; Green v. Williams, 21 Kan. 64.

So no demand is required where the agency is denied, or a claim is set up exceeding the amount collected, or the agent's responsibility is disputed.⁹⁵

Demand is also unnecessary where the agent violates instructions as to the disposition of the property or money, and appropriates it to an unauthorized or wrongful use.⁹⁶

Although the death of the principal, as has been seen, ordinarily terminates the relation, yet if after his death the agent collects money and converts it to his own use, the personal representative of the principal may recover it.⁹⁷ The mere fact that the agent has once tendered the money will not relieve him if, upon a subsequent proper demand, he refuses or neglects to pay it over.⁹⁸

§ 1341. When agent liable for interest.—An agent may become liable to his principal for interest upon moneys in his hands by virtue of an express or implied promise to pay such interest. But he will also be chargeable with interest upon all moneys in his possession which he has neglected or refused to pay over, or to apply to the purpose for which he received it, and such interest will be computed from the time of such neglect or refusal. Interest in these cases is allowed upon the ground that the agent has retained in his possession money, of which it was his duty to make some other disposition.⁹⁹

Thus, as has been seen, it is the duty of an agent who has collected money for his principal, to give him notice of that fact within a reasonable time. Failing in this duty, he is properly chargeable with interest from the time when such notice should have been given, even though he has acted in good faith.¹ A fortiori is he chargeable with interest where, having collected money, he neglects or refuses upon proper demand to pay it over, or converts it to his own use.²

So if he has received money to be devoted to a specific purpose, as to make an investment, and, contrary to his duty, retains and applies

⁹⁵ Waddell v. Swann, 91 N. C. 108; Wiley v. Logan, 95 N. C. 358; Hammett v. Brown, 60 Ala. 498; Judith Inland Transp. Co. v. Williams, 36 Mont. 25.

⁹⁶ Bartels v. Kinnenger, 144 Mo. 370; Haas v. Damon, 9 Iowa, 589; Allsopp v. Hendy Mach. Works, 5 Cal. App. 288.

⁹⁷ Clegg v. Bamberger, 110 Ind. 536.

⁹⁸ Clegg v. Bamberger, supra.

⁹⁹ See cases following.

¹ Dodge v. Perkins, 9 Pick. (Mass.)

368; Clark v. Moody, 17 Mass. 145; Thorp v. Thorp, 75 Vt. 34.

² Anderson v. State, 2 Ga. 370; Bedell v. Janney, 9 Ill. 193; Miller v. McCormick Co., 84 Ill. App. 571; Beugnot v. Tremoulet, 111 La. 1; Board of Justices v. Fennimore, 1 N. J. L. 242; People v. Gasherie, 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 71, 6 Am. Dec. 263; Harrison v. Long, 4 Desau. (S. Car.) 110; Hill v. Williams, 6 Jones (N. Car.), Eq. 242.

See also, Pearse v. Green, 1 Jac. & W. 135; Harsant v. Blaine, 56 L. J.

it to his own use, he will be charged with interest from the time of its receipt.³

Where, however, the agent is entitled to retain the money, as by virtue of some lien or charge upon it, he can not be chargeable with interest during the period of such retention.⁴ So if the principal voluntarily permits the money to remain in the hands of his agent, who holds himself in readiness to pay over upon demand, the agent will not be chargeable with interest,⁵ unless he has been able to so invest or use the money as to make it earn interest, for which he would be chargeable.⁶

§ 1342. Form of action.—The determination of the form of the action which the principal may pursue against the agent for the recovery of the property or money to which he may be entitled, depends upon a great variety of circumstances. In many cases, an action for the breach of an express or an implied contract to pay or deliver will be appropriate.⁷ Where the agent has received money which it is his duty to pay or account for to the principal, an action for money had and received may be maintained.⁸ As has been seen in an earlier section,⁹ an agent who applies his principal's property or funds to an end or purpose not authorized may often be held liable for conversion.¹⁰ In such cases, the principal will often have an option to sue either for

Q. B. 511; Bayne v. Stephens, 8 Comw. L. R. (Austral.) 1.

³ Hill v. Hunt, 9 Gray (Mass.), 66; Schisler v. Null, 91 Mich. 321.

⁴ Thompson v. Stewart, 3 Conn. 171, 8 Am. Dec. 168.

⁵ Gunn v. Howell, 35 Ala. 144, 73 Am. Dec. 484; Nisbet v. Lawson, 1 Ga. 275; Hackleman v. Moat, 4 Blackf. (Ind.) 164; Gordon v. Zacheire, 15 La. Ann. 17; Wheeler v. Haskins, 41 Me. 432; Hyman v. Gray, 4 Jones (N. Car.), L. 155; Rowland v. Martindale, 1 Bailey (S. Car.), Ch. 226; Hauxhurst v. Hovey, 26 Vt. 544.

⁶ Bassett v. Kinney, 24 Conn. 267, 63 Am. Dec. 161; Williams v. Storrs, 6 Johns. (N. Y.) Ch. 353, 10 Am. Dec. 340; Landis v. Scott, 32 Pa. 495.

Where agent mixes principal's money with his own by depositing it in a general bank account, he may be charged with interest. Blodgett's Estate v. Converse's Estate, 60 Vt. 410.

⁷ Walter v. Bennett, 16 N. Y. 250; Conaughtey v. Nichols, 42 N. Y. 83; Greentree v. Rosenstock, 61 N. Y. 583; Wright v. Duffie, 23 (N. Y.) Misc. 338; Robson v. Sanders, 25 S. Car. 116.

⁸ Gordon v. Hostetter, 37 N. Y. 99; Kidder v. Biddle, 13 Ind. App. 653; Harr v. Roome, 28 App. D. C. 214. Where an agent violates his instructions and misappropriates money an action for money had and received will lie for its recovery. Guernsey v. Davis, 67 Kan. 378.

⁹ See ante, § 1253.

¹⁰ See Wells v. Collins, 74 Wis. 341, 5 L. R. A. 531; Salem, etc., Co. v. Anson, 41 Oreg. 562; Coleman v. Pearce, 26 Minn. 123; Chase v. Baskerville, 93 Minn. 402; Scott v. Rogers, 31 N. Y. 676; Greentree v. Rosenstock, 61 N. Y. 583; Laverty v. Snethen, 68 N. Y. 522, 23 Am. Rep. 184; Comley v. Dazian, 114 N. Y. 161; Jones v. Smith, 65 Misc. 528; Bridgeport Organ Co. v. Snyder, 147 N. C. 271.

the breach of contract or for the conversion.¹¹ In many cases the principal may regain his goods by an action of replevin.¹² The relation of the parties is, also, usually such as to bring the agent within the operation of the ordinary statutes authorizing attachment.¹³ As has been seen in a previous section,¹⁴ an agent who has received money for his principal, cannot ordinarily be charged with the conversion of it, unless it was his duty to pay over the specific funds received.¹⁵ Where the agent fails to restore upon reasonable demand chattels received from his principal to be kept on his account,¹⁶ or to deliver to his principal upon such demand chattels received for and belonging to the principal,¹⁷ the agent may be held for conversion. The fact that the demand involves or implies a termination of the agency is immaterial, since the principal always has the right upon reasonable notice to terminate an ordinary agency and to demand an accounting for or restoration of his property.

§ 1343. — When equitable.—It is well settled that the mere relation of principal and agent is not sufficient to authorize the principal to come into a court of equity for an accounting. For very many of the questions arising between them, the ordinary legal remedies are, as has been seen in the preceding section, entirely adequate; and where this is the case, resort cannot ordinarily be had to equity.¹⁸

¹¹ See Ridder v. Whitlock, 12 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 208; Zindel v. Finck, 120 N. Y. Supp. 738.

Agent held neither liable for breach of contract or for conversion. Pneumatic Weigher Co. v. Burnquist, 128 Iowa, 709.

¹² Thus where a principal has terminated his factor's authority and has satisfied, or the factor has forfeited, the factor's lien, the principal may maintain replevin for the goods. Terwilliger v. Beals, 6 Lans. (N. Y.) 403.

So in Robinson v. Stewart, 97 Mich. 454, where plaintiff endorsed to defendant a certificate of deposit to be used to purchase real estate for plaintiff, and later, when the purchase failed, demanded it back and was refused, held that replevin will lie for the certificate.

¹³ De Leonis v. Etchepare, 120 Cal. 407.

¹⁴ See ante, § 1254.

¹⁵ Hazelton v. Locke, 104 Me. 164, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 35, 15 Ann. Cas. 1009; Walter v. Bennett, 16 N. Y. 250; Conaughtey v. Nichols, 42 N. Y. 83; Vandelle v. Rohan, 36 N. Y. Misc. 239; Wright v. Duffie, 23 N. Y. Misc. 338; Schanz v. Martin, 37 N. Y. Misc. 492; Rothchild v. Schwarz, 28 N. Y. Misc. 521; Hartman v. Hicks, 28 N. Y. Misc. 527.

Where it was his duty to pay over the identical money received, see Farrelly v. Hubbard, 148 N. Y. 592; and Michigan Carbon Works v. Schad, 1 N. Y. Supp. 490.

¹⁶ Potter v. Merchants' Bank, 28 N. Y. 641, 86 Am. Dec. 273; Solomon v. Waas, 2 Hilt. (N. Y.) 179; Brown v. Cushman, 173 Mass. 368; Bridgeport Organ Co. v. Snyder, 147 N. Car. 271.

¹⁷ Nading v. Howe, 23 Ind. App. 690.

¹⁸ Knotts v. Tarver, 8 Ala. 743; Crothers v. Lee, 29 Ala. 337; Paulding v. Lee, 20 Ala. 768; Halsted v.

When, however, the agency is one of a strictly fiduciary character, involving a question of confidence between the parties,¹⁹ or, in many Rabb, 8 Porter (Ala.), 63; Coquillard v. Suydam, 8 Blackf. (Ind.) 24; Powers v. Cray, 7 Ga. 206; Moxon v. Bright, L. R. 4 Ch. App. 292; Navulshaw v. Brownrigg, 2 DeGex, M. & G. 441; Hemings v. Pugh, 4 Giff. 456; Stewart v. Austin, L. R. 3 Eq. 299.

For the mere failure of an agent to remit money received upon the sale of property, an action at law and not in equity is the remedy. Herbert v. Henry, 20 Hawaii, 187.

¹⁹ In Moxon v. Bright, L. R. 4 Ch. App. 292, Lord Hatherly, L. C., said: "There were numerous cases showing that where the relation of principal and agent had imposed a trust upon the agent, the court would entertain a bill for an account, and the only difficulty was in determining what constituted this species of trust. It was not every agent who held a fiduciary position as between himself and his principal. Foley v. Hill, 1 Ph. 399, 2 H. L. C. 28, showed that though a banker was the agent of the customer for many purposes, they were not such as would constitute a trust. Nor did the mere circumstances that the principal wanted discovery empower the court to give him assistance in the way of relief. The case of Smith v. Leveaux, 2 D. J. & S. 1, showed that though you might be entitled to discovery, which you could get either in equity or at law, that did not entitle you to relief, for all depended upon the character of the agency. As between master and servant such an agency did not exist, and the Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce, in Smith v. Leveaux, expressed his opinion that a Court of Equity ought not to entertain a suit in such a case."

In Underhill v. Jordan, 72 N. Y. App. Div. 71, it is said: "While it is true that the existence of a bare agency is not sufficient upon which the equitable jurisdiction of the court can be invoked, yet where the agent's duties are fiduciary in character and involve a dealing with trust funds, he is regarded in the law as a quasi trustee and may be called to account in a court of equity for his management of the trust fund, and in such action judgment may pass determining the respective rights and liabilities of the parties thereto and adjusting the respective interests of the parties in and to the trust fund." See also, 91 App. Div. (N. Y.) 124.

In Marvin v. Brooks, 94 N. Y. 71, it is said that where an agent has been intrusted with his principal's money, to be expended for a specific purpose, the former may be required to account in equity. Followed in Kawanakoa v. Puahi, 14 Hawaii, 72.

And where an executrix brought an action in the nature of a bill in equity, alleging that defendant, as agent of plaintiff's intestate, received from the latter certain moneys to loan for him, and had not fully accounted therefor, and that the plaintiff was not in possession of any books, papers or memoranda, by which the amount or the investment thereof could be ascertained,—it was held that, although the statute had abolished action for a discovery, in aid of another action, this did not affect the jurisdiction of equity in any proper case for an accounting, and that the petition disclosed a proper case of that sort. Schwickerath v. Lohen, 48 Wis. 599. Same effect: Rippe v. Stogdill, 61 Wis. 38.

To the effect that "where an agent is intrusted with money to be disbursed, his principal may sustain a bill in equity against him for an account of his agency," see Dunn v. Johnson, 115 N. C. 249.

An agent intrusted with the management of property, authorized to buy and sell, receive payments and make disbursements, occupies a fiduciary relation and a court of equity cases, where fraud is alleged²⁰ or a discovery sought, the equitable jurisdiction will attach, even though some remedy at law might also have been found.²¹ So where the account is so complicated that it cannot be settled at law without great difficulty, a bill in equity may be maintained.²²

The fact that the agent has rendered numerous and, as he claims, full and correct accounts, will not bar the court of its jurisdiction, nor of itself make the action vexatious. Whether they are in fact full and correct is often the very matter to be determined, and as to this the principal's right cannot be foreclosed by the agent's statement.²³

In many cases, moreover, equity will lend its aid either by way of injunction or decree of specific performance to prevent the violation, or enforce the performance, of the trusts upon which the agent holds the property of his principal.²⁴

§ 1344. The burden of proof.—The burden of showing the existence of such a relation and such a receipt of money or property as has jurisdiction to adjust and settle the accounts between them. Thornton v. Thornton, 31 Gratt. (Va.) 212. To same effect: Coffin v. Craig, 89 Minn. 226; Frethey v. Durant, 24 N. Y. App. Div. 58. See also, Colonial Mtg. Co. v. Hutchinson Mtg. Co., 44 Fed. 219; Phillipps v. Birmingham Industrial Co., 161 Ala. 509; Campbell v. Cook, 193 Mass. 251; Thatcher v. Hayes, 54 Mich. 184; Holthouse v. Poling, — Ind. App. —, 99 N. E. 810.

Where an agent is intrusted with money to invest, receive payments upon and reinvest, a trust relation exists, which entitles the principal to an account in equity. Dillman v. Hastings, 144 U. S. 136, 36 L. Ed. 378.

²⁰ A landowner may maintain a suit in equity against the agent and manager of his estates, if the object of such suit is either to obtain an account, (and in that case allegations of fraud or special circumstances are unnecessary); or to obtain the delivery up by the agent of documents in his hands belonging to the landowner. Makepeace v. Rogers, 4 DeGex, J. & S. 649.

²¹ Warren v. Holbrook, 95 Mich. 185, 35 Am. St. Rep. 544; Robson v. Sanders, 25 S. Car. 116; Decell v. Oil Mill Co., 83 Miss. 346.

²² A bill for an account by a principal against his agent is not necessary where the transaction to which it relates is a single transaction and fraud is not charged. Navulshaw v. Brownrigg, 2 DeGex, M. & G. 441.

A bill for an account, with demand for a discovery as incidental to and in aid of that relief, may be maintained by a principal against an agent to whom he has delivered goods for sale on commission, where the matter is complicated or the principal would be embarrassed in making out his proof in a court of law: Taylor v. Tompkins, 49 Tenn. (2 Heisk.) 89. See also Walker v. Spencer, 45 N. Y. Super. 71; Halsted v. Rabb, 8 Port. (Ala.) 63; Hofer v. Silberberg, 3 Vict. L. R. Eq. 125.

²³ Jordan v. Underhill, 91 N. Y. App. Div. 124; Frether v. Durant, 24 N. Y. App. Div. 58.

²⁴ See Wood v. Rowcliffe, 3 Hare, 304, 6 Hare, 183. In Phillipps v. Birmingham Industrial Co., 161 Ala. 509, a manager of a cotton plantation, in whose possession the accounts and contracts with share-tenants were, was made to account and to deliver over all documents belonging to the proprietor of the plantation.

will impose upon the agent the duty to account, is upon the principal.²⁵ When, however, this showing has been made, or when the agent voluntarily admits the receipt of the property or money, the burden of showing that he made a proper disposition of it, rests upon the agent.²⁶ In making this showing, moreover, the agent must be ready with vouchers and particulars; he cannot compel the principal to be satisfied with the agent's general statement, even under oath, that he knows he made a proper disposition of it, though he cannot give particulars.²⁷

Moreover, the agent's failure to keep correct accounts, in violation of his obvious duty, "authorizes," it is said,²⁸ "unfavorable inferences, and subjects him when called on for an account to a heavy burthen of suspicion as well as of proof." All the more so will this be true where it appears that the agent has destroyed such accounts as he had. The maxim, Omnia presumuntur contra spoliatores, applies in such a case.²⁹

§ 1345. Proof of amount due—Special method agreed upon—Conclusiveness of agent's accounts.—Under ordinary circumstances, the amount due from the agent must be shown as in any other case.

²⁵ Anderson v. First Nat. Bank, 4 N. D. 182; Harr v. Roome, 28 App. D. C. 214.

²⁶ Anderson v. First Nat. Bank, supra; Dodge v. Hatchett, 118 Ga. 883; Robson v. Sanders, 25 S. C. 116; Farmers' Warehouse Ass'n v. Montgomery, 92 Minn. 194; Laporte v. Laporte, 109 La. 958; Liesmer v. Burg, 106 Mich. 124; Carder v. Primm, 52 Mo. App. 102; Young v. Powell, 87 Mo. App. 128; Little v. Phipps, 208 Mass. 331, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1046.

In New York the contrary seems to be held. Thus in Breed v. Breed, 55 N. Y. App. Div. 121, it is said that there is not only a presumption that the agent has done his duty, but also that he has not committed embezzlement. (The mere fact however that the agent had not paid over the money, would not necessarily constitute embezzlement.) So in Beattie v. Beattie, 83 Hun (N. Y.), 295, aff'd in 153 N. Y. 652, the court takes the same position for substantially the same reason. So in Turner v. Kouwenhoven, 100 N. Y. 115, it is said that there is a presumption that the servant has performed his duty.

²⁷ Farmers' Warehouse Ass'n v. Montgomery, supra; Webb v. Fordyce, 55 Iowa, 11.

In Wolf Co. v. Salem, 33 Ill. App. 614 it is said: "The law is settled and is sustained by reason that the duty of an agent is not fulfilled in a case of this kind, by reporting to his principal that he has spent a round sum of money in prosecuting his employment, and then swearing to the fact in a suit to recover the sum. His duty to keep and preserve true and correct statements of accounts is a necessary consequence of his duty to account."

To like effect: Gladiator Mines Co. v. Steele, 132 Iowa, 446; Quirk v. Quirk, 155 Fed. 199; Webb v. Fordyce, 55 Iowa, 11. Compare also Davenport v. Schutt, 46 Ia. 510. See also, Clayton v. Patterson, 32 Ont. 435.

²⁸ Peterson v. Poignard, 47 Ky. 309. To same effect: Illinois Linen Co. v. Hough, 91 Ill. 63; Armour v. Gaffey, 30 N. Y. App. Div. 121.

²⁹ Armour v. Gaffey, supra.

³⁰ Where an insurance agent agreed that the actual condition of his accounts with the company should be ascertained and determined by an in-

It is entirely possible, however, for the parties to agree that the amount due shall be determined in a specified manner or by a particular person, and unless impeached for mistake or fraud, such a determination would ordinarily be conclusive.³⁰ Usually statements and accounts rendered by the agent would have no greater conclusiveness than other similar admissions, open to correction upon proof of mistake. But where the principal, in reasonable reliance upon the statement, has altered his situation in such wise that he will be prejudiced if the statement be not true, the agent may be estopped from contradicting it.³¹ A fortiori would this be true where the statement was made with the intention to deceive.

§ 1346. When liability barred by statute of limitations.—Statutes of limitation usually begin to operate only when a right of action has accrued. The determination therefore of the question when the statute begins to run against the principal depends usually upon the other question of the time when his right of action accrued. As has been seen, the general rule, subject to certain exceptions already noted which make demand unnecessary, is that the right of action does not accrue until a demand has been made with which the agent has refused or neglected to comply. It is therefore the general rule that the statute of limitations begins to operate upon a claim against an

spection of his reports, made by any person authorized by the company to make it, gave to such person full power to compute the sum due to the company as it appeared from such inspection, and agreed to ratify his computations, "waiving the production of any evidence other than such report and account," it was held, that, in the absence of fraud or mistake, the report of such person was conclusive Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Long, 65 Ill. App. 295.

To same effect: Owiter v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 4 N. Y. Misc. 543.

³¹ Where a real estate agent falsely reported to his principal that he had received from a purchaser a certain deposit on the purchase price, by which statement the principal was induced to ratify the sale, the agent is bound to the principal to make good his statement. Wood v. Blaney, 107 Cal. 291, following Meyers v.

Byars, 99 Ala. 484, where it was held that if an agent represents to his principal that he has money in his possession belonging to the latter, but says he will not pay it over until their conflicting claims have been adjudicated in court; and the principal thereupon brings suit for the recovery of the money, the agent is estopped from saying, that he did not, in fact, have it.

Where an agent to invest money has reported to his principal that he has made investments in certain mortgages, which were however fictitious, and has paid to his principal regularly what he asserted was the income therefrom (really paid out of the principal's money) until the agent's death, his estate is liable to the principal for the amount so reported as invested. Hartmann v. Schnugg, 113 App. Div. (N. Y.) 254, aff'd 188 N. Y. 617.

agent for money or property received by him, only from the time when he has rendered an account showing a balance due from him, or when a demand has been made upon him and he has refused or neglected to account,³² or when he owes a duty to account without a demand, as where it is the duty of a collecting agent, imposed expressly or by implication, to remit the money to his principal upon receipt.³³

³² Judah v. Dyott, 3 Blackf. (Ind.) 324, 25 Am. Dec. 112; Jett v. Hempstead, 25 Ark. 463; Whitehead v. Wells, 29 Ark. 99; Dodds v. Vannoy, 61 Ind. 89; Lynch v. Jennings, 43 Ind. 276; Green v. Williams, 21 Kan. 64; Perry v. Smith, 31 Kan. 423; Guernsey v. Davis, 67 Kan. 378; Taylor v. Spears, 8 Ark. 429; Hyman v. Gray, 4 Jones (N. Car.) L. 155; Merle v. Andrews, 4 Tex. 200; Baker v. Joseph, 16 Cal. 173; Lever v. Lever 1 Hill (S. Car.) Ch. 62; Roberts v. Armstrong, 1 Bush (Ky.), 263, 89 Am. Dec. 624; Voss v. Bachop, 5 Kan. 59; Egerton v. Logan, 81 N. Car. 172; Jayne v. Mickey, 55 Pa. 260; Baird v. Walker, 12 Barb. (N. Y.) 298; Halden v. Crafts, 4 E. D. Smith (N. Y.), 490; Sawyer v. Tappan, 14 N. H. 352; Hutchins v. Gilman, 9 N. H. 360; Taylor v. Bates, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 379; Hays v. Stone, 7 Hill (N. Y.), 128; Krause v. Dorrance, 10 Pa. 462, 51 Am. Dec. 496; Staples v. Staples, 4 Me. 532; Cole v. Baker, 16 S. D. 1; Ash v. Frank Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 142 S. W. 42; Knowles v. Rome Tribune Co., 127 Ga. 90.

The statute will in no event begin to run until the money has been received. Lawrence University v. Smith, 32 Wis. 587.

³³ As has been seen in a preceding section, an agent for collection may be required by the course of business or express or implied agreement, or the instruction of his principal to remit the money collected to his principal without waiting for a demand. In such cases it is held by many authorities that the statute of limitations begins to run from the time of the receipt of the money, and that the fact that the principal is not aware of the collection is immaterial where there has been no evasion or fraudulent concealment on the part of the agent. Thus in Campbell v. Roe, 32 Neb. 345, the court said: "While there are decisions sustaining both propositions, it seems to us that the rule which is based upon the soundest principles, is that where an agent is appointed to collect money and remit, after deducting his charges, no time being stated when the remittance is to be made, the statute commences to run from the time of the receipt of the money by the agent. The money is due the principal as soon as it is collected, and it is the duty of the agent to pay it over or remit at once. If he fails so to do, he is liable to an action. . . . As the money is due the principal as soon as received by the agent, we perceive no reason why the same rule as to the beginning of the running of the statute, should not govern as controls actions upon demand notes. It can make no difference that the defendant failed to inform the plaintiff of the receipt of the money, or that the plaintiff had no knowledge that it had been collected, until three years after the note had been paid. The ignorance of one's rights, when not occasioned by the fraud of the debtor, will not have the effect to prevent the running of the statute. The rule is universal that mere silence or concealment by the defendant, without affirmative misrepresentation will not toll the statute." [A marked distinction may, however, be made here. In the case of the demand note the obligation is fixed and the holder may make it due at any time by making a demand. In the case of the collection, no demand can § 1347. — The questions respecting demand before action against the agent, and demand to set the statute of limitations into operation, are not identical. The purpose of the law in the former case is to protect the agent against the imputations, troubles and expenses of an action where the agent is in nowise at fault, and before lawfully be made until the money has been received. It is not within the creditor's power to make it due by demand until the other party has done something, namely, collected the money. Who knows when that event has happened? The agent certainly is in a better situation to know than the principal in the ordinary case. Why should he not therefore be required to give notice of that fact? F. R. M.]

So in Mast v. Easton, 33 Minn. 161, it was said: "The decisions are conflicting as to the conditions under which a right of action exists in favor of a principal against his agent for the recovery of money collected by the latter, and as to the time when the statute of limitations commences to run with respect to such an action. But it may be stated that generally, when the case has been such that it has been considered that the duty had become fixed upon an agent to remit or pay money collected by him, a neglect to perform that duty has been held to render the agent liable to an action, and hence that the statute would then commence to run."

To same effect: Haebler v. Luttgen, 2 N. Y. App. Div. 390, aff'd 158 N. Y. 693; Stacey v. Graham, 14 N. Y. 492; Campbell v. Boggs, 48 Pa. 524; Rhines v. Evans, 66 Pa. 192; Guarantee Trust Co. v. Farmers' Nat. Bank, 202 Pa. 94; Jewell v. Jewell, 139 Mich. 578; Goodyear Rubber Co. v. Baker, 81 Vt. 39, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 667, 15 Ann. Cas. 1207.

In Hart's Appeal, 32 Conn. 520, it is said: "Prima facie, money received by one for the use of another is to be paid over without delay. Circumstances may indeed exist warranting the party in keeping it, either till demanded, as in case of deposits for safe keeping, or till some particular time, as in case of deposits depending on wagers or contingencies, or until instructions as to the mode of remittance, as in cases where the party is expected to remit and not pay the money in person."

Where the retention of money is a breach of contract merely and not fraud, failure to discover it will not prevent the running of the statute under the Iowa code. Brunson v. Bal-lou, 70 Iowa, 34.

So where an attorney in fact invested moneys in bonds instead of remitting to principal, as directed, it is not a fraudulent concealment that will stop the statute from running. Fleming v. Culbert, 46 Pa. 498.

In Douglas v. Corry, 46 Ohio St. 349, 15 Am. St. Rep. 604, it is held that, where there is no charge of misrepresentation or concealment, the statute begins to run in favor of an attorney who has made a collection, from the time of the collection, even though there has been no demand and, apparently, though the attorney has not given notice of the collection. "The holding that the statute does not begin to run until the attorney has given notice to his client of the collection of the money, because such is his duty, would seem to misconceive the reason and policy of the statute of limitations. It might with as much propriety be said that he could have protected himself by paying over the money, because that was as much his duty as to give notice of its receipt. The unreasonableness of the rule is not in any inconvenience that might attend compliance with it in the first instance, but in overlooking the difficulty that he has had opportunity to comply with an ordinary demand. The purpose of the statute of limitations in these cases is to protect the agent against the assertion of stale claims, but it ought not to be made the means of screening a guilty agent, by allowing him to set it up as a defense, where the agent's own fault furnishes the cause of action, and the principal had no knowledge or means of knowledge that such may be encountered, after the lapse of a great number of years, of proving that the notice was in fact given. This might be as difficult as to prove payment itself, if not more so." [Except in cases in which the principal knew or might have known that the money had been received, this reasoning does not seem conclusive. The giving of the notice in other cases is required so that the principal may know that he now has a matured claim upon the agent, and the agent ought not to have the benefit of the statute until his duty in that respect has been performed. If he suffers from loss of evidence that he has done so, it is because of a matter within his own control.] Goodyear Rubber Co. v. Baker, 81 Vt. 39, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 667, 15 Ann. Cas. 1207, applies the same rule in the absence of fraudulent concealment. See also, Lancaster v. Springer, 239 Ill. 472.

Fraudulent concealment immaterial. Ott v. Hood, 152 Wis. 97.

That agent, and particularly attorney, who has received claims for collection, is not liable to an action, and the statute does not begin to run until a demand and refusal: Taylor v. Spears, 6 Ark. 381, 44 Am. Dec. 519. s. c. 8 Ark. 429; Whitehead v. Wells, 29 Ark. 99; Jett v. Hempstead, 25 Ark. 462; Voss v. Bachop, 5 Kan. 59; Perry v. Smith, 31 Kan. 423; Roberts v. Armstrong, 64 Ky. (1 Bush) 263; Merle v. Andrews, 4 Tex. 200; Dodds v. Van Noy, 61 Ind. 89; Staples v. Staples, 4 Me. 532; Judah v. Dyott, 3 Blackf. (Ind.) 324, 25 Am. Dec. 112.

In Wilder v. Secor, 72 Iowa, 161, 2 Am. St. Rep. 236, an attorney having a claim against an estate for collection, availed himself of it in the settlement of his own accounts with the administrator. Held, that the statute does not begin to run against the client until he discovers the cause of action, or by the exercise of reasonable diligence, might have done so.

In Guernsey v. Davis, 67 Kan. 378, it was held that where an agent misappropriates money sent him for the purpose of making a loan, the statute does not begin to run until the principal has knowledge of the agent's wrong.

In McCoon v. Galbraith, 29 Pa. St. 293, defendant's law partner collected a claim given to the firm for collection, and kept the money. After the dissolution of the firm plaintiff inquired of defendant respecting his claim. He was told by Galbraith that he knew nothing of the matter but would investigate and report to the plaintiff. "Long before that his partner had collected the most of the claim and Galbraith is in law chargeable with a knowledge of this, and therefore he must be treated as not revealing it when called upon, but promising to do so, and not until then, at least, could the statute of limitations begin to run."

Aultman v. Adams, 35 Mo. App. 503, is similar in facts and holding.

In King v. Mackellar, 109 N. Y. 215, where an agent entrusted with funds to invest misappropriated them and concealed the fact from the principal, it was said: "Where a right of action exists but a demand is necessary to entitle a person to maintain an action, the time within which the action must be commenced must be computed from the time when the right to make the demand is complete, except . . . where the right a default had occurred. Where the agent has failed to give notice to the principal as was his duty, or where the agent has been guilty of some misapplication or misappropriation of money or property which the principal had no reason to anticipate or suspect, it sounds very ill in the agent's mouth to plead the statute of limitations against the principal, until after the principal has learned of the wrong. To allow this is to sacrifice the principal to the guilty agent. The agent does not stand upon the same footing as a stranger. He is a person relied upon. He owes a duty. He is not dealing at arm's length. He disarms the ordinary diligence and watchfulness of the principal by undertaking to protect his interests. Some distinctions might therefore be made where the statute will permit it.

Where the principal knows, or in the ordinary course of business might have known (as where there is payment or performance due at a particular time), there is no particular hardship; but where the agent misleads the principal, or conceals facts which it was his duty to disclose, or fails to give required information, the case is different.³⁴

So if a collecting agent has neglected to give his principal notice of the fact of the collection where notice is necessary in order that the latter may give him instructions as to the disposition of the money, he can not complain if the statute does not begin to run, unless he can show affirmatively that by the exercise of reasonable diligence the principal could have ascertained the fact of collection and made a demand accordingly.³⁵

§ 1348. — But while the law will protect the principal until knowledge, he cannot afterwards lie by and allow the matter to run on against the agent indefinitely. Hence upon receiving notice of the receipt of the money, it is the duty of the principal to demand grows out of the receipt or detention of money by a person acting in a fiduciary capacity, the time must be computed from the time when the person having the right to make the demand has actual knowledge of the facts upon which that right depends."

³⁴ In Perry v. Smith, 31 Kan. 423, an agent to sell property remitted less than he actually received as the proceeds. Held, that the statute of limitations did not begin to run until discovery by the principal of the agent's default.

In Morgan v. Tener, 83 Pa. 305, a claim which had been collected was reported by the agent as "uncollectible." Held, that the statute did not begin to run until the principal had discovered the fraud.

In Shuttleworth v. McGee, 47 Tex. Civ. App. 604, an agent to collect negligently allowed the claim to become barred by the statute and reported that suit was pending. In an action by principal against agent for damages, held, that the statute did not commence to run until the principal learned of the loss.

³⁵ Jett v. Hempstead, 25 Ark. 463; Whitehead v. Wells, 29 Ark. 99; Drexel v. Raimond, 23 Pa. 21. See Rhines v. Evans, 66 Pa. 192; Campbell v. Boggs, 48 Pa. 524.

it, or give instructions as to the disposition of it, within a reasonable time; and if he omits to do so, he will put the statute in motion, from the time of such receipt.³⁶

While there is a running account of continuous transactions, the statute will usually not begin to run until the matter is completed or the relation of principal and agent terminated.³⁷

§ 1349. Of the agent's right of set-off.—Where the principal proceeds in equity, allowances will usually be made in the same action for such compensation and reimbursement as the agent may be entitled to. When necessary the agent may resort to a cross-bill.³⁸

The right of set-off, recoupment and counter-claim in actions at law between principal and agent is governed ordinarily by the same rules that apply in other cases.³⁹ This right, however, may be waived by contract, express or implied, and it cannot be insisted upon where its enforcement would result in a violation of the agent's duty to his principal.⁴⁰ The receipt of money by an agent to be applied to a specific purpose, imposes upon him the duty not to apply it to another and different purpose. He cannot therefore apply it to his own use, by using as a set-off against it, a demand due him from his principal.⁴¹

Thus where the principal authorized his agent to collect certain rents, and apply them first to the payment of debts due to third persons and then to the payment of a debt due the agent, but the agent applied the whole amount upon his own debt, it was held, in an action by the principal to recover the amount collected, that the agent could ³⁶ Jett v. Hempstead, supra: Campbell v. Boggs, 48 Pa. 524; Schofield v. Woolley, 98 Ga. 548, 58 Am. St. Rep. 315.

In Ash v. Frank Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 142 S. W. 42, the agent was authorized to collect certain claims and to apply the proceeds to the payment of the principal's creditors. The agent effected a settlement with the creditors; of this the principal was informed by a creditor, whereupon principal immediately demanded an accounting; the agent's reply was sent in March, 1904, but was not received until May; in April, 1906, principal sued. Held, that principal had been reasonably diligent in discovering the agent's default so that the statute was not a bar.

³⁷ Estate of Ritchey, 8 Pa. Super. Ct. 527 (citing Campbell v. Boggs, 48 Pa. 524, Norris's Appeal 71 Pa. 106; McCain v. Peart, 145 Pa. 516; Johnston v. McCain, 145 Pa. 531); Knowles v. Rome Tribune Co., 127 Ga. 93; Teasley v. Bradley, 110 Ga. 497, 78 Am. St. Rep. 113.

³⁸ Hutchinson v. Van Voorhis, 54 N. J. Eq. 439.

³⁹ See Brown v. Gallandet, 80 N. Y. 413.

⁴⁰ Tagg v. Bowman, 108 Pa. 273, 56 Am. Rep. 204.

⁴¹ Tagg v. Bowman, supra; Tagg v. Bowman, 99 Pa. 376; Smuller v. Union Canal Co., 37 Pa. 68; Bank v. Macalester, 9 Pa. 475; Ardesco Oil Co. v. North American Co., 66 Pa. 375; Middletown, etc., Road v. Watson, 1 Rawle (Pa.), 330.

not set off the debt due to himself. The money collected by the agent, said the court, belonged to the principal, and as it came into the agent's hands, it was impressed with a trust in favor of the principal which required its application to the objects specified in their order. So long as there was anything due upon the preferred objects, the agent had no right to appropriate any of the money to the payment of his own claim. If he did so, it was a manifest breach of the trust under which it was received.⁴²

And the same principle applies wherever the agent has received money of his principal by virtue of any special authority. Thus an agent employed to collect a claim, when he has received the money, has no right to set off against it an antecedent debt or claim owing to him by the principal, without first showing that the latter has agreed that he might so apply it.⁴³

§ 1350. How far principal may follow trust funds.—It may be stated as a general principle that, wherever property or funds have come into the hands of the agent impressed with a trust in favor of the principal, such property or funds may be followed by the principal as long as they can be identified until they come into the possession of a bona fide purchaser for value without notice of the trust.⁴⁴ So if the property or funds have been disposed of or reinvested by the agent, the trust will in equity adhere to the proceeds in his hands in the same manner and to the same extent as to the original estate,— ⁴² Tagg v. Bowman, supra.

⁴³ Simpson v. Pinkerton, Penn. 10 W. N. C. 423; Middleton, etc., Road v. Watson, supra.

⁴⁴ Phelps v. Jackson, 31 Ark. 272; Atkinson v. Ward, 47 Ark. 523; Griffin v. Blanchard, 17 Cal. 70; Price v. Reeves, 38 Cal. 457; Scott v. Umbarger, 41 Cal. 410; Mercier v. Hemme, 50 Cal. 606; Sharp v. Goodwin, 51 Cal. 219; Boyd v. Brinckin, 55 Cal. 427; Dotterer v. Pike, 60 Ga. 29; Planters' Bank v. Prater, 64 Ga. 609; Pugh v. Pugh, 9 Ind. 132; Riehl v. Evansville Foundry Ass'n, 104 Ind. 70; Burnett v. Gustafson, 54 Iowa, 86; Peak v. Ellicott, 30 Kan. 158, 46 Am. Rep. 90; Third Nat. Bank v. Stillwater, 36 Minn. 75; Swinburne v. Swinburne, 28 N. Y. 568; Siemon v. Schurek, 29 N. Y. 598; Van Alen v. American National Bank, 52 N. Y. 1; Newton v. Porter, 69 N. Y. 133; Holden v. Bank, 72 N. Y. 286; Stephens v. Board of Education, 79 N. Y. 183; Baker v. New York Nat. Bank, 100 N. Y. 31, 53 Am. Rep. 150; Roca v. Byrne, 68 Hun (N. Y.), 502; s. c., 145 N. Y. 182, 45 Am. St. Rep. 599; Warren v. Union Bank, 157 N. Y. 259, 68 Am. St. Rep. 777, 43 L. R. A. 256; Farmers' & Mechanics' Bank v. King, 57 Pa. 202, 98 Am. Dec. 215; Farmers' & Traders' Bank v. Kimball, 1 S. D. 388, 36 Am. St. Rep. 739; Veile v. Blodgett, 49 Vt. 270; McLeod v. Evans, 66 Wis. 401, 57 Am. Rep. 287; Oliver v. Piatt, 44 U. S. (3 How.) 332, 11 L. Ed. 622; May v. Le Claire, 78 U. S. (11 Wall.) 217, 20 L. Ed. 50; Nat. Bank v. Ins. Co., 104 U. S. 54, 26 L. Ed. 693; Central Stock Exchange v. Bendinger, 48 C. C. A. 726, 109 Fed. 926, 56 L. R. A. 875.

In re District Bank, 11 Ch. D. 772; Knatchbull v. Hallett, 13 Ch. D. 696;

that is as long as they can be traced and until they are acquired by a bona fide purchaser without notice.⁴⁵ It does not matter that the legal title to the fund may have changed. Equity will follow it through any number of transmutations and preserve it for the owner so long as it can be identified.⁴⁶ And if it can not be identified by reason of being mingled with the funds or property of the agent, then the principal, though he may not be able to identify his fund specifically, will be entitled to a charge upon the whole mass to the extent that the trust fund is traceable into it, and has operated to enhance it. It is not necessary in such a case to trace the trust fund into any specific property. If it can be traced into the estate of the defaulting agent, and still remains there in whole or in part, it is sufficient to found a charge upon the whole to the extent of such enhancement.⁴⁷ Some Rolfe v. Gregory, 4 DeG. J. & S. 576; Leigh v. Macaulay, 1 Y. & C. Ex. 260; Smith v. Barnes, L. R. 1 Eq. 65; Boursot v. Savage, L. R. 2 Eq. 134; Newton v. Newton, L. R. 6 Eq. 135; Heath v. Crealock, L. R. 18 Eq. 215. Many other cases are cited in following notes.

⁴⁵ National Bank v. Insurance Co., 104 U. S. 54, 26 L. Ed. 693; Pennell v. Deffell, 4 DeG. M. & G. 372; Frith v. Cartland, 2 Hem. & M. 417; Taylor v. Plumer, 3 M. & S. 562; Knatchbull v. Hallett, 13 Ch. Div. 696, 36 Eng. Rep. 779; Atkinson v. Ward, 47 Ark. 533; Oliver v. Piatt, 44 U. S. (3 How.) 332, 11 L. Ed. 622; May v. Le Claire, 78 U. S. (11 Wall.) 217, 20 L. Ed. 50; Twohy Mercantile Co. v. Melbye, 78 Minn. 357.

⁴⁶ Farmers', etc., Bank v. King, 57 Pa. 202, 98 Am. Dec. 215; Atkinson v. Ward, supra; Third Nat. Bank v. Stillwater, 36 Minn. 75, Twohy Mercantile Co. v. Melbye, supra.

⁴⁷ See St. Louis Brew. Ass'n v. Austin, 100 Ala. 313; Bank of Florence v. U. S. Savings & Loan Co., 104 Ala. 297; Winston v. Miller, 139 Ala. 259; McClure v. LaPlata County, 19 Cal. 122; Holden v. Piper, 5 Cal. App. 71; but see following note; Ober v. Cochran, 118 Ga. 397; Woodhouse v. Crandall, 197 Ill. 104, 58 L. R. A. 385; Seiter v. Mowe, 182 Ill. 351; Lanterman v. Travous, 174 Ill. 459; Accident Ass'n v. Jacobs, 141 Ill. 261; Windstanley v. Second Nat. Bank, 13 Ind. App. 544; Independent District of Boyer v. King, 80 Iowa, 497; Jones v. Chesebrough, 105 Iowa, 303; Bradley v. Chesebrough, 111 Iowa, 126; Sioux City Stock Yards Co. v. Friebourg, 121 Iowa, 230, but see following note; Burrow v. Johntz, 57 Kan. 778; Travelers Ins. Co. v. Caldwell, 59 Kan. 156; Kansas Bank v. State Bank, 62 Kan. 788; Reeves v. Pierce, 64 Kan. 502, but see following note; Drovers' Bank v. Roller, 85 Md. 495, 60 Am. St. Rep. 344, 36 L. R. A. 767; Englar v. Offut, 70 Md. 78, 14 Am. St. Rep. 332; Little v. Chadwick, 151 Mass. 109, 7 L. R. A. 570; (compare Lowe v. Jones, 192 Mass. 94, 116 Am. St. R. 225, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 487, 7 Ann. Cas. 551; Hewitt v. Hayes, 205 Mass. 356, 137 Am. St. R. 448); Board of Commissioners v. Wilkinson, 119 Mich. 655, 44 L. R. A. 493; Sunderland v. Mescota Bank, 116 Mich. 281, but see following note; Bishop v. Mahoney, 70 Minn. 238; Shields v. Thomas, 71 Miss. 260, 42 Am. St. 458; Burcher v. Walther, 163 Mo. 461, but see following note; State v. Bank of Commerce, 54 Neb. 725, same case 61 Neb. 181, 52 L. R. A. 858; Morrison v. Lincoln Bank, 57 Neb. 225; Lincoln v. Morrison, 64 Neb. 822, but see note following; Ellicott v. Kuhl, 60 N. J. Eq. 333; Cavin v. Gleason, 105 N. Y.

cases have gone further and held that it is sufficient to trace the fund into the estate,⁴⁸ but the weight of modern authority is against them, and many of them have been overruled or limited in later cases in the same states.

In case of the bankruptcy of the agent, neither the property nor the money would pass to his assignees for general administration, but would be subject to the paramount claim of the principal.⁴⁹

The fact that the agent may be prosecuted criminally does not prevent the principal from following and recovering his money.⁵⁰ The 256; Matter of Hicks, 170 N. Y. 195; Elevator Co. v. Clark, 3 N. D. 26; Ferchen v. Arndt, 26 Ore. 121, 29 L. R. A. 664, 46 Am. St. 603; Muhlenberg v. Loan & Trust Co., 26 Ore. 132, 29 L. R. A. 667; Freiberg v. Stoddard, 161 Pa. 259; Lebanon v. Bank, 166 Pa. 622; Slater v. Oriental Mills, 18 R. I. 352; Continental Nat. Bank v. Weems, 69 Tex. 489, 5 Am. St. 85; Nonotuck Silk Co. v. Flanders, 87 Wis. 237, but see note following. State v. Foster, 5 Wyo. 199 at 215, 63 Am. St. Rep. 47, 29 L. R. A. 226; Metropolitan Nat. Bank v. Campbell, 77 Fed. 705; Spokane County v. First Nat. Bank, 68 Fed. 579.

⁴⁸ McLeod v. Evans, 66 Wis. 401, 57 Am. Rep. 287; Francis v. Evans, 69 Wis. 115; Bowers v. Evans, 71 Wis. 123 (all overruled in Nonotuck Silk Co. v. Flanders, 87 Wis. 237); Peak v. Ellicott, 30 Kan. 158, 46 Am. Rep. 90; Myers v. Board of Education, 51 Kan. 87, 37 Am. St. Rep. 263; Hubbard v. Irrigating Co., 53 Kan. 637. But see Burrows v. Johntz, 57 Kan. 778; Travelers' Insurance Co. v. Caldwell, 59 Kan. 156; Kansas Bank v. State Bank, 62 Kan. 788; Reeves v. Pierce, 64 Kan. 502; Davenport Plow Co. v. Lamp, 80 Iowa, 722, 20 Am. St. 442; (but see Independent District of Boyer v. King, 80 Iowa, 497; Jones v. Chesebrough, 105 Iowa, 303; Bradley v. Chesebrough, 111 Iowa, 126; Sioux City Stock Yards Co. v. Fribourg, 121 Iowa, 230); Wallace v. Stone, 107 Mich. 190. (But see Board of Commissioners v. Wilkinson, 119 Mich.

665, 44 L. R. A. 493); Harrison v. Smith, 83 Mo. 210, 53 Am. Rep. 571; Stoller v. Coates, 88 Mo. 514; Evangelical Synod v. Schoenich, 143 Mo. 652; Pundmann v. Schoenich, 144 Mo. 149; (but see Bircher v. Walther, 163 Mo. 461). In Colorado, Peak v. Ellicott, supra, and McLeod v. Evans, supra, have been cited with approval. First Nat. Bank v. Hummel, 14 Col. 259, 20 Am. St. Rep. 257, 8 L. R. A. 788. See also Hopkins v. Burr, 24 Col. 502, 65 Am. St. Rep. 238; Banks v. Rice, 8 Col. App. 217; (but compare McClure v. La Plata, 19 Col. 122; Holden v. Piper, 5 Col. App. 71); Griffin v. Chase, 36 Neb. 328; Capital Nat. Bank v. Coldwater Nat. Bank, 49 Neb. 786, 59 Am. St. Rep. 572; State v. Midland Bank, 52 Neb. 1. But see State v. Bank of Commerce, 54 Neb. 725; s. c. 61 Neb. 181, 52 L. R. A. 858; Morrison v. Lincoln Bank, 57 Neb. 225; Lincoln v. Morrison, 64 Neb. 822.

⁴⁹ Baker v. New York National Bank, 100 N. Y. 31, 53 Am. Rep. 150; McLeod v. Evans, 66 Wis. 401, 57 Am. Rep. 287; Peak v. Ellicott, 30 Kan. 158, 46 Am. Rep. 90; Chesterfield Mfg. Co. v. Dehon, 5 Pick. (Mass.) 7, 16 Am. Dec. 367; Merrill v. Bank of Norfolk, 19 Pick. (Mass.) 32; Thompson v. Perkins, 3 Mason (U. S. C. C.), 232; Duguid v. Edwards, 50 Barb. (N. Y.) 338; Harrison v. Smith, 83 Mo. 210; Stoller v. Coates, 88 Mo. 514; Thompson v. Gloucester City Sav. Inst. (N. J.) 8 Atl. Rep. 97, and cases in preceding notes.

⁵⁰ Riehl v. Evansville Foundry

principal cannot, of course, both compel payment from the agent of the amount misappropriated, and also have a decree investing him with the title to the property acquired with it by the agent, but he may have a judgment against the agent for the amount of the trust money, less the sum so recovered.⁵¹

It is obvious, of course, as has been pointed out in many of the cases cited in this section, that the rights herein considered, can arise only when a trust relation existed between the parties; if the relation was merely that of debtor and creditor, no such considerations are involved.⁵²

§ 1351. Conclusiveness of account—Failure to object—Account stated.—When the agent has rendered an account to his principal, it is open to the latter to object either to the fullness or the accuracy of the account; or, on the other hand, to agree to it as a full and accurate account of the agent's transactions. If he expressly agrees to it, the account will then have ordinarily all the characteristics of an account stated. But it is not necessary that the principal's acquiescence shall be express; it may be implied from the facts and circumstances as in other cases. The essential thing is, that the facts and circumstances relied upon, as constituting acquiescence, must be such as reasonably lead to the inference that the principal assents to the account as correct.⁵³

Ass'n, 104 Ind. 70, disapproving Campbell v. Drake, 4 Fred. (N. C.) Eq. 94, and Pascoag Bank v. Hunt, 3 Edw. (N. Y.) Ch. 583.

⁵¹ Riehl v. Evansville Foundry Ass'n, supra; Barker v. Barker, 14 Wis. 131; Murray v. Lydburn, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) Ch. 441; Chapman v. Hughes, 134 Cal. 641.

⁵² See Aetna Powder Co. v. Hildebrand, 137 Ind. 462, 45 Am. St. Rep. 194; Ex parte White, 6 Ch. App. 397; Nutter v. Wheeler, 2 Low. 346, Fed. Cas. No. 10,384; In re Linforth, 4 Saw. 370, Fed. Cas. No. 8,369.

In New Zealand Land Co. v. Watson, 7 Q. B. Div. 374, the doctrine of following trust funds was held not applicable in an action by the principal against subagents who stood in no privity to him, and who had received the goods for sale from the agent, against whom the sub-agents had a balance of account on dealings which involved the principal's goods as well as those of other persons.

In La Marchant v. Moore, 150 N. Y. 209, plaintiffs ordered their agents, (with whom they had a sufficient credit) to buy certain stock for them. The agents ordered defendants who were their correspondents, and with whom they had some but not sufficient credit, to buy the stock on the agents' account not disclosing plaintiffs' interest. Defendants bought and paid for the stock, but retained possession to secure them for the balance due from the agents. The agents notified the plaintiffs that they had bought the stock as directed and charged it to their account. Later the agents failed. Held, that plaintiffs' claim to the stock is subject to defendants' claim for the unpaid balance.

⁵³ In Quincey v. White, 63 N. Y. 370, it was said that to give an ac-

If an agent, as for example, a factor or commission merchant, renders to his principal an account of his transactions, the principal must, in general, if he would object to it, do so within a reasonable time, and if he does not, the agent is justified in treating the principal's silence as an admission by the principal "that the account as rendered was just and true and that he was willing to be bound by it."⁵⁴ The question of what is a reasonable time, in this case as in others, is usually a question of fact, to be determined by the jury,⁵⁵ but where only one inference could be drawn from the facts, it may be determined by the court.⁵⁶

§ 1352. — Reopening account—Impeachment for fraud or mistake.—When once an account has taken on the form of an account stated, courts are very reluctant, especially in cases between ordinary debtor and creditor, to allow it to be reopened;⁵⁷ and this reluctance increases rapidly with the lapse of time.⁵⁸ Nevertheless count delivered the force of an account stated, because of the silence of the party receiving it, the circumstances must be such as to justify an inference of assent to it. If he has disclaimed all liability on the account, his silence will not be deemed prima facie proof of acquiescence, and he is not bound to examine its items. Woodward v. Suydam, 11 Ohio, 361.

⁵⁴ Austin v. Ricker, 61 N. H. 97; Knickerbocker v. Gould, 115 N. Y. 533; Langdon v. Roane, 6 Ala. 518, 41 Am. Dec. 60; Burns v. Campbell, 71 Ala. 271; Mayberry v. Cook, 121 Cal. 588; Flower v. O'Bannon, 43 La. Ann. 1042; Allen v. Nettles, 39 La. Ann. 788; McCord v. Manson, 17 Ill. App. 118; Hall v. Sloan, 9 Phila. (Pa.) 138; Everingham v. Halsey, 108 Iowa, 709; Allen-West Commission Co. v. Patillo, 90 Fed. 628, 33 C. C. A. 194; Eichel v. Sawyer, 44 Fed. 845; Wiggins v. Burkham, 10 Wall. (U. S.) 129, 19 L. Ed. 884; Powell v. Pacific Railroad, 65 Mo. 658; Darley v. Last-rapes, 28 La. Ann. 605; Lockwood v. Thorne, 11 N. Y. 170, 62 Am. Dec. 81; s. c., 18 N. Y. 285; Woodward v. Suydam, 11 Ohio, 361; Benan v. Cullen, 7 Pa. St. 281.

Where a factor has sent to his principal accounts of two different sales of the same goods, and the principal approves the first account, he is not bound to object to second account at the peril of its being taken as a stated account, binding on him. Cartwright v. Greene, 47 Barbour (N. Y.) 9.

⁵⁵ Austin v. Ricker, 61 N. H. 97; Wiggins v. Burkham, 10 Wall. (U. S.) 129, 19 L. Ed. 884; Darby v. Last-rapes, 28 La. Ann. 605; Lockwood v. Thorne, 18 N. Y. 285, 62 Am. Dec. 81.

⁵⁶ Allen-West Commission Co. v. Patillo, 90 Fed. 628, 33 C. C. A. 194; Hall v. Sloan, 9 Phila. (Pa.) 138; Knickerbocker v. Gould, 115 N. Y. 533; Langdon v. Roane, 6 Ala. 518, 41 Am. Dec. 60; Eichel v. Sawyer, 44 Fed. 845; Freedland v. Heron, 7 Cranch (U. S. Sup. Ct.) 146, 3 L. Ed. 297; Wiggins v. Burkham, 10 Wall. (U. S.) 129, 19 L. Ed. 884; Rich v. Eldredge, 42 N. H. 153; Lockwood v. Thorne, 11 N. Y. 170, 62 Am. Dec. 81.

⁵⁷ Chappedelaine v. Dechenaux, 8 U. S. (4 Cranch) 305, 2 L. Ed. 629; Kilpatrick v. Henson, 81 Ala. 464; Stevens v. Board of Supervisors, 62 Mich. 579; Hart v. Gould, 62 Mich. 262.

⁵⁸ Chappedelaine v. Dechenaux, supra; Horan v. Long, 11 Tex. 230;

even as between such parties an account may often be impeached for mistake or fraud;⁵⁹ though the party seeking to do so must come with clear and definite allegations and not rely merely on vague and general charges.⁶⁰

These rules in general apply to the principal and his agent, though where the parties thus occupy a fiduciary relation somewhat more liberal rules apply as to the amount of proof required. Thus it was said by Jessel, M. R., "when the account is between persons in a fiduciary relation, and the person who occupies the position of accounting party—that is, the trustee or agent—is the defendant, it is easier to open the account than it is in cases where persons do not occupy that position—that is to say, that a less amount of error will justify the court in opening the account."⁶¹

Moreover, the presumption of acquiescence, based upon the principal's failure to object to the account, presupposes that the principal has not been kept in ignorance of material facts through the acts or default of the agent. As stated in one case, that presumption "can have no application to dealings between principal and agent, where the agent misstates an account in a respect peculiarly within his own knowledge, and which misstatement cannot be discovered by an inspection of the account or by any other means possessed by the principal."⁶²

VI.

TO GIVE NOTICE TO PRINCIPAL OF MATERIAL FACTS.

§ 1353. Duty of agent to give principal notice of facts material to agency.—It is the duty of the agent to give to his principal reasonable and timely notice of every fact relating to the subject-matter of the agency, coming to the knowledge of the agent while acting as Pratt v. Weyman, 1 S. C. Eq. (McCord) 89.

⁵⁹ Chappedelaine v. Dechenaux, supra; Kilpatrick v. Henson, supra; Stevens v. Board of Supervisors, 62 Mich. 579; Vanderveer v. Statesir, 39 N. J. L. 593.

⁶⁰ Chappedelaine v. Decheneaux, supra; Kilpatrick v. Henson, supra; Pratt v. Weyman, 1 S. C. Eq. (McCord) 89; Conlin v. Carter, 93 Ill. 536; Langdon v. Roane, 6 Ala. 518, 41 Am. Dec. 60.

⁶¹ Williamson v. Barbour, 9 Ch. Div. 529. See also Gruby v. Smith, 13 Ill. App. 43; Farnam v. Brooks, 9

Pick. (Mass.) 212; Hopkinson v. Jones, 28 Ill. App. 409; Stearns v. Page, 48 U. S. 818.

The case for re-opening is much stronger when to confidential relations there are added charges of fraud or undue influence exercised by the agent. Rembert v. Brown, 17 Ala. 667.

⁶² Gale v. New York Hay Co., 54 N. Y. App. Div. 72. See also Michoud v. Girod, 45 U. S. (4 How.) 503, 11 L. Ed. 1076; Raht v. Union Mining Co., 5 Lea (Tenn.) 1.

Where the principal in ignorance of the fraud makes a settlement, and such, and which it may fairly be deemed material for the principal to know for the protection or preservation of his interests.⁶³

This duty may take on a variety of forms. As has been already seen, the duty of loyalty to his principal may require that the agent shall disclose to his principal the existence of adverse interests, either in the agent or in others whom he represents, which are inconsistent with the full and fair performance by the agent of his duty to his principal.⁶⁴

So a duty to exercise care, or to obey instructions, may require that the agent shall notify the principal of dangers affecting his interests, or of the inability of the agent to accomplish the results, take the precautions, or pursue the methods contemplated by the principal at the time the service was undertaken, so that the principal may take steps for the protection of his interests, or give new directions in view of the new conditions.⁶⁵

Thus, if property of the principal in the agent's possession is attached⁶⁶ or seized⁶⁷ as the property of another, or if it is exposed to danger, or if, having undertaken to insure it, he finds himself unable to do so,⁶⁸ or if claims and demands in his hands to receive payment are not paid when due;⁶⁹ in these and other similar cases, which will readily suggest themselves, it is the duty of the agent to give his principal notice that he may take such steps as he deems desirable for his protection, and if the agent fails in the performance of this duty to the injury of the principal, he must respond to the latter in damages for the loss naturally and proximately resulting from such failure.⁷⁰

As will be seen hereafter, the existence of this duty, coupled with a conclusive presumption that it has been duly performed, is often made the bases of the rule that notice to the agent of facts material to his agency shall be deemed to be constructive notice to the principal.⁷¹ enters into a new contract with the agent the settlement is void and the principal may recover the money paid without obtaining a formal rescission of the settlement. Hindle v. Holcomb, 34 Wash. 336.

⁶³ Arrott v. Brown, 6 Whart. (Penn.) 9; Harvey v. Turner, 4 Rawle (Penn.), 223; Moore v. Thompson, 9 Phila. 164; Devall v. Burbridge, 4 Watts & Serg. (Penn.) 305; Hegenmyer v. Marks, 37 Minn. 6, 5 Am. St. Rep. 808; Emerson v. Turner, 95 Ark. 597; Dorr v. Camden, 55 W. Va. 226, 65 L. R. A. 348.

⁶⁴ See ante. § 1207.

⁶⁵ See ante. §§ 1264, 1298, 1307.

⁶⁶ Moore v. Thompson, supra.

⁶⁷ Devall v. Burbridge, supra.

⁶⁸ Callander v. Oelrichs, 5 Bing. N. C. 58.

⁶⁹ Harvey v. Turner, supra; Arrott v. Brown, supra.

⁷⁰ But the principal cannot recover substantial damages without proof of such a loss. Emerson v. Turner, supra.

⁷¹ See post. Book IV, Chap. V, Notice to an Agent.

CHAPTER III

THE DUTIES AND LIABILITIES OF THE AGENT TO THIRD PERSONS

§ 1354. Purpose of this chapter.

A. PRIVATE AGENTS.

1355. How subject divided.

I. IN CONTRACT.

1356. In general.

1357. Agent not personally liable upon authorized contract made in principal's name.

1358. Liability of agent as here discussed assumes that agent is of normal legal capacity.

1. Where he acts without authority.

1359-1361. In general.

A. Assuming to act for a disclosed principal.

1362. Theories of liability.

1363. Deceit—Warranty of authority.

1364. Agreement to indemnify.

1365. Objections—A fiction—Conflict with Derry v. Peek.

1366. Liability not based on theory of agent's actual wrong.

1367. Liability based on representations of matters of fact only.

1368. Doctrine not confined to the making of contracts.

1369. How where other party knows or agent discloses all the facts relating to his authority.

1370. Where agent disclaims present authority.

1371. How in case of public agent.

1372. To whom the liability extends.

1373. Application of these rules.

1374. I. Where authority never conferred.

1375. II. Where authority once existing has terminated.

1376, 1377. — Authority terminated by act of principal.

1378, 1379. — Authority terminated by death of principal.

1380. — Authority terminated by principal's insanity.

1381. — Authority terminated by other events.

1382. — Authority terminated by act of agent.

1383. III. Where no principal in existence—Inchoate corporations—Promoters.

1384. — Provisional arrangements with promoters.

1385. — Principal dead at time authority supposed to be conferred.

1386. IV. Where principal in existence but principal had not the authority to confer—Ultra vires acts—Liability of corporate directors and agents.

1387. — Where principal temporarily forbidden to act.

1388. — Where principal's insolvency destroys his legal status.

1389. — When no legally responsible principal—Unincorporated associations.

1390. — Meetings, committees, etc.

1391. Legal competency of an existing principal.

1392. — Infant principals.

1393. — Married woman.

1394. — Where principal insane at time authority was supposed to be conferred.
- 1395, 1396. When agent liable on the contract itself.
1397. — Agent not liable merely because principal is not.
1398. In what form of action is agent liable.
1399. Burden of proof.
1400. The measure of damages.
1401. — To give damages for loss of a particular contract, it must have been one of value against principal if authorized.
1402. Effect of ratification.
1403. Where a nominal agent is the real principal.
- B. Assuming to act for an undisclosed principal.
1404. Liability of pretended agent.
2. Where, though authorized to bind his principal, he binds himself or no one.
1405. In general.
1406. Authorized agent contracting in name of principal incurs no personal liability.
1407. Where agent intending to bind principal, binds no one.
1408. Where agent intending to bind principal, inadvertently uses apt words to bind himself.
1409. — Reformation of contract to release agent.
1410. Where agent conceals fact of agency or name of principal.
1411. — Disclosing fact of agency, but concealing identity of principal.
1412. — Identity of principal sufficiently disclosed—What terms sufficiently exclude personal liability—Liability by custom.
1413. — Burden on agent to disclose principal.
1414. — Disclose when.
1415. — Agent liable although principal might also be held.
1416. — Dealing with agent must have resulted in contract, etc.
1417. Where agent acts for a foreign principal.
1418. Where there is no responsible principal.
- 1419–1421. Where agent pledges his own responsibility.
1422. — How determined.
1423. — What facts not conclusive.
1424. — Principal also may be bound—Election.
1425. — Agent alone liable on negotiable and sealed instruments.
1426. Agent may be jointly liable with principal.
1427. Agent may bind himself by collateral contract.
1428. How in case of public agent.
1429. Agent's right of set off and recoupment.
3. Where the agent has received money.
1430. In general.
- a. Where money has been paid to agent for principal.
1431. No liability where money properly paid to which principal was entitled.
- 1432, 1433. Liability for money paid to him by mistake.
1434. Liability for money received by him through wrongful act of principal alone.
1435. — Change in agent's situation as equivalent of payment.
- 1436–1438. Liability where principal's right terminated after payment.
1439. Agent liable for money mispaid though paid over, if agency was not known.

1440. Agent liable without notice for money illegally obtained.

1441. Agent liable without notice for money obtained through his misconduct.

1442. Agent liable where money is proceeds of act which principal could not lawfully authorize.

1443. Agent liable for money received without authority and not paid over to the principal.

1444. Agent personally liable for return of deposits where he has pledged his own responsibility.

1445. Where agent is a mere stakeholder.

1446. Agent for undisclosed principal liable for returnable deposit.

b. Where money has been paid to agent for third person.

1447. Where agent's liability to such third person attaches —Revocation by principal.

1448. — What constitutes assent —Consideration.

1449. Action at law by beneficiary against agent.

1450. — Trusts for the benefit of third persons.

II. IN TORT.

1451. In general.

1452. Agency usually no defense in tort cases.

1453. Agent liable for negligent acts outside the scope of his agency.

1454. When agent ostensible principal.

1455. Liability of agent for trespass.

1456. — Principal's knowledge or direction no defense.

1457. Liability of agent for conversion.

1458. Agent's liability for fraud, misrepresentation or deceit.

1459. Agent's liability for his wilful or malicious acts.

1460, 1461. Agent liable to third persons for negligent injuries committed by him while acting in performance of agency.

1462. Agent must have been an actor, not a mere automaton.

1463. — Mere intermediate agent not liable.

1464. Agent's liability for negligent omissions—Misfeasance—Nonfeasance.

1465. — Certain rules quoted.

1466, 1467. Attempted distinction between misfeasance and nonfeasance.

1468-1470. — Further of this distinction.

1471-1473. — Effect of beginning performance.

1474. Agent liable for condition of premises over which he has control.

1475. — Agent must be responsible.

1476. — Duration of liability.

1477, 1478. — Other cases involving the same principal.

1479-1481. Cases in which agent held not liable.

1482. Agent not liable in tort to third persons for breach of principal's contract with them.

1483. Liability of servant or agent to fellow servant or agent.

1484. No liability for negligence of fellow agent or servant.

1485. Liability in respect to sub-agents.

1486. — Agent who conceals principal liable as principal to subagent.

1487. Jonder of agent and principal in same action.

B. PUBLIC AGENTS.

§ 1488. What here included.

I. LIABILITY FOR THEIR CONTRACTS.

1489. Already considered.

LIABILITY FOR THEIR OWN TORTS.

1490. In general—Classification.

1491. No action by individual for breach of duty owing solely to the public.

1492. Liability for wrongs committed in private capacity.

1. Superior Governmental Officers.

1493. Not usually subject to private action.

2. Judicial Officers.

1494. Judicial officers not liable when acting within their jurisdiction.

1495. Liability not affected by motive.

1496. This immunity extends to judicial officers of all grades.

3. Quasi-judicial Officers.

1497. Quasi-judicial officer exempt from civil liability for his official actions.

1498. Illustration.

1499. Liability not affected by motive.

4. Legislative Officers.

1500. Same immunity extends to legislative action.

5. Ministerial Officers.

1501. In general—Liable to party specially injured.

III. LIABILITY FOR THE TORTS OF THEIR OFFICIAL SUBORDINATES.

1502. Public officer of government not liable for acts of his official subordinate.

1503. To what officers this rule applies—Post officers.

1504. — Public trustees and commissioners.

1505. — Not to ministerial officers.

IV. LIABILITY FOR TORTS OF THEIR PRIVATE SERVANTS OR AGENTS.

1506. Liable for torts of private servant or agent.

§ 1354. Purpose of this chapter.—Attention may next be directed to the question, what, if any, are the duties and liabilities of the agent to third persons. In some respects, as will be seen, the problem may depend upon whether the agent in question was a public or a private one. This work, in general, deals only with the latter, though occasional references are made to the former. By reason of this fact, the case of the private agent will be considered first.

A. PRIVATE AGENTS.

§ 1355. How subject divided.—In accordance with a familiar classification, the question of the liability of the private agent to third persons will be considered: I. In Contract. II. In Tort.

I.

IN CONTRACT.

§ 1356. In general.—When the matter of the personal liability of an agent upon or growing out of contracts made by him for his principal is suggested, the question not infrequently arises, Why should he be liable at all? Naturally and normally it would seem that there is no room for such a liability. And if a person, who so assumes to act, does so only when he has adequate authority, and if, in acting, he confines himself within the scope of that authority, and makes the contract or does the act,—as is ordinarily his duty,—only in the name and on the account of his principal, he would incur no personal liability.

As matter of fact, however, cases constantly arise wherein some or all of these qualifications have been ignored. Thus it may happen that one person may assume to act as agent for another, when he has in fact no authority from that other so to act. Or it may happen, that, though having adequate authority to act, he yet intentionally or unintentionally so acts as not to bind his principal at all, but to pledge his own personal responsibility.

§ 1357. Agent not personally liable upon authorized contract made in principal's name.—Before proceeding to consider the cases in which the agent may be liable, it is worth while to recall to mind the general rule of normal agency, which is that, where a contract is made by an authorized agent in the name and on the account of a competent principal, the agent incurs no liability upon or with reference to the contract.¹ The agent does not guarantee that his principal will perform the contract or that he can perform it. Neither does he guarantee the honesty, solvency or good faith of his principal, nor the legal sufficiency or validity of the contract. The agent is merely the means of making for his principal the contract itself. All matters respecting its validity or effect, and all questions respecting its performance lie ordinarily beyond the range of the agent's undertaking. If the agent is liable, it must be because of the abnormality of the situation, or of some personal undertaking which the agent assumes. The same rule applies, of course, to the collateral promises, representations, undertakings and other acts of the agent made in good faith, in the name of his principal, and within the scope of the agent's authority. They bind the principal and not the agent personally,

¹ Pyle v. Booz, 10 Ga. App. 760; Siler v. Perkins, — Tenn. —, 149 S. W. 1060.

§ 1358. Liability of agent as here discussed assumes that agent is of normal legal capacity.—It is also to be kept in mind that the discussion which follows, respecting the liability of the agent to third persons in contract, presupposes that the agent is of normal legal capacity and competent to assume contractual obligations. If the agent be an infant, an insane person, a married woman under common law disabilities, a corporation acting ultra vires, and the like, that fact might furnish a complete answer to a liability which the law would otherwise attach.²

1. Where he Acts without Authority.

§ 1359. In general.—The question of the liability of the agent to third persons in contract for acts done or contracts made or attempted to be made by him as agent, but without authority, presents many phases.

Thus this absence or want of authority in any given case may result either, 1. Because the agent never possessed it; 2. Because once having it, it has since expired, or 3. Because while having some authority, or authority to perform this act in another way, he has exceeded his authority, or failed to observe the methods prescribed for him.

The reason why the agent never possessed the authority he assumed to exercise, may be simply and solely that the assumed principal never conferred or intended to confer it; or though he intended to confer it, he failed to do so in a legal and effective manner. It may be because there never was such a principal, or though once existent, he had ceased to exist at the time the authority was supposed to have been conferred. It may be because he never had legal capacity, or because though once having capacity, that capacity had ceased to exist at the time the authority was supposed to have been conferred.

The reason why, though once having had authority, it has ceased to exist, may be the happening of one of the many events or changes in the character, condition or status of the parties, such as war, death, insanity, bankruptcy, marriage and the like, which may operate to terminate, modify, or suspend an existing authority, or that the principal has expressly revoked, or the agent has renounced, the authority.

§ 1360. — So the question of the agent's knowledge of the existence of his authority and his manner of representing its existence, may present a variety of phases.

² Thus in Jemison v. Citizens' Savings Bank, 122 N. Y. 135, 19 Am. St. 482 9 L. R. A. 708, it was held that a bank could not be liable as agent of an undisclosed principal upon an act ultra vires of the bank.

Thus an agent in dealing with third persons may make an express assertion of his authority to perform the act in question, (a) knowing at the time that he has no such authority; or (b) believing in good faith, though erroneously, that he has such authority. So under the same circumstances, he may deal with third persons making no express assertion of authority, but that only, if any, which arises from his assuming to act as agent, and as before, either knowing that he has not the requisite authority, or believing in good faith, but erroneously, that he is competent.

Or, again, believing himself to be or not to be authorized, but the question not being free from doubt, he may fully and fairly disclose to the other party the facts in regard to his authority and leave the other party to determine for himself whether he will rely upon it or not.

§ 1361. — Still further with respect of the principal for whom the agent purports to act; that principal may be either disclosed or undisclosed. That is to say, the pretended agent may assume to act for a certain principal, naming him, or he may assume to act for a principal without disclosing who he is. The former case is much the more common; it presents questions which do not arise in the other and will be first considered.

A. Assuming to Act for a Disclosed Principal.

§ 1362. Theories of liability.—Where a person has assumed as agent to make a contract with another on behalf of a certain principal, but without authority, or has induced the other to do some act or change his position so that he will be prejudiced if authority did not exist, the question at once arises, Upon whom should responsibility for the loss of the contract, or for the consequences of the unauthorized change of position, fall? The assumed principal is, by the hypothesis, not bound, and the loss must fall either upon the third person who has dealt with the agent, or upon the agent who has induced him to act. As between these parties, it might be urged that it was the duty of the other party before dealing with the agent to ascertain his authority, and that if he failed to do so, he should be deemed, even as between himself and the pretended agent, to have assumed the risk. However true this might be as between the principal and third persons, it is ordinarily more consistent with legal principles to hold as between the agent and the other party, that, where the agent has induced action, in reliance upon express or implied representations of authority, the agent and not the other party should assume the risk. Of these two, the agent is the one who takes the initiative; he is usually in the better situation to know of the existence of the authority, and where he undertakes, either expressly or by implication, to induce action, in reliance upon its existence, he would seem to be the party upon whom the risk of its non-existence should fall.

§ 1363. Deceit—Warranty of authority.—Where at the time of making such a representation of authority, the agent knows that it does not exist, but nevertheless misleads the other to his detriment, the case presents the ordinary aspects of deceit.

Where, however, the assumed agent has acted in good faith, believing that the authority which he assumed to exercise in fact existed, the case is not so clear. The case does not now—at least where the doctrine of Derry v. Peek prevails—present the necessary aspects of deceit. Nevertheless, in this case also, it is thought that the agent should bear the risk. Thus in the leading case of Collen v. Wright,³ it was said by Willes, J.: “I am of opinion that a person, who induces another to contract with him as the agent of a third party by an unqualified assertion of his being authorized to act as such agent, is answerable to the person who so contracts for any damages which he may sustain by reason of the assertion of authority being untrue. This is not the case of a bare misstatement by a person not bound by any duty to give information. The fact that the professed agent honestly thinks that he has authority affects the moral character of his act; but his moral innocence, so far as the person whom he has induced to contract is concerned, in no way aids such person or alleviates the inconvenience and damage which he sustains. The obligation arising in such a case is well expressed by saying that a person, professing to contract as agent for another, impliedly, if not expressly, undertakes to or promises the person who enters into such contract, upon the faith of the professed agent being duly authorized, that the authority which he professes to have does in point of fact exist. The fact of entering into the transaction with the professed agent, as such, is good consideration for the promise.”⁴

The same rule has subsequently been stated in many different ways, and among others, by Brett, L. J., as follows: “That where a person either expressly or by his conduct invites another to negotiate with him upon the assertion that he is filling a certain character, and a contract is entered into upon that footing, he is liable to an action if he does not fill that character; but the liability arises not from the misrepresentation alone, but from the invitation to act and from the acting in consequence of that invitation.”⁴

³ Collen v. Wright, 8 El. & Bl. 647.

⁴ Oliver v. Bank of England, [1902] 21 Ch. 610. See also Blower v. Van Noorden, [1909] Transv. L. R. (S. C.) 890; Rederi Aktiebolaget Nordstjeran v. Salvesen, 6 Ct. Sess. Cas. (5th

§ 1364. Agreement to indemnify.—It is usually said, in cases of this nature, as is seen in the preceding sections that the undertaking imputed to the assumed agent is one of warranty of the existence of his authority; but it may well take the form of an undertaking to indemnify the other party against the consequences of the lack of authority. Thus in one of the most recent and important of these cases,⁵ a case wherein it was sought to hold the defendant responsible for inducing the plaintiff corporation to transfer shares in reliance upon a forged deed of transfer, it was said by Lord Davey in the English House of Lords, "Lastly * * * it was said * * * that this is not an action on a warranty, and that a warranty and a contract of indemnity are distinct, one important difference being the period from which the statute of limitations would run. That, of course, is so, and the appellants admit that if they were suing on the warranty their action would be out of time. But I can see no legal reason why, in circumstances like those of the present case, it should not be held, if necessary, that the true contract to be implied from those circumstances is not only a warranty of the title, but also an agreement to keep the person in the position of the appellants indemnified against any loss resulting to them from the transaction. And I think that justice requires that we should so hold. I agree with the Lord Chief Justice that, as between these two innocent parties, the loss should be borne by the respondents who caused the appellants to act upon an instrument which turned out to be invalid."

§ 1365. Objections—A fiction—Conflict with Derry v. Peek.—This doctrine of an implied warranty of authority did not become established without dissent. Thus Cockburn, C. J., in Collen v. Wright,⁶ protested against it as a remedy introduced "by the mere fiat of a judicial decree." It has been urged also that it is in conflict with the rule that no action at law lies for an innocent misrepresentation. To this objection Lord Bramwell in one case⁷ replied as follows: "The general rule of law is clear that no action is maintainable for a mere statement, although untrue, and although acted on to the damage of the person to whom it is made, unless that statement is false to the knowledge of the person making it. This general rule is admitted by ser.) 64; Maneer v. Sanford, 15 Manitoba, 181; Russell v. Koonce, 104 N. C. 237.

⁵ Sheffield Corporation v. Barclay, [1905] App. Cas. 392. Same effect, Bank of England v. Cutler, [1908] 2 K. B. 208.

⁶ Collen v. Wright, 7 E. & B. 301; 26 L. J. (Q. B.) 147; in Exch. Ch. 8 E. & B. 647, 27 L. J. (Q. B.) 215. See also 18 Law Quarterly Review, 364.

the plaintiff's counsel, and prima facie includes the present case. But then it is urged that the decision in Collen v. Wright has shown that there is an exception to that general rule, and it is contended that this case comes within the principle of that exception. I do not think that Collen v. Wright, properly understood, shows that there is an exception to that general rule. Collen v. Wright establishes a separate and independent rule, which, without using language rigorously accurate, may be thus stated: if a person requests and, by asserting that he is clothed with the necessary authority, induces another to enter into a negotiation with himself and a transaction with the person whose authority he represents that he has, in that case there is a contract by him that he has the authority of the person with whom he requests the other to enter into the transaction."

The doctrine of Collen v. Wright has also been alleged to be in conflict with that of Derry v. Peek.⁸ To this objection, Lord Halsbury in a recent case⁹ replied as follows: "I have not the least notion how that state of the law is supposed to have been shaken by the decision in Derry v. Peek. We have more than once been informed that Derry v. Peek is supposed to have altered the law. I do not think Derry v. Peek has anything to do with it. Derry v. Peek was an action for deceit, and this house held that where it was an action for deceit you must prove deceit, and you must prove mala fides on the part of the person who deceived the other. I suppose that was no new law."

§ 1366. Liability not based on theory of agent's actual wrong.—In *Smout v. Ilbery*¹⁰ it was said to be "the true principle derivable from the cases, that there must be some wrong or omission of right on the part of the agent in order to make him personally liable on a contract made in the name of his principal." But as is pointed out by Kekewich, J., in a recent case,¹¹ the present doctrine "does not proceed on the footing of there having been any wrong, or omission of right, on the part of the agent in order to make him personally liable in respect of a contract made in the name of his principal, and the conclusion in Smout v. Ilbery, that such wrong or omission of right, on the ⁷ Dickson v. Reuter's Telegram Co., L. R. 3 C. P. Div. 1. See also, per Lord Davey, in Starkey v. Bank of England, [1903] App. Cas. 114, at 118. Compare Sir Frederick Pollock in 5 Law Quarterly Review at p. 415. Also, F. R. Y. Radcliffe in 18 Law Quarterly Review at p. 364.

⁸ Derry v. Peek, 14 App. Cas. 337.

⁹ Starkey v. Bank of England, [1903] App. Cas. 114. See also Blower v. Van Noorden, [1909] Transv. L. R. (S. C.) 890.

¹⁰ Smout v. Ilbery, 10 M. & W. 1, at p. 11.

¹¹ Halbot v. Lens, [1901] 1 Ch. 344, at p. 349.

part of the agent is necessary, must be taken to have been negatived by Collen v. Wright, which was decided fifteen years later. The conclusion, therefore, is that, in order to enable a plaintiff to maintain an action on such a contract, he must prove a misrepresentation in fact,—that is to say, a representation by the defendant that he was authorized to sign on behalf of an alleged principal when in fact he was not so authorized,—but he need not prove that this misrepresentation was due to an omission or wrong of the party signing.”

§ 1367. Liability based on representations of matters of fact only. This implied warranty by the agent of his authority must ordinarily be limited to its existence as a matter of fact, and not be held to include a warranty either of its existence or of its adequacy or sufficiency, in point of law.¹²

Thus in a case often referred to,¹³ it was said by Mellish, L. J., “though I have not found any case in the courts of law on the question, I have no doubt myself that it would be held that if there is no misrepresentation in point of fact, but merely a mistake or misrepresentation in point of law, that is to say, if the person who deals with the agent is fully aware in point of fact what the extent of the authority of the agent is to bind his principal, but makes a mistake as to whether that authority is sufficient in point of law or not, under those circumstances I have no doubt that the agent would not be liable. For instance, supposing when an agent comes and professes to make a contract on behalf of his principal, instead of trusting his representa-

¹² Beattie v. Lord Ebury, L. R. 7 Ch. App. 777; Thilmany v. Iowa Paper Bag Co., 108 Iowa, 357, 75 Am. St. Rep. 259; Kansas Nat'l Bank v. Bay, 62 Kan. 692, 54 L. R. A. 408, 84 Am. St. Rep. 417; Abeles v. Cochran, 22 Kan. 405, 31 Am. Rep. 194; Holt v. Winfield Bank, 25 Fed. 812.

In Walker v. Bank of New York, 9 N. Y. 582, it is said the doctrine “clearly does not extend to cases where there is no mistake, misrepresentation or deception as to any matter of fact, although for some legal reason the principal may not be bound. One party is presumed to know the law as well as the other, and each contracts at his peril as to the legal effect of what is done.”

In Michael v. Jones, 84 Mo. 578, it is said: “Where all the facts are known to both parties, and the mistake is one of law as to the liability of the principal, the fact that the principal can not be bound is no ground for charging the agent.” To same effect are Western Cement Co. v. Jones, 8 Mo. App. 373; Humphrey v. Jones, 71 Mo. 62; Ware v. Morgan, 67 Ala. 461; Hall v. Lauderdale, 46 N. Y. 70.

Where the other party knows that the agent purports to act only by virtue of an oral authority, he can not hold the agent liable for the failure of a contract for which the law—as both are presumed to know—requires a written authority. McReavy v. Eshelman, 4 Wash. 757.

¹³ Beattie v. Lord Ebury, L. R. 7 Ch. App. 777, at 800.

tion that he has power to bind his principal, the person dealing with the agent were to ask to see his authority, and a power of attorney executed by the principal was shown to him, and he took the opinion of his lawyer as to whether the power of attorney was sufficient to bind the principal, and was advised that it was sufficient to bind the principal, and then after that a contract was made, and it turned out when the point was raised in a court of law that the power of attorney was insufficient—under such circumstances I am clearly of opinion that there would be no warranty on the part of the agent that the power of attorney was good in point of law.”

§ 1368. Doctrine not confined to the making of contracts.—The act which the agent assumes to do need not be the making of a contract, although in fact it most frequently is so. “As a separate and independent rule of law,” said Lord Davey in a recent case,¹⁴ the doctrine of Collen v. Wright, “is not confined to the bare case where the transaction is simply one of contract, but it extends to every transaction of business into which a third party is induced to enter by a representation that the person with whom he is doing business, has the authority of some other person.” It may therefore consist in inducing the other party to do or refrain from doing some act, which the assumed principal might call upon him to do or refrain from doing. Thus, for example, the agent by an assumption of authority to demand it, may induce the payment of money, the delivery of goods, the surrender of securities, the discharge of liens, the alteration of records, the transfer of stocks, and many other similar acts which will readily suggest themselves. As to many of these cases, the rules already suggested would be adequate, but a broader statement of the principle has been made, which is undoubtedly sound and which would be more appropriate to many of the cases here suggested. Thus in a recent case before the English House of Lords,¹⁵ where the question was as to the liability to the plaintiff of one who had induced the plaintiff to transfer stocks in reliance upon an instrument of transfer which proved to have been forged, it was said by Lord Davey: “I am of opinion that where a person invested with a statutory or common law duty of a ministerial character is called upon to exercise that duty on the request, direction, or demand of another (it does not seem to me to matter which word you use) and without any default on his own part acts in a manner which is apparently legal but is, in fact, illegal and a breach of that duty, and thereby incurs liability to third parties, ¹⁴ Starkey v. Bank of England, [1903] App. Cas. 114.

¹⁵ Sheffield v. Barclay, [1905] App. Cas. 392, at 399.

there is implied by law a contract by the person making the request to keep indemnified the person having the duty against any liability which may result from such exercise of the supposed duty. And it makes no difference that the person making the request is not aware of the invalidity in his title to make the request, or could not with reasonable diligence have discovered it."

§ 1369. How where other party knows or agent discloses all the facts relating to his authority.—If the true principle be, as has been pointed out, that the liability of the agent is based on his untrue representation or warranty, however innocent, of a material fact, namely the fact of his authorization, the other party must, in this case, as in other similar ones, show that he relied upon the representation and was misled by it to his detriment. If, on the contrary, he did not rely upon the representation but on his own knowledge or upon other evidence, or if, because he knew the facts, or was charged with notice of them, he was not misled by the agent's representation, he cannot recover.

So where the agent, acting in good faith, fully discloses to the other party, at the time, all the facts and circumstances touching the authority under which the agent assumes to act, so that the other party from such information or otherwise, is fully informed and may decide for himself as to the existence and extent of the authority, the agent cannot be held liable,¹⁶ unless he has, in some way, expressly assumed the responsibility. It is of course essential to this immunity that there shall have been a full and fair disclosure, and if the agent conceals or misrepresents material facts to the detriment of the other party, he cannot claim exemption.¹⁷

¹⁶ Newport v. Smith, 61 Minn. 277; LeRoy v. Jacobosky, 136 N. C. 443, 67 L. R. A. 977; Thilmany v. Iowa Paper Bag Co., 108 Iowa, 357, 75 Am. St. Rep. 259; Kansas Nat'l Bank v. Bay, 62 Kan. 692, 84 Am. St. Rep. 417, 54 L. R. A. 408; Dillon v. Macdonald, 21 New Zeal. L. R. 45; Blower v. Van Noorden, [1909] Transv. L. R. (S. C.) 890.

Where the agent, in signing, recites that he signs as agent, "by telegraphic authority of" a named principal, and there was also testimony that this form of signing was adopted in the trade to negative the implication of a warranty, the agent was held not bound. Lilly v. Smales, [1892] 1 Q. B. 456.

Where the assumed agent is also a principal in the transaction he may be personally liable on his own promise although the other party knew that he was unauthorized to bind the others associated with him. Guthers v. Ripley, 98 Iowa, 290.

¹⁷ Newman v. Sylvester, 42 Ind. 112; Ogden v. Raymond, 22 Conn. 379, 58 Am. Dec. 429; Walker v. Bank, 9 N. Y. 582; Jefts v. York, 10 Cush. (Mass.) 392.

§ 1370. Where agent disclaims present authority.—If the doctrine of the preceding section be sound, as it unquestionably is, then a fortiori will the agent not be liable where he expressly disclaims any present authority, and leaves the other party to take the chances. He may, of course, expressly undertake to procure authority or ratification, but such an undertaking would not be lightly inferred. As was said in a recent case:¹⁸ “A man, of course, might say, ‘I have no authority and probably cannot obtain such authority, but yet I will contract to obtain it, and run the risk of damages.’ Such a contract is conceivable, and would be good in law, but ought not, I think, to be inferred except from facts leading directly to that conclusion.”

§ 1371. How in case of public agent.—Where the agent is a public agent who derives his authority from some public act or law rather than by appointment in fact of some superior officer, and that fact is known to the other party, the latter will be presumed to have knowledge of the nature and extent of the agent's authority, it being determined by law of which every person is bound to take notice. Where such an agent, therefore, discloses the source of the authority under which he assumes to act, and practices no fraud or misrepresentation, he will not be held liable upon the ground of an implied warranty of authority.¹⁹

There may, however, easily be cases of public agents whose authority depends upon the same sort of considerations as private agents, and there is then no reason for distinction.

§ 1372. To whom the liability extends.—So far as the liability of the agent is deemed to rest upon any theory of contracts, it could in general extend only to the party to the contract or to those who stand in a situation to enforce contracts made with him. So far as it is based upon theories of misrepresentation it would extend only to those to whom the representation was made and who were entitled to rely upon it.

§ 1373. Application of these rules.—An attempt may now be made to apply these rules to the various cases in which, for any reason, there is an absence of authority to do the act assumed to be done. For this purpose, the cases may be more or less roughly distributed under four general heads: I. Where the authority might have been ¹⁸ Halbot v. Lens, [1901] 1 Ch. 344, at p. 351.

¹⁹ McCurdy v. Rogers, 21 Wis. 197, 91 Am. Dec. 468; New York, etc., Co. v. Harbison, 16 Fed. 688; Perry v. Hyde, 10 Conn. 329; Murray v. Carothers, 1 Metc. (Ky.) 71. See also Sanborn v. Neal, 4 Minn. 126, 77 Am. Dec. 502; Sandford v. McArthur, 18 B. Monroe (Ky.), 411; Newman v. Sylvester, 42 Ind. 106; Dunn v. Macdonald, [1897] 1 Q. B. 555.

conferred but was not. II. Where it had once existed but had for some reason expired. III. Where, though there may have been a pretence of authority, none could in fact be conferred because the alleged principal was not in existence. IV. Where the authority could not be conferred because of the lack of capacity or legal status of the supposed principal.

§ 1374. I. Where authority never conferred.—The simplest and most frequent case in which the lack of authority presents itself is that wherein an existing and competent principal who might have conferred authority for the act in question, has never conferred any authority at all, or, while conferring authority to do some other act, or to do this act at some time or under some conditions, has never conferred authority for the doing of this act, or for the doing of it at the time or under the conditions existing in the present case. These cases are not complicated by any question of the existence of a principal or of his competence to act. He simply has not conferred the authority which the agent has assumed to exercise. In these cases the rules above referred to have free exercise, and the agent who has either expressly or by implication asserted an authority which as a matter of fact he does not possess, is liable to the other party with whom he deals. Illustrations of this liability are very numerous, and some of them will be found exhibited in the notes.²⁰

²⁰ In Collen v. Wright, [1857] 8 E. & B. 647, an agent to lease lands made an agreement to lease for a term of unauthorized length, whereby the tenant lost the benefit of the lease. Held, that the agent was liable to the tenant.

In Firtank's Executors v. Humphreys, [1886] 18 Q. B. D. 54, the directors of a corporation undertook to pay a creditor in securities of the corporation. The power of the corporation to issue securities of that sort had been exhausted. Held, that the directors were liable to the creditor for the loss.

In Starkey v. Bank of England, [1903] App. Cases, 114, a broker acting in good faith procured the transfer of registered securities upon a forged power of attorney. Held, that he was liable to the bank.

In Sheffield v. Barclay, [1905] App. Cases, 392, a transfer of stock was made upon defendant's application upon a forged transfer which both parties supposed to be genuine. Held, that defendant must indemnify the corporation.

In Kroeger v. Pitcairn (1882), 101 Pa. 311, 47 Am. Rep. 718, an insurance agent issued a policy with unauthorized oral waivers. After a loss, the company made a successful defence because of breaches of conditions. Held, that the agent must indemnify the insured.

In Farmers' Trust Co. v. Floyd (1890), 47 Ohio St. 525, 21 Am. St. Rep. 846, directors of a corporation acting in good faith but before the corporation was legally authorized to do business, made a contract with plaintiff. Held, that they were personally liable.

In Kennedy v. Stonehouse (1904), 13 N. D. 232, an agent who knew he was not authorized made a contract § 1375. II. Where authority once existing has terminated.—The questions thus far considered have been those dealing with the possibility and the fact of the actual creation of the authority in the first instance, but as has been pointed out, the lack of authority in a particular case may arise, not because it was never conferred, but because an authority once existing has since been in some wise terminated, and the question now is as to the liability of the agent under such circumstances. The question may present itself in a variety of forms. It may be simply as to the liability of the agent for continuing to exercise an authority actually terminated which all the parties in question knew to have been actually conferred by the principal. Or it may take the form of an agent, whose authority has in fact terminated, appearing and proposing to deal for the first time with a person who knows neither whether the authority was ever conferred, nor, if so, whether it still continues. A very marked distinction may exist between the two cases, as may be seen by a comparison of the question whether the agent is responsible to third persons for continuing to exercise an expired authority which the principal led them to believe to exist, and the question whether the agent is liable to third persons for continuing to exercise a terminated authority which he alone caused them to believe to exist.

§ 1376. — Authority terminated by act of principal.—Where the authority is terminated by the act of the principal, such termination, as has been already seen, usually becomes effective as to the agent from the time that he is notified of it. As to third persons, in the case of the so-called general agent, the termination becomes opera-to sell land and put the buyer into possession. After buyer had paid the price, he was evicted. Held, that the agent was liable to him.

And so the agent was held liable where he professed to be authorized to agree to pay the plaintiff a commission for securing a purchaser for lands of a third person, when in fact no such authority existed. Oliver v. Morawetz (1897), 97 Wis. 332. And so where the owner of the land was a corporation. Groeltz v. Armstrong (1904), 125 Iowa, 39.

In Cochran v. Baker (1899), 34 Ore. 555, an agent who had undertaken to sign a bond of indemnity without authority was held liable to the plaintiff who had relied upon it.

In Anderson v. Adams (1903), 43 Ore. 621, an agent made a lease to the plaintiff of certain land, and without authority agreed to furnish water for irrigating. The plaintiff entered into possession and planted a crop, which was lost for lack of water. Held, that the agent was liable.

See also Argersinger v. Macnaughton, 114 N. Y. 535, 11 Am. St. Rep. 687; Lane v. Corr, 156 Pa. 250; West London Comm. Bank v. Kitson, L. R. 13 Q. B. D. 360; Duffy v. Mallinkrodt, 81 Mo. App. 449; Campbell v. Muller, 19 N. Y. Misc. 189; Taylor v. Nostrand, 134 N. Y. 108; Browning v. Marvin, 100 N. Y. 144; Bush v. Cole, 28 N. Y. 261, 84 Am. Dec. 343.

tive when they are notified. When the agent is employed to act on a particular occasion or for a given transaction only, no presumption can ordinarily arise that the authority will continue upon other occasions or for other acts, and no notice of its termination by its own limitation is usually required. But if the principal terminates such an authority before its execution, he must ordinarily give notice as in other cases.

Where notice to third persons is required, a third person, ignorant of the termination, may often hold the principal even though the agent knew that his authority was terminated. If both the agent and the other party were ignorant of the termination, the principal and not the agent would be liable. If the agent but not the other party knew of the termination, the other party, being still able to recover of the principal, would ordinarily have no substantial claim against the agent, although the agent's warranty of authority might in fact be broken.

Where notice to the agent but not to third persons is required, the principal would be liable to the other party usually until the agent had been notified of the termination. If the agent assumed to act after notice to him, in such a case, he would undoubtedly be liable to the other party.

§ 1377. — But, as has been seen, there are many cases in which the authority of the agent is really a conditional one, that is to say, it is not to be exercised if before its execution the desired end has been attained in some other way. Thus where brokers are employed to sell land, for example, it is ordinarily said that the authority of each broker is conditioned upon the fact that the land is not previously sold by the principal in person or by some other broker. In such a case, the broker himself may not be entitled to notice before such a revocation; and in any case in which third persons may fairly be charged with notice of the same condition, they would not be entitled to notice, and would have no action against the agent for a loss of authority resulting from the exercise of the reserved power.

§ 1378. — Authority terminated by death of principal.—As has been seen in an earlier chapter,²¹ the death of the principal operates usually, ipso facto, to terminate the authority of the agent, even though both he and the person with whom he deals are ignorant of the death. Where the authority has thus been terminated by death, and the agent knows it but the other party does not, the agent who continues to act should be held responsible. If the other party knew of the death but the agent did not, the agent would not be responsible because the other party has not relied upon any implied representation of the agent. If both parties are ignorant of the death, more difficulty arises. Comparatively few cases in this field have arisen. In the leading case of Smout v. Ilbery,²² the defendant was the widow of an Englishman who had sailed for China leaving his family at home in defendant's charge, and who had died on the outward voyage, but whose death was not known at home until five months after it had occurred. The plaintiff was a dealer who had supplied goods to the family before the husband sailed, during his voyage and down to the time of the news of his death, and even afterwards. The action was against the widow to recover the price of goods supplied after the date of her husband's death and before it was known. It was held that the defendant was not liable. The case was decided in 1842, fifteen years before Collen v. Wright, and of course long before the recent extensions of the doctrine of the latter case. After reviewing the authorities then existing upon the subject of the liability of the agent for misrepresentations as to his authority, it was said by Alderson, B.: "The present case seems to us to be distinguishable from all these authorities. Here the agent had in fact full authority originally to contract, and did contract in the name of the principal. There is no ground for saying, that in representing her authority as continuing, she did any wrong whatever. There was no mala fides on her part; no want of due diligence in acquiring knowledge of the revocation; no omission to state any fact within her knowledge relating to it, and the revocation itself was by the act of God. The continuance of the life of the principal was, under these circumstances, a fact equally within the knowledge of both contracting parties. If, then, the true principle derivable from the cases is, that there must be some wrong or omission of right on the part of the agent, in order to make him personally liable on a contract made in the name of his principal, it will follow that the agent is not responsible in such a case as the present. And to this conclusion we have come."

²¹ Ante, § 652.

²² Smout v. Ilbery, 10 M. & W. 1. To same effect, Ginochio v. Porcella, 3 Bradford (N. Y.), 277.

See also, Carriger v. Whittington, 26 Mo. 311, 72 Am. Dec. 212; Jenkins v. Atkins, 1 Humph. (Tenn.) 294, 34 Am. Dec. 648.

In Salton v. New Beeston Cycle Co., [1900] 1 Ch. 43. it was held that the principal of Smout v. Ilbery applies to a solicitor representing a party in an action, and it applies to a revocation of authority by the dissolution of a company as well as by the death of an individual.

But in Yonge v. Toynbee, [1910] 1 K. B. 215, Salton v. New Beeston Cycle Co., supra, is repudiated, and the majority of the judges were of opinion that Smout v. Ilbery was no longer law.

§ 1379. — As pointed out in this case, the result of the determination is that no one is liable on the contract, whereas, by the rule found applicable in the cases previously considered, the agent is usually liable in some form when the principal is not. It has moreover been already observed, with reference to this case, that it has been thought in later cases,²³ to have been negatived by Collen v. Wright, so far as the liability of the agent is made to depend upon some wrong or omission of right upon the part of the agent. If that conclusion be sound, the case is left to stand, if at all, upon the ground that, the principal having personally held the agent out to the plaintiff as one having authority, the agent was not liable for continuing to exercise it, after it had in fact been revoked by death, an event not actually known to either party, and of which both had equal means of knowledge. The case may be thought to be analogous to the dissolution of a partnership by death, where no notice is required to be given because, it is said, among other reasons, that death itself is an event so likely to be attended by publicity that no notice of it need be given. The case does not decide the other question suggested as to the liability to the agent not previously known or dealt with as such, but who, for the first time, appears and proposes to deal as agent by virtue of an authority which has then in fact been terminated. If the liability of an assumed agent depends, as is pointed out in the more recent cases, upon his express or implied representation of the existence of an authority when none in fact exists, it would seem that this representation may arise from his conduct as well where it has been terminated as where it never existed. The only escape from this conclusion would be to say that the effect of his representation is that the authority once existed and has not to his knowledge been terminated. But this is to narrow the effect of the representation to a greater degree than seems warranted by the later cases.²⁴

§ 1380. — Authority terminated by principal's insanity.— The distinction suggested in the preceding section, that where the principal himself has held the agent out as such, the agent will not be responsible for continuing to exercise the authority until he has had notice of its termination, has been applied in the case of the principal becoming insane. In the leading case of Drew v. Nunn,²⁵ where a wife had been acting as agent for her husband until he became insane, ²³ See Halbot v. Lens, [1901] 1 Ch. 344.

²⁵ Drew v. Nunn, L. R. 4 Q. B. D. 661.

²⁴ See Yonge v. Toynbee, [1910] 1 K. B. 215, supra.

it was said by Brett, L. J.: "It seems to me that an agent is liable to be sued by a third person, if he assumes to act on his principal's behalf after he had knowledge of his principal's incompetency to act. In a case of that kind he is acting wrongfully. The defendant's wife must be taken to have been aware of her husband's lunacy; and if she had assumed to act on his behalf with any one to whom he himself had not held her out as his agent, she would have been acting wrongfully, and, but for the circumstance that she is married, would have been liable in an action to compensate the person with whom she assumed to act on her husband's behalf. In my opinion, if a person who has not been held out as agent assumes to act on behalf of a lunatic, the contract is void against the supposed principal, and the pretended agent is liable to an action for misleading an innocent person."

But in a very recent case ²⁶ in which solicitors, who had had authority to act for a client, instituted an action in his name after he had, without their knowledge, become insane, it was held that the solicitors were personally liable to the other party for the costs, and the doctrine of a warranty of authority was affirmed and applied. A majority of the judges were of the opinion that Smout v. Ilbery was no longer law.

§ 1381. — Authority terminated by other events.—More or less similar rules would doubtless be held to apply where the authority was terminated by such events as war, bankruptcy or marriage, as to the two former of which at least it would doubtless be held that there were such ordinary elements of publicity that both the agent and the other party might be deemed equally conversant with the facts.

§ 1382. — Authority terminated by act of agent.—Where after termination by the agent's own act, the agent still continues to act as agent, the principal might be liable if he had failed to give proper notice of that fact. The basis of the agent's liability, where the principal could not be held, at least, would be clear.

§ 1383. III. Where no principal in existence—Inchoate corporations—Promoters.—As has already been pointed out, one reason for the lack of authority may be the non-existence of the principal, who may either never have existed at all, or, though once in existence, had yet ceased to exist at the time when the authority was supposed to be conveyed. The most common case of one assuming to act in behalf of a principal not yet in existence, is that of a person, often called a "promoter," who undertakes to act in behalf of a corporation not yet formed. Such a person obviously cannot now be the agent of a corporation hereafter to be created, and as has often been pointed out, his acts and contracts, without something more, cannot impose any liability on the corporation when created.²⁷ If the person who deals with him, knows that the corporation is not yet organized, as is the fact in the majority of cases, there is no room for the doctrine of the warranty of authority. The question in such a case becomes simply, to whom was credit extended? It is of course true that the other party dealing in anticipation of the creation of the corporation, may be willing to take his chances that the corporation when created will adopt the act, or he may be willing to rely upon funds raised or to be raised. But if on the other hand he relies upon any present personal responsibility, it must usually be the responsibility of the person who so assumes to act.²⁸

²⁶ Yonge v. Toynbee, [1910] 1 K. B. 215.

If, on the contrary, the other person does not know that the corporation has not come into existence and the person who assumes to act, assumes to act for it as an existing principal, without a disclosure of the facts, he would doubtless be held to warrant that there was at least such a corporation existing in fact.²⁹

The same rules would also undoubtedly be held to apply to the case wherein the corporation, although actually in existence, had not yet reached the stage or complied with the conditions which entitled it to begin business.³⁰

§ 1384. — Provisional arrangements with promoters.—In cases in which it is known that the corporation is not yet organized,

²⁷ Buffington v. Bardon, 80 Wis. 635; Long v. Citizens' Bank, 8 Utah, 104.

²⁸ Kelner v. Baxter, L. R. 2 C. P. 174; O' Rorke v. Geary, 207 Pa. 240; Hurt v. Salisbury, 55 Mo. 310; Glenn v. Bergmann, 20 Mo. App. 343; Booth v. Wonderly, 36 N. J. L. 250; Allen v. Pegram, 16 Iowa, 163; Hub Publishing Co. v. Richardson, 13 N. Y. Supp. 665; also in 59 Hun (N. Y.), 626 (no opinion). See also, Chronicle Co. v. Franklin, 119 Ill. App. 384.

²⁹ See Lagrone v. Timmerman, 46 S. C. 372.

³⁰ Where one leased an office to the directors of a new national bank in ignorance of the fact that the bank, although otherwise completely organized, had no certificate from the comptroller authorizing it to transact business, and the enterprise was subsequently abandoned and the office surrendered. Held, that the directors were liable in an action ex contractu upon their implied warranty of authority to make the lease. Seeberger v. McCormick, 178 Ill. 404.

Where the directors of a corporation, otherwise duly organized, but which had no authority to make contracts until ten per cent of the capital stock had been subscribed, did make contracts as such directors knowing that the requisite amount had not been subscribed, they were held personally liable, even though they believed in good faith that they were contracting on behalf of a legally constituted corporation. Farmers' Trust Company v. Floyd, 47 Ohio St. 525, 21 Am. St. Rep. 846, 12 L. R. A. 346.

it may easily be found that informal negotiations and arrangements with the promoter were not intended to bind him personally, but to be at most in the nature of offers or authorities to make offers to the corporation which it may accept, either formally or informally, when it comes into existence and thus bind itself, the promoter not being bound at all.

If there be a present contract with the promoter, it may be found to have been upon condition that it should cease when the corporation came into existence, or when the corporation bound itself by similar or other satisfactory terms.

If there be a present contract with the promoter, there may also be a novation, with the consent of all parties, when the corporation comes into existence by which the corporation is substituted for the promoter in the contract.

There is even authority for saying, what seems more questionable, that though there is in form or in terms a present contract with the promoter, he may be regarded as a mere depositary or conduit to hold matters in suspense until the corporation, which is to be the real party, is organized, and that then, upon assignment or transfer to it and acceptance by it of the obligations, the promoter shall be deemed to be released.³¹

§ 1385. — Principal dead at time authority supposed to be conferred.—Where, at the time the authority is supposed to be conferred, the principal is in fact dead, as might be the case where the principal died after mailing a power of attorney and before its receipt, or where one agent is appointed by another agent, as, for example, by a superior agent or a general manager, the latter and the agent he appoints both being ignorant of the death, the rules already given would seem to impose liability in case the agent so appointed

³¹ The case which probably goes furthest in this direction is that of Heckman's Estate, 172 Pa. 185, where a lease was made, with knowledge of all the facts, to the contemplated president of a proposed corporation. It was found that it was the intention of all parties that he should hold it only for the corporation and until it was in readiness to accept it. When the corporation was organized, he assigned the lease to the corporation which took possession and paid the rent for a period, the bills being made out in the name of, and being presented to, the corporation. No formal consent to the assignment or release of the first lessee was ever given. In an action against his estate for rent unpaid, held, that he had been released. (Mr. Machen, Corporations, § 336, thinks the case wrong.)

Compare Case Mfg. Co. v. Soxman, 138 U. S. 431, 34 L. Ed. 1019; Shields v. Clifton Hill Land Co., 94 Tenn. 123, 45 Am. St. Rep. 700, 26 L. R. A. 509; Van Vlieden v. Welles, 6 Johns. (N. Y.) 85; Chicago, etc., Mfg. Co. v. Talbotton Creamery Co., 106 Ga. 84.

assumes to act. If he acted after the knowledge of the death of his supposed principal came to him, and the other party was ignorant of the death, the agent's liability would be clear. But even though both the agent and the other party were ignorant, and the agent acted in good faith, his assumption to act as agent would still appear to be equivalent to a representation of the existence of a principal, upon which he would be liable, unless the case of the non-existent principal under these circumstances is put upon a different footing from that of other cases of non-existing principals. It might indeed be argued that since death is, in many cases, held to be an event of such ordinarily inherent publicity that all persons may be charged with notice of it, both parties here either actually knew of it in contemplation of law or were equally in a situation to know, and that therefore there was no reliance upon the agent's implied representation; but this conclusion is at least doubtful.

§ 1386. IV. Where principal in existence but principal had not the authority to confer—Ultra vires acts—Liability of corporate directors and agents.—Where the difficulty is that, though there is a principal in existence, that principal does not possess the power which has been attempted to be conferred upon the agent, a different question arises. The typical case is that of acts done by corporate officers or agents in behalf of the corporation but which are really ultra vires of the corporation. Where the corporation derives its power from some public act or law with which everybody is presumably familiar, and the agent has done no more than to attempt to exercise in a corporate capacity a power supposed to be conferred by the act or law, no personal liability should ensue. He ought not to be held to warrant by implication that which is mere matter of law and as much within the knowledge of one party as the other.³²

Where however the question turns upon a question of fact of which the other party cannot be charged with knowledge, as whether an otherwise duly organized corporation has yet received a necessary certificate,³³ or the prescribed percentage of capital,³⁴ to authorize the commencement of business, or has in fact exceeded its borrowing power ³² Thilmany v. Iowa Paper Bag Co., 108 Iowa, 357, 75 Am. St. Rep. 259; Sanford v. McArthur, 57 Ky. (18 B. Mon.) 411; Abeles v. Cochran, 22 Kan. 405, 31 Am. Rep. 194.

Agent not liable on contract signed by him in behalf of a corporation to take stock in another corporation, it being ultra vires to do so. Merchants' Packet Co. v. Streuby, 91 Miss. 211, 124 Am. St. Rep. 651.

³³ Seeberger v. McCormick, 178 Ill. 404.

³⁴ Farmers' Trust Co. v. Floyd, 47 Ohio St. 525, 21 Am. St. Rep. 846, 12 L. R. A. 346.

or its power to issue stock,³⁵ or whether its rules do or do not give it authority to borrow money,³⁶ and the like, a different rule should apply. These are matters of fact, belonging to the internal management of the corporation, of which third parties have ordinarily no means of knowledge and of which the officers and directors, at least, are in position to know or inform themselves, and of the existence of which their assumption to act may fairly be regarded as a representation. Whether the same rule should apply to the ordinary agent of the corporation may be open to more question, but the theory of the rule would apply to him also, unless he has made such disclosures or disclaimers as to bring himself within the exceptions.

§ 1387. — Where principal temporarily forbidden to act.— Where the principal, though fully existent and in general authorized to act, is temporarily disabled to act in a given instance or locality,—as, for example, where a foreign insurance company which has not complied with state regulations is forbidden to do business until it does comply, and its agents are forbidden under penalty from acting for it,—an agent, who assumes to act for the principal during such disability with a person ignorant of it, is held personally liable if the contract fails for that reason.³⁷

³⁵ Firbank's Ex'r v. Humphreys, 18 Q. B. Div. 54.

³⁶ Richardson v. Williamson, L. R. 6 Q. B. 276; Charles v. Brunswick Bldg. Society, 6 Q. B. Div. 696. See also, Booth v. Wonderly, 36 N. J. L. 250; Small v. Elliott, 12 S. D. 570, 76 Am. St. Rep. 630.

³⁷ See Vertrees v. Head, 138 Ky. 83; Lasher v. Stimson, 145 Pa. 30; Raff v. Isman, 235 Pa. 347.

The theory of these cases is not entirely clear. Vertrees v. Head was the case of a purported insurance in a company not authorized to do business in the state and also alleged to be insolvent. The court assumes that the contract of insurance was valid, though the agent may have been liable to a penalty. The agent's liability was placed upon the ground "that any person who undertakes to act as agent for a company not authorized to do business in this state thereby personally assumes that the company for which he acts is solvent and able to perform its agreements." Lasher v. Stimson, supra, was the case of a foreign manufacturing company not authorized to do business in the state. The court said the business was unlawful, that the corporation had no legal existence in Pennsylvania, where the agent assumed to act, that the agent could have no authority and was, therefore, personally liable. The statutory penalty was held to be a cumulative and not exclusive remedy.

Raff v. Isman, supra, was a similar case, proceeding upon the theory that the foreign corporation had no legal existence in the state and could not authorize the defendant to act for it. He was therefore held to be within the rule of Lasher v. Stimson. In all of these cases it was said that the agent was presumed to know whether the corporation for which he assumed to act had complied with the provisions of the statute and that the person dealing with him might rely § 1388. — Where principal's insolvency destroys his legal status.—Ordinarily an agent does not impliedly warrant the solvency of his principal; neither is he liable for innocent misrepresentations concerning his principal's solvency, standing, and the like, which purport to be made and are in fact made by the principal's authority. But where under the law he can have no principal other than a solvent one, as, for example where none but solvent insurance companies can do business within the state owing to the regulations prescribed concerning examinations, or deposits and licenses, an agent who assumes to have a principal may fairly be held to represent to a third party who is ignorant of the facts that his principal is of the sort which can only lawfully do business in the state.³⁸

§ 1389. — When no legally responsible principal—Unincorporated associations.—Somewhat similar questions arise where a person assumes to act for a group of persons unincorporated or otherwise having no definite legal organization, as in the case of voluntary unincorporated societies or associations, like unincorporated churches, lodges, and the like. It is, of course, possible in such a case that the assumed agent may have expressly excluded personal responsibility,³⁹ or that the person extending the credit may have done so in reliance upon voluntary payments, subscriptions or funds to be raised, but where it does not appear that he has done so, the person who assumes to act will usually be personally responsible.⁴⁰ In such cases usually the upon his implied representation and was not obliged to investigate the matter for himself.

In Landusky v. Beirne, 80 N. Y. App. Div. 272 (affirmed without opinion, 178 N. Y. 551), it was held that, where an insurance agent undertook in New York to procure for the plaintiff "a good policy in a very good company" upon property in Pennsylvania, the agent's promise imported an undertaking upon his part to procure a contract of insurance which should be enforceable both in New York where the contract was made, and in Pennsylvania where the property was situated. The court said that the proof showed that the policy was not valid in either state. On the other hand, in Jones v. Horn, 104 Mo. App. 705, the opposite conclusion was reached. The court said that the contract was not invalid, and that the only liability of the agent was the statutory penalty for assuming to insure property for a company not authorized to do business in the state.

³⁸ Vertrees v. Head, 138 Ky. 83.

³⁹ Thus in Shoe & Leather Nat. Bank v. Dix, 123 Mass. 148, 25 Am. Rep. 49, where persons who were acting as trustees of a number of unincorporated associates made a contract beginning "We as trustees but not individually promise to pay," etc., and signed it in their own names with the word "trustees" added, it was held that they could not be held personally liable.

⁴⁰ In a number of cases, committees and others acting for unincorporated societies, churches, lodges, and the like, have been held personally liable for services, materials, etc., ordered fact that there is no legally responsible principal will be equally within the knowledge of both parties, and in that event, as in the similar case referred to in a preceding section, there will be no occasion for resorting to an implied warranty of authority. The question here is, rather, to whom was the credit extended. The rule in such cases, it is said, "is founded upon a presumption of fact, and is not the expression of any positive or rigid legal principle. The presumption referred to is that the parties to a contract contemplate the creation of a legal obligation capable of enforcement, and that, therefore, it is understood that the obligation shall rest on the individuals who actively participate in the making of the contract, because of the difficulty in all cases, the impossibility in many, of fixing it upon the persons taking part in or submitting to the action of the evanescent assemblage. If, however, the person with whom the contract is made, expressly agrees to look to another source for the performance of its obligations, or if the circumstances be such as to disclose an intention not to charge the agent, as where the other agrees to accept the proceeds of a particular fund, there is no longer reason to indulge the presumption, and it may be rebutted by proof of such facts."⁴¹ There may of course be cases, even in this field, where the lack of legal responsibility may not be apparent, and in which express or implied representations of matters of fact will make the assumed agent liable.

by them. Fredendall v. Taylor, 23 Wis. 538, 99 Am. Dec. 203; Winona Lumber Co. v. Church, 6 S. D. 498; Clark v. O'Rourke, 111 Mich. 108, 66 Am. St. Rep. 389; Comfort v. Graham, 87 Iowa, 295; McCartee v. Chambers, 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 649, 22 Am. Dec. 556; Learn v. Upstill, 52 Neb. 271; Codding v. Munson, 52 Neb. 580, 66 Am. St. Rep. 524; Ash v. Guie, 97 Pa. 493, 39 Am. Rep. 818; Lewis v. Tilton, 64 Iowa, 220, 52 Am. Rep. 436; Johnson v. Corser, 34 Minn. 355.

Other cases are Burton v. Grand Rapids Furn. Co., 10 Tex. Civ. App. 270; Summerhill v. Wilkes, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 133 S. W. 492, in the latter of which the rule was applied to make personally liable the chairman of a building committee who had signed a note in the name of an unincorporated religious society.

Some of the cases have undoubtedly carried the presumption very far, and treated it more as a presumption of law than merely one of fact.

See also, cases cited ante, § 187.

⁴¹ Codding v. Munson, 52 Neb. 580, 66 Am. St. Rep. 524. See also, to like effect, Eichbaum v. Irons, 6 W. & S. (Pa.) 67, 40 Am. Dec. 540, and cases cited in the following section. Where it clearly appears that the plaintiff agreed to look to funds to be raised in a certain way, there is no personal liability. Landman v. Entwistle, 7 Exch. 632.

So where it was shown that a loan made to a church was made in specific reliance upon the security of certain lands belonging to the church, after a personal investigation, and without reference to the names of the church trustees, their financial standing, or ability to pay, it was held that the trustees who had signed the obligations were not personally liable § 1390. — Meetings, committees, etc.—The same considerations apply, and perhaps still more strongly where the only principal disclosed is such an evanescent and ephemeral body as a public meeting.

Thus where a committee, appointed by a political meeting for that purpose, ordered a public dinner for the party, it was held that the members were personally liable. There was here no legal body to be bound. It did not rise to the dignity of a voluntary society or a club, for, said the court, "a club is a definite association organized for indefinite existence; not an ephemeral meeting for a particular occasion, to be lost in the crowd at its dissolution. It would be unreasonable to presume that the plaintiff agreed to trust to a responsibility so desperate, or furnish a dinner on the credit of a meeting which had vanished into nothing. It was already defunct; and we are not to imagine that the plaintiff consented to look to a body which had lost its individuality by the dispersion of its members in the general mass."⁴²

Here also, as in the cases in the preceding section, there would ordinarily be no room for a warranty of authority, and the liability would be directly upon the contract itself.

§ 1391. Legal competency of an existing principal.—As has been already seen,⁴³ the implied warranty of authority upon the part of an agent does not ordinarily arise where the question is merely one of law. Both parties have usually equal knowledge of the law and equal knowledge or opportunity to acquire knowledge as to its effect. But in many cases legal capacity depends wholly upon matters of fact, and the agent who assumes to act as though capacity existed, must be held to represent the existence of the facts upon which the capacity depends.⁴⁴ In the case of a corporation organized under a public act, although the church was not incorporated. Elwell v. Tatum, 6 Tex. Civ. App. 397.

⁴² Eichbaum v. Irons, 6 Watts & Serg. (Penn.) 67, 40 Am. Dec. 540. See also, Blakely v. Bennecke, 59 Mo. 193 (an action upon an instrument signed by one as captain of a military company); Edings v. Brown, 1 Rich. (S. C.) 255; Steele v. McElroy, 1 Sneed (Tenn.), 341 (where the committee of an unincorporated Masonic lodge were held personally liable).

In Learn v. Upstill, 52 Neb. 271, the agents, who represented a public meeting to open and improve a public road, were held liable personally.

In Codding v. Munson, 52 Neb. 580, 66 Am. St. Rep. 524, the agent, acting for a public meeting to secure the location of an asylum in their town, was held personally liable.

So where an agent acted for a party of excursionists, he was held personally liable. N. Y., etc., Steamship Co. v. Harbison, 16 Fed. 688.

⁴³ Ante, § 1367.

⁴⁴ Thus where a corporation has no authority to make contracts until a certain percentage of its capital has been paid in, and this had not been there would ordinarily, as has been seen, be deemed to be no implied representation concerning its legal capacity.⁴⁵ But where the corporation is organized under a private act, there is said to be a warranty that there is a corporation in fact having the capacity to authorize the act.⁴⁶

§ 1392. — Infant principals.—With respect of the infant principal, the question would seem to be whether assuming to act as agent is equivalent to a representation that the agent has in fact a principal who can not only confer authority and has done so, but who can make binding contracts. By the weight of modern authority, the infant's appointment of an agent is not void, and his act in many cases through an agent, as for example in the case of the purchase of necessities, would be binding and not even voidable. Even in the case where the transaction would be voidable, it is valid until avoided and can be avoided by the infant only. Such authority as there is upon the question is to the effect that the mere infancy of the principal is not a breach of the agent's implied warranty of authority.⁴⁷ But it may well be open to question whether a third person dealing with an agent has not the right to assume that the agent undertakes to deal for a principal having normal legal capacity. The third person, however, would ordinarily suffer no appreciable loss until the act had been repudiated.

§ 1393. — Married woman.—The case of the married woman as a reputed principal at common law is obviously different from that of the infant, unless it be agreed that the latter's appointment of an agent in any case would be void. Cases involving reputed agency for a principal who was a married woman are very rare. In the only one discovered, wherein a man purported to act, though without any authority, for a person who was really his wife, though that did not appear on the face of the contract, it was held that he was personally liable upon the contract, as one purporting to act for an irresponsible principal.⁴⁸ done, directors who make a contract for it with knowledge of the facts are held to impliedly represent that this condition has been complied with, and they are liable if it has not, Farmers' Trust Co. v. Floyd, 47 Ohio St. 525, 21 Am. St. Rep. 846, 12 L. R. A. 346.

⁴⁵ See ante, § 1385.

⁴⁶ West London Commercial Bank v. Kitson, 13 Q. B. Div. 360.

⁴⁷ Patterson v. Lippincott, 47 N. J. L. 457, 54 Am. Rep. 178.

In Continental Nat. Bank v. Strauss, 137 N. Y. 148 (the case of an infant partner), it is said that there is no presumption that the minor will set up his incapacity. "To the contrary is the presumption. It would be an immoral presumption to entertain that a person, who enters into engagements with others, will resort to the plea of infancy to avoid them thereafter."

⁴⁸ Edings v. Brown, (1845) 1 Rich. (S. Car.) 255.

§ 1394. — Where principal insane at time authority was supposed to be conferred.—Where, at the time the authority was supposed to be conferred, the principal was so far insane that he had no capacity to do or authorize the doing of the act contemplated, difficult questions arise. If the agent knew of the insanity, or if by reason of adjudication and the like, he was charged with notice, while the other party did not know of it, he would be liable. If the insanity was not obvious and there had been no adjudication, the assumption by the agent of authority to act would still seem to be a representation upon which he would be liable, at least so far as it could be deemed that the question of sanity or insanity was a matter of fact.⁴⁹

§ 1395. When agent liable on contract itself.—Whether the agent can be held liable upon the contract itself which he has, without authority, assumed to make, is a question which has been much discussed, and upon which the cases cannot be entirely reconciled. It would seem, however, that this question is one which must be determined largely by the circumstances of each case. Where the promise is made in the name of a principal who might have authorized it and as his contract, the better opinion is that the agent can not be held liable upon it, but only in an action based upon the deceit, or upon the contract of warranty or indemnity, even in the case of a written contract, where the assumed relation of agency appears upon the face of it.⁵⁰ Some ⁴⁹ See per Brett, L. J., in Drew v. Nunn, 4 Q. B. Div. 661.

⁵⁰ Jefts v. York, 4 Cush. (Mass.) 371, 50 Am. Dec. 791; Long v. Colburn, 11 Mass. 97, 6 Am. Dec. 160; Ballou v. Talbot, 16 Mass. 461, 8 Am. Dec. 146; Jefts v. York, 10 Cush. (Mass.) 395; Trowbridge v. Scudder, 11 Cush. (Mass.) 83, 87; Draper v. Massachusetts, etc., Co., 5 Allen (Mass.), 339; Sherman v. Fitch, 98 Mass. 63; Bartlett v. Tucker, 104 Mass. 336, 6 Am. Rep. 240; Tucker Mfg. Co. v. Fairbanks, 98 Mass. 105; Simmons v. More, 100 N. Y. 140; Baltzen v. Nicolay, 53 N. Y. 467; White v. Madison, 26 N. Y. 117; Taylor v. Nostrand, 134 N. Y. 108; McCurdy v. Rogers, 21 Wis. 197, 91 Am. Dec. 468; Noyes v. Loring, 55 Me. 408; Johnson v. Smith, 21 Conn. 627; Patterson v. Lippincott, 47 N. J. L. 457, 54 Am. Rep. 178; Taylor v. Shelton, 30 Conn. 122; Brong v. Spence, 56 Neb. 638;

Cole v. O'Brien, 34 Neb. 68, 33 Am. St. Rep. 616; Duncan v. Niles, 32 Ill. 532, 534, 83 Am. Dec. 293; Hancock v. Yunker, 83 Ill. 208; Anderson v. Adams, 43 Ore. 621; Neufeld v. Beidler, 37 Ill. App. 34; American Surety Co. v. Morton, 32 Okla. 687, 39 L. R. A. (N. S.) 702; Heard v. Clegg, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 144 S. W. 1145.

"That an agent may bind himself personally," said Church, Ch. J., in Johnson v. Smith, 21 Conn. 627, "even when acting really or professedly as agent, is not denied; and in the execution of a simple contract as well as a specialty; and this will be so, in all cases, where, by language already expressive of such an intent, he has substituted his own responsibility for that of his principal. So, also, if he use language of personal obligation in the body of the contract, although he may sign as agent, he will bind himself if he had no authority to courts have, indeed, manifested a disposition in this latter case to reject the words referring to the alleged principal as mere surplusage, and to hold the agent liable upon the remainder as upon his own contract.⁵¹ This, however, as has been well said,⁵² is rather to make a new bind, and has not bound, his principal by his act. But in case of a defective power to bind the principal, if the agent speaks only in the language of the principal and does not use apt language to bind himself, he will not be liable on the contract thus made, but collaterally only for a false assumption of authority to act for another," citing Jones v. Downman, 4 Ad. & El. (N. S.) 235. See also the interesting discussion to same effect in Blower v. Van Noorden, [1909] Transv. L. R. S. C. 890.

The Negotiable Instruments Act—It is said that the Negotiable Instruments Law has not changed the common law as to the form of remedy available against an agent who signs without authority. Haupt v. Vint, 68 W. Va. 657, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 518. See also, 10 Law Notes, 104; 20 Harv. L. Rev. 159; Bunker Neg. Inst. Law § 22.

The statute (§ 20) provides that "Where the instrument contains or a person adds to his signature words indicating that he signs for or on behalf of a principal, or in a representative capacity, he is not liable on the instrument if he was duly authorized," etc. The words italicized are not in the English Act. Professor Ames was of the opinion that, by necessary inference, the agent was liable on the instrument if he was not duly authorized. See Brannan's Neg. Inst. Law. (2d ed.), pp. 26, 242. Judge Brewster and the draftsman apparently concurred.

⁵¹ See Weare v. Gove, 44 N. H. 196; Richie v. Bass, 15 La. Ann. 668; Keener v. Harrod, 2 Md. 63, 56 Am. Dec. 706; Meech v. Smith, 7 Wend. (N. Y.) 315; Palmer v. Stephens, 1 Den. (N. Y.) 471; Dusenberry v. Ellis, 3 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 70, 2 Am. Dec.

144; Feeter v. Heath, 11 Wend. (N. Y.) 479; White v. Skinner, 13 Johns. (N. Y.) 307, 7 Am. Dec. 381 (the rule is now otherwise in New York, as seen in cases cited in preceding note); Dale v. Donaldson Lumber Co. 48 Ark. 188, 3 Am. St. Rep. 224 (Sem-ble); Byars v. Doore, 20 Mo. 284; Coffman v. Harrison, 24 Mo. 524; Clark v. Foster, 8 Vt. 98.

In Weare v. Gove, supra, it is said that if after striking out the words which show representative character, and which the assumed agent had no right to put there, the words then remaining are sufficient to make a personal promise, the agent will be individually bound.

In applying such a rule, two forms of contract must be distinguished. Thus, assuming John Jones to be the reputed principal and Richard Roe the assumed agent, let one promissory note read: "John Jones promises to pay" etc., and be signed "Richard Roe, agent of John Jones;" and let another promissory note, reading: "I promise to pay" etc., be signed "Richard Roe, agent of John Jones." If now in the two cases, the words "agent of John Jones" be rejected as unauthorized, the first note will still upon its face contain no promise by Richard Roe to pay, but the second note now consists clearly of his individual promise. There are cases holding that even in the first form Richard Roe can be held liable upon the contract, though it is difficult to see how this can be thought to be his promise, unless the words "John Jones" in the body of the note be deemed to be stricken out and the word "I" or "Richard Roe" substituted in their place, a process which seems clearly to result in the making of a new contract.

contract for the parties than to construe the one which they have made for themselves.

§ 1396. — Where the agent speaks in what would otherwise be terms of personal responsibility, but adds recitals of agency indicating that he is acting for a principal (even though in such a manner as would charge that principal if there had been one), but there was no such principal, or at most only a fictitious or legally non-existent one, there, according to a number of authorities, the agent may be held upon the contract itself.⁵³

Such a case, for example, is Kennedy v. Stonehouse, 13 N. D. 232, 3 Ann. Cas. 217, where the court felt bound by the language of the North Dakota Code, a substantial enactment of the Field Code, proposed but never adopted in New York, and based upon the doctrine of the early cases in that state, now no longer followed. The court, however, recognized that the rule is contrary to the overwhelming weight of authority, saying: "Few, if any, courts have in recent years, when not controlled by statute, followed this rule. Indeed, it seems to have been utterly repudiated both in England and in this country, including New York, where it had its origin."

So in Frankland v. Johnson, 147 Ill. 520, 37 Am. St. Rep. 234, where a note reading, "The Western Seaman's Friend Society agrees to pay" etc., was signed "B. Frankland, Gen. Sup't," a recovery against Frankland personally was sustained, upon allegations that he had no authority to bind the society, and that the defendant "by the name, style and description of 'The Western Seaman's Friend Society' promised to pay the said plaintiff." The only authorities relied upon are a loose and general statement in Angell & Ames on Corporations, § 303, and an early case in New York, where, as has been seen, that doctrine has been long repudiated.

The second class of cases presents fewer difficulties, though even here the clear weight of authority is to the effect that if the contract on its face purports to be the contract of the principal, no action on the contract can be maintained against the pretended agent. See the discussion in Bartlett v. Tucker, 104 Mass. 336, 6 Am. Rep. 240.

It is proper to observe, however, in this connection, that, in many cases as has been already seen, the words "agent," "agent of John Jones," and the like, may without reference to the question of authority be rejected as mere descriptio personae.

⁵² Hall v. Crandall, 29 Cal. 567, 89 Am. Dec. 64; Thilmany v. Iowa Paper Bag Co., 108 Iowa, 357, 75 Am. St. Rep. 259; Abeles v. Cochran, 22 Kan. 410, 31 Am. Rep. 194; Holt v. Winfield Bank (C. C.), 25 Fed. 812.

In Shoe & Leather Nat'l Bank v. Dix, 123 Mass. 148, 25 Am. Rep. 49, it is said: "It is contended that if these defendants are not liable upon the contract as a note, then nobody is liable. Even if such were the fact, it would not be in the power of the court, as we have already seen, to alter the contract for the purpose of giving it validity. In deciding whether the defendants have or have not bound themselves, we need not decide whether they have or have not bound their principals. Abbey v. Chase, 6 Cush. 54."

Compare Knickerbocker v. Wilcox, 83 Mich. 200, 21 Am. St. Rep. 595.

⁵³ See Woodbury v. Blair, 18 Iowa, 572 (note signed "J. J. B., President I. R. C. Co.," binds agent until it appears that the company is capable of

Clearly, if the agent who acts without authority makes the contract in his own name only, or merely with such appendages as would in any event be simply descriptio personae if he had been authorized, he will be personally liable upon the contract. Here, as the expression goes, he has used apt words to bind himself personally.⁵⁴

So if, notwithstanding the fact of his assumed agency, the credit was given to him personally, or if he has expressly pledged his own responsibility,—and as bearing upon this, the fact that he pretended to act for a non-existent or legally incompetent principal, may be taken into account,—he may be held upon the contract itself.⁵⁵

The agent may, of course, as has been pointed out, exclude personal responsibility by the express terms of the contract,⁵⁶ or by showing that the other party had agreed to look to particular funds, subscriptions to be raised, and the like.⁵⁷ contracting); Hurt v. Salisbury, 55 Mo. 310 (directors liable on note signed by them as officers of corporation before incorporation articles filed); Comfort v. Graham, 87 Iowa, 295 (officer of unincorporated association liable to attorney he engages by letter to do work for the association); Allen v. Pegram, 16 Iowa, 163 (officers of a bank whose charter had never been approved, signed a conveyance in the name of the bank reading, "and we do hereby covenant, etc."); Cane v. Sinclair, 10 Victor. L. R. (L.) 60 (contract to sell land to S., agent of Co.).

The following cases differ in that the promise was in form that of the principal and the agent signed only on behalf of the principal but added his own name. Booth v. Wonderly, 36 N. J. L. 250 (directors fraudulently issued policy in the name of a company they knew had no legal existence); Lagrone v. Timmerman, 46 S. Car. 372 (insurance policy binds officers where so-called company not incorporated); Lewis v. Tilton, 64 Iowa, 220, 52 Am. Rep. 436 (committee bound on lease wherein club was party of second part which they signed "Executive Committee of Club, R. Tilton, S. Thrall, etc."). As to this point they seem questionable. See note 51, supra.

Where the principal was entirely fictitious and the name of the agent nowhere appeared, the agent was not held. Bartlett v. Tucker, 104 Mass. 336, 6 Am. Rep. 240 (negotiable note).

Where the contract itself shows the nonexistence of the principal, it must be deemed the contract of the agent only. O'Rourke v. Geary, 207 Pa. 240 (where the contract read, throughout, "D. J. G., for a bridge company to be incorporated").

⁵⁴ Hall v. Crandall, 29 Cal. 567, 89 Am. Dec. 64; Knoch v. Haizlip, — Cal. —, 124 Pac. 998; McKown v. Gettys (Ky.), 25 Ky. L. Rep. 2070, 80 S. W. 169.

⁵⁵ See post, § 1419.

In Raff v. Isman, 235 Pa. 347, an agent who had made a contract for a foreign corporation not authorized to do business in the state, and therefore as the court held a non-existent principal, was said to be liable on the contract.

⁵⁶ See for example, Shoe & Leather Nat. Bank v. Dix, 123 Mass. 148, 25 Am. Rep. 49.

⁵⁷ See for example, Landman v. Entwistle, 7 Exch. 632; Elwell v. Tatum, 6 Tex. Civ. App. 397.

§ 1397. — Agent not liable merely because principal is not.—

The doctrine sometimes asserted that wherever the agent, because of his lack of authority, fails to create a right of action against his principal upon the contract, he makes himself liable thereon, cannot therefore be sustained as a general rule.⁵⁸ The agent is only liable on the contract in those cases in which references to a principal fail to relieve otherwise personal promises because no such principal exists, or in which he has used apt words to bind himself, or has expressly pledged his personal responsibility, or in which the credit was given to him personally.⁵⁹

⁵⁸ Dusenbury v. Ellis, 3 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 70, 2 Am. Dec. 144; White v. Skinner, 13 Johns. (N. Y.) 307, 7 Am. Dec. 381; Rossiter v. Rossiter, 8 Wend. (N. Y.) 494, 24 Am. Dec. 62; Collins v. Allen, 12 Wend. (N. Y.) 356, 27 Am. Dec. 130; Mott v. Hicks, 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 513, 13 Am. Dec. 550. These early New York cases which are the foundation of most of the similar rulings in other states have been very much modified if not entirely overruled by the later cases in the Court of Appeals. Dung v. Parker, 52 N. Y. 494; Baltzen v. Nicolay, 53 N. Y. 467; White v. Madison, 26 N. Y. 117. Thus Gillaspie v. Wesson, 7 Port. (Ala.) 454, 31 Am. Dec. 715, is based upon the early New York cases. See also Clark v. Foster, 8 Vt. 98; Savage v. Rix, 9 N. H. 263; Hatch v. Smith, 5 Mass. 42; Byars v. Doores, 20 Mo. 284; Coffman v. Harrison, 24 Mo. 524.

⁵⁹ Ogden v. Raymond, 22 Conn. 379, 58 Am. Dec. 429. "We are aware," said Ellsworth, J., in this case, "that it is not unfrequently laid down as a rule of law that if an agent does not bind his principal he binds himself; but this rule needs qualification and can not be said to be universally true or correct. . . . If the form of the contract is such that the agent personally covenants and then adds his representative character, which he does not in truth sustain, his covenant remains personal and in force, and binds him as an individual; but if the form of the contract is otherwise, and the language when fairly interpreted, does not contain a personal undertaking or promise, he is not personally liable, for it is not his contract, and the law will not force it upon him. He may be liable, it is true, for tortious conduct if he has knowingly or carelessly assumed to bind another without authority; or, when making the contract, has concealed the true state of his authority, and falsely led others to repose in his authority; but as we have said, he is not of course liable on the contract itself nor in any form of action whatever."

So in a leading case in California, the rule is stated thus: "If an agent, in executing a contract, employ terms which, in legal effect, charge himself he may be sued upon the instrument itself as a contracting party. This is so because, by the use of such terms, he has made the contract his own. But if the instrument does not contain such terms, or, in other words, contains language which in legal effect binds the principal only, the agent can not be sued on the instrument itself, for the obvious reason that the contract is not his. If, then, the contract is not binding upon the principal because the agent had no authority to make it, and is not binding on the agent because it does not contain apt words to charge him personally, it is wholly void." Sander-son, J., in Hall v. Crandall, 29 Cal.

It may be said that this rule will result in many cases in binding neither the assumed agent nor his alleged principal upon the contract.⁶⁰ But if the other party fails to have a remedy either upon the contract itself, or upon the express or implied undertaking for authority, it will be in those cases in which he was fully informed by the agent of the source and nature of the authority under which he assumed to act, and was put in a situation to determine for himself whether to rely upon it or not; or in which it was clearly stipulated that the agent was, in no event, to assume responsibility.

§ 1398. In what form of action is agent liable.—Much question formerly existed as to the form of action in which the agent who acts in the name of his principal, but without authority, is to be held liable. The more recent cases, however, are in substantial accord as to the form of action which may be maintained.

Where an agent who knows that he has no authority, makes express assertions that he possesses it, or so acts as to amount to an assertion of authority, and by so doing deceives and injures the other party who has relied thereon, it can not be doubted that an action on the case for the deceit is an appropriate remedy.⁶¹ At the same time, even in such a case it is also clear that the tortious aspects of the case may be ignored or waived, and an action of assumpsit upon the express or implied warranty of authority be maintained instead of the action of deceit.⁶²

567, 89 Am. Dec. 64. To same effect, see Neufeld v. Beidler, 37 Ill. App. 34; Hancock v. Yunker, 83 Ill. 208; Holt v. Winfield Bank, 25 Fed. 812; Abeles v. Cochran, 22 Kan. 405, 31 Am. Rep. 194; Thilmany v. Iowa Paper Bag Co., 108 Iowa, 357, 75 Am. St. Rep. 259; Cole v. O'Brien, 34 Neb. 68, 33 Am. St. Rep. 616; Newman v. Sylvester, 42 Ind. 106; Duncan v. Niles, 32 Ill. 532, 83 Am. Dec. 293; Abbey v. Chase, 6 Cush. (Mass.) 54; Harper v. Little, 2 Me. 14, 11 Am. Dec. 25; Stetson v. Patten, 2 Me. 358, 11 Am. Dec. 111; McHenry v. Duffield, 7 Blackf. (Ind.) 41.

⁶⁰ Whether the fact that the principal can not be bound is any evidence from which it may be inferred that the agent intended to bind himself, see post, § 1422; Knickerbocker v. Wilcox, 83 Mich. 200, 21 Am. St. Rep. 595; Merchants', etc., Packet Co. v.

Streuby, 91 Miss. 211, 124 Am. St. Rep. 651; Abeles v. Cochran, 22 Kan. 405, 31 Am. Rep. 194; Shoe & Leather Nat. Bank v. Dix, 123 Mass. 148, 25 Am. Rep. 49.

⁶¹ "The remedy against one who fraudulently represents himself as the agent of another, and in that capacity undertakes to make a contract binding upon his principal, is an action on the case for the deceit." Walton, J., in Noyes v. Loring, 55 Me. 408, citing Long v. Colburn, 11 Mass. 97, 6 Am. Dec. 160; Ballou v. Talbot, 16 Mass. 461, 8 Am. Dec. 146; Jefts v. York, 4 Cush. (Mass.) 371, 50 Am. Dec. 791, s. c. 10 Cush. (Mass.) 392; Abbey v. Chase, 6 Cush. (Mass.) 54; Smout v. Ilbery, 10 Mees. & Wels. 1; Jenkins v. Hutchinson, 13 Ad. & El. N. S. 744.

⁶² In Lewis v. Nicholson, 18 Q. B. N. S. 503, Campbell, C. J., said:

Where, however, the agent acting in good faith and supposing himself authorized, has made express or implied assertions of authority, an action based upon the implied contract of warranty or indemnity is the appropriate remedy.⁶³

"He is liable, if there was any fraud, in an action for deceit, and, in my opinion, as at present advised, on an implied contract that he had authority, whether there was fraud or not."

And so Starkey v. Bank of England, [1903] App. Cas. 114.

In White v. Madison, 26 N. Y. 117, in deciding that an action on the warranty of authority was a proper one, Selden, J., said: "If the act of the agent were fraudulent, an action for the deceit would lie, but it would be a concurrent remedy with an action on the warranty."

See Seeberger v. McCormick, 178 Ill. 404.

It is often said, in the older cases, that the only remedy is an action of deceit, whether the agent acted in good or in bad faith. It was so held, for example, in numerous cases, both in Maine and Massachusetts. All of these earlier cases were decided before the present doctrine of implied warranty of authority had been so fully developed. Maine apparently still adheres to the older rule, and as late as 1890, in Gilmore v. Bradford, 82 Me. 547, the court says: "It is settled in this state and Massachusetts, by a series of decisions commencing as far back as 1814, that the only remedy against one who undertakes to act as agent without authority, or in excess of his authority, is an action on the case for deceit. Noyes v. Loring, 55 Me. 408; affirmed in Teele v. Otis, 66 Me. 329; Abbey v. Chase, 6 Cush. 54; Jefts v. York, 10 Cush. 392; Ballou v. Talbot, 16 Mass. 461, 8 Am. Dec. 146; Long v. Colburn, 11 Mass. 97, 6 Am. Dec. 160."

The court in Massachusetts, on the other hand, shows a disposition to depart from its early cases, upon which the Maine court relied, and to adopt the modern view. Thus in Boston & Albany R. R. Co. v. Richardson, 135 Mass. 473, the courts say that they do not understand that the word "deceit" in the earlier cases was used in its technical sense, and they add, "We can see no good reason why an action of contract upon the implied warranty should not be maintained in the same manner as it may be upon the implied warranty in the sale of chattels." It was not necessary to determine the question in that case, because the plaintiff's pleading contained counts both in contract and in tort.

"Later cases," says Scudder, J., in Patterson v. Lippincott, 47 N. J. L. 457, 54 Am. Rep. 178, "have held . . . that he may be sued either for breach of warranty or for deceit, according to the facts of each case," citing Jenkins v. Hutchinson, 13 Ad. & El. (Q. B.) N. S. 744; Lewis v. Nicholson, 18 Ad. & El. (Q. B.) N. S. 503.

⁶³ Collen v. Wright, 8 El. & Bl. 647; Oliver v. Bank of England, [1901] 1 Ch. 652, [1902] 1 Ch. 610; affirmed as Starkey v. Bank of England, [1903] App. Cas. 114; Sheffield Corporation v. Barclay, [1903] 1 K. B. 1, [1905] App. Cas. 392; Godwin v. Francis, 5 C. P. 295; Simons v. Patchett, 7 El. & Bl. 568; Meek v. Wendt, 21 Q. B. 126; In re National Coffee Palace Co., 24 Ch. 367; Firbank's Executors v. Humphreys, 18 Q. B. Div. 54; Spedding v. Nevell, 4 C. P. 212; Hughes v. Graeme, 33 L. J. Q. B. 335; West London Commercial Bank v. Kitson, 13 Q. B. Div. 360; Farmers' Trust Co. v. Floyd, 47 Ohio St. 525, 12 L. R. A. 346, 21 Am. St. Rep. 846; Groeltz v. Armstrong, 125 Iowa, 39; White v. Madison, 26 N. Y. 117; Taylor v. Nostrand, 134 N. Y. 108; Campbell v. Muller, 19 Misc. (N.

It would be rarely if ever true that an action for the specific performance of the contract could be maintained against the agent; to justify it he must be something more than an agent.⁶⁴

§ 1399. Burden of proof.—The burden of proof is upon the plaintiff to show the fact of the agent's warranty or undertaking, its breach, and the resulting damages.⁶⁵

§ 1400. The measure of damages.—The damages to be recovered against the agent for acting without authority must, in general, be compensation for the loss which the other party has naturally and proximately sustained by reason of the false assertion of authority.⁶⁶ In

Y.) 189; Seeberger v. McCormick, 178 Ill. 404; Le Roy v. Jacobosky, 136 N. C. 443, 67 L. R. A. 977; Oliver v. Morawetz, 97 Wis. 332; Anderson v. Adams, 43 Ore. 621; Cochran v. Baker, 34 Ore. 555; Lane v. Corr, 156 Pa. St. 250.

⁶⁴ In Doolittle v. Murray, 134 Iowa, 536, the lower court granted specific performance against the agent upon the theory that he was really the principal though ostensibly agent.

⁶⁵ In an action for breach of an implied warranty of authority to make a contract, the plaintiff launches his case by showing that he entered into the contract with the defendant as agent, who so described himself and that the defendant had not the authority he professed to have. The onus of proving a defence that the plaintiff was aware, at the time, of the want of authority, will lie upon the defendant. Adamson v. Morton, 7 Vict. L. R. (L.) 307.

⁶⁶ Simons v. Patchett, 7 El. & Bl. 568; Meek v. Wendt, 21 Q. B. Div. 126; In re National Coffee Palace Co., 24 Ch. Div. 367; Oliver v. Bank of England, [1901] 1 Ch. 652, [1902] 1 Ch. 610; aff'd as Starkey v. Bank of England, [1903] App. Cas. 114; Sheffield Corporation v. Barclay, [1903] 1 K. B. 1, [1905] App. Cas. 392; White v. Madison, 26 N. Y. 117; Bush v. Cole, 28 N. Y. 261, 84 Am. Dec. 343; Taylor v. Nostrand, 134 N. Y. 108; Campbell v. Muller, 19 Misc. (N. Y.) 189; Le Roy v. Jacobosky, 136 N. C. 443, 67 L. R. A. 997; Anderson v. Adams, 43 Ore. 621; Groeltz v. Armstrong, 125 Iowa, 39; Maneer v. Sanford, 15 Manitoba, 181.

In Oliver v. Bank of England, [1901] 1 Ch. 652, [1902] 1 Ch. 610, [1903] App. Cas. 114, where stock had been transferred in reliance upon a forged transfer, the measure of damages allowed was the value of the stock with all dividends and costs.

In Meek v. Wendt, 21 Q. B. Div. 126, where there had been an unauthorized settlement of a claim for insurance, the plaintiff was held to be entitled to recover not only the amount agreed upon to be paid upon the settlement, but also expenses incurred in getting ready to consummate it.

In Kroeger v. Pitcairn, 101 Pa. 311, 47 Am. Rep. 718, where there had been an unauthorized representation that the defendant, as agent of an insurance company, was authorized to issue a policy covering a certain risk, the plaintiff was held to be entitled to recover the amount of the policy, with interest from the time when it should have been payable.

In Farmers' Trust Co. v. Floyd, 47 Ohio St. 525, 12 L. R. A. 346, 21 Am. St. Rep. 846, where goods had been sold in reliance upon the defendant's representation of the existence of a corporation as buyer, the plaintiff was held to be entitled to recover the full amount of the contract price.

In Campbell v. Muller, 19 Misc. (N. Y.) 189, where the defendant, without authority, had represented himself as agent to buy a horse for his principal, the case of contracts, it must usually be compensation for the loss sustained by not obtaining a binding contract. In the case of other acts, it must usually be compensation for the loss caused by the doing, at the assumed agent's request, of that which, if the agent had been authorized, would have bound the principal and justified the other party, but which, because of the lack of authority, does not bind the pretended principal and subjects the other party to loss or hazard. In the case of contracts, the damages will, in many instances, be the same that could be recovered against the principal for his breach of the contract if it had been authorized; ⁶⁷ but they are not necessarily the same.

and having received it into his possession, the plaintiff was held to be entitled to recover damages for the detention of the horse, for depreciation caused by a physical injury while the defendant had possession, and for the charges of a veterinary surgeon for treatment of the injury. No damages apparently were sought for the loss of the profit of the bargain.

In Taylor v. Nostrand, 134 N. Y. 108, where the defendant had employed the plaintiff to render services for a corporation, but had caused them to be so rendered that plaintiff could not recover of the corporation, plaintiff was held entitled to recover, for his services and disbursements, from the defendant.

In Anderson v. Adams, 43 Ore. 621, the defendant, an agent to lease land, in making a lease to plaintiff, agreed without authority to furnish plaintiff water for the irrigation of the land leased. The measure of damages was held to be the value which the crop would have had at maturity if water had been furnished, less the cost of labor, care and attention necessary to put it in condition for the nearest market.

In Roberts v. Tuttle, 36 Utah, 614, an agent without authority had purported to sell land, had put the purchasers in possession, and had received a part payment of purchase price. Upon eviction by the owner, the buyer was permitted to recover of the agent as damages the amount paid upon the purchase price with interest, the value of improvements made, the costs of defending the action of ejectment brought by the owner, the value of the bargain as it is usually estimated, and the cost of getting a loan to make up the unpaid portion of the price—an action taken by the purchasers on the advice of the agent that if such balance were tendered to the owner title would be passed—but not a sum equal to the amount recovered by the owner from the purchasers in the ejectment suit for use of the premises during the purchasers' occupation.

In Firbank's Executors v. Humphreys, 18 Q. B. Div. 54, the defendants, as directors of a corporation, issued to plaintiff debenture stock in payment for work done for the corporation. The corporation had power to issue stock only to a certain amount, and this amount, unknown to the defendants, had been issued, and the stock issued to plaintiff was an over-issue and valueless. The corporation became insolvent, but its valid outstanding debenture stock was worth face-value. Held, that the defendants were liable for the value of valid debenture stock of the same amount as plaintiff held of the over-issue.

See also, Simons v. Patchett, 7 El. & Bl. 568; Spedding v. Nevell, L. R. 4 C. P. 212; Godwin v. Francis, L. R. 5 C. P. 295.

⁶⁷ Thus in Simons v. Patchett, 7 El. & Bl. 568, it was said by Crompton, J., arguendo, "It is not the same thing

It must be kept in mind as was pointed out by Lord Bowen in one case,⁶⁸ "that an agent does not promise that his principal shall carry out the contract, but only that he shall be bound by it." It is entirely conceivable that many things may subsequently arise, like the other party's own default, affecting the extent of the principal's liability upon an authorized contract, which would not affect the value of it at the time it was made. So if the contract had actually been authorized, a number of things might then affect its value, as for example, the solvency of the principal. In such a case the amount assessed as damages for breach of the contract, might be one sum, while the amount which could be collected would be a different sum, and this fact must be taken into consideration in assessing damages against the agent.⁶⁹ If this were not so, then as was also pointed out by Lord Bowen,⁷⁰ "the plaintiff would be getting as much damages against the agent for an insolvent, as against the agent for a millionaire." The burden of making this showing rests ordinarily upon the agent.⁷¹

The costs and expenses of judicially determining whether the contract is binding upon the principal, may also in many cases, after notice at least, be a proper subject for compensation in an action against to warrant to a man that a supposed principal is bound to fulfil a bargain, and to contract to fulfil it one's self. Though the principal was bound, the vendor might be no better off, as in the possible case that he was insolvent. But, when the principal would be able to pay if he were bound to do so, I do not see the difference in the damages."

⁶⁸ In re National Coffee Palace Co., 24 Ch. Div. 367.

⁶⁹ See for example, Simons v. Patchett, 7 El. & Bl. 568; In re National Coffee Palace Co., 24 Ch. Div. 367; Meek v. Wendt, 21 Q. B. Div. 126.

⁷⁰ In re National Coffee Palace Co., supra.

⁷¹ See In re National Coffee Palace Co., 24 Ch. Div. 367; Meek v. Wendt, 21 Q. B. Div. 126; Farmers' Trust Co. v. Floyd, 47 Ohio St. 525, 21 Am. St. Rep. 846, 12 L. R. A. 346.

In Farmers' Trust Co. v. Floyd, supra, the action was against persons who had assumed to act as officers and agents of a corporation before there had been actually paid in the amount required by the statute as a condition precedent to their or the company's right to do business. The plaintiff had sold and delivered goods to them as such agents, for which he could not recover payment against the corporation. Upon the trial, no showing was made as to whether there were other creditors of the corporation, or whether their claims stood upon the same footing as that of the plaintiff, or whether the plaintiff, if the contract had been authorized, could in fact have secured his pay in full. It was held that prima facie the measure of the plaintiff's damages was the amount of his claim, and that as the defendants had made no such claim in the court below, or in the supreme court, it was unnecessary to determine whether the defendants could have had the plaintiff's claim reduced to a pro rata footing with the other claims.

⁷² White v. Madison, 26 N. Y. 117; Duffy v. Mallinkrodt, 81 Mo. App. 449; Kennedy v. Stonehouse, 13 N. D. 232, 3 Ann. Cas. 217; Cooper v. Gardiner, the agent. They would undoubtedly be so wherever the action can be deemed to have been fairly and reasonably brought.⁷²

Where the agent is liable directly upon the contract, the measure of damages would be the same as in any other similar case.

§ 1401. — To give damages for loss of a particular contract, it must have been one of value against principal if authorized.—In order, however, to make an agent liable for the loss of a particular contract which he has assumed, without authority, to make in the name of his principal, the unauthorized contract must have been, in general legality, form of execution and the like, one which would have been of some legal value against the principal if it had been authorized by him. Otherwise, the anomaly would exist of giving a right of action against an assumed agent for an unauthorized representation of his authority to make the contract, when the contract itself, in the form in which the other party was content to make it, would, even if it had been authorized, have been of no value against the principal.⁷³

[1902] 2 State Rep. N. S. Wales 67; Maneer v. Sanford, 15 Manitoba, 181; Oliver v. Bank of England, [1901] 1 Ch. 652, [1902] 1 Ch. 610; affirmed under title of Starkey v. Bank of England, [1903] App. Cas. 114; Randell v. Trimen, 18 C. B. 786, 25 L. J. C. P. 307; Godwin v. Francis, L. R. 5 C. P. 295, 306, 39 L. J. C. P. 121, 125; Hughes v. Graeme, 33 L. J. Q. B. 335.

In Oliver v. Bank of England, supra, the following extract from Mayne on Damages (6th ed.), pp. 98, 99, was quoted with approval: "One who professes to contract as agent for another must, unless there be something in the transaction to rebut the implication, be taken to warrant that the authority, which he professes to have, does in fact exist; and if he has no such authority, he is liable to make good to the person who enters into the contract upon the faith of his being duly authorized, all the damage which is the natural and proximate consequence of the false assertion of authority. This will include the costs of unsuccessful legal proceedings taken by such person against the supposed principal for the purpose of enforcing performance of the contract, or recovering damages for its breach; if, at least, it was reasonable under the circumstances of the case that such proceedings should be taken, or if the professed agent was made aware of the litigation and sanctioned it, either expressly, or by allowing it to be continued without avowing his want of authority."

In Maneer v. Sanford, 15 Manitoba, 181, where an agent without authority made a contract for the sale of land, the damages were held to be not only the loss of the bargain—profits—but also expenses reasonably incurred.

⁷² Dung v. Parker, 52 N. Y. 494 (where the contract if authorized could not have been enforced because of the statute of frauds which made it void for all purposes); Baltzen v. Nicolay, 53 N. Y. 467 (same). See also, Pow v. Davis, 1 B. & S. 220 (lack of seal).

(See comments on Dung v. Parker, and Baltzen v. Nicolay, in Browne on the Statute of Frauds (5th ed.), § 135a).

Illegal contract—The same rule applies where the contract was illegal. Merchants' Packet Co. v. Streuby, 91 Miss. 211.

No damages can be recovered of an insurance agent for not issuing a

And not only that, but so far as the enforcement of the contract against the principal depends upon the other party's performance or ability to perform, he must also show that the contract would have been, from his side, enforceable; "for, if he is not in shape to ask or compel a performance from the supposed principal, he has lost nothing by not having a valid contract with him, and so can demand nothing by way of damages from the agent on its account."⁷⁴

The mere fact that the contract was not in such form as to be legally enforceable against the principal, if it be not void, seems not to be conclusive that it would have been of no value. Contracts not legally enforceable, because of the Statute of Frauds for example, are constantly performed, and until it appears that such a contract will not be performed, such a result is not to be assumed. Such a defect seems to go rather to the question of damages than to the existence of a cause of action.⁷⁵

§ 1402. Effect of ratification.—It must be kept in mind, in dealing with this question of the liability of the agent to third persons for making a contract without authority, that, as has been seen in an earlier chapter,⁷⁶ the liability of the agent will be terminated if the principal ratifies the contract in such form and under such conditions as to make the contract binding upon himself. What the cases are wherein there may be such ratification has been so fully considered in the chapter upon ratification as to need no further discussion here. In many of the cases referred to in the present chapter, however, there could be no ratification because of the lack of the necessary conditions;⁷⁷ and in such cases, of course, the rule above referred to could have no operation.

§ 1403. Where a nominal agent is the real principal.—Where, although there was nominally an agency, there was no agency in fact, and the nominal agent was the real principal, such principal may usually be held liable. Many cases of this sort have already been considered, at least in substance. Thus, if he pretends to act for a fictitious principal, he is really acting with no principal.⁷⁸ If he purports to act for an undisclosed principal, but that principal is nonexistent, the ordinary rule respecting agents of undisclosed principals would valid policy, if, because of double insurance, the policy could not have been enforced if valid. Lim-Juco v. Lim-Yap, 3 Philipp. 130.

Insolvency of Principal goes to the measure of damages.

⁷⁴ Kent v. Addicks, 126 Fed. 112, 60 C. C. A. 660.

⁷⁵ See the excellent discussion in McCarthy v. Young, 19 Austral. L. Times, 231.

⁷⁶ See ante, §§ 542, 543.

⁷⁷ See ante, §§ 376, 416.

⁷⁸ See ante, § 1383.

See also Schenkberg v. Treadwell, 94 N. Y. Supp. 418.

make the agent liable, and no further remedy would ordinarily be necessary.⁷⁹ If he pretended to act as agent for a described but not named principal, as where he acts as "agent for the owner," etc., he could doubtless be shown to be the person described.⁸⁰ Where the real agent poses as the principal and the real principal is described as the agent in a written contract, it is held that the so-called parol evidence rule forbids a showing that the nominal agent was the real principal.⁸¹ In a case not hampered by the parol evidence rule, the nominal agent could be shown to be the real undisclosed principal, unless the doctrine of election at the time of making the contract should be deemed to prevent it. It is thought that that doctrine ought not to prevent it, because the real principal, by concealing the true state of the facts, has prevented an intelligent election.

There would also be many cases in which the real principal would be liable where he had used some name suggesting agency as his trade or business name.

B. Assuming to Act for an Undisclosed Principal.

§ 1404. Liability of pretended agent.—The cases thus far considered have been cases wherein the pretended agent assumed to act for a certain and disclosed principal, but, as has already been pointed out, ⁷⁹ See post, § 1410.

⁸⁰ See Carr v. Jackson, 7 Exch. Rep. 382; Schmaltz v. Avery, 16 Q. B. Rep. 655; Sharman v. Brandt, L. R. 6 Q. B. Cas. 720; Harper v. Vigers, [1909] 2 K. B. 549. See also Spurr v. Cass, L. R. 5 Q. B. Cas. 656.

⁸¹ In Heffron v. Pollard, 73 Tex. 96, 15 Am. St. Rep. 764, the defendant H made a contract to purchase certain pipe from P by a writing made on its face between F the buyer and P the seller, and signed "John W. Fry, per Heffron." H was the real principal in the matter, and P, at the time of making the contract, knew that H was buying for himself." H had some sort of authority from F, so that it was conceded that H was not liable on a warranty. P sought to hold H on the contract by proving by parol that H was the one intended to be bound. Held, that the parol evidence rule prevented P from charging H. The court construed the writing as if it expressly excluded the liability of H, and distinguished the case from those wherein an agent is the undisclosed principal and bound as such, since here the relation of the parties appeared on the face of the writing and was known to the seller at the time.

But in Isham v. Burgett, 157 Mass. 546, where the nominal agent was the promoter of a corporation duly formed, but was in fact using the corporation as an agent of himself, and gave an order to the plaintiffs for electric light poles in this form: "D. B. Isham . . . Please furnish poles as follows . . . H. W. Burgett, Mark. The Dover Electric Light Company," he was held liable on the contract, not only on the grounds that the form of it was sufficient to bind him as agent personally, but on the ground that he was the true principal.

there may be cases in which he assumes to act for a certain but undisclosed principal. Such cases are rare, but they are nevertheless possible. Thus the assumed agent may say, "I have a principal; I act for him, but I decline or omit to disclose his name or identity." It is possible that the other party may prefer to deal with any principal rather than the agent. It is certainly possible that he may prefer the credit of a principal of a certain description rather than of the agent, as where the pretended agent says, "I act for a manufacturer; he is as good as X and in good standing and credit with you, but I will not disclose his name." If, then, negotiations are had upon that basis, but the pretended agent had no authority of any such principal, what is the result? First, there is no contract between the other party and the principal, because there was no principal; second, there is no contract in the terms proposed, with the agent, because the form of dealing has excluded him as a party to it.⁸² But there is no reason why the assumed agent should not be liable in deceit or upon an express or implied warranty of authority, as in the cases already considered. There might in many cases of this sort be difficulty about the measure of damages, but no reason is apparent why they should not be based upon the loss of a contract with a person as good as the principal described.

2. Where, though authorized to bind his Principal, he binds Himself or no one.

§ 1405. In general.—But it is not alone in those cases in which he acts without authority, that the agent makes himself liable to third persons. This result may ensue, under a variety of circumstances, even though the agent were fully authorized to bind his principal.

Thus the agent intending to bind his principal may, from the failure to use apt words for that purpose, not only not bind his principal, but may pledge his personal responsibility. So he may conceal the fact of his agency and contract as the ostensible principal.

So, though disclosing the fact of his agency, he may voluntarily enter into personal obligations.

Each of these several situations requires separate consideration.

⁸² See Rodliff v. Dallinger, 141 Mass. 1, 55 Am. Rep. 439. In Macdonald v. Bond, 195 Ill. 122, a person who purported to sign a contract as agent but who had no authority and did not disclose his principal, was held personally liable upon the contract.

§ 1406. Authorized agent contracting in name of principal incurs no personal liability.—As has often been pointed out, it is ordinarily the duty as well as the interest of the agent to confine himself within the limits of his authority and to act only in the name and for the account of his principal. This is so far the normal and expected course that any discussion of the agent's liability should start with this situation. And here the rule of law is clear and certain. If the agent makes a full disclosure of the fact of his agency and of the name of his principal, and contracts only as the agent of the named principal, he incurs no personal responsibility.⁸³ The insolvency of the principal or his inability or refusal to perform the contract does not affect this result.⁸⁴

And where the agent with full authority makes a contract in proper form to bind the principal, it is held that the agent cannot be made liable upon the contract by offering to prove that it was not intended to bind the principal at all but to bind the agent only.⁸⁵

If, therefore, the authorized agent is to incur a personal liability, it must be because he has in some respect departed from the normal and expected course, and a discussion of these departures is essential.

§ 1407. Where agent intending to bind principal, binds no one.—Where the agent intending to bind his principal uses such language that neither the principal nor the agent is bound upon the contract, there has been said, in many cases, to be no liability attaching to the agent. He can not be held liable upon the contract itself, because he

⁸³ Whitney v. Wyman, 101 U. S. 392, 25 L. Ed. 1050; Dunton v. Chamberlain, 1 Ill. App. 361; Barry v. Pike, 21 La. Ann. 221; Aspinwall v. Torrance, 1 Lans. (N. Y.) 381; Kean v. Davis, 20 N. J. L. 425; Klay v. Bank of Dallas Center, 122 Iowa, 506; Imhoff v. House, 36 Neb. 28; Largey v. Leggat, 30 Mont. 148; Hewes v. Andrews, 12 Colo. 161; Bleau v. Wright, 110 Mich. 183; Durham v. Stubbings, 111 Ill. App. 10; Thompson v. Irwin, 76 Mo. App. 418; Lehman v. Feld, 37 Fed. 852; Whiting v. Saunders, 23 N. Y. Misc. 332; Ernst v. Thom, 65 N. Y. Misc. 206; Homan v. Payne, 127 N. Y. Supp. 418; Baer v. Bonynge, 72 Hun (N. Y.), 33; Falk v. Wolfsohn, 7 N. Y. Misc. 313; Lake Shore Nat. Bank v. Butler Colliery Co., 51 Hun, 63; Crandall v. Rol- lins, 83 N. Y. App. Div. 618; Holmes v. Griffith, 1 Colo. App. 423; Scaling v. Knollin, 94 Ill. App. 443; Huston v. Tyler, 140 Mo. 252; Moody v. Trustees, 99 Wis. 49; McCauley v. Trust Co., 81 N. J. L. 86; Boyd Grain Co. v. Thomas (Ark.), 142 S. W. 1150.

See also Smith v. Bond, 25 W. Va. 387; Johnson v. Welch, 42 W. Va. 18.

⁸⁴ Davis v. Lee, 52 Wash. 330, 132 Am. St. Rep. 973.

⁸⁵ Heffron v. Pollard, 73 Tex. 96, 15 Am. St. Rep. 764. A person who sells goods to an authorized agent, intending to sell to the principal and delivering the goods to the principal, cannot recover of the agent because he thought the agent was the principal. Turchin, etc., Silver Co. v. Baugh, 117 N. Y. Supp. 137, 133 N. Y. App. Div. 899 (no opinion).

has used no language sufficient to charge him. He cannot be held liable upon any express or implied warranty of authority, because there is no failure or lack of authority. It is simply a case of defective execution. If, however, the agent has expressly warranted the sufficiency of his method of execution, he could undoubtedly be held liable upon such warranty so far as matters of fact are concerned.

Whether there is in every case from the mere fact that the agent assumes to execute in a certain manner, an implied warranty of the sufficiency of that manner to bind the principal, is a question not settled by the authorities. Upon reason, it would seem that this question is to be determined by substantially the same considerations that apply to the case of a warranty of authority. It is, indeed, simply a question of a warranty of authority to execute in that form.

If the agent knowing a certain form to be insufficient in point of fact, yet assumes to adopt it, to the damage of an innocent third party who has relied thereon, he should certainly be held liable for the deceit. And so where no deceit is practiced, unless the agent fully discloses the nature and limitations of his authority so that the other party may judge for himself as to the proper method, it would seem that he is still to be held liable for a defect in fact as upon an implied warranty. But for a defect in point of law only, the agent would not ordinarily be bound.⁸⁶

§ 1408. Where agent intending to bind principal, inadvertently uses apt words to bind himself.—It often happens that an agent known to be such and seeking and intending to bind his principal upon a contract, so defectively executes it that he fails to accomplish that purpose. In such cases it is not infrequently the result that no one is bound; but, more often, it is found that the agent has so executed as to bind himself.⁸⁷

It is true, as has already been pointed out, that the law aims to carry into effect the intention of the parties, but this is so only where it can be done consistently with legal rules. Parties constantly attempt to make contracts which are in fact subject to definite legal rules respecting form or content, who are entirely ignorant of, or indifferent to, the rules which govern the transaction. Where the parties are negotiating informally and by word of mouth, the rules are most flexible and permit a wide search after the intention of the parties. This is also true, to a considerable degree, in the case of informal but written contracts. When, however, the case involves formal contracts in writing, less latitude is permissible. When the contract is a negotiable instrument, strict and definite rules, based upon the nature and purpose of such instruments, are applicable. When the contract takes the form of a deed,—a specialty, an instrument necessarily under seal,—the rules, as has been seen, are not only rigid but highly technical. A perusal of the vast number of cases shows that, in these latter fields, parties are constantly using forms of expression which they then think, or at least subsequently pretend to think, to be controlling of the obligation, but which the law disposes of as merely descriptive of the person. The vast number of cases in which parties are held personally liable who have added to their signature such words as “Agent,” “President,” “Treasurer,” “Secretary,” “Trustee,” and the like, furnish many illustrations of situations wherein parties are held to have incurred personal obligations who undoubtedly intended to act only in a representative capacity.

⁸⁶ See Beattie v. Lord Ebury, L. R. 7 Ch. Ap. 777.

See also, cases cited in § 1367, ante.

⁸⁷ See ante, Book III, Chapter I; Stewart v. Shannessy, 2 Ct. Sess. Cas. (5th ser.) 1288.

This whole subject has been fully discussed under the head of the Execution of the Authority,⁸⁸ and nothing further needs to be added to it here, than that where by those rules of construction it is determined that the agent has contracted in his personal capacity, he is, of course, bound upon the contract to the person with whom it was made.

§ 1409. — Reformation of contract to release agent.—Although the agent may thus have bound himself by the express terms of the contract, if he did this as the result of a mistake of fact, equity may, it is held, grant him relief by a reformation of the contract to conform to the actual bargain between the parties.⁸⁹

§ 1410. Where agent conceals fact of agency or name of principal.—As has been already frequently pointed out, it is usually the interest as well as the duty of the agent, in his contractual dealings with third persons, to fully disclose his representative character, and to make all contracts in the name of his principal. Intentionally or unintentionally, however, he may fail to make this disclosure, and may either conceal the fact of his agency altogether, or, though he discloses that he is an agent, may conceal the name or identity of his principal. In the former case, since no one else is named or suggested who may be liable, the rule of law is entirely clear. An agent who conceals the fact of his agency and contracts as the ostensible principal is liable in

⁸⁸ See ante, Book III, Chap. I.

v. Partridge, 11 Ohio, 223, 38 Am. Dec.

⁸⁹ Eustis Mfg. Co. v. Saco Brick Co., 731.

198 Mass. 212. See also, McNaughten

the same manner and to the same extent as though he were the real principal in interest.⁹⁰

As has often been pointed out, it affords no defence in such a case that he is known to be an auctioneer, broker, or other agent or that he ⁹⁰ Wood v. Brewer, 73 Ala. 259; Brent v. Miller, 81 Ala. 309; Armour Packing Co. v. Vietch-Young Produce Co. (Ala.) 39 So. 680; Drake v. Pope, 78 Ark. 327; Boynton v. Brannum, — Ark. —, 136 S. W. 979; Murphy v. Helmrick, 66 Cal. 69; Bradford v. Woodworth, 108 Cal. 684; Evans v. Swan (Colo.), 88 Pac. 149; Jones v. Aetna Ins. Co., 14 Conn. 501; Pierce v. Johnson, 34 Conn. 274; Gerard v. Moody, 48 Ga. 96; Nall v. Farmers' Warehouse Co., 95 Ga. 770; Whitney v. Woodmansee, 15 Idaho, 735; Bickford v. First Nat. Bank, 42 Ill. 238, 89 Am. Dec. 436; Wheeler v. Reed, 36 Ill. 81; Corrigan v. Reilly, 64 Ill. App. 531; Weil v. Defenbaugh, 65 Ill. App. 489; Trench v. Hardin County Canning Co., 67 Ill. App. 269; Loehde v. Halsey, 88 Ill. App. 452; Scaling v. Knollin, 94 Ill. App. 443; Merrill v. Wilson, 6 Ind. 426; Lowrey v. Scargill, 7 Ind. Ter. 497; Nixon v. Downey, 49 Iowa, 166; Lull v. Anamosa Nat. Bank, 110 Iowa, 537; Thompson v. Bldg. & Loan Ass'n, 114 Iowa, 481; Fritz v. Kennedy, 119 Iowa, 628; Temple v. Pennell, 123 Iowa, 729; Mithoff v. Byrne, 20 La. Ann. 363; York County Bank v. Stein, 24 Md. 447; Bartlett v. Raymond, 139 Mass. 275; Brigham v. Herrick, 173 Mass. 460; Welch v. Goodwin, 123 Mass. 71, 25 Am. Rep. 24; Newberry v. Slaughter, 98 Mich. 468; Lewis v. Weidenfeld, 114 Mich. 581; Rochester Distilling Co. v. Bostrum, 158 Mich. 543; Bacon v. Rupert, 39 Minn. 512; Amans v. Campbell, 70 Minn. 493, 68 Am. St. Rep. 547; McClellan v. Parker, 27 Mo. 162; Porter v. Merrill, 138 Mo. 555; Leckie v. Rothenbarger, 82 Mo. App. 615; Sheehy v. Wollman, 152 Mo. App. 506; O'Neil Lumber Co. v. Greffett, 154 Mo. App. 33; Jackson v. McNatt, 93 N. W. 425 (Neb.); Batchelder v. Libbey, 66 N. H. 175; M'Comb v. Wright, 4 Johns. (N. Y.) Ch. 659; Baltzen v. Nicolay, 53 N. Y. 467; Mills v. Hunt, 20 Wend. (N. Y.) 431; Cobb v. Knapp, 71 N. Y. 348, 27 Am. Rep. 51; Kneeland v. Coatsworth, 9 N. Y. Supp. 416; Boyd v. Quinn, 17 Misc. 278; Ashner v. Abenheim, 19 Misc. 282; Forrest v. McCarthy, 30 Misc. 125; Beidleman v. Kelly, 51 Misc. 51; Schmerler v. Barash, 113 N. Y. S. 745; Forney v. Shipp, 4 Jones (N. C.) L. 527; Beymer v. Bonsall, 79 Pa. 298; Meyer v. Barker, 6 Binn. (Penn.) 228; Davenport v. Riley, 2 McCord (S. C.), 198; Conyers v. Magrath, 4 McCord (S. C.), 392; Bacon v. Sondley, 3 Strobb. (S. C.) L. 542, 51 Am. Dec. 646; Hardman v. Kelley, 19 S. D. 608; Siler v. Perkins, — Tenn. —, 149 S. W. 1060; Book v. Jones, 98 S. W. (Tex.) 891; Hatchett & Large v. Sunset Brick Co., 99 S. W. (Tex.) 174; Hauser v. Lane (Tex. Civ. App.), 131 S. W. 1156; Royce v. Allen, 28 Vt. 234; Baldwin v. Leonard, 39 Vt. 260, 94 Am. Dec. 324; Button v. Winslow, 53 Vt. 430; Leterman v. Charlottesville Lumber Co., 110 Va. 769; Gordon v. Brinton, 55 Wash. 568, 133 Am. St. R. 1038; Poole v. Rice, 9 W. Va. 73; Alexander & Edgar Lbr. Co. v. McGeehan, 124 Wis. 325; Ye Seng Co. v. Corbitt, 9 Fed. 423; American Alkali Co. v. Kurtz, 134 Fed. 663; Synnot v. Douglas, 5 Austr. Jur. 165; Davis v. Rood, [1905] Transv. L. R. (S. C.) 196; Coote v. Gillespie, 6 Victor. L. R. (L.) 56; Wilcox v. Clarke, 21 Victor. L. R. 694.

Where the defendant ordered plaintiff to do a job of painting and decorating, and did not inform plaintiff that he was acting as a representative for another, he was held personally responsible for the value of the work done. Corrigan v. Reilly, 64 Ill. App.

is usually employed in acting as agent for other persons. If he does not disclose this agency and the identity of his principal, he will be personally liable.

§ 1411. — Disclosing fact of agency, but concealing identity of principal.—In the second case,—where the fact of the agency is known but the name and identity of the principal are concealed,—the case is not quite so clear. As was said in a case,⁹¹ already cited in another section, “there is no rule of law that makes it impossible to contract with or sell to an unknown but existing party;” and the agent may expressly stipulate that the contract shall bind the unnamed principal and not the agent; or the other party, as was the fact in the case referred to, may expressly decline the responsibility of the agent and rely on that of his undisclosed principal. While such cases are thus possible, they are not the common ones; and for the ordinary case the rule is abundantly established that if an agent, though known to be such, conceals the name or identity of his principal and contracts in

531. To same effect: Kneeland v. Coatsworth, 9 N. Y. Supp. 416; Book v. Jones, 98 S. W. (Tex.) 891.

The president of a mining company who purchases lumber to be used in the construction of a mill for the company, dealing as principal and not disclosing, and the seller not knowing of, his agency, is personally responsible for the value of the lumber purchased. Bradford v. Woodworth, 108 Cal. 684.

In an action to recover the price of a horse, purchased of plaintiff by the defendant, an instruction that if defendant did not disclose his agency to the plaintiff, but left the plaintiff to believe that he was acting for himself, he would be personally liable, was upheld. Fritz v. Kennedy, 119 Iowa, 628.

Where the defendant company, acting as agent of another, loaned money to the plaintiff without disclosing its agency, and plaintiff thought she was borrowing from the defendant, the defendant was held liable for over payments made by her. Thompson v. People's Loan Co., 114 Iowa, 481.

When the defendant employed the plaintiff to procure a mortgage loan, without disclosing to the plaintiff that he was not the owner of the land and the real borrower, he is liable for the value of the services. Bacon v. Rupert, 39 Minn. 512.

Fact that one is known generally to act as agent does not exonerate him if he does not disclose the fact of his agency on the occasion in question and the name of his principal. He may, nevertheless, be acting for himself. Thus an express company making collection of a draft through a forged endorsement was held personally liable where the fact of the agency was not otherwise disclosed, nor the name of the principal. “It matters not that the general business of the express company was to act as agent for others. It could have owned this draft and have collected it as principal.” It was not the duty of the payer to inquire in what capacity it acted. Holt v. Ross, 54 N. Y. 472, 13 Am. Rep. 615, relying on Canal Bank v. Bank of Albany, 1 Hill (N. Y.), 287, in the case of a bank; Mills v. Hunt, 17 Wend. (N. Y.), 333, 20 id. 431, the case of auctioneers.

⁹¹ Rodliff v. Dallinger, 141 Mass. 1, 55 Am. Rep. 439.

his own name without limiting his liability, he will be personally liable upon the contract.⁹² Whether he has done so is, where the contract is in writing or the facts are capable of but one interpretation, a question for the court; otherwise it becomes a question for the jury.

§ 1412. ——— Identity of principal sufficiently disclosed—What terms sufficiently exclude personal liability—Liability by custom.—The identity of the principal may be disclosed by description as well as by name, as where the agent made a contract “for the owners” of a ship named;⁹³ and the agent may sufficiently exclude personal re-

⁹² In Argersinger v. Macnaughton, 114 N. Y. 535, 11 Am. St. Rep. 687, it is said: “The proposition that an agent contracting in his own name, and failing to disclose the name of his principal at the time of making a contract for the sale or purchase of goods, is personally liable for whatever obligation may arise out of the contract, has the support of authority. (Mills v. Hunt, 17 Wend. (N. Y.) 333; Morrison v. Currie, 4 Duer, 79; Cobb v. Knapp, 71 N. Y. 348, 27 Am. Rep. 51; Ludwig v. Gillespie, 105 N. Y. 653; Jemison v. Citizens’ Sav. Bk., 44 Hun, 412, 122 N. Y. 135, 19 Am. St. Rep. 482, 9 L. R. A. 708.) That doctrine is applicable to the present case. The defendant made the contract of sale in his own name, as commission merchant, without disclosing the name of any principal; and his warranty given to produce it may, with-be deemed his undertaking. In such case, it may be supposed that a purchaser relies upon the responsibility of the person with whom he deals for the performance of the contract, and that he is not required to look elsewhere to obtain it. When there is, in fact, a principal the agent may ordinarily relieve himself from personal liability, upon a contract made in his behalf, by disclosing his name at the time of making it. Upon such disclosure, however, the party proceeding to deal with the agent may or may not, as he pleases, enter into contract upon the responsibility of the named principal, but to permit an agent to turn over to his customer an undisclosed and, to the latter, unknown principal, might have the effect to deny to the customer the benefit of any available or responsible means of remedy or relief founded upon the contract. The rule is no less salutary than reasonable that an agent may be treated as the party to the contract made by him in his own name, unless he advises the other party to it of the name of the principal whom he assumes to represent in making it where that is unknown to such party.”

To same effect, see Pugh v. Moore, 44 La. Ann. 209; Landyskowski v. Lark, 108 Mich. 500; Dockarty v. Tillotson, 64 Neb. 432; Powers v. McLean, 14 N. Y. App. Div. 92; Nichols v. Weil, 30 N. Y. Misc. 441; Good v. Rumsey, 50 N. Y. App. Div. 280; Long v. McKissick, 50 S. C. 218; Morris v. Clifton Forge Grocery Co., 46 W. Va. 197; Macdonald v. Bond, 195 Ill. 122; McClure v. Central Trust Co., 165 N. Y. 108, 53 L. R. A. 153; Meyer v. Redmond, 141 N. Y. App. Div. 123; Neely v. State, 60 Ark. 66, 46 Am. St. R. 148, 27 L. R. A. 503; Cooley v. Ksir (Ark.), 151 S. W. 254.

⁹³ Waddell v. Mordecai, 3 Hill (S. C.) L. 22. In this case the contract was: “Received from Mr. Waddell one hundred dollars, on account of passage of slaves on board the Brig Encomium. For the owners. M. C. Mordecai.”

Said the court: “Did Mordecai name his principal? The answer is, he entered into the contract as sponsibility by expressly stating that the contract is made for and on account of his principal, although the principal is not directly named.⁹⁴ On the other hand in such a case, it may be shown that under the custom of trade the agent may be personally liable upon the contract, even though the language used otherwise would have excluded him.⁹⁵ agent for the owners of the Encomium—but he did not express or give their paternal or christian names. Now, is such fullness and precision indispensable, where the communication made is intelligible? I concede that every agent must so disclose his principal at the time of the contract, as to enable the opposite party to have recourse to the principal, in case the agent had authority to bind the agent naming, specifically and him. 2 Kent, 631. But I cannot perceive wherein lies the necessity of severally, every one of a class or company of his principals who are usually designated among men of business by some brief descriptive terms. For instance, were an agent to say, 'the work is to be done for the steamer Etiwan, and I am the captain, or for the owners of Fitzimons' wharf,' this would be enough prima facie, unless, or until, the agent be called on for a more precise specification of the names of his principals. To require more, in every instance, would be very often to require matter utterly superfluous."

In Lyon v. Williams, 5 Gray (Mass.), 557, the contract was made on account of "the several railroad companies between Boston and Zanesville," and was signed "J. S. for the corporations," and was held not to bind J. S. personally. The court said: "But it is said that the names of these corporations are not stated. This is true; but they are capable of being made certain by proper inquiry, and the plaintiff was content to take a contract thus generally designating the parties with whom the liability was to rest for the safe and proper conveyance of the goods."

⁹⁴ The material question here is, of course, to distinguish between the case in which the agent says, "I" buy or sell or promise, but recites that he does it for a principal, in which case he is clearly liable, and the case in which he discloses that the promise or sale or purchase is to be the promise or sale or purchase of the principal. Thus, as was pointed out by several of the judges in Southwell v. Bowditch, 1 C. P. Div. 374, there is a material difference when you seek to hold him liable as buyer, between the case in which the agent says, "I have sold for you to my principals," and the case in which he says, "I have bought of you for my principals." The former case is a sale to his principals (see Fleet v. Murton, L. R. 7 Q. B. 126); the latter may be a sale to himself. Where the contract read "We have this day sold to you on account of J. M. & Co." it was held that the seller sufficiently appeared to be J. M. & Co. and not the brokers who signed the note. Gadd v. Houghton, 1 Ex. Div. 357.

So where the note read "Sold for and on account of owner" it was held that the note sufficiently indicated the owner and not the broker as the seller. Pike v. Ongley, 18 Q. B. Div. 708.

So where the contract was made "for the corporations" i. e., the several railroad companies between Boston, Mass., and Zanesville, Ohio, though they were not specifically named. Lyon v. Williams, 71 Mass. (5 Gray) 557.

Signing "as broker" as distinguished from merely adding "broker," will usually be enough. See Cooper v. Gardiner, [1902] 2 State Rep. N. S. Wales, 67.

⁹⁵ Thus in Pike v. Ongley, 18 Q. B. Div. 708, supra, it was held that

It is also to be noted that though the agent may make himself personally liable in these cases, the other party may also, at his option (negotiable and sealed instruments excepted), ordinarily hold the real principal liable when discovered,—a subject to be hereafter considered.⁹⁶

§ 1413. — Burden on agent to disclose principal.—The duty rests upon the agent, if he would avoid personal liability, to disclose his agency, and not upon others to discover it.⁹⁷ It is not, therefore, enough that the other party has the means of ascertaining the name of the principal; the agent must either bring to him actual knowledge or, what is the same thing, that which to a reasonable man is equivalent to knowledge or the agent will be bound.⁹⁸ There is no

though the agents were clearly not liable on the contract, they might be made liable on proof of a custom to be personally liable in such a case.

To same effect: Fleet v. Murton, L. R. 7 Q. B. 126, supra; Humfrey v. Dale, 7 E. & B. 266, E. B. & E. 1004; Hutchinson v. Tatham, L. R. 8 C. P. 482.

⁹⁶ See post, §§ 1734, 1736.

⁹⁷ Baldwin v. Leonard, 39 Vt. 260, 94 Am. Dec. 324; Fritz v. Kennedy, 119 Iowa, 628; Book v. Jones, 98 S. W. (Tex.) 891; Weil v. Defenbaugh, 65 Ill. App. 489; Bradford v. Woodworth, 108 Cal. 684.

⁹⁸ Thus in Cobb v. Knapp, supra, it was said: "It is not sufficient that the seller may have the means of ascertaining the name of the principal. If so, the neglect to inquire might be deemed sufficient. He must have actual knowledge." See also, Nelson v. Andrews, 19 N. Y. Misc. 623.

This rule, however, cannot be held to mean that the other party may shut his eyes to what would be obvious to any reasonable man. Thus where the question was whether the defendant was personally responsible for the fees of architects who prepared plans and specifications for a college building of which the defendant was president and financial agent, the court said:

"If Johnson had a principal capable of being bound, and whom he had authority to bind by the contract, and if the contract was about the business of the principal and such facts were known to the plaintiffs, then, as Johnson did not expressly bind himself, it must be held to be the contract and debt of his principal, for which he is not responsible. It clearly appears that plaintiffs knew that the building was intended for a public and not for a private purpose. The evidence does not in so many words show that they knew that the building was to be constructed by an existing corporation so as to apprise them that Johnson had a principal capable of being bound by the contract. But it does show that there was in fact such a corporation and principal, and the circumstances that were known to plaintiffs were sufficient to put them upon inquiry. The inquiry that it was their duty to make, under the circumstances of this case, would have developed a responsible principal, and it is difficult to conclude that plaintiffs did not have actual knowledge that they were dealing with a corporation, notwithstanding the fact that they did not at the time of making the contract inquire for or get that information from Johnson, the agent." Johnson v. Armstrong, 83 Tex. 325, 29 Am. St. Rep. 648. See also, Cuneo v. Wimberly (Tex. Civ.

hardship to the agent in this rule, as he always has it in his power to relieve himself from personal liability by fully disclosing his principal and contracting only in the latter's name. If he does not do this, it may be well be presumed that he intended to make himself personally responsible.⁹⁹

An agent who does not disclose his principal and to whom a personal credit is given, can not escape responsibility merely because he generally acts for a disclosed principal in other transactions;¹ nor, of course, because he may not have actually intended to bind himself on this occasion.²

On the other hand, the failure of the agent to expressly disclose his agency will not make him individually liable where the other party knew that he was dealing with a certain principal and had had similar dealings with that principal through the agent's predecessor.³

App.), 115 S. W. 673; Alexander & Edgar Lumber Co. v. McGeehan, cited in third note following.

So where the deacons of a church invited a minister to accept the pastorate of their church, revealing the identity of the church and stating in the letter that they were acting by virtue of a resolution at the church meeting, it was held in an action by the minister for salary that the fund from which he was to be paid was sufficiently identified and that therefore the deacons were not agents for an undisclosed principal and consequently not liable. Morley v. Makin, 22 T. L. R. 7.

⁹⁹ Cobb v. Knapp, 71 N. Y. 349, 27 Am. Rep. 51; Fritz v. Kennedy, 119 Iowa, 628; Weil v. Defenbaugh, 65 Ill. App. 489; Bradford v. Woodworth, 108 Cal. 684; Armour Packing Co. v. Vietch-Young Produce Co. (Ala.), 39 So. 680; Porter v. Merrill, 138 Mo. 555; Kneeland v. Coatsworth, 9 N. Y. Supp. 416; Raymond v. Crown, etc., Mills, 2 Metc. (Mass.) 319; McConnell v. Holderman, 24 Okla. 129.

But see Worthington v. Cowles, 112 Mass. 30, where the rule is laid down that the agent is bound unless from his disclosures the other party understood, or ought as a reasonable man to have understood, that he was dealing with the principal. To same effect, Johnson v. Armstrong, 83 Tex. 325, 29 Am. St. Rep. 648.

So far as the burden of proof upon the trial is concerned, the burden is upon the plaintiff to show that he dealt with the agent under such circumstances as to make the latter liable to the plaintiff. Wilder v. Cowles, 100 Mass. 487.

¹ Brent v. Miller, 81 Ala. 309; Wood v. Brewer, 73 Ala. 259.

² McConnell v. Holderman, 24 Okla. 129; Leterman v. Charlottesville Lumber Co., 110 Va. 769.

³ Forrest v. McCarthy, 30 N. Y. Misc. 125.

So in Alexander & Edgar Lumber Co. v. McGeehan, 124 Wis. 325, it was said: "The general statement, [of the rule] should not be construed as requiring the agent under all circumstances to expressly declare his agency and the name of his principal,—to do so regardless of whether the person dealing with him knows the facts, or is chargeable with knowledge thereof from circumstances brought to his attention."

In Amans v. Campbell, 70 Minn. 493, 68 Am. St. Rep. 547, one Campbell, who was really manager of a business belonging to his wife, in making a contract in relation to the Notice of the agency to one member of a firm, has been held not to be sufficient notice to the firm to relieve the agent from personal responsibility for transactions subsequently had with another member, who did not know, and was not informed of the agency.⁴

§ 1414. — Disclose when.—The liability is to be determined by the conditions known at the time the contract was made or other transaction had. If at that time the principal was not disclosed, his subsequent disclosure will not relieve the agent.⁵

A disclosure, however, is sufficient within this rule if, though not made at the time negotiations were begun, it is full and complete before any contract is made or obligation incurred. And, though not made until after one contract has been entered into, the disclosure would be operative as to further contracts if fully made before such new contracts are consummated.⁶

As has already been pointed out, a usage that the agent shall be personally liable if he does not disclose his principal within a reasonable time, even though the agent would not by reason of its terms be primarily liable upon the contract, is good.⁷

§ 1415. — Agent liable although principal might also be held.—As has been already suggested, although the agent makes himself liable in these cases, the undisclosed principal may also, when discovered, be usually held liable.⁸ This is not true, however, as will be more fully seen hereafter, in the case of negotiable instruments⁹ and instruments under seal.¹⁰ business, signed "Campbell & Co.," without indicating in any way that he did so as agent. It did not appear that there was any other business in the community being conducted under that name. Held, that the mere use of the name "Campbell & Co." did not amount to a disclosure of his agency for his wife, Delia Campbell, doing business under the name of "Campbell & Co."

⁴ Baldwin v. Leonard, 39 Vt. 260, 94 Am. Dec. 324.

⁵ Batchelder v. Libbey, 66 N. H. 175; Cobb v. Knapp, 71 N. Y. 348, 27 Am. Rep. 51; Meyer v. Redmond, 141 App. Div. 123; Nelson v. Andrews, 19 Misc. 623; Whiting v. Saunders, 23 Misc. Rep. 332; Lull v. Anamosa Nat. Bank, 110 Iowa, 537; Pancoast v. Dinsmore, 105 Me. 471, 134 Am. St. Rep. 582. An agent of an undisclosed principal bid at an auction sale and the goods were struck off to him by name. Upon his request, made privately to the clerk, the latter entered the name of the principal as buyer upon the auctioneer's book. Held, that this was not within the authority of the clerk and that the agent was liable. Batchelder v. Libbey, supra.

⁶ Brackenridge v. Claridge, 91 Tex. 527, 43 L. R. A. 593.

⁷ Humfrey v. Dale, El. Bl. & El. 1004; Fleet v. Murton, L. R. 7 Q. B. 126; Hutchinson v. Tatham, L. R. 8 C. P. 482; Pike v. Ongley, 18 Q. B. Div. 708.

⁸ See post, Book IV, Chap. V, Undisclosed Principal.

⁹ See post, § 1736.

¹⁰ See post, §§ 1734, 1735.

The fact that the other party may hold the principal when disclosed does not relieve the agent. The other party has a right to hold the agent who was apparently the contracting party, or (negotiable and sealed instruments excepted), at his option, to charge the real principal in the transaction. This is not a case of joint-liability or of double liability, but of alternative liability. If the other party elects to hold the principal upon discovery, he will release the agent. What constitutes such election is usually a question of fact, and many cases are collected in a later section showing the effect to be given to various acts thought to evidence an election.¹¹ As will there be seen the commencement of an action is ordinarily held not to be enough; the action must proceed to judgment.¹²

§ 1416. — Dealing with agent must have resulted in contract, etc.—It is of course essential to the liability of the agent in these cases that there shall have been a contract made with him by the other party, or that he shall have induced some action on the part of the other party. Thus where the defendant, known to be acting for an undisclosed principal, caused stock in a corporation to be taken, with the tacit assent of the corporation, in the name of a “dummy,” it was held that the defendant was not liable for assessments upon the stock. He was not the record stockholder, and no contract had been made with him; neither had any action been induced by him, except with the consent of the corporation.¹³ The real owner could be charged upon his discovery.

The alleged agent, obviously, must also, as will be more fully seen in a later section, (§ 1462), be something more than a mere automaton or messenger who purports only to deliver a message which he has been directed to transmit.

§ 1417. Where agent acts for a foreign principal.—Somewhat similar to the case of the undisclosed principal has sometimes been thought to be the case of a foreign principal; and a distinction formerly prevailed in cases in which the principal was a resident of a foreign state¹⁴ or country. In such cases it was presumed that the other party had not trusted to the distant and remote principal, but that credit was given to the agent personally although the agent disclosed his agency.¹⁵ But this rule no longer prevails in this country and the contracts of an

¹¹ See post, § 1750 et seq.

¹² See post, §§ 1758, 1759.

¹³ Alkali Co. v. Kurtz, 134 Fed. 663.

¹⁴ That a different state in the United States is to be regarded as a foreign country, see argument of counsel in Kaulback v. Churchill, 59

N. H. 296; Taintor v. Prendergast, 3 Hill (N. Y.), 72, 38 Am. Dec. 618. But contra, see per Walworth, and Verplanck in Kirkpatrick v. Stainer, 22 Wend. 224; Barham v. Bell, 112 N. C. 131.

¹⁵ See Story on Agency, § 268 agent in behalf of foreign principals stand upon the same ground as those made for domestic employers.¹⁶

Such an agent may, like any other, incur personal liability by concealing his principal, or by pledging his own responsibility.

§ 1418. Where there is no responsible principal.—Akin to the cases considered in a preceding subdivision is that wherein the agent assumes to represent a principal who has no legal existence or status, or who has no legal responsibility, even though there may have been the forms of authorization which in other cases would have resulted in authority. These cases are often dealt with as instances of a want of authority (ante § 1389), though they ordinarily belong more properly among the cases considered in the following sections.

§ 1419. Where agent pledges his own responsibility.—It is entirely competent for the agent, although his agency is known and he is fully authorized to bind his principal, to pledge his own personal responsibility. He may do this in two ways, namely, he may add his responsibility to that of the principal, or he may tender his own responsibility instead of that of his principal.¹⁷ The other party may say to him, "I know your principal, and I mean to bind him, but I also mean to make such a contract that, if I prefer, I may hold you upon it." Or the other party may say to the agent, "I do not know your principal well enough to trust him" (or, perhaps, "I know him too well"), "and therefore I will not deal with him at all, but I will deal with you exclusively." Either of these statements the other party may make expressly, or by implication from words or conduct. The agent is, of course, under no obligation to accept either one of these proposals, but he may accept either, and his acceptance, like the offer, ¹⁶ Maury v. Ranger, 38 La. Ann. 485, 53 Am. Rep. 197; Bray v. Kettell, 1 Allen (Mass.), 80; Barry v. Page, 10 Gray (Mass.), 398; Goldsmith v. Mannheim, 109 Mass. 187; Oelricks v. Ford, 23 How. (U. S.) 49, 16 L. Ed. 534; Rogers v. Marsh, 33 Me. 106.

For the English rule, see: Elbinger Actien-Gesellschaft v. Claye, L. R. 8 Q. B. 213; Green v. Kopke, 18 C. B. 549; Wilson v. Zulueta, 14 Ad. & Ell. N. S. (Q. B.) 405; Paice v. Walker, L. R. 5 Ex. 173; Armstrong v. Stokes, L. R. 7 Q. B. 603; Hutton v. Bulloch, L. R. 9 Q. B. 572.

In Victoria: Cheong v. Lohmann, [1907] Vict. L. R. 571; British Co- lumbia: Taylor v. Davenport, 14 West. L. Rep. 257.

¹⁷ Thus in Dahlstrom v. Gemunder, 198 N. Y. 449, 19 Ann. Cas. 771, it is held that the agent of a known and disclosed principal, in selling goods for the latter, may give his own personal warranty in addition to that of the principal; but that the two warranties would not be so independent of each other that the buyer could recover damages upon both, and to the extent which the buyer obtains satisfaction from the principal to that extent would the agent be relieved. See also, Shordan v. Kyler, 87 Ind. 38.

may be made expressly or be deduced from the attendant circumstances. In the former case only does he really act as agent; in the latter he is dealt with as an independent party. The differences in the cases are material. In the former case, the principal or the agent may be held: the principal because he authorized the contract and it is made on his account, even though (sealed and negotiable instruments excepted), he is not named in it; the agent, because he has made the contract in his own name. Such a personal undertaking is based upon a sufficient consideration¹⁸ and is not necessarily inconsistent with his character as agent; and where he has so promised personally, the mere addition of the word "agent," "trustee," "president," etc., to a written promise, will ordinarily, as has been seen, be regarded as mere descriptio personae.¹⁹

In the second case, the agent only and not the principal is bound, for, by the hypothesis, the principal has been expressly excluded as a party.

§ 1420. — The result is to disclose three possible situations in which a known and authorized agent may place himself: (1) contracting only in the name of his principal, he may altogether escape personal liability; (2) he may make the contract in such form that either the principal or the agent may be responsible; (3) he may make the contract in such form that he only is liable upon it.

The first of these situations has been so fully discussed as to need no further consideration here. The second case is more difficult. Yet even here it is possible that either the principal or the agent may be bound,—the principal because he is such and authorized the contract, and the agent because he has contracted in his own name,—and this is true, according to the weight of authority (negotiable instruments and

Agent personally bound: Sadler v. Young, 78 N. J. L. 594; Carroll v. Bowen, 113 Md. 150; Jones v. Gould, 200 N. Y. 18.

¹⁸ See Sayre v. Edwards, 19 W. Va. 352.

¹⁹ See ante, Book III, Chapter III.

See also, Duval v. Craig, 2 Wheat. (U. S.) 45, 4 L. Ed. 180; Townsend v. Hubbard, 4 Hill (N. Y.), 351; Quigley v. De Haas, 82 Pa. 267; Whitehead v. Reddick, 12 Ired. (N. Car.) L. 95; Oliver v. Dix, 1 Dev. & Bat. (N. C.) Eq. 158; Appleton v. Binks, 5 East. 147; Tippets v. Walker, 4 Mass. 595; Bryson v. Lucas, 84 N. C. 680, 37 Am. Rep. 634; De Bebian v. Gola, 64 Md. 262; Landyskowski v. Lark, 108 Mich. 500; Cream City Glass Co. v. Friedlander, 84 Wis. 53, 36 Am. St. Rep. 895, 21 L. R. A. 135; Hardman v. Kelly, 19 S. D. 608; Manly v. Sperry, 115 Ala. 524; Maine Red Granite Co. v. York, 89 Me. 54; Burkhalter v. Perry, 127 Ga. 438, 119 Am. St. R. 343; Candler v. DeGive, 133 Ga. 486; Mott Iron Works v. Clark, 87 S. Car. 199; Fowler v. McKay, 88 Neb. 387; Eddy v. American Amusement Co., 9 Cal. App. 624; Benedict v. Wilson, 10 Cal. App. 719.

sealed instruments excepted), even though the agency was known and the contract was in writing and made in the agent's name, without disclosing the name of the principal.²⁰

²⁰ The leading case upon this question is doubtless Calder v. Dobell, L. R. 6 C. P. 486. There the defendant had authorized one Cherry, a broker, to buy cotton for him but not to disclose his name. The broker's credit not being good enough to enable him to buy the cotton on his own responsibility, he disclosed the name of the defendant. Bought and sold notes were then made in which the broker was named as the buyer, and the defendant's name was not mentioned. The broker advised the defendant that he had bought the cotton of the plaintiffs for him, and the defendant did not object. The plaintiffs first demanded that the broker should accept and pay for the cotton, but not obtaining payment from him, they sued the defendant. It was held that the fact of the defendant's name being disclosed at the time of the contract did not preclude the plaintiffs from having recourse to him; that parol evidence of the circumstances under which the contract was made was admissible; and that the insertion of the broker's name in the contract, though his principal was known at the time, and the subsequent demands upon the broker for payment, did not necessarily amount to an election on the part of the plaintiffs to give credit to the broker, and to him only. Willes, J., in the opinion, said: "I do not agree that two persons cannot be severally liable on the same contract. The question is whether there was anything in the circumstances of this case to negative or exclude the liability of both principal and agent, or to substitute the liability of the latter for that of the former. The facts were properly submitted to the jury; and they have come to a conclusion upon them to which it was competent to them to come. There is nothing to prevent the seller from insisting upon having both principal and agent liable to him at the same time, with the additional advantage of knowing the principal's name at the time. The very object of the plaintiffs' insisting upon being informed of the name of the principal was to make him liable; and Cherry's name was inserted in the contract for the purpose of enabling them to charge him, at their option. To hold that asking the name of the principal at the time is to discharge the principal, would seem to me to be contrary to common sense."

The decision was affirmed in the Exchequer Chamber, where, among others, Kelly, C. B., said: "I think this case is free from doubt or difficulty. The contract was made in the name of Cherry, the agent; but the case shows that it was made on behalf of a principal who was named at the time. I think the plaintiffs had a right to sue either the agent or the principal, at their election. No doubt, the election being once determined, there is an end to the matter; as, where the agent has been sued to judgment. Here, however, nothing was done to determine the election at the time this action was brought against the principal. The question was, I think, properly left to the jury, and upon proper evidence; and the verdict was quite right."

So in Byington v. Simpson, 134 Mass. 169, 45 Am. Rep. 314, it was held that the fact that a person knew, when he entered into a contract in writing not under seal, purporting on its face to be made on the other part by A, and signed by "A, agent," that A was in fact contracting as agent for B, will not prevent him from maintaining an action against B on the contract. Said the court: "We are of opinion that the plaintiffs' knowledge does not make their case

In the third case, as has been pointed out, the agent really does not act as agent at all. The credit is given to him personally. He is the principal in the transaction, and there is no ground for adding any other.

§ 1421. — In view of the possible forms which the contract may thus take, the question arises, has the agent bound the principal alone, has he bound himself and the principal, or has he bound himself alone? Where the negotiations take on an express form, little question ordinarily arises; the difficulty is with those cases in which the matter is not made precise and definite at the time of the transaction, but is to be determined later, when one party affirms and the other denies that the agent's responsibility in some form was pledged. The question then becomes, To whom was the credit given, and, if given to the agent at all, was it an alternative or an exclusive one? How shall this question be determined?

§ 1422. — How determined.—Where the promise is in writing, its construction and effect are ordinarily questions of law to be determined by the court. The question is for the court also where, though the promise is not in writing, only one inference can legally be any weaker than it would have been without it. Whatever the original merits of the rule, that a party not mentioned in a simple contract in writing may be charged as a principal upon oral evidence, even where the writing gives no indication of an intent to bind any other person than the signer, we cannot reopen it, for it is as well settled as any part of the law of agency."

The leading case on the other side is, doubtless, Chandler v. Coe, 54 N. H. 561, 22 Am. Rep. 437, in which it was held that where a written contract is made in the name of an agent of a then known principal, the making of the contract itself constitutes an election to hold the agent and the principal cannot afterwards be held. It was conceded that the rule would be different if the principal had not then been known. Said the court: "But if the principal was known when the contract was made and signed the case is different. If the party who received from an agent a written contract executed in the name of the agent, knowing that he acted for a principal, seeks to hold the principal, it must be on the ground that it was intended to be and was received by him as the contract of the principal; because, if he received it as the contract of the agent, knowing that he was an agent, that constitutes a conclusive election to look alone to the agent. Parol evidence, therefore, if admitted in such a case, does show that the contract which the parties intended to make was not what the writing indicates, but different. It shows that an error was committed in writing it. Its admission, therefore, allows 'the uncertain testimony of slippery memory' to come in and control what the parties have deliberately written and signed, and this is inadmissible because the writing furnishes the best evidence of the actual contract." See also, Ferguson v. McBean, 91 Cal. 63, 14 L. R. A. 65; Gillig v. Lake Bigler Road Co., 2 Nev. 214; Heffron v. Pollard, 73 Tex. 96, 15 Am. St. Rep. 764.

drawn from the facts. In other cases, the question whether the credit was given to the agent personally is always one of fact to be determined from all the circumstances of the case.²¹ In either event, the law aims to ascertain the intent of the parties, and when that is ascertained it is usually conclusive if it can be made so without conflicting with established rules of law.²²

In searching for the intention, several considerations may be called in aid. Thus, where dealings are had with one known to be acting as the agent of a disclosed principal, the legal presumption is that the credit was given to the principal rather than to the agent personally, and this presumption will prevail in the absence of evidence that the credit was given to the agent, and the burden of proof rests upon the party alleging it.²³ So the fact that the agent was known to be insolvent may be taken into consideration in determining whether the credit was given to the agent or his principal.²⁴

So, too, in determining the intention, the fact that under one construction the contract will have validity and force, while under the other it will have neither may be taken into consideration.²⁵

²¹ Anderson v. Timberlake, 114 Ala. 377, 62 Am. St. Rep. 105; Cobb v. Knapp, 71 N. Y. 348, 27 Am. Rep. 51; Steamship Co. v. Merchants' Desp. Trans. Co., 135 Mass. 421; Hovey v. Pitcher, 13 Mo. 191; Fleming v. Hill, 62 Ga. 751; Whitney v. Wyman, 101 U. S. 392, 25 L. Ed. 1050; Paterson v. Gandasequi, 15 East, 62; Addison v. Gandasequi, 4 Taunt. 574.

²² Whitney v. Wyman, supra; Worthington v. Cowles, 112 Mass. 30; Phinzy v. Bush, 129 Ga. 479.

²³ Anderson v. Timberlake, 114 Ala. 377, 62 Am. St. Rep. 105; Spry Lumber Co. v. McMillan, 77 Ill. App. 280; Ketchum v. Sears, 154 Ill. App. 52; Mead v. Altgeld, 136 Ill. 298; Michael v. Jones, 84 Mo. 578; Huston v. Tyler, 140 Mo. 252; Blount v. Tomlinson, 57 Fla. 35, 48 So. 751; Meade Plumbing Co. v. Irwin, 77 Neb. 385; Meeker v. Claghorn, 44 N. Y. 349, 352; Foster v. Persch, 68 N. Y. 400; Ferris v. Kilmer, 48 N. Y. 300; Hall v. Lauderdale, 46 N. Y. 70; Bank of Genesee v. Patchin Bank, 19 N. Y. 312; Title Guarantee Co. v. Sage, 131 N. Y. Supp. 278; Key v. Parnham, 6

Har. & J. (Md.) 418; Johnson v. Welch, 42 W. Va. 18; Alexander, etc., Lumber Co. v. McGeehan, 124 Wis. 325; Boyd Grain Co. v. Thomas (Ark.), 142 S. W. 1150; Jewell v. Colonial Theater Co., 12 Cal. App. 681; Walker v. Cross, 87 C. C. A. 324, 160 Fed. 372. Says Swayne, J., in Whitney v. Wyman, supra, "Where the principal is disclosed, and the agent is known to be acting as such, the latter can not be made personally liable unless he agreed to be so."

Where a physician summoned to attend a tramp run over by a railway engine telephones the general superintendent of the company asking if he shall go and the latter replies, yes, there can be no presumption that the superintendent intended to bind himself personally for the physician's pay. Michigan College of Medicine v. Charlesworth, 54 Mich. 522.

²⁴ Garrett v. Trabue, 82 Ala. 227; Ferris v. Kilmer, 48 N. Y. 300.

²⁵ Thus in Knickerbocker v. Wilcox, 83 Mich. 200, 21 Am. St. Rep. 595, a letter written by the cashier of a

§ 1423. — What facts not conclusive.—In endeavoring to determine to whom the credit was given, a number of common facts may be considered which, while ordinarily significant, are not necessary to bind a national bank upon the official letter-head of the bank, requesting the person addressed to furnish a bond for certain persons named in the letter and saying "They are good customers of ours and if you will sign said bond we will stand between you and all harm," was signed "L. T. Wilcox, Cashier." In an action against Wilcox brought by the person addressed who furnished the bond and now demanded indemnity, the court held that the letter could not bind the bank because such an undertaking would be ultra vires. Did it, then, bind Wilcox? It is well settled that such a signature as this contrary to the ordinary rule of descriptio personae, is regarded as the signature of the bank. It being legally impossible to hold the bank, can the promise be regarded as an individual one? The court below directed a verdict for the defendant. The supreme court held this error, saying: "The paper not being the contract of the bank, then, can it be said to be the contract of Wilcox himself? Does it, upon its face, appear so clearly to have been intended as the undertaking of the bank, executed through Wilcox as its cashier and agent, as to bring it within the rule that his want of authority to bind the bank, for which he assumed to act, does not render him individually liable, when the facts and circumstances indicate that no such liability was intended by either of the parties? In deciding this question, weight must be given to the argument that the writing of this letter will not lightly be assumed to have been a mere idle ceremony. We must assume that the parties to it intended it to have some effect. The cases in Missouri, (Michael v. Jones, 84 Mo. 578; Humphrey v. Jones, 71 Mo. 62; and Ce- ment Co. v. Jones, 8 Mo. App. 373), relied on by counsel for defendant, were all cases in which the guardian of an insane person had traded with his ward's estate, contrary to the provisions of law, and had suffered losses. The persons dealing with him had done so with full knowledge of the fact that he was acting not for himself, but for his ward. It was held that where the facts are known to both parties, and the mistake is one of law as to the liability of the principal, the fact that the principal cannot be held is no ground for charging the agent.

"We cannot apply that rule to this case, for the reason that it does not clearly and unequivocally appear that Wilcox was claiming to act for the bank, and that he was not intending to bind himself. To say that he intended to bind the bank is to suppose him ignorant of the plain rules of law governing the institution of which he was a principal officer. There are many cases in which it has been held that the addition to one's signature of his title does not make the paper the contract of the corporation in which he is an officer. Such designation has been treated as a mere description of the person. Tilden v. Barnard, 43 Mich. 376, 38 Am. Rep. 197; Hayes v. Brubaker, 65 Ind. 27."

While the rule stated in the text is believed to be sound the conclusion in the case just referred to, is believed to be questionable. Where the agent adopts a form of signature which is the common and accepted form when it is intended to bind the principal, can any fair inference be drawn that he intended to bind himself personally in this case because the contract was one not within the power of the principal? In Mer- sarily conclusive. Thus the fact that goods sold were charged to the agent "is no conclusive evidence that the credit was given by the vendors exclusively to the agent, and that they intended to look to him solely for their pay;"²⁶ the fact that the other party accepts a written obligation signed by the agent alone is not conclusive;²⁷ and even, by the weight of authority at least, as has been seen, the fact that the other party with knowledge of both principal and agent, enters into a written contract, in which the agent alone is named as a party, is not conclusive of his intention not to hold the principal also.²⁸ chants' & Planters' Packet Co. v. Streuby, 91 Miss. 211, the facts and the opinion are so brief that they may be reproduced entire. Opinion by Calhoun, J.: "This action is to hold Streuby liable personally as a subscriber on his signature to the capital stock of a corporation. His signature is in these words: 'F. Streuby, for Levy Bros. Oil Mills, Ltd.' The oil mill was a corporation, and so it was powerless, in this state, to subscribe for stock of another corporation. This was equally known to him and appellant corporation, and no fraud or fraudulent representation appears. We have, therefore, not a case where the principal was or could have been bound by the subscription in any event; it being ultra vires. We hold that the signatures did not bind Streuby personally, and adopt the reasoning of Judge Brewer in the two cases of Holt v. Winfield Bank (C. C.), 25 Fed. 812, and Abeles v. Cochran, 22 Kan. 405, 31 Am. Rep. 194."

In the opinion of Brewer, J., in Abeles v. Cochran, supra, there is a very exhaustive examination of the question.

See also Thilmany v. Iowa Paper Bag Co., 108 Iowa, 357, 75 Am. St. Rep. 259.

²⁶ Meeker v. Claghorn, 44 N. Y. 349; so also, Foster v. Persch, 68 N. Y. 400.

So where the question was whether painting had been done for the wife or for her husband as her agent in the contracting, the fact that after the painter had been told that the house belonged to the wife, he made out his bill against the husband, while perhaps evidence of an intention to look to the husband alone, was not absolutely conclusive of such a purpose, and of an abandonment of any claim against the wife. Dyer v. Swift, 154 Mass. 159.

The mere fact that one is an independent contractor for the erection of a building is not conclusive that in the particular case he did not act as agent for the proprietor. Lambert v. Phillips, 109 Va. 632. See also, Gardner v. Bean, 124 Mass. 347; Raymond v. Eagle Mills, 2 Metc. (Mass.) 319.

²⁷ Coleman v. First Nat. Bank of Elmira, 53 N. Y. 388; Gates v. Brower, 9 N. Y. 205, 59 Am. Dec. 530.

²⁸ Calder v. Dobell, L. R. 6 C. P. 486; Byington v. Simpson, 134 Mass. 169, 45 Am. Rep. 314.

In York Co. Bk. v. Stein, 24 Md. 447, it was said: "The law is well settled that the principal is personally responsible in all cases of contracts made by an agent, within the scope of his authority, and this is not varied by the fact that the agent contracts in his own name, whether he discloses his agency or not, provided the circumstances of the case do not show that an exclusive credit was given to the agent."

In Merrell v. Witherby, 120 Ala. 418, 74 Am. St. R. 39, it is said: "From the authorities, the rule is deducible that, when a sale is made to one who is acting in the purchase

Where, under the circumstances, it is properly found that the agent has pledged his own responsibility, the fact that he did not intend to do so, will not relieve him.²⁹

as agent for a principal who is known to the vendor, and only the personal obligation of the agent is taken for the price of the property sold, the prima facie presumption arises that the personal credit is given to the agent alone."

Contra: The leading case to the contrary as has been seen is Chandler v. Coe, 54 N. H. 561, 22 Am. Rep. 437. See Anderson v. Timberlake, 114 Ala. 377, 62 Am. St. Rep. 105, supra, where it is said that in order to make the agent liable the credit must have been given exclusively to him. In Calder v. Dobell, supra, Hannen, J., in the Exchequer Chamber, referred with approval to Story on Agency, § 160*a*. With reference to this authority, the court, in Chandler v. Coe, expressed itself as follows:

"It is laid down in Story on Agency, sec. 160*a*, that the doctrine maintained in the more recent authorities' is, that 'if the agent possesses due authority to make a written contract not under seal, and he makes it in his own name, whether he describes himself to be an agent or not, or whether the principal be known or unknown, he, the agent, will be liable to be sued and be entitled to sue thereon, and his principal also will be liable to be sued, and be entitled to use thereon, in all cases, unless from the attendant circumstances it is clearly manifested that an exclusive credit is given to the agent, and it is intended by both parties that no resort shall in any event be had by or against the principal upon it.' This section first appeared in the second edition of the work, published a short time before the death of the distinguished author. A careful examination of the numerous authorities there cited in support of it will show that perhaps not one of them sustains it to the full extent of holding it to be immaterial whether the principal is 'known or unknown,' unless Bateman v. Phillips, decided in 1812, 15 East, 272, may be an exception. On the contrary, this unguarded statement of our great jurist has occasioned most of the decisions which might now be cited as going to that extent. The dictum of Baron Parke, which we have already quoted from Higgins v. Senior, the leading case cited by Story, does indeed sustain him, and it was doubtless the authority on which he chiefly relied; but the point did not arise in that case, the question there being, not whether parol evidence is admissible to charge the principal in such a case, but whether it is admissible to discharge the agent,—which was decided in the negative, and is everywhere well settled. But in Calder v. Dobell, before cited, the precise question arose, and the decision sustains the section quoted from Story to the fullest extent; and such is now, unquestionably, the law in England."

Chandler v. Coe, is approved and followed in Ferguson v. McBean, 91 Cal. 63, 14 L. R. A. 65, and Gillig v. Lake Bigler Road Co., 2 Nev. 214, though the latter case involved a negotiable instrument.

The syllabus in McIntosh-Huntington Co. v. Rice, 13 Colo. App. 393, also contains a statement of the proposition which is contrary to Calder v. Dobell, but the case shows that the contract was under seal and the court refers to Rice v. Bush, 16 Colo. 484, in which case the contract was also under seal.

So in Heffron v. Pollard, 73 Tex.

²⁹ McConnell v. Holderman, 24 Okla. 129.

§ 1424. — Principal also may be bound—Election.—Where, within the rules above referred to, it is found that the agent has pledged his own responsibility, he will of course be bound accordingly.³⁰ Where both the principal and the agent are liable, the liability of the agent continues until the other party has done something showing that he intends to enforce it against the principal alone. Whether he has done so or not is usually a question of fact to be decided with reference to the significance of the acts relied upon as evincing an election,³¹ although there are certain acts which may constitute an election as a

96, 15 Am. St. Rep. 764, in which Chandler v. Coe, supra, is cited with apparent approval. It is said: "If however the principal be disclosed, and the face of the writing shows that the agent is bound, it is presumed that the other party has elected in the contract itself to look to the agent and the principal is not liable upon it."

³⁰ Bell v. Teague, 85 Ala. 211; Manly v. Sperry, 115 Ala. 524; Mead v. Altgeld, 136 Ill. 298; Miller v. Early (Ky.) 58 S. W. 789; Ziegler v. Fallon, 28 Mo. App. 295; Ross v. McAnaw, 72 Mo. App. 99; Landyskowski v. Lark, 108 Mich. 500; Maine Red Granite Co. v. York, 89 Me. 54; Dockarty v. Tillotson, 64 Neb. 432; McBratney v. Heydecker, 8 Misc. 309; O'Rourke v. Geary, 207 Pa. 240; Hardman v. Kelley, 19 S. D. 608; Cream City Glass Co. v. Friedlander, 84 Wis. 53, 36 Am. St. Rep. 895, 21 L. R. A. 135; Higgins v. Senior, 8 M. & W. 834.

In order to hold the agent upon a written contract, it is of course essential that the contract shall contain apt words to bind him. Johnson v. Welch, 42 W. Va. 18.

Where an agent in selling goods for a principal, makes an oral warranty for himself, and afterward makes a written contract for his principal, with a warranty by the principal, his personal oral warranty is not merged in the written warranty of his principal; and in an action on a note payable to the agent, for the goods, evidence of the oral warranty is admissible. Shoridan v. Kyler, 87 Ind. 38. See also, Dahlstrom v. Gemunder, 198 N. Y. 449, 19 Ann. Cas. 717; Luckes v. Meserole, 132 App. Div. N. Y. 20.

³¹ As to the effect, as constituting an election, of such acts as taking the note of one party, charging the goods to him, filing a claim against his estate and the like, see post, Book IV, Chap. V, under Undisclosed Principals. Also see, Gardner v. Bean, 124 Mass. 347; Raymond v. Crown, etc., Mills, 2 Metc. (Mass.) 319; Dyer v. Swift, 154 Mass. 159.

Where a note signed by an agent, as accommodation maker for his principal, came to the hands of the plaintiff without knowledge of the agency of the signer: after the disclosure to him of the principal, the principal became insolvent, and the plaintiff presented his claim against the estate and received a dividend. The plaintiff contended that his action was solely for the purpose of keeping alive the agent's claim against his principal's estate. The court held that this did not constitute such an election to hold the principal as to preclude the plaintiff from recovering the residue from the agent. Hoffman v. Anderson, 112 Ky. 893.

Where the facts show that the third party has manifested an intention to hold the principal exclusively, he cannot thereafter hold the agent. Provenchere v. Reiffess, 62 Mo. App. 50.

matter of law. Whether the commencement of an action against the principal is per se an election, or whether the action must be prosecuted at least to judgment, is a question upon which there has been some difference of opinion, but the weight of authority is with the latter view.³²

Where on the other hand the credit was originally given to the agent exclusively, the election is made at the time of the contract and the other party cannot afterward resort to the principal.³³

§ 1425. — Agent alone liable on negotiable and sealed instruments.—The rule that either the principal or the agent may usually be held liable even upon written contracts made in the agent's name is, as has already been suggested, subject to two well-defined exceptions.

In the case of negotiable instruments, the rule is well settled that no one can be charged as a party who does not appear as such upon the face of the instrument. If, therefore, within the rules already laid down,³⁴ the instrument is not so executed as to bind the principal by its terms, he cannot be held upon the instrument at all. In such a case (except in the rare event in which the instrument is so executed ³² So held in Codd Co. v. Parker, 97 Md. 319; Cobb v. Knapp, 71 N. Y. 348, 27 Am. Rep. 51; Murphy v. Hutchinson, 93 Miss. 643, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 785, 17 Ann. Cas. 611; Buckingham v. Trotter, [1901] 1 State Rep. N. S. Wales, 253.

The question commonly arises, as would naturally be expected, in actions against the principal, in which it is claimed that the other party has elected to hold the agent. The principle, however, seems to be the same in both cases, and the weight of authority is clearly to the effect that nothing short of a prosecution of the claim to judgment operates per se as an election.

See post, Book IV, Chap. V, under Undisclosed Principal. Priestly v. Fernie, 3 H. & C. 977; Kingsley v. Davis, 104 Mass. 178; Lindquist v. Dickson, 98 Minn. 369, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 729, 8 Ann. Cas. 1024; Ferry v. Moore, 18 Ill. App. 135; Steele Smith Gro. Co. v. Potthast, 109 Iowa, 413; Tuthill v. Wilson, 90 N. Y. 423.

In McLean v. Sexton, 44 N. Y. App.

Div. 520, it was held that under the mechanics' lien act of New York, one action may be maintained against both principal and agent, although only one satisfaction can be had.

³³ Silver v. Jordan, 136 Mass. 319; Wattle v. Thayer, 56 Ill. App. 282. In the Matter of Bateman, 7 Misc. (N. Y.) 633.

If the seller of a chattel takes the promissory note of the agent of the buyer, knowing him to be such and intending to receive it as payment and to give exclusive credit to the agent, he cannot, upon its dishonor, recover of the principal. Perkins v. Cady, 111 Mass. 318.

Where an agent contracts for his principal with the distinct understanding that the agent is to pay for the work, he is liable therefor, and the act of the plaintiff in erroneously joining the principal as a party defendant is not an act which will release the agent. Ross v. McAnaw, 72 Mo. App. 99.

³⁴ See ante, § 1123 et. seq.

that no one is bound), the agent alone is bound.³⁵ What the forms of execution are, which impose personal liability upon the agent, has been so fully considered in an earlier chapter³⁶ that nothing further need be added to it here. As has there been seen, where the promise is otherwise an individual one, words indicating a representative character are usually regarded as mere descriptio personae.

The case of the instrument under seal furnishes the second exception. Here also under well-settled rules, that person only is bound who appears on the face to be the party to the deed. If that person be the agent, he alone is liable. A fuller discussion of this exception will be found in a later section.³⁷

§ 1426. Agent may be jointly liable with principal.—The cases referred to in the preceding sections are chiefly cases in which the principal was the only party having any real interests. It is perhaps scarcely necessary to mention that there may be cases in which the agent will have such an interest of his own, together with his principal, that the principal and the agent may both be bound upon the contract.³⁸ And even though the agent may have no personal interest in the transaction, no reason is apparent why in binding a disclosed principal he may not bind himself jointly with that principal. It is, however, difficult to see, how he can bind himself jointly with an undisclosed principal.³⁹

§ 1427. Agent may bind himself by collateral contract.—Still further, it is possible that the agent may bind his principal only upon the main or principal contract and may bind himself only by a subsidiary contract collateral to the main one. Thus an agent in selling his principal's goods, for example, may add to the contract of sale which he makes for his principal his own collateral agreement to warrant the quality of the goods so sold.⁴⁰ In such a case, of course, ³⁵ See ante, Book III, Chap. III.

³⁶ See Book III, Chap. III.

³⁷ See post, Book IV, Chap. V.

³⁸ Gill v. General Electric Co., 129 Fed. 349; Moore v. Booker, 4 N. D. 543.

Where an agent acts in behalf of himself and an undisclosed principal both are liable upon the contract. Lull v. Anamosa Nat. Bank, 110 Iowa, 537.

³⁹ See the curious case of Tew v. Wolfsohn, 77 N. Y. App. Div. 454, in the Court of Appeals, 174 N. Y. 272, in which there was much discussion and the judges in both courts were divided in opinion. The only thing, however, which seems to be decided is that the anomalous complaint in the case was not open to demurrer upon the ground that two causes of action had been improperly joined, the majority in the court of appeals holding that the complaint stated but one cause of action upon a contract either of the principal alone made by the agent or by the principal and agent jointly.

⁴⁰ Wilder v. Cowles, 100 Mass. 487; Rondquist v. Higham, 33 Minn. 490;

there is no room for election, because both are not bound to the same undertaking.

§ 1428. How in case of public agent.—It is also competent for a public agent to bind himself personally, if he so elects, but it is not presumed that he will or has done so. Indeed, the presumption that the agent of a known principal intends to bind the latter rather than himself, is stronger in the case of a public agent than in that of the agent of an individual. It is incumbent, therefore, upon him who seeks to hold a known public agent personally responsible, to adduce clear proof of an intention so to be bound.⁴²

§ 1429. Agent's right of set-off and recoupment.—When an agent who has made himself liable on a contract made for his principal is sued thereon, a question may arise respecting his right of set-off or recoupment against the plaintiff's claim. With respect of claims of his own of which he may desire to avail himself, there would seem to be no doubt of his right to do so. With respect of claims belonging to his principal the case is not so clear. The editors of the ninth American edition of Smith's Leading Cases express the opinion that the agent should be allowed to set off a claim due from the plaintiff to his principal, provided the principal consents; but they are also of opinion that the authorities are opposed to their view.⁴³ The cases actually in point are very few. In the case most frequently referred to,⁴⁴ where the agent was being sued upon a contract for services made for a principal, but alleged to bind the agent personally, the court held that the defendant could not set-off, against the plaintiff's claim, a demand which the principal had against the plaintiff arising out of an entirely separate transaction. There was no evidence as to whether the principal was willing or unwilling. No question was involved respecting a claim growing out of the same transaction, but the court said: "If the principal had made payments to the plaintiff (as distinguished from a set-off) for and on account of his work, that would have presented a different question."

Argersinger v. Macnaughton, 114 N. Y. 535, 11 Am. St. Rep. 867; Shordan v. Kyler, 87 Ind. 38; Dahlstrom v. Gemunder, 198 N. Y. 449, 19 Ann. Cas. 771; Luckes v. Meserole, 132 N. Y. App. Div. 20.

⁴² New York, etc., Co. v. Harbison, 16 Fed. 688; Hall v. Lauderdale, 46 N. Y. 70; Gill v. Brown, 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 385; Miller v. Ford, 4 Rich. (S. C.) L. 376, 55 Am. Dec. 687; Hodgson v. Dexter, 1 Cranch (U. S.

C. C.), 109, Fed. Cas. No. 6,565; Macbeath v. Haldimand, 1 T. R. (Durnf. & E.) 172; Ogden v. Raymond, 22 Conn. 379, 58 Am. Dec. 429; Walker v. Swartwout, 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 444, 7 Am. Dec. 334; Roach v. Rutter, 40 Mont. 167.

⁴³ 2 Smith's Leading Cases, 9th Am. Ed. page 1370.

⁴⁴ Forney v. Shipp, 4 Jones (N. C.), Law, 527.

In a case in New York ⁴⁵ counsel contended, "that an agent who is sued to compel him to pay a claim for which he has made himself liable can recoup any claim which his principal would have, arising out of the contract on which the agent is liable, but that he cannot recoup a claim of the principal arising out of another contract." The court said: "This is a correct statement of the law."

3. Where the Agent has Received Money.

§ 1430. In general.—The question of the liability of the agent to third persons, for money received by him, may arise under two states of fact. It may be money which the agent has received from such third persons to be paid over to his principal, but which, for some reason, they are desirous of recovering before it reaches the hand of his principal. Or it may be money received by the agent from his principal to be paid to such third persons, but which the agent has failed or refused to pay to them, either for some purposes of his own, or because he has been directed by his principal so to do.

The reasons why the party paying, in the first class of cases, may desire to recover the money may be very numerous. He may have paid it under mistake of law or fact, either as to his own liability to pay or the principal's right to receive. He may have paid it because he was induced or coerced by the fraud or extortion of the principal alone, of the agent alone, or of both. He may also desire to recover it because, though he would concede that the principal had the right to receive it at the time it was paid, he contends that something has since occurred that terminates the right of the principal to receive it.

a. Where Money has been Paid to Agent for Principal.

§ 1431. No liability where money properly paid to which principal was entitled.—Before taking up the cases in which there is alleged to have been some infirmity in the payment, it may be profitable to observe that where money has been paid to an authorized agent which was properly paid and which the principal had the right to receive and retain, the person paying it can not recover it from the agent, even though the agent fails or refuses to pay it to his principal. The agent owes a duty to his principal to pay it to the latter; the principal has ample remedies to compel payment; and it is no concern of the person paying that the agent does not perform this his duty to his principal.⁴⁶

⁴⁵ Elwell v. Skiddy, 77 N. Y. 282. (N. Y.) 627; Hall v. Lauderdale, 46 Same: Leterman v. Charlottesville N. Y. 70; Fisher v. Meeker, 118 App. Lumber Co., 110 Va. 769. Div. (N. Y.) 452; Colvin v. Holbrook, ⁴⁶ Smith v. Essex Bank, 22 Barb. 2 N. Y. 126.

§ 1432. Liability for money paid to him by mistake.—An agent acting for a known principal and duly authorized, to whom money has, by mistake or other similar cause, been voluntarily paid for the use of his principal, is not liable to the person so paying it where, before notice of such mistake, he has paid it over to his principal, even though the principal had no legal right to receive it. In such event, the person paying it must look to the principal.⁴⁷

The agent, however, may in most cases be held liable if, after being apprised of the mistake and required not to pay it over, he then pays the money to his principal.⁴⁸

Where a third person buys goods of an agent and properly pays him for them, and later on demand pays again directly to the principal, he cannot recover from the agent. Fisher v. Meeker, supra.

⁴⁷ Hauenstein v. Ruh, 73 N. J. L. 98; Shepard v. Sherin, 43 Minn. 382; Gulf City Const. Co. v. Louisville, etc., Ry. Co., 121 Ala. 621; Lang v. Friedman, 166 Mo. App. 354, 148 S. W. 992; Ashley v. Jennings, 48 Mo. App. 142; La Farge v. Kneeland, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 455; Law v. Nunn, 3 Ga. 90; Granger v. Hathaway, 17 Mich. 500; Buller v. Harrison, 2 Cowp. 565; Wallis v. Shelly, 30 Fed. 747; Morrison v. Currie, 4 Duer (N. Y.), 79; Pool v. Adkisson, 1 Dana (Ky.), 110; Duffy v. Buchanan, 1 Paige (N. Y.), 453; Cabot v. Shaw, 148 Mass. 459; Garland v. Salem Bank, 9 Mass. 408, 6 Am. Dec. 86; Silliman v. Wing, 7 Hill (N. Y.), 159; Upchurch v. Norsworthy, 15 Ala. 705; Tripple v. Littlefield, 46 Wash. 156; Gable v. Crane, 24 Pa. Super. 56. See also Ledwith v. Merritt, 74 N. Y. App. Div. 64, aff'd, 174 N. Y. 512. But in Baylis v. Bishop of London, [1913] 1 Ch. 127, it was held, distinguishing Sadler v. Evans, 4 Burr. 1984, that this rule did not apply to the Bishop of London, who had received tithe rent charges which had been paid in mistake of fact, and by him duly paid out or accounted for. It was held that the Bishop was not an agent within the meaning of the rule.

⁴⁸ See Buller v. Harrison, 2 Cowp. 565, (where plaintiff paid money, believed to be due on an insurance policy, to defendant as agent of the insured, but the loss was misrepresented); O'Connor v. Clopton, 60 Miss. 349, (where the plaintiff paid to defendant usurious interest on a note which defendant's principal held against plaintiff); United States Nat'l Bank v. National Park Bank, 59 Hun (N. Y.), 495, (affirmed without opinion, 129 N. Y. 647), (where plaintiff bank paid by mistake to defendant bank, which was agent of another party for collection, $5,000 on a draft which was originally drawn for a much smaller amount, the figures having been fraudulently raised); Garland v. Salem Bank, 9 Mass. 408, 6 Am. Dec. 86 (where the plaintiff, an endorser, had paid to the defendant, a collecting bank, the amount of the note, mistakenly believing that his liability as endorser had been fixed); Griffith v. Johnson, 2 Harr. (Del.) 177, (where the defendant, a collecting agent, by error in computation, had received more than was due on the amount he was authorized to collect.)

In Cox v. Prentice, 3 Maule & S. 344, the defendant had received a bar of silver from his principal. He sold it to plaintiff who paid him at the rate it assayed. The plaintiff upon discovering a mistake in the assay, recovered from the defendant the excess payment occasioned by the mistake.

Although the agent may thus be held, it is usually true that the other party may, at his option, hold the principal liable.

Even though the money has not yet actually come into the principal's hands, it is in the hands of his agent, and wherever at least the principal can be deemed to have authorized the agent to receive it, the party paying may recover it from the principal as though the principal had in fact received it.⁴⁹ § 1433. — The situation here seems to be this: the party paying the money to the agent, influenced by a mistake under which the principal may or may not also labor, has paid the money to the agent, with the understanding that he is to pay it to his principal. If, before he is notified of the mistake, the agent does the very thing he is expected to do,—namely, pays the money to his principal,—the other party can certainly have no claim upon him for its repayment. If, however, the agent is notified of the mistake before he has paid the money over, two situations may present themselves, (1) If the principal and the other party were mutually mistaken as to the right of the principal to receive the money, and the principal authorized the agent to receive it, and the other party paid it to the agent for the principal, it might very well be held that, even though the money has not yet been paid over, it is, in contemplation of law, in the hands of the principal, and the action should be against him only for its recovery. Against this view it may be urged that the principal was not really entitled to the money, that the authority to receive it was conferred by mistake, that the party paying is clearly entitled to have it back, and that he should be entitled to intercept it before it has gone further.

In Shepard v. Sherin, 43 Minn. 382, it was said: "The notice of the mistake, and requirement not to pay the principal, need not be formal. The rule that, if he pays over without notice, he is not liable, is for the agent's protection; and, to deprive him of the protection, the notice to him should be sufficient to apprise him what the mistake is and that by reason of it the party paying it to him intends to reclaim it."

Even if the agent be liable, the proper action, in the absence of fraud, is for money had and received and not for conversion. Mathews v. O'Shea, 45 Neb. 299.

⁴⁹ Cook v. Cook, 28 Ala. 660; Eufaula Grocery Co. v. Missouri National Bank, 118 Ala. 408.

In Eufaula Grocery Co. v. Missouri National Bank, supra, it is said: "The general proposition can not be well denied, that where a person, as authorized agent of another, receives and holds money which ex equo et bono belongs to a third, the latter may elect to hold either the principal or the agent responsible (the latter, by giving him notice of the election before he pays the money over to the principal), and maintain an action for money had and received against the party so elected

(2) Where the mistake is the mistake of the party paying only, the case is somewhat changed. Here the principal never thought that he was entitled to the money; he has given the agent no authority to receive it; he ought not to take it if the agent should offer to pay it to him, and there would seem to be no ground upon which such a payment, which the principal has not actually received, should be deemed a payment to him. The right to recover from the agent the money which is still in his hands would seem to be clear.

§ 1434. Liability for money received by him through wrongful act of principal alone.—The same rules should apply where the party paying has been led to make the payment as the result of the fraud or coercion of the principal alone, the agent being in no way a party to it.

In the cases in this section and the preceding one, the party paying, although his action may have been induced by mistake or fraud, really intended that the money should be paid to the principal, and if it has been so paid by the agent, before the other party demands it back, the agent should not be liable.⁵⁰ Inasmuch, however, as the principal in these cases had no right to the money, and there could really be no agency to receive it, the other party should be enabled to regain it if he can intercept it before it leaves the agent's hands.⁵¹

§ 1435. — Change in agent's situation as equivalent of payment.—Within the contemplation of the rule of the two preceding sections, the agent should not be liable where, before notice of the mistake or fraud, he has done some act upon the assumption that the payment was good, by which he will be prejudiced if it be held invalid.⁵² to be held.—2 Greenl. Ev. (15th ed.) 125, and authorities there cited. Story on Agency, 266-68, 300, 301; Paley on Agency (by Lloyd), pp. 388-94; Kennedy v. Balt. Ins. Co., 3 Har. & J. (Md.) 367, 6 Am. Dec. 499; 2 Ency. Pl. & Pr. 1021. The case of Cook v. Cook, 28 Ala. 660, is also directly in point. An election to hold the one is a renunciation of all remedy against the other. If the principal be sued, he must be at liberty to receive the money from the agent. The plaintiff cannot coerce money out of him, and, pending the proceeding for that purpose, stop it in the hands of the agent, depriving him, the principal, of the means of obtaining it to meet the plaintiff's recovery against him. For the same reason, if the election is to hold the agent, and the proper notice is given to stop the money in his hands, the principal could not, thereafter, be properly sued. The remedies are, indeed in every respect, inconsistent, not concurrent."

⁵⁰ Agent not liable for money received by him as result of duress or extortion practiced by principal without the agent's knowledge where he has paid over the money to the principal before notice or demand. Owen v. Cronk, [1895] 1 Q. B. 265.

⁵¹ Herrick v. Gallagher, 60 Barb. (N. Y.) 566.

⁵² See La Farge v. Kneeland, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 455; Mowatt v. McLean, 1

But so long as he stands in his original situation, and until there has been a change of circumstances by his having paid over the money to his principal or done something equivalent to it, he remains liable if he be liable at all.⁵³

The mere forwarding of his account to his principal and placing the money to his credit, is not such a change of circumstances as will relieve him.⁵⁴

§ 1436. Liability where principal's right terminated after payment.—The question of the right to recover the money may also arise, as has been pointed out, where, though it is conceded that the principal had a right to it at the time it was paid to the agent, it is contended that his right to it had ceased before it was paid over by the agent. Here, by the hypothesis, the principal's right to the money was clear at the time it was paid, and if the agent has paid it over to the principal, before the change in circumstances relied upon, there would be no ground for contending that the agent was liable to the party paying.⁵⁵ But suppose that after payment to the agent and before he has paid it to his principal or altered his situation respecting Wend. (N. Y.) 173; Langley v. Warner, 3 N. Y. 327; McDonald v. Napier, 14 Ga. 89; Holland v. Russell, 1 B. & S. 424; Buller v. Harrison, 2 Cowp. 565.

The application of the money, with the principal's consent, to a debt he owed the agent, and a closing of the account between them, constitutes a payment to the principal within the rule. Mowatt v. McLean, supra; McDonald v. Napier, supra; Holland v. Russell, supra.

In LaFarge v. Kneeland, supra, the agent had by the direction of his principals, who were partners, closed the account with them and transferred the money to the individual account of one of the partners. This was held equivalent to payment.

⁵³ Elliott v. Swartwout, 10 Peters (35 U. S.), 137, 9 L. Ed. 373; Buller v. Harrison, supra; Cox v. Prentice, 3 Maule & Sel. 348.

⁵⁴ Cox v. Prentice, supra; Buller v. Harrison, supra. See also, Smith v. Binder, 75 Ill. 492; Garland v. Salem Bank, 9 Mass. 408, 6 Am. Dec. 86.

In Buller v. Harrison, supra, it was said: "In this case, there was no new credit, no acceptance of new bills, no fresh goods bought or money advanced. In short no alteration in the situation which the defendant and his principal stood in towards each other."

So in Smith v. Binder, 75 Ill. 492, quoting from Vol. I of Chitty on Pleadings, it is said: "The mere passing of such money in account with his principal, or making a rest, without any new credit given to him, fresh bills accepted, or further sums advanced to the principal in consequence of it, is not equivalent to a payment of the money to the principal."

That merely crediting the amount to the principal's account is not enough, see also, United States Nat'l Bank v. National Park Bank, 59 Hun, 495, (affirmed without opinion, 129 N. Y. 647); National Park Bank v. Seaboard Bank, 114 N. Y. 28, 11 Am. St. R. 612; Bank of Commerce v. Union Bank, 3 N. Y. 236.

⁵⁵ Cooper v. Tim, 16 N. Y. Misc. 372; Gable v. Crane, 24 Pa. Super. 56.

it, it is contended that the principal's right has terminated. May the other party now recover the money from the agent? Where the agent of a fire insurance company had issued a policy and received the premium, but, before he had paid the premium to the company, the company was rendered insolvent by the great fire in Chicago during the term of the policy, whereupon the insured demanded back the premium from the agent, it was held that the insured could recover the premium from the agent.⁵⁶

§ 1437. — Where a judgment had been obtained, but a writ of error had been sued out to reverse it, but the amount had been collected upon execution and paid over to the plaintiff's attorney who knew of the writ of error, it was held that, upon the reversal of the judgment, while the money was still in the attorney's hands, the judgment debtor could not recover it from the attorney.⁵⁷ So, where the money had been paid to the attorney before any steps were taken to reverse the judgment, it was held that the attorney was not liable, although the money remained in his hands when the judgment was subsequently reversed. The money, it was held, belonged to his principal, and the action should be against the latter.⁵⁸

§ 1438. — Where money to apply upon the purchase price of land under a contract for its sale had been paid to the agent of the seller authorized to receive it, and the buyer afterward rescinded the contract and brought an action against the agent to recover the part payment which was still in his hands, it was held by the supreme court of Pennsylvania that the action against the agent could not be maintained.⁵⁹ Said the court: "He entered into no contract with the plain-

⁵⁶ Smith v. Binder, 75 Ill. 492.

The decision here was based upon the theory that, upon the insolvency of the company, there was a total failure of consideration, and it had no right to the premium.

⁵⁷ Langley v. Warner, 3 N. Y. 327, reversing s. c. 1 Sandf. 209. Here, the attorney had retained the money in pursuance of an agreement with his client that he might apply it on what the client owed him; but the court said that, upon collection, the money became the property of the client and he could do what he pleased with it.

⁵⁸ McDowell v. Napier, 14 Ga. 89; Wright v. Aldrich, 60 N. H. 161. In Bank of U. S. v. Bank of Washington,

6 Peters (31 U. S.), 8, 8 L. Ed. 299, the defendants paid a judgment to the agent of the plaintiff and gave him verbal notice of their intention to appeal; they did appeal and the judgment was reversed; they now demand of the agent the money so paid to him. It was held that they could not recover.

⁵⁹ Kurzawski v. Schneider, 179 Pa. 500. See to same effect: Gable v. Crane, 24 Pa. Super. 56; Huffman v. Newman, 55 Neb. 713; Bogart v. Crosby, 80 Cal. 195; Ellis v. Goulton, [1893] 1 Q. B. 350.

So in Wilson v. Wold, 21 Wash. 398, 75 Am. St. Rep. 846, respondent was the agent of the purchaser of land at execution sale and had coltiff, and violated no duty which he owed him. An agent who receives money paid on account of a contract for the purchase of real estate made with his principal cannot be held liable in an action by the purchaser to recover the money back on proof of facts which would entitle the purchaser to rescind the contract."

This conclusion seems to be the sound one for the class of cases here being considered. At the time of payment, by the hypothesis, the money belonged to the principal and the payment was rightfully made. Payment to the agent, under these circumstances, was payment to the principal, and the agent is responsible to the principal for it. The agent had made no contract with the person paying, and was guilty of no breach of duty toward him. Even though the agent may have the money still in his possession, he holds it for his principal, and the action should be against the principal,⁶⁰ especially where there may be controversy respecting the existence of such a change in circum-

lected rents for him. Later appellant redeemed the land and brought this action against respondent to recover the rents collected during the period of redemption. It was held that the action could not be maintained against the respondent. Said the court: "Respondent was merely the agent of the purchaser. The fact of his agency was known to the appellant. At the time of their collection the law entitled him to collect these rents, and, had not the appellant subsequently redeemed the property, respondent's principal would have been entitled to retain the rents so collected. So that originally the money was rightfully received by respondent as agent for his principal, the purchaser at the sale. The fact of agency being known, appellant's right of action was against the principal and not against the agent."

Where an agent authorized to do so, received a payment on the sale of land, promising to refund it if the owner did not approve of the sale, and then paid the money over to his principal, the purchaser cannot recover the money of the agent upon breach, by the principal, of the promise to refund. Tripple v. Littlefield, 46 Wash. 156. See also, Gulf City Const. Co. v. Louisville, etc., Ry. Co., 121 Ala. 621; Edgell v. Day, L. R. 1 C. P. 80; Bamford v. Schuttlesworth, 11 Ad. & E. 926.

But where a sum of money, as part payment on the purchase price of land, was paid by the buyer to an agent of the seller on the signing of the contract, with an understanding that the balance would be paid when good title was made, but title was not made, it was held that the buyer, on demand, could recover this sum from the agent, although the agent claimed the same as commission due him from his principal. Gosslin v. Martin, 56 Oreg. 281.

In Wells v. Birtchnell, 19 Vict. L. R. 473, it is said that where an agent authorized to sell land receives a deposit in respect of it and then does not effect a sale, the money may be recovered from the agent. See also, Walder v. Cutts, [1909] Vict. L. R. 261. But compare Ellis v. Goulton, [1893] 1 Q. B. 350; Christie v. Robinson, 4 Comw. L. R. (Australia) 1338. See also post, § 1445.

⁶⁰ Where a lessee paid rent to duly authorized agents of lessors, agreeing to treat the payment as conditional upon a payment of rent by a costances as will justify the party paying in demanding back his money. That is a question which should be litigated with the principal and not with the agent.

§ 1439. Agent liable for money mispaid though paid over, if agency was not known.—Where, however, the third person who paid money to an agent under a mistake of fact had no notice of the agency, he may recover the money so paid from the agent although the latter has paid it over to his principal.⁶¹ In such a case, as has been pointed out,⁶² “there is of course no presumed consent or direction that he may pay over, and payment to his principal will be no defence. In such a case, having acted as a principal, he will not be permitted to defend on the ground that he was not the principal.”

lessee, who failed to pay, held, the rent could not be recovered from the agents who were fully authorized, even though they had not accounted to the principal, but resort must be had to their principal. Cooper v. Tim, 16 N. Y. Misc. 372, citing Colvin v. Holbrook, 2 N. Y. 126 (where a deputy sheriff received money rightfully paid to him, in his official capacity, by a third person, and this payment so affected the rights of plaintiff, that the plaintiff was entitled to the money, he could not recover of the deputy sheriff who acted with authority and owed a duty only to the sheriff, even though the money still remained in the deputy's hands); Hall v. Lauderdale, 46 N. Y. 70.

A life insurance agent who receives an application for a policy accompanied by a payment of the first premium, and gives a receipt, on a form provided by the company and headed with its name, stating that if the application is not accepted the payment will be returned,—all being done by the general authority of the company,—is not personally liable for the return of the money if the policy be not issued as agreed. The liability is upon the company. Bleau v. Wright, 110 Mich. 183.

An attorney foreclosed a mortgage for his client, the first mortgagee, and from the proceeds of the sale, paid the costs and the first mortgage debt;

a surplus remained in his hands, and the plaintiff in this action, claiming under a second mortgage, seeks to recover the surplus from the attorney. Held, the action would not lie against him, but against the first mortgagee, his client. Costigan v. Newland, 12 Barb. (N. Y.) 456.

Where money is deposited with an agent for his principal to be returned by the principal if the principal does not perform, the agent is not liable for the return of the money on the principal's default. Cohen v. Barry, 108 N. Y. Supp. 573 (lease); Finnegan v. Geoghegan, 111 N. Y. Supp. 656 (lease); Levine v. Field, 114 N. Y. Supp. 819 (sale).

⁶¹ Smith v. Kelley, 43 Mich. 390; Newall v. Tomlinson, L. R. 6 C. P. 405; Canal Bank v. Bank of Albany, 1 Hill (N. Y.), 287; Needles v. Fuson, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 369, 68 S. W. 644; Klotz v. Gordon, 117 N. Y. Supp. 240.

In Holt v. Ross, 54 N. Y. 472, 13 Am. Rep. 615, the rule was applied to an express company which collected a check through a forged endorsement. The court (one judge dissenting) held that the nature of its business, etc., was not sufficient notice of its agency. “To shield themselves from liability for their acts they must give the names of their principals.”

⁶² United States v. Pinover, 3 Fed. 305.

§ 1440. Agent liable without notice for money illegally obtained.—

An agent who has obtained money from third persons illegally, as by compulsion or extortion,—the persons paying it having done so involuntarily and with no intent or purpose that he should pay it to his principal—is liable to the persons from whom he received it, although he has paid it over to his principal without notice not to do so.⁶³

Where the agent in these cases acts from some wrong motive of his own, he is clearly liable; but even though he acts in good faith supposing that the demand he makes is justified, still if he coerces the other into paying what he was not legally liable to pay, the agent will be liable.

Money so paid is not paid voluntarily nor really on the account of the principal, since no authority he could derive from his principal would justify it, but merely as the result of the agent's illegal demands.

This principle has been frequently applied to the cases of excise and custom-house officers, tax collectors, sheriffs, and other officers who by virtue of their office have exacted and enforced the payment of illegal fees, taxes and duties.

The rule, however, does not apply to an agent who has merely been the innocent conduit through whom money illegally exacted by another has been paid over to the principal.⁶⁴

§ 1441. Agent liable without notice for money obtained through his misconduct.—For similar reasons, the agent will be liable, even though he may have paid it over, for money which his principal had not authorized him to receive, and which the agent obtained by his own misconduct or default.⁶⁵

⁶³ Ripley v. Gelston, 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 201, 6 Am. Dec. 271; Frye v. Lockwood, 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 456; Hearsey v. Pruyn, 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 179; Messer-Moore Ins. Co. v. Trotwood Park Land Co., 170 Ala. 473, Ann. Cas. 1912 D. (25 A. & E. Ann. Cas.) 718; Elliott v. Swartwout, 10 Pet. (U. S.) 137, 9 L. Ed. 373; First National Bank v. Watkins, 21 Mich. 483; Bocchino v. Cook, 67 N. J. L. 467; Snowdon v. Davis, 1 Taunt. 359; Miller v. Aris, 3 Esp. 231. See Grover v. Morris, 73 N. Y. 473.

⁶⁴ Owen v. Cronk, [1895] 1 Q. B. 265.

⁶⁵ Thus where a lawyer was overpaid the amount of a judgment in favor of a non-resident client,—the over-payment being attributable to his failure to inform the judgment debtor of a previous payment thereon by his debtor, of which he had no notice—the transmission of the over-payment to the client before discovery of the mistake was held to be no protection against liability for its re-payment to the judgment debtor. The court said that the rule that payment to the principal exonerates the agent does not apply "where the agent receives the money outside of his agency and of his own wrong." Metcalf v. Denson, 63 Tenn. (4 J. Baxt.) 565.

Where a debtor pays money in fraud of the state insolvent law to an agent of his creditor, the agent hav-

§ 1442. Agent liable where money is proceeds of act which principal could not lawfully authorize.—As will be seen in another place, the agent will not ordinarily be protected, even though he acts in good faith, where the act is one which the principal could not lawfully authorize.⁶⁶ Thus an agent who in good faith receives from his principal and sells by his direction, property which did not belong to the principal, is ordinarily held liable to the true owner, even though he may have paid over the proceeds to his principal before he was notified of the true owner's claim.⁶⁷ In a recent case,⁶⁸ before the appellate division of the supreme court of New York, in which it was sought to recover of the defendant rents which he had collected and paid over to one who had represented himself to be, but was not in fact, the true owner of the premises (although there was some evidence that the real owner had in fact authorized the act of the apparent owner), the court, while recognizing the general rule above referred to, said that to that general rule, "there is an exception in the case of money and negotiable instruments."⁶⁹

This action however was not brought by the person who had paid the rent, but by the personal representative of the true owner. In a somewhat similar case, lately before the supreme court of Tennessee, defendant was an agent who had been collecting rents for the owner and who continued to collect and pay over the rents to his principal, after the premises had in fact been conveyed to the plaintiff, but withing reasonable ground to believe the payee to be insolvent, the assignee of the debtor may recover it of the agent, although he has paid it to his principal. Larkin v. Hapgood, 56 Vt. 597. To same effect: Ex parte Edwards, 13 Q. B. Div. 747.

Where an agent by false representation, sells securities, known by him to be worthless, the buyer can recover the money paid from the agent, although the agent had paid it over to his principal. Moore v. Shields, 121 Ind. 267.

An express company, knowing that goods received by it for delivery C. O. D., have been so damaged in transit as to be practically worthless, owes a duty to disclose that fact to the consignee, and if it fails to disclose it and demands the money from him before delivering the goods (the defect not being discoverable by him until after delivery), it is liable to the consignee for the money collected, although it has transmitted it to the consignor. Hardy v. American Express Co., 182 Mass. 328, 59 L. R. A. 731.

Agent is personally liable for money won in illegal gambling transactions carried on by him for his principal. Lilienthal v. Carpenter, 148 Ky. 50.

⁶⁶ See post, § 1456.

⁶⁷ See post, § 1457.

⁶⁸ Ledwith v. Merritt, 74 App. Div. 64. Affirmed without opinion by the Court of Appeals, 174 N. Y. 512.

⁶⁹ The court referred to Sprights v. Hawley, 39 N. Y. 441, 100 Am. Dec. 452. Also to Truesdell v. Bourke, 145 N. Y. 612, 618. Also as a "case quite apposite to the present discussion" to Duffy v. Buchanan, 1 Paige (N. Y.), 453.

out actual notice of that conveyance. It was held that the defendant was not liable for the rents collected and paid over under such circumstances.⁷⁰

§ 1443. Agent liable for money received without authority and not paid over to the principal.—Several different situations of this sort may arise: (1) The defendant receives money from the plaintiff, representing that he has the authority from a principal to so receive it; if the prospective principal fails to ratify the defendant's act, the defendant is liable to the plaintiff for the money received.⁷¹ (2) The defendant may receive the money under such circumstances that the plaintiff knows there is no existing authority in the defendant to receive it, but both parties expect a ratification; if the ratification fails the defendant is liable. (3) The defendant may, as in the first case, assume an authority and may receive the money, but before the matter is submitted to the prospective principal for the purpose of having it ratified, the plaintiff may demand back the money. He would seem to be entitled to recover it. (4) The defendant may, as in the second case, receive the money as one without authority but one whose act the parties expect to be ratified, but before the prospective principal is made aware of the act, the plaintiff demands it back; here also, it would seem, the defendant is liable.

§ 1444. Agent personally liable for return of deposits where he has pledged his own responsibility.—An agent who receives payments or deposits upon condition that they shall be returned in a given event, may in this, as in other cases, pledge himself personally for the return; and where he has done so the fact that he was an agent is no defence.⁷²

§ 1445. Where agent is a mere stakeholder.—Where an agent, who stands in the situation of a stakeholder, receives money to be paid over upon the happening of a certain contingency or the performance of given conditions, and pays it over before the happening of the contingency or the performance of the conditions, such payment will be no defense to an action by the party ultimately found to be entitled to receive the money.⁷³

⁷⁰ Embry v. Galbreath, 110 Tenn. 297. Compare Wilson v. Wold, 21 Wash. 398, 75 Am. St. Rep. 846.

⁷¹ Simmonds v. Long, 80 Kan. 155, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 553.

⁷² Coble v. Denison, 151 Mo. App. 319. Cases of deposits of money upon preliminary contracts for the sale of lands. Goodridge v. Wood, 133 Ill. App. 483; Cox v. Borstadt, 49 Colo. 83; Mead v. Altgeld, 33 Ill. App. 373, 136 Ill. 298.

Same, on sale of stocks: White v. Taylor, 113 Mich. 543.

⁷³ Burrough v. Skinner, 5 Burr. 2639; Edwards v. Hodding, 5 Taunt.

So where the person who receives the money is a mere stakeholder and not the agent of the opposite party, and the money is put into his hands as a stakeholder and not for the opposite party, the person who deposited the money with him may recover it of him if the transaction fails, even though he may have paid it over to the other party in contravention of the arrangement.

§ 1446. Agent for undisclosed principal liable for returnable deposit.—If a person has received deposits which are now returnable,—as where the contract which they were given to secure has not been or can not be performed—and is personally liable for their return, the fact that he was merely agent for an undisclosed principal is no defense. The other party can not be forced to look to the undisclosed principal or to accept performance from him in any case at least in which any personal considerations are involved.⁷⁴

b. Where Money has been Paid to Agent for Third Person.

§ 1447. When agent's liability to such third person attaches—Revocation by principal.—Where money has been delivered by a principal to his agent to be, by the latter, paid over to a third person, the duty to make such payment is one which the agent owes, in the first instance, to the principal only. Between the agent and the third

815. In both of these cases the defendant was an auctioneer. As to the distinction between a stakeholder, like an auctioneer, and an agent, like a solicitor, see Bamford v. Shuttleworth, 11 Ad. & E. 926; Edgell v. Day, L. R. 1 C. P. 80; Ellis v. Goulton, [1893] 1 Q. B. 350. See also, Martin v. Allen, 125 Mo. App. 636; Conness v. Baird (Tex. Civ. App.), 124 S. W. 113.

Agent or stakeholder.—It is not always easy to determine whether the person to whom the money was paid was an agent for the opposite party or a mere stockholder, presumably indifferent between them; and the cases can not all be reconciled. If he be the agent for the opposite party and the money is paid to the agent for his principal, it belongs to the latter and recourse must be sought against him, even though the money may not yet have been paid over to him by his agent. See Ellis v. Goulton, [1893] 1 Q. B. 350; Kurawski v. Schneider, 179 Pa. 500;

Bogart v. Crosby, 80 Cal. 195 (here the money had been paid to the principal and then returned to the agent); Huffman v. Newman, 55 Neb. 713 (here agent claimed right to keep the money as commissions). See also, Christie v. Robinson, 4 Comw. L. R. (Australia) 1338.

If he be merely a stakeholder, it may be recovered from him by the payer. See Read v. Riddle, 48 N. J. L. 359 (agent still had the money); Gosslin v. Martin, 56 Ore. 281 (agent claimed right to retain money as commissions); Martin v. Allen, 125 Mo. App. 636 (here money had been paid to principal); Walder v. Cutts, [1909] Victoria L. R. 261; Wells v. Birchnell, 19 Vict. L. R. 473. Edwards v. Hodding, supra, which treats an auctioneer as a stakeholder is followed in Gray v. Gutteridge, 3 Car. & P. 40, and Furtado v. Lumley, 6 Times L. R. 168. See also, ante, § 1438, and note 59.

⁷⁴ Pancoast v. Dinsmore, 105 Me. 471, 134 Am. St. Rep. 582.

person, there is primarily no privity. The former has entered into no relations with the latter by virtue of which he owes to him the performance of any duty other than those imposed upon every member of society.

Until the agent has paid over the money to the third person, or has assumed to the latter the obligation to do so, the principal may at any time revoke or countermand his directions to the agent to make the payment.⁷⁵

In order to create a liability against the agent, it is necessary to show that he has in some way, in dealings with such third person, so recognized and assented to the appropriation of the money to the latter as to create a privity between them.⁷⁶ When this has been done, the principal can no longer revoke the appropriation, nor can the agent refuse to perform it.⁷⁷

Where, however, the agent has previously assumed obligations to third persons for the accommodation of the principal, against which the latter has expressly or impliedly agreed to indemnify him, a delivery of money to the agent for that purpose can not be revoked by the principal;⁷⁸ neither can an appropriation of money in the agent's hands be revoked by the principal where, upon the faith of such appropriation the agent has assumed liabilities to third parties.⁷⁹ In the concise language of Maule, "An act done in performance of a binding contract is not revocable."⁸⁰

§ 1448. — What constitutes assent—Consideration.—No express form of words is ordinarily requisite to constitute an assent on the part of the agent to the appropriation. Like other promises, this may be implied.

⁷⁵ Williams v. Everett, 14 East, 582; Brind v. Hampshire, 1 Mees. & Wels. 365; Scott v. Porcher, 3 Mer. 652; Stewart v. Fry, 7 Taunt. 339; Tierman v. Jackson, 5 Pet. (30 U. S.) 580, 8 L. Ed. 234; Seaman v. Whitney, 24 Wend. (N. Y.) 260, 35 Am. Dec. 618; Denny v. Lincoln, 5 Mass. 385.

See also, Dixon v. Pace, 63 N. Car. 603; Mayer v. Bank, 51 Ga. 325; Kelly v. Babcock, 49 N. Y. 318; Beers v. Spooner, 9 Leigh (Va.), 153; McDonald v. American Nat. Bank, 25 Mont. 456.

Where P directs A to pay certain money to T which A starts to do, but before T knows of or assents to the arrangement or A attorns to T, the money is garnished by P's creditors, the garnishment is effective and A is not thereafter liable to T. Center v. McQuesten, 18 Kan. 476.

⁷⁶ Williams v. Everett, 14 East, 582.

⁷⁷ Wyman v. Smith, 2 Sandf. (N. Y.) 331; Williams v. Everett, 14 East, 582; Stevens v. Hill, 5 Esp. 247; Walker v. Rostron, 9 Mees. & Wels. 411; Griffin v. Weatherby, L. R. 3 Q. B. 753; Yates v. Hoppe, 9 Man. G. & S. (9 Com. B.) 541; Crowfoot v. Gurney, 9 Bing. 372; Goodwin v. Bowden, 54 Me. 424.

⁷⁸ Yates v. Hoppe, supra.

⁷⁹ Walker v. Rostron, supra.

⁸⁰ In Yates v. Hoppe, supra.

The direction from the principal to the agent may often be in substance or in form an ordinary bill of exchange, to which the rules relating to the acceptance of such paper will apply. As is said by a learned writer,⁸¹ an acceptance, according to the law merchant, may be (1) expressed in words, or (2) implied from the conduct of the drawee. (3) It may be verbal or written. (4) It may be in writing on the bill itself or on a separate paper. (5) It may be before the bill is drawn or afterward. And (6) there may be absolute, conditional and qualified acceptances.

By the statutes of many of the states, however, the rule of the law merchant has been changed, and an acceptance must be in writing.

The question of the consideration for the appropriation by the principal may, in certain cases, become material. When it is so, the ordinary rules of law apply. The existence of a debt, although it be not due, is a good consideration for such an appropriation to pay it.⁸²

No new or separate consideration moving from the third person to the agent is necessary to sustain the latter's assent to the appropriation of the money,⁸³ when directed by the principal.

§ 1449. Action at law by beneficiary against agent.—When in accordance with the rules laid down in the preceding sections, the agent has brought himself under obligations to third persons, the person entitled may sue the agent at law to recover the money in an action for money had and received.^{83a} Where there is, not simply a direction by the principal to the agent to pay the money to the third person, but a contract between the principal and the agent for the benefit of the third person, but no enforceable promise by the agent to the latter, the question whether the third person may enforce the obligation against the agent by an action at law is a question upon which there is much conflict of authority, and which belongs more properly to a treatise upon the law of contracts. The English rule, and the rule prevailing in several of the states, is that no such action may be maintained, but the rule prevailing in the majority of states permits the beneficiary to sue. Professor Williston has collected and arranged the cases in the various states, according to the alphabetical order of the states, in an ⁸¹ 1 Daniel Neg. Inst. § 496.

⁸² Walker v. Rostron, 9 Mees. & Wels. 411, 420; McKee v. Lamon, 159 U. S. 317, 40 L. Ed. 165.

⁸³ See Goodwin v. Bowden, supra; Wyman v. Smith, supra.

^{83a} Goodwin v. Bowden, supra; Keene v. Sage, 75 Me. 138; Wyman v.

Smith, supra; Seaman v. Whitney, supra; Crowfoot v. Gurney, supra.

Where A receives money from B to pay to C, and C requests A to pay it to D, but A, instead of actually paying D, retains it for what he wrongfully claims D owes him, D may recover it of A. Keene v. Sage, supra.

article first published in the Harvard Law Review ⁸⁴ and afterwards substantially reproduced in his edition of Wald's Pollock on Contracts, ⁸⁵ to which the reader must be referred.

§ 1450. Trusts for the benefit of third persons.—Instead of putting the money into the hands of an agent as such, and expressly or impliedly reserving the power to change the directions to the agent, at any time before the directions have been executed or the agent has assumed obligations to the third person, as in the cases considered in the preceding sections, the money or property may be put into the hands of the agent as a trustee so finally and conclusively that no power to revoke or to change the directions can be conceded. The question whether a mere revocable agency or an irrevocable trust has been created seems to depend on the intention of the principal as evidenced by his words and conduct. Where a trust has been created, it may be enforced by the beneficiary as in other cases.⁸⁶

II.

IN TORT.

§ 1451. In general.—The question of the liability of the agent to third persons in tort cases involves very different considerations from those which govern his liability upon contracts. In the contract case the question whether any contract at all shall be made is one which the parties may determine for themselves, and if they decide to make a contract, they may determine with whom it shall be made. They have the power to determine in advance who shall be the party to be bound by the contract, and may so shape the contract as to impose its liabilities upon the party so selected.

In the case of the tort, the situation is ordinarily entirely different. The question of whether a tort shall be committed has not been left to the determination of the injured party; he has had no opportunity nor power to determine by whom the tort shall be committed; the situation lacks every element of consent and is the result of the unauthorized and unlawful breaking in of one person upon the rights or security of another.

§ 1452. Agency usually no defense in tort cases.—It is sometimes said that "in torts the relation of principal and agent does not exist. They are all wrongdoers and the liability of each and all does not ⁸⁴ 15 Harvard Law Review, 767.

⁸⁵ Edition, 1906, p. 237 et seq.

⁸⁶ McKee v. Lamon, 159 U. S. 317,

40 L. Ed. 165; Rogers Locomotive Wks. v. Kelley, 88 N. Y. 234.

cease until payment has been made or satisfaction rendered or something equivalent thereto.”⁸⁷ While this statement undoubtedly requires some qualification, it is, nevertheless, declaratory of a more or less general principle, and it is, as will be seen, in many cases true that the fact that the wrongdoer purported to do the act as agent for another is entirely immaterial so far as his own liability is concerned. That fact may make the alleged principal liable also, but it will in many cases have no tendency to exonerate the alleged agent.

§ 1453. Agent liable for negligent acts outside the scope of his agency.—Before taking up the more difficult questions, certain simple cases may be disposed of, concerning which there could not well be any difference of opinion. Thus, if an agent, while doing an act which has some relation to his agency, but is really beyond the scope of it, wilfully or negligently injures a third person, he would undoubtedly be personally liable to the person injured. In such a case, the reputed principal would not be liable and the agent would be the real principal. Thus, for example, if a servant or agent, acting entirely outside the scope of his employment, should take his master’s horse and wagon and go off upon a frolic of his own and in doing so should wilfully or negligently so manage the horse and wagon as to cause injury to a third person, the servant or agent would undoubtedly be personally liable.

§ 1454. When agent ostensible principal.—It has been seen in the earlier portion of this chapter, that the agent may often make himself liable to third persons in contract by concealing his real principal or by pledging his own responsibility. So far as such a liability is based upon theories of estoppel, it must be less frequent in tort cases than in those involving contractual relations, since the suffering of torts is much more rarely induced by appearances than the making of contracts. There may be cases, however, in which such a liability would arise, especially in torts arising out of contractual dealings.

Thus an agent carrying on a business as ostensible principal has been held personally liable to a servant employed by him who was injured in the course of the work.⁸⁸ It has also been held that such an agent is personally liable to third persons for the torts of a servant employed by him while carrying on a business really as agent but ostensibly as principal.⁸⁹ This conclusion is very much more difficult to sustain, where the third person was not misled by the appearances; and it can only be upheld upon the ground that, although the defendant was really an agent, he had in the particular employment actually made himself the employer of the negligent servant,⁹⁰ or upon the ground, considered in a later section, that as the agent had actual control of the servant and negligently exercised it, the injury can be attributed to the agent's own default.

⁸⁷ See Berghoff v. McDonald, 87 Ind. 549; Carraher v. Allen, 112 Iowa, 168. ⁸⁸ Yarlowitz v. Bienenstock, 130 N. Y. Supp. 931. See also, Malone v. Morton, 84 Mo. 436.

⁸⁹ Cockran v. Rice, 26 S. Dak. 393.

§ 1455. Liability of agent for trespass.—It is in general true that every person who does an act which invades or violates the right of property or security of another, does so at the peril of being able to furnish legal justification for his act if he be called upon legally to account for it. Such a justification cannot be found either in the general or the specific command or direction of one who had no legal right to command or direct that the act be done. It is therefore the general rule that an agent who trespasses upon the person or property of another is liable to the person so injured and the fact of his agency furnishes no excuse.⁹¹

⁹⁰ That there can ordinarily be no liability in tort cases based upon mere appearances, see Smith v. Bailey, [1891] 2 Q. B. 403; Shapard v. Hynes, 45 C. C. A. 271, 104 Fed. 449, 52 L. R. A. 675.

⁹¹ A surveyor is personally liable for a trespass committed by him, though the act was done in behalf and under the direction of a highway board by which he was employed. Mill v. Hawker, L. R., 10 Ex. 92. To same effect: Smith v. Colby, 67 Me. 169. An agent who fences in a portion of the highway is liable for an injury caused thereby, though he does it for and under the direction of his principal, a railway company. Blue v. Briggs, 12 Ind. App. 105. An agent who commits an assault on a third person is personally liable even though he did it in the principal's interest and for the protection of his property. New Ellerslie Fishing Club v. Stewart, 123 Ky. 8, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 475; Canfield v. Chicago, etc., Ry. Co., 59 Mo. App. 354.

Same, where he negligently shot a trespassing slave. Carmouche v. Bouis, 6 La. Ann. 95, 54 Am. Dec. 558.

An agent who, while acting for his principal, sues out an attachment against the plaintiff's property without reasonable cause for believing that the statements, upon which it was obtained, were true, may be held liable for the malicious prosecution. Carragher v. Allen, 112 Iowa, 168. An agent who, without justification, though acting for his principal, caused a distress for rent to be made, is personally liable. Bennett v. Bayes, 5 H. & N. 391. See also, Hazen v. Wight, 87 Me. 233; Welsh v. Stewart, 31 Mo. App. 376; Horner v. Lawrence, 37 N. J. L. 46; Baker v. Davis, 127 Ga. 649; Burns v. Horkan, 126 Ga. 161.

But where the principal would not have been liable for doing the act, the agent who does it by the principal's authority, will not be. Strong v. Colter, 13 Minn. 82.

Where the agent entirely disclaimed responsibility for having a piece of work done, e. g., digging a ditch, alleged to be a trespass or nuisance, the mere fact that he promised to see that the work was paid for if done upon some one else's authority, does not make him liable. Crandall v. Loomis, 56 Vt. 664.

§ 1456. — Principal's knowledge or direction no defense.—

It does not relieve the agent that the wrong was committed with the knowledge of the principal, or by his consent or express direction,⁹² because no one can lawfully authorize or direct the commission of a wrong. A fortiori, it is no defense that the agent in committing the wrong violated his instructions from his principal.⁹³ Neither is it material that the agent derives no personal advantage from the wrong done.⁹⁴ The fact that the agent acted in good faith, supposing the principal had a legal right to have done what was done, is no defense. He who intermeddles with property not his own must see to it that he is protected by the authority of one who is himself, by ownership or otherwise, clothed with the authority he attempts to confer.⁹⁵

§ 1457. Liability of agent for conversion.—In accordance with the principles of the preceding section, it is generally held that an agent who, for his principal, takes, sells or otherwise disposes of, the goods or chattels of another, without legal justification, is personally liable, even though he acted in good faith, supposing the goods to be his principal's,⁹⁶ and although he may have delivered the goods taken ⁹² Weber v. Weber, 47 Mich. 569; Lee v. Mathews, 10 Ala. 682, 44 Am. Dec. 498; Baker v. Wasson, 53 Tex. 157; Johnson v. Barber, 5 Gilm. (Ill.) 425, 50 Am. Dec. 416.

⁹³ Starkweather v. Benjamin, 32 Mich. 305; Johnson v. Barber, supra.

⁹⁴ Weber v. Weber, supra.

⁹⁵ Sprights v. Hawley, 39 N. Y. 441, 100 Am. Dec. 452; Kimball v. Billings, 55 Me. 147, 92 Am. Dec. 581; Everett v. Coffin, 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 603, 22 Am. Dec. 551; Williams v. Merle, 11 Wend. (N. Y.) 80, 25 Am. Dec. 604.

⁹⁶ Lee v. Mathews, 10 Ala. 682, 44 Am. Dec. 498; Perimter v. Kelly, 18 Ala. 716, 54 Am. Dec. 177; Merchants & Planters' Bank v. Meyer, 56 Ark. 499; Swim v. Wilson, 90 Cal. 126, 25 Am. St. Rep. 110, 13 L. R. A. 605; Berghoff v. McDonald, 87 Ind. 549; Warder, etc., Co. v. Harris, 81 Iowa, 153; Kimball v. Billings, 55 Me. 147, 92 Am. Dec. 581; McPheters v. Page, 83 Me. 234, 23 Am. St. Rep. 772; Wing v. Milliken, 91 Me. 387, 64 Am. St. Rep. 238; Milliken v. Hathaway, 148 Mass. 69, 1 L. R. A. 510; Coles

v. Clark, 3 Cush. (Mass.) 399; McPartland v. Read, 11 Allen (Mass.), 231; Edgerly v. Whalan, 106 Mass. 307; Robinson v. Bird, 158 Mass. 357, 35 Am. St. Rep. 495; Kearney v. Clutton, 101 Mich. 106, 45 Am. St. Rep. 394; Koch v. Branch, 44 Mo. 542, 100 Am. Dec. 324; Arkansas City Bank v. Cassidy, 71 Mo. App. 186; Mohr v. Langan, 162 Mo. 474, 85 Am. St. Rep. 503; Gage v. Whittier, 17 N. H. 312; Sprights v. Hawley, 39 N. Y. 441, 100 Am. Dec. 452; Thorp v. Burling, 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 285; Farrar v. Chauffetete, 5 Den. (N. Y.) 527; Everett v. Coffin, 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 603, 22 Am. Dec. 551; Spencer v. Blackman, 9 Wend. (N. Y.) 167; Williams v. Merle, 11 Wend. (N. Y.) 80, 25 Am. Dec. 604; Fowler v. Hollins, L. R. 7 Q. B. 616; Perkins v. Smith, 1 Wils. 328; Stephens v. Elwall, 4 Maule & Sel. 259; McCombie v. Davies, 6 East, 538; Baldwin v. Cole, 6 Mod. 212; Pearson v. Graham, 6 Ad. & El. 899.

Contra: See Frizzell v. Rundle, 88 Tenn. 396, 17 Am. St. Rep. 908; Roach v. Turk, 9 Heisk. (Tenn.) 708, 24 Am. Rep. 360.

to his principal or to some other person for and on account of his principal.⁹⁷

Where the conversion charged against the agent consists of the fact that he has refused to surrender, upon demand by one who is really the rightful owner and entitled to possession, goods which were

The Minnesota court has also, in Leuthold v. Fairchild, 35 Minn. 99, laid down doctrines which cannot be reconciled with the preceding cases. See this case distinguished in Dolliff v. Robbins, 83 Minn. 498, 85 Am. St. Rep. 466.

See also McLennan v. Elevator Co., 57 Minn. 317.

⁹⁷ Miller v. Wilson, 98 Ga. 567, 58 Am. St. Rep. 319; McConnell v. Prince (Ga. App.), 76 S. E. 754; Edgerly v. Whalan, 106 Mass. 307; Lee v. Mathews, 10 Ala. 682, 44 Am. Dec. 498; Kimball v. Billings, 55 Me. 147, 92 Am. Dec. 581; Sprights v. Hawley, 39 N. Y. 441, 100 Am. Dec. 452; Thorpe v. Burling, 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 285; Williams v. Merle, 11 Wend. (N. Y.) 80, 25 Am. Dec. 604; Perkins v. Smith, 1 Wils. 328; Stephens v. Elwall, 4 Maule & Sel. 259.

Sewing machine agent who without the authority or consent of her husband secures from a married woman an old sewing machine and some money, both belonging to her husband, in exchange for a new machine, and delivers the old machine to his company, is guilty of conversion of the machine. No demand for the return of the old machine is necessary. Rice v. Yocum, 155 Pa. 538.

The essence of the conversion lies in the fact that the agent has done or participated in doing some act which denies, repudiates, or destroys the true owner's title and right to possession, as where he sells, delivers or otherwise disposes of the property in such a way as to cut off or impede the owner's right. Swim v. Wilson, 90 Cal. 126, 25 Am. St. Rep. 110, 13 L. R. A. 605; Porter v. Thomas, 23 Ga. 467; Cassidy Bros. v. Elk Grove Cattle Co., 58 Ill. App. 39; Fort v.

Wells, 14 Ind. App. 531, 56 Am. St. Rep. 316; Shearer v. Evans, 89 Ind. 400; Kearney v. Clutton, 101 Mich. 106, 45 Am. St. Rep. 394; Lafayette Co. Bk. v. Metcalf, 40 Mo. App. 494; Stevenson v. Valentine, 27 Neb. 338; Bercich v. Marye, 9 Nev. 312; Hoffman v. Carow, 20 Wend. (N. Y.) 21; Iredale v. Kendall, 40 L. T. N. S. 362; Fine Arts Society v. Union Bank of London, 17 Q. B. Div. 705; Consolidated Co. v. Curtis (1892), 1 Q. B. Div. 495; Barker v. Furlong, [1891] 2 Ch. Div. 172; Perkins v. Smith, 1 Wils. 328; Pearson v. Graham, 6 Ad. & El. 899; Ewbank v. Nutting, 7 C. B. 797; Ganly v. Ledwidge, 10 Irish Rep. C. L. 33; Cranch v. White, 1 Bing. N. C. 414, 6 Car. & Payne, 767.

But this rule is held not to apply where an agent in good faith and without negligence takes by delivery negotiable instruments and transfers them again by delivery, paying the proceeds to his principal and deriving no profit himself. Spooner v. Holmes, 102 Mass. 503, 3 Am. Rep. 491.

In National Safe Deposit Co. v. Hibbs, 32 App. Cas. D. C. 459, it is held that if the purchaser from the innocent agent acquires an indefeasible title, as in the case of the sale of negotiable or quasi negotiable securities, the agent is not liable. See also, Higgins v. Lodge, 68 Md. 229, 6 Am. St. Rep. 437; Jones v. Hodgkins, 61 Me. 480, post.

So one who receives from his principal the property of another and afterward returns it to his principal is not guilty of a conversion, even though he may have reason to believe that the principal is not the delivered to him by his principal to be held for the latter, somewhat different considerations apply. A mere refusal to surrender is not necessarily a conversion; it may be open to explanation. "Thus," it is said in one case,⁹⁸ "it is no conversion for the bailee of a chattel, who has received it in good faith from some person other than the owner, to refuse to deliver it to the owner making demand for it until he has had time to satisfy himself in regard to the ownership."⁹⁹ In the case of a servant who has received the chattel from his master, it has been held that he ought not to give it up without first consulting the master in regard to it.¹ But if, after having had an opportunity to confer with his master, he relies on his master's title and absolutely refuses to comply with the demand, he will be liable for a conversion.²

owner. Loring v. Mulcahy, 3 Allen (Mass.), 575; Wando Phosphate Co. v. Parker, 93 Ga. 414; National Merc. Bk. v. Rymill, 44 L. T. N. S. 767.

So it is not ordinarily a conversion, where what the agent has done amounts to simply changing the location of the property, but not in any way denying or interfering with the owner's title. Burditt v. Hunt, 25 Me. 419, 43 Am. Dec. 289; Metcalf v. McLaughlin, 122 Mass. 84; Gurley v. Armstead, 148 Mass. 267, 12 Am. St. Rep. 555, 2 L. R. A. 80; Archibeque v. Miera, 1 N. M. 419.

However, where the agent takes goods from the plaintiff and delivers them to a third person under circumstances indicating a denial of the owner's right, the agent may be held liable for the conversion. Mead v. Jack, 12 Daly (N. Y.), 65.

Selling after termination of authority.—In Jones v. Hodgkins, 61 Me. 480, where an agent, who had been given authority to sell a quantity of logs in a boom, sold and delivered them in good faith after his principal had sold them to the plaintiff—the plaintiff not having taken actual possession and the agent having no notice—it was held that the agent was not liable in trover to the plaintiff, the first purchaser. Three judges dissented. This case is not easy to sustain, unless it be upon the ground—relied upon in such cases as National Safe Deposit Co. v. Hibbs, supra—that because the second purchaser would be protected, having bought in ignorance of the first sale and the first purchaser not having taken possession (see such cases as Lanfear v. Sumner, 17 Mass. 110), the agent is entitled to the same protection.

⁹⁸ Singer Mfg. Co. v. King, 14 R. I. 511.

⁹⁹ Citing: Carroll v. Mix, 51 Barb. (N. Y.) 212; Lee v. Bayes, 18 C. B. 599, 607; Sheridan v. The New Quay Co., 4 C. B. N. S. 618; Coles v. Wright, 4 Taunt. 198. To same effect: see Goodwin v. Wertheimer, 99 N. Y. 149; Mount v. Derick, 5 Hill (N. Y.), 455; Arthur v. Balch, 3 Fost. (23 N. H.) 157.

¹ Citing: Mires v. Solebay, 2 Mod. 242, 245; Alexander v. Southey, 5 B. & A. 247; Berry v. Vantries, 12 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 89.

² Citing: Lee v. Bayes, 25 L. J. C. P. 249, 18 C. B. 599; 1 Addison on Torts, § 475; Greenway v. Fisher, 1 Car. & P. 190; Stephens v. Elwall, 4 M. & S. 259; Perkins v. Smith, 1 Wils. 328; Gage v. Whittier, 17 N. H. 312. To same effect. Elmore v. Brooks, 6 Heisk. (53 Tenn.) 45.

The mere fact that he refuses for the benefit of his principal will not protect him."³

§ 1458. Agent's liability for fraud, misrepresentation or deceit.—No one can give to another any lawful authority to practice wilful fraud, misrepresentation or deceit upon a third. An agent, therefore, who intentionally defrauds a third person whom he induces to deal with him or injures him by wilful misrepresentation or deceit, is personally liable for the injury he inflicts.⁴ The principal may or may not be liable also according as he may or may not be deemed to have authorized or approved the wrongful acts. Where, however, the agent acted in good faith and the fraud or deceit was the principal's act alone, the agent would not be liable.⁵

In accordance with these principles an agent who fraudulently induces a person to take out an insurance policy is liable to an action

³ Citing: Kimball v. Billings, 55 Me. 147, 92 Am. Dec. 581. See also, Kimble v. McDermott, 154 Mo. App. 209.

⁴ Wilder v. Beede, 119 Cal. 646; Hamlin v. Abell, 120 Mo. 188; Reed v. Peterson, 91 Ill. 288; Endsley v. Johns, 120 Ill. 469, 60 Am. Rep. 572; Moore v. Shields, 121 Ind. 267; Salisbury v. Iddings, 29 Neb. 736; Weber v. Weber, 47 Mich. 569; Starkweather v. Benjamin, 32 Mich. 305; Clark v. Lovering, 37 Minn. 120; Alpha Mills v. Watertown Steam Engine Co., 116 N. C. 797; Norris v. Kipp, 74 Iowa, 444; Hedin v. Minn. Med. Inst., 62 Minn. 146, 54 Am. St. Rep. 628, 35 L. R. A. 417; Wimple v. Patterson (Tex. Civ. App.), 117 S. W. 1034; Poole v. Houston, etc., R. Co., 58 Tex. 134; Mann v. McVey, 3 W. Va. 232; Eaglesfield v. Londonderry, L. R. 4 Ch. Div. 693; Sheppard Pub. Co. v. Press Pub. Co., 10 Ont. L. R. 243.

See also, Kleine Bros. v. Gidcomb, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 152 S. W. 462. Fraud of agent not sufficiently proved: Ray County Sav. Bank v. Hutton, 224 Mo. 42.

Conspiracy to defraud: Miller v. John, 111 Ill. App. 56.

Joining principal and agent in one action. Krolik v. Curry, 148 Mich. 214.

An agent who knowingly participates with his principal in defrauding the other party is, of course, liable either with or without his principal. Lewis v. Hoeldtke (Tex. Civ. App.), 76 S. W. 309.

Misrepresentation or deceit respecting his authority has been considered in the preceding subdivision. See also, Wilkins, etc., Realty Co. v. Jones, — Colo. —, 127 Pac. 224.

⁵ Thus in Cullen v. Thomson, 4 Mac Q. 424, 439, it is said by Lord Wensleydale: "In some cases a man may innocently assist in a transaction which is a fraud on some one. Of course, such a person cannot be responsible criminally or civilly. Or he may be a partaker in the fraud to a limited extent, as, for instance, in the supposed case adverted to in the course of the argument, the printer of the alleged false statement, who may know it to be false, and yet may not have intended or known sufficiently the fraudulent purpose to which it was meant to be applied, to make him responsible for the injurious consequences of it."

A disclosed agent is not liable for the fraud of the principal in carrying out the contract made, e. g., forging signatures on a note which he gives for a loan obtained through the agent. Huston v. Tyler, 140 Mo. 252.

for the injury sustained;⁶ in such a case the party deceived has two remedies; he may retain the policy and sue for damages, or he may rescind the contract and recover from the agent the premium paid. So an insurance agent who misrepresents material facts to the insured by reason of which the insured loses his claim against the company for a loss sustained, is personally responsible to the insured for the amount.⁷ An agent is responsible individually to the purchaser for a fraud committed by him in the sale of property, though he does not profess to sell the property as his own, but acts throughout in his capacity as an agent.⁸

As pointed out in the preceding sections, it is entirely immaterial that the agent derived no personal benefit from the wrong done.⁹

§ 1459. Agent's liability for his wilful or malicious acts.—An agent or servant is undoubtedly liable for his own wilful or malicious acts. Under rules formerly prevailing and not yet entirely inoperative, holding the principal or master not liable in such a case, there would be no one liable if the agent or servant could not be held. The master or principal is now held liable in many cases of this sort,¹⁰ but this additional liability of the principal does not destroy the liability of the agent.¹¹

§ 1460. Agent liable to third persons for negligent injuries committed by him while acting in performance of agency.—So if an agent or servant, while acting upon his master's business, so negli-

⁶ Hedden v. Griffin, 136 Mass. 229, 49 Am. Rep. 25.

⁷ Kroeger v. Pitcairn, 101 Pa. 311, 47 Am. Rep. 718.

⁸ Campbell v. Hillman, 15 B. Monr. (Ky.) 508, 61 Am. Dec. 195. As where he makes misrepresentations concerning title, quantity, or incumbrances. Garrett v. Sparks, 61 Wash. 397; Riley v. Bell, 120 Iowa, 618; Willard v. Key, 83 Neb. 850. But a failure to disclose information received for his own guidance, is not fraud. Armstrong v. Campbell, 140 Iowa, 564. So there would be no liability where the representation is one which the buyer had no right to rely upon, as where it is the misrepresentation of a selling agent, dealing at arm's length, as to what is the lowest price at which the principal will sell the property. Ripy v.

Cronan, 131 Ky. 631, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 305.

⁹ Weber v. Weber, 47 Mich. 569.

¹⁰ See post. §§ 1629 et seq.

¹¹ Horner v. Lawrence, 37 N. J. L. 46; Able v. Southern Ry. Co., 73 S. C. 173; Schumpert v. Southern Ry., 65 S. C. 332, 95 Am. St. Rep. 802; Gardner v. Southern Ry. Co. & Pierson, 65 S. C. 341; Holmes v. Wakefield et al., 94 Mass. (12 Allen), 580, 90 Am. Dec. 171; Hewett v. Swift, 85 Mass. (3 Allen), 420.

Many of these were cases in which the question was whether the master and servant could be joined in the same action, but they all concede the liability of the agent.

Criminal liability.—Agency is ordinarily no defence in a prosecution for crimes or penal acts. See State v. Jones, 88 Minn. 27; Com. v. Leslie, 20 Pa. Super. 529.

gently acts as to cause direct and immediate injury to the person or property of a third person, whether he be one to whom the master owes a special duty or not, under circumstances which would impose liability on the agent or servant, if he were acting under the same conditions on his own account, he will be personally liable.¹² In practically every case in which the master could be held liable for the negligence of his servant, the servant himself is personally liable. This must be so from the very nature of the case. The whole theory of the master's liability is that the servant has done a legal wrong, for which the law imposes a liability upon the master however innocent he may be. The person actually and primarily at fault, however, is the servant, and if he would not be liable, the master ordinarily cannot be. The liability of the servant is the direct and primary one; that of the master is a secondary and imputed one. In actual practice, the liability of the servant or agent is usually ignored because it is more convenient or effective to pursue the master, but the servant's liability nevertheless exists. Thus, if a servant while running upon his master's errand should negligently knock down a by-stander, under circumstances which would make the servant liable if he were running upon his own errand, he would be personally liable. And so if a servant while driving his master's horse, operating his master's machine, or managing or conducting any other property of his principal over which he has control, so drives or manages as to inflict injury upon third persons under circumstances which would render him liable if he were doing the same thing on his own account, he will be personally liable. In such a case the servant or agent is the actor, and the fact that he is acting for a principal is only the occasion or the opportunity for his act, but not its justification. The principal or mas-

¹² Humphreys Co. v. Frank, 46 Colo. 524; Miller v. Staples, 3 Colo. App. 93; Phelps v. Wait, 30 N. Y. 78; Hewett v. Swift, 3 Allen (85 Mass.), 420.

Thus the director of a corporation may be held personally liable for an assault which he orders (Peck v. Cooper, 112 Ill. 192, 54 Am. Rep. 231) or in which he participates (Brokaw v. N. J., etc., Railroad Co., 32 N. J. L. 328, 90 Am. Dec. 659). So of a malicious prosecution: Hussey v. Norfolk, etc., R. Co., 98 N. Car. 34, 2 Am. St. Rep. 312. So directors have been held personally liable for their negligent (Cameron v. Kenyon Co., 22 Mont. 312, 74 Am. St. Rep. 602, 44 L. R. A. 508) or wilful conduct in the management of the corporation. Nunnally v. Iron Co., 94 Tenn. 397, 28 L. R. A. 421; and for the infringement of patents. National Cash Register Co. v. Leland, 37 C. C. A. 372, 94 Fed. 502. The president of an incorporated club may be held personally liable for the negligent discharge of fireworks under his direction. Jenne v. Sutton, 43 N. J. L. 257, 39 Am. Rep. 578.

ter might also be liable in such a case, but that would not excuse or exonerate the agent.¹³

It is also immaterial that the servant or agent violates a duty he owes to his principal or master at the same time. Thus the servant who, while driving his master's team, negligently crushes the wagon of a third person, is liable to the latter, though he may by the same negligent act crush his master's wagon and be liable to him also.

§ 1461. — The liability of the agent in these cases is not affected by the fact that there is no privity of contract between himself and the person injured. His liability does not depend upon privity, but upon the general duty imposed on every one to so govern his conduct as not to negligently injure another. Many illustrations may be found in the reported cases. A railway engineer who negligently runs his master's engine at a high rate of speed through a populous district would be liable if it were his own engine or if it were an engine which he had hired or borrowed for the occasion, and the case should not be different where it is an engine under his control, because he is in the service of a railroad company.¹⁴ If the running at that rate in that place was the result of the specific command of the company, a somewhat different case would be presented, although even then he would not be justified in obeying specific commands in the face of obvious danger. So a bricklayer who negligently drops a brick upon a passer-by should be personally liable. It is his own act of negligence, in a case in which he owes a duty of care, and the fact that he did it while working for a master does not excuse him.¹⁵ For similar reasons, an engineer of a switch engine and a switchman are personally liable for negligently running down another servant of the same company in disregard of signals given them by the person in-

¹³ Eaglesfield v. Londonderry, 4 Ch. Div. 693 (per Jessel, M. R.); Breen v. Field, 157 Mass. 277; Corliss v. Keown, 207 Mass. 149.

It is true that Blackstone declares that "if a smith's servant lames a horse while he is shoeing him, an action lies against the master, but not against the servant." But, as has often been pointed out, this was probably not true even in Blackstone's time, and is certainly not true to-day.

The case of Burch v. Caden Stone Co., 93 Fed. 181, is apparently contrary to the rule of the text.

¹⁴ Southern Ry. Co. v. Grizzle, 124 Ga. 735, 110 Am. St. Rep. 191; Southern Ry. Co. v. Reynolds, 126 Ga. 657; Able v. Southern Ry. Co., 73 S. C. 173; Ellis v. Southern Ry. Co., 72 S. C. 465, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 378; Martin v. Louisville & Nashville Ry. Co., 95 Ky. 612; Illinois Central Ry. Co. v. Coley, 121 Ky. 385, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 370; Illinois Central Ry. Co. v. Houchins, 121 Ky. 526, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 375.

¹⁵ Mayer v. Thompson-Hutchison Bldg. Co., 104 Ala. 611, 53 Am. St. Rep. 88, 28 L. R. A. 433.

jured;¹⁶ and servants of a house-mover are liable for their negligent acts in moving a house.¹⁷ So where an agent, while acting for his principal, opened a gap in another's fence and left it open, trusting to his own supervision to see that no injury was caused thereby, he was held personally liable for the loss of animals escaping through the opening.¹⁸

§ 1462. Agent must have been an actor, not a mere automaton.—It would seem to be a necessary limitation upon the liability of the agent in any case, that he can fairly be deemed to have been an actor in the transaction rather than a mere automaton or mechanical instrumentality. Thus, in a case in which the question was whether two agents, Bayes and Pennington, could be held liable for directing a distress for rent to be made in behalf of their principals, the landlords, by one Harrison, another agent, it was said by Baron Bramwell in the court of exchequer:¹⁹ "It occurred to my brother, Channell, and myself, who, together with my brother Martin, heard this case, that it was doubtful whether, under the circumstances, Bayes and Pennington could be liable for the act of Harrison, whether in fact they were anything more than a mere conduit-pipe for communicating authority from the landlords to Harrison. For my own part, and I believe I may say for my brother Channell, if there had been nothing more, we should have continued to entertain great doubt whether they would have been liable. It is certain that a messenger who delivers a letter containing a warrant of distress, not knowing the contents of the letter, is not responsible; and I cannot help thinking that if a servant were sent with this message to a broker, 'My master desires you to distrain for rent due to him,' the servant would not be liable as a person ordering or committing the trespass. So, if a person wrote a letter in these terms, 'My friend, having a bad hand, is unable to write, and he re-

¹⁶ Mayberry v. Northern Pac. Ry. Co., 100 Minn. 79, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 675, 10 Ann. Cas. 754. Compare Bryce v. Southern Ry. Co., 125 Fed. 958.

In Coalgate Co. v. Bross, 25 Okla. 244, 138 Am. St. Rep. 915, it was held that an engineer operating an engine hoisting cars was liable to a fellow-servant for injury caused by negligence in not obeying a signal given by another fellow-servant. In Galvin v. Brown & McCable, 53 Or. 598, a general superintendent of a corporation was held liable for neg-ligently ordering five timbers to be carried in a sling, instead of four, on account of which one fell on plaintiff. In Moyse v. Northern Pac. Ry. Co., 41 Mont. 272, defendants, part of yard crew, were held liable for allowing cars to escape and collide with the car in which plaintiff, a conductor, was riding.

¹⁷ Bickford v. Richards, 154 Mass. 163, 26 Am. St. Rep. 224.

¹⁸ Horner v. Lawrence, 37 N. J. L. 46.

¹⁹ Bennett v. Bayes, 5 H. & N. 391.

quests me to write and tell you to distrain on his tenant,' it is difficult to say that a person so writing would be liable to an action."

§ 1463. — Mere intermediate agent not liable.—For analogous reasons, a mere intermediate agent who has not the control, does not participate in the act, and is guilty of no fault, can not be held liable. The liability must rest upon the master and the direct agent, and not upon the intermediate one.²⁰

§ 1464. Agent's liability for negligent omissions—Misfeasance—Nonfeasance.—When the question of the agent's liability to third persons for negligent omissions to act is reached, a problem of greater difficulty is presented. The doctrine very early found expression in English law, that while a servant could be personally charged for his active wrongdoing, the responsibility for his negligence rested on his master only. Thus Chief Justice Holt in 1701 declared that "a servant or deputy quatenus such cannot be charged for neglect, but the principal only shall be charged for it. But for a misfeasance an action will lie against a servant or deputy, but not quatenus a deputy or a servant, but as a wrongdoer."²¹

More than a hundred years before, in an action involving the liability of an under-sheriff, Coke, in arguing in the King's Bench, had said: "I grant that an action for any falsity or deceit, lyeth against the under-sheriff, as for embesseling, rasing of writs, and so forth, but upon nonfeasans, as the case is here, the not return of the summons, it ought to be brought against the sheriff himself."²²

²⁰ In Brown v. Lent, 20 Vt. 529, it is said: "A mere intermediate agent between the master and the direct agent cannot be held constructively responsible for the acts of the latter." Approved but distinguished in Bileu v. Paisley, 18 Oreg. 47, 4 L. R. A. 840. So in Hewett v. Swift, 3 Allen (85 Mass.), 420, it was held that the president of a corporation was not liable where, in his capacity as president and as a "mere conduit for communication between the corporation and the agent" who did the wrong, he transmitted to the latter the orders of the corporation directing the doing of the act. An intermediate agent like a steward or general manager is not personally liable for the acts of servants hired by him for his principal, and whose act he neither directed, caused or participated in. Stone v. Cartwright, 6 Term Rep. (Durn. & E.), 411; Bath v. Caton, 37 Mich. 199; Johnson v. Memphis, 77 Tenn. (9 Lea) 125; Canfield v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 59 Mo. App. 354.

See also, Nicholson v. Mounsey, 15 East, 384.

Agent not at fault.—Within the same reasoning, the agent cannot be held liable where he had no duty or power in the matter. Dudley v. Illinois, etc., Ry. Co., 127 Ky. 221, 13 L. R. A. 1186.

He must also have such connection with and part in the act that he would be liable if he were not an agent. Frorer v. Baker, 137 Ill. App. 588.

²¹ In Lane v. Cotton, 12 Mod. 472, 488.

²² Marsh v. Astrey, 1 Leonard, 146.

And in a very much more recent case in Louisiana, the court said: "At common law, an agent is personally responsible to third parties for doing something which he ought not to have done, but not for not doing something which he ought to have done; the agent in the latter case being liable to his principal only. For non-feasance, or mere neglect in the performance of duty, the responsibility therefor must arise from some express or implied obligation between particular parties standing in privity of law or contract with each other. No man is bound to answer for such violation of duty or obligation except to those to whom he has become directly bound or amenable for his conduct. * * * An agent is not responsible to third persons for any negligence in the performance of duties devolving upon him purely from his agency, since he cannot, as agent, be subject to any obligations toward third persons, other than those of his principal. Those duties are not imposed upon him by law. He has agreed with no one, except his principal, to perform them. In failing to do so he wrongs no one but his principal, who alone can hold him responsible."²³

§ 1465. — Certain rules quoted.—Before attempting to work out any more definite principles certain rules which have been widely quoted may well be noticed. Thus, in one case,²⁴ before the supreme judicial court of Massachusetts, Chief Justice Gray, later of the supreme court of the United States, used the following language: "It is often said in the books that an agent is responsible to third persons for misfeasance only, and not for non-feasance. And it is doubtless true that if an agent never does anything towards carrying out his contract with his principal, but wholly omits or neglects to do so, the principal is the only person who can maintain any action against him for ²³ Delaney v. Rochereau, 34 La. Ann. 1123, 44 Am. Rep. 456.

So in Kahl v. Love, 37 N. J. L. 5, it is said: "It is not everyone who suffers a loss from the negligence of another that can maintain a suit on such a ground. The limit of the doctrine relating to actionable negligence is, that the person occasioning the loss must owe a duty, arising from contract or otherwise, to the person sustaining such loss. Such a restriction on the right to sue for a want of care in the exercise of employments or the transaction of business, is plainly necessary to restrain the remedy from being pushed to an impracticable extreme. There would be no bounds to actions and litigious intricacies, if the ill effects of the negligence of men could be followed down the chain of results to the final effect. Under such a doctrine, the careless manufacturer of iron might be made responsible for the destruction of a steamer from the bursting of a boiler, into which his imperfect material, after passing through many hands and various transactions, had been converted. To avoid such absurd consequences, the right of suit for such a cause has been circumscribed within the bounds already defined."

²⁴ Osborne v. Morgan, 130 Mass. 102, 39 Am. Rep. 437.

the non-feasance. But if the agent once actually undertakes and enters upon the execution of a particular work, it is his duty to use reasonable care in the manner of executing it, so as not to cause any injury to third persons which may be the natural consequence of his acts; and he cannot by abandoning its execution midway, and leaving things in a dangerous condition, exempt himself from liability to any person who suffers injury by reason of his having so left them without proper safeguards. This is not non-feasance or doing nothing, but it is misfeasance, doing improperly."

In another case in the same court,²⁵ in which an agent had been charged with negligence in admitting water into the pipes of a building without first seeing that they were in proper condition, Judge Metcalf said: "Non-feasance is the omission of an act which a person ought to do; misfeasance is the improper doing of an act which a person might lawfully do; and malfeasance is the doing of an act which a person ought not to do at all. The defendant's omission to examine the state of the pipes in the house before causing the water to be let on was a non-feasance. But if he had not caused the water to be let on, that non-feasance would not have injured the plaintiff. If he had examined the pipes and left them in a proper condition, and then caused the letting on of the water, there would have been neither non-feasance nor misfeasance. As the facts are, the non-feasance caused the act done to be a misfeasance. But from which did the plaintiff suffer? Clearly from the act done, which was no less a misfeasance by reason of its being preceded by a non-feasance."

So in the Louisiana case above referred to, it is said: "Every one, whether he is principal or agent, is responsible directly to persons injured by his own negligence, in fulfilling obligations resting upon him in his individual character and which the law imposes upon him independent of contract. No man increases or diminishes his obligations to strangers by becoming an agent. If, in the course of his agency, he comes in contact with the person or property of a stranger, he is liable for any injury he may do to either, by his negligence, in respect to duties imposed by law upon him in common with all other men. * * * The whole doctrine on that subject culminates in the proposition that wherever the agent's negligence, consisting in his own wrongdoing, therefore in an act, directly injures a stranger, then such stranger can recover from the agent damages for the injury."²⁶

²⁵ Bell v. Josselyn, 3 Gray (Mass.), 309, 63 Am. Dec. 741. Rochereau, 34 La. Ann. 1123, 44 Am. Rep. 456.

²⁶ Bermudez, C. J., in Delaney v.

§ 1466. Attempted distinction between misfeasance and non-feasance.—The attempted distinction between misfeasance and non-feasance has been very much criticized and often denied to exist. It is undoubtedly true that the Latin names employed may not be very appropriate or illuminating. Notwithstanding this, however, it is believed to be true that there is a real distinction lying back of these phrases which it is important to discover and which is not more vague or indefinite than many other distinctions which it is necessary in our law to recognize.²⁷

It is sometimes said that the only distinction, if one exists, is to be

²⁷ In the following cases acts of alleged negligent omission have been dealt with criminally. Rex v. Friend, Rus. & Ry. 20, where a master was held guilty of a misdemeanor for not providing proper food and clothing for his apprentice, causing loss of health. Regina v. Lowe, 3 C. & K. 123, where an engineer, employed to run an engine to draw miners out of a coal pit, deserted his post and left an ignorant boy in charge, and a miner was injured. The court held "that a man may, by neglect of duty, render himself liable to be convicted of manslaughter, or even murder." But in Regina v. Smith, 11 Cox C. C. 210, where the servant employed to watch at a crossing, there being no duty on the master to keep a servant there, deserted his post, it was held that the servant was not criminally liable because he owed no duty to the public. Regina v. Nicholls, 13 Cox C. C. 75, where a grandmother, who was compelled to leave home to work during the day, left an infant of tender years in the care of her nine-year-old son, and the child died from want of food, the court charged that there must be "wicked negligence" or recklessness to make the defendant criminally liable. In Regina v. Downes, 13 Cox C. C. 111, a father from religious motives, neglected to furnish proper medical attention for his son. The court said, "In this case there was a duty imposed by the statute on the prisoner to provide medical aid for his infant child, and there was the deliberate intention not to obey the law; whether proceeding from a good or bad motive is not material." Regina v. Instan (1893), 1 Q. B. 450, a niece was held criminally liable for failing to provide food and medicine for an aunt, seventy-three years old, with whom the niece lived. "The prisoner," said the court, "was under a moral obligation to the deceased from which arose a legal duty towards her." In Rex v. Smith, 2 C. & P. 449, it was held that a brother was not criminally liable for neglecting to provide food, warmth, etc., for an idiot brother in his house. "There is strong proof that there was some negligence; but my point is, that omission, without a duty, will not create an indictable offense." For an elaborate discussion of The Moral Duty to Aid Others as a Basis for Tort Liability, see articles by F. H. Bohlen, 56 Univ. of Pa. Law Review, 217, 316. For the liability, under a statute, for not furnishing sufficient food to a child whose care the defendant had undertaken, see Cowley v. People, 83 N. Y. 464, 38 Am. Rep. 464. For not furnishing medical attendance where the parties believed in "Christian Science," etc., see People v. Pierson, 176 N. Y. 201, 98 Am. St. Rep. 666, 63 L. R. A. 178; Westrup v. Commonwealth, 123 Ky. 95, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 685.

found in the fact that in one case the agent has, while in the other case he has not, actually entered upon the performance of an undertaking which he has assumed for his principal. In the latter case, it is said that if he had never entered upon the performance at all, as he had agreed to do, he is liable to his principal for not performing, but that he will not be liable to third persons, although they may have also suffered injury by reason of his non-performance. In these cases, the agent's duty will often be merely a contractual one and the third persons are not parties to the contract. Even if it be a non-contractual one, it will usually arise out of some act, condition or relation which is personal to the principal and the agent, and therefore will not sustain an action by third persons, who are strangers to it.

§ 1467. — This aspect of the matter may be made somewhat clearer by some further distinctions. In the case in hand, it may be, (1) that the principal was under no obligations to the third person; or (2) that the principal had undertaken some duty to the third person which he relied upon the agent to perform. The principal, for example, is party to an action involving a question in which several others are equally but separately interested. The principal has agreed with an attorney that the latter shall argue his case. But the attorney wholly neglects to undertake it. It is conceded that if he had argued it, he would probably have won it. In any event, its determination would have settled the question not only for his own client, but for all the others similarly interested and would have saved the latter the expense and trouble of settling it for themselves. The attorney is liable to his own client for the loss he may have sustained, but no one would suggest that he is liable to the other parties. Or the principal is proprietor of a steamboat and has undertaken to carry a company of people across a stream at a certain time. He has engaged a captain to pilot the boat across. At the appointed time the passengers are present, the captain is upon the ground, everything is in readiness, but the captain utterly refuses to go upon the boat or in any respect to enter upon or perform his undertaking. The loss or inconvenience to the assembled passengers may be very great. Can any one of them maintain an action against the captain?

§ 1468. — Further of this distinction.—It is said, however, that while the agent may not be liable if he never enters upon his undertaking, yet if he has actually entered upon the performance of his duties he will be liable to third persons who are injured by reason of his failure to exercise reasonable care and diligence in their performance. In this case also some distinctions are possible. Suppose that, though the agent owes his principal a duty, the principal himself owes no duty to third persons who may sustain loss by reason of the agent's neglect. The principal confides to the charge of his agent certain premises which it is the agent's duty to his principal to keep in good condition and repair; the agent fails to perform this duty, permits the premises to become dilapidated, and disreputable, and he is clearly liable to his principal for the injury he sustains. But is the agent liable to the adjoining proprietors because their premises are rendered less attractive or rentable or saleable or valuable by reason of the condition in which the agent has thus permitted his principal's premises to be, that condition not constituting in law a nuisance? The principal owes no duty to the adjoining proprietors and the agent would owe them no duty if he were himself the principal.

§ 1469. — Suppose, next, that the principal is under some obligation to the other party. A principal has contracted with a third person to supply a horse fit for a lady to ride. He instructs his agent to go into the market and buy a horse fit for a lady to ride, but says nothing further to the agent respecting the use to which the horse is to be put. The agent goes into the market and negligently buys a horse unfit for a lady to ride and delivers it to his principal. The principal delivers the horse to the other party in pursuance of the agreement, and the other party—a woman, let us say—is injured while riding the horse as a result of its vicious character. Is the agent liable to her? If the purchaser gives the horse to her daughter, and the daughter is injured, is the agent liable to the daughter?²⁸

The principal is the proprietor of a steamboat, as in the case already supposed in a previous illustration. The pilot, instead of refusing to go at all, starts with the passengers for the desired destination. After going part way, however, the pilot turns the boat about, and sets the passengers all down again, unharmed, at the point from which they started. Is he now liable to them?

The principal again is a carrier of passengers. He has undertaken to exercise at least reasonable care and dispatch to bring a passenger to his destination at a particular time. The principal entrusts the conduct of the vehicle to an agent, who knows the facts. The agent so negligently manages the vehicle that the passenger does not arrive try it and, while doing so, was injured because of the vicious character of the horse. Held, that she might recover damages from the proposed seller. See also post, § 1481.

²⁸ See Cameron v. Mount, 86 Wis. 477, 22 L. R. A. 512, where the defendant undertook to sell to plaintiff's husband a horse fit for a woman to drive. At defendant's request, the wife drove the horse to

on time, and thereby sustains great loss. May the passenger recover damages from the agent?

§ 1470. — A client, again, about to buy real estate, submits the abstract of title to his attorney for examination. The attorney examines the abstract and gives to his client a written opinion that the title is good. As a matter of fact, the attorney has negligently failed to observe a defect in the title. The client buys the land and holds it without discovering the defect. He then offers to sell the land to another and exhibits to him the opinion of the attorney concerning the title. The purchaser buys in reliance upon the opinion without making further investigation. The client conveys the land without warranty and never suffers in any way from the defective title. The purchaser, however, does suffer from it. In the absence at least of anything to indicate that the attorney had reason to believe that his opinion would be put to such a use, is he liable to this second purchaser for the injury he sustains?

Without attempting here to answer categorically these and countless other similar questions which will at once occur to the mind, let us see how the rules already laid down by the courts in this connection would apply to certain of them.

§ 1471. — Effect of beginning performance.—In the first place, as has been seen, it is constantly said that there is a radical distinction in the liability of the servant or agent depending upon whether he has or has not entered upon the performance of his undertaking, and it will be worth while to examine this distinction more closely to see what it really contains. It is said by Gray, C. J.,²⁰ in the quotation already given in a preceding section, "that if an agent never does anything towards carrying out his contract with his principal, but wholly omits and neglects so to do, the principal is the only person who can maintain any action against him for the non-feasance." Applying this to the case of the steamboat suggested above, if the servant never starts upon the voyage, his refusal to start as he had agreed with his principal to do, will not render him liable in tort to the expectant passengers. Neither could they have any remedy against him in contract except upon some theory of a contract made for their benefit and enforceable by them.

§ 1472. — Chief Justice Gray, however, continues by saying: "But if the agent once actually undertakes and enters upon the execution of a particular work, it is his duty to use reasonable care in the manner of executing it, so as not to cause any injury to third persons which may be the natural consequence of his acts; and he cannot by abandoning its execution midway and leaving things in a dangerous condition, exempt himself from liability to any person who suffers injury by reason of his having so left them without proper safeguard." Here are two ideas: (1) Negligence in the performance of his undertaking; and (2) negligently abandoning performance and leaving things in a dangerous condition. Applying these rules to the case of the boat, if the servant starts upon his journey but negligently injures his passengers or third persons by his management of the boat while on the way, he would be personally liable. There is nothing new in this. It is the now familiar rule already referred to which makes the servant or agent liable for direct and immediate injuries caused by his negligence while in the performance of his undertaking.³⁰

²⁰ In Osborne v. Morgan, 130 Mass. 102, 39 Am. Rep. 437.

He is also said to be liable for injuries caused "by abandoning his execution midway and leaving things in a dangerous condition." If, then, in the case of the boat, the servant negligently (a fortiori if he does it wilfully) abandons the boat, or abandons its management in midstream, and thereby causes injury to the passengers, he would be liable to them.

§ 1473. — But suppose the servant or agent in the case of the boat does neither of these things, but, as in one of the cases supposed, after taking the boat and the passengers in safety half-way across the stream, he then, against their protests, turns the boat about and puts them down in safety again at the place from which they started. Is he now liable to them? Unless the liability of the servant in these cases is to be confined to acts of physical injury to person or property, would he not be liable for so negligently managing the boat that instead of making his proper destination he makes some other; or even comes around again to the point from whence he started? Or, if he does it wilfully, would he not be liable to passengers rightfully on the boat and rightfully headed toward their destination, if against their will he wilfully turns them about and carries them in the opposite direction? Has he any more right to bring them back to the place from which they started than to take them to some other destination than that originally agreed upon?

³⁰ In Schlosser v. Great North. Ry. Co., 20 N. D. 406, the liability of the defendant is put upon this ground, though it seems a misapplication under the facts.

In Consolidated Gas Co. v. Connor, 114 Md. 140, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 809, a gas company, having arranged with the city to supply gas to lamps owned by the city, was held to stand in the attitude of an agent of the city and to be liable to a third person for negligence in performing its undertaking.

§ 1474. Agent liable for condition of premises over which he has control.—On analogy to cases already considered, the agent should be held responsible for injuries caused by the condition of premises in the possession or under the control of the agent where the condition is one for which he is responsible and the injury is such as he would be liable for if he were controlling the premises on his own account. Thus, if an agent, having control of premises, should permit or maintain a nuisance thereon for which he would be liable if he were the principal in the transaction, he should be equally liable notwithstanding the fact that he is but an agent.

For similar reasons, the agent should be held responsible for injuries caused by his neglect to keep in repair premises under his control where he is charged by his principal with the duty to repair and has the necessary means, in any case in which he would be liable for the same injury if he were controlling the premises on his own account. In these cases in which the agent has both the duty (to his principal) and the power to repair, and fails to do so, the injury can fairly be regarded as the consequence of his own act.³¹ If an agent would be

³¹ Cases holding agent not liable.—The case most frequently cited and perhaps most thoroughly considered in which the agent was held not liable is Delaney v. Rochereau, 34 La. Ann. 1123, 44 Am. Rep. 456. This was an action to charge defendants with liability for an injury resulting from the defective condition of premises, for the owner of which they were rental agents. The owner of the premises resided in France, the premises were a two-story building in New Orleans; the defendants were agents of the owner, "having control as such of the property." Half of the building was rented and half vacant. A balcony extended along the front of the entire building and needed repair, as the defendants knew. But there is nothing in the case to show that they had as to their principal either any duty or any authority to repair or any money with which to pay for repairs. On two or more occasions defendants had permitted the vacant half to be used for purposes of amusement. On the night in question, a dance was given in the vacant portion of the building, without the knowledge or consent of the defendants, by a person who had obtained the key from a neighbor, and taken possession of the premises. During the evening twelve or thirteen of the dancers rushed out upon the balcony, which gave way under them, and they were thrown to the ground. One of them, a boy about fourteen years of age, was killed by the fall. His parents brought this action against the agents. It was held that the agents were not liable. The case was very fully considered with reference to the English, Roman and French law. Some quotations from the opinion have already been made in the text. This gist of the conclusion is found in the following extract: "An agent is not responsible to third persons for any negligence in the performance of duties devolving upon him purely from his agency, since he cannot, as agent, be subject to any obligations toward third persons other than those of his principal. Those duties are not imposed upon responsible for negligently driving his principal's team against a third person, as he would undoubtedly be, is he any the less responsible him by law. He has agreed with no one, except his principal, to perform them. In failing to do so, he wrongs no one but his principal, who alone can hold him responsible."

It is not at all clear that the facts of this case bring it within the rule of the text. If they do, the answer which it is submitted may be made to the argument of the court, is that the duty is one not merely imposed upon the defendants as agents by their contracts with their principals, but imposed upon them by law as individuals having control of property not to so control it as to cause injury to third persons. To same effect as the principal case, is, Carey v. Rochereau, 16 Fed. 87.

Another case frequently cited is that of Feltus v. Swan, 62 Miss. 415, wherein the principal and agent were sued together to recover damages for not keeping open a drain upon land adjoining the plaintiff's, and alleged in the declaration to have been under the charge and control of the defendants, one as owner thereof and the other as manager and agent thereof. Nothing is alleged to show that the agent had any actual control of the premises or any power or duty in the matter. It was held that the agent was not liable and under the allegations of the declaration the conclusion would seem to be sound.

In Dean v. Brock, 11 Ind. App. 507, the action was brought against both principals and agents but the principals did not appear and seem not to have been served with process. It was alleged in the complaint that the agents were employed to rent the building, collect the rents, pay the taxes and make the necessary repairs to keep the building in a tenable condition. Plaintiff was injured, as he alleged, because of the rotten condition of certain sills which had not been examined or repaired for more than twenty years, as the agents knew, as he also alleged, and he charged the agents with negligence in not knowing the conditions and in not making repairs. It was held that the agents were not liable, on the ground that their neglect, if there was any, was mere non-feasance.

It would be possible to make some distinctions with reference to this case, but it undoubtedly proceeds upon a theory which cannot be reconciled with the rule laid down in the text.

The same conclusions were reached in the similar case of Drake v. Hagan, 108 Tenn. 265, where the doctrine of Delaney v. Rochereau, supra, is approved. In Kuhnert v. Angell, 10 N. D. 59, 88 Am. St. Rep. 675, it was held that the agent had not such control as to make him liable.

In Labadie v. Hawley, 61 Tex. 177, 48 Am. Rep. 278, an agent was held not liable to an adjoining proprietor for an injury sustained by him by reason of excessive heat and smoke caused by hot fires in a cooking range which the agent had permitted the tenant to erect in his principal's building. The case is put upon the ground that in any event it was a mere non-feasance, but it does not appear that the agent had any real control over the premises, nor that it was negligent to permit the range to be erected, nor that there was any negligence in its construction. The injury arose from the manner in which the tenant used the range.

See Scheller v. Silbermintz, 50 N. Y. Misc. 175; Dudley v. Ill. Cent. R. Co., 127 Ky. 221, 128 Am. St. Rep. 335.

Cases holding the agent liable.—The following cases hold the agent liable where he had the control and because he negligently fails to guide the team or negligently permits it to go unguided or negligently leaves it unattended and injury thereby results? If the agent is not in control or has neither the duty nor the power to repair, the failure to repair cannot be regarded as his act. But where these conditions are present it is difficult to see why it is not properly to be regarded as his act. It is, of course, in one sense a not-doing, a non-feasance; but his act of control is a doing, a feasance, and his failure to properly control is a misfeasance, if any the power and the duty to make the repairs. Baird v. Shipman, 132 Ill. 16, 22 Am. St. Rep. 504, 7 L. R. A. 128, where agents for a non-resident owner, with general power to lease and make repairs, were held liable for negligently allowing a stable door to get into a dangerous condition so that an expressman delivering goods to the tenant was injured. Carson v. Quinn, 127 Mo. App. 525, where the agent with general control over the premises, a flat building, constructed a new walk in the court and left a hole uncovered. Ellis v. McNaughton, 76 Mich. 237, 15 Am. St. Rep. 308, where the agent had general oversight over the erection of a building. One of the workmen, against the agent's orders, removed a part of the sidewalk, but the agent, after knowledge of its removal, allowed it to so remain for some time until the injury. Banningan v. Woodbury, 158 Mich. 206, where plaintiff was injured while passing along the street, by glass falling from window of building over which defendant had control to rent. Lough v. Davis, 30 Wash. 204, 94 Am. St. 848, 59 L. R. A. 802; same case, 35 Wash. 449. Here the agent was authorized to rent, repair and manage. Railing around veranda was allowed to become old and rotten. In Campbell v. Portland Sugar Co., 62 Me. 552, 16 Am. Rep. 503, plaintiff was injured by falling through a hole in a wharf. The court said: "The general agents who had the care of this wharf and who had agreed with the lessees to make all needful repairs, are certainly in no better position than their principal." In Stielwel v. Borman, 63 Ark. 30, it was held that the mere fact that defendant was operating a mine as agent did not make him liable for injury caused by the collection of gas, unless it appeared that he had a duty and power to do what was necessary.

In Carter v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 84 S. Car. 546, it was held that a railroad section boss was liable for allowing weeds to accumulate on the right-of-way, where they caught fire and burned plaintiff's house. See also, Patry v. Northern Pac. Ry. Co., 114 Minn. 375, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 586. In Orcutt v. Century Bldg. Co., 201 Mo. 424, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 929, the defendant was a trustee under a deed of trust with power to rent, collect rent, pay taxes, and all expenses in connection with the maintenance, repair and management of an office building. An elevator was allowed to become out of repair. In Hagerty v. Montana Ore Purchasing Co., 38 Mont. 69, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 356, the agent, a general manager of the mine, allowed a shaft to become defective. Applying the same principles: Mayer v. Thompson-Hutchinson Bldg. Co., 104 Ala. 611, 53 Am. St. Rep. 88, 28 L. R. A. 433; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Foulks, 191 Ill. 57; Murray v. Cowherd, 148 Ky. 591; Consolidated Gas Co. v. Connor, 114 Md. 140, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 809; Greenberg v. Whitcomb Lumb. Co., 90 Wis. 225, 48 Am. St. Rep. 911, 28 L. R. A. 439; Ferrier v. Trepannier, 24 Can. S. C. 86; Owens v. Nichols, 139 Ga. 475.

importance is to be attached to these terms. It would seem to need no argument to show that the mere not-doing of a particular act which is in itself but a mere incident in the larger act of doing, ought not to be regarded as such a non-feasance as will excuse the agent within any proper meaning of that term.

Not all the cases, it is true, are in harmony with the rules above laid down, but these rules are believed to be sound, and to be sustained by the weight of modern authority.

§ 1475. — Agent must be responsible.—It is, of course, essential to the liability of the agent in these cases, that he shall be responsible for the condition. If the premises were in the defective condition when they came under his charge, and he has neither the power nor the authority to change them, or if the defect arose while they were in his charge, but he had no power or authority to correct it, he could ordinarily not be held responsible. Thus, where an agent who was carrying on a mill was charged with responsibility for injuries caused by maintaining the dam at too high a level, but it appeared that the dam was erected at that height long before he became agent and he had no power or authority to change it, it was held that he was not liable.³²

§ 1476. — Duration of liability.—How long the liability of the agent in these cases would continue, is a question of torts rather than of agency. It would doubtless continue while the conditions continue to which it owes its existence, and would cease when the principal by personally assuming control or otherwise interrupted the causal relation between the agent and the injury.³³

§ 1477. — Other cases involving the same principle.—Many other cases involving the same principle as that referred to in the preceding section may be determined in the same way. Thus, an agent having complete charge and control of building operations owes a duty not only to his principal to see that the work is properly done, but also to third persons to see to it that while doing it and with reference to matters over which he has complete control, he does not negligently

³² Brown Paper Co. v. Dean, 123 Mass. 267. Where a manufacturing company having a feeble and insufficient dam across a stream of water, ordered its servant to shut the gate and keep it shut until ordered to raise it, and the servant obeyed the order, by means of which the water was raised so high that the dam broke away, and an injury was done to the plaintiff, it was held that the servant was not liable. Hill v. Caverly, 7 N. H. 215, 26 Am. Dec. 735.

³³ See Curtin v. Somerset, 140 Pa. 70, 23 Am. St. Rep. 220, 10 L. R. A. 322; Memphis Asphalt Co. v. Fleming, 96 Ark. 442; Daugherty v. Herzog, 145 Ind. 255, 57 Am. St. Rep. 204.

injure them, whether it be by his direct act or by his failure to take the precautions, without which he ought not to act at all.³⁴

So the managing agent of a lumber company having full charge and control of its mill and machinery and of assigning employees to work at various machines, is personally liable for an injury caused by setting an inexperienced and ignorant employee at work upon a dangerous machine.³⁵

So an agent having complete control and management of a mine with power and authority to do whatever is reasonably necessary to prevent injury from its operation is personally responsible for an injury caused by his neglect to take necessary precautions against the accumulation of dangerous gas therein.³⁶

So an agent who takes complete charge and control of an office building, employing, supervising and discharging the necessary servants, and controlling and directing the operation of the elevators in the building, is personally liable for injury caused by the careless supervision and management of the elevator by an employee whom he has placed in charge thereof.³⁷

An agent who has personal charge and control of a building, which he rents for his principal, is personally liable to a tenant for injuries caused to his goods because the agent, after the water had been shut off from the building for a time, caused it to be turned on again without seeing that pipes and faucets were in proper condition.³⁸

The managing directors of a corporation are personally responsible for loss caused to a third person because they negligently permitted an undue quantity of high explosives to be accumulated upon the premises under their control.³⁹

³⁴ Mayer v. Thompson-Hutchinson Bldg. Co., 104 Ala. 611, 53 Am. St. 88, 28 L. R. A. 433. To same effect: Lottman v. Barnett, 62 Mo. 159; Hariman v. Stowe, 57 Mo. 93; Lee v. Dodd, 20 Mo. App. 271. But see Steinhauser v. Spraul, 127 Mo. 541, 27 L. R. A. 441, in which the doctrine of non-liability for alleged non-feasance is carried to the extreme. See also, Ellis v. Southern Ry. Co., 72 S. C. 465, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 378; Fort v. Whipple, 11 Hun (N. Y.) 586.

³⁵ Greenberg v. Whitcomb Lumb. Co., 90 Wis. 225, 48 Am. St. Rep. 911, 28 L. R. A. 439. Compare O'Neil v. Young, 58 Mo. App. 628.

³⁶ Stiewel v. Borman, 63 Ark. 30. To same effect: see, Hindson v. Markle, 171 Pa. 138, where the superintendent of a mine was held liable for the pollution of a stream which caused plaintiff injury.

³⁷ Orcutt v. Century Bldg. Co., 201 Mo. 424, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 929.

³⁸ Bell v. Josselyn, 3 Gray (Mass.), 309, 63 Am. Dec. 741.

³⁹ Cameron v. Kenyon-Connell Com. Co., 22 Mont. 312, 74 Am. St. Rep. 602, 44 L. R. A. 508.

To same effect: Nunnally v. Southern Iron Co., 94 Tenn. 397, 28 L. R. A. 421.

The president of an incorporated

There are, of course, courts, notably those in New York,⁴⁰ which would probably regard these cases as cases of non-feasance merely, and therefore as imposing no liability upon the agent directly to third persons. But the weight of authority is clearly the other way.

§ 1478. — Within the principle of the preceding section would also doubtless be included the case of a superior agent, like a foreman or manager, who has the actual control of servants of his principal, and who would be liable to third persons for injuries resulting to them from his negligent exercise of that power of control; though, of course, he would not be liable for the mere negligence of one of the servants in doing or not doing that whose doing or not doing involved no negligence on the part of the superior agent.⁴¹

Such a superior agent or servant would also be liable to the servants under his control for injuries caused to them by his negligence in exercising that control.

omnibus line directed its drivers to exclude colored persons. He was held individually liable for an injury caused by a driver in obeying such order, and he was not exonerated from such liability because the corporation might also have been liable. Peck v. Cooper, 112 Ill. 192, 54 Am. Rep. 231. But compare Bullock v. Gaffigan, 100 Pa. 276.

In Brower v. Northern Pacific Ry. Co., 109 Minn. 385, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 354, an engineer, charged with the duty of keeping a water gauge in repair, negligently put in a gauge and also negligently failed to put the usual guard around the gauge. Plaintiff was injured by an explosion. Held, the engineer was liable. The negligent putting in of the gauge was misfeasance, even if the leaving off the guard was mere non-feasance. "The distinction between misfeasance and non-feasance is sometimes fanciful."

Agent having no power to correct defect.—The doctrine of the foregoing cases, of course, cannot apply where, however great the defect, the agent sought to be held was without duty, power or means to correct it. Dudley v. Illinois, etc., Ry. Co., 127 Ky. 221, 128 Am. St. Rep. 335.

⁴⁰ Thus in Murray v. Usher, 117 N. Y. 542, it was held that the general manager of a saw mill was not personally liable to an employee injured by reason of defective equipment which it was within the power and the duty of the manager to keep in safe condition.

The same principles were applied in Van Antwerp v. Linton, 89 Hun (N. Y.), 417, affirmed by the court of appeals on the opinion below, in 157 N. Y. 716. In Potter v. Gilbert, 130 App. Div. 632, aff'd 196 N. Y. 576, where an architect owed the contractual duty to the owner to see that the contractor complied with the plans and plaintiff, a servant of the contractor, was injured by the falling of a wall defectively constructed; the architect was held not liable, it not being contended that the plans themselves were negligently drawn. See also, Henshaw v. Noble, 7 Ohio St. 226.

⁴¹ The master of a ship at sea is not liable for injuries to a passenger caused by the negligence of the crew, there being no personal negligence on his part. Stacpoole v. Bettridge, 5 Vict. L. R. 302. The master of a ship in harbor is not liable for injuries caused by the mere negli-

§ 1479. Cases in which agent held not liable.—On the other hand, there are a number of cases, usually called cases of non-feasance, and some of which probably were really such, in which the agent was held not liable. Thus it has been held, that the agent is not liable to a third person for the breach of his duty to his principal to give the latter notice of information coming to his attention and which a third person was interested in having communicated to the principal.⁴²

So it is held that the transfer agent of a corporation is not responsible to a third person for refusing to permit him to make a transfer of stock upon the transfer books of the corporation in the custody of the agent. The remedy, it was said, was by an action against the corporation itself.⁴³

For similar reasons it has been held that the treasurer of a corporation is not liable in his individual capacity to a stockholder for refusing to pay him a dividend.⁴⁴

So it is held that a depositor cannot maintain an action against the cashier of a bank for the misapplication of funds, but the action must be against the bank itself.⁴⁵

And, generally, it is held that no action at law can be maintained by stockholders in a corporation against the directors personally to recover for losses sustained by reason of the misconduct of the directors.

gence of the crew. Clancy v. Harrison, 4 Viet. L. R. 437.

⁴² In Reid v. Humber, 49 Ga. 207, the court said: "A party shipped his cotton to his factor; he then told the agent of that factor, who was at another depot from where the cotton was shipped, that he did not wish the cotton sold until further orders. Was there a legal obligation on that agent towards the shipper to transmit his directions to the factor? From what did it spring? The agent was bound to his principal, and would have been responsible to him for any damages recovered against the principal, on account of the agent's failure. And the shipper may have been entitled to recover against the principal, either for the neglect of the agent in not forwarding the instructions, or for the violation of them by the principal, if they had been communicated. But we cannot see that there was any such relation between the agent and the shipper as to render the agent liable to him for the neglect. Had the shipper made the agent his own agent in the matter for a consideration, the case would be different."

Where an agent, being duly authorized, impounded cattle trespassing on the principal's land, he was not liable for damage suffered by the cattle on account of the principal's failure to care for them properly while they were impounded. Kimrough v. Boswell, 119 Ga. 201.

⁴³ Denny v. Manhattan Co., 2 Denio (N. Y.), 115, 5 id. 639.

See also, Eames v. Brunswick Construction Co., 104 N. Y. App. Div. 566.

⁴⁴ French v. Fuller, 23 Pick. (Mass.) 108.

⁴⁵ Wilson v. Rogers, 1 Wyo. 51.

The directors do not owe the proper performance of their duties as such directly to the stockholders.⁴⁶

§ 1480. — So in the case of persons employed in a professional capacity. The duties which they owe are ordinarily held to be owing to their immediate employers only, and not to third persons, even though the latter may in some way sustain injury because this duty is not performed. Thus, in a case often referred to, it was held that an attorney at law was not liable to a third person who had relied upon an opinion of title negligently erroneous, which the attorney had given to his client.⁴⁷ In another the attorney of a testator was held not liable to a donee under the will for so negligently drafting the will that it did not secure to the donee the benefits which the testator intended to give him.⁴⁸ In another, mortgagees who had advanced money upon the strength of a certificate given by an architect and surveyor to his employer, the mortgagor, concerning the stage of progress of a building, were held to have no remedy against the architect for his negligence in making the certificate.⁴⁹ The same question has also arisen a number of times with reference to the makers of abstracts of title; and while in general the abstractor has not been held liable to anyone except his immediate employer, special circumstances have in several cases been held to be sufficient to extend his liability, as was suggested in the note respecting the attorney.⁵⁰

⁴⁶ See Smith v. Hurd, 12 Metc. (Mass.) 371, 46 Am. Dec. 690; Niles v. New York, etc., R. Co., 176 N. Y. 119, and many other cases to be found in the books on Corporations.

⁴⁷ National Savings Bk. v. Ward, 100 U. S. 195, 25 L. Ed. 621. It is easy, however, to imagine circumstances under which a different rule would be applicable; as, for example, where the attorney knew or ought to have known, that the opinion which he rendered was to be relied upon by such persons as the plaintiff. Thus in this case, it was said by Waite, C. J., with whom Swayne and Bradley, JJ., concurred, and who thought that the facts in the case brought it within the rule: "I think if a lawyer, employed to examine and certify to the recorded title of real property, gives his client a certificate which he knows or ought to know is to be used by the client in some business transaction with another person as evidence of the facts certified to, he is liable to such other person relying on his certificate for any loss resulting from his failure to find on record a conveyance affecting the title, which by the use of ordinary professional care and skill he might have found."

⁴⁸ Buckley v. Gray, 110 Cal. 339, 52 Am. St. Rep. 88, 31 L. R. A. 861. See also, the comments upon the subject in Alton v. Midland Ry. Co., 19 C. B. (N. S.) 213 at p. 244.

⁴⁹ Le Lievre v. Gould, [1893] 1 Q. B. 491.

⁵⁰ In Day v. Reynolds, 23 Hun (N. Y.), 131, plaintiff, on being applied to for a loan to be secured by a mortgage, requested the borrower to procure a search from the county clerk's office. The search was made by defendant, the county clerk, (paid by the borrower), without knowledge of the purpose for which it was to be used. Held, the defendant owed the plaintiff no duty in the matter and was not liable for failing to note a recorded conveyance by the borrower to a third person. In Talpey v. Wright, 61 Ark. 275, 54 Am. St. Rep. 206, it was held that an indorsee of notes secured by a deed of trust could not maintain an action against the abstractor for negligently preparing an abstract for the borrower and lender. Houseman v. Girard Mutual B. & L. Ass'n, 81 Pa. 256, to same effect (semble).

§ 1481. — With reference to certain of the cases here under consideration, it may well be that a ground for the agent's or servant's

In Schade v. Gehner, 133 Mo. 252, the plaintiff was the devisee of her husband whom defendant had undertaken to assist in examining the title to land to be purchased. The court said: "Conceding the defendant's negligence. . . . That a right of action could not accrue to anyone else who was not privy to the contract, although damage may have resulted to such person by reason of the negligence, is the uniform doctrine of the authorities." In Zweigardt v. Birdseye, 57 Mo. App. 462, it was held that the purchaser had no cause of action against the abstractor for negligently preparing an abstract for the seller. In Mallory v. Ferguson, 50 Kan. 685, 22 L. R. A. 99, the court said: "We think the great weight of authority is to the effect that the party making the examination and certificate is liable only to his employer and never to a stranger or third party." In Mechanics Bldg. Ass'n v. Whitacre, 92 Ind. 547, speaking of the liability of a register who makes a search and certifies to a title, the court said, "he would be liable to the party who employed him, but not to such as might simply see and rely upon such certificate." In Morano v. Shaw, 23 La. Ann. 379, it was held that the vendee of a purchaser at sheriff's sale has no right of action against the recorder of mortgages for having given an imperfect certificate whereby his vendor was induced to purchase. The same thing was held in Smith v. Moore, 9 Rob. (La.) 65. In Brown v. Sims, 22 Ind. App. 317, 72 Am. St. Rep. 308, the abstractor was informed that the abstract was to be used to induce plaintiff to make a loan, and before the loan was made the abstractor told plaintiff in person that the title was clear and that he might rely on the abstract. The court said, "Where the abstractor has no knowledge that some person other than his employer will rely in a pecuniary transaction upon the correctness of the abstract, the general rule that his duty extends only to his employer must be maintained." But held: "We think it cannot properly be said that the appellee did not owe a duty to the appellant arising under the contract, the attending circumstances indicating that it was the understanding of all the parties that the service was to be rendered for the use and benefit of the appellant. . . ." In Dickle v. Abstract Co., 89 Tenn. 431, 24 Am. St. Rep. 616, it was held that the abstract company was liable to a purchaser for negligence in furnishing an abstract to the seller. The deed was drawn up by the abstract company. The court said: "The allegations of the bill clearly make a privity of contract between the purchasers and the defendant." See Siewers v. Commonwealth, 87 Pa. 15. In Peabody B. & L. Ass'n v. Houseman, 89 Pa. 261, 33 Am. St. Rep. 757, the defendant left certain mortgages off the search on promise by the borrower that they would be paid and "the defendant's search clerk knew when he issued the searches that the plaintiffs were about to loan money on the faith of them." Defendant held liable.

liability to third persons may be found in the rule which has been invoked to make liable a manufacturer of goods, dangerous inherently or dangerous through negligent manufacture, to a remote purchaser and user, even though no contractual relation between the parties exists. The agent or servant might be liable with his employer, and no reason is apparent why, in many cases, the agent or servant who is really at fault should not be held liable, though no case is now in mind in which this has been attempted.

§ 1482. Agent not liable in tort to third persons for breach of principal's contracts with them.—An agent is not usually liable to third persons for the breach of his principal's contracts with such third persons even though the performance of those contracts was confided to the agent by the principal. The agent clearly is not liable on the contract, nor can he ordinarily be liable to the third party in tort for the breach of the contract.

Whether upon an analogy to the rule which gives an action against a third person in certain cases for inducing the breach of a contract,⁵¹ an action in tort might be maintained against an agent who wilfully disables his principal from performing by withholding his own performance, seems nowhere to have received much attention.

The moral considerations may often be stronger in the latter case than in the former. As a "short cut" to the party really at fault, such an action would have some justification. There is, however, less need for giving a new action here than in the former case. There, there is no remedy against the party at fault unless it be one in tort; here, there is always the contractual remedy of the third person against the principal, and of the latter against the agent.

§ 1483. Liability of servant or agent to fellow servant or agent.—Where, under the rules herein laid down, an agent or servant would be liable to a third person for his negligence, he will ordinarily be equally liable although the person injured be another agent or servant in the employment of the same principal or master, and even though, under the so-called fellow-servant doctrine, the principal or master would not be liable.⁵²

⁵¹ See discussion in Yale Law Journal for November 1910. 20 Yale L. Jour. 69.

⁵² Osborne v. Morgan, 130 Mass. 102, 39 Am. Rep. 437 (overruling Albro v. Jacquith, 4 Gray (Mass.), 99, 64 Am. Dec. 56); Rogers v. Overton, 87 Ind. 410; Hinds v. Overacker, 66

Ind. 547, 32 Am. Rep. 114; Hinds v. Harbou, 58 Ind. 121; Ward v. Pullman Co., 131 Ky. 142, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 343; Hare v. McIntire, 82 Me. 240, 17 Am. St. Rep. 476, 8 L. R. A. 450; Griffiths v. Wolfram, 22 Minn. 135; Brower v. Northern Pacific Ry. Co., 109 Minn. 385, 25 L. R. A. (N.

§ 1484. No liability for negligence of fellow agent or servant.—

One who is merely a co-agent or fellow servant is not liable to third persons for the negligence or default of his co-agent or fellow servant where he himself is free from fault and has no authority or duty with reference to the acts of the other.⁵³

§ 1485. Liability in respect of sub-agents.—Whether a sub-agent is to be considered the agent of the agent or of the principal is a question which has been already considered.⁵⁴ Where in accordance with the rules there laid down it is determined that the sub-agent is to be regarded as the agent of the agent, the latter will be liable to the sub-agent, the principal and third persons as a principal. But where, on the other hand, the sub-agent is found to be the agent of the principal, then the intermediate agent will not be liable to the sub-agent or to third persons as a principal.⁵⁵

The sub-agent, like the agent, is personally responsible to third persons for his own misfeasances, although the agent or the principal may be responsible also.⁵⁶ He would not, however, be liable to third persons for mere non-feasance, in the sense already explained. On these subjects, the rules laid down above respecting the liability of the agent to third persons, apply, mutatis mutandis, to the sub-agent.

§ 1486. — Agent who conceals principal liable as principal to sub-agent.—The rule that an agent who conceals his principal may himself be charged as principal, has been applied in favor of sub-agents who have received injuries while in the employment of the agent as an ostensible principal. In such cases the agent is liable to the sub-agent in the same manner as though he were in fact the real principal.⁵⁷

§ 1487. Joinder of agent and principal in same action.—Whether the agent and the principal may be joined as defendants in the same action is a question involving a variety of considerations and leading to much difference of opinion. Inasmuch, however, as the question is substantially the same, whether approached from the standpoint of joining the principal with the agent or the agent with the principal,

S.) 354; Malone v. Morton, 84 Mo. 436; Kenney v. Lane, 9 Tex. Civ. App. 150.

Contra: Southcote v. Stanley (dictum), 25 L. J. Exch. 339.

⁵³ Cargill v. Bower, 10 Ch. Div. 502.

⁵⁴ See ante, § 326.

⁵⁵ Stone v. Cartwright, 6 T.R. 411; Bennett v. Bayes, 5 H. & N. 391; Brown v. Lent, 20 Vt. 529.

⁵⁶ Stone v. Cartwright, supra; Bush v. Steinman, 1 Bos. & Pul. 404; Denison v. Seymour, 9 Wend. (N. Y.) 11; Rapson v. Cubitt, 9 M. & W. 710; Quarman v. Burnett, 6 M. & W. 499.

⁵⁷ Malone v. Morton, 84 Mo. 436; McGowan v. St. Louis, etc., R. R. Co., 61 Mo. 528; Yarslowitz v. Bienenstock, 130 N. Y. Supp. 931.

and as the latter question is discussed in a later chapter,⁵⁸ upon the liability of the principal to third persons, no attempt will be made to enter upon its discussion here. It will suffice here to say that there is a large and constantly growing number of cases in which it is held that such a joinder is proper.⁵⁹

B. PUBLIC AGENTS.

§ 1488. What here included.—It is the purpose of this work to deal primarily with the private agent, although from time to time references have been made to the rules which apply in the case of public agents. In the first edition of this work, however, some space was given to the discussion of the general liability to third persons of the more important classes of public agents or officers. It is less necessary than ever to renew that discussion here because, since the first edition of this work appeared, the writer has very much more fully discussed these questions in a separate treatise⁶⁰ to which the reader may be referred. A very brief statement, however, of the most important of these rules, may not be entirely out of place here, and will be given.

I.

LIABILITY FOR THEIR CONTRACTS.

§ 1489. Already considered.—What may be pertinent to say respecting the liability of public officers to third persons in contract has already been said in various sections in the preceding subdivision, and nothing further will be added here.⁶¹

⁵⁸ See post, Chap. V.

⁵⁹ See Knuckey v. Butte Ry. Co., 41 Mont. 314; Southern Ry. Co. v. Rowe, 2 Ga. App. 557; Dowell v. Chicago, Rock Island, etc., Ry., 83 Kan. 562; Willard v. Key, 83 Neb. 850; Coal-gate Co. v. Bross, 25 Okla. 245, 138 Am. St. R. 915; Englert v. New Orleans Ry., 128 La. 473; Louisville, etc., Ry. v. Gollehur, 40 Ind. App. 480; Lefkovitz v. Sherwood (Tex. Civ. App.), 136 S. W. 850; Moore v. Kopplin (Tex. Civ. App.), 135 S. W.

1033; Kirkpatrick v. San Angelo Bank (Tex. Civ. App.), 148 S. W. 362; Jewell v. Bolt & Nut Co., 231 Mo. 176, 140 Am. St. R. 515; Cincinnati, etc., Ry. v. Martin, 146 Ky. 260; Lilienthal v. Carpenter, 148 Ky. 50; Galvin v. Brown, 53 Ore. 598; Shepherd Pub. Co. v. Press Pub. Co., 10 Ont. L. R. 243; Turcotte v. Ryan, 39 Can. Sup. Ct. R. 8.

⁶⁰ See Mechem on Public Officers, Callaghan & Co., Chicago.

⁶¹ See ante, §§ 1371, 1428.

II.

LIABILITY FOR THEIR OWN TORTS.

§ 1490. In general—Classification.—Public agents may be classified according to several lines of distinction. They may, for example, be divided into two classes based upon the character and the manner in which they serve the public. One class embraces those whose duty is owing primarily to the public collectively and not to any particular individual,—who act for the public at large and who are ordinarily paid out of the public treasury. The other class includes those who, while they may not owe to the public as such the performance of any given duty, come, by virtue of an employment by an individual to do some act for him in an official capacity, under a special and particular obligation to him as an individual. Officers or agents of this class usually receive their compensation from fees paid by each individual who employs them.

Another classification may be made based upon the nature of the duties to be performed. One class, for example, includes those whose duties are of a purely judicial nature; another, those whose duties are of a quasi-judicial or discretionary character; another, those whose duties are legislative, and still another those whose duties are ministerial in their nature.

In respect of this classification it will be found that it is not always easy to determine whether the given duty is judicial or discretionary, or whether it is ministerial in its nature, particularly in view of the fact that the same officer may often, in the same transaction even, be compelled to exercise both sorts of function.

It will be evident that the question of the liability of the public agent may involve not only his responsibility for his own torts, but for those of his subordinates, assistants and employees.

§ 1491. No action by individual for breach of duty owing solely to the public.—The first question for determination in considering the liability of a public officer to private action, is whether such officer owes any duty to the individual. Public officers are chosen upon public grounds, they are part of the machinery of the government, and they owe the performance of the duties imposed upon them primarily to the public.

Many of them, in the course of the performance of their duties, incur obligations to individuals, but these obligations are so incurred as a part of their public duty attaching to these individuals as distributive members of the public, and not because the performance of these duties, for these particular individuals, was the object and end of their appointment.

Other of the public agents may never come under any obligation to individuals at all.

Unless, therefore, it appears that the duty violated was one owing to the individual complaining of its non-performance, and unless it appears that he has sustained a special injury therefrom, no civil action can be maintained against the officer. Recourse in such a case must be had by a public prosecution.⁶²

§ 1492. Liable for wrongs committed in private capacity.—It will be understood that it is the liability of public agents for wrongs committed while they were acting, or assuming to act, in their public capacity, that is now to be considered, and not their liability for those wrongs which they may commit as private individuals. For the latter they are, of course, liable like any other private individuals, and their official character affords them no defense.

1. Superior Governmental Officers.

§ 1493. Not usually subject to private action.—With reference to the higher executive officers of the government, such as the president of the United States, the governors of the states, the heads of departments, and the like, it seems to be everywhere agreed that they are not subject to private actions for damages for their official discretionary acts within their jurisdiction.⁶³ With respect of the governors of the states, there is a considerable body of authority both for asserting⁶⁴ and denying⁶⁵ that their ministerial action may be controlled by

⁶² See Moss v. Cummings, 44 Mich. 359; Butler v. Kent, 19 Johns. (N. Y.) 223, 10 Am. Dec. 219; McPhee v. Guaranty Co., 52 Wash. 154.

⁶³ See Marbury v. Madison, 1 Cranch (U. S.), at p. 170, 2 L. Ed. 60; United States v. Commissioner, 5 Wall (U. S.), 563, 18 L. Ed. 692; Decatur v. Paulding, 14 Pet. (U. S.) 497, 10 L. Ed. 559; New York Ins. Co. v. Adams, 9 Pet. (U. S.) 573, 9 L. Ed. 234.

⁶⁴ See Martin v. Ingham, 38 Kan. 641; Harpending v. Haight, 39 Cal. 189, 2 Am. Rep. 432; Middleton v. Low, 30 Cal. 596; Tennessee R. R.

Co. v. Moore, 36 Ala. 371; Wright v. Nelson, 6 Ind. 496; Baker v. Kirk, 33 Ind. 517; Gray v. State, 72 Ind. 567; Magruder v. Swann, 25 Md. 173; Groome v. Gwinn, 43 Md. 572; Chamberlain v. Sibley, 4 Minn. 309; Chumasero v. Potts, 2 Mont. 242; State v. Blasdel, 4 Nev. 241; Cotten v. Ellis, 7 Jones (N. C.), L. 545; State v. Chase, 5 Ohio St. 528.

⁶⁵ See Hawkins v. Governor, 1 Ark. 570, 33 Am. Dec. 346; State v. Warmouth, 22 La. Ann. 1, 2 Am. Rep. 712; Mauran v. Smith, 8 R. I. 192, 5 Am. Rep. 564; State v. Warmouth, 24 La. Ann. 351, 13 Am. Rep. 126; People mandamus. With reference, however, to heads of departments and state officers below the rank of governor, there is quite general agreement that, where ministerial duties of a clear and positive nature, are imposed upon them by the law, mandamus will lie to compel their performance.⁶⁶

2. Judicial Officers.

§ 1494. Judicial officers not liable when acting within their jurisdiction.—It is a general principle of the highest importance to the proper administration of justice that a judicial officer, in exercising the authority vested in him, shall be free to act upon his own convictions without apprehension of personal consequences to himself. No civil action, therefore, can be maintained against a judicial officer by one claiming to have been injured by his judicial action within his jurisdiction.⁶⁷ From the very nature of the case, he is called upon to exer-

v. Governor, 29 Mich. 320, 18 Am. Rep. 89; Jonesboro Turnpike v. Brown, 8 Baxt. (Tenn.) 490, 35 Am. Rep. 713; Vicksburg R. R. Co. v. Lowry, 61 Miss. 102, 48 Am. Rep. 76; State v. Drew, 17 Fla. 67; Low v. Towns, 8 Ga. 360; People v. Bissell, 19 Ill. 229; People v. Yates, 40 Ill. 126; People v. Cullom, 100 Ill. 472; Dennet v. Governor, 32 Me. 508; Rice v. Austin, 19 Minn. 103, 18 Am. Rep. 330; Western R. R. Co. v. DeGraff, 27 Minn. 1; State v. Governor, 39 Mo. 388; State v. Price, 1 Dutch. (N. J.) 931.

⁶⁶ See Martin v. Ingham, 38 Kan. 641; State v. Doyle, 40 Wis. 175, 220; State v. Wrotnowski, 17 La. Ann. 156; State v. Houston, 40 La. Ann. 393, 8 Am. St. R. 532; State v. Barker, 4 Kan. 379; State v. Secretary of State, 33 Mo. 293; Northwestern, etc., R. R. Co. v. Jenkins, 65 N. C. 173; State v. Dubuclet, 26 La. Ann. 127; People v. Schuyler, 79 N. Y. 189; Citizens' Bank v. Wright, 6 Ohio St. 318; People v. Auditor-General, 9 Mich. 134; Employers' Assur. Co. v. Commissioner of Insurance, 64 Mich. 614.

⁶⁷ Some of the cases on this subject are the following: Houlden v. Smith, 14 Ad. & El. (N. S.) 841, 19

L. J. Q. B. 170; Holroyd v. Breare, 2 B. & Ald. 473; Basten v. Carew, 3 B. & C. 652; Garnett v. Ferrand, 6 B. & C. 611; Fawcett v. Fowles, 7 B. & C. 394; Fray v. Blackburn, 3 B. & S. 576; Pike v. Carter, 3 Bing. 78; Mills v. Collett, 6 Bing. 85; Miller v. Seare, 2 Bl. 1145; Dicus v. Lord Brougham, 6 C. & P. 249; Floyd v. Barker, 12 Coke, 25; Kemp v. Neville, 10 C. B. (N. S.) 523; Mostyn v. Fabrigas, 1 Cowp. 172; Lowther v. Earl of Radnor, 8 East, 113; Scott v. Stansfield, 3 L. R. Ex. 220; Ackerly v. Parkinson, 3 Maule & S. 411; Miller v. Hope, 2 Shaw, 125; Ward v. Freeman, 2 Ir. C. L. Rep. 460; Randall v. Brigham, 7 Wall. (74 U. S.) 535, 19 L. Ed. 285; Bradley v. Fisher, 13 Wall. (80 U. S.) 335, 20 L. Ed. 646; Johnson v. Tompkins, 1 Bald. (U. S. C. C.) 571; Cooke v. Bangs, 31 Fed. 640; Hamilton v. Williams, 26 Ala. 527; Craig v. Burnett, 32 Ala. 728; Busted v. Parsons, 54 Ala. 393, 25 Am. Rep. 688; Irion v. Lewis, 56 Ala. 190; Woodruff v. Stewart, 63 Ala. 206; Heard v. Harris, 68 Ala. 43; Grider v. Tally, 77 Ala. 422, 54 Am. Rep. 65; Broom v. Douglass, — Ala. —, 57 So. 860; Borden v. State, 11 Ark. 519, 54 Am. Dec. 217; McIntosh v. Bullard, 95 Ark.

cise his judgment, and his duty to the individual is performed when he has exercised it, however erroneous or disastrous in its consequences it may appear either to the party or to others.

§ 1495. Liability not affected by motive.—This immunity of judicial officers from civil liability is not affected by the motives with which they are alleged to have performed their duties. If the officer

227; Inos v. Winspear, 18 Cal. 397; Porter v. Haight, 45 Cal. 631; Pickett v. Wallace, 57 Cal. 555; Wyatt v. Arnot, 7 Cal. App. 221; Hughes v. McCoy, 11 Colo. 591; Phelps v. Sill, 1 Day (Conn.), 315; Ambler v. Church, 1 Root (Conn.), 211; Grumon v. Raymond, 1 Conn. 40, 6 Am. Dec. 200; Tracy v. Williams, 4 Conn. 107, 10 Am. Dec. 102; Holcomb v. Cornish, 8 Conn. 375; Bailey v. Wiggins, 5 Harr. (Del.) 462, 60 Am. Dec. 650; Flack v. Harrington, Breese (Ill.), 165, 12 Am. Dec. 170; Garfield v. Douglass, 22 Ill. 100, 74 Am. Dec. 137; State v. Flinn, 3 Blackf. (Ind.) 72, 23 Am. Dec. 380; Barkeloo v. Randall, 4 Blackf. 476, 32 Am. Dec. 46; Walker v. Hallock, 32 Ind. 239; Elmore v. Overton, 104 Ind. 348, 54 Am. Rep. 343; Londogan v. Hammer, 30 Iowa, 508; Jones v. Brown, 54 Iowa, 74, 37 Am. Rep. 185; Clark v. Spicer, 6 Kan. 440; Connelly v. Woods, 31 Kan. 359; Kennedy v. Terrill, Hardin (Ky.), 490; Gregory v. Brown, 4 Bibb (Ky.), 28, 7 Am. Dec. 731; Walker v. Floyd, 4 Bibb (Ky.), 237; Bullett v. Clement, 16 B. Mon. (Ky.) 193; Morgan v. Dudley, 18 B. Mon. (Ky.) 693, 68 Am. Dec. 735; Revill v. Pettit, 3 Metc. (Ky.) 314; Terrail v. Tinney, 20 La. Ann. 444; Lilienthal v. Campbell, 22 La. Ann. 600; Spencer v. Perry, 17 Me. 413; Morrison v. McDonald, 21 Me. 550; Downing v. Herrick, 47 Me. 462; Pratt v. Gardner, 2 Cush. (56 Mass.) 63, 48 Am. Dec. 652; Chickering v. Robinson, 3 Cush. (57 Mass.) 543; Raymond v. Bolles, 11 Cush. (65 Mass.) 315; Piper v. Pearson, 2 Gray (68 Mass.), 120, 61 Am. Dec. 438; Clarke v. May, 2 Gray (68 Mass.), 410, 61 Am. Dec. 470; Sullivan v. Jones, 2 Gray (68 Mass.), 570; Ela v. Smith, 5 Gray (71 Mass.), 136, 66 Am. Dec. 356; Way v. Townsend, 4 Allen (86 Mass.), 114; Doherty v. Munson, 127 Mass. 495; White v. Morse, 139 Mass. 162; Wall v. Trumbull, 16 Mich. 228; Ross v. Griffin, 53 Mich. 5; Stewart v. Cooley, 23 Minn. 347, 23 Am. Rep. 690; Wilcox v. Williamson, 61 Miss. 310; Bell v. McKinney, 63 Miss. 187; Stone v. Graves, 8 Mo. 148, 40 Am. Dec. 131; Wertheimer v. Howard, 30 Mo. 420, 77 Am. Dec. 623; Evans v. Foster, 1 N. H. 374; Burnham v. Stevens, 33 N. H. 247; Jordan v. Hanson, 49 N. H. 199, 6 Am. Rep. 508; Little v. Moore, 4 N. J. L. 74, 7 Am. Dec. 574; Mangold v. Thorpe, 33 N. J. L. 134; Grove v. Van Duyn, 44 N. J. L. 654, 43 Am. Rep. 412; Yates v. Lansing, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 282, 9 Id. 395, 6 Am. Dec. 290; Butler v. Potter, 17 Johns. (N. Y.) 145; Adkins v. Brewer, 3 Cow. (N. Y.) 206, 15 Am. Dec. 264; Cunningham v. Bucklin, 8 Cow. (N. Y.) 178, 18 Am. Dec. 432; Bissell v. Gold, 1 Wend. (N. Y.) 210, 19 Am. Dec. 480; Everston v. Sutton, 5 Wend. (N. Y.) 281, 21 Am. Dec. 217; Rogers v. Mulliner, 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 597, 22 Am. Dec. 546; Tompkins v. Sands, 8 Wend. (N. Y.) 462, 24 Am. Dec. 46; Millard v. Jenkins, 9 Wend. (N. Y.) 298; Wickware v. Bryan, 11 Wend. 545; Harman v. Brotherson, 1 Denio (N. Y.), 537; Wilson v. Mayor, 1 Denio (N. Y.), 595, 43 Am. Dec. 719; Lange v. Benedict, 73 N. Y. 12, 29 Am. Rep. 80; East River Gas L. Co. v. Donnelly, 93 N. Y. 557; Evarts v. Kiehl, 102 N. Y. 296; Root v. Rose, 6 N. D. 575; Ramsey v. Riley, 13 Ohio, 157; Truesdell v. Combs, 33 Ohio St. 186; Jones v. Hughes, 5 S. & R. (Pa.) 298, 9 Am. Dec. 364; Kennedy v. Barnett, 64 Pa. 141; Sining

be in fact corrupt, the public has its remedy, but the defeated suitor can not maintain an action against the judge, by alleging that the judgment against him was the result of corrupt or malicious motives.⁶⁸

§ 1496. This immunity extends to judicial officers of all grades.—This exemption from civil action extends to every judicial officer, from the highest judge in the land to the humblest justice who tries petty cases.⁶⁹ Whoever is invested with judicial office, whether of high or low degree, cannot be called to account to the private individual for his acts within his jurisdiction although, as has been seen, the aggrieved party may allege that the act was corrupt or malicious.⁷⁰ For such acts, the officer must account only to his conscience and the state.

3. Quasi-judicial Officers.

§ 1497. Quasi-judicial officer exempt from civil liability for his official actions.—The same reasons of private interest and public policy which operate to render the judicial officer exempt from civil liability for his judicial acts within his jurisdiction, apply as well to

v. Bentham, 2 Bay (S. C.), 1; Brodie v. Rutledge, 2 Bay (S. C.), 69, State v. Johnson, 2 Bay, 385; Reid v. Hood, 2 Nott & McC. (S. C.) 168, 10 Am. Dec. 582; Kelly v. Rembert, Harp. (S. C.) L. 65, 18 Am. Dec. 643; McRep. 641; Webb v. Fisher, 109 Tenn. Call v. Cohen, 16 S. Car. 445, 42 Am. 701; Rains v. Simpson, 50 Tex. 495, 32 Am. Rep. 609; Fuller v. Gould, 20 Vt. 643; Johnston v. Moorman, 80 Va. 131; Carter v. Dow, 16 Wis. 298; Steele v. Dunham, 26 Wis. 393.

⁶⁸ Bradley v. Fisher, 13 Wall. (U. S.) 335; Rains v. Simpson, 50 Tex. 495, 32 Am. Rep. 609; Weaver v. Devendorf, 3 Den. (N. Y.) 117; Pratt v. Gardner, 2 Cush. (Mass.) 63, 48 Am. Dec. 652; Cunningham v. Bucklin, 8 Cow. (N. Y.) 178, 18 Am. Dec. 432; Stone v. Graves, 8 Mo. 148, 40 Am. Dec. 131; Henke v. McCord, 55 Iowa, 378; Jones v. Brown, 54 Iowa, 74, 37 Am. Rep. 185; Green v. Talbot, 36 Iowa, 499; Wasson v. Mitchell, 18 Iowa, 153; Hughes v. McCoy, 11 Colo. 591; Irion v. Lewis, 56 Ala. 190; Heard v. Harris, 68 Ala. 43; Evans v. Foster, 1 N. H. 377;

Barhyte v. Shepherd, 35 N. Y. 242; Steele v. Dunham, 26 Wis. 396; Little v. Moore, 4 N. J. L. 74, 7 Am. Dec. 574.

⁶⁹ Garnett v. Ferrand, 6 B. & C. 611; Butler v. Potter, 17 Johns. (N. Y.) 145; Pratt v. Gardner, 2 Cush. (Mass.) 63, 48 Am. Dec. 652; Carter v. Dow, 16 Wis. 298; Wall v. Trumbull, 16 Mich. 228; Coleman v. Roberts, 113 Ala. 323, 59 Am. St. Rep. 111, 36 L. R. A. 84; State ex rel. Egan v. Wolener, 127 Ind. 306; Waldron v. Berry, 51 N. H. 136; Mills v. Brooklyn, 32 N. Y. 489; Johnston v. Moorman, 80 Va. 131; Irion v. Lewis, 56 Ala. 190; Rains v. Simpson, 50 Tex. 495, 32 Am. Rep. 609.

⁷⁰ There are, in some of the cases, dicta to the effect that inferior judicial official officers and magistrates may be held liable for the judicial acts, even though acting within their jurisdiction, if they were actuated by corrupt or malicious motives, but they are not sustained by the authorities. As is said in Irion v. Lewis, 56 Ala. 190, 196, "In support of such action, even when the judicial error

the officer who exercises judicial functions although not as part of a regularly established court, and to whom, therefore, the name quasi-judicial officer has been applied. It is well settled that the quasi-judicial officer can not be called upon to respond in damages to the private individual for the honest exercise of his judgment within his jurisdiction however erroneous or misguided his judgment may be.⁷¹

§ 1498. Illustrations.—This principle extends, for example, to arbitrators in their decision upon the controversy submitted to them;⁷² jurors in their deliberations and verdicts;⁷³ assessors in the valuation of property for taxation;⁷⁴ commissioners appointed to determine and award damages for property taken by virtue of the right of eminent domain;⁷⁵ officers authorized to lay out, alter or discontinue highways;⁷⁶ highway officers in deciding upon exemption from highway taxes;⁷⁷ members of municipal boards in deciding upon the allowance of claims;⁷⁸ collectors of customs in the sale of perishable property;⁷⁹ complained of is corrupt or malicious, few authorities can be found."

See also, Johnston v. Moorman, 80 Va. 131; Stone v. Graves, 8 Mo. 148, 40 Am. Dec. 131; Curnam v. Kessler, 110 Mich. 10.

The subject is also ably and fully discussed in Mangold v. Thorpe, 33 N. J. L. 134.

⁷¹ See cases cited in following section.

⁷² Jones v. Brown, 54 Iowa, 74, 37 Am. Rep. 185; Pappa v. Rose, L. R. 7 C. P. 32, 1 Eng. Rep. 87, s. c. on appeal L. R. 7 C. P. 525, 3 Eng. Rep. 375.

⁷³ Hunter v. Mathis, 40 Ind. 356; Turpen v. Booth, 56 Cal. 65, 38 Am. Rep. 48.

⁷⁴ Wall v. Trumbull, 16 Mich. 228; Dillingham v. Snow, 5 Mass. 547; Easton v. Calendar, 11 Wend. (N. Y.) 90; Weaver v. Devendorf, 3 Den. (N. Y.) 117; Vail v. Owen, 19 Barb. (N. Y.) 22; Brown v. Smith, 24 Id. 419; People v. Reddy, 43 Id. 539; Vose v. Willard, 47 Id. 320; Bell v. Pierce, 40 Id. 51, Barhyte v. Shepherd, 35 N. Y. 238; Western R. R. Co. v. Nolan, 48 Id. 513; Pentland v. Stewart, 4 Dev. & Bat. (N. C.) 386; Steam Navigation Co. v. Wasco County, 2 Ore. 209; Macklot v. Dav-enport, 17 Iowa, 379; Muscatine, etc., R. R. Co. v. Horton, 38 Id. 33; Walker v. Hallock, 32 Ind. 239; Lilienthal v. Campbell, 22 La. Ann. 600; Williams v. Weaver, 75 N. Y. 30; Buffalo, etc., R. R. Co. v. Supervisors, 48 N. Y. 93; McDaniel v. Tebbetts, 60 N. H. 497; Wilson v. Marsh, 34 Vt. 352; San Jose Gas Co. v. January, 57 Cal. 614.

⁷⁵ Van Steenberg v. Bigelow, 3 Wend. (N. Y.) 42.

⁷⁶ Sage v. Laurain, 19 Mich. 137.

⁷⁷ Harrington v. Commissioners, etc., 2 McCord (S. C.), 400.

⁷⁸ Wall v. Trumbull, 16 Mich. 228.

⁷⁹ Gould v. Hammond, 1 McAllister (U. S. C. C.), 285.

⁸⁰ Gordon v. Farrar, 2 Doug. (Mich.) 411; Jenkins v. Waldron, 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 114, 6 Am. Dec. 359; Miller v. Rucker, 1 Bush. (Ky.) 135; Carter v. Harrison, 5 Blackf. (Ind.) 138; Rail v. Potts, 8 Humph. (Tenn.) 225; Peavey v. Robbins, 3 Jones (N. C.), L. 339; Caulfield v. Bullock, 18 B. Mon. (Ky.) 494; Elbin v. Wilson, 33 Md. 135; Friend v. Hamill, 34 Md. 298; Weckerly v. Geyer, 11 S. & R. (Pa.) 35; Chrisman v. Bruce, 62 Ky. 63, 85 Am. Dec.

inspectors of elections⁸⁰ and board of registration⁸¹ in deciding upon the existence of the necessary qualifications of a voter; school officers in deciding upon the removal of a teacher;⁸² aldermen in deciding upon the letting of contracts;⁸³ a board of county commissioners in deciding upon an application for a permit to sell intoxicating liquors;⁸⁴ boards of supervisors in determining upon the sufficiency of a bond of an officer, and whether by failing to file a new bond required by them, he has forfeited his office;⁸⁵ pilot officers in deciding that a pilot was no longer authorized to act as such and therefore revoking his license;⁸⁶ and a great variety of other officers exercising similar functions.

§ 1499. Liability not affected by motive.—An attempt has been made in some cases to make a distinction between those officers whose duties lie outside the domain of courts,—the so-called quasi-judicial officers,—and the judges of courts, to the effect that while the latter are exempt, the former may be made liable if their motives were corrupt or malicious. This distinction, however, is believed to be not well founded. If the action is really judicial, the immunity which adheres to judicial action should be applied whether the officer sits upon the bench of a regularly established court or not. The weight of authority is clearly with this view.⁸⁷

4. Legislative Officers.

§ 1500. Same immunity extends to legislative action.—The same immunity from private action extends to legislative officers while acting within the limits assigned to them. While their duties are not strictly judicial in their nature, they are called upon to exercise discre-

603; Wheeler v. Patterson, 1 N. H. 88, 8 Am. Dec. 41; State v. McDonald, 4 Harr. (Del.) 555; Patterson v. D'Auterive, 6 La. Ann. 467, 54 Am. Dec. 564; Keenan v. Cook, 12 R. I. 52; Blake v. Brothers, 79 Conn. 676, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 501; Ashby v. White, 2 Ld. Raym. 938.

A different rule prevails in Massachusetts and Ohio, although the officers have acted in good faith. Lincoln v. Hapgood, 11 Mass. 350, 355; Blanchard v. Stearns, 5 Metc. (46 Mass.) 298; Larned v. Wheeler, 140 Mass. 390, 54 Am. Rep. 483; Jeffries v. Ankeny, 11 Ohio, 372; Monroe v. Collins, 17 Ohio St. 665.

See also, Osgood v. Bradley, 7 Me.

411; Murphy v. Ramsey, 114 U. S. 15, 29 L. Ed. 47.

⁸¹ Fausler v. Parsons, 6 W. Va. 486, 20 Am. Rep. 431.

⁸² Burton v. Fulton, 49 Penn. St. 151. See also, Chamberlain v. Clayton, 56 Iowa, 331, 41 Am. Rep. 101.

⁸³ East River Gas L. Co. v. Donnelly, 25 Hun (N. Y.), 614, s. c. 93 N. Y. 557.

⁸⁴ State v. Commissioners, 45 Ind. 501.

⁸⁵ People v. Supervisors, 10 Cal. 344, 346.

⁸⁶ Downer v. Lent, 6 Cal. 94, 65 Am. Dec. 489.

⁸⁷ See Jones v. Brown, 54 Iowa, 74, 37 Am. Rep. 185; Turpen v. Booth, 56

tion, judgment and foresight. They are chosen to make such provisions, within their jurisdiction, as to them seem for the best interests of their constituents, and they cannot be called upon to defend their action at the suit of private individuals, even though it be alleged that they acted corruptly or maliciously.⁸⁸

This exemption is not confined to the state or national legislatures, but it applies also to inferior legislative bodies such as boards of supervisors, county commissioners, city councils, and other bodies of a like nature.⁸⁹

5. Ministerial Officers.

§ 1501. In general—Liable to party specially injured.—Some consideration has already been given to the question of when the duties to be performed are so particular to the individual as to give him a right of action for an injury sustained by him in consequence of the failure to perform such duties.⁹⁰

In accordance with the principles there laid down, it may be said that wherever the law imposes upon a public officer the performance of ministerial duties, in which a private individual has a special and direct interest, the public officer is liable to such individual for any injury which he may sustain in consequence of the failure or neglect of the officer either to perform them at all, or to perform them properly. In such a case the officer is liable as well for non-feasance as for misfeasance or malfeasance.⁹¹

Cal. 65, 38 Am. Rep. 48; Bradley v. Fisher, 13 Wall. (80 U. S.) 335, 20 L. Ed. 646; Downer v. Lent, 6 Cal. 94, 65 Am. Dec. 489; East River Gas Light Co. v. Donnelly, 93 N. Y. 557, affirming 25 Hun, 914; Fausler v. Parsons, 6 W. Va. 486, 20 Am. Rep. 431; Steele v. Dunham, 26 Wis. 393; Amperse v. Winslow, 75 Mich. 234.

⁸⁸ See Cooley on Torts, 376; Mechem on Public Officers, Book IV, Chap. V.

⁸⁹ Jones v. Loving, 55 Miss. 109, 30 Am. Rep. 508; County Commissioners v. Duckett, 20 Md. 469; Borough of Freeport v. Marks, 59 Penn. St. 253; Baker v. State, 27 Ind. 485. See City of Pontiac v. Carter, 32 Mich. 164.

⁹⁰ Ante, § 1491.

⁹¹ Rowning v. Goodchild, 2 W. Bl.

906; Ashby v. White, 2 Ld. Raym. 938; Lane v. Cotton, 1 Salk. 17; Amy v. Supervisors, 11 Wall. (U. S.) 136, 20 L. Ed. 101; Sawyer v. Corse, 17 Gratt. (Va.) 230, 94 Am. Dec. 445; Bassett v. Fish, 12 Hun (N. Y.), 209; Piercy v. Averill, 37 Id. 360; Bennett v. Whitney, 94 N. Y. 302; Jenner v. Joliffe, 9 Johns. N. Y. 381; Adsit v. Brady, 4 Hill (N. Y.), 630, 40 Am. Dec. 305; Rounds v. Mansfield, 38 Me. 586; Bailey v. Mayor, 3 Hill (N. Y.), 531, 38 Am. Dec. 669; Maxwell v. Pike, 2 Me. 8; McCarty v. Bauer, 3 Kan. 237; Wilson v. Mayor, 1 Den. (N. Y.) 595, 43 Am. Dec. 719; Robinson v. Chamberlain, 34 N. Y. 389, 90 Am. Dec. 713; Raynsford v. Phelps, 43 Mich. 342, 38 Am. Rep. 189; Clark v. Miller, 54 N. Y. 528, 534; Keith v.

It is no defense to such an officer upon whom the law has imposed the positive duty of performance, that he was mistaken as to the nature or extent of his obligation, or that he acted in entire good faith and with an honest intention to do his duty.⁹²

So it is immaterial that the duty is one primarily imposed upon public grounds, and therefore a duty owing primarily to the public; the right of action springs from the fact that the private individual receives a special and peculiar injury from the neglect in performance, against which it was in part the purpose of the law to protect him.⁹³ It is also immaterial that the failure in performance is made by law a penal offense.⁹⁴

III.

LIABILITY FOR THE TORTS OF THEIR OFFICIAL SUBORDINATES.

§ 1502. Public officer of government not liable for acts of his official subordinate.—Public officers of the government, in the performance of their public functions, are not liable to third persons for the misconduct, negligence or omissions of their official subordinates.⁹⁵ This immunity rests upon motives of public policy, the necessities of the public service, and the perplexities and embarrassments of a contrary doctrine.⁹⁶

These official subordinates are themselves public officers, though of an inferior grade, and are directly liable, in those cases in which any public officer is liable, for their own defaults. Such subordinate officers are not infrequently appointed directly by the governmental power and removable only at its pleasure, but even in those cases in which they are appointed and removed by their immediate official superior, the latter is not liable,⁹⁷ unless he has himself been negligent

Howard, 24 Pick. (Mass.) 292; Hover v. Barkhoof, 44 N. Y. 113; St. Joseph F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Leland, 90 Mo. 177, 59 Am. Rep. 9; Grider v. Tally, 77 Ala. 422, 54 Am. Rep. 65.

⁹² Amy v. Supervisors, 11 Wall. (78 U. S.) 136, 20 L. Ed. 101.

⁹³ Raynsford v. Phelps, 43 Mich. 342, 38 Am. Rep. 189.

⁹⁴ Raynsford v. Phelps, supra; Hayes v. Porter, 22 Me. 371.

⁹⁵ Robertson v. Sichel, 127 U. S. 507, 515, 32 L. Ed. 203; City of Richmond v. Long, 17 Gratt. (Va.) 375, 94 Am. Dec. 461; Foster v. Metts, 55

Miss. 77, 30 Am. Rep. 504; Schroyer v. Lynch, 8 Watts (Pa.), 453; Wiggins v. Hathaway, 6 Barb. (N. Y.) 632; Ely v. Parsons, 55 Conn. 83; Sawyer v. Corse, 17 Gratt. (Va.) 230, 94 Am. Dec. 445; Dunlop v. Munroe, 7 Cranch (U. S.), 242, 3 L. Ed. 329; Tracy v. Cloyd, 10 W. Va. 19; Lane v. Cotton, 1 Ld. Raym. 646; Whitfield v. Lord Le Despencer, 2 Cowp. 754.

⁹⁶ City of Richmond v. Long, 17 Gratt. (Va.) 375, 94 Am. Dec. 461.

⁹⁷ Keenan v. Southworth, 110 Mass. 474, 14 Am. Rep. 613.

either in their selection or retention,⁹⁸ or in the manner of their appointment or qualification,⁹⁹ or in superintending the discharge of the duties in his office,¹ or unless he has himself directed, authorized or co-operated in the wrong.²

§ 1503. To what officers this rule applies—Post officers.—This rule has frequently been applied to the officials of the post office department, and the law is well settled both in England and America, that the postmaster general, the local postmasters, and their assistants and clerks appointed and sworn as required by law, are public officers, each of whom is responsible for his own defaults only, and not for those of any of the others, although selected by him, and subject to his orders,³ unless he has negligently or wilfully appointed or retained unfit or improper persons;⁴ or has failed to require of them conformity to the prescribed regulations;⁵ or has so carelessly conducted the affairs of his office as to furnish opportunity for such default;⁶ or unless he has co-operated in, or authorized the wrong.⁷

Whether the employees of contractors for carrying the mail are public governmental officers within the meaning of this rule, so as to exempt the contractor from liability for the defaults of the subordinates, is a question upon which there is a conflict of authority, but the better opinion is that they are not.⁸

⁹⁸ Wiggins v. Hathaway, 6 Barb. (N. Y.) 632; Schroyer v. Lynch, 8 Watts (Penn.), 453.

⁹⁹ Bishop v. Williamson, 11 Me. 495.

¹ Dunlop v. Munroe, 7 Cranch (U. S.), 242, 3 L. Ed. 329; Schroyer v. Lynch, supra; Ford v. Parker, 4 Ohio St. 576.

² Ely v. Parsons, 55 Conn. 83; Tracy v. Cloyd, 10 W. Va. 19.

³ Keenan v. Southworth, 110 Mass. 474, 14 Am. Rep. 613; Lane v. Cotton, 1 Ld. Raym. 646; Whitfield v. Lord Le Despencer, 2 Cowp. 754; Dunlop v. Munroe, 7 Cranch (U. S.), 242, 3 L. Ed. 329; Schroyer v. Lynch, 8 Watts (Penn.), 453; Bishop v. Williamson, 11 Me. 495; Hutchins v. Brackett, 22 N. H. 252, 53 Am. Dec. 249; Foster v. Metts, 55 Miss. 77, 30 Am. Rep. 504; Bates v. Horner, 65 Vt. 471.

⁴ Wiggins v. Hathaway, 6 Barb. (N. Y.) 632.

⁵ Bishop v. Williamson, 11 Me. 495.

In this case the postmaster was held liable for the default of an assistant whom he had not required to take the oath prescribed by law. To same effect: Sawyer v. Corse, 17 Gratt. (Va.) 230, 94 Am. Dec. 445; Bolan v. Williamson, 1 Brev. (S. C.) 181.

⁶ Dunlop v. Munroe, 7 Cranch (U. S.), 242, 3 L. Ed. 329; Ford v. Parker, 4 Ohio St. 576.

⁷ Tracy v. Cloyd, 10 W. Va. 19.

⁸ Cent. R. & B. Co. v. Lampley, 76 Ala. 357; Sawyer v. Corse, 17 Gratt. (Va.) 230, 94 Am. Dec. 445. Contra, Conwell v. Voorhees, 13 Ohio, 523, 42 Am. Dec. 206; Hutchins v. Brackett, 22 N. H. 252, 53 Am. Dec. 248; Foster v. Metts, 55 Miss. 77, 30 Am. Rep. 504.

That the railroad company, carrying the mail while it is in the possession of government officials, owes no duty to individuals, is held in Boston Ins. Co. v. Chicago, etc., Ry. Co., 118 Iowa, 423.

So it has been held that the captain of a ship of war, whose subordinate officers are appointed by the government, is not liable for an injury caused by the negligence of his lieutenant.⁹

And a confederate district commissary in Virginia during the late war, was held not responsible for the misfeasances and wrongdoings of his subordinates unless he co-operated in or authorized the wrong.¹⁰ So a collector of customs is not personally liable for a tort committed by his subordinates, there being no evidence to connect the collector personally with the wrong, or that the subordinates were not competent, or were not properly selected for their positions.¹¹

§ 1504. — Public trustees and commissioners.—The same rule of immunity has also been extended to public trustees and commissioners, having control of public works and enterprises and usually acting gratuitously, to exempt them from liability for the negligence of the servants, agents and contractors necessarily employed by them in the prosecution of the work, and in whose employment and supervision they were personally free from negligence.¹²

§ 1505. — Not to ministerial officers.—But in the case of the ordinary ministerial or administrative officers, like sheriffs, recorders, clerks of courts, and the like, a different rule is ordinarily applied. These officers are usually made liable by law for the acts and defaults of their deputies and subordinates in the course of the performance of their duties,¹³ even though such deputies are authorized by law and may to some extent be regarded as themselves public officers.¹⁴

IV.

LIABILITY FOR TORTS OF THEIR PRIVATE SERVANTS OR AGENTS.

§ 1506. Liable for torts of private servant or agent.—A public officer of whatever grade is subject to the same liability for the negligence or other defaults of his private servant or agent as adheres to ⁹ Nicholson v. Mounsey, 15 East, 384.

¹⁰ Tracy v. Cloyd, supra.

¹¹ Robertson v. Sichel, 127 U. S. 507, 32 L. Ed. 203; Brissac v. Lawrence, 2 Blatchf. (U. S. C. C.) 121.

¹² See Donovan v. McAlpin, 85 N. Y. 185, 39 Am. Rep. 649; Walsh v. Trustees, 96 N. Y. 427; County Commissioners v. Duvall, 54 Md. 350, 39 Am. Rep. 393; Donovan v. Board of Education, 85 N. Y. 117.

¹³ Harrington v. Fuller, 18 Me. 277, 36 Am. Dec. 719; Norton v. Nye, 56 Me. 211; State v. Moore, 19 Mo. 369, 61 Am. Dec. 563; Prosser v. Coots, 50 Mich. 262; Rider v. Chick, 59 N. H. 50; Ross v. Campbell, 19 Hun (N. Y.), 615.

¹⁴ Campbell v. Phelps, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 62, 11 Am. Dec. 139; Draper v. Arnold, 12 Mass. 449.

any other principal. Hence when the subordinate, whose acts are the subject of the inquiry, "holds not an office known to the law, but his appointment is private and discretionary with the officer, the principal is responsible for his acts."¹⁵

This distinction was applied in the case of a mail carrier who was held, contrary to some cases previously referred to,¹⁶ to be not a public officer but the mere private servant or agent of the contractor, who was therefore liable for the carrier's negligence or default in the performance of his duties.¹⁷

It has also been applied to the case of a laborer employed by a selectman to cut brush and trees in order to make a highway passable, and who, while so engaged, through mistaken judgment but not maliciously or wantonly, cut down some trees upon the land of an adjoining proprietor, the removal of which was not necessary. The selectman was held liable.¹⁸

¹⁵ Note to 1 Am. Lead. Cases (Wilson v. Peverly), p. 785, quoted in Ely v. Parsons, 55 Conn. 83.

¹⁶ See ante, § 1503.

¹⁷ Sawyer v. Corse, 17 Gratt. (Va.) 230, 94 Am. Dec. 445; Cent. R. & B. Co. v. Lampley, 76 Ala. 357.

¹⁸ Ely v. Parsons, 55 Conn. 83.

CHAPTER IV.

THE DUTIES AND LIABILITIES OF THE PRINCIPAL TO THE AGENT

- § 1507. In general — Employment — Payment of Compensation — Reimbursement — Indemnity — Lien.
- I. THE AGENT'S RIGHT TO EMPLOYMENT.
1508. What here included.
1509. The right to be received into the employment.
1510. Right to be given work to do.
1511. Compensation dependent upon work done.
- II. THE AGENT'S RIGHT TO PAYMENT OF COMPENSATION.
1512. What here included.
1. The Agent's Right to Compensation.
1513. Agreement to pay compensation—Express—Implied.
1514. Express agreement conclusive.
1515. When agreement must be express.
- 1516, 1517. When agreement to pay will not be implied.
- 1518–1520. When promise to pay will be implied.
1521. Unauthorized agent entitled to compensation if acts are ratified.
1522. When agent can recover for extra services.
1523. Agent cannot recover compensation if agency was unlawful.
2. The Amount of the Compensation.
1524. Express contract governs.
1525. May be left for principal to determine.
1526. In the absence of express agreement — How amount determined — Market — Usage—Reasonable value.
1527. What elements may be considered.
- 1528, 1529. What evidence as to value is admissible.
1530. Agent continuing after expiration of term presumed to be at prior compensation.
3. When Compensation is Considered to be Earned.
1531. In general.
1532. Compensation earned when undertaking fully completed.
- 1533, 1534. When full performance a condition precedent.
- 1535–1537. Agent's right not defeated by principal's default.
1538. Same subject — No defense that principal realized no profit.
4. Effect of Termination of Agency.
1. Termination by the act of the principal.
- 1539, 1540. When agent is entitled to compensation if agency is terminated before performance.
- a. Agency Rightfully Terminated.
1541. When agency may be terminated without liability.
- 1542, 1543. Agency at will of the principal.

1544. Agency terminable on contingency.
1545. Agency terminable only on breach of express or implied conditions.
- 1546-1548. When terminated for agent's misconduct.
- b. Agency Wrongfully Terminated.
- 1549, 1550. When agent discharged without cause — Breach of implied contract.
1551. What cases involved.
1552. Breach of contract with agent to do particular acts.
1553. Breach of express contract of employment—Agent's remedies.
1554. — Theory of these remedies.
1555. — A middle ground.
1556. — When action may be brought.
1557. — The measure of damages.
1558. — Same subject.
1559. — Duty of agent to seek other employment.
1560. — New employment offered by defendant.
1561. — Duty to take service of a different sort.
1562. — Work for himself.
- 1563, 1564. — When right of action accrues.
1565. No damages if agent acquiesces in discharge.
2. Termination by Operation of Law.
1566. No damages where agency terminated by death of principal.
1567. — Joint principals — Partnership.
1568. Same rule where agency terminated by insanity of the principal.
1569. Rule where agency terminated by bankruptcy of principal.
1570. Rule where agency terminated by death of the agent.
1571. Rule where agency terminated by insanity of the agent.
1572. How when agency terminated by agent's sickness or incapacity.
3. Abandonment by Agent.
1573. 1. When abandonment lawful.
1574. 2. When abandonment wrongful.
- 1575, 1576. Entire and severable contracts — Right to compensation.
1577. Full performance of entire contract usually required.
1578. The more liberal rule—Britton v. Turner.
1579. Recovery for services under contract unenforceable under Statute of Frauds.
1580. Brief absences as abandonment.
1581. Condonation of abandonment.
1582. What will excuse abandonment—Sickness—Epidemic—Physical violence.
1583. — Recovery for services actually rendered.
1584. — Recovery of wages during illness.
1585. — Principal's right to terminate employment.
1586. Contracts not to terminate without notice—Forfeiture for breach.
1587. — What works a forfeiture.
5. Effect of Agent's Disloyalty upon Compensation.
1588. Disloyal agent cannot recover compensation.
1589. — Good faith does not save — Nor custom — Divisible transactions.
1590. Double agency—Agent cannot recover compensation from either party when double agency unknown.
1591. How when agent mere middleman.
1592. May recover when double agency was fully known and assented to.
6. Effect of Agent's Wilful Disobedience.
1593. Forfeiture by wilful disobedience.

7. Principal's Right of Recoupment.

- 1594. Principal may recoup damages.
- 1595, 1596. What damages may be recouped.
- 1597. Limit of recovery.
- 1598. Right not cut off by assignment.
- 1599. No recoupment against an infant.

III. THE AGENT'S RIGHT TO REIMBURSEMENT.

- 1600. What here included.
- 1601. Agent must be reimbursed for proper outlays.
- 1602. — When not entitled.

IV. THE AGENT'S RIGHT TO INDEMNITY.

- 1603. Agent must be indemnified against consequences of lawful acts.
- 1604. Liability must be a direct consequence of the execution of the agency.
- 1605, 1606. — Illustrations.
- 1607. Right to indemnity extends to contractual obligations properly incurred.
- 1608. No indemnity where loss caused by agent's default.
- 1609. No indemnity where obligation incurred in excess of authority.
- 1610. — Unless lack of authority attributable to principal's default.
- 1611, 1612. No indemnity where act is unlawful.
- 1613. Agent indemnified only against loss, not mere liability.

V. THE AGENT'S RIGHT TO PROTECTION FROM INJURY.

- 1614. In general.
- 1. Risks Incident to the Business.
- 1615, 1616. General rule—Master not liable.
- 2. Negligence of the Master.
- 1617. Master responsible for his own negligence.

- 1618. I. For dangerous premises.
- 1619. — Warning.
- 1620. — Unsafeness where servant has no business to be.
- 1621. — Unsafeness resulting from doing of the work itself.
- 1622. — Unsafeness caused by conditions upon adjacent premises.
- 1623. — Liability for places and instruments used, but not owned, by the master.
- 1624. II. For dangerous appliances, tools and machinery.
- 1625. — Warning.
- 1626. — Inspection — Maintenance.
- 1627. — Repairing defective tools, etc.
- 1628. — Servants having no business to use—Using for unexpected purposes.
- 1629. — Dangers arising from dangerous use of proper appliances, etc.
- 1630, 1631. III. For injuries resulting from failure to repair as agreed.
- 1632. IV. For employment of incompetent servants.
- 1633, 1634. — Sufficient number.
- 1635. V. For not making and enforcing rules.
- 1636. VI. For not furnishing necessary superintendence.
- 1637, 1638. VII. For injuries outside of employment.

3. Negligence of His General Superintendent or other Representative.

- 1639. Principal can not relieve himself by delegating duties.
- 1640. Liable for negligence of general agent or superintendent—Vice-principal.

4. Negligence of Independent Contractor Performing Master's Duties.

- 1641. Liable for negligence of independent contractor performing master's duties.

1642. When liable to agents of contractor.

5. Negligence of Fellow-servant.

1643-1648. Master not liable to one servant for negligence of a fellow-servant.

1649. Who is a fellow-servant?

1650. — Association rule.

1651. — Departmental rule.

1652. — Superior servant distinction.

1653-1656. — The general rule.

1657. What risks within the rule.

1658. Volunteer assisting servant cannot recover.

6. Assumption of Risks.

1659. In general.

1660-1666. — Assumption of risks resulting from master's negligence.

1667. Obviousness of the risk.

1668. Voluntary action—Coercion—Command.

1669. — Emergencies — Assurances of safety.

1670. — Inexperience — Youth, etc.

1671, 1672. — Assumption of risks existing in violation of statute.

1673. — Assumption of risk distinguishable from contributory negligence.

1674. — How determined—Court or jury.

1675. — Protests against doctrine.

7. Contributory Negligence.

1676, 1677. Contributory negligence of servant defeats his recovery.

1678. — Effect of express command of master.

8. Statutes Changing Common Law Rules.

1679, 1680. Statutory changes.

9. Contracts Waiving Masters' Liability.

1681. Agreements to waive liability invalid.

VI. AGENT'S RIGHT TO A LIEN.

1682. In general.

1683. Lien defined—General and particular liens.

1684. Foundation of the claim of a lien.

1685. Nature of lien.

1686. Requisites of lien—Possession.

1687. Possession must have been lawfully acquired.

1688. Possession must be continuous.

1689. Possession must have been acquired in course of employment.

1690. No lien if contrary to intention of parties—Waiver.

1691. Waiver by inconsistent conduct.

1692. Claim of lien no waiver of personal remedies.

1693. How lien may be enforced.

1694. How these rules apply to agents.

1695. — Illustrations.

1696. Agent's lien ordinarily a particular lien.

1697. For what sums the lien attaches.

VII. AGENT'S RIGHT OF STOPPAGE IN TRANSIT.

1698. Agent liable for price of goods may stop them in transit.

1699. Right exercised as in other cases.

1700. Right of such an agent to retain the title until paid for.

VIII. RIGHTS OF SUB-AGENT AGAINST PRINCIPAL.

1701. When principal liable for his compensation.

1702. — Effect of ratification.

1703. Same rules govern reimbursement and indemnity.

1704. How as to protection against injury.

1705. When sub-agent entitled to a lien.

§ 1507. In general—Employment—Payment of compensation—Reimbursement—Indemnity—Lien.—Attention may next be given to the question of the rights of the agent against the principal, and of the correlative duties and obligations of the principal to the agent. It is obvious that the most important claims which the agent has upon the principal are: I. Employment in accordance with the contract. II. The payment of his compensation. III. Reimbursement for his expenses. IV. Indemnity against loss and liability incurred in the performance of his duties. V. Protection against physical injury in the performance of the undertaking. Incidental to certain of these, and to secure their recognition and observance are, VI. The agent's right of lien; and VII. The agent's right of stoppage in transit. These may be considered in their order.

I.

THE AGENT'S RIGHT TO EMPLOYMENT.

§ 1508. What here included.—The first and most important right of the agent against his principal is, perhaps, that of employment in accordance with the contract. It is obviously wholly a matter of contract. No man is under any natural obligation to employ another, or to make a contract to employ him. But if he does make a contract with him to employ him, the latter acquires at once the general right to have the contract performed according to its terms, subject to the qualifications and exceptions which apply to other contracts. The chief essentials of this right will be, (1) the right to be received into the employment, (2) the right to be kept in according to the terms, or the right not to be wrongfully discharged, and, (3) perhaps, a right to be employed, or to be given work of the sort contemplated during the contract period.

The second of these has been considered under the head of Termination in a previous chapter, and is more fully considered from the standpoint of compensation in the following subdivision. It seems unnecessary therefore to say anything further concerning it in this place. The first and the third, however, must be briefly considered.

§ 1509. The right to be received into the employment.—The claim to be received into the service depends, as has been stated, wholly upon the contract, and the rights and remedies are wholly contractual. If the principal, having contracted to give an agent employment as such, fails or refuses to do so, the remedy of the agent must ordinarily be an action at law to recover damages for the breach of contract. As has been already seen in an earlier chapter, contracts of this sort are capable of specific performance in equity only in the rarest and most exceptional cases. Considered from the standpoint of an action at law to recover damages, the rules governing the matter are not substantially different from those which apply where the agent has been wrongfully discharged; and as the whole question is fully considered under that head in the following subdivision, it will not be taken up here.

§ 1510. Right to be given work to do.—But has the agent not only a right to have his contract of employment recognized and performed, but has he also a right to be given work to do? In many cases the question will be of little importance to the agent. If, being engaged for a definite time, he is paid his stipulated compensation, he will often have no ground for complaint if he is not kept at work. But suppose a person be engaged in a calling in which the employment of his faculties is essential to his business,—suppose he is an actor but is not called upon or permitted to appear upon the stage, or is a commercial traveler who can not keep his clientele unless he is allowed to visit his patrons regularly and keep in touch with their condition and needs, but he is not permitted to do so,—has he a legal ground for complaint, in the absence of an express provision, where he is paid his compensation regularly?

It must be conceded in any case that any implied obligation would be more or less elastic and adapted to the exigencies of business, but is there an implied term that the agent shall be employed a reasonable or any other portion of the time?

In the case of the commercial traveler, the English court has held that a contract “to engage and employ” for a definite time,—in this case four years,—did not imply a term that he should not only be paid his salary but should also be given work to do.¹

In the case of the actor, the same courts have held,—although there were some exceptional facts,—that if the actor were not given an opportunity to appear within a reasonable time, he might make an engagement with some one else.²

¹ Turner v. Sawdon, [1901] 2 K. B. 653, 2 Br. Rul. Cas. 751; Lagerwall v. Wilkinson, 80 L. T. (N. S.) 55.

A contract to “retain and employ” an attorney for a given term does not imply a term that actual business shall be furnished him to do during that term. Emmens v. Elderton, 4 H.

L. Cas. 624. Compare Kelly v. Carthage Wheel Co., 62 Ohio St. 598.

² Fechter v. Montgomery, 33 Beavan, 22 (though here the actor said to the employer before the contract was closed “Remember I came to you not to be idle, but to act” to which the latter assented). See also, Bunning

In the United States, such few courts as have passed upon the subject have given a rather more liberal interpretation to the employee's rights. Thus where the plaintiff was employed as a designer and cutter in a tailoring establishment "at a salary comparatively large," and who "in order to command this salary or a higher one must continue to be skillful and to enjoy a reputation for skill," it was held by the appellate division in New York, to be "one of the implied covenants of plaintiff's contract that he should be permitted to labor in the manner specified" even though he was paid his salary regularly.³

§ 1511. — Compensation dependent upon work done.—Where an agent is employed by a definite contract for a fixed term, but his compensation, instead of being fixed, is dependent upon the amount he accomplishes, as where he is to be paid by the piece or by the number of sales or the time spent, and the like, there is held to be, at least as against any other cause than termination by vis major, an implied term that he shall be given a reasonable opportunity to perform under the contract.⁴ Where, however, the only effect of the contract is that he shall be paid for such work as he may do during a period named, there is no implied term that he shall be given any work to do.⁵

v. Lyric Theater, 71 L. T. (N. S.) 396. Compare Pollack v. Shubert, referred to in a following note.

³ Sigmon v. Goldstone, 116 App. Div. 490.

⁴ See Turner v. Goldsmith, [1891] 1 Q. B. 544. (Here the employee was engaged for a definite term (five years), and agreed to do his utmost to obtain orders for and to sell the various goods manufactured by the employer "as should from time to time be forwarded or submitted by sample or pattern" to the employee. After about two years the employer's factory was destroyed by fire and he did not resume business. Held that the employee was entitled to have a reasonable amount of samples to enable him to earn his commission during the term and that the destruction of the factory was no excuse. Kay, L. J., said: "If it had been shown that not only the manufactory but the business of the defendant had been destroyed by vis major, without any fault of the defendant, I think that the plaintiff could not recover.") Devonald v. Rosser, [1906] 2 K. B. 728, 2 Br. Rul. Cas. 780, 6 Ann. Cas. 230. (Here the employee for a period terminable only by notice was to be paid by the piece. Employers discontinued work because they could not do it at a profit. Held that there was an implied term to give a reasonable amount of work as long as the contract continued.)

⁵ Thus where a manager agreed with an actor that the latter should be engaged to appear in musical plays during a certain season and agreed to pay him a certain sum per week for each and every week that the actor publicly appeared and performed, and after a time the manager put on no more musical plays during the season, it was held that the manager was not liable to the actor, since there was no term implied that the manager would permit the actor to appear for any specified time. Pollack v. Shubert, 146 App. Div. 628.

II.

THE AGENT'S RIGHT TO PAYMENT OF COMPENSATION.

§ 1512. What here included.—The subject of the agent's compensation for his services to his principal involves a variety of considerations. The most important are doubtless the question of his right to any compensation; the amount to be paid him; when it is due; the effect upon the rights and liabilities of the parties of a discharge of the agent by the principal, or the abandonment of his undertaking by the agent; the effect upon the agent's right to compensation of his own disloyalty or misconduct; and the principal's right of recoupment against the agent's claim.

These questions will be considered in their order.

1. The Agent's Right to Compensation.

§ 1513. Agreement to pay compensation—Express—Implied.—It is entirely competent for the parties to agree expressly not only that the agent shall be compensated for his services, but that his compensation shall be a certain sum, or shall be paid in a certain way, or shall be ascertained in a particular manner. It is also competent for them to agree that he shall be compensated only in a certain event, or that he shall receive no compensation at all.

In practice, however, it is frequently if not commonly found that the parties have not made any express agreement at all, or that if they have attempted to do so, the agreement does not provide for all of the details or contingencies, so that the questions are constantly arising, when will the law imply a promise to pay compensation, and how shall the amount to be paid be ascertained.

§ 1514. Express agreement conclusive.—Wherever the parties have expressly agreed upon the fact that compensation shall or shall not be paid, or shall be paid only in a certain event, that agreement, in the absence of fraud or mistake of fact, is conclusive. If the principal has expressly agreed to pay a compensation, the fact that the service was, through no fault of the agent, of no value to him furnishes no excuse for not paying. So if the agent has expressly agreed to serve without compensation, he will have no claim for wages however beneficial his services may have proved to the principal. And so if compensation is to be paid only in a certain event, or upon the happening of a given contingency, no claim can arise except upon the happening of the event or contingency agreed upon.⁶

§ 1515. When agreement must be express.—There are certain cases where the promise to pay compensation must have been express. Thus where services are rendered for each other by near relatives or others constituting members of the same family, the law presumes that they are inspired by motives of affection, or gratitude, or are based on other considerations than those of pecuniary recompense, as, for example, that services are off-set by support furnished, and in order to rebut this presumption, there must be clear and unequivocal evidence of a promise or agreement to pay for the services rendered. There must be shown to have been something more than a mere intention to pay, based upon gratitude or friendship. There must have been an agreement to pay.⁷ This rule is most frequently applied to cases where the relation sustained is rather that of master and servant

⁶ Gilbert v. Judson, 85 Cal. 105; Morehouse v. Remson, 59 Conn. 392; Zerrahn v. Ditson, 117 Mass. 553; Beatty v. Russell, 41 Neb. 321; Ames v. Lamont, 107 Wis. 531; Lockwood v. Levick, 8 C. B. (N. S.) 603.

⁷ Magarrell v. Magarrell, 74 Iowa, 378; Wilson v. Wilson, 52 Iowa, 44; Scully v. Scully, 28 Iowa, 548; Keegan v. Malone, 62 Iowa, 208; Resso v. Lehan, 96 Iowa, 45; Collar v. Patterson, 137 Ill. 403; Faloon v. McIntyre, 118 Ill. 292; Guffin v. First Nat. Bank, 74 Ill. 259; Reeves Estate v. Moore, 4 Ind. App. 492; Nelson v. Masterson, 2 Ind. App. 524; King v. Kelly, 28 Ind. 89; Ayres v. Hull, 5 Kan. 419; Allen v. Allen, 60 Mich. 635; Thorp v. Bateman, 37 Mich. 68, 26 Am. Rep. 497; Coe v. Wager, 42 Mich. 49; Callahan v. Riggins, 43 Mo. App. 130; Morris v. Barnes, 35 Mo. 412; Hall v. Hall, 44 N. H. 293; Petty v. Young, 43 N. J. Eq. 654; Disbrow v. Durand, 54 N. J. Law, 343, 33 Am. St. Rep. 678; Collyer v. Collyer, 113 N. Y. 442 (not services but board); In re Shubart's Estate, 154 Pa. 230; In re Young's Estate, 148 Pa. 573; Houck v. Houck, 99 Pa. 552; Curry v. Curry, 114 Pa. 367; Duffey v. Duffey, 44 Pa. 399; Briggs v.

Briggs, 46 Vt. 571; Sawyer v. Hebard, 58 Vt. 375; Hall v. Finch, 29 Wis. 278, 9 Am. Rep. 559; Kaye v. Crawford, 22 Wis. 320.

It is to be observed in these cases that it is not the fact of relationship alone which raises the presumption, but the fact that the parties are members of the same family group, living together under circumstances which naturally rebut any inference of an agreement to pay. See Shubart's Estate, 154 Pa. St. 230, supra; Killpatrick v. Helston, 25 Ill. App. 127.

And even though the parties are living together, still if the person performing the services is not regarded as a member of the family,—is not treated as other members of the family, does not get the rights and advantages which a member of the family would ordinarily receive, but on the other hand is regarded as a mere servant, the presumption above referred to, that the value of the services is to be offset by the family advantages received, would not arise. See for example, Doremus v. Lott, 49 Hun (N. Y.), 284; McMillan v. Page, 71 Wis. 655; Lockwood v. Robbins, 125 Ind. 398, more fully stated in note to § 1518.

than that of principal and agent, but the underlying principle is the same.⁸

So, it is said to be a general rule that "if one of two or more parties having an interest in the same subject-matter, acts for the benefit of all, he is, in the absence of an agreement to pay compensation, ordinarily held not to be entitled to receive any."⁹

So where the person rendering the service is already in the employment of the other party to render similar service, at a fixed salary or wage, a request to render services will ordinarily be presumed to have been made in contemplation of the existing employment, and compensation for them on the theory that they were extra services or services rendered over time, cannot, as will be seen hereafter,¹⁰ ordinarily be had, in the absence of an express agreement to pay for them.¹¹

§ 1516. When agreement to pay will not be implied.—The mere fact that services have been rendered by the agent for the principal is not, of itself, sufficient to raise a promise to pay therefor, but they must have been rendered under circumstances from which a promise to pay can be inferred.¹² No recovery can be had for services, however valuable, or however necessary, which have been rendered without the express or implied request of the principal. A man can not, by mere obtrusion of services, create an obligation to pay for them.¹³

⁸ See the discussion in Wood's Master and Servant, sec. 72. See also 26 Cent. L. Jour. 51.

⁹ Eberhart v. Camp, 55 Ill. App. 248.

¹⁰ See post, § 1594.

¹¹ Ross v. Hardin, 79 N. Y. 84.

¹² Cincinnati, etc., R. R. Co. v. Lee, 37 Ohio St. 479; Lange v. Kaiser, 34 Mich. 318; Burrows v. Ward, 15 R. I. 346; Busenbark v. Saul, 184 Ill. 343; Viley v. Pettit, 96 Ky. 576.

¹³ This rule is tersely expressed by Bell, J., as follows: "It is settled that no man can do another an unsolicited kindness, and make it a matter of claim against him; and it makes no difference whether the act was done from mere good will or in the expectation of compensation. Unless the party benefited has done some act from which his assent to pay for the service may be fairly inferred, he is not bound to pay." In Chadwick v. Knox, 31 N. H. 226, 64

Am. Dec. 329; [citing Reason v. Wirdman, 1 Car. & P. 434; Pelly v. Rawlins, Peak's Ad. Cas. 226; Alexander v. Bane, 1 Mees. & Wels. 511; Parker v. Crane, 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 647; 1 Sel. N. P. 48; 2 Greenl. Ev. 83.] See also, Palmer v. Haverhill, 98 Mass. 487; Bartholomew v. Jackson, 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 28, 11 Am. Dec. 237. In this case the plaintiff had voluntarily removed defendant's wheat from a burning field to save it from destruction. Platt, J., said: "The plaintiff performed the service without the privity or request of the defendant, and there was, in fact, no promise express or implied. If a man humanely bestows his labor, and even risks his life, in voluntarily aiding to preserve his neighbor's house from destruction by fire, the law considers the service rendered as gratuitous, and it therefore forms no ground of action." See also, Seals v. Edmondson, 73 Ala. 295, 49 Am. Rep.

So no recovery can be had for services, although requested, if they were rendered as a spontaneous act of kindness or in hope of receiving compensation, but without an express or implied promise to pay it. A fortiori can no recovery be had for services volunteered upon the chances of obtaining future employment. Such services are mere gratuities.¹⁴

Illustrations of this are found where one undertakes to do some act for another out of kindness or friendship merely, or with a hope and, perhaps, an expectation that the other will recognize the value of the services and compensate him accordingly. So architects, engineers, authors, artists and others who undertake to furnish a satisfactory plan, design, machine, story or other thing in competing for a prize, 51; Allen v. Bryson, 67 Iowa, 591, 56 Am. Rep. 358.

This rule has frequently been applied where a real estate broker was seeking to recover commissions for the sale of the defendant's property. Thus in a case often cited, [Pierce v. Thomas, 4 E. D. Smith (N. Y.), 354] it was said: "To entitle a broker to recover commissions for effecting a sale of real estate, it is indispensable to show that he was employed by the owner (or on his behalf), to make the sale. A ratification of his act, where original employment is wanting, may, in some circumstances be equivalent to an original retainer, but only where there is a plain intent to ratify. An owner cannot be enticed into a liability for commissions against his will. A mere volunteer without authority is not entitled to commissions, merely because he has inquired the price which an owner asks for his property, and has then sent a person to him who consents to take it. A broker has no better claim to recover for volunteer service, rendered without employment, and not received and acted upon by the owner as rendered in his behalf, than any other volunteer."

To same effect: McVickar v. Roche, 74 App. Div. (N. Y.) 397; Campbell Printing Press & Mfg. Co. v. Yorkston, 11 Misc. (N. Y.) 340; Johnson v.

Whalen, 13 Okla. 320; Stewart v. Pickering, 73 Iowa, 652; Welch v. Collenbaugh, 150 Iowa, 695; SeEVERS v. Cleveland Coal Co., — Iowa, —, 138 N. W. 793; Samuels v. Luckenbach, 205 Pa. 428; Castner v. Richardson, 18 Colo. 496.

Of course the plaintiff must also show that his employment was by the defendant, and that his performance was within the conditions of the employment.

See Crosby v. St. Paul Lake Ice Co., 74 Minn. 82; Fairchild v. Cunningham, 84 Minn. 521; Dartt v. Sonnesyn, 86 Minn. 55; Hale v. Knapp, 134 Mich. 622; Comm. Nat. Bank v. Hawkins, 25 Ill. App. 463; Callaway v. Equitable Trust Co., 67 N. J. L. 44.

¹⁴*Osborne v. Governors*, 2 Strange, 728; Scott v. Maier, 56 Mich. 554, s. c. sub nom., Scott v. Martin, 56 Am. Rep. 402; Wood v. Ayres, 39 Mich. 345, 33 Am. Rep. 396; Bartholomew v. Jackson, 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 28, 11 Am. Dec. 237; James v. O'Driscoll, 2 Bay (S. C.), 101, 1 Am. Dec. 632; St. Jude's Church v. VanDenberg, 31 Mich. 287; Livingston v. Ackeston, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 531; Otis v. Jones, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 394; Ehle v. Judson, 24 Wend. (N. Y.) 97; Eastwood v. Kenyon, 11 Ad. & El. 438; Hertzog v. Hertzog, 29 Pa. 465; Seals v. Edmondson, 73 Ala. 295, 49 Am. Rep. 51.

contract or reward, but without success, can have no claim for compensation in the absence of an express agreement to pay it, although they may have been requested to compete.¹⁵

§ 1517. — No contract for payment will be implied in the face of an express refusal to pay, or where the implication would be repugnant to an express promise, or where the circumstances rebut all the grounds upon which a promise to pay could be inferred.¹⁶ So where the circumstances account for the transaction on some ground more probable than that of a promise of recompense, no promise will be implied.¹⁷

All contracts for services, it is said, must be good or bad at their inception, and a party will not be permitted on account of subsequent events, to recover for services which when rendered were intended to be gratuitous.¹⁸

Neither will purely gratuitous services furnish a good consideration for a subsequent promise to pay for them,¹⁹ but when beneficial services, not intended to be gratuitous, have been rendered under such circumstances that no legal claim exists therefor, a subsequent promise to pay in consideration of the benefit received is binding.²⁰

§ 1518. When promise to pay will be implied.—But whenever services are rendered by one person at the express request of another, the law will, except in the case of near relatives or others who are members of the same family, presume that the person for whom they were rendered intended to pay for them.²¹ If the latter alleges that

¹⁵ Scott v. Maier, 56 Mich. 554, 56 Am. Rep. 396; Palmer v. Haverhill, 98 Mass. 487.

¹⁶ Watson v. Steever, 25 Mich. 386; Coe v. Wager, 42 Mich. 49; St. Jude's Church v. VanDenberg, 31 Mich. 287.

¹⁷ Wood v. Ayres, 39 Mich. 345, 33 Am. Rep. 396.

¹⁸ James v. O'Driscoll, 2 Bay (S. Car.), 101, 1 Am. Dec. 632.

¹⁹ Allen v. Bryson, 67 Iowa, 591, 56 Am. Rep. 358, [citing Cook v. Bradley, 7 Conn. 57, 18 Am. Dec. 79; Williams v. Hathaway, 19 Pick. (Mass.) 387; Dawson v. Dawson, 12 Iowa, 512; McCarthy v. Hampton, 61 Iowa, 282.

²⁰ Forbis v. Inman, 23 Ore. 68; Viley v. Pettit, 96 Ky. 576. See also, Snyder v. Castor, 4 Yeates (Pa.), 353; Davison v. Davison, 13 N. J. Eq. 246;

Lee v. Lee, 6 G. & J. (Md.) 316; Little v. Dawson, 4 Dall. (Pa.) 111.

²¹ Linn v. Linderorth, 40 Ill. App. 320; Mugnier v. Dendlinger, 104 La. 767; Simonson v. Simonson, 53 Hun (N. Y.), 634; McEwen v. Loucheim, 115 N. C. 348; Prince v. McRae, 84 N. C. 674; Harrel v. Zimpleman, 66 Tex. 292; Bard v. Banigan, 39 Fed. 13; Martin v. Roberts, 36 Fed. 217; Forbis v. Inman, 23 Ore. 68.

In Louisiana, see Stewart v. Soubral, 119 La. 211; Succession of Krekeler, 44 La. Ann. 726.

Persons not deemed members of the family within the rule.—A young girl was hired by defendant to work at his home upon a farm for a summer for certain wages. At the expiration of that time she remained, as she contended, on defendant's they were to be gratuitous, the burden of proof is upon him to establish it.²² This is particularly true where the services rendered are in the line of the agent's business or profession, or of a kind that are usually paid for. Thus if one employs an attorney to try his case in court, or a physician to attend his child in illness, or an auctioneer to sell his goods at an auction, or a broker to effect insurance upon his ship, or an architect to superintend the building of his house, but says nothing about paying, the law will presume that the person so employed was to be paid for his services, and if the other party alleges that the services were to be rendered without charge, he must prove it.²³

§ 1519. — So though there be no express request, a promise to pay may be implied from the circumstances of the case. Thus if beneficial services are rendered for a person under such circumstances as to show that the agent expects to be paid for them as a matter of promise "to pay her well when she got through;" as defendant contended, for her keep and clothes. For six years she did heavy out-door farm work, receiving only the most cheap and meager clothing, and about $15 in money. Held that she was not a member of the family within the rule, and could recover the reasonable value of her services, even though she might not be able to prove an express contract to pay. McMillan v. Page, 71 Wis. 655.

So where an orphan boy went to work for decedent, "not being taken into decedent's family and cared for and treated as a member thereof;" Held, to be entitled to the fair value of his services, after deducting the value of his keep, even though no express contract to pay was shown. Lockwood, Adm'r v. Robbins, 125 Ind. 398. To same effect: Doremus v. Lott, 49 Hun (N. Y.), 284.

So where an ignorant colored girl, born and reared as a slave, was kept in ignorance of her emancipation, by her former owner, and for twenty-four years thereafter worked for defendant as though she were still his slave; held, that she could recover for the whole period, the fraud of defendant preventing the operation of the statute of limitations. Hickam

v. Hickam, 46 Mo. App. 496. See also, In re Oldfield's Estate, — Iowa, —, 138 N. W. 846.

²² Linn v. Linderoth, 40 Ill. App. 320; Dougherty v. Whitehead, 31 Mo. 255; Lewis v. Trickey, 20 Barb. (N. Y.) 387.

In Thomas v. Thomasville Shooting Club, 121 N. C. 238, plaintiff upon request of defendant rendered services in obtaining leases of property which defendant desired. He did not at the time expect to make any charge because he hoped and expected that he would be employed by defendant as steward. Defendant did not know that he did not expect to make any charge. Plaintiff was not employed as steward because of some "falling out" with defendant. Held, he could recover the reasonable value of his services.

²³ In Prince v. McRae, 84 N. C. 674, it was held that a physician who had rendered professional services in the usual way upon request was entitled to reasonable compensation, even though he had in fact made no charge, and had not intended to present a bill. The character of the service, said the court, is not controlled by the unexpressed and revocable intention of the plaintiff.

right, and the person for whom they are rendered does nothing to disabuse him of this expectation, but permits him to render the services, the law will imply a promise to pay for them.²⁴ This is but the ordinary rule of good faith. As has been seen, services are not to be obtruded upon another against his will, but one who stands by and permits another to render him valuable services under such circumstances as to convince any reasonable man that they were being done, though mistakenly, with the expectation of being paid for them as a matter of legal right and not as a matter of hope or expectancy, and says or does nothing to prevent it, can not be permitted to avail himself of the benefits of the services but refuse to pay for them, upon the ground that they were rendered without his request or order.²⁵

§ 1520. — In accordance with these principles it was held that where an attorney who had undertaken to defend a certain action and pay for such counsel as he desired, employed as counsel a firm of attorneys who were not informed of this arrangement, and the counsel performed valuable services for the defendants with their knowledge and co-operation, the defendants were liable for the value of the services so rendered. The court said that if the defendants did not intend that the consulting attorneys should look to them for payment for the services they were rendering, they should have objected or informed them of the special contract, but that by their silence with full knowledge of what was being done, and by receiving and enjoying the benefit of the services rendered, a promise to pay therefor would be implied. It would have been otherwise if the consulting attorneys had been informed of the special arrangement, or had the circumstances been such as to raise a presumption that they had such information.²⁶

²⁴ Wood v. Brewer, 66 Ala. 570; McCrary v. Ruddick, 33 Iowa, 521; Muscott v. Stubbs, 24 Kan. 520; Garrey v. Stadler, 67 Wis. 512, 58 Am. Rep. 877; Shelton v. Johnson, 40 Iowa, 84; Waterman v. Gilson, 5 La. Ann. 672; Weston v. Davis, 24 Me. 374; Dougherty v. Whitehead, 31 Mo. 255; Lewis v. Trickey, 20 Barb. (N. Y.) 387; Kinder v. Pope, 106 Mo. App. 536; Lucas v. Godwin, 3 Bing. (N. C.) 737; Phillips v. Jones, 1 Ad. & Ell. 333.

²⁵ The principle here involved is said by Brewer, J., to be "not merely that one party has done work which benefits the other, because it was never the law that one party could force a contract upon the other, but also that such other party, knowing that the services are being performed for his benefit and on his account, makes no objection, but permits the party to continue doing the work and performing the services." Muscott v. Stubbs, 24 Kan. 520.

²⁶ McCrary v. Ruddick, 33 Iowa, 521. See case where the same principle was recognized, but where the court held that the facts did not warrant the application. Muscott v. Stubbs, 24 Kan. 520.

§ 1521. Unauthorized agent entitled to compensation if acts are ratified.—As has been seen, the effect of the ratification of the unauthorized act of an agent is retroactive and gives validity to the act from the beginning.²⁷ If therefore one acts as agent without authority but his acts are subsequently ratified by the principal, he is entitled to the same compensation and the same remedies as if the acts had been originally duly authorized.²⁸

§ 1522. When agent can recover for extra services.—Where an agent undertakes to render services for a fixed salary or at a fixed rate, it will be presumed, in the absence of anything to show a contrary intention, that the amount so fixed is to cover his compensation for all services connected with that undertaking. If, therefore, the principal enlarges his powers or imposes additional duties upon him, but without stipulating for an increased compensation, the rate fixed will be deemed to be full compensation for all the services rendered, and no extra compensation can be recovered for the performance of the added duties. To warrant such a recovery there must be an express or implied promise to pay for them,^{28a} or a legal custom to that effect.^{28b}

²⁷ Wilson v. Dame, 58 N. H. 392; Lawson v. Thompson, 10 Utah, 462. Although a principal, who had employed an agent to effect a sale of land, terminates the contract with him, he will be liable if he still permits the agent to go on and make the sale. Dayton v. American Steel Barge Co., 36 N. Y. Misc. 223.

No ratification where the alleged principal did not know the agent was working in his behalf. Downing v. Buck, 135 Mich. 636; Thomas v. Merrifield, 7 Kan. App. 669; Copeland v. Stoneham Tannery Co., 142 Pa. 446.

No ratification of an unauthorized sale, unless the principal knew the terms and conditions of the sale. Maze v. Gordon, 96 Cal. 61.

Defendant offered plaintiffs some goods for sale on commission on certain terms and in the letter containing the offer enclosed an order on the warehouse for the goods. Plaintiffs rejected that offer, but made a counter offer, which the defendant refused, and demanded the return of the warehouse order. Plaintiffs failed to comply with this demand but obtained the goods and sold them. The defendant accepted the payment for the goods. Held that he thereby only condoned the conversion, and did not render himself liable for the commission named in his first offer to plaintiffs. Rapp v. Livingstone, 14 Daly (N. Y.), 402.

²⁸ See ante, § 500.

^{28a} Moreau v. Dumagene, 20 La. Ann. 230; City of Decatur v. Vermilion, 77 Ill. 315; Marshall v. Parsons, 9 C. & P. 656; Guthrie v. Merrill, 4 Kan. 187; Fraser v. United States, 16 Ct. of Cl. 507; Collins v. United States, 24 Ct. of Cl. 340; Carr v. Chartiers Coal Co., 25 Pa. 337; Jordan v. Jordan, 65 Ga. 351; Pew v. Gloucester Bank, 130 Mass. 391; Schurr v. Savigny, 85 Mich. 144; Bartlett v. St. Ry. Co., 82 Mich. 658; Lachine v. Manistique Ry. Co., 126 Mich. 519; Muir v. Corset Co., 155

^{28b} United States v. Macdaniel, 7 Pet. (U. S.) 1, 8 L. Ed. 587; United States v. Fillebrown, 7 Pet. (U. S.) 28, 8 L. Ed. 596.

This will be true even though the amount of compensation was originally fixed in contemplation of the expectation that the services which the agent was to perform would normally be about a certain amount or consume about a certain time, if the employment was not limited to that, or there was no agreement for extra compensation.²⁹

Where the agent has, from time to time, entered into apparent settlements in full, without making any claim for extra compensation, he will ordinarily be estopped from setting up such a claim at a later time.³⁰

Of course the service for which extra compensation is claimed may be of a nature so unusual, or so disconnected with those contemplated by the contract of employment, that the presumption that they were covered by the compensation agreed upon could not arise, and in such a case the right to compensation for them would be governed by the same rules that apply in other cases.

Where the contract is in writing, or but one inference can be drawn from the facts, the question whether the services involved were incident to or disconnected with the main contract is usually for the court; otherwise it is a question for the jury.³¹

§ 1523. Agent cannot recover compensation if agency was unlawful.—The law will not lend its aid to the enforcement of an illegal contract. If, therefore, the undertaking of the agent was to perform some act which was forbidden by law, or which was opposed to the public policy, he can recover no compensation for the act though it be fully performed according to the agreement.³²

Mich. 441; Ross v. Hardin, 79 N. Y. 84; Matheson v. N. Y. Cent. Ry. Co., 72 App. Div. 254; New York Life Ins. Co. v. Goodrich, 74 Mo. App. 355; Steam Dredge No. 1, 87 Fed. 760.

A farm-hand, working by the month cannot recover for ordinary Sunday "chores" unless there was an express agreement to pay. Robinson v. Webb, 73 Ill. App. 569.

There may of course be a recovery where there was a special contract to pay for such extra services. Elwell v. Roper, 72 N. H. 585.

The fact that a statute fixes the number of hours which shall constitute a day's work, but does not require over time to be paid for, does not change the rule. There can be no recovery for extra work, unless there was an agreement to pay for it.

Luske v. Hotchkiss, 37 Conn. 219, 9 Am. Rep. 314; McCarthy v. Mayor, 96 N. Y. 1, 48 Am. Rep. 601.

²⁹ Benjamin v. Public Service Pub. Co., 11 N. Y. Supp. 208.

³⁰ Bartlett v. Grand Rapids St. Ry. Co., 82 Mich. 658; Lachine v. Manistique Ry. Co., 126 Mich. 519; Forster v. Green, 111 Mich. 264; Levi v. Reid, 91 Ill. App. 430; Carruthers v. Diefendorf, 66 App. Div. 31.

³¹ Standard Elevator Co. v. Brumley, 149 Fed. 184.

³² Trist v. Child, 21 Wall. (U. S.) 441, 22 L. Ed. 623; Marshall v. Baltimore & Ohio R. R. Co., 16 How. (U. S.) 314, 14 L. Ed. 953; Clippinger v. Hepbaugh, 5 W. & S. (Penn.) 315, 40 Am. Dec. 519; Harris v. Roof, 10 Barb. (N. Y.) 489; Rose v. Truax, 21 Barb. 361; Gray v. Hook, 4 N. Y. 449; Tool

Full discussion has been given to this question in earlier chapters of this work, and it will not be necessary here to determine what the undertakings are which come within the limits of this rule.³³

2. The Amount of the Compensation.

§ 1524. Express contract governs.—The question of the agent's right to receive a compensation having been determined in his favor, the next inquiry is as to the amount to be paid to him. If the parties have made an express agreement in reference to this matter, such agreement is conclusive upon all questions arising within its scope.³⁴ There can not be both an express and an implied agreement in reference to the same matter, and the express agreement, if any, must govern.

This rule, that the express contract governs, applies not only to prevent the agent from recovering more than the amount agreed upon, but also, if the contract was fairly and intelligently made, to prevent the agent's recovery from being reduced below that sum, even though the sum fixed be more than the services were reasonably worth.³⁵

§ 1525. May be left for principal to determine.—It is competent for the parties to agree that the compensation shall be such an amount

Co. v. Norris, 2 Wall. (U. S.) 45, 17 L. Ed. 868; Swayze v. Hull, 3 Halst. (N. J.) 54, 14 Am. Dec. 399; Gulich v. Ward, 5 Halst. (N. J.) 87, 18 Am. Dec. 389; McBratney v. Chandler, 22 Kan. 692, 31 Am. Rep. 213; Bixby v. Moor, 51 N. H. 402; Kahn v. Walton, 46 Ohio St. 195; Lehman v. Feld, 37 Fed. 852; Samuels v. Oliver, 130 Ill. 73; Street v. Houston Ice Co. (Tex.), 55 S. W. 516; Fryer v. Harker, 142 Iowa, 708, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 477.

A broker is not entitled to a commission for procuring a purchaser, where the purchaser produced can not buy without resorting to unlawful practices to defraud the owner's wife of her dower interest. Zittle v. Schlesinger, 46 Neb. 844.

³³ See ante, §§ 79–123.

³⁴ Ames v. Lamont, 107 Wis. 531; Wallace v. Floyd, 29 Pa. 184, 72 Am. Dec. 620; Hamilton v. Frothingham, 59 Mich. 253; Carruthers v. Towne, 86 Iowa, 318; Prouty v. Perry, 142 Iowa, 294.

Where there is an express contract for a certain sum only, which is paid and received without objection, agent can not later recover more for the same period, although he originally wanted more and there was an indefinite assurance that later the principal could pay more. Seeber v. American Mining Co., 10 N. Y. Supp. 851.

³⁵ In Smythe v. O'Brien, 198 Pa. 223, the agent was allowed to keep $8,000, which he had saved in buying stocks for an experienced business man under a contract freely and intelligently made. See also, Wells v. Parrott, 43 Ill. App. 656.

Where there is a contract with a traveling salesman for a certain salary and his traveling expenses, the principal may not afterward set an arbitrary limit to the amount to be allowed for such expenses. Walker v. Grant, 40 Ill. App. 359.

as the principal may fix. Thus if the agent agree to serve for such compensation as the principal shall, at the termination of the agency, determine to be right and proper under all the circumstances, the amount so fixed by the principal, if he acts honestly and in good faith, is conclusive, although as a matter of fact it be less than the services were really worth.³⁶

Agreements of this sort, however, must be clear, and appear to have been fairly made.³⁷

§ 1526. In the absence of express agreement how amount determined — Market — Usage — Reasonable value.—Where, however, there is no express agreement as to the amount, the market rate, if there should be one, might determine; or the usual rate, if there should be a usage;³⁸ if neither, then the law implies a promise to pay what the services are reasonably worth.³⁹ The question of reasonable value, in this, as in other cases, is one to be determined from all the facts and circumstances surrounding the case.⁴⁰

§ 1527. What elements may be considered.—In determining the amount of this reasonable compensation, there are many elements to be taken into consideration. All services are not to be estimated by the same standard. In every case the nature of the undertaking, its dangers and responsibilities, the amount involved, the skill, ability and reputation of the agent, the result attained, the previous study, preparation and expense required, as well as the actual time consumed, are to be taken into consideration, and the value of the services is to be estimated accordingly.⁴¹

³⁶ Butler v. Winona Mill Co., 28 Minn. 205, 41 Am. Rep. 277.

³⁷ Millar v. Cuddy, 43 Mich. 273, 38 Am. Rep. 181. This case has been cited as opposed to the preceding one. Upon examination it will be found not to be so. In the former there was no question as to the contract, in the latter the court held that such a contract could be made, but had not been in that case.

³⁸ Agent may recover the usual rate. Hollis v. Weston, 156 Mass. 357; Potts v. Aechternacht, 93 Pa. 138; Marshall v. Reed, 32 Pa. Super. 60.

³⁹ Tucker v. Preston, 60 Vt. 473; Carruthers v. Towne, 86 Iowa. 318; Hollis v. Weston, 156 Mass. 357; Bear v. Koch, 2 Misc. (N. Y.) 334; Slater v. Cook's Estate, 93 Wis. 104; Best v.

Sinz, 73 Wis. 243; Martin v. Roberts, 36 Fed. 217; Taylor Mfg. Co. v. Key, 86 Ala. 212; McCrary v. Ruddick, 33 Iowa, 520; Shelton v. Johnson, 40 Iowa, 84; Millar v. Cuddy, 43 Mich. 273, 38 Am. Rep. 181; Stockbridge v. Crooker, 34 Me. 349, 56 Am. Dec. 662; Nauman v. Zoerhlaut, 21 Wis. 466; Jones v. School District, 8 Kan. 362.

⁴⁰ Ruckman v. Bergholz, 38 N. J. L. 531; Eggleston v. Boardman, 37 Mich. 14. Where an agent was employed to help sell an automobile under an agreement "to protect" him if he made the sale, a finding that he was entitled to receive the amount paid to regularly appointed agents was upheld. Fredrickson v. Locomobile Co., 78 Neb. 775.

⁴¹ Eggleston v. Boardman, 37 Mich. 14; Vilas v. Downer, 21 Vt. 419; Ken-

§ 1528. What evidence as to value is admissible.—In many cases custom may have gone far towards establishing the amount of compensation to be paid for certain services, and where parties either expressly or impliedly deal with reference to such a custom, evidence of the amount so fixed is admissible.⁴²

So evidence of what is usually charged for similar services by other persons in the same line of business at the same place is admissible.⁴³ It is also competent to show by persons acquainted with the value of like services, what is their opinion as to the value of the services in question.⁴⁴ This is a well-recognized use of what is ordinarily known as expert testimony. If such a witness knows the value of such services, it is not necessary that he should be shown to be acquainted with the amounts which others are in the habit of charging in like cases,⁴⁵ nor is it necessary that he should have personal acquaintance with the agent, or personal knowledge of the services rendered,⁴⁶ but he may give his opinion upon a hypothetical question covering the elements in controversy.

§ 1529. — Ordinarily the testimony of what such a witness would himself have charged is not admissible,⁴⁷ yet if the evidence given in reply to such a question is manifestly based upon the witness's opinion as to its value and not upon any uncertain standard of his own, the form of the question might be disregarded.⁴⁸

So evidence of what was paid to a particular agent in another case is not, ordinarily, admissible; such evidence having no necessary tendency to prove either the usual charge or the actual value, inasmuch as there may have been in that case peculiar circumstances or elements which would not exist in another.⁴⁹ But upon cross-examination, in tucky Bank v. Combs, 7 Pa. St. 543; Stanton v. Embrey, 93 U. S. 548, 23 L. Ed. 983.

⁴² Stanton v. Embrey, 93 U. S. 548, 23 L. Ed. 983; Masterson v. Masterson, 121 Pa. 605; Thomas v. Brandt (Md.), 26 Atl. 524. On proof of custom, see Calland v. Trapet, 70 Ill. App. 228.

⁴³ Eggleston v. Boardman, 37 Mich. 14; Stanton v. Embrey, 93 U. S. 548, 23 L. Ed. 983; Hollis v. Weston, 156 Mass. 357; Ruckman v. Bergholz, 38 N. J. Law, 531; Thompson v. Boyle, 85 Pa. 477; Vilas v. Downer, 21 Vt. 419; Sayre v. Wilson, 86 Ala. 151; Kennerly v. Somerville, 64 Mo. App. 75.

⁴⁴ Bowen v. Bowen, 74 Ind. 470; Johnson v. Thompson, 72 Ind. 167, 37 Am. Rep. 152; Parker v. Parker, 33 Ala. 459.

⁴⁵ Commissioners v. Chambers, 75 Ind. 409.

⁴⁶ Mish v. Wood, 34 Penn. St. 451; Miller v. Smith, 112 Mass. 470; Whitbeck v. New York, etc., R. R. Co., 36 Barb. (N. Y.) 644.

⁴⁷ Fairchild v. Railroad Co., 8 Ill. App. 591.

⁴⁸ See Elting v. Sturtevant, 41 Conn. 176.

⁴⁹ Eggleston v. Boardman, 37 Mich. 14; Lakeman v. Pollard, 43 Me. 463, 69 Am. Dec. 77.

order to test either the good faith or the qualifications of the witness, it might be proper to inquire of him what he would have performed the same service for,⁵⁰ or to ascertain the extent of his knowledge as to the price usually paid by inquiring what had to his knowledge been paid in given cases.⁵¹

§ 1530. Agent continuing after expiration of term presumed to be at prior compensation.—If an agent, employed at a compensation for a definite term, continues in the principal's service after the expiration of that term, without any new or other arrangement, he will be presumed to be continuing on the old terms, and there can be no recovery on a quantum meruit.⁵²

3. When Compensation is Considered to be Earned.

§ 1531. In general.—The question when the agent's compensation is to be deemed to be earned, is one depending upon a variety of considerations.

Thus it may appear:—

- a. That the agent has fully completed his undertaking.
- b. That he has only partially completed his undertaking.
- c. That he has done nothing at all.

The fact that he has not completed his undertaking may be attributable to one of the following causes:—

- a. That his authority was revoked before he had had time or opportunity to perform fully.
- b. That he had abandoned the agency before he had made full performance.

The revocation of his authority may have been:—

- a. By act of the principal.
- b. By operation of law.

If revoked by the act of the principal, that act may have been:—

- a. For sufficient cause.
- b. For insufficient cause.

So if the agent abandoned the agency, such abandonment may, under the circumstances have been:—

- a. Justifiable, or
- b. Unjustifiable.

⁵⁰ Gillman v. Gard, 29 Ind. 291.

⁵¹ Lakeman v. Pollard, supra.

⁵² Ewing v. Janson, 57 Ark. 237; Ingalls v. Allen, 132 Ill. 170; Laubach v. Cedar Rapids Supply Co., 122 Iowa, 643; Lalande v. Aldrich, 41 La. Ann. 307; Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Parker, 92

Md. 22; Thompson v. Detroit Copper Co., 80 Mich. 422; Douglass v. Merchants' Ins. Co., 118 N. Y. 484, 7 L. R. A. 822; Wallace v. Floyd, 29 Pa. St. 184, 72 Am. Dec. 620; Rauck v. Albright, 36 Pa. St. 367; Dickinson v. Norwegian Plow Co., 96 Wis. 376.

Again if the undertaking was performed in part, such part performance may have been:—

- a. Of value to the principal, or
- b. Of no value to the principal.

Without attempting to follow this classification precisely, the chief questions here suggested will be considered.

§ 1532. Compensation earned when undertaking fully completed.

As a general proposition, it must be true that the agent is entitled to his compensation when and only when he has fully completed his undertaking according to its terms.⁵³ In many cases, there is no difficulty in determining when this time arrives, but in others it is not easy to decide upon the full measure of the agent's undertaking or upon the fact of its performance. Each case rests upon its own peculiar facts and circumstances, and the inquiry in every instance must be: 1. What did the agent undertake to do? 2. Has he done it, and if not, then, 3. To whose act or to what occurrence is the failure to be attributed?

⁵³ CONSTRUCTION OF CONTRACT—In General.

A sewing machine agent was to receive $12 a week, a 15 per cent commission on sales, payable as the installments were paid, and also 5 per cent of the net remittances of his office. There was a proviso that "all his claims therefor shall cease immediately upon the termination of this agreement." This was held not to apply to the 15 per cent selling commissions earned when contract terminated but not yet payable. Singer Manufacturing Co. v. Brewer, 78 Ark. 202.

Agents for the sale of threshing machines were, by the terms of their contract to receive no commissions on second hand goods. Court construed this to mean second hand goods taken in part payment for a new machine, and not to apply to a sale made by the agents at defendant's request of a second hand thresher taken in by other agents of the defendant in another territory. "This transaction was outside the scope of plaintiff's employment as regular agents of defendant, and not controlled by the written contract."

Gooch v. Case Threshing Machine Co., 119 Mo. App. 397.

A stipulation that the agent was to receive no commissions on machinery sold by him and "taken back" by his principal, applies to a case where the agent made a sale receiving only a purchase money mortgage which was not paid and which the principal had to foreclose and buy in the worn machinery at the sale. Reeves v. Watkins, 28 Ky. Law Rep. 401, 89 S. W. 266. Compare on this point: Taylor Mfg. Co. v. Key, 86 Ala. 212; Sherman v. Pt. Huron Engine Co., 13 S. Dak. 95; Newell v. Pt. Huron Engine Co., — Ala. —, 57 South. 68.

An agent had a contract providing for a commission for the sale of two classes of bonds, his commissions to be paid out of the money collections as the purchase price was paid. He made a sale of some of the $500 bonds, receiving in part payment, with the principal's consent, certain of the $250 bonds previously sold to the buyer by other agents. Nothing being said about commissions, he was held not to be entitled to commissions on these bonds taken back, as they could not properly be deemed to

§ 1533. — When full performance a condition precedent.—

It is entirely competent for the parties to expressly agree that the full performance of a particular undertaking shall be a condition precedent to the right to recover any compensation, and where such a con-be money collections. Warwick v. North American Investment Co., 112 Mo. App. 633.

Where an agent is to have a commission upon every machine sold by him, he is entitled to it, in the absence of a contrary stipulation, where he really found the purchaser and made the sale, though the principal closes the matter up in person, or through other agents. Woods v. Case Threshing Mach. Co., — Iowa, —, 135 N. W. 399; Davis v. Huber, 119 Iowa, 56.

Where the contract was interpreted to mean "that commissions should be earned upon all orders accepted and filled by shipment, and not merely upon orders obtained." Held, that the agent was not entitled to commissions on orders which were justifiably cancelled by the buyer or rejected by the seller. In re Ladue Tate Mfg. Co., 135 Fed. 910.

Where a contract provides for both a salary and commissions on sales and also fixes a certain amount of sales, "which shall be considered the minimum amount of business necessary to constitute the fulfillment of this contract," the agent is not entitled to salary or commission unless his sales reach the minimum. Haas v. Malto-Grapo Co., 148 Mich. 358.

The fact that the agent performs more quickly or more easily than was contemplated does not affect his right if he does fully perform, as where the agent sold in one contract the stipulated quantity although it was evidently expected that a year or so would be required to sell that amount. Redwine v. Realty Co., 107 C. C. A. 175, 184 Fed. 851.

Where an insurance agent is to have commissions on renewals, this prima facie is held to mean only on renewals while he continues agent. Spaulding v. New York L. Ins. Co., 61 Me. 329; Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Holloway, 51 Conn. 310, 50 Am. Rep. 21; Jacobson v. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co., 61 Minn. 330; Scott v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 103 Md. 69, 7 Ann. Cas. 1166. And a discharge for cause will terminate his right. Jacobson v. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co., supra; Frankel v. Michigan Mut. L. Ins. Co., 158 Ind. 304; Walker v. John Hancock Mut. L. Ins. Co., 80 N. J. L. 342; Ann. Cas., 1912 A. 526.

Custom cannot change a clear contract upon the subject. Gooding v. Northwestern Mut. L. Ins. Co., — Me. —, 85 Atl. 391; Stagg v. Conn. Mut. L. Ins. Co., 10 Wall. (U. S.) 589, 19 L. Ed. 1038; Partridge v. Insurance Co., 15 Wall. (U. S.) 573, 21 L. Ed. 229. But contracts frequently expressly provide for interests after the termination of the agency, upon terms indicated. Gooding v. Northwestern Mut. L. Ins. Co., supra.

In New York, see Aldrich v. New York L. Ins. Co., 121 App. Div. 18; Hercules Mut. L. Assur. Co. v. Brinker, 77 N. Y. 435; Hale v. Brooklyn L. Ins. Co., 120 N. Y. 294.

Exclusive agency in certain territory. — Commissions on sales made therein. Contracts giving an agent the exclusive right to sell the principal's goods in a certain territory, may be made: Garfield v. Peerless Motor Car Co., 189 Mass. 395; though such a contract must be established by proof, and will not be inferred merely from the fact that the agent had been allowed for a considerable period to sell goods in that territory and had assumed that he was to have it, though he concedes that nothing had been said upon the subject. Wiley v. California Hosiery Co.

tract is fairly made it will be enforced, and will be conclusive unless it appears that the performance has been waived or prevented by the

(Cal.), 32 Pac. 522. See also, King Powder Co. v. Dillon, 42 Colo. 316; Aultman v. Joplin, 8 Ky. Law Rep. 62; Indiana Road Machine Co. v. Lebanon Carriage Co., 25 Ky. Law Rep. 1763, 78 S. W. 861. In Sutton v. Baker, 91 Minn. 12, a contract for exclusive agency was deduced from the circumstances, though not express. Unless the agency is exclusive, the principal may himself sell goods in the territory without liability to the agent. Aultman v. Joplin, supra; Indiana Road Machine Co. v. Lebanon Carriage Co., supra; Case Threshing Mach. Co. v. Wright Hardware Co., — Tex. Civ. App. —, 130 S. W. 729; Schroeder v. Fine, 131 N. Y. Supp. 575. Where the agency is exclusive, the principal may still sell in that territory, but if he does so, it is a breach of the contract and he is liable to the agent. Garfield v. Peerless Motor Car Co., supra (disapproving Golden Gate Pkg. Co. v. Farmers' Union, 55 Cal. 606); Masters v. Wayne Auto. Co., 198 Mass. 25. The contract may reserve to the principal the right to sell in the territory under certain circumstances, and the agent has no cause of complaint unless he shows that the sales were made under other circumstances than those specified. McCoy Eng. Co. v. Crocker-Wheeler Co., 100 Md. 520. Where sales are made by the principal at a lower rate than those fixed in the agent's contract, the agent is entitled to damages, but, it is held, not to commissions on such sales in the absence of a showing that he would have been able to make the sales himself at the higher rates. La Favorite Rubber Mfg. Co. v. Channon, 113 Ill. App. 491. See also, Roberts v. Minneapolis Thresh. Mach. Co., 8 S. Dak. 579, 59 Am. St. R. 777. But in Schiffman v. Peerless Motor Car Co., 13 Cal. App. 600, where the principal invaded the agent's territory in making sales, and represented at the same time that it had not a supply of motor cars to meet the agent's orders, it was held that the agent could recover commissions on cars so sold, and that the principal was estopped to deny that the agent might have made the sales. And in Sparks v. Reliable Dayton Motor Car Co., 85 Kan. 29, Ann. Cas. 1912, C. 1251, it was held that the measure of the agent's damages was presumptively the commissions on the cars sold by the principal. See also Clairmonte v. Napier, 11 Cal. App. 265.

After the agent leaves the employment, he is not entitled to commissions on goods thereafter sold by the principal, merely because they are sold to his former customers. O'Neill v. Howe, 16 Daly, 181.

An agent having a contract of exclusive agency is not entitled to commissions on goods sold by the principal in other territory merely because they are afterwards brought by the purchaser into the agent's territory. Wycoff v. Bishop, 115 Mich. 414. See also, Wiggin v. Shoe Co., 161 Mass. 597; Haynes Automobile Co. v. Wood-ill Auto Co., 163 Cal. 102.

In Masters v. Wayne Automobile Co., 198 Mass. 25, an ambiguous contract was construed as giving the agent the right to commissions upon sales made by the principal, if made to a person whom the agent had solicited, even though the principal was ignorant of that fact. Where the principal has agreed to give the agent an exclusive territory, he is not liable to the agent because another agent from a different territory makes a sale in the first agent's territory without the principal's knowledge and consent. Cedar Rapids Auto Co. v. Jeffrey, 139 Iowa, 7. See also, Hilliker v. Northwest Thresher Co., 145 Iowa, 721.

Land cases.—For a discussion of principal.⁵⁴ So, though there may not have been any express agreement, it may be entirely clear, either from the nature of the undertaking, or the words or conduct of the parties, that what the agent was to be paid for was the accomplishment of a certain result, and in such a case the agent will not be entitled to compensation unless that result be accomplished, or its accomplishment be waived or prevented by the principal.⁵⁵ The case of the real estate broker, more fully to be considered in a later chapter, furnishes many typical illustrations.

Thus "where there is a special contract, by the terms of which the broker is not to be paid commissions unless he sells the property at a specified price, the sale by him at such a price is a condition precedent to his right to compensation, unless pending the negotiations, and exclusive agency in land cases see Real Estate Brokers in chapter on Brokers, Book V, Chap. III.

Agreement to pay commission if property withdrawn from sale.—A contract to pay commissions for the sale of property, if the sale be made within a specified time, may also provide that the agent shall be entitled to his commissions in case the principal withdraws the property from sale, or sells it himself, during the time specified. Such a contract is valid and the agent's undertaking to devote his time and services to the finding of a purchaser within the period named furnishes a sufficient consideration. Kimmell v. Skelly, 130 Cal. 555; Crane v. McCormick, 92 Cal. 176; Maze v. Gordon, 96 Cal. 61; Rucker v. Hall, 105 Cal. 425.

⁵⁴ Thus see Flower v. Davidson, 44 Minn. 46 (payment only if "the sale is actually consummated"); Aultman v. Ritter, 81 Wis. 395 (no commission to be payable unless the property was not only sold but paid for); Walker v. Tirrell, 101 Mass. 257, 3 Am. Rep. 352 (no commission unless principal should "see fit and proper" to sell); Temby v. Brunt Pottery Co., 229 Ill. 540 (no commissions on orders which the principal does not accept); Hilliker v. Northwest Thresher Co., 145 Iowa, 721 (no commissions payable unless certain prices were realized); Taylor Mfg. Co. v.

Key, 86 Ala. 212 ("no commissions shall be paid on any article taken back, or on any order taken and not filled, on machinery not settled for or on any sale to irresponsible persons"). See also Sherman v. Pt. Huron Engine Co., 13 S. Dak. 95; Newell v. Pt. Huron Engine Co., — Ala. —, 57 South. 68; Ross v. Portland Coffee Co., 30 Wash. 647.

⁵⁵ As is said in Goldstein v. White, 16 N. Y. Supp. 860: "Unless there is a special agreement to the contrary, work, whether measured by the job (Cunningham v. Jones, 20 N. Y. 486; Smith v. Brady, 17 N. Y. 173, 72 Am. Dec. 442; Lawrence v. Miller, 86 N. Y. 131), or by time (Waters v. Davies, 55 N. Y. Super. Ct. 39), must be finished, in order that there shall be a right to pay for it. In other words, there must be a performance or a waiver of conditions precedent before there can be a right to recovery. Phelan v. Mayor, 119 N. Y. 86; Avery v. Willson, 81 N. Y. 341, 37 Am. Rep. 503."

Thus, though the contract be not so specific as those referred to in the preceding note, yet if the commission is clearly to be paid only in case a sale is effected, no commission can be recovered, though a purchaser be produced, if he fails to buy, unless by the principal's fault. Yeager v. Kelsey, 46 Minn. 402. To same effect: Stewart v. Fowler, 37 Kan. 677;

whilst his agency remains unrevoked, the owner consents to a sale for a sum other than originally agreed upon.”⁵⁶ For a like reason if the promise is to pay a compensation if the sale is effected within a certain time, proper performance on the part of the agent within that time, unless excused or prevented by the principal, is a condition precedent to the right to compensation.⁵⁷ So if payment of all or some portion of the purchase price has been stipulated for, as where, for example, the agent’s commissions are to be paid out of the purchase price or out of a certain instalment thereof, the payment of the purchase price or of such instalment, is similarly a condition precedent.⁵⁸

Gruesel v. Dean, 98 Iowa, 405; Kost v. Reilly, 62 Conn. 57; McPhail v. Buell, 87 Cal. 115; Dorrington v. Powell, 52 Neb. 440; Tousey v. Etzel, 9 Utah, 329.

So, where it is a condition that the principal shall receive a certain sum without deduction. Beale v. Bond, 84 Law. T. 313. To same effect: Cremar v. Miller, 56 Minn. 52; Hurd v. Neilson, 100 Iowa, 555; Seattle Land Co. v. Day, 2 Wash. 451; Beatty v. Russell, 41 Neb. 321; Ames v. Lamont, 107 Wis. 531. So where the purchaser produced would not comply with the conditions, e. g., to furnish an abstract of the property, which he was to give in part payment. Marple v. Ives, 111 Iowa, 602.

Where actual sale is stipulated for, a provisional sale is not enough. Candict v. Cowdrey, 139 N. Y. 273. Nor an optional one. Jones v. Eilenfeldt, 28 Wash. 687; Lawrence v. Pederson, 34 Wash. 1. Same where orders taken are subject to cancellation. Wolfsheimer v. Frankel, 130 App. Div. 853. See also, Pape v. Romy, 16 Ind. App. 470.

Moreover the agent, in order to be entitled to his compensation, must produce results. No commission is earned by service, however meritorious, which does not lead to a sale or the production of a purchaser, as the contract may require. If the agent does not bring his customer to definite terms, or if the customer or the agent abandons the matter before a definite conclusion is reached, no commissions are earned. And it will make no difference in such a case if, after the agent has failed or abandoned the endeavor, the principal or some other agent brings about the sale, even to the same purchaser, where this has not been the result of sharp practice on the part of the principal to avoid the payment of commission. Garcelon v. Tibbetts, 84 Me. 148; Fairchild v. Cunningham, 84 Minn. 521; Gleason v. Nelson, 162 Mass. 245; Sawyer v. Bowman, 91 Iowa, 717; Cook v. Forst, 116 Ala. 395; Babcock v. Merritt, 1 Colo. App. 84; Crockett v. Grayson, 98 Va. 354; Baars v. Hyland, 65 Minn. 150; Hale v. Kumler, 85 Fed. 161; Crowley Co. v. Myers, 69 N. J. L. 245; Butler v. Baker, 17 R. I. 582, 33 Am. St. R. 897; Cadigan v. Crabtree, 179 Mass. 474, 88 Am. St. R. 397; Ayres v. Thomas, 116 Cal. 140; Alden v. Earle, 121 N. Y. 688.

⁵⁶ Jones v. Adler, 34 Md. 440. See Stewart v. Mather, 32 Wis. 344.

⁵⁷ Irby v. Lawshe, 62 Ga. 216; Fulty v. Wimer (Cal.), 9 Pac. 316; Ropes v. Rosenfeld, 145 Cal. 671; Page v. Griffin, 71 Mo. App. 524; Young v. Trainor, 158 Ill. 428; Jacquin v. Bou-tard, 89 Hun, 437; affirmed in 157 N. Y. 686. To same effect: Greene v. Freund, 150 Fed. 721.

⁵⁸ Lindley v. Fay, 119 Cal. 239; Ormsby v. Graham, 123 Iowa, 202; Parker v. Bldg. Ass’n, 55 W. Va. 134; Seattle Land Co. v. Day, 2 Wash. 451; Hale v. Kumler, 29 C. C. A. 67, 85 Fed. 161.

§ 1534. — In many cases it has been held that the undertaking of a real estate broker—at least under the circumstances there disclosed—requires not only that he shall find a purchaser but that a binding contract shall be made with him, and where this is the case the broker must accomplish that result, to entitle him to his compensation.⁵⁹ Usually, however, as will be more fully seen hereafter,⁶⁰ the undertaking of such an agent is construed to be, not that he will close a binding sale, but only that he will find a purchaser to whom the principal may sell. In such a case, the production by the agent of a purchaser, who either actually buys, or is at least ready, able and willing to buy, upon the terms proposed, is likewise a condition precedent.⁶¹

The production of a purchaser who will not close the transaction unless some change be made in the terms proposed, or who insists upon some privilege or exemption not provided for by the express or the implied basis of the negotiation, will not satisfy the agent's obligation unless the principal sees fit to waive the variance.⁶²

§ 1535. Agent's right not defeated by principal's default.—If it be found that the agent has done all that he undertook to do, his right to his compensation is complete, and he cannot be deprived of it, because the principal then fails to avail himself of the benefits of the act or refuses to do what he had agreed to do upon performance. Neither can the principal then defeat the agent's claim by revoking his authority or withdrawing the subject-matter from his possession or control.⁶³

Thus an agent who is employed to procure a loan for his principal is entitled to his commission when he procures a lender, ready, willing and able to loan the money upon the terms proposed. His right to his commission does not depend upon the contingency of the principal's acceptance of the loan, but upon his performance of his part of the contract, and the principal cannot deprive the agent of his commission by refusing to accept the loan which the agent's efforts have resulted in securing.⁶⁴

⁵⁹ See Hyams v. Miller, 71 Ga. 608; Tombs v. Alexander, 101 Mass. 255, 3 Am. Rep. 349; Gilchrist v. Clarke, 86 Tenn. 583; Lunney v. Healey, 56 Neb. 313, 44 L. R. A. 593.

⁶⁰ See post, chapter on Brokers.

⁶¹ See Stewart v. Smith, 50 Neb. 631.

⁶² For example, a purchaser who will not accept the ordinary form of deed. Garcelon v. Tibbetts, 84 Me. 148. Or a lender who insists upon payment of principal and interest in gold. Caston v. Quimby, 178 Mass. 153, 52 L. R. A. 785.

⁶³ See cases cited in following notes.

⁶⁴ Vinton v. Baldwin, 88 Ind. 104, 45 Am. Rep. 447; Squires v. King, 15 Colo. 416; Hanesley v. Bagley, 109 Ga. 346.

But compare Demarest v. Tube Co., 71 N. J. L. 14; Crasto v. White, 52 Hun, 473; Ashfield v. Case, 93 App. Div. 452, cited in preceding section.

Neither is a broker's right to his commissions affected ordinarily by the fact that the principal proves to be unable to make a good title to the property which he offered as security;⁶⁵ though it is, of course, true that the terms of the broker's employment may be such that he is not entitled to commissions unless the loan be actually made.

§ 1536. — Upon the same principle it is held that an agent who undertakes to negotiate a sale of his principal's property,—a binding contract not being required—has earned his commission when he has procured a purchaser who is able, willing and ready to purchase it upon the terms designated,⁶⁶ and the principal cannot defeat the agent's claim by then refusing to sell at all,⁶⁷ or only upon different terms,⁶⁸ or by ignoring the agent and secretly consummating the sale with the purchaser so produced without the further intervention of ⁶⁵ Middleton v. Thompson, 163 Pa. 112; Egan v. Kieferdorf, 16 Misc. 385; Gatling v. Central Spar Verein, 67 App. Div. 50; Fullerton v. Carpenter, 97 Mo. App. 197; Finck v. Bauer, 40 Misc. 218; Green v. Lucas, 33 L. T. R. N. S. 584; Peet v. Sherwood, 43 Minn. 447.

⁶⁶ Oullahan v. Baldwin, 100 Cal. 648; Wilson v. Sturgis, 71 Cal. 226; Henry v. Stewart, 185 Ill. 448; Wilson v. Mason, 158 Ill. 304, 49 Am. St. R. 162; Scribner v. Hazeltine, 79 Mich. 370; Gelatt v. Ridge, 117 Mo. 553, 38 Am. St. R. 683; Gibbons v. Sherwin, 28 Neb. 146.

⁶⁷ Fiske v. Soule, 87 Cal. 313; Cawker v. Apple, 15 Colo. 141; Spalding v. Salteil, 18 Colo. 86; Monroe v. Snow, 131 Ill. 126; Flood v. Leonard, 44 Ill. App. 113; Bird v. Phillips, 115 Iowa, 703; Felts v. Butcher, 93 Iowa, 414; Niederlander v. Starr, 50 Kan. 770; Harwood v. Diemer, 41 Mo. App. 48; Reeves v. Vette, 62 Mo. App. 440; Greenwood v. Burton, 27 Neb. 808; Jones v. Stevens, 36 Neb. 849; Vecder v. Seaton, 85 App. Div. 196; York v. Nash, 42 Ore. 321.

⁶⁸ This is true whether the principal changes the terms by making them more favorable to himself. Buckingham v. Harris, 10 Colo. 455; Bishop v. Averill, 17 Wash. 209, or whether he reduces his terms in some slight particular in order to evade the payment of commissions by making the sale himself. Cook v. Forst, 116 Ala. 395; Corbel v. Beard, 92 Iowa, 360; Ranson v. Weston, 110 Mich. 240; Hubachek v. Hazzard, 83 Minn. 437; Schlegal v. Allerton, 65 Conn. 260; Snyder v. Fearer, 87 Ill. App. 275; Hutten v. Renner, 74 Ill. App. 124; Hafner v. Herron, 165 Ill. 242; Hobbs v. Edgar, 23 Misc. 618.

No objection where all parties contemplated that possibility at time of making contract. Hilliker v. Northwest Thresher Co., 145 Iowa, 721.

In Dildine v. Ford Motor Co., 159 Mo. App. 410, although the contract provided for change of price, court refused to recognize it because being used as a "club" to coerce agent.

In Nosotti v. Auerbach, 79 L. T. R. 413, plaintiff was employed to find a purchaser for defendant's house. The jury found that there was no stipulation respecting the time when defendant would be ready to give possession. On January 26th the plaintiff produced a purchaser who offered to buy, provided possession could be given by March 15th. Defendant refused this offer, saying that he could not give possession as soon as that. The jury having found that from January 26th to March 15th was a reasonable time to allow defendant, the agent.⁶⁹ Neither is such an agent's right to his commissions affected by the fact that his principal's title is defective and the sale fails for that reason;⁷⁰ or that the principal has disabled himself from conveying as proposed;⁷¹ or that the sale fails because of the misrepresentation by the principal of some material fact connected with the

it was held that plaintiff was entitled to his commission.

Bruce J. said: "If the plaintiff found a person willing to accept the defendant's terms, and to take possession within a reasonable time, and to wait for possession for a reasonable time, I think he did all he was bound to do to earn his commission."

⁶⁹ Cook v. Forst, 116 Ala. 395; Schlegal v. Allerton, 65 Conn. 260; Snyder v. Fearer, 87 Ill. App. 275; Hutten v. Renner, 74 Ill. App. 124; Baker v. Murphy, 105 Ill. App. 151; Hafner v. Herron, 165 Ill. 242; Corbel v. Beard, 92 Iowa, 360; Ranson v. Weston, 110 Mich. 240; Hubachek v. Hazzard, 83 Minn. 437; Hobbs v. Edgar, 23 N. Y. Misc. 618; Dreisback v. Rollins, 39 Kan. 268; Scott v. Clark, 3 S. Dak. 486; Nicholas v. Jones, 23 Neb. 813; Love v. Miller, 53 Ind. 294, 21 Am. Rep. 192; Vinton v. Baldwin, supra; Reyman v. Mosher, 71 Ind. 596; Moses v. Bierling, 31 N. Y. 462; Mooney v. Elder, 56 N. Y. 238; Fraser v. Wyckoff, 63 N. Y. 445; Wyllie v. Marine Nat. Bank, 61 N. Y. 415; Hinds v. Henry, 36 N. J. L. 328; Hannan v. Moran, 71 Mich. 261. See also, Tombs v. Alexander, 101 Mass. 255, 3 Am. Rep. 349; Walker v. Tirrell, 101 Mass. 257, 3 Am. Rep. 352; Richards v. Jackson, 31 Md. 250, 1 Am. Rep. 49. See this subject fully discussed under the title "Brokers," post.

The fact that the principal may have seen fit for some reason of his own to require the purchasers, secured by the agent, to execute new orders for the machines sold by the agent, will not deprive him of his commission. Merriman v. McCormick Harvester Co., 101 Wis. 619, s. c., 96 Wis. 600.

⁷⁰ Smith v. Schiele, 93 Cal. 144;

Clark v. Thompson Co., 75 Conn. 161; Davis v. Morgan, 96 Ga. 518; Rounds v. Allee, 116 Iowa, 345; Indiana Asphalt Co. v. Robinson, 29 Ind. App. 59; Davis v. Lawrence, 52 Kan. 383; Monk v. Parker, 180 Mass. 246; Fitzpatrick v. Gilson, 176 Mass. 477; Stange v. Gosse, 110 Mich. 153; Gauthier v. West, 45 Minn. 192; Roberts v. Kimmons, 65 Miss. 332; Christensen v. Wooley, 41 Mo. App. 53; Gerhart v. Peck, 42 Mo. App. 644; Strong v. Prentice Brown Stone Co., 6 N. Y. Misc. 57; Gorman v. Hargis, 6 Okla. 360; Kyle v. Rippey, 20 Ore. 446 (citing many cases); Sweeny v. Ten-Mile Oil Gas Co., 130 Pa. 193; McLaughlin v. Wheeler, 1 S. D. 497; Cheatham v. Yarbrough, 90 Tenn. 77; Conklin v. Krakauer, 70 Tex. 735; Wilson v. Clark, 35 Tex. Civ. App. 92; Brackenridge v. Claridge, 91 Tex. 527, 43 L. R. A. 593.

⁷¹ Ford v. Easley, 88 Iowa, 603; Reed v. Union Cent. L. I. Co., 21 Utah, 295; Hix v. Edison Electric Light Co., 10 N. Y. App. Div. 75.

An agent of an insurance company was to receive, as compensation for his services, a per cent of all sums paid to and received by the said company as premiums on insurance secured by the agent. The agent submitted a risk to the defendant and they accepted it, and received as part of first premium notes to the amount of over $4,000. Afterward, deeming the risk undesirable, they compromised with the insured and he surrendered the policy and they returned to him the notes. It was held that the company did not avoid their liability to the agent for commission, by thus voluntarily disposing of their own right to premiums. Reed v. Union Cent. Life Ins. Co., 21 Utah, 295.

transaction⁷² or that the contract for sale entered into or ratified by the principal is not specifically enforceable.⁷³

So where a binding contract is required, and the agent procures it to be made, he will be entitled to his compensation, although no sale actually takes place because the principal refused to enforce the contract,⁷⁴ induced⁷⁵ or permitted⁷⁶ the buyer to withdraw from it, or consented with the buyer that the contract should be cancelled,⁷⁷ or because of any other reason not involving the sufficiency of the agent's performance.⁷⁸

The same general principles apply to undertakings to bring about the exchange of property.⁷⁹

§ 1537. — Where the agent contends that he has thus substantially performed his undertaking, notwithstanding the default of the principal, the act of the agent must have been the immediate means of securing the purchaser or lender. In this case it is causa causans and not the causa proxima that the law looks to.⁸⁰

The cases in which this question has most commonly arisen have been cases involving the sale of real estate or the procuring of loans upon it, but the principles of law herein referred to are by no means peculiar to cases of that sort, and many cases will be found cited in the note, involving similar contracts with reference to other subjects.⁸¹

In a similar case, where the agent was to receive a rebate on the stock received by the defendant, as compensation for promoting the company, and the defendant afterward surrendered its right to receive the amount of stock stipulated for, the decision was for the agent, the court saying: "The principal may not bargain away his right to receive the fund, and thus deprive the agent of the reward for his services. The latter has not agreed to any such thing as this, and the injustice of it is manifest." Hix v. Edison Electric Light Co., 10 N. Y. App. Div. 75.

⁷² Hannan v. Moran, 71 Mich. 261; Cohen v. Farley, 28 N. Y. Misc. 168; Washburn v. Bradley, 169 Mass. 86.

But see apparently contra, Hausman v. Herdtfelder, 81 N. Y. App. Div. 46; Curtiss v. Mott, 90 Hun. 439.

⁷³ Mattes v. Engel, 15 S. D. 330; McLaughlin v. Wheeler, 1 S. D. 497.

⁷⁴ Parker v. Walker, 86 Tenn. 566; Millet v. Barth, 18 Colo. 112; Alvord

v. Cook, 174 Mass. 120; Witherell v. Murphy, 147 Mass. 417; Ward v. Cobb, 148 Mass. 518, 12 Am. St. Rep. 587; Canfield v. Orange, 13 N. D. 322.

⁷⁵ Phelps v. Prusch, 83 Cal. 626.

⁷⁶ Foster v. Wynn, 51 Ill. App. 401; Betz v. Williams & White Land & Loan Co., 46 Kan. 45.

⁷⁷ Lawrence v. Rhodes, 188 Ill. 96; Granger v. Griffin, 43 Ill. App. 421; Parker v. Walker, 86 Tenn. 566.

⁷⁸ Flynn v. Jordal, 124 Iowa, 457; Gibson v. Gray, 17 Tex. Civ. App. 646; Mattes v. Engel, 15 S. D. 330.

⁷⁹ Brown v. Wilson, 98 Iowa, 316; Lockwood v. Halsey, 41 Kan. 166; Jenkins v. Hollingsworth, 83 Ill. App. 139; Roche v. Smith, 176 Mass. 595, 79 Am. St. Rep. 345; Kalley v. Baker, 8 N. Y. Supp. 851; Blair v. Slosson, 27 Tex. Civ. App. 403.

⁸⁰ Attrill v. Patterson, 58 Md. 226; Ayres v. Thomas, 116 Cal. 140.

⁸¹ See for example Veeder v. Seaton, 85 N. Y. App. Div. 196 (principal re-

§ 1538. No defense that principal realized no profit.—So if the agent has done all that he undertook to do, the fact that the services proved to be of no value to the principal, or that the latter did not realize from them the expected profit, furnishes no ground, upon which to deprive the agent of his compensation.⁸² And it is immaterial whether this result be attributable to the act of the principal or of third persons: the principal and not the agent must run the risk of his undertaking's proving profitless.

4. Effect of Termination of Agency.

I. Termination by the Act of Principal.

§ 1539. When agent is entitled to compensation if agency is terminated before performance.—The question of the agent's right to compensation when his authority has been revoked or his employment has been terminated before full performance, depends, as has been seen, upon a variety of considerations. The termination may have refused to perform parcel contract for sale of automobile, not enforceable under the statute of frauds, but one which the buyer was ready and willing to perform); Taylor v. Morgan's Sons Co., 124 N. Y. 184; Jacquin v. Boutard, 89 Hun (N. Y.), 437 (principal without excuse refused to accept orders procured by agent); Madden v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc., 11 N. Y. Misc. 540 (insurance company arbitrarily rejected application procured by agent); Strong v. Prentice Brown Stone Co., 6 N. Y. Misc. 57 (principal did not properly perform contract made for him by agent and the purchasers rejected goods sold by agent because they did not comply with the contract); Taylor Mfg. Co. v. Key, 86 Ala. 212; Bailey v. Carnduff, 14 Colo. App. 169 (principal refused without reason to deliver stock sold by the agent); Owl Canon Gypsum Co. v. Ferguson, 2 Colo. App. 219 (same effect); Bush v. Mattox, 116 Ga. 42; Stauffer v. Linenthal, 29 Ind. App. 305 (principal unjustifiably refused to complete sale of a stock of goods negotiated by agent); Steven-son v. Morris Machine Works, 69

Miss. 232 (principal unreasonably delayed filling orders procured by agent and purchaser therefore refused to accept the goods); Tyler v. Bernard (Tenn. Ch. App.), 57 S. W. 179 (same facts as in preceding case; agent recovered commissions on the sale); Delafield v. Smith, 101 Wis. 664, 70 Am. St. Rep. 938 (where the principal approved of the contracts, but failed to deliver the goods).

So in cases where the principal fails to enforce a binding contract against a recalcitrant buyer. Dougan v. Turner, 51 Minn. 330; Geoghegan v. Kelly, 11 N. Y. Supp. 704; Hallack v. Hinckley, 19 Colo. 38; Aikins v. Thackara Mfg. Co., 15 Pa. Super. 250; Yates v. Appleton, 61 Hun (N. Y.), 228.

⁸² Scovell v. Upham, 55 Minn. 267; Stone v. Argersinger, 32 App. Div. 208; Rockwell v. Hurst, 13 N. Y. Supp. 290; Hagar v. Donaldson, 11 Pa. Co. Ct. 252, 1 Pa. Dist. 147; Shute v. McVitie (Tex. Civ. App.), 72 S. W. 433; Lockwood v. Levick, 8 C. B. (N. S.) 603; Hendrickson v. Woods, 77 App. Div. 644 (no opinion), 78 N. Y. Supp. 949.

resulted from the act of the principal or by operation of law; if terminated by the act of the principal, such termination may, as to the agent, have been rightful or wrongful.

It has been seen that, unless the authority of the agent be coupled with an interest, it may be revoked by the principal at any time.⁸³ It has also been seen that, though there may be a contract of employment between the parties, the principal may usually, in fact, terminate it and discharge the agent at any time. As has been already explained,⁸⁴ what is meant by this is, that the relation between the principal and the agent, being a personal one founded upon trust and confidence, the law will not ordinarily undertake to compel the principal to continue to employ an agent against his will,—will not, in other words, enforce specific performance of the contract. But notwithstanding the fact that he possesses this power to revoke or terminate, the principal, as has been seen,⁸⁵ may expressly or impliedly agree not to exercise it,—and where there is an employment for a definite term, there is an agreement not to wrongfully terminate it,—and where such an agreement is made, the principal will be liable if he violates it, without good cause, in the same manner as for the violation of any other contract.

§ 1540. — In the absence, however, of an express or implied agreement that the agency shall continue for a definite time, it will be presumed to be an agency at will merely, terminable at the will of either party at any time.⁸⁶ And the same rule applies although the agent may have been employed to do a specific thing, unless there is an express or implied agreement on the part of the principal that he will continue to employ the agent until completion, and on the part of the agent that he will continue to act until full performance—it is still at will merely; no implied agreement to continue the agency until completion necessarily arises from the mere fact of such an employment. If, for example, I employ a broker, in the ordinary way, to sell my house, this does not imply an agreement on my part with him either that I will sell the house or that I will continue to employ him until he sells it; or, on his part with me, that he will sell it or keep at it until he does. I may usually withdraw my property, or he may abandon the effort, without liability.

So, as has been seen,⁸⁷ the agent may be under an agreement to act for a certain period with no corresponding obligation on the part of the principal to employ him during that period.

⁸³ Ante, § 563.

⁸⁶ Ante, § 592.

⁸⁴ Ante, § 568.

⁸⁷ Ante, §§ 598–605.

⁸⁶ Ante, § 566.

a. Agency Rightfully Terminated.

§ 1541. When agency may be terminated without liability.—In using the expressions rightfully and wrongfully terminated, it will be understood that the question of the principal's power to revoke authority is not involved, but whether by express or implied agreement having undertaken not to exercise that power, or having agreed that the relation shall continue for a certain period, he has, nevertheless, revoked the authority or terminated the relation in violation of the agreement.⁸⁸

In this view of the case the principal may rightfully revoke the agent's authority in one of two cases: a. Where the authority was conferred to continue only during the will of the principal; and, b. Where, though the authority was to continue for a definite time, it was subject to revocation upon the happening of a certain event, or upon the breach of an express or implied condition of its continuance, and the event has happened or the breach has occurred. What misconduct on the part of the agent will constitute a breach of the implied conditions of every employment, has previously been considered.⁸⁹

§ 1542. Agency at will of the principal.—Where an agency has been created to endure at the will of the principal and is terminated by him before the agent has done anything in pursuance of it, the agent would ordinarily be entitled to no compensation whatever; if terminated by the principal without fault of the agent, after the agent has entered upon the performance, but before full completion, the agent will ordinarily be entitled to compensation for the reasonable value of the work already done, and to be reimbursed for the costs and expenses which he had fairly and in good faith incurred in the performance of the agency up to that time.⁹⁰ This will always be the case where, from the nature of the employment, the principal receives the full value of the agent's services as they are rendered. It will also be true in all other cases except those in which the full performance of the undertaking is expressly or impliedly made a condition precedent to the right to compensation.—a subject already considered.⁹¹

§ 1543. ——— It is undoubtedly competent for the agent to agree that he shall receive no compensation if his authority is terminated before performance, even though it be so terminated at the mere whim

⁸⁸ See ante, § 568.

⁸⁹ See ante, § 607.

⁹⁰ United States v. Jarvis, Fed. Cas.

No. 15,468, 2 Ware (U. S. D. C.), 278;

Chambers v. Seay, 73 Ala. 372.

⁹¹ See ante, § 1533.

or caprice of the principal, and where such an agreement is fairly made it will be enforced.⁹²

Where the agency is thus at the will of the principal, the agent cannot, if it be revoked, recover damages for this withdrawal of the power to act, or for the commissions or compensation he might have earned had the authority not been revoked.⁹³ Nor can it make any difference that the principal acted unreasonably, capriciously or maliciously in revoking the authority. No action can ordinarily be maintained in such a case for the doing of what one thus has a legal right to do, even though the act be prompted by malice.⁹⁴

If, on the other hand, though the power of revocation be fully conceded, the agent has substantially performed his undertaking in full before the revocation, he will be entitled to compensation as upon a complete performance.⁹⁵

§ 1544. Agency terminable on contingency.—The same rule would apply where the authority was terminable by the principal upon the happening of a certain contingency. Unless the agent had expressly or impliedly agreed that in the event of such a termination he should have no compensation, he would be entitled to receive the reasonable value of the services already rendered, and to be reimbursed for the expenses and charges which he had fairly and in good faith incurred in the performance of the agency. The agent, however, would not be entitled to recover anything by way of compensation for any damages occasioned by the revocation, as for wages or profits which he might have earned had the revocation not occurred, although the revocation was without reasonable cause if within the contingency agreed upon. The exception referred to in the preceding sections would also apply

⁹² See, for example, Walker v. Tirrell, 101 Mass. 257, 3 Am. Rep. 352.

For right to terminate if service is not satisfactory. Tyler v. Ames, 6 Lans. (N. Y.) 280; Adrianse v. Rutherford, 57 Mich. 170; Hotchkiss v. Gretna Gin. & Compress Co., 36 La. Ann. 517; Dulaney v. Page Belting Co. (Tenn. Ch.), 59 S. W. 1082.

Compare, Hydecker v. Williams, 18 N. Y. Supp. 586.

⁹³ North Carolina State L. Ins. Co. v. Williams, 91 N. C. 69, 49 Am. Rep. 637; Jacobs v. Warfield, 23 La. Ann. 395; Kirk v. Hartman, 63 Pa. 97; Coffin v. Landis, 46 Pa. 426.

⁹⁴ Crescent, etc., Co. v. Eynon, 95 Va. 151.

If there was in fact good ground for discharging the agent, it is immaterial that the principal did not know it at the time. Odeneal v. Henry, 70 Miss. 172; Boston Deep Sea Fishing Co. v. Ansell (1888), 39 Ch. D. 339; Ridgway v. Hungerford Market Co., 3 Ad. & El. 171; Loveman v. Brown, 138 Ala. 608; Troy Fertilizer Co. v. Logan, 90 Ala. 325. If master asserts one cause, he is not estopped to assert another even though both were known to him at time. Strauss v. Meertief, 64 Ala. 299.

⁹⁵ Stamets v. Deniston, 193 Pa. 548.

here, namely, that where full performance of a given act is expressly or impliedly made a condition precedent to the right to compensation, no recovery could be had for part performance where the agency was rightfully terminated upon the contingency contemplated.

§ 1545. Agency terminable only on breach of express or implied conditions.—But where the agent is employed for a definite term, he can be discharged without liability only when there has been a breach of some express or implied condition in the contract creating the agency.⁹⁶ Where these conditions are express, they usually declare what shall be the result of their breach, but, in the absence of such a provision, a breach of an express condition which the parties have made sufficient to terminate the agency, would absolve the principal from liability for future wages and for damages occasioned by the revocation, but would not, in the absence of a stipulation to that effect, ordinarily deprive the agent of compensation for services previously performed, unless terminated for the agent's gross misconduct.⁹⁷ Of the implied conditions of the agency, the most important are those which relate to the honesty and fidelity with which the agent performs his duty.⁹⁸

§ 1546. When terminated for agent's misconduct.—It is, as has been previously stated,⁹⁹ an implied condition in every contract of agency, that the agent will not wilfully disobey reasonable and lawful instructions; that he will not willingly permit his principal's interests to suffer; that he will be honest and faithful, and will exercise reasonable care and diligence in the discharge of his duties; and that he will not violate the principles of morality or the laws of the land. For a breach of this implied condition, as has been seen, the principal may, in certain cases, lawfully discharge the agent, although he had been employed for a definite period. What these cases are has already been considered.¹ Where, then, it is found that the misconduct of the agent was such as to justify his discharge, the question arises: What effect has such misconduct upon (a.) future commissions or compensation, (b.) commissions or compensation previously earned but not yet paid, and, (c.) commissions or compensation for the doing of the act which the misconduct affects, or for the period in which the misconduct occurs?

§ 1547. — Upon the first branch of the question there can be no doubt that a discharge for cause not only does not render the prin-

⁹⁶ See ante, § 596.

⁹⁸ See post, §§ 1546–1548.

⁹⁷ See post, §§ 1546–1548. See also, ante, §§ 609, 610.

⁹⁹ See ante, § 607.

¹ See ante, § 607.

principal liable to the agent for damages therefor, but also absolves him from all claim for commissions or compensation which but for such discharge, the agent might have thereafter earned.²

Upon the second branch, if the service consists of a series of acts or extends over a series of periods, commissions or compensation earned but not paid, for one act or period in the series would not necessarily be forfeited by misconduct affecting a subsequent act or period only.³

Upon the third branch of the question, the rule cannot be so shortly stated. As has been already seen, it is often said that the first duty of the agent is to be loyal to his trust, and a number of rules have been already stated whose purpose is to insure the performance of that duty. Certain of these rules have been designed, not merely to give a remedy for actual wrongdoing, but to remove as far as possible all temptation to wrongdoing. Among the other measures designed to secure the performance of this duty is the denial of compensation where the duty has not been observed, and it has been held in many cases that where the agent is unfaithful to his trust and abuses the confidence reposed in him, he may not only be lawfully discharged, but he will forfeit all right to compensation for his services.⁴

§ 1548. — It is also the duty of the agent, as has been seen, to obey his principal's instructions, to keep within the limits of his

² Shields v. Carson, 102 Ill. App. 38; Murdock v. Phillips Academy, 12 Pick. (Mass.) 244; Du Quoin, etc., Mining Co. v. Thorwell, 3 Ill. App. 394.

³ Thus in Tipton v. Feitner, 20 N. Y. 423, the court said: "Suppose a contract for a year, the employers agreeing to pay the servant ten dollars at the end of each month; and a part performance and subsequent breach by the servant, the employer being in arrears for several full months. In such a case, I conceive that the servant should be permitted to recover for the wages earned, subject to recoupment of the master's damages for the time covered by the breach. I am ignorant of any principle upon which it could be held that he could not recover anything. It certainly cannot be upon the ground of the non-performance of a condition precedent; for it is absurd to say, that under such a contract, serving the last month was a condition to the payment for the first."

See also Tichenor v. Bruckheimer, 40 N. Y. Misc. 194; Robinson v. Green, 3 Mete. (44 Mass.) 159; Hand-Stitch Sewing-Machine Co. v. Blood, 47 Fed. 361.

"If the plaintiff agreed that the defendant might discharge him in case of drunkenness and neglect of his work, and he was discharged because guilty of these offenses, he did not thereby forfeit what he had earned up to the time of his discharge." Mal-lonee v. Duff, 72 Md. 283.

⁴ Harrison v. Craven, 188 Mo. 590. See Sumner v. Reicheniker, 9 Kan. 320; Porter v. Silvers, 35 Ind. 295; Hafner v. Herron, 165 Ill. 242; Phinney v. Hall, 101 Mich. 451; Hobson v. Peake, 44 La. 383; Shaeffer v. Blair, 149 U. S. 248, 37 L. Ed. 721; Jeffries v. Robbins, 66 Kan. 427, and other cases cited in § 1588, post.

authority, and to exercise reasonable care and diligence in the performance of his undertaking. The nonperformance of these duties also may defeat the agent's right to compensation.⁵ It is not every case of misconduct in this regard, however, even though sufficient to warrant the agent's discharge, which will deprive him of all claim to compensation. If the agent were guilty of such misconduct as amounts to treachery, or if he wholly failed to recognize the duties and responsibilities imposed upon him by his situation, or so conducts himself that his services are of no value, it is entirely just and reasonable that he should receive no compensation whatever, and to this extent the law is well settled.⁶

But if on the other hand, though the agent has been negligent or has not performed according to his undertaking, his services are still of some appreciable and substantial value to the principal, over and above all damages sustained by him by reason of the default, the agent should be entitled to recover that value.⁷

It may also be found that the principal has waived or condoned the agent's default, in which event, of course, it will cease to be of legal consequence; and such waiver or condonation may be implied from circumstances and need not be express.⁸

⁵ A servant discharged for wilful and persistent disobedience of reasonable orders cannot recover compensation under an entire contract. Von Heyne v. Tompkins, 89 Minn. 77, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 524.

⁶ See cases cited in second note preceding. See also Alta Invest. Co. v. Worden, 25 Colo. 215; Quinn v. Le Duc (N. J. Ch.), 51 Atl. 199; Schreiner v. Kissock, 91 N. Y. Supp. 28.

⁷ Hildebrand v. American Fine Art Co., 109 Wis. 171, 50 L. R. A. 826; Lawrence v. Gullifer, 38 Me. 532; Kessee v. Mayfield, 14 La. Ann. 90; Massey v. Taylor, 5 Cold. (Tenn.) 447; Carroll v. Welch, 26 Tex. 147; Shute v. McVitie (Tex. Civ. App.), 72 S. W. 433; Cotton v. Rand, 93 Tex. 7; Congregation v. Peres, 2 Cold. (Tenn.) 620; Eaken v. Harrison, 4 McCord (S. C.), 249.

⁸ Tickler v. Andrea Mfg. Co., 95 Wis. 352.

It has also been held in many English, and several American cases that where a servant or agent employed for a definite period, is guilty of such misconduct as will justify his discharge, he is not only not entitled to recover damages for the discharge, but he is not entitled to any compensation for what he may have done during the current period. This is upon the theory that the contract for that period, whether it be a week, a month, a quarter or a year, is an entire contract, the complete performance of which is a condition precedent to the servant's or agent's right to recover.

English: Turner v. Robinson, 5 B. & Ad. 789, 6 C. & P. 15; Ridgway v. Market Co., 3 Ad. & El. 171; Lilley v. Elwin, 11 Q. B. 742; Spain v. Arnott, 2 Starkie, 256; Turner v. Mason, 14 M. & W. 112.

American: Beach v. Mullin, 34 N. J. L. 343; Peterson v. Mayer, 46 Minn. 468, 13 L. R. A. 72 (see also Nelichka v. Esterly, 29 Minn. 146).

b. Agency Wrongfully Terminated.

§ 1549. When agent discharged without cause—Breach of implied contract.—But where, by express or implied contract, the agency has been created to endure for a definite period, it may not be terminated by the principal, unless for the agent's default, or by virtue of some agreement to that effect, without liability to the agent. As has been seen⁹ where no definite time is agreed upon, the agency is ordinarily held to be one to continue during the will of the principal.¹⁰ But it is not necessary that there should be an express agreement that the agency shall not be thus terminated without liability at the mere will of the principal. It may be implied from facts as in other cases, and such an implied understanding is frequently demanded by the rules of ordinary good faith between parties. It is, of course, always within the power of the agent to protect himself by an express agreement, and in many cases the absence of such an agreement will put the agent at the mercy of the principal's will.

As has already been frequently pointed out, the mere fact that an agent is employed to perform a certain act will not, of itself, amount to an undertaking on the part of the principal that the agent shall be permitted to complete the act, at all events, and the principal may fairly, and in good faith, terminate the agency without liability, at any time before performance. The case of the real estate broker furnishes many typical illustrations of this rule. But where the act is one which is to be paid for only upon completion, and which requires time and labor for its performance, and the agent has, within a reasonable time, brought the act to the very point of completion so that success is certain and immediate, it would be the height of injustice to permit the principal then to withdraw the authority and terminate the agency and appropriate the benefit of it, without being liable to the agent for any of the compensation which he had thus substantially and practically earned.

§ 1550. — So where an agent is employed to perform an act (to be paid for on completion) which involves expenditures of labor and money before it is possible to accomplish the desired object, and the agent has in good faith incurred expense and expended time and

But this is not the general rule in the United States. See Hildebrand v. American Fine Art Co. and other cases cited in note preceding this one.

⁹ See ante, § 592.

¹⁰ No substantial damages for discharge where the employment was only for so long as the services are satisfactory to the employer. Sax v. Detroit, etc., R. Co., 129 Mich. 502.

labor, but has not had a reasonable opportunity to avail himself of the results of this preliminary effort, it could not be permitted that the principal should then terminate the agency and take advantage of the agent's services without rendering any compensation therefor unless that result is required by the plain terms of the contract or the inherent nature of the service.¹¹

So, while a broker, as will be more fully seen hereafter, must ordinarily fully perform in order to be entitled to his commissions, still if after such a broker, employed to sell property, had in good faith expended money and labor in advertising for and finding a purchaser, and was in the midst of negotiations which were evidently and plainly approaching success, the seller should revoke the authority with the purpose of availing himself of the broker's efforts and avoiding the payment of his commissions, it could not be claimed that the agent had no remedy.¹² In certain of these cases it might well be said that there was an implied contract on the part of the principal to allow the agent a reasonable time for performance, that full performance was wrongfully prevented by the principal's own acts, and that the agent had earned his commission.¹³

All of these questions, however, will be more fully considered in their appropriate place.

§ 1551. What cases involved.—The cases here involved may be divided into two general classes: First, those wherein there is a contract with the agent to do some particular act, but not involving a general employment of him to devote his entire time to the principal's service; and, Second, those in which there was a contract to enter the principal's service for a definite time and to give to him during that time the exclusive service of the agent. To state it in different form, the first class includes contracts to do specific acts, and the second includes ordinary contracts of employment. Accurately speaking, the first class only ordinarily involves matters of agency, and the second class questions of master and servant. The first class would be illustrated by the case of the broker or other agent who is employed to ¹¹ Approved in Glover v. Henderson, 120 Mo. 367, 41 Am. St. Rep. 695.

See also, Jaekel v. Caldwell, 156 Pa. 266; Green v. Cole, 127 Mo. 587; Zwolaneck v. Baker Mfg. Co., 150 Wis. 517.

¹² See post, Book V, Chap. III.

¹³ See Gleason v. McKay, 37 Ill. App. 464; Green v. Cole, supra; Hea- ton v. Edwards, 90 Mich. 500; Rees v. Pellow, 38 C. C. A. 94, 97 Fed. 167; Sibbald v. Bethlehem Iron Co., 83 N. Y. 378, 38 Am. Rep. 441; Wylie v. Marine Nat. Bank, 61 N. Y. 415; Martin v. Holly, 104 N. C. 36; Cloe v. Rogers, 31 Okla. 255, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 366.

sell specific property for a commission, but who does not undertake to give his entire time and service to the principal; and the second class by the agent or servant who is employed to work by the week, month or year at a fixed wage or salary.

§ 1552. Breach of contract with agent to do particular acts.—Where an agent has been employed to do some particular act or acts for the doing of which he is to receive a commission or other agreed sum, under such circumstances as to involve a contract that he shall be permitted to perform, and he is wrongfully prevented from performing by the principal, his remedy must ordinarily be an action for damages. He can not have wages, because, by the hypothesis, none were to be paid to him. He cannot ordinarily recover the agreed commission, because this was to be paid only upon performance, and, by the hypothesis, this has been prevented by the wrongful act of the principal. There may, of course, be cases, as already suggested, in which he has so substantially and practically performed before the breach, that he may recover upon that theory. In other cases, however, the agent's recovery must be had upon some different basis. He would, in any event, be entitled to compensation for the work, labor and money properly expended before the wrongful termination;¹⁴ or, in cases in which the damages could be estimated with the necessary certainty, to compensation for the loss of what he would have received had he been permitted to perform his undertaking.¹⁵

¹⁴ Jaekel v. Caldwell, 156 Pa. 266; Martin v. Holly, 104 N. C. 36.

¹⁵ See Cloe v. Rogers, 31 Okla. 255, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 366; Durkee v. Gunn, 41 Kan. 496, 13 Am. St. Rep. 300; Green v. Cole, 127 Mo. 587.

Where the compensation is not a fixed sum, and is not capable of being rendered certain by reference to known data, but depends upon uncertain or conjectural events, as where it is to be paid in the form of commissions upon the price of goods which the agent may sell during a certain period, the probable amount of his sales during that period is ordinarily too speculative to be made the basis of a recovery. Brigham v. Carlisle, 78 Ala. 243, 56 Am. Rep. 28; Beck v. West, 87 Ala. 213; Howe Machine Co. v. Bryson, 44 Iowa, 159; Oberfeldes v. Mattingly (Ky.), 120 S. W. 352; Stern v. Rosenheim (Md.).

10 Atl. 221; Isbell v. Anderson Carriage Co., 170 Mich. 304; Lewis v. Atlas Ins. Co., 61 Mo. 534; Kelly v. Carthage Wheel Co., 62 Ohio St. 598.

But there may easily be cases in which the experience of the agent under similar circumstances may furnish sufficient data for the determination of his probable sales (Crammer v. Kohn, 7 S. D. 247; Oliver v. Perkins, 92 Mich. 304; Randall v. Peerless Motor Car Co., 212 Mass. 352; Schumaker v. Heinemann, 99 Wis. 251; McDougall v. Van Allen Co., 19 Ont. L. R. 351; Laishley v. Goold Bicycle Co., 6 Ont. L. R. 319); as well as cases wherein the experience of others under circumstances substantially similar may furnish sufficient data. See Hitchcock v. Supreme Tent, 100 Mich. 40, 43 Am. St. Rep. 423; Wakeman v. Wheeler & Wilson Mfg. Co., 101 N. Y. 205, 54 Am. Rep. 676;

§ 1553. Breach of express contract of employment—Agent's remedies.—Where, however, there has been an employment for a definite period, and the agent is discharged without cause before the expiration of that period, or is not permitted to undertake the performance at all, the principal is liable to the agent for the damages occasioned thereby, as in any other case of the breach of a contract.

There has been, and still is, much uncertainty and confusion in the cases as to the exact remedies which the agent, in such a case, may pursue, and as to the measure and nature of the damages he may recover, but it is believed that the preponderance of authority and reason is in harmony with the following rule:—

An agent thus wrongfully discharged or prevented from performing his undertaking has his choice of three remedies (although the second and third differ only in respect of the time at which the action is brought):—

1. He may elect to consider the contract as rescinded, and at once bring an action to recover the value of the services, if any, rendered up to the time of the discharge, less the amount already paid to him; or
2. He may at once bring an action for the breach of the contract, and may recover compensation for the probable losses resulting therefrom; or
3. He may wait until the end of the term, and then bring his action

Mueller v. Spring Co., 88 Mich. 390; Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Nexsen, 84 Ind. 347, 43 Am. Rep. 91.

In Durkee v. Gunn, 41 Kan. 496, 13 Am. St. R. 300, where an agent who had been employed to sell a subdivision of land, and who was to have no pay for advertising, services, etc., except a share of the profits, was wrongfully discharged before the subdivision was sold, he was allowed to recover such damages "as would be equal in amount to his share of the profits which would have resulted had the lands been sold by him." Followed in Green v. Cole, 127 Mo. 587. But cf. Glover v. Henderson, 120 Mo. 367, 41 Am. St. R. 695. But where an attorney, employed to prosecute a claim for a contingent fee, is discharged or prevented from continuing before judgment has been obtained, it is held that the measure of damages is not the fee, but the reasonable value of the services rendered. French v. Cunningham, 149 Ind. 632. See also, Western Union Tel. Co. v. Semmes, 73 Md. 9; Polsley v. Anderson, 7 W. Va. 202, 23 Am. Rep. 613; Badger v. Mayer, 8 N. Y. Misc. 533.

In Rightmire v. Hirner, 188 Pa. 325, the plaintiff was employed for three years, to sell machines on commission. The defendant was not bound, however, to furnish any machines. Held, that the measure of damages for a breach was the value of the contract at that time; but that, in determining its value, the jury should take into account the fact that defendant was not obliged to continue to make machines, the contingencies and depressions of trade, and also what the plaintiff probably could earn in some other employment.

for the breach of the contract and recover compensation for the actual loss he has sustained thereby.¹⁶

He cannot, however, pursue all of these remedies, and a recovery under one will be a bar to a recovery under the others.¹⁷

The second and third of these remedies are in addition to his right of action for wages earned but not paid.¹⁸

§ 1554. — Theory of these remedies.—By pursuing the first of these remedies, the agent elects to treat the contract as rescinded. He has, however, rendered valuable services for the principal, and there being now no contract to fix the price, he is entitled to recover

¹⁶ Howard v. Daly, 61 N. Y. 362, 19 Am. Rep. 285; James v. Allen County, 44 Ohio St. 226, 58 Am. Rep. 821; Weed v. Burt, 78 N. Y. 192; Saxonia, etc., Co. v. Cook, 7 Colo. 569; Richardson v. Eagle Machine Works, 78 Ind. 422, 41 Am. Rep. 584; Gardenhire v. Smith, 39 Ark. 280; Goodman v. Pocock, 15 Ad. & Ell. (N. S.) 576; Elderton v. Emmons, 6 Man. G. & S. (C. B.) 160; Smith v. Hayward, 7 Ad. & Ell. 544.

¹⁷ Richardson v. Eagle Machine Works, 78 Ind. 422, 41 Am. Rep. 584; McCargo v. Jergens, 206 N. Y. 363; Litchenstein v. Brooks, 75 Tex. 196; James v. Allen County, 44 Ohio St. 226, 58 Am. Rep. 821.

¹⁸ Richardson v. Eagle Machine Works, 78 Ind. 422, 41 Am. Rep. 584; James v. Allen County, 44 Ohio St. 226, 58 Am. Rep. 821.

Judgment as bar to further recovery.—With respect of wages already earned and due but not paid, the plaintiff has a fixed and vested right, which is entirely independent of a cause of action for any subsequent breach of the contract, and which he may enforce without regard to his remedy for the breach of contract, subject only to such rules respecting the joinder of actions as statutes may prescribe or the court may enforce. This action would be based upon the contract for the recovery of wages at the contract rate, and is not based upon the theory of rescission nor measured quantum meruit. This action will only lie for the wages for a completed period, and could be brought only after that period had expired. See Perry v. Dickerson, 85 N. Y. 345, 39 Am. Rep. 663; Levin v. Standard Fashion Co., 4 N. Y. Supp. 867; Uliott v. Miller, 17 N. Y. Supp. 526; Keedy v. Crane, 71 Md. 395. (It is submitted, however, that Keedy v. Crane, in holding that the right to recover for a month's wages earned and due, and the right to recover for a breach of the contract for the residue of the term, involved distinct recoveries for the same cause of action, is wrong.)

If the plaintiff is discharged in the middle of a wage period, his right to recover for so much of that period as has not been paid for seems to be based upon the following considerations: he cannot recover for that period as wages, because wages are due upon the completion of the service for that period; he may recover quantum meruit, but to do so involves treating the contract as abandoned, and is held to be a bar to any further recovery for a breach of the contract. See James v. Parsons, 70 Kan. 156 (where the plaintiff's recovery, quantum meruit, for only three days of a wage period was held to be a bar to his recovery of any damages for a breach of the contract). Keedy v. Long, 71 Md. 385, 5 L. R. A. 759. But cf. Levin v. Standard Fashion Co., 4 N. Y. Supp. 867.

their value upon a quantum meruit.¹⁹ In this recovery he is not limited by the contract price, not only because the contract has been rescinded, but because it may be that on account of a fixed employment, or because of an expectation of an increased compensation at a later period in the service, he agreed to render the services in question for less than their actual value. Such a recovery should, of course, be less the actual amount, if any, which has been already paid to him.

The two other remedies proceed upon the theory that the contract still continues in force, though broken by the principal, and the recovery had is for damages for the breach, and not for wages. A recovery was formerly allowed for wages upon the ground of a constructive service, but the doctrine of constructive service is almost universally repudiated in modern times.²⁰ It is, however, still recognized in a

To avoid this result, he should sue for breach of contract, and recover in this action apparently from the termination of the last full wage period before his wrongful discharge.

Where he is paid up to the time of his wrongful discharge, he can, except in those states which admit the doctrine of constructive service, recover only for the breach of contract. For this, as has been seen, he can have but one action, whether brought at once or after the expiration of the contract term.

Inasmuch as he has but one action, any recovery based upon any portion of the period since wages as such were last due, even though such recovery was mistakenly based on the notion that wages could be recovered, is a bar to any further recovery. Olmstead v. Bach, 78 Md. 132, 44 Am. St. Rep. 273, 22 L. R. A. 74. Here the plaintiff was employed for a year at a salary of $50 a week payable weekly. He was wrongfully discharged, but his salary was paid to the end of the week in which he was discharged, so that no wages were due him at the time of his discharge. After the expiration of the next week he sued for and recovered judgment for $50 as one week's wages. The defendant paid this judgment. Plaintiff then waited five weeks and sued again, claiming to recover $250. It was held that the first recovery was a bar to any further recovery; that even though it purported to be for the recovery of one week's wages, it was in fact an action for the breach of the contract; that but one action for this could be brought, and if the plaintiff illadvisedly failed to recover all the damages he was entitled to, it was his own misfortune. Followed in Doherty v. Schipper, 250 Ill. 128.

¹⁹ Smith on Master and Servant, 96; Beck v. Thompson, 108 Ga. 242; Fulton v. Hefflinger, 23 Ind. App. 104; Welch v. Livingston, 33 Misc. 116; Hartman v. Rogers, 69 Cal. 643; James v. Parsons, 70 Kan. 156; Richardson v. Swartzel, 70 Kan. 773.

See Markham v. Markham, 110 N. C. 356.

²⁰ Howard v. Daly, 61 N. Y. 362, 19 Am. Rep. 285; James v. Allen County, 44 Ohio St. 226, 58 Am. Rep. 821; Richardson v. Eagle Machine Works, 78 Ind. 422, 41 Am. Rep. 584; Little Butte Consol. Min. Co. v. Girand, — Ariz. —, 123 Pac. 209; Doherty v. Schipper, 250 Ill. 128; Olmstead v. Bach, 78 Md. 132, 44 Am. St. Rep. 273, 22 L. R. A. 74; Archard v. Hornor, 3 C. & P. 349; Smith v. Hayward, 7 Ad. & Ell. 544; Aspdin v. Austin, 5 Ad. & Ell. (N. S.) 671; Fewings v. Tisdal, 1 Exch. 295; Elderton v. Emmons, 6 C. B. 160; Goodman v. Pockock, 15 Ad. & Ell. (N. S.) 582.

few states.²¹ Under this theory it was incumbent upon the agent to hold himself in readiness, at all times, to perform the service, and having done so, he was permitted at the end of the term to recover his wages as such, the same as if he had in fact performed the service. If the wages were to be paid in installments, he might under this rule, sue for and recover them as they became due.²² By holding himself in readiness to perform, but being wrongfully prevented by the principal, he was deemed in law to have constructively performed. This doctrine is, however, as is said by a learned judge,²³ "so opposed to principle, so clearly hostile to the great mass of the authorities, and so wholly irreconcilable to that great and beneficent rule of the law that a person discharged from service must not remain idle but must accept employment elsewhere, if offered, that it cannot be sustained. If a person discharged from service may recover wages or treat the contract as still subsisting, then he must remain idle in order to be always ready to perform the service. He is placed in the predicament of being called upon by one rule of law to accept other employment if offered, and by another rule to remain idle in order to recover full wages. The doctrine is also not only at war with principle, but with the rules of political economy, as it encourages idleness and gives compensation to men who fold their arms and decline service, equal to those who perform with willing hands their stipulated amount of labor."

This discussion of course presupposes that the agent has in fact been discharged from the employment. If he has not been discharged, but has simply been prevented from performing the service, different rules would apply.²⁴

§ 1555. — A middle ground has been taken by the court in Minnesota. It is that the agent is not to recover on the ground of constructive service, nor is his action a single one to recover damages

²¹ Strauss v. Meertief, 64 Ala. 299, 38 Am. Rep. 8; Davis v. Ayres, 9 Ala. 292; Ramey v. Holcombe, 21 Ala. 567; Fowler v. Armour, 24 Ala. 194; Isaacs v. Davies, 68 Ga. 169; Armfield v. Nash, 31 Miss. 361. See also, Allen v. Colliery Engineers' Co., 196 Pa. 512.

²² Strauss v. Meertief, 64 Ala. 299, 38 Am. Rep. 8; Davis v. Preston, 6 Ala. 83.

²³ Dwight, C., in Howard v. Daly, 61 N. Y. 362, 19 Am. Rep. 285.

²⁴ Thus where the plaintiff, employed for a definite term at a monthly wage without being discharged, was prevented by the employer from working, though he was ready and willing to work, it was held that he could recover the monthly wages as they accrued. "It is one thing," said Gray, C., "to prevent a party from laboring, and quite a different thing to discharge him from all further employment." Stone v. Bancroft, 112 Cal. 652, 139 Cal 78.

for the breach of contract. What he is entitled to, in the view of this court, is indemnity for the loss of wages. Having been wrongfully discharged, he is entitled, at the expiration of each wage period fixed by the contract, to be indemnified for what he has lost by not being employed during that period; and he may bring as many actions as there may be periods, during which, through inability to get other employment, he has sustained the loss of wages. "It is our opinion," said the court,²⁵ "that the servant wrongfully discharged is entitled to indemnity for loss of wages, and for the full measure of this indemnity the master is clearly liable. This liability accrues by installments on successive contingencies. Each contingency consists in the failure of the servant without his fault to earn, during the installment period named in the contract, the amount of wages he would have earned if the contract had been performed, and the master is liable for the deficiency. This rule of damages is not consistent with the doctrine of constructive service, but it is the rule which has usually been applied by the courts which adopted that doctrine. Under that doctrine the master should be held liable to the discharged servant for wages as if earned, while in fact he is held only for indemnity for loss of wages. The fiction of constructive service is false and illogical, but the measure of damages given under that fiction is correct and logical. It is simply a case of a wrong reason given for a correct rule. Instead of rejecting the false reason and retaining the correct rule, many courts have rejected both the rule and the reason. In our opinion, this rule of damages should be retained; but the true ground on which it is based is not that of constructive service, but the liability of the master to indemnify the discharged servant, not to pay him wages, and this indemnity accrues by installments. The original breach is not total, but the failure to pay the successive installments constitutes successive breaches."

§ 1556. — When action may be brought.—The cause of action, for the breach of contract in these cases, arises when the agent is unequivocally discharged,²⁶ and the agent may bring his action for damages at once, or, except for the statute of limitations, he may wait until the expiration of the agreed term. If he brings his action before the expiration of the term, but the trial does not take place until after its expiration, no particular question arises.²⁷ But if, in such case, the trial takes place before the expiration of the term, it is held, in some cases, that the damages can be estimated only down to the time of the trial, upon the ground that the question of his employment and earnings, during the residue of the term, is too uncertain and conjectural to be made the subject of a legal remedy.²⁸ As has often been pointed out, however, the uncertainty here is no greater than in many other cases in which a recovery is constantly permitted, as for example, in cases of personal injury, where damages are awarded, based upon the expectation of life and future earning power. Moreover, where the agreed term of service was long, it may be necessary to bring the action before the expiration of the term in order to save the bar of the statute of limitations, and it may not be possible to delay the trial until after the expiration of the agreed term. Still further, in the case of employments for life, which are not uncommon, the action must be brought before the expiration of the term if it is to be brought at all. It would be obviously unjust in these cases, to deny the plaintiff the benefit of any recovery for the unexpired term. Although the basis of recovery may be more or less conjectural, it is probably as fair to one party as the other. Even if it should be thought that the scales are likely to turn against the principal, it may still be urged that, inasmuch as the situation was brought about by his confessedly wrongful act, it is not unfair that the doubts, if there be any, should be resolved against him. In any event, the weight of authority is believed to be to the effect that even though the trial occurs before ²⁷ Inasmuch as all uncertainty as to what may happen during the unexpired term, is removed where, though the action was begun before, the trial does not take place until after the expiration of the term, the same rule as to damages is usually adopted as where the action is begun after the expiration of the term. Everson v. Powers, 89 N. Y. 527, 42 Am. Rep. 319; Howay v. Going-Northrup Co., 24 Wash. 88, 85 Am. St. Rep. 942, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 49; Bailey v. McIntire, 71 N. H. 329; Catholic Press Co. v. Ball, 69 Ill. App. 591; Halsey v. Meinrath, 54 Mo. App. 335; Roberts v. Crowley, 81 Ga. 429; O'Neill v. Traynor, 24 N. Y. Misc. 686.

²⁵ McMullan v. Dickinson Co., 60 Minn. 156, 51 Am. St. Rep. 511, 27 L. R. A. 409. Alie v. Nadeau, 93 Me. 282, 74 Am. St. Rep. 346; Everson v. Powers, 89 N. Y. 527, 42 Am. Rep. 319; Prichard v. Martin, 27 Miss. 305.

²⁶ Litchenstein v. Brooks, 75 Tex. 196; Sutherland v. Wyer, 67 Me. 64;

²⁸ The leading case in this country is probably Gordon v. Brewster, 7 Wis. 355, and this case has been approved and followed in several others. Van Winkle v. Satterfield, 58 Ark. 617, 23 L. R. A. 853; Mt. Hope Cemetery Ass'n v. Weidenmann, 139 Ill. 67; McCormick Harvest Mach. Co. v. Cordsiemon, 101 Ill. App. 140; Bassett v. French, 10 N. Y. Misc. 672; Darst v. Mathieson Alkali Works, 81 Fed. 284.

To same effect: Fowler v. Armour, 24 Ala. 194; Zender v. Seliger Toot-hill Co., 17 N. Y. Misc. 126; Everson v. Powers, 89 N. Y. 527, 42 Am. Rep. 319; Sommer v. Conhaim, 25 N. Y. Misc. 166; Litchenstein v. Brooks, 75 Tex. 196; Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Offutt, 15 Ky. L. R. 301.

the expiration of the term, the award of damages may cover the probable loss for the unexpired portion.²⁹

§ 1557. — The measure of damages.—If in accordance with the rule above stated, the action is brought at once upon the discharge, and the trial is had before the expiration of the term the measure of damages, according to the weight of authority, is prima facie a sum equal to the stipulated compensation for the period following the discharge.³⁰ This sum, however, the principal may reduce if possible by showing the probability of the agent's being able by the exercise of reasonable diligence to secure other employment before the term would have expired. The burden of this proof is held to be upon the de-

²⁹ Seymour v. Oelrichs, 156 Cal. 782; Hamilton v. Love, 152 Ind. 641, 71 Am. St. Rep. 384; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Dolan, 6 Ind. App. 109, 51 Am. St. Rep. 289; Forked Deer Pants Co. v. Shipley, 25 Ky. L. R. 2299, 80 S. W. 476; Sutherland v. Wyer, 67 Me. 64; Cutter v. Gillette, 163 Mass. 95; Estes v. Desnoyers Shoe Co., 155 Mo. 577; Boland v. Glendale Quarry Co., 127 Mo. 520; Lally v. Cantwell, 40 Mo. App. 44; Brighton v. Lake Shore, etc., R. Co., 103 Mich. 420; School District v. McDonald, 68 Neb. 610; Kelly v. Carthage Wheel Co., 62 Ohio St. 598; Wilke v. Harrison, 166 Pa. 202 (semble); Helfferich v. Sherman, — S. D. —, 134 N. W. 815; East Tennessee R. Co. v. Staub, 7 Lea (Tenn.), 397; Pierce v. Tenn. Coal, etc., Co., 173 U. S. 1, 43 L. Ed. 591; Meade v. Doherty, 7 New Bruns. 195 (semble).

Where the contract was for employment for life or during ability to work, a recovery was held proper which allowed the contract price up to the time of the trial, "and the present worth of what he would be able to earn in the future, so long as he would, in the ordinary course of events, be able to perform the service, less any sums which he would be able to earn in other employment." Stearns v. Lake Shore Ry. Co., 112 Mich. 651; Pennsylvania Co. v. Dolan, 6 Ind. App. 109, and Brighton v. Lake Shore, etc., Ry. Co., 103 Mich. 420, were relied upon. See also, Daniell

v. Boston & M. R. Co., 184 Mass. 337; Rhoades v. Chesapeake, etc., R. Co., 49 W. Va. 494, 87 Am. St. Rep. 826, 55 L. R. A. 170.

³⁰ Gates v. School District, 57 Ark. 370, 38 Am. St. Rep. 249; Webster v. Wade, 19 Cal. 291, 79 Am. Dec. 218; Utter v. Chapman, 38 Cal. 659; Alderson v. Houston, 154 Cal. 1; Seymour v. Oelrichs, 156 Cal. 782; Ansley v. Jordan, 61 Ga. 482; Brown v. Board of Education, 29 Ill. App. 572; World's Columbian Exposition v. Richards, 57 Ill. App. 601; School Directors v. Orr, 88 Ill. App. 648; City of Jacksonville v. Allen, 25 Ill. App. 54; Hamilton v. Love, 152 Ind. 641, 71 Am. St. Rep. 384; Gazette Printing Co. v. Morss, 60 Ind. 153; Richardson v. Eagle Machine Works, 78 Ind. 422, 41 Am. Rep. 584; Ricks v. Yates, 5 Ind. 115; Hinchcliffe v. Koontz, 121 Ind. 422, 16 Am. St. Rep. 403; Jaffray v. King, 34 Md. 217; Cumberland, etc., Railroad Co. v. Slack, 45 Md. 161; Baltimore Base Ball Club v. Pickett, 78 Md. 375, 44 Am. St. Rep. 304, 22 L. R. A. 690; McGrath v. Marchant, — Md. —, 83 Atl. 912; Farrell v. School District, 98 Mich. 43; Allen v. Whitlark, 99 Mich. 492; Champlain v. Detroit Stamping Co., 68 Mich. 238; Bennett v. Morton, 46 Minn. 113; Horn v. Western Land Ass'n, 22 Minn. 233; Odeneal v. Henry, 70 Miss. 172; Hunt v. Crane, 33 Miss. 669, 69 Am. Dec. 381; Hansard v. Menderson Clothing fendant.³¹ If this rule seems harsh, it is replied that the principal has brought the action upon himself by his own wrongful act, and it is but just that if there be doubt as to the agent's finding other employment, the burden of it should fall upon him who might have prevented any doubt at all by performing his agreement. The damages for the Co., 73 Mo. App. 584; Howard v. Daly, 61 N. Y. 362, 19 Am. Rep. 285; Griffin v. Brooklyn Ball Club, 68 App. Div. 566; O'Neill v. Traynor, 24 Misc. 686; Merrill v. Blanchard, 7 App. Div. 167; affirmed, 158 N. Y. 682; Emery v. Steckel, 126 Pa. 171, 12 Am. St. Rep. 857; Latimer v. York Cotton Mills, 66 S. C. 135; Allen v. Maronne, 93 Tenn. 161; Babcock v. Appleton Mfg. Co., 93 Wis. 124; Winkler v. Racine Carriage Co., 99 Wis. 184.

In the following cases, where the trial was held before the term of employment expired, the same thing was held. Van Winkle v. Satterfield, 58 Ark. 617, 23 L. R. A. 853; Pennsylvania Co. v. Dolan, 6 Ind. App. 109, 51 Am. St. Rep. 289; Hamilton v. Love, 152 Ind. 641, 71 Am. St. Rep. 384.

The rule in New Jersey seems not to be substantially different. Thus in Moore v. Central Foundry Co., 68 N. J. Law, 14, although the court said that the mere fact the servant brought his action to recover damages instead of salary, part of which was not due, did not entitle him to recover the full amount of the compensation which he would have received had he served out the full term of his employment, the court further said that the jury should consider the fact that after his discharge his time became his own, and it was his duty to seek employment elsewhere; that they should deduct from the total amount payable under the contract the sum which the plaintiff might reasonably earn during the time the contract had yet to run. See also, Smith v. Gilbert Lock Co., 4 N. J. Law Jour. 312.

Where the agent was to receive his living expenses in addition to his wages he is entitled to compensation for this also. Estes v. Desnoyers Shoe Co., 155 Mo. 577. Cf. Lagerwall v. Wilkinson, 80 L. T. (N. S.) 55.

³¹ Troy Fertilizer Co. v. Logan, 96 Ala. 619; Gates v. School District, 57 Ark. 370, 38 Am. St. Rep. 249; Alderson v. Houston, 154 Cal. 1; Brown v. Board of Education, 29 Ill. App. 572; World's Columbian Exposition v. Richards, 57 Ill. App. 601; School Directors v. Orr, 88 Ill. App. 648; City of Jacksonville v. Allen, 25 Ill. App. 54; Ricks v. Yates, 5 Ind. 115; Baltimore Base Ball Club v. Pickett, 78 Md. 375, 44 Am. St. Rep. 304; Bennett v. Morton, 46 Minn. 113; Odeneal v. Henry, 70 Miss. 172; Farrel v. School District, 98 Mich. 43; Allen v. Whitlark, 99 Mich. 492; Champlain v. Detroit Stamping Co., 68 Mich. 238; Hansard v. Menderson Clothing Co., 73 Mo. App. 584; Squire v. Wright, 1 Mo. App. 172; McDermott v. DeMeridor Co., 80 N. J. L. 67; Wirth v. Calhoun, 64 Neb. 316; Griffin v. Brooklyn Ball Club, 68 App. Div. 566; Howard v. Daly, 61 N. Y. 362, 19 Am. Rep. 285; O'Neill v. Traynor, 24 N. Y. Misc. 686; Merrill v. Blanchard, 7 App. Div. 167; affirmed, 158 N. Y. 682; Emery v. Steckel, 126 Pa. 171, 12 Am. St. Rep. 857; Coates v. Allegheny Steel Co., 234 Pa. 199; Babcock v. Appleton Mfg. Co., 93 Wis. 124; Gauf v. Milwaukee Athletic Club, — Wis. —, 139 N. W. 207.

In the preceding cases the trial apparently occurred after the expiration of the term of employment.

In the following cases, the trial occurred before the period had expired. Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Dolan, 6 Ind. App. 109, 51 Am. St. Rep. 289; Hamilton v. Love, 152 Ind. 641, 71 Am. St. Rep. 384; Van Winkle v. Satterfield, 58 Ark. 617, 23 L. R. A. breach of contract could not exceed the stipulated sum,³² The agent is entitled to compensation, but not to be placed in a better situation than he would have been if the principal had not made default.

§ 1558. — Same subject.—Where the action is not brought until the end of the term, the measure of damages can then be more certainly ascertained. It will then be known how much the agent has been able to earn, or by the exercise of reasonable diligence might have earned, at other employment, and to this extent therefore the 853; Webb v. Depew, 152 Mich. 698, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 813; Cutter v. Gillette, 163 Mass. 95.

The burden of proof being on the defendant, it is usually held that it is not necessary for the plaintiff to allege or prove as part of his prima facie case that he was not able to secure other employment. See cases cited in preceding note. Wirth v. Calhoun, 64 Neb. 316.

It is held in a few states that it is incumbent on the plaintiff, as part of his case, to show that by the exercise of reasonable diligence, he has not been able to obtain other employment. Lewis Co. v. Scott, 95 Ky. 484, 44 Am. St. Rep. 251; Hunt v. Crane, 33 Miss. 669, 69 Am. Dec. 381; Fowler v. Waller, 25 Tex. 695; Wilmington v. Thomas, 24 Gratt. (Va.) 521.

Damages where contract terminable upon notice.—It is not uncommon, in cases of contracts for a definite term, to provide that one party or either party may terminate it before the expiration of that term, upon giving certain notice, and the like. In such a case, of course, the contract may be terminated in pursuance of its terms without any liability. But even though the defendant may terminate the contract without having given the notice required, the measure of damages is not compensation for the remainder of the prescribed term, but treating the discharge as notice, it is compensation for the period which the notice was to cover. Watson v. Rus- sell, 149 N. Y. 388, reversing Watson v. Russell, 5 N. Y. Misc. 352; Fisher v. Monroe, 2 N. Y. Misc. 326, reversing Fisher v. Monroe, 1 N. Y. Misc. 14; Dallas v. Murry, 37 N. Y. Misc. 599; Derry v. Board of Education, 102 Mich. 631; French v. Brookes, 6 Bing. 354; Hartley v. Harmon, 3 Per. & Dav. 567. (Compare Griffin v. Brooklyn Ball Club, 68 N. Y. App. Div. 566; affirmed without opinion, 174 N. Y. 535, where Watson v. Russell, supra, was distinguished and not followed because in the case at bar the defendant had not undertaken to terminate the employment in all respects, but to transfer the plaintiff to another club, and because the provision in the contract permitting termination upon notice was limited to a termination during the playing season, while the discharge in question took place before that season opened.)

The rule of Watson v. Russell has been applied in cases where, instead of a provision in the contract permitting discharge upon notice, the contract was made in the light of a custom to that effect. Briscoe v. Litt, 19 N. Y. Misc. 5.

Exemplary damages.—Exemplary damages are not recoverable for breach of contract in these cases. Richardson v. Wilmington & W. R. Co., 126 N. C. 100; Burnett v. Edling, 19 Tex. Civ. App. 711; or for mental suffering. Addis v. Gramophone Co., [1909] App. Cas. 488, 101 L. T. Rep. 466.

³² Meade v. Rutledge, 11 Tex. 44.

principal's liability is diminished.³³ The rule in this case, as in the other, is compensation to the agent. Prima facie the stipulated sum would be the measure of the damages, and the burden is upon the principal to establish either that the agent has obtained other employment or that he might by the exercise of reasonable diligence have so obtained it.³⁴

This action proceeds, as has been said, for the breach of the contract, and the right of action accrues upon the breach. In cases, therefore, of employment for a long term of years, the agent by deferring his action until the end of the term, would be in danger of having the statute of limitations operate against his claim.

If the agent is informed that his authority is revoked or that he will not be permitted to continue its execution, he is justified in accepting this as conclusive. It is not necessary that he should go through the barren form of offering to perform. His readiness may be shown by other evidence.³⁵

§ 1559. — Duty of agent to seek other employment.—It is in general the duty of the agent wrongfully discharged to exercise rea-

³³ For the purpose of reducing the plaintiff's recovery, what the plaintiff earned, and what he might by reasonable diligence have earned, at other similar employment, stand upon the same footing. Emmens v. Elderton, 13 Com. Bench. 495; Utter v. Chapman, 38 Cal. 659; Williams v. Chicago Coal Co., 60 Ill. 149; Gazette Printing Co. v. Morss, 60 Ind. 153; Hinchcliffe v. Koontz, 121 Ind. 422, 16 Am. St. Rep. 403; Sutherland v. Wyer, 67 Me. 64; Cumberland, etc., Railroad Co. v. Slack, 45 Md. 161; Williams v. Anderson, 9 Minn. 50; Squire v. Wright, 1 Mo. App. 172; King v. Steiren, 44 Pa. 99, 84 Am. Dec. 419; Kirk v. Hartman, 63 Pa. 97; Barker v. Knickerbocker L. Ins. Co., 24 Wis. 630; Leatherberry v. Odell, 7 Fed. 641.

The voluntary surrender of employment actually obtained stands upon the same footing. Sutherland v. Wyer, 67 Me. 64. But this would not be true where the new employment was lost by reason of the agent's illness. Bassett v. French, 10 N. Y. Misc. 672.

Loss of a new employment because of the agent's misconduct would doubtless ordinarily stand upon the same footing as a voluntary surrender of it. But where, though the agent was discharged from the new employment by reason of his own misconduct, he immediately obtained employment at better wages and for a longer time, it was held that the defendant had no ground for complaint. Allen v. Maronne, 93 Tenn. 161.

³⁴ Ansley v. Jordan, 61 Ga. 482; Horn v. Western Land Ass'n, 22 Minn. 233; Howard v. Daly, 61 N. Y. 362, 19 Am. Rep. 285; Leatherberry v. Odell, 7 Fed. 641; King v. Steiren, 44 Pa. 99, 84 Am. Dec. 419; Kirk v. Hartman, 63 Pa. 97; Barker v. Knickerbocker Life Ins. Co., 24 Wis. 630.

³⁵ Howard v. Daly, 61 N. Y. 362, 19 Am. Rep. 285; Carpenter v. Holcomb, 105 Mass. 284; Alderson v. Houston, 154 Cal. 1; Wallis v. Warren, 4 Exch. 361; Levy v. Lord Herbert, 7 Taunt. 314.

sonable diligence in seeking and obtaining other employment, and thus to reduce his damages as far as he is able.³⁶ The non-performance of this duty is, however, as has been seen,³⁷ generally held to be a matter of defense, and not a part of the plaintiff's prima facie case; and the burden of proving its non-performance is upon the defendant.

This rule, moreover, as ordinarily stated, does not impose upon the agent the duty to accept any other employment that may be offered. By other employment is meant employment of the same general nature but not that which is of an entirely different or more menial kind.³⁸ Thus a person employed as a bookkeeper would not be compelled to accept employment as a farm laborer, nor would a person employed as an actor or singer be under obligation to accept employment as a clerk in a store.

Neither, it is said, is the agent ordinarily bound to seek employment ³⁶ Goodman v. Pocock, 15 Q. B. 574; Beckham v. Drake, 9 M. & W. 79; Emmens v. Elderton, 13 Com. Bench 508; Utter v. Chapman, 38 Cal. 659; Williams v. Chicago Coal Co., 60 Ill. 149; Stone v. Vimont, 7 Mo. App. 277; Chamberlin v. Morgan, 68 Penn. St. 168; Shannon v. Comstock, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 457, 34 Am. Dec. 262; King v. Steiren, 44 Pa. 99, 84 Am. Dec. 419; Armfield v. Nash, 31 Miss. 361; Ward v. Ames, 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 138.

The obligation of the agent to find other employment is not an absolute one, but only to exercise reasonable diligence to obtain it. That there was other employment in fact, which he might have procured, is not material unless the failure to find it was inconsistent with the exercise of reasonable diligence. The agent wrongfully discharged is not obliged to start instantly upon his search, or to prosecute it with unceasing application, reasonable diligence only being the test. For the same reason he is not obliged to accept the first employment that offers, and even though he should reject offered employment, in a reasonable expectation of finding better, and should fail to find it, he would not necessarily be derelict in the performance of his duty.

³⁷ See ante, § 1557.

³⁸ Wolf v. Studebaker, 65 Pa. 459; Costigan v. Railroad Co., 2 Denio (N. Y.), 609, 43 Am. Dec. 758; Sheffield v. Page, 1 Sprague (U. S. D. C.), 285, Fed. Cas. No. 12,743; Halloway v. Talbot, 70 Ala. 389; Wilkinson v. Black, 80 Ala. 329; Van Winkle v. Satterfield, 58 Ark. 617, 23 L. R. A. 853; Elbert v. Los Angeles Gas Co., 97 Cal. 244; McKinley v. Goodman, 67 Ill. App. 374; Hinchcliffe v. Koontz, 121 Ind. 422, 16 Am. St. Rep. 403; Farrell v. School District, 98 Mich. 43; Fuchs v. Koerner, 107 N. Y. 529; Briscoe v. Litt, 19 N. Y. Misc. 5; Harger v. Jenkins, 17 Pa. Super. 615.

A base-ball player, employed for a year and wrongfully discharged, held not bound to endeavor to reduce the damages for a longer period than that year, and though he was offered employment by two other clubs at higher salary, yet since these offers were only upon the condition that the club should have an option upon his services for two more years, it was held that he was not obliged to accept such services. Griffin v. Brooklyn Base Ball Club, 68 N. Y. App. Div. 566; affirmed without opinion, 174 N. Y. 535.

in another locality,³⁹ nor with an objectionable employer.⁴⁰ The question of locality, however, is one depending upon the facts and circumstances of each case. What might reasonably be deemed the same locality in the case of one employment might not coincide with a like view of another employment.

§ 1560. — New employment offered by defendant.—The question whether employment offered by the defendant should be considered by way of mitigation, depends upon a variety of circumstances. If the new employment "varied the terms of the first engagement or if anything had occurred to render further intercourse or association between the parties offensive or degrading, or if the agent had engaged in other employment incompatible with his returning," he may, it is said, reject the offer with safety. Otherwise the invitation to return should be accepted.⁴¹ It is clear enough that the plaintiff is under no more obligation to accept different employment from the defendant than from any other person. If the defendant's offer be of the same employment, at less wages, or upon more disadvantageous terms, the plaintiff would be under no obligation to accept it as against employment with some other person at better terms. Neither is the plaintiff bound to accept employment offered by the defendant, where his doing so would cause a relinquishment of his cause of action for the breach;⁴² but where this is not involved, nor any necessary injury to feelings, and the only alternative is idleness, no satisfactory reason is apparent why the agent should not accept it.

³⁹ Harrington v. Gies, 45 Mich. 374; Strauss v. Meertief, 64 Ala. 299, 38 Am. Rep. 8; Costigan v. Railroad Co., 2 Denio (N. Y.), 609; Wilkinson v. Black, 80 Ala. 329.

⁴⁰ "Any reasonable objection, because of capacity, reputation, mode of dealing and transacting business, or of habits or morals, which could be made to the person from whom employment could be obtained, would afford a justification to the plaintiff for rejecting it when offered, or excuse him from not making exertion to secure it." Brickell, C. J., in Strauss v. Meertief, 64 Ala. 299, 38 Am. Rep. 8.

⁴¹ Birdsong v. Ellis, 62 Miss. 418. To same effect: Levin v. Standard Fashion Co., 4 N. Y. Supp. 867; Beymer v. McBride, 37 Iowa, 114; Squire

v. Wright, 1 Mo. App. 172; Bigelow v. Powder Co., 39 Hun (N. Y.), 599; Saunders v. Anderson, 2 Hill (S. C.), 486.

A servant who has been wrongfully dismissed and whose dismissal was accompanied by foul and abusive language is not bound to accept a subsequent offer from the same master to re-employ him. Crawford v. Tommy, [1906] Transv. L. R. S. C. 843.

⁴² Chisholm v. Preferred Assur. Co., 112 Mich. 50; People's Co-op. Ass'n v. Lloyd, 77 Ala. 387; Trawick v. Peoria St. Ry. Co., 68 Ill. App. 156; Howard v. Vaughan-Monnig Shoe Co., 82 Mo. App. 405; Wilson v. Kisri, 18 New Zealand, 807.

If the plaintiff was wrongfully discharged, defendant's subsequent request to him to return and go on with the employment cannot destroy the effect of the breach of the contract: it can only be considered upon the question of damages. Rottlesberger v. Hanley, — Iowa —, 136 N. W. 776. See also Youngberg v. Lamberton, 91 Minn. 100; Mitchell v. Toale, 25 S. C. 238, 60 Am. Rep. 502.

§ 1561. ——— Duty to take service of a different sort.—If, having exercised reasonable diligence to find other employment of the same sort, the agent fails to do so, may he then consider himself exonerated from all obligation to the employer, or would he then be required to seek and accept any other reasonable employment for which he may be fitted? Many of the cases state the rule as though the latter obligation were not imposed upon him.⁴³ But this obligation seems to be a reasonable one, in harmony with the principles which require effort on his part to refrain from idleness and to exercise reasonable care to minimize his loss, and a number of cases expressly impose it.⁴⁴ In any event, if he does accept other employment, his actual earnings in such other employment should be used in mitigation.⁴⁵

§ 1562. ——— Work for himself.—If having made a reasonable effort to find other employment but without success, the agent then does work for himself the question whether the principal is entitled to have the value of it deducted from the agent's claim, is in dispute,⁴⁶

⁴³ Fuchs v. Koerner, 107 N. Y. 529; Farrell v. School District, 98 Mich. 43; Holloway v. Talbot, 70 Ala. 389; McKinley v. Goodman, 67 Ill. App. 374; Wilkinson v. Black, 80 Ala. 329; Briscoe v. Litt, 19 N. Y. Misc. 5; Elbert v. Los Angeles Gas Co., 97 Cal. 244; Hinchcliffe v. Koontz, 121 Ind. 422, 16 Am. St. Rep. 403.

⁴⁴ Thus in Simon v. Allen, 76 Tex. 398, where the plaintiff had been employed as a clerk, the court said: "Plaintiff had the right to seek, for a reasonable time, the same character of employment that he had when he was discharged. If after a reasonable time it became evident that he could not procure employment as a clerk, it would have become his duty, in so far as it concerned his relations with his late employers, to seek other employment for which he was fitted."

So in Perry v. Simpson Waterproof Mfg. Co., 37 Conn. 520, the court, after referring to the employee's obligation to use ordinary diligence to find other employment, said: "Upon the same principle he has no right to insist upon employment in the same business or at the same price. If that is not to be had, he is bound to engage in other business, and if need be, at a less price."

In Maynard v. Royal Worcester Corset Co., 200 Mass. 1, the court speaks of "other employment reasonably adapted to his abilities."

⁴⁵ In Stevens v. Crane, 37 Mo. App. 487, the court held, in regard to this question, that the discharged servant's "duty to seek employment is confined to similar employment; his duty to account for compensation actually received extends to all employment."

⁴⁶ Harrington v. Gies, 45 Mich. 374, holds that it is not to be deducted. Huntington v. Ogdensburgh, etc., R. Co., 33 Howards Pr. (N. Y.) 416, holds the contrary.

but unless such work is merely casual or incidental, no good reason is obvious why it should not be deducted.⁴⁷ If the agent engages in some regular business, on his own account, the fair value of his time under all the circumstances ought certainly to be considered.⁴⁸

It has been suggested in several cases,⁴⁹ that the question of deducting earnings in other employment depends upon whether such other employment is consistent with the agent's being in readiness to take up the original employment again if he were called upon to do so. But this does not seem to be a sound distinction where the theory of constructive service does not prevail.

⁴⁷ See School Directors v. Birch, 93 Ill. App. 499; Stevens v. Crane, 37 Mo. App. 487.

⁴⁸ In Lee v. Hampton, 79 Miss. 321, where the plaintiff, after wrongful discharge, leased and operated a farm on his own account, the court said that "it was his bounden duty to use his best endeavors in its management, and whatever was a reasonable sum for his wages as such superintendent, should be deducted from the damages suffered in consequence of such breach of contract." But in Toplitz v. Ullman, 2 N. Y. Misc. 130, where the plaintiff after failing to find other employment, went into business for himself, and made but a small profit, it was held that, since the plaintiff took all the risk, the defendant was not entitled to the actual value of his services, but only to the amount he actually made.

This was followed in Richardson v. Hartmann, 68 Hun (N. Y.), 9.

But where the plaintiff, in the business of his own, did not make any profits, still the value of the business may have been appreciably increased, and this element the jury may regard in making their award. Kramer v. Wolf Cigar Stores, 99 Tex. 597.

Where a woman teacher wrongfully discharged, being unable after proper effort to find another position, tried to start a school of her own, which proved to be a financial failure and resulted in a loss, although she "used every effort within my power to make it a success," it was held that no deduction was to be made. Worthington v. Park Improvement Co., 100 Iowa, 39.

Where it appeared that after plaintiff's discharge he made his home for a time with his father, who resided upon a farm, and did some work there, it was held competent for him to show, that, though of age, he received no compensation for this work. Gwinn v. King, 107 Iowa, 207.

Earnings made after the expiration of the term are not to be considered. Hughes v. School District, 66 S. C. 259.

And where the plaintiff, by doing harder or different work, working longer hours, contributing capital, or otherwise doing what the original employment did not require, is enabled to earn more than the original contract rate the defendant is not entitled to the benefit of the excess. Evesson v. Ziegfeld, 22 Pa. Super. 79 (here the plaintiff, an actress, by playing about twice as many hours was enabled to earn nearly double the salary promised by defendant); Williams v. Chicago Coal Co., 60 Ill. 149.

⁴⁹ Gates v. School District, 57 Ark. 370, 38 Am. St. R. 249; Van Winkle

v. Satterfield, 58 Ark. 617, 23 L. R. A. 853.

What the agent may earn in another employment which he had the right to carry on, even if defendant had not broken his contract, is not to be deducted from plaintiff's damages.⁵⁰

§ 1563. — When right of action accrues.—The right of action, as has been already stated, accrues when the breach of contract occurs. Where the agent is wrongfully discharged after entering upon the performance of his agency, there can be no question, as has been seen, that he has then a cause of action for the breach.⁵¹

Where, however, before the time arrives for performance to begin and before the agent has entered upon it, the principal repudiates the contract and informs the agent that he will not permit him to undertake the performance of it when the performance is due, some question has arisen whether such repudiation may be treated as a present breach, or whether the agent must wait until the time for performance arrives and then tender his services. The weight of authority both in England and America, sustains the doctrine of a present breach in case of such repudiation.⁵²

§ 1564. — The theory of the decisions in this class of cases is, to adopt substantially the language of a learned judge, that there is a breach of the contract when the principal repudiates it and declares he will no longer be bound by it. The agent has an inchoate right to the performance of the bargain which becomes complete when the time for performance has arrived. In the meantime, he has a right to have the contract kept open as a subsisting and effective contract. Its unimpaired and unimpeached efficacy may be essential to his interests. His rights acquired under it may be dealt with in various ways for his benefit and advantage. Of all such advantages the

Where the employee after discharge obtained employment with another company on condition that he buy $5,000 of its stock which proved to be of no value, it was held, in computing damages for breach of his first contract, that this $5,000 was an expense incidental to his effort to seek employment, and that the loss occasioned by the decline of the stock could be reckoned with salary earned in the second employment to arrive at sum by which the plaintiff's prima facie damages should be mitigated. Development Co. v. King, 96 C. C. A. 139, 170 Fed. 923.

⁵⁰ For example, if an agent has a proper contract to represent two different automobile manufacturers, and one breaks his contract, the damages of the agent are not affected by what he earns under the other contract. Randall v. Peerless Motor Car Co., 212 Mass. 352.

⁵¹ See ante, § 1553.

⁵² Dugan v. Anderson, 36 Md. 567, 11 Am. Rep. 509; Howard v. Daly, 61 N. Y. 362, 19 Am. Rep. 285; Menage v. Rosenthal, 187 Mass. 470; Alderson v. Houston, 154 Cal. 1; Lake Shore, etc., Ry. Co. v. Richards, 152 Ill. 59, 30 L. R. A. 33; Hochster v. De la Tour, 2 E. & B. 678; Danube & Black Sea Ry. Co. v. Xenos, 13 Com. Bench (N. S.), 825.

repudiation of the contract by the principal, and the announcement that it never will be fulfilled, must, of course, deprive him. It is therefore quite right to hold that such an announcement amounts to a violation of the contract in omnibus, and that upon it, the agent, if he so elect, may at once treat it as a breach of the entire contract and bring his action accordingly. The contract having been thus broken by the principal, and treated as broken by the agent, performance at the appointed time becomes excluded, and the breach, by reason of the future non-performance, becomes virtually involved in the action as one of the consequences of the repudiation of the contract, and the eventual non-performance may therefore, by anticipation, be treated as a cause of action, and damages be assessed and recovered in respect of it, though the time for the performance may yet be remote. Such a course, it is said, must lead to the convenience of both parties, and though decisions ought not to be founded upon grounds of convenience alone, they yet tend strongly to support the view that such an action ought to be admitted and upheld. By acting on such a notice of the intention of the principal, the agent may in many cases avert, or at all events materially lessen, the injurious effects which would otherwise flow from the non-fulfillment of the contract; and in assessing the damages for breach of the performance, a jury will, of course, take into account whatever the agent has done or has had the means of doing, and, as a prudent man, ought in reason to have done, whereby his loss has been, or would have been, diminished.⁵³

§ 1565. No damages if agent acquiesces in discharge.—If the agent, though wrongfully discharged acquiesces in, and consents to, the termination of the agency, no damages can be recovered for it.⁵⁴ But in order to effect this result the evidence of acquiescence must be clear. The mere fact that the agent did not protest, or that he peaceably and quietly surrendered his trust, would not justify a claim of acquiescence.

2. Termination by Operation of Law.

§ 1566. No damages where agency terminated by death of the principal.—As has been seen, the death of the principal, by operation of law, revokes the authority, if not coupled with an interest.⁵⁵ Inasmuch, moreover, as a contract of employment between principal and ⁵³ Miller, J., in Dugan v. Anderson, Am. Dec. 564; Boyle v. Parker, 46 Vt. 36 Md. 567, 11 Am. Rep. 509. 343.

⁵⁴ Patnote v. Sanders, 41 Vt. 66, 98 ⁵⁵ See ante, § 652.

agent ordinarily involves personal considerations, and contemplates the continued existence of both principal and agent, the death of the principal will, where such personal considerations are involved, operate to dissolve the contract.⁵⁶ The agent in such a case is, of course, entitled to the compensation earned up to the time of the death, but he is afterwards entitled neither to future wages nor to damages for the termination of the agency.⁵⁷

§ 1567. — Joint principals—Partnership.—Where there are joint principals, the death of one will not dissolve the contract, unless it involves something that cannot be properly performed by the survivor.⁵⁸ Where a partnership is the principal, and one partner dies, the effect of such death upon contracts of employment is not entirely settled. The death of one partner, of course, ordinarily dissolves the partnership, and it has been said in several cases that it also operates to dissolve contracts of employment to which the firm was a party.⁵⁹

⁵⁶ See Lacy v. Getman, 119 N. Y. 109, 16 Am. St. R. 806, 6 L. R. A. 728; Yerrington v. Greene, 7 R. I. 589, 84 Am. Dec. 578.

Compare McDaniel v. Parks, 19 Ark. 671; Zinnell v. Bergdoll, 19 Pa. Super. 508; Pugh v. Baker, 127 N. C. 2.

In Lacy v. Getman, supra, it was said by Finch, J.: "The relation of master and servant is no longer bounded by its original limits. It has broadened with the advance of civilization until the law recognizes its existence in new areas of social and business life, and yields in many directions to the influence and necessities of its later surroundings. When, therefore, it is said generally, as the commentators mostly agree in saying, that the contract relations of principal and agent, and of master and servant, are dissolved by the death of either party, it is very certain that the statement must be limited to cases in which the relation may be deemed purely personal, and involves neither property rights nor independent action. Beyond that, a further limitation of the doctrine is asserted, which approaches very near to its utter destruction, and is claimed to be the result of modern adjudication. That limitation is that the rule applies only to the contract of the servant, and not to that of the master, and not at all, unless the service employed is that of skilled labor peculiar to the capacity and experience of the servant employed, and not the common possession of men in general; and it is proposed to adopt as a standard or test of the limitation an inquiry in each case whether the contract on the side of the master can be performed after his death by his representatives substantially, and in all its terms or requirements, or cannot be so performed without violence to some of its inherent elements."

See also generally as to the effect of the death of one party upon contracts. Note, 22 Am. St. Rep. 811.

⁵⁷ Yerrington v. Greene, 7 R. I. 589, 84 Am. Dec. 578.

⁵⁸ See Martin v. Hunt, 1 Allen (Mass.), 418.

⁵⁹ Griggs v. Swift, 82 Ga. 392, 5 L. R. A. 405, 14 Am. St. Rep. 176; Greenburg v. Early, 4 N. Y. Misc. 99, 30 Abbott's N. C. 300; Hoey v. MacEwan, 5 Ct. of Sess. 3rd Ser., 814; Mason v. Secor, 76 Hun (N. Y.), 178; Burnet v. Hope, 9 Ont. 10.

See also Tasker v. Shepherd, 6 H. & N. 575.

Compare Brace v. Calder, [1895] 2 Q. B. 253.

But this does not seem to be a necessary result, and it has been held that if, in fact, the firm actually goes on and continues to receive the service, the contract of employment is not dissolved.⁶⁰

§ 1568. Same rule where agency terminated by insanity of the principal.—The same rules would probably be applied in the case of the after-occurring insanity of the principal. Such insanity, as has been seen,⁶¹ will ordinarily terminate or suspend the authority of the agent, and wherever the contract involved personal considerations and clearly contemplated the continued mental ability and business capacity of the principal, no reason is apparent why a known and complete disability of this sort should not ordinarily affect the contract like the principal's death. If the contract did not involve personal considerations, and especially where its performance can be continued by and with the representatives of the insane principal, a different rule would apply.⁶²

§ 1569. Rule where agency terminated by bankruptcy of principal.—While, as has been seen,⁶³ the bankruptcy of the principal ordinarily operates to terminate the authority of a business agent, the fact that the principal becomes bankrupt furnishes usually no defense to an action brought by an agent, employed for a definite time, to recover damages for a refusal or neglect of the principal to employ him after the bankruptcy.⁶⁴

It has been held that where the principal is a corporation, and is prevented from continuing business by the action of the state, which enjoins the further prosecution of the business and causes a receiver to be appointed, no damages can be recovered by an agent employed for an unexpired period, who is thus prevented from continuing his performance.⁶⁵ But this doctrine would not apply to the voluntary ⁶⁰ Hughes v. Gross, 166 Mass. 61, 55 Am. St. Rep. 375, 32 L. R. A. 620.

See also Fereira v. Sayres, 5 Watts & S. 210, 40 Am. Dec. 496; Bank v. Vanderhorst, 32 N. Y. 553; Johnson v. Judge, 16 Pa. Super. 137.

⁶¹ See ante, § 677.

⁶² Sands v. Potter, 165 Ill. 397, 56 Am. St. Rep. 253.

⁶³ See ante, § 687.

⁶⁴ Lewis v. Atlas Mutual Life Ins. Co., 61 Mo. 534; Vanuxem v. Bostwick (Pa.), 7 Atl. 598; Hassenfus v. Phila. Packing Co., 15 Pa. Co. Ct. 650; In re Silverman, 101 Fed. 219.

See also Couturie v. Roensch (Tex. Civ. App.), 134 S. W. 413.

⁶⁵ People v. Globe Mut. Life Ins. Co., 91 N. Y. 174. The court said, in this case, that the effect of the injunction was to make it unlawful for either principal or agent to continue performance. It was as much illegal for the agent to perform or tender performance, as for the principal to permit or require him to perform. The agent could not, therefore, properly allege that he had himself been legally ready or able to perform. Approved, followed in Malcomson v. Wappoo Mills, 88 Fed. 680; Griffith v. Blackwater Boom Co., 46 W. Va. 56.

But cf. Rosenbaum v. Credit System Co., 61 N. J. Law, 543, where dissolution of a corporation which was the principal,⁶⁶ nor, doubtless, to a case wherein the corporation was itself culpably responsible for the intervention of the state.⁶⁷

§ 1570. Rule where agency terminated by death of the agent.—Where the agency is terminated before full performance, by the death of the agent, his representatives are entitled to recover the value of his services already rendered. And even in the case of an entire contract for the performance of a given service, the representatives of the deceased agent may recover the value of the services rendered, not exceeding the price named in the contract.⁶⁸

§ 1571. Rule where agency terminated by insanity of the agent.—Where the agency is terminated by the agent's insanity, the question of his rights and liabilities would be determined by the same principles which govern in the case of his sickness or other incapacity,—a subject considered in the following section.

§ 1572. How when agency terminated by agent's sickness or incapacity.—Where the agency is terminated by the sickness or other physical disability of the agent, which incapacitates him from completing the performance of his undertaking, he will not be liable for not performing,⁶⁹ and, on the other hand, will be entitled to recover the reasonable value of his services up to the time of his incapacity. And even though the contract be entire to perform a stipulated service for a stipulated price, so that, under other circumstances, full performance would ordinarily be considered a condition precedent to the right to recover compensation, yet if the agent be disabled by sickness or other act of God from accomplishing a full performance, he is entitled to recover the reasonable value of the services actually rendered, much of the reasoning in People v. Globe Mutual Life Ins. Co., supra, was disapproved.

⁶⁶ Schleider v. Dielman, 44 La. Ann. 462; Tiffin Glass Co. v. Stoebr, 54 Ohio St. 157; Macgregor v. Union L. Ins. Co., 57 C. C. A. 613, 121 Fed. 493.

Contra, so far as the compensation was to consist of commissions on business which might be done: there is no implied agreement to do business during the period. Pellet v. Manufacturers' Ins. Co., 43 C. C. A. 669, 104 Fed. 502; In re English, etc., Ins. Co., 5 Ch. App. 737.

No liability where employment was not for any prescribed time. Moore

v. Security, etc., Ins. Co., 93 C. C. A. 652, 168 Fed. 496.

⁶⁷ People v. Globe Mutual Life Ins. Co., 91 N. Y. 174; Rosenbaum v. Credit System Co., 61 N. J. Law, 543.

⁶⁸ Persons v. McKibben, 5 Ind. 261, 61 Am. Dec. 85; Wolfe v. Howes, 20 N. Y. 197, 75 Am. Dec. 388; Clark v. Gilbert, 26 N. Y. 279, 84 Am. Dec. 189.

⁶⁹ Spalding v. Rosa, 71 N. Y. 40, 27 Am. Rep. 7; Wolfe v. Howes, 20 N. Y. 197, 75 Am. Dec. 388; Robinson v. Davison, L. R., 6 Exch. 269; Boast v. Firth, L. R., 4 C. P. 1. In Robinson v. Davison, the employe, a pianist, was held liable for not giving the

not exceeding the contract price.⁷⁰ If, however, the sickness was such that it could have been anticipated at the time the service was undertaken, this rule would not apply.⁷¹

3. Abandonment by Agent.

§ 1573. 1. When abandonment lawful.—Where the agency is created to endure for an indefinite period, it is, as has been seen, ordinarily held to be an agency at will merely and it may be lawfully terminated by either party at his will at any time.⁷² Analogous to this is the somewhat common arrangement that the relation shall continue so long as each of the parties or either of the parties, is satisfied. In the event of dissatisfaction, the party having the option may lawfully terminate the agency upon that ground.⁷³ In cases of this nature there being no agreement to continue the agency for a definite time, no forfeiture can result from its termination by the party having the right. The agent, therefore, would be entitled to recover the stipulated compensation for the services rendered without diminution on the ground of the termination of the agency.

The same result ensues, also, in those cases in which the agency, though primarily for a definite time, may, by the terms of the contract creating it, be terminated upon the happening of a given event, or the arising of a certain contingency. If terminated in the manner and employer timely notice of the disability so that he might make other arrangements.

⁷⁰ Fuller v. Brown, 11 Mete. (Mass.) 440; Ryan v. Dayton, 25 Conn. 188, 65 Am. Dec. 560; Green v. Gilbert, 21 Wis. 395; Hillyard v. Crabtree, 11 Tex. 264, 62 Am. Dec. 475; Fenton v. Clark, 11 Vt. 557; Seaver v. Morse, 20 Vt. 620; Coe v. Smith, 4 Ind. 79, 58 Am. Dec. 618; Lakeman v. Pollard, 43 Me. 463, 69 Am. Dec. 77; Fahy v. North, 19 Barb. (N. Y.) 341.

In Fuller v. Brown, supra, a contract to give notice before quitting was held to apply only to voluntary abandonment and not to quitting because of illness.

⁷¹ Jennings v. Lyons, 39 Wis. 553, 20 Am. Rep. 57. (Absence during confinement of a female employee.) Compare Davies v. District Council, 27 T. L. R. 543.

⁷² DeBriar v. Minturn, 1 Cal. 453; Franklin Mining Co. v. Harris, 24 Mich. 115; Palmer v. Marquette, etc., Co., 32 Mich. 274; Tatterson v. Suffolk Mfg. Co., 106 Mass. 56; Harper v. Hassard, 113 Mass. 187; Peacock v. Cummings, 46 Pa. 434.

⁷³ See Beissel v. Vermillion Farmers' Elev. Co., 102 Minn. 229, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 403, (with Note); Spring v. Ansonia Clock Co., 24 Hun (N. Y.), 175; Rossiter v. Cooper, 23 Vt. 522.

Where the contract gives the principal the power to terminate it in case, for certain stated reasons, he is dissatisfied, and expressly makes him the sole judge as to the existence of the reasons, this does not give him an arbitrary right of discharge, but only for reasons actually existing or in fact found. Winship v. Base Ball Association, 78 Me. 571.

upon the event specified, the agent may recover full compensation for the services rendered.⁷⁴

So though employed for a definite time, if the conduct of the principal is such as to justify the agent in abandoning the service, the agent will be entitled to recover the value of his services.⁷⁵

§ 1574. 2. When abandonment wrongful.—But where, on the other hand, the agent has agreed that he will continue to act for a definite period; or that he will fully perform a given undertaking; or that he will terminate the relation only upon the happening of a certain event or the arising of a certain contingency; or that he will not terminate it in any case without giving a specified notice; and he does terminate it in violation of this agreement, without good cause, the termination in the sense of which we have spoken, as being a breach of his contract, must be regarded as wrongful.⁷⁶ True, as has been seen,⁷⁷ he has the power to terminate it. The law will not compel him to continue performance in accordance with his agreement. But under his contract, his right to terminate is suspended and if he insists upon exercising his power, he must answer for the broken contract.⁷⁸

§ 1575. Entire and severable contracts—Right to compensation.—The question of the right to recover compensation for services rendered in part performance of an undertaking to act for a given period, or to accomplish a given object, but which has been abandoned by the agent before full performance, is one of the most vexatious and difficult ones in the law. It is certain that the parties may expressly agree that no compensation shall be paid unless the undertaking is performed, and in such a case if the agent abandons the undertaking, without fault of the principal, before full performance, he cannot recover. Full performance is here expressly made a condition precedent to the right to compensation.⁷⁹

But the most difficult question arises where the agreement is not thus express and it becomes necessary to determine whether under all the facts and circumstances of a given case full performance was intended by the parties to be a condition precedent. In determining this question it is important to ascertain whether the contract is entire or severable. As has been well said,⁸⁰ no precise rules can be given ⁷⁴ Booth v. Ratcliffe, 107 N. C. 6.

⁷⁵ Bishop v. Ranney, 59 Vt. 316;
Patterson v. Gage, 23 Vt. 558, 56 Am.
Dec. 96; Warner v. Smith, 8 Conn. 14.

⁷⁶ See ante, § 641.

⁷⁷ See ante, § 641.

⁷⁸ Word v. Winder, 16 La. Ann. 111.

⁷⁹ See ante, § 1532.

⁸⁰ Parsons on Contracts, 7th Ed.
Vol. 2, p. *517.

See also the discussion in Clark v.
West, 137 N. Y. App. Div. 23, affirmed

by which this question in a given case may be settled. Like most other questions of construction it depends upon the intention of the parties, and this must be discovered in each case by considering the language employed and the subject-matter of the contract. If the part to be performed by one party consists of several distinct and separate items, and the price to be paid by the other is apportioned to each item to be performed or is left to be implied by law, such a contract will generally be held to be severable. And the same rule holds where the price to be paid is clearly and distinctly apportioned to different parts of what is to be performed, although the latter is in its nature single and entire. But if on the other hand, the consideration to be paid is entire and single, the contract must be held to be entire, although the subject of the contract may consist of several distinct and wholly independent items.

§ 1576. — In accordance with this rule a contract by which A agrees to serve B for an indefinite time at a given sum per month, would be held to be severable.⁸¹ So an agreement by A to serve B for one year at a certain sum per month to be paid at the expiration of each month, though an entire contract, is, by its terms, so far severable that A would have a right of action for the stipulated sum at the expiration of each month.⁸² But a contract by A to serve B for one year for a given sum is plainly entire.⁸³ And so a contract by A to serve B for one year for a given sum per month is held to be entire.⁸⁴ In both cases, no time for payment being specified, the law

"without passing upon the question whether the contract was entire or severable;" no opinion. 201 N. Y. 569.

⁸¹ Idem, p. *521. A contract at so much per week "for the first year" no definite time being stated, is a weekly and not a yearly hiring. Robertson v. Jenner, 15 L. T. (N. S.) 514.

⁸² See Capron v. Strout, 11 Nev. 304; Thayer v. Wadsworth, 19 Pick. (Mass.) 349; Walsh v. New York & Ky. Co., 88 N. Y. App. Div. 477; Mousseau v. Tone, 6 W. L. R. (Regina) 117.

A contract for a year with weekly payments is still a yearly hiring unless rebutted by evidence to the contrary. Noble v. Gunn, 16 Ont. W. R. 504; Davis v. Marshall, 4 L. T. (N. S.) 216.

⁸³ Stark v. Parker, 2 Pick. (Mass.) 267, 13 Am. Dec. 425. (In this case the party agreed to work for one year for $120.) Eldridge v. Rowe, 2 Gilm. (Ill.) 91, 43 Am. Dec. 41; Miller v. Goddard, 34 Me. 102, 56 Am. Dec. 638; Knox v. Munro, 13 Manitoba Rep. 16. But see Parcell v. McComber, 11 Neb. 209, 38 Am. Rep. 366, re-reported in note to 35 Am. Rep. 476.

⁸⁴ Thus a contract to work "for eight months for $104, or $13 a month," is entire. Reab v. Moor, 19 Johns. (N. Y.) 337. So a contract to work "seven months at $12 per month," was held to be an entire contract to pay $84, at the end of the seven months and not a contract to pay $12, at the end of each month. Davis v. Maxwell, 12 Metc. (Mass.)

presumes that it was to be paid only when the year's service was performed.⁸⁵

So a contract to perform a given duty for a given sum would be entire,⁸⁶ but a contract to perform the same duty for a given sum to be paid in installments as the performance progressed would be severable so far as the right to recover the several installments is concerned.⁸⁷

Where the compensation was thus payable in installments, but is not in fact paid, and the agent subsequently makes default in a later installment period, such default will not affect his right to recover previous installments earned except as the amount may be reduced by proper recoupment or counterclaim of damages for the breach in the last period.⁸⁸

§ 1577. Full performance of entire contract usually required.—Where the contract was thus found to be entire, it was early established as the doctrine of the common law that full performance of it was a condition precedent to the right to recover the stipulated compensation.⁸⁹ If the agent should voluntarily fail, though by a single day, to complete the designated term, he could recover nothing upon the contract for all the services previously rendered, because the contract had not been fully performed on his part. Neither could a recovery be had upon the basis of an implied contract to pay for the services

286. See also Nichols v. Coolahan, 10 Metc. (Mass.) 449; Eldridge v. Rowe, supra; Rex v. Birdbrooke, 4 T. R. 245; Diefenback v. Stark, 56 Wis. 462, 43 Am. Rep. 719; Jennings v. Lyons, 39 Wis. 553, 20 Am. Rep. 57. A contract with a teacher to teach ten months at a given sum per month is entire. Wilson v. Board of Education, 63 Mo. 137.

In an action for wages a contract to employ and pay "$200 per month for one year" was held to be a contract for a year with wages payable monthly, but not so far entire that performance for a year was a condition precedent to the employee's right to recover anything. Matthews v. Jenkins, 80 Va. 463; while in an action for wrongful discharge a contract for one year with wages payable monthly was held to be an entire contract for a year by the employer. Larkin v. Hecksher, 51 N. J. L. 133, 3 L. R. A. 137. See also Beach v. Mullin, 34 N. J. L. 343.

⁸⁵ Davis v. Maxwell, 12 Metc. (Mass.) 286.

⁸⁶ Reab v. Moor, 19 Johns. (N. Y.) 337.

A contract to teach nine months for a fixed sum, is entire. Hill v. Balkcom, 79 Ga. 444.

⁸⁷ Woods v. Russell, 5 B. & Ald. 942; Clarke v. Spence, 4 A. & E. 448; Laidler v. Burlinson, 2 M. & W. 602; Cunningham v. Morrell, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 203, 6 Am. Dec. 332.

⁸⁸ Walsh v. New York & Ky. Co., 88 N. Y. App. Div. 477.

⁸⁹ Spain v. Arnott, 2 Stark. 256; Cutter v. Powell, 6 T. R. 320; Ellis v. Hamlen, 3 Taunt. 51; Sinclair v. Bowles, 9 B. & C. 92; Waddington v. Oliver, 2 B. & P. (N. R.) 61; Knox v. Munro, 13 Manitoba, 16.

actually rendered, because the existence of the express contract left no room for an implied one. Expressum facit cessare tacitum was the maxim applied.⁹⁰ And this rule has been adopted and still prevails in the majority of the American states.⁹¹

§ 1578. The more liberal rule—Britton v. Turner.—This rule, however, while perhaps strictly and severely just, as a principle of retributive justice has not met with universal approval, and a strong tendency has been manifested in many cases to mitigate its severity by the application of a more liberal and equitable principle, and to allow the agent, though in default, to recover the actual value of his services to the principal.

The principles adopted in such cases are most fully enunciated in the celebrated case of Britton v. Turner,⁹² decided by the supreme court of New Hampshire in 1834.

Concisely stated, the doctrine of this case may be said to be that, where a party fails to comply substantially with his agreement, he can not, unless it is apportionable, sue or recover upon the agreement at all. But where anything has been done from which the other party has received substantial benefit and which he has appropriated, a recov-⁹⁰ Stark v. Parker, 2 Pick. (Mass.) 267, 13 Am. Dec. 425.

⁹¹ Lantry v. Parks, 8 Cow. (N. Y.) 63; Smith v. Brady, 17 N. Y. 173, 72 Am. Dec. 442; Olmstead v. Beale, 19 Pick. (Mass.) 528; Thayer v. Wadsworth, Id. 349; Davis v. Maxwell, 12 Metc. (Mass.) 290; Stark v. Parker, 2 Pick. (Mass.) 267, 13 Am. Dec. 425; Henson v. Hampton, 32 Mo. 408; Posey v. Garth, 7 Mo. 96, 37 Am. Dec. 183; Caldwell v. Dickson, 17 Mo. 575; Schnerr v. Lemp, 19 Mo. 40; Brown v. Fitch, 33 N. J. L. 418; Natalizzio v. Valentino, 71 N. J. L. 500; Bragg v. Bradford, 33 Vt. 35; Patnote v. Sanders, 41 Vt. 66, 98 Am. Dec. 564; Ripley v. Chipman, 13 Vt. 268; Martin v. Schoenberger, 8 W. & S. (Penn.) 367; Alexander v. Hoffman, 5 Id. 382; Dunn v. Moore, 16 Ill. 151; Eldridge v. Rowe, 2 Gilm. (Ill.) 91, 43 Am. Dec. 41; American Pub. House v. Wilson, 63 Ill. App. 413; Hofstetter v. Gash, 104 Ill. App. 455; Mack v. Bragg, 30 Vt. 571; Clark v. School District, 29 Vt. 217; De Camp v. Stevens, 4 Blackf. (Ind.) 24; Hutch- inson v. Wetmore, 2 Cal. 310, 56 Am. Dec. 337; Hogan v. Titlow, 14 Cal. 73; Miller v. Goddard, 34 Me. 102, 56 Am. Dec. 638; Green v. Gilbert, 21 Wis. 395; Evans v. Bennett, 7 Wis. 404; Henderson v. Stiles, 14 Ga. 135; Cody v. Raynaud, 1 Col. 272; Givhan v. Dailey, 4 Ala. 336; Whitley v. Murray, 34 Ala. 155; Abernathy v. Black, 2 Cold. (Tenn.) 314; Larkin v. Buck, 11 Ohio St. 561; Halloway v. Lacy, 4 Humph. (Tenn.) 468; Clark v. Gilbert, 26 N. Y. 279, 84 Am. Dec. 189; Holmes v. Stummel, 24 Ill. 370; Jewell v. Thompson, 2 Litt. (Ky.) 52; Morford v. Ambrose, 3 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 688; Preston v. American Linen Co., 119 Mass. 400; Byrd v. Boyd, 4 McCord (S. C.), 246, 17 Am. Dec. 740; Cox v. Adams, 1 N. & McC. (S. C.) 284; Steamboat Co. v. Wilkins, 8 Vt. 54; Sherman v. Transportation Co., 31 Vt. 162; Dover v. Plemmons, 10 Ired. (N. C.) L. 23; Angle v. Hanna, 22 Ill. 429, 74 Am. Dec. 161.

⁹² 6 New Hampshire, 481, 26 Am. Dec. 713.

ery may be had upon a quantum meruit, based upon that benefit. The basis of this recovery is not the original contract, but a new implied agreement deducible from the delivery and acceptance of some valuable service or thing. The defaulting plaintiff can in no case recover more than the contract price, and he cannot recover that if his work is not reasonably worth it, or if, by paying it, the rest of the work will cost the defendant more than if the whole had been completed under the contract.

Notwithstanding much opposition, this rule has gradually worked its way into considerable judicial favor and is now adopted and enforced in Indiana,⁹³ Iowa,⁹⁴ Kansas,⁹⁵ Kentucky,⁹⁶ Michigan,⁹⁷ Missouri,⁹⁸ Nebraska,⁹⁹ North Carolina¹ and Texas.² After some leaning in favor of it, it has been finally denied in Mississippi,³ Oregon⁴ and Wisconsin.⁵

§ 1579. Recovery for services under contract unenforceable under Statute of Frauds.—Where services have been rendered under a con-

⁹³ Coe v. Smith, 4 Ind. 82, 58 Am. Dec. 618; Ricks v. Yates, 5 Ind. 115.

⁹⁴ Pixler v. Nichols, 8 Iowa, 106, 74 Am. Dec. 298; McCay v. Hedge, 18 Id. 66; McAfferty v. Hale, 24 Id. 356; Byerlee v. Mendell, 39 Id. 382; Wolf v. Gerr, 43 Id. 339. In McClay v. Hedge. Judge Dillon says: "This question was settled in this State by the case of Pixler v. Nichols, 8 Iowa, 106, which distinctly recognized and expressly followed Britton v. Turner, 6 N. H. 481, 26 Am. Dec. 713. That celebrated case has been criticised, doubted, and denied to be sound. It is frequently said to be good equity but bad law; yet its principles are gradually winning their way into professional and judicial favor. It is bottomed on justice and is right upon principle, however it may be upon the technical and more illiberal rules of the common law as found in the older cases."

⁹⁵ Duncan v. Baker, 21 Kan. 99; also reported in note to 31 Am. Rep. at p. 102.

⁹⁶ Apparently, see Foster v. Watson, 55 Ky. (16 B. Monroe) 377.

⁹⁷ Allen v. McKibben, 5 Mich. 449.

⁹⁸ Lee v. Ashbrook, 14 Mo. 378, 55 Am. Dec. 110; Downey v. Burke, 23

Mo. 228; Lowe v. Sinklear, 27 Mo. 308. But the application of the rule is confined to building and similar contracts, and does not extend to contracts for personal service. Earp v. Tyler, 73 Mo. 617; Banse v. Tate, 62 Mo. App. 150; Paul v. Minneapolis Thresher Co., 87 Mo. App. 647.

⁹⁹ Parcell v. McComber, 11 Neb. 209, 38 Am. Rep. 366; also reported in note to 35 Am. Rep. 476.

¹ Apparently, see Chamblee v. Baker, 95 N. C. 98.

² Riggs v. Horde, 25 Tex. Supp. 456, 78 Am. Dec. 584; Carroll v. Welch, 26 Tex. 147.

³ Timberlake v. Thayer, 71 Miss. 279, 24 L. R. A. 231.

⁴ Steeple v. Newton, 7 Ore. 110, 33 Am. Rep. 705.

⁵ Diefenback v. Stark, 56 Wis. 462, 43 Am. Rep. 719. But in Hildebrand v. Amer. Fine Art Co., 109 Wis. 171, 53 L. R. A. 826, the servant was allowed to recover for services actually rendered, he being justifiably discharged, the court distinguishing the case of the servant who voluntarily abandons his employment, when he is not allowed to recover, and the case where he gives cause for his discharge, when he may recover.

tract not enforceable under the Statute of Frauds, as, for example, an oral contract not to be performed within one year, no recovery can be had upon the contract, but, where the employer has made default in performance at least, the employee may recover upon an implied contract for the reasonable value of the services so rendered.⁶ Whether such a recovery may be had where the employee himself is the one who makes default and abandons performance is not entirely agreed upon by the authorities. It is held in several cases that the employer can base no defence upon the non-performance of a contract which he could not have affirmatively enforced, and that therefore the employee may recover quantum meruit, unaffected by the fact that he has not performed the contract under which the service was begun.⁷ A few cases hold that the employee who voluntarily fails to perform the contract, though unenforceable, may not recover anything—the oral contract is not void and the law will not imply a new contract in the face of the other one.⁸

Where the employee fails to perform the oral contract because of illness, the courts which would not allow a recovery where he voluntarily abandons the service permit a recovery in this event.⁹

§ 1580. Brief absences as abandonment.—The question of what shall be deemed to be an abandonment of the service, is one to be determined by the facts and circumstances of each case. There are unlingame v. Burlingame, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 92; Rosepaugh v. Vredenburgh, 16 Hun (N. Y.), 60; Carter v. Brown, 3 S. C. 298; Stevens v. Lee, 70 Tex. 279; McCrowell v. Burson, 79 Va. 290; Miller v. Wisener, 45 W. Va. 59; Salb v. Campbell, 65 Wis. 405; Koch v. Williams, 82 Wis. 186.

⁶ In the following cases where the defendant had refused to perform according to the tenor of the contract within the statute of frauds the plaintiff was allowed to recover on quantum meruit for services rendered. Sims v. McEwen, 27 Ala. 184; Patten v. Hicks, 43 Cal. 509; Mills v. Joiner, 20 Fla. 479; William Butcher Steel Works v. Atkinson, 68 Ill. 421, 86 Am. Rep. 560; Frazer v. Howe, 106 Ill. 563; Wallace v. Long, 105 Ind. 522, 55 Am. Rep. 222; Bonnon v. Urton, 3 Green (Iowa), 228; Wonsettler v. Lee, 40 Kan. 367; Myers v. Korb, 21 Ky. L. R. 163, 50 S. W. 1108; Lap- ham v. Osborne, 20 Nev. 168; Ham v. Goodrich, 37 N. H. 185; Emery v. Smith, 46 N. H. 151; McElroy v. Ludlum, 32 N. J. E. 828; Buckingham v. Ludlum, 37 N. J. E. 137; Eaton v. Eaton, 35 N. J. L. 290; Jones v. Hay, 52 Barb. (N. Y.) 501; Springer v. Bien, 16 Daly (N. Y.), 275; Bur-

⁷ See Comes v. Lamson, 16 Conn. 246; Clark v. Terry, 25 Conn. 395; Bernier v. Cabot Mfg. Co., 71 Me. 506, 36 Am. Rep. 343; Freeman v. Foss, 145 Mass. 361, 1 Am. St. Rep. 467; Crawford v. Parsons, 18 N. H. 293; Hartwell v. Young, 67 Hun (N. Y.), 472.

⁸ See Swanzy v. Moore, 22 Ill. 63, 74 Am. Dec. 134; Kruger v. Leppel, 42 Minn. 6; Mack v. Bragg, 30 Vt. 571; Collins v. Smith, 11 Ont. W. R. 350.

⁹ La Du-King Mfg. Co. v. La Du, 36 Minn. 473.

doubtedly cases in which instant and constant attention and care are required, where any absence from the post of duty might occasion serious if not irreparable loss. In such cases a wilful absence of an hour might be deemed to be an abandonment or furnish good cause for the dismissal of the agent. But in other cases an absence for a day or more might result in no loss and ought reasonably to be considered neither ground for dismissal nor an abandonment of the service.¹⁰ The nature of the employment, the necessities of the case, the probability of loss, the reason of the absence, are all to be taken into consideration, and it is for the jury to say, under all of the circumstances, whether there was an abandonment in fact, or whether the principal was justified in treating it as such.¹¹ Thus where the foreman of a fruit package factory, employed for a year, was absent upon necessary and reasonable business for less than a day, his absence involving no serious loss, it was held that this was neither an abandonment of the service nor a good ground for his dismissal;¹² so in another case, the absence of a school teacher for four days, it not appearing that there was any serious loss occasioned, or that the business of the school had been impeded a single hour thereby, was held to be not a sufficient reason for a discharge.¹³ On the other hand, the absence of a plantation overseer for a single day was held to be a sufficient reason for his dismissal, it appearing that the absence was for the purpose of provoking a discharge in order to create a cause of action.¹⁴

§ 1581. Condonation of abandonment.—Even if the agent has been absent without authority, yet if the principal subsequently receive him back and permit him to continue the performance with no notice that a forfeiture has been incurred, or would be insisted upon, a condonation will be presumed. It is certainly equitable and in accordance with well established principles, to hold that where an em-

¹⁰ See cases cited in following notes. See also Wood, Master & Servant, Second Ed., p. 219.

¹¹ Shaver v. Ingham, 58 Mich. 649, 55 Am. Rep. 712; Lakeman v. Pollard, 43 Me. 463, 69 Am. Dec. 77; Partington v. Wamsutta Mills, 110 Mass. 467; Heber v. United States Flax Mfg. Co., 13 R. I. 303; Naylor v. Fall River Iron Works, 118 Mass. 317.

See also McCormack v. Henderson, 100 Mo. App. 647; Fisher v. Monroe, 11 N. Y. Supp. 207.

¹² Shaver v. Ingham, supra. In Shoemaker v. Acker, 116 Cal. 239, the manager of a fruit farm who had agreed to "devote his whole time and attention" to it, occasionally, when no work was pressing, and no harm resulted, would absent himself from Saturday until Monday. Held, no ground for discharging him.

¹³ Fillieul v. Armstrong, 7 Ad. & El. 557.

¹⁴ Ford v. Danks, 16 La. Ann. 119. See Edwards v. Levy, 2 Fost. & Fin. 94; Wright v. Gihon, 3 C. & P. 583.

ployee for a fixed period, without any fault of the employer, absents himself for a short time, and then the employer, with knowledge of the facts, receives him back into his service without objection, and retains him until the termination of the contract, he thereby waives the right to declare the contract forfeited as to the services actually rendered.¹⁵

§ 1582. What will excuse abandonment—Sickness—Epidemic—Physical violence.—Where sickness or other physical incapacity which could not be foreseen, renders the temporary or permanent cessation from service imperative, the agent cannot be deemed to have voluntarily abandoned the service.¹⁶ Such misfortunes are classed among other acts of God for which the individual cannot be held responsible. So an agent is under no obligation to imperil his life by remaining at his post in the vicinity of a prevailing epidemic so dangerous in its character as to justify a man of ordinary care and prudence in refusing to remain, nor does it make any difference that subsequent developments demonstrate that he was actually in no danger.¹⁷ And the same thing is doubtless true of a threatened physical ¹⁵ Bast v. Byrne, 51 Wis. 531. 37 Am. Rep. 841; Ridgway v. Hungerford Market Co., 3 Ad. & El. 171; Prentiss v. Ledyard, 28 Wis. 131; McGrath v. Bell, 33 N. Y. Super. 195. In Bast v. Byrne the agent agreed to work a year for a fixed price. He worked up to the end of the year but was absent at different times, nine days and a half in all, but he was held entitled to full pay.

Where an employee hired for a year, in November, quit in the following June, and about a week later wrote to his employer demanding payment for work done, and the employer replied that he "would not pay him any more until the year of the hiring had expired" he was held to have assented to the plaintiff's leaving and must pay him wages for the time he worked. "An offer to pay for services performed at the contract price, in case the laborer has left the employer's service, is a waiver of the forfeiture of the wages, if there was one." Merrill v. Fish, 68 Vt. 475.

To voluntarily keep in the service an employee, after he had been so intoxicated that he might have been properly discharged, was held to be a condonation of that act where he was subsequently discharged for another reason. Dunkell v. Simons, 5 N. Y. Supp. 417.

See also, Daniell v. Boston, etc., R. R., 184 Mass. 337; Tickler v. Andrae Mfg. Co., 95 Wis. 352; Nichols & Shepard Co. v. Bachant, 45 Ill. App. 497.

¹⁶ Lakeman v. Pollard, 43 Me. 463, 69 Am. Dec. 77; Jennings v. Lyons, 39 Wis. 557, 20 Am. Rep. 57; Ryan v. Dayton, 25 Conn. 188, 65 Am. Dec. 560; Greene v. Linton, 7 Port. (Ala.) 133, 31 Am. Dec. 707; Wolfe v. Howes, 20 N. Y. 197, 75 Am. Dec. 388; Dickey v. Linscott, 20 Me. 453, 37 Am. Dec. 66; Leopold v. Salkey, 89 Ill. 412, 31 Am. Rep. 93; Harrington v. Fall River Iron Works, 119 Mass. 82; Callahan v. Shotwell, 60 Mo. 398; Hubbard v. Belden, 27 Vt. 645; Smith v. Hill, 13 Ark. 173; Hunter v. Waldron, 7 Ala. 753; Moulton v. Trask, 9 Metc. (Mass.) 577; Parker v. Macomber, 17 R. I. 674, 16 L. R. A. 858; McClellan v. Harris, 7 S. Dak. 447.

¹⁷ Lakeman v. Pollard, supra.

injury.¹⁸ The propriety of his conduct is for the jury to determine from the facts as they were presented to him.

§ 1583. — Recovery for services actually rendered.—An agent therefore who is thus compelled by a vis major to suspend or discontinue the service, although undertaken for a definite time by an entire contract, may recover upon a quantum meruit for the value of the services actually performed.¹⁹

§ 1584. — Recovery of wages during illness.—Where, though the agent employed in a general or continuing service is unable, on account of sickness, to render the agreed service, for a temporary interval during a stated period, he does not abandon the service and the principal does not terminate it, the question of his right to compensation for the period of his illness is not free from doubt. As is said in one case, "There is a singular dearth of clear authority respecting the effect of the disability of an employee arising from illness upon the right to wages;" but while the English and some American cases seem in general to uphold his right to compensation,²⁰ the tendency of the American cases seems to be to deny it.

¹⁸ Walsh v. Fisher, 102 Wis. 172, 72 Am. St. Rep. 865, 43 L. R. A. 810.

¹⁹ Lakeman v. Pollard, supra; Ryan v. Dayton, supra; Greene v. Linton, supra; Wolfe v. Howes, supra; Walsh v. Fisher, supra.

²⁰ K— v. Raschen, 38 L. T. Rep. N. S. 38; Patten v. Wood, 51 J. P. 549; Carr v. Hadrill, 39 J. P. 246; Cuckson v. Stones, 1 E. & E. 248; Mott v. Baxter, 13 Colo. App. 63; Reiter v. Standard Scale Co., 141 Ill. App. 427, aff'd, 237 Ill. 374 (though here he performed some service while ill at home); Miller v. Gidiere, 36 La. Ann. 201.

In K— v. Raschen, supra, this was held to be true even though the disease was one attributable to his own imprudence. Same: McDougal v. Van Allen Co., 19 Ont. L. R. 351.

But contra, see Adlets v. Progressive Shoe Co., 84 Mo. App. 288, where a salesman employed at so much per week was confined to a hospital for about four months. Myers v. Sieradzki, [1910] Transv. L. R. S. C. 869, where a saleswoman was absent six weeks out of a period of two months.

In MacFarlane v. Allan-Pfeiffer Chem. Co., 59 Wash. 154, Ann. Cas.

1912 A. 1180, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 314, where a traveling salesman, employed by the month, lost about ten days out of a month by illness, it was held that he could not recover for lost time. The court, referring to the cases cited, ante, § 1583, said, "The same reasoning which protects the servant in permitting him to recover for service actually performed, protects the master in not holding him liable except for services actually performed; and the servant cannot recover for time lost through his own illness or other inability to perform the required service." Most of the cases cited, however, are only negatively in point. Orpin v. Westmacott Gas Furnace Co., (R. I.) 74 Atl. 481, a per curiam opinion not reported in the official reports, is to same effect. So Shaw v. Deal (No. 2), 7 Pa. Co. Ct. 379; Hughes v. Toledo, etc., Cash Reg. Co., 112 Mo. App. 91.

Where a servant hired by the week is absent on account of illness for six or seven weeks, he is not entitled to be paid for the time he was so absent. Miller v. Morton, 8 Manitoba, 1.

In Marks v. Dartmouth Ferry Co., 36 Nov. Sec. 158, the court was evenly § 1585. — Principal's right to terminate employment.—But though brief and temporary absences, on account of illness, do not of themselves constitute an abandonment of the service under a contract for a fixed term, nor justify the employer in regarding it as such,²¹ an absence, even though because of sickness, may be of such a nature and go so much to the root of the whole consideration, as to justify the employer in deeming the contract at an end.²² A continuous illness for seven weeks in the case of a yearly employee was held by the court in Massachusetts to be such a radical and serious failure to perform as would, as matter of law, justify the employer in treating the employment as terminated. In a recent English case,²³ the test was said to be whether the illness was so long continued that it "would put an end, in a business sense, to their business engagement and would frustrate the object of that engagement,"—a rule obviously not very definite but perhaps sufficient to enable the decision of a case as a question of fact.

divided in opinion, but two judges of the four held that a servant who was continuously ill and absent for seven months and until his death was entitled to his wages during that time, the employer having done nothing to indicate that the absence was regarded as other than temporary.

But this case was reversed in 34 Can. Sup. Ct. 366, where the court held that a permanent incapacity of itself terminated the service; and the court found that the employee had assented to a rule that employees should be paid only for services actually rendered.

A servant who leaves his service uncompleted because of illness can get no compensation for the uncompleted part. Patrick v. Putnam, 27 Vt. 759; Hughes v. Toledo, etc., Cash Reg. Co., 112 Mo. App. 91.

²¹ See ante, § 1580, and cases cited in preceding note.

In McDougal v. Van Allen Co., 19 Ont. L. R. 351, an illness of five weeks in the case of a traveling salesman employed for three years was held not to justify the employer in terminating the contract.

²² Thus where the prima donna of a new opera about to be put upon the stage for an indefinite period, was, a few days before the first performance, taken seriously ill with an illness apparently not temporary (and which in fact continued until the opera had run for five days) and her place could only be supplied by the engagement of another singer (who happened to be available) for a definite time and at a larger salary, it was held that the employer was justified in treating the contract as terminated. Poussard v. Spiers, 1 Q. B. Div. 410.

The same thing was held where an employee under a contract for a year's time, was absent seven weeks on account of illness. No notice to the employee was necessary. Johnson v. Walker, 155 Mass. 253, 31 Am. St. R. 550. Two of the four judges in Marks v. Dartmouth Ferry Co., 36 Nov. Sco. 158, were of like opinion and Johnson v. Walker was cited. Here the absence was seven months and until the employee's death.

Johnson v. Walker was also cited and followed in Myers v. Sieradzki, [1910] Transv. L. R. S. C. 869, where an absence, by reason of illness, for six weeks out of a period of two months was held to justify the employer in refusing to take the employee back upon recovery.

²³ Storey v. Fulham Steel Works Co., 24 T. L. R. (Ct. of Ap.) 89.

§ 1586. Contracts not to terminate without notice—Forfeiture for breach.—It is not uncommon to provide that the agency, though otherwise at will, shall not be terminated by one or either party without notice to the other, either fixed or reasonable. Such agreements are valid, and, if violated, will furnish ground for an action for the damages sustained. They will not, however, work a forfeiture of wages, unless it is expressly so stipulated.²⁴ The law abhors forfeitures, and will not lightly imply them.

It is, therefore, common to provide that, if the agent terminates the relation without giving the specified notice, he shall forfeit to the principal either all, or a certain portion, of the compensation then earned but unpaid. Such stipulations, when fairly made and not unreasonable or oppressive in their effects, will be enforced by the law.²⁵ It would not be reasonable, however, to make the forfeiture cover a very long period,²⁶ or be entirely out of proportion to the principal's loss.²⁷

It is not necessary that the stipulation should take the form of a written contract between the parties. If the agent has notice of such a regulation at the time he enters upon performance, and accepts the agency under it; or if he has notice at any subsequent time during the

Here the occasional absence, (because of illness, of an employee under a five year contract), in a period extending from August to the following January, and his complete absence from January 5 to the middle of May when he offered to return, was held not sufficient to justify the employer in giving notice of termination in April.

²⁴ Hunt v. Otis, 4 Metc. (Mass.) 463.

²⁵ Richardson v. Woehler, 26 Mich. 90; Harmon v. Salmon Falls Mfg. Co., 35 Me. 447, 58 Am. Dec. 718; Walsh v. Walley, L. R. 9 Q. B. 367.

²⁶ Richardson v. Woehler, supra.

²⁷ Basye v. Ambrose, 28 Mo. 39.

In Schimpf v. Tennessee Mfg. Co., 86 Tenn. 219, 6 Am. St. Rep. 832, it was held that a clause in the contract whereby, if the servant left without giving notice, he agreed to forfeit whatever might be due him from the company at the time of leaving, was void as being unreasonable and oppressive.

But in Tennessee Mfg. Co. v. James, 91 Tenn. 154, 30 Am. St. Rep. 865, 15 L. R. A. 211, the contract was that if a servant quit without giving notice, he was to forfeit a certain amount, graduated in proportion to the wages paid him,—the forfeiture for wages from fifty cents up to one dollar a day being ten dollars,—and it was upheld as reasonable.

A stipulation in a contract between a conductor and a tram-ways company that the manager for the time being may fix the damages occasioned by the employee's breach of duty, and that the manager's certificate shall be conclusive in all courts, etc., will not justify the manager in decreeing a forfeiture of all the wages due, after an action brought by the discharged employee to recover the same, without giving the employee notice and an opportunity to be heard on the question of forfeiture. Armstrong v. South London Tramways Co., 64 L. T. R. (N. S.) 96.

service and continues to serve under it, he will be bound.²⁸ He cannot be bound, however, by a regulation or usage of which he had no notice,²⁹ and he may always show that as a matter of fact he had none.

§ 1587. — What works a forfeiture.—Here, too, as in other cases, a mere temporary absence will not work a forfeiture, nor will it result from absence on account of sickness, severe bodily injury, or other unforeseen emergency. To work a forfeiture, said a learned judge,³⁰ “the abandonment of the employer’s service must be the direct, voluntary act, or the natural and necessary consequence of some voluntary act, of the person employed, or the result of some act committed by him with a design to terminate the contract or employment, or render the further prosecution impossible. But a forfeiture of wages is not incurred, where the abandonment is immediately caused by acts or occurrences not foreseen or anticipated, over which the person employed had no control, and the natural and necessary consequence of which was not to cause the termination of the employment of a party under a contract for services or labor.”

5. Effect of Agent’s Disloyalty upon Compensation.

§ 1588. Disloyal agent cannot recover compensation.—As has been already seen, it is often said that the first duty of the agent is to be loyal to his trust, and a number of rules have been already stated whose purpose is to insure the performance of that duty. Certain of these rules have been designed, not merely to give a remedy for actual wrongdoing, but to remove as far as possible all temptation to wrongdoing. This duty of loyalty, as has been seen, imposes upon the agent the obligation to protect the interests of his principal, to see to it that his own interests or the interests of any one else whom he represents, shall not conflict with his principal’s interests, to make no profit for himself at his principal’s expense, to render true and honest accounts, to disclose all information coming to him and seeming to be necessary for his principal’s protection, and, generally, to render to his prin-

²⁸ Harmon v. Salmon Falls Mfg. Co., supra; Bradley v. Salmon Falls Mfg. Co., 30 N. H. 487; Collins v. New England Iron Co., 115 Mass. 23; Pottsville Iron and Steel Co. v. Good, 116 Pa. 385, 2 Am. St. Rep. 614.

²⁹ Stevens v. Reeves, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 198.

³⁰ Bigelow, C. J., in Hughes v. Wamsutta Mills, 11 Allen (Mass.),

201, in which case it was held that such an unexpected and unforeseen event as the arrest of the servant, and his conviction and imprisonment for crime, would exonerate the servant from the duty of giving two weeks’ notice before leaving the service, under a contract by which he agreed to give such notice or not claim any wages due.

principal a disinterested and loyal service. Among the other measures designed to secure the performance of this duty is the denial of compensation where the duty has not been observed; it is often said that a loyal performance is a condition precedent to the right to recover compensation, and it has been held in many cases that, where the agent is unfaithful to his trust and abuses the confidence reposed in him, he will not be entitled to any compensation for his services.³¹

³¹ Agent sells to himself, or to company in which he is interested, without principal's knowledge and consent. Salomons v. Pender, 3 H. & C. 639. Buys principal's property through a confederate or "dummy." Witte v. Storm, 236 Mo. 470. Falsely reports to principal price at which he buys or sells in order to make secret profit or to accomplish some other illegitimate purpose. Martin v. Bliss, 57 Hun (N. Y.), 157; Vennum v. Gregory, 21 Iowa, 328; Hale v. Kellogg (Tex. Civ. App.), 94 S. W. 389; Collins v. McClurg, 1 Colo. App. 348; Schaeffer v. Blair, 149 U. S. 248, 37 L. Ed. 721; Jeffries v. Robbins, 66 Kan. 427; Jackson v. Pleasanton, 101 Va. 282; Harrison v. Craven, 188 Mo. 590; Hutchinson v. Fleming, 40 Can. Sup. Ct. 134; Lichtenstein v. Mott, 99 N. Y. App. Div. 570. Conceals important information, or misrepresents the facts, in order to make profit for himself, etc. Wadsworth v. Adams, 138 U. S. 380, 34 L. Ed. 984; Wilkinson v. McCullough, 196 Pa. 205, 79 Am. St. Rep. 702; Jansen v. Williams, 36 Neb. 869, 20 L. R. A. 207; Whaples v. Fahys, 87 N. Y. App. Div. 518; Ringo v. Potts, 36 New Bruns. 42; Price v. Metropolitan, etc., Co., 23 Times L. Rep. 630; Ranney v. Henry, 160 Mich. 597; Pratt v. Patterson, 112 Pa. 475; Young v. Hughes, 32 N. J. Eq. 372; Cleveland, etc., R. Co. v. Pattison, 15 Ind. 70; Quinn v. Le Duc (N. J. Eq.), 51 Atl. 199. But not where the information, e. g., as to the identity of the purchaser, was not material. Veasey v. Carson, 177 Mass. 117, 53 L. R. A. 241. Makes false reports about his expenses, surcharges his accounts, etc. Little v. Phipps, 208 Mass. 331, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1046; Hobson v. Peake, 44 La. 383; Paul v. Minneapolis Thresher Co., 87 Mo. App. 647; Stubbs v. Slater, [1910] 1 Ch. 195; Doss v. Board, 96 Ark. 451. Takes secret commissions on dealings had for his principal. Murray v. Beard, 102 N. Y. 505; Boston Deep Sea Fishing Co. v. Ansell, 39 Ch. Div. 339; Manitoba, etc., Co. v. Davidson, 34 Can. Sup. Ct. 255. Refuses to account, converts proceeds, etc. Brannon v. Strauss, 75 Ill. 234; Meyers v. Walker, 31 Ill. 353. Keeps money paid to him, reporting debt unpaid, etc. Sidway v. American Mtg. Co., 119 Ill. App. 502, 222 Ill. 270. Keeps no proper accounts, mixes part of his principal's money with his own, and converts same to his own use. Quirk v. Quirk, 155 Fed. 199. Undermines his principal, tries to get latter's business for himself, makes no effort to promote latter's interest, etc. Bilz v. Powell, 50 Colo. 482, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 847. Secures the cancellation of orders taken by him, in order to place them with another company in which the agent is interested. Gibson v. Bailey Co., 114 Mo. App. 350. Acts in such bad faith and disregard of authority that principal is justified in repudiating his acts. Alta Investment Co. v. Worden, 25 Colo. 215.

See also, Sumner v. Reicheniker, 9 Kan. 320; Porter v. Silvers, 35 Ind. 295; Spain v. Arnott, 2 Starkie, 256; Hall v. Gambrell, 34 C. C. A. 190, 92 Fed. 32; Hafner v. Herron, 165 Ill. 242; Hofflin v. Moss, 14 C. C. A. 459, 67 Fed. 440; Phinney v. Hall, 101 Mich. 451; Schleifenbaum v. Rund- § 1589. ——— Good faith does not save—Nor custom—Divisible transactions.—It is not an excuse in these cases that the disloyal agent was not really acting in actual bad faith, or that the principal has not been injured. The rule rests, as has often been pointed out, not upon injury to the principal, but upon the paramount policy of removing the danger of temptation from the pathway of the agent. It may often operate to give to the principal the benefit of the agent's service without any compensation, but the agent has only himself to blame if that result ensues. It may seem at times that the penalty is harsher than the actual offense justifies, but the answer which is given is that the law is not aiming at the particular case but is striking indifferently at the whole class.

Any custom or usage that the agent shall take a secret profit or surcharge his account or conceal information, or otherwise be disloyal to his principal, is, of course, bad, unless the principal's knowledge and assent can be shown.³²

Where the transaction for which compensation is claimed is one and entire, the whole compensation is forfeited;³³ but where there were separate and distinct transactions commissions as to one have been held not to be forfeited by misconduct as to another.³⁴

If forfeitable commissions have been paid in ignorance of the misconduct, they may, upon discovery, be recovered back.³⁵

§ 1590. Double agency—Agent cannot recover compensation from either party when double agency unknown.—As has been seen the law will not permit the agent to put himself in such a situation that

baken, 81 Conn. 623; Audubon Bldg. Co. v. Andrews, 111 C. C. A. 92, 187 Fed. 254; Witte v. Storm, 236 Mo. 470.

³² See Little v. Phipps, 208 Mass. 331, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1046.

³³ Little v. Phipps, supra (here because the agent charged the principal with a $50 attorney fee when he had actually paid only $25, the whole interest of the agent in the transaction was held forfeited). Price v. Metropolitan, etc., Co., 23 Times L. Rep. 630 (a case of concealing information). Stubbs v. Slater, [1910] 1 Ch. 195 (a case of secret excessive charging). Braden v. Randles, 128 Iowa, 653 (where sales agent falsely reporting offer received and concealing amount which buyer was ready to pay was held to have forfeited both his fixed commission and a contingent interest).

³⁴ This distinction was made in Hippisley v. Knee, [1905] 1 K. B. 1, and has been followed in some other cases (though it is questioned in Little v. Phipps, supra); e. g., Nitedals Taendstikfabrik v. Bruster, [1906] 2 Ch. 671; Herzfelder v. McArthur, [1908] Transv. L. R. S. C. 332 (where it was held that breach of trust in a few separable matters by an agent employed in a long series of transactions did not defeat his right to commissions in transactions in which he had performed faithfully).

³⁵ Andrews v. Ramsay, [1903] 2 K. B. 635.

his own interests will conflict with those of the principal. The latter is entitled to the disinterested skill, diligence and zeal of the agent for his own exclusive benefit, and unless the principal knowingly consents to it, the agent cannot divide this duty and give a part to another. Hence it is the rule of the law that, except with the free and intelligent consent of his principal, given after full knowledge of all of the circumstances, the agent cannot in the same transaction, act both for the principal and the adverse party.³⁶

If, therefore, without such consent, the agent undertakes to also serve the other party in the same transaction, he commits such a breach of his duty to his own principal, and so violates the rules of sound policy and morality, that he forfeits all right to compensation from the principal who first employed him.³⁷ And for the same reason, he cannot

³⁶ See ante, §§ 176-180.

³⁷ Green v. Southern States Lbr. Co., 141 Ala. 680; Berlin v. Farwell (Cal.), 31 Pac. 527; Alta Inv. Co. v. Worden, 25 Colo. 215; Deutsch v. Baxter, 9 Colo. App. 58; Bollman v. Loomis, 41 Conn. 581; Bunn v. Keach, 214 Ill. 259; Kronenberger v. Fricke, 22 Ill. App. 550; Boyd v. Dullaghan, 33 Ill. App. 266; Hampton v. Lackens, 72 Ill. App. 442; Van Vlissingen v. Blum, 92 Ill. App. 145; Lloyd v. Colston, 5 Bush (Ky.), 587; Raisin v. Clark, 41 Md. 158, 20 Am. Rep. 66; Rice v. Wood, 113 Mass. 133, 18 Am. Rep. 459; Walker v. Osgood, 98 Mass. 348, 93 Am. Dec. 168; Farnsworth v. Hemmer, 1 Allen (Mass.), 494, 79 Am. Dec. 756; Scribner v. Collar, 40 Mich. 375, 29 Am. Rep. 541; Leathers v. Canfield, 117 Mich. 277, 6 L. R. A. 661; McDonald v. Maltz, 94 Mich. 172, 34 Am. St. R. 331; Webb v. Paxton, 36 Minn. 532; De Steiger v. Hollington, 17 Mo. App. 382; Rosenthal v. Drake, 82 Mo. App. 358; Stripling v. Maguire, 108 Mo. App. 594; Harkness v. Briscoe, 47 Mo. App. 196; Campbell v. Baxter, 41 Neb. 729; Strawbridge v. Swan, 43 Neb. 781; Watkins v. Cousall, 1 E. D. Smith (N. Y.), 65; Vanderpoel v. Kearns, 2 E. D. Smith (N. Y.), 170; Carman v. Beach, 63 N. Y. 97; Lamb v. Baxter, 130 N. C. 67; Bell v. McConnell, 37 Ohio St. 396, 41 Am. Rep. 528;

Everhart v. Searle, 71 Pa. 256; Lynch v. Fallon, 11 R. I. 311, 23 Am. Rep. 458; Lemon v. Little, 21 S. D. 628; Armstrong v. O'Brien, 83 Tex. 635; Tinsley v. Penniman, 12 Tex. Civ. App. 591; Shepard v. Hill, 6 Wash. 605; Meyer v. Hanchett, 39 Wis. 419, s. c. 43 Wis. 246; Morison v. Thompson, L. R. 9 Q. B. 480; Bart-ram v. Lloyd, 88 L. T. 286; Andrews v. Ramsay, [1903] 2 K. B. 635.

The "knowledge of the duplicate character should be established, not upon mere inference, but upon a full disclosure or positive proof of knowledge, so that the seller or the buyer, as the case may be, may be advised of the exact relation of the agent to the parties conducting the negotiation." Brady, J., in Frankel v. Wathen, 58 Hun, 543.

The principal may recover back from the agent commissions paid to him before learning of the double agency. Cannell v. Smith, 142 Pa. 25, 12 L. R. A. 395.

An agent who secretly receives a commission from the opposite party in the same transaction, forfeits his right to compensation from his principal. Brierly v. Connelly, 31 N. Y. Misc. 268.

The mere fact that, after the transaction was ended, the other party made a gift to the agent, without any previous agreement to do so, and recover compensation from the second employer, who was ignorant of the first engagement.³⁸

there being no bad faith charged, is held not enough to defeat the right to compensation. Campbell v. Yager, 32 Neb. 266. To same effect: Carr v. Ubsdell, 97 Mo. App. 326.

The mere fact that the agent of the seller rendered some aid to the buyer without compensation and without fraud does not disentitle him to compensation from the seller. Donohue v. Padden, 93 Wis. 20.

Dividing commissions with agent of other party.—A secret and equivocal agreement to divide commissions with the agent of the other party will defeat the right to them. Hobart v. Sherburne, 66 Minn. 171. And a secret agreement between the agents of the respective parties to "pool" their commissions has been held to destroy the right of either to recover. Norman v. Roseman, 59 Mo. App. 682. See also, Brokers.

But in Alvord v. Cook, 174 Mass. 120, it was held that the mere fact that the agents were to divide their joint commissions was not enough to defeat the broker's recovery. The court said that while it was easy to conceive that an arrangement between brokers for the division of their commissions might put one of them under a temptation to act adversely to his principal, they would not say this would be necessarily so. But see Quinn v. Burton, 195 Mass. 277.

Dividing commissions with purchaser.—An agent to sell does not lose his right to commissions because he has agreed to divide those commissions with the purchaser he has procured. They are his, and he may do what he pleases with them, said the court. Scott v. Lloyd, 19 Colo. 401; Chase v. Veal, 83 Tex. 333; Lawler v. Armstrong, 53 Nash. 664.

Agent also having option.—An agent to sell land, may also be given an option to buy it; and where such an agent, having produced a purchaser, ready, able and willing to buy on the terms proposed, to whom the owner wrongfully refused to convey, then exercised his option in order to complete the sale to the buyer, he was held to be entitled to his commission. Riemer v. Rice, 88 Wis. 16.

A person who has had an option for the purchase of land, which he has elected not to exercise has no such interest as will disqualify him from becoming the broker of another person to buy the land, nor which he owes any duty to disclose to the latter, and he may recover a commission from such purchaser. Carpenter v. Fisher, 175 Mass. 9.

Agent joining in the purchase.—Where an agent, who has been informed by his principal of the lowest price for land, made a secret agreement with a purchaser to buy the land, with the agent jointly,—the agent to apply his commissions in part payment for his share,—the agent was held not entitled to commissions. Finch v. Conrade, 154 Pa. 326.

Under similar circumstances, where the agent so manipulated that he was enabled to join in the purchase at the lowest price the principal would sell for, the agent falsely representing to the principal that the sale could not be consummated unless he bought an interest, he was not permitted to recover. Smith v.

³⁸ Bell v. McConnell, 37 Ohio St. 396, 41 Am. Rep. 528; Rice v. Wood, 113 Mass. 133, 18 Am. Rep. 459; Raisin v. Clark, 41 Md. 158, 20 Am. Rep. 66; Lynch v. Fallon, 11 R. I. 311, 23 Am. Rep. 458; Bollman v. Loomis, 41 Conn. 581; Farnsworth v. Hemmer, 1 Allen (Mass.), 494, 79 Am. Dec. 756; Barr v. Hall, 26 New Zeal. L. R. 222.

And if the second employer has knowledge of the first engagement, then both he and the agent are guilty of the wrong committed against the first employer, and the law will not enforce an executory contract entered into in fraud of his rights.

It is no answer to say that the second employer, having knowledge of the first employment, should be held liable on his promise because he could not be defrauded in the transaction. The contract itself is void as against public policy and good morals, and both parties thereto being in pari delicto the law will leave them as it finds them. Ex dolo malo non oritur actio is the maxim of the law. The result in such cases is therefore that the agent can recover from neither party unless his double employment was known and assented to by both.³⁹

§ 1591. — How when agent mere middleman.—As has been seen in an earlier section,⁴⁰ and as will be more fully discussed under the head of Brokers,⁴¹ it is possible that the agent, instead of being one in whom any particular trust and confidence is reposed, or upon whom either party relies for the protection of his interests, may be a

Tripis, 2 Tex. Civ. App. 267. See also, to the effect that where the broker who was employed to sell land for a commission, unites with others to buy it, even with the consent of the principal, no compensation is due him unless there is a new undertaking, after his relation is changed, to pay him: Hammond v. Bookwalter, 12 Ind. App. 177.

Even although the double agency is known to both principals,—even if he be a mere middleman—the agent, while acting for both, must deal fairly by both; and the concealment of material facts from either principal with a view to making profit for himself, will destroy all right to compensation from that principal. “He cannot be allowed to attempt to extort a price from one principal not demanded or required by the other, and then be entitled to a commission as for a service.” Phinney v. Hall, 101 Mich. 451. See also, Carpenter v. Fisher, 175 Mass. 9.

³⁹ Bell v. McConnell, 37 Ohio St. 396, 41 Am. Rep. 528; Farnsworth v. Hemmer, 1 Allen (Mass.), 494, 79 Am. Dec. 756; Walker v. Osgood, 98 Mass. 348, 93 Am. Dec. 168; Smith

v. Townsend, 109 Mass. 500; Rice v. Wood, 113 Mass. 133, 18 Am. Rep. 459; Sullivan v. Tufts, 203 Mass. 155; Bellman v. Loomis, 41 Conn. 581; Everhart v. Searle, 71 Pa. 256; Penn. Ry. Co. v. Flanigan, 112 Pa. 558; Rice v. Davis, 136 Pa. 439, 20 Am. St. Rep. 931.

In a number of cases in the lower courts of New York, it seems to be held that it is enough if the defendant, at the time he employed the agent, knew of the latter's previous employment by the other party, without requiring that it shall appear that the other party consented to the agent's employment by the defendant. See Lansing v. Bliss, 86 Hun (N. Y.), 205; Geery v. Pollock, 16 N. Y. App. Div. 321; Whiting v. Saunders, 22 N. Y. Misc. 539.

But all of these cases expressly go back for authority to Rowe v. Stevens, 53 N. Y. 621, in which it appears that each party had notice that the agent was employed by the other, and with such notice agreed to pay him his compensation. See also, Jarvis v. Schaefer, 105 N. Y. 289.

⁴⁰ See ante, § 178.

⁴¹ See post, Book V, Chap. III.

mere "middleman," whose undertaking it is merely to bring the parties in interest together and then leave them to conduct their own negotiations. In such cases, it is said that inasmuch as neither party relies upon the judgment or fidelity of the agent, he violates no duty in undertaking to perform this service for both⁴² and therefore may properly have compensation from both.

§ 1592. — May recover when double agency was fully known and assented to.—There is some conflict in the decisions upon the question of the agent's right to recover compensation from both parties, even when the double employment is fully known and assented to. It is said, and with no little reason, that even in this case the contract is opposed to public policy on account of the natural and legitimate tendency of such employments.⁴³ But while all such transactions are properly viewed with suspicion, the weight of reason and authority is in favor of their validity when fairly made.⁴⁴ The agent may not be able to serve each of his principals with all his skill, energy or ability. He may not be able to obtain for a selling principal the highest price which could be obtained, nor for a purchasing principal the lowest price for which the property could have been purchased. But he can render to each a service entirely free from falsehood and fraud; a fair and valuable service in which his best judgment and soundest discretion are fully and freely exercised. And such a service is all that either of his principals contracted for, or had reason to expect.⁴⁵

⁴² Green v. Robertson, 64 Cal. 75; Clark v. Allen, 125 Cal. 276; Manders v. Craft, 3 Colo. App. 236; Cox v. Haun, 127 Ind. 325; Montross v. Eddy, 94 Mich. 100, 34 Am. St. Rep. 323; Childs v. Ptomey, 17 Mont. 502; Knauss v. Gottfried Brewing Co., 142 N. Y. 70; Gracie v. Stevens, 56 App. Div. 203; affirmed, 171 N. Y. 658; Norton v. Loan Ass'n, 57 App. Div. 520; Bonwell v. Auld, 9 N. Y. Misc. 65; Southack v. Lane, 32 Misc. 141. Same case, 23 Misc. 515.

In Casady v. Carraher, 119 Iowa, 500, it is said that in order to occupy the position of middleman, it is necessary that the agent "should have limited his exertions to such service. If, in addition thereto, the middleman assists either in effecting a trade, he becomes to that extent a partisan agent, and the obligation immediately devolves upon him to disclose his agency to the other."

⁴³ See Meyer v. Hanchett, 43 Wis. 246.

⁴⁴ Bell v. McConnell, 37 Ohio St. 396, 41 Am. Rep. 528; Adams Mining Co. v. Senter, 26 Mich. 73; Fitzsimmons v. Southern Express Co., 40 Ga. 330, 2 Am. Rep. 577; Alexander v. University, 57 Ind. 466; Joslin v. Cowee, 56 N. Y. 626; Rolling Stock Co. v. Railroad, 34 Ohio St. 450; Atterbury v. Hopkins, 122 Mo. App. 172; Fryer v. Harker, 142 Iowa, 708, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 477.

⁴⁵ In Adams' Mining Co. v. Senter, 26 Mich. at p. 77, Campbell, J., in speaking of the acts of an agent acting for each of two mining companies, says: "It is claimed that upon the principle that a man cannot contract with himself, and cannot occupy positions involving a conflict of duties, all of his dealings whereby

6. Effect of Agent's Wilful Disobedience.

§ 1593. Forfeiture by wilful disobedience.—The same result of forfeiture will, as has been seen, flow from such wilful and persistent disobedience of lawful and reasonable instructions as shows a complete disregard of the fundamental obligations of the relation, and a practical disloyalty to the principal's interests.⁴⁶ Less than this, and the agent's negligence, will be ground for damages, or, perhaps, for a discharge, but will not ordinarily work a total forfeiture of the agent's right to compensation.⁴⁷

the property of one company was transferred to, or used for the other, should be held unlawful. There is no validity in such a proposition. The authority of agents may, where no law is violated, be as large as their employers may choose to make it. There are multitudes of cases where the same person acts under power from different principals in their mutual transactions. Every partnership involves such double relations. Every survey of boundaries, by a surveyor jointly agreed upon, would come within similar difficulties. It is only where the agent has personal interests conflicting with those of his principal, that the law requires peculiar safeguards against his acts. There can be no presumption that the agent of the two parties will deal unfairly with either. And when they both deliberately put him in charge of their separate concerns, and there is any likelihood that he may have to deal with the rights of both in the same transactions, instead of lessening his powers, it may become necessary to enlarge them far enough to dispense with such formalities as one man would use with another, but which could not be possible for a single person to go through alone."

⁴⁶ See a striking illustration in Von Heyne v. Tompkins, 89 Minn. 77,

5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 524. See also, Jerome v. Cycle Co., 163 N. Y. 351; Peniston v. Huber Co., 196 Pa. 580; Connell v. Gisborne Times Co., 28 New Zeal. L. R. 299; Howell v. Denton (Tex. Civ. App.), 68 S. W. 1002.

In Macnamara v. Martin, 7 Com. L. R. (Australia) 699, an agent to sell land found a purchaser upon terms proposed by principal. The principal thereupon changed his terms and instructed the agent to go no further. Nevertheless the agent, feeling that the principal was not dealing fairly with the purchaser so produced, undertook to make a written contract with him binding the principal to convey. This contract, however, would not bind the principal. The agent sued for the commission originally agreed upon, which it was agreed he had earned, but which it was urged had been forfeited by his disobedience. Held, that the agent's alleged misconduct after producing the purchaser did no harm to the principal and did not defeat the agent's right to commissions.

⁴⁷ Thus the mere failure of a workman to obey a rule to "punch" a time clock, will not cause a forfeiture of his wages for time which it is conceded that he worked. Mathews v. Industrial Lumber Co., 91 S. Car. 568.

Where, however, the agent's default amounts to a complete failure to perform the act in consideration of which only the compensation was to be paid, the agent cannot recover because he has not performed.⁴⁸

7. Principal's Right of Recoupment.

§ 1594. Principal may recoup damages.—Instead of resorting to an independent action for the recovery of the damages he may have sustained by reason of the agent's failure to perform his undertaking, the principal may recoup them in an action brought against him by the agent to recover his compensation.⁴⁹

This defense is distinguishable from set-off in three important particulars: 1. The claim sought to be taken advantage of by recoupment must be confined to matters arising out of, and connected with, the transaction or contract upon which the suit is brought. The claims and demands of both parties must spring out of the same contract or transaction, and not out of separate and different transactions. 2. It is immaterial whether the damages sought to be recouped are liquidated or unliquidated, it being well settled that unliquidated damages growing out of the same transaction from which the plaintiff's cause of action arises, may be recouped. 3. The remedy is conferred and regulated by common-law rules and does not depend upon statutory creation, although in many states it is regulated or enlarged by statute.⁵⁰

The occasion for the resort to recoupment may arise under one of two states of fact: a. Where the agent sues upon the contract itself; and b. where he sues upon a quantum meruit. In the first case, the

⁴⁸ Thus, for example, if a broker is to be paid for selling goods according to a certain sample, and he makes a sale by substituting a better sample, thereby fastening upon his employer an unprofitable sale, a finding that no commissions were earned is justified "because the sales were not made in conformity with the terms upon which the broker was employed to effect them." Schreiner v. Kissock, 91 N. Y. Supp. 28.

⁴⁹ Blodgett v. Berlin Mills Co., 52 N. H. 215; Mobile, etc., R. R. Co. v. Clanton, 59 Ala. 392, 31 Am. Rep. 15; Wilson v. Smith, 111 Ala. 170; Brunson v. Martin, 17 Ark. 270; Lee v. Clements, 48 Ga. 128; Houston v. Young, 7 Ind. 200; Stoddard v.

Treadwell, 26 Cal. 294; Still v. Hall, 20 Wend. (N. Y.) 51; Phelps v. Paris, 39 Vt. 511; Cilley v. Tenny, 31 Vt. 401; DeWitt v. Cullings, 32 Wis. 298; Harper v. Ray, 27 Miss. 622; Dunlap v. Hand, 26 Id. 460; Runyan v. Nichols, 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 547; Swift v. Harriman, 30 Vt. 607; Marshall v. Hann, 17 N. J. L. 425; Johnson v. White Mt. Creamery Ass'n, 68 N. H. 437, 73 Am. St. Rep. 610; McEwen v. Kerfoot, 37 Ill. 530; Evans v. Hughey, 76 Ill. 115; Harvey v. Cook, 24 Ill. App. 134.

⁵⁰ Ward v. Fellers, 3 Mich. 281; Wheat v. Dotson, 12 Ark. 699; Baltimore & Ohio R. R. Co. v. Jameson, 13 W. Va. 833, 31 Am. Rep. 775; Myers v. Estell, 47 Miss. 4.

agent treats the contract as being substantially performed, and bases his action upon it. It therefore becomes an essential portion of his case to show what the contract was, and that its performance has been such as to entitle him to the stipulated compensation. In the second case, the agent disregards the contract and sues for the value of his services as though no special contract existed. In this case it becomes necessary for the principal to set up the contract and its breach in his defense.

§ 1595. — What damages may be recouped.—It is indispensable that the loss for which damages are sought to be recouped should grow out of the same contract or transaction as that upon which the plaintiff's action is based.⁵¹ The principal can not therefore recoup for a wrong or injury done by the agent outside of, and disconnected with, the scope of his employment.⁵² But, within this limit, damages for the losses which the principal may have sustained by reason of the agent's inefficiency, negligence, misconduct, or failure to perform the express or implied covenants, agreements or conditions of his undertaking, and which would furnish the basis of an action by the principal against the agent, may be recouped by the principal in the action brought by the agent.⁵³

Thus in an action by a railway conductor for his wages, the company may recoup for loss resulting to it from a collision caused by his negligence;⁵⁴ so in an action by an agent to recover his wages, the principal may recoup the damages he has sustained by reason of the seduction of his daughter by the agent;⁵⁵ so where a mill operative left his employment without having given the previous notice of his intention to leave which the contract required, in consequence of which the work at the mill was hindered and delayed, it was held that the damages thereby occasioned to the mill owner might be recouped against the claim for wages.⁵⁶

⁵¹ Lufburrow v. Henderson, 30 Ga. 482; Mayberry v. Leech, 58 Ala. 339; Desha v. Robinson, 17 Ark. 288; Hart v. Francis, 2 Col. 719; Sanger v. Fincher, 27 Ill. 346; Evans v. Hughey, 76 Ill. 115; Waterman v. Clark, 76 Ill. 428; Fessenden v. Forest Paper Co., 63 Me. 175; Bartlett v. Farrington, 120 Mass. 284; Hulme v. Brown, 3 Heisk. (Tenn.) 679; Ward v. Wilson, 3 Mich. 1; Allen v. McKibbin, 5 Mich. 449; Hill v. Southwick, 9 R. I. 299, 11 Am. Rep. 250; Harris v. Gamble, 6 Ch. Div. 748.

⁵² Nashville, etc., R. Co. v. Chumley, 6 Heisk. (Tenn.) 327.

⁵³ See cases cited in preceding section, note 1.

⁵⁴ Mobile, etc., Ry. Co. v. Clanton, 59 Ala. 392, 31 Am. Rep. 15; South Chicago City Ry. Co. v. Workman, 64 Ill. App. 383.

⁵⁵ Bixby v. Parsons, 49 Conn. 483, 44 Am. Rep. 246.

⁵⁶ Satchwell v. Williams, 40 Conn. 371. Principal may recoup for loss of time by agent. Wilson v. Smith, 111 Ala. 170.

§ 1596. — So in such an action, the principal may show in his defense that the agent embezzled or wasted the goods or money committed to his care;⁵⁷ that the agent wilfully destroyed the principal's property;⁵⁸ that by the agent's negligence the property was lost, destroyed or injured;⁵⁹ that the agent failed to furnish certain materials which he had agreed to furnish, whereby the principal was compelled to furnish them;⁶⁰ that the agent failed to pay certain damages which he had agreed to pay, by reason of which the principal was obliged to pay them.⁶¹

So the principal may recoup for the damages which he has incurred to third persons by reason of the agent's misconduct or neglect, or his failure to observe and perform the principal's instructions.⁶²

§ 1597. — Limit of recovery.—Damages, however, in the absence of a statute enlarging the remedy, can be recouped by way of mitigation only, and can not be made the basis of a recovery of the excess.⁶³ And having once offered and used them in recoupment, the principal can not afterwards bring an action for the excess.⁶⁴ If, therefore, the principal's damages exceed the plaintiff's claim, he should bring an independent action for them in the first instance.

The measure of damages is, also, substantially the same as though an independent action were brought to recover them.⁶⁵ The limit of the recoupment must, therefore, be the actual damages which directly and proximately result from the negligence, default or misconduct of the agent, and must not exceed the amount claimed by him.⁶⁶ Indirect, remote or speculative damages, except in case of fraud where a more liberal rule prevails, are no more to be recovered by recoupment than by an independent action.⁶⁷

⁵⁷ Heck v. Shener, 4 Serg. & R. (Penn.) 249, 8 Am. Dec. 700; Brunson v. Martin, 17 Ark. 270; Allaire Works v. Guion, 10 Barb. (N. Y.) 55.

⁵⁸ Allaire Works v. Guion, 10 Barb. (N. Y.) 55. See also, Brigham v. Hawley, 17 Ill. 38; Lee v. Clements, 48 Ga. 128; Fowler v. Payne, 49 Miss. 321; Sanger v. Fincher, 27 Ill. 347; Wilder v. Stanley, 49 Vt. 105.

⁵⁹ Allaire Works v. Guion, supra.

⁶⁰ Newton v. Forster, 12 M. & W. 772.

⁶¹ Barker v. Troy, etc., R. R. Co., 27 Vt. 766.

⁶² McEwen v. Kerfoot, 37 Ill. 530; Campbell v. Somerville, 114 Mass. 334.

⁶³ Ward v. Fellers, 3 Mich. 281; Bennett v. Kupfer, 213 Mass. 218, 100 N. E. 332; Britton v. Turner, 6 N. H. 481, 26 Am. Dec. 713; Fowler v. Payne, 52 Miss. 210; Streeter v. Streeter, 43 Ill. 156; Holcraft v. Mel-lott, 57 Ind. 539; Brunson v. Martin, 17 Ark. 270. But see, Johnson v. White Mt. Creamery Ass'n, 68 N. H. 437, 73 Am. St. Rep. 610.

⁶⁴ Ward v. Fellers, 3 Mich. 281.

⁶⁵ Meyers v. Estell, 47 Miss. 4; Estell v. Myers, 54 Id. 147.

⁶⁶ Satchwell v. Williams, 40 Conn. 371.

⁶⁷ Blanchard v. Ely, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 342, 34 Am. Dec. 250; Finney v. Cadwallader, 55 Ga. 75; Pettee v.

§ 1598. ——— Right not cut off by assignment.—The right of recoupment, it is said, attaches to the contract and goes with it into whosoever hands the right may come to sue upon it.⁶⁸ The principal may, therefore, avail himself of this defense against the assignee of the agent, even though he be a bona fide transferee.⁶⁹

§ 1599. No recoupment against an infant.—Where, however, the agent is an infant, no recoupment can be had against him, of damages arising from his failure to perform the express or implied duties imposed upon him by the contract of agency.⁷⁰ "Recoupment is, in substance and effect, a cross-action, and unless the party whom it is attempted to subject to it could be compelled to respond for the damages by an independent action against him, he cannot be reached by recoupment."⁷¹

III.

THE AGENT'S RIGHT TO REIMBURSEMENT.

§ 1600. What here included.—In the course of the execution of the agency, the agent may not infrequently pay out his own money, or become liable to pay it, in meeting the expenses which arise in the performance of the agency. The agent may also, in executing the principal's commands, expose himself to legal claims, or incur legal obligations to third persons who are injured by the fact or the manner of the agent's execution of the principal's directions. In either case, the agent may have a claim against his principal by reason of the expense or liability thus incurred. These claims are in substance very much alike, but, for convenience sake, will here be considered under the two heads of Reimbursement for money expended, and Indemnity against liability incurred.⁷²

Tennessee Mfg. Co., 1 Sneed (Tenn.), 381.

⁶⁸ Bixby v. Parsons, 49 Conn. 483, 44 Am. Rep. 246.

⁶⁹ Bixby v. Parsons, supra.

⁷⁰ Widrig v. Taggart, 51 Mich. 103; Whitmarsh v. Hall, 3 Denio (N. Y.), 375; Derocher v. Continental Mills, 58 Me. 217, 4 Am. Rep. 286; Robinson v. Weeks, 56 Me. 102; Vent v. Osgood, 19 Pick. (Mass.) 575; Gaffney v. Hayden, 110 Mass. 137, 14 Am. Rep. 580; Meeker v. Hurd, 31 Vt. 642; Dallas v. Hollingsworth, 3 Ind. 537;

Meredith v. Crawford, 34 Ind. 399; Ray v. Haines, 52 Ill. 485.

⁷¹ Graves, C. J., in Widrig v. Taggart, supra.

⁷² Subrogation.—There are also cases in which the agent will be entitled to subrogation, or something akin to it. Thus where an agent, acting in good faith, and for the benefit of the principal, but without authority, has made himself liable to third persons upon acts or contracts for the principal, and upon which the principal has received the § 1601. Agent must be reimbursed for proper outlays.—The performance of the agency is undertaken for the benefit of the principal. To him belong all the profits and advantages resulting from its execution. He is also entitled to all of the profits and advantages acquired by the agent during the course of the performance. It is eminently just and proper, therefore, that the principal should bear the natural and legitimate burdens of the transaction, and that the agent should not be called upon to suffer loss or injury for his acts done in the proper discharge of his duties. And such is the rule of law.

The agent is entitled to be reimbursed by the principal for all of his advances, expenses and disbursements, made in the course of his agency, on account of or for the benefit of his principal, when such advances, expenses and disbursements have been properly incurred, and reasonably and in good faith paid, without any default on the part of the agent.⁷⁸ benefit, as, for example, where by this means valid debts against the principal have been discharged by the agent, the latter standing in equity in the right of those whose claims have been so paid, may often recover from the principal to the extent that such debts have been so discharged. See McLaughlin v. Daily Telegraph Co., 1 Commonw. L. R. (Australia) 243.

In Chandler v. Green, 101 Ill. App. 409, it is said, "An agent who uses his private means to protect the estate of his principal is entitled to be subrogated to the position and rights of his principal. Curry v. Curry, 87 Ky. 667, 12 Am. St. Rep. 504; Gillett v. Insurance Co. of North America, 39 Ill. App. 284-286; see also, Slack v. Kirk, 67 Penn. St. 380."

For the right of the third person to recover in such a case, see Bannatyne v. MacIver, [1906] 1 K. B. 103, 2 Br. Rul. Cas. 725; McLaughlin v. City Bank, 9 N. S. Wales St. Rep. 319

⁷⁸ Clifton v. Ross, 60 Ark. 97; Arnold v. Arnold, 83 Kan. 539 (agent to buy goods must be reimbursed for price properly paid); Blazo v. Gill, 143 N. Y. 232 (an agent to supervise the construction of a house reimbursed for money paid for work and materials); Monnet v. Metz, 127 N. Y. 151 (agent reimbursed for counsel fees incurred in a litigation); Lyon v. Sweeney, 91 Mich. 478 (agent to foreclose mortgage entitled to expenses of advertising and attorney fees); Perin v. Parker, 126 Ill. 201, 9 Am. St. Rep. 571, 2 L. R. A. 336 (broker recovered for advances made in payment of grain bought for his principal); Kelley v. Maguire, 99 Ill. App. 317 (factor reimbursed for money advanced); Ward v. Tucker, 7 Wash. 399 (broker effecting insurance entitled to reimbursement for premiums); Schaefer v. Sherwood, 61 N. Y. Misc. 642 (agent to rent premises may be reimbursed for expenditures on necessary repairs); Gardner v. Kinney, 60 Ore. 292 (a surveyor reimbursed for necessary boat hire); Bayley v. Wilkins, 7 Com. B. 886 (a broker authorized to buy stock reimbursed for a call paid thereon); Ellis v. Pond, [1898] 1 Q. B. D. 426 (broker reimbursed for advances made in purchase of stock); Baker v. Wainwright, 36 Md. 336, 11 Am. Rep. 495 (an agent who has purchased land in his own name at principal's request entitled to reimbursement, although there was no written evidence of the agency to satisfy the Statute

§ 1602. — When not entitled.—The agent cannot, however, claim to be reimbursed for expenses or disbursements which have been rendered necessary by his own neglect to use reasonable care and diligence, or which have been incurred in violation of the express or implied conditions of the agency, or in opposition to the instructions of his principal. If such expenses are incurred, the agent must bear them himself.⁷⁴ The right to reimbursement extends only to such expenses as are properly incurred by the agent in the honest management of the business, and without default on his part.⁷⁵ The right to reimbursement does not extend to expenses which were officiously assumed by the agent,⁷⁶ nor, obviously, to those which, by the terms of the contract, were to be borne by the agent himself.⁷⁷

The agent will also not be entitled to reimbursement for expenses incurred in promoting an enterprise which he knows to be unlawful. This question has frequently arisen with reference to the right of brokers and other agents for compensation and reimbursement with reference to dealings in "futures," stock gambling, and other forbidden of Frauds); Mitchell's Adm'r v. Sproul, 5 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 264 (agent authorized to hire an attorney may have reimbursement from his principals although the agent, without sealed authority, made the contract with the attorney under seal, and in other respects inadvertently exceeded his authority); Taylor v. St. Claire, 79 Vt. 536 (an agent entitled to reimbursement for money spent on lunches, may have it, although they were not bought at the restaurant provided by the principals for other employes). To same effect: Ruffner v. Hewitt, 7 W. Va. 585; Warren v. Hewitt, 45 Ga. 501; Maitland v. Martin, 86 Pa. 120; Beach v. Branch, 57 Ga. 362; Searing v. Butler, 69 Ill. 575; Elliott v. Walker, 1 Rawle (Penn.), 126; A. B. Frank Co. v. Waldrup (Tex. Civ. App.), 71 S. W. 298; Western Assur. Co. v. Uhlhorn, 41 La. Ann. 385; Parker v. Moore, 53 C. C. A. 369, 1, 115 Fed. 799; Willingham v. Rushing, 105 Ga. 72; Bush v. Froelich, 14 S. D. 62; Kelly v. Board of Pub. Works, 75 Va. 263; Johnston v. Gerry, 34

Wash. 524; Waters v. Davies, 55 N. Y. Super. 39; Nagle v. Richards, 134 N. Y. App. Div. 29.

Interest may be allowed upon disbursements made. Kimball v. Ranney, 122 Mich. 160, 80 Am. St. Rep. 548, 46 L. R. A. 403; Perin v. Parker, 126 Ill. 201, 2 L. R. A. 336, 9 Am. St. Rep. 571.

⁷⁴*Godman v. Meixsel*, 65 Ind. 62; Veltum v. Koehler, 85 Minn. 125; Dodge v. Tileston, 12 Pick. (Mass.) 328; Baily v. Burgess, 48 N. J. Eq. 411; Ellis v. Pond, [1898] 1 Q. B. D. 426; In re Overweg, [1900] 1 Ch. D. 209.

No reimbursement for the price of goods which, by reason of the agent's misconduct, never reach the principal. Hurst v. Holding, 3 Taunt. 32.

⁷⁵*Maitland v. Martin*, 86 Pa. 120. No reimbursement for expenses incurred in schemes designed to defraud the principal. Henyan v. Trevino, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 137 S. W. 458.

⁷⁶*Child v. Morley*, 8 T. R. 610.

⁷⁷*Champion Machine Co. v. Ervay* (Tex. Civ. App.), 16 S. W. 172.

or unlawful transactions.⁷⁸ As pointed out in an earlier section,⁷⁹ however, it is not enough to defeat the agent's claim that the transaction, so far as the principal is concerned, is an unlawful one; to prevent the agent's recovery, he must have been cognizant of the unlawful purpose and have taken some direct part in its execution.⁸⁰

Obviously no duty to reimburse arises where there exists no foundation of agency.⁸¹

IV.

THE AGENT'S RIGHT TO INDEMNITY.

§ 1603. Agent must be indemnified against consequences of lawful acts.—The agent has the right to assume that the principal will not call upon him to perform any duty which would render him liable in damages to third persons. Having no personal interest in the act, other than the performance of his duty, the agent should not be required to suffer loss from the doing of an act, apparently lawful in itself, and which he has undertaken to do by the direction, and for the benefit and advantage, of his principal. If in the direct performance of such an act, therefore, the agent invades the rights of third persons and incurs liability to them, the loss should fall rather upon him for whose benefit and by whose direction it was done, than upon him whose only intention was to do his duty to his principal. Wherever, then, the agent is called upon by his principal to do an act which is not manifestly illegal, and which he does not know to be wrong, the law implies a promise on the part of the principal to indemnify the agent for such losses as flow directly and immediately from the very execution of the agency.⁸²

⁷⁸ See Samuels v. Oliver, 130 Ill. 73; Mohr v. Miesen, 47 Minn. 228; Mixon v. Walker, 9 Ga. App. 610; Raymond v. Parker, 84 Conn. 694; Wilson v. Nat. Fowler Bank, 47 Ind. App. 689; Riordan v. Doty, 50 S. C. 537; Wagner v. Hildebrand, 187 Pa. 136; Dows & Co. v. Glaspel, 4 N. D. 251; Bartlett v. Collins, 109 Wis. 477; Barnes v. Smith, 159 Mass. 344; Sprague v. Warren, 26 Neb. 326, 3 L. R. A. 679.

⁷⁹ See ante, § 121.

⁸⁰ Irwin v. Williar, 110 U. S. 499, 28 L. Ed. 225; Bibb v. Allen, 149 U. S. 481, 37 L. Ed. 819; Clews v. Jamie- son, 182 U. S. 461, 45 L. Ed. 1183; Parker v. Moore, 53 C. C. A. 369, 115 Fed. 799; Lehman v. Feld, 37 Fed. 852; Ennis v. Edgar, 154 Ill. App. 543; Marengo Co. v. Hooper (Ala.), 56 So. 580; Harvey & Co. v. Doty, 50 S. C. 548, and many other cases cited in § 121, ante.

⁸¹ Joseph v. Sulzberger, 136 N. Y. App. Div. 499.

⁸² Moore v. Appleton, 26 Ala. 633, s. c. 34 Ala. 147, 73 Am. Dec. 448; Ramsay v. Gardner, 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 439; Stocking v. Sage, 1 Conn. 519; Greene v. Goddard, 9 Metc. (Mass.) 212; Powell v. New- § 1604. Liability must be a direct consequence of the execution of the agency.—It is, of course, not enough, to entitle the agent to burgh, 19 Johns. (N. Y.) 284; Maitland v. Martin, 86 Pa. 120; Beach v. Branch, 57 Ga. 362; Searing v. Butler, 69 Ill. 575; Elliott v. Walker, 1 Rawle (Penn.), 126; Otter Creek Lbr. Co. v. McElwee, 37 Ill. App. 285; Selz v. Guthman, 62 Ill. App. 624; First Nat. Bank v. Tenney, 43 Ill. App. 544; Denney v. Wheelwright, 60 Miss. 733; Castle v. Noyes, 14 N. Y. 329; Brown v. Mechanics Bank, 43 N. Y. App. Div. 173; Guirney v. St. Paul, etc., Ry. Co., 43 Minn. 496, 19 Am. St. Rep. 256; Henderson v. Eckern, 115 Minn. 410, Ann. Cas. 1912 D. 989; Hoggan v. Cahoon, 26 Utah, 444, 99 Am. St. Rep. 837; Dugdale v. Lovering, L. R. 10 C. P. 196.

No indemnity against any but the direct and natural consequences of the act. People v. Town Auditors, 74 N. Y. 310.

In First National Bank v. Tenney, 43 Ill. App. 544, it appeared that Tenney, acting as attorney for the bank, which was creditor of a certain debtor in failing circumstances, at the request of the bank, took a judgment upon the bank's claim in his own name, and proceeded to enforce it by a sale of the debtor's goods which he bought in in his own name for the benefit of the bank. The debtor then brought action against Tenney, the bank and others, charging them with fraudulent collusion to defraud the debtor and other creditors. A judgment was rendered in this action against the defendants, from which the bank declined to appeal. Tenney appealed for his own protection and reversed the judgment. He then brought action against the bank to recover for services and expenses in securing a reversal of the judgment against himself. Held, that he was entitled to recover. The court said: "The principal is not bound to appeal from a decree rendered against his agent; he may submit to it, but he is bound to indemnify his agent, and this means something more than that after the agent has paid the judgment, or under it been stripped of his goods by due process of law, that the principal will then afford remuneration. The principal may pay if he will, but he cannot lie supinely by and let his agent suffer the consequences of a decree which he, as principal, is legally and morally bound to pay. Neither is the agent bound to wait indefinitely before he takes measures to protect himself; having notified, if practicable, the principal of the situation, he may proceed to measures for his own and his principal's relief, measures which, in the case of an appeal taken, are necessarily in the interest of the principal and tend to his exoneration. When sued for an act done in pursuance of his employment, he is not obliged to let judgment go against him, but may defend and recover the expenses of a defense bona fide made."

In Guirney v. St. Paul, etc., R. Co., 43 Minn. 496, 19 Am. St. Rep. 256, the defendant, its agents and servants, had been enjoined from molesting the Fargo railroad in constructing a crossing over the defendant's roadbed. The plaintiff was foreman of construction for the defendant, and had not heard of the injunction. The defendant directed the plaintiff to prevent the Fargo company from interfering with the defendant's tracks, which order the plaintiff obeyed and thereby unwittingly violated the injunction. He was arrested for contempt of court, and brings this action to recover damages occasioned thereby, and it was held that he could recover.

In a great variety of cases sheriffs, constables, and similar officers, who have, at the specific direction of a party or his attorney, levied upon indemnity, that the loss or injury happened while he was acting as agent: it must be a direct and natural consequence of the execution of the agency.⁸³ Thus for an injury caused by the wrongful or negligent act of a third person, for which the execution of the authority gave, perhaps, the opportunity, but of which it was not the legal cause, the principal would not be responsible. If, for example, a broker while going upon his principal's business, should be way-laid by a robber, or if a traveling salesman, going from town to town, should be injured by the negligence of a carrier, the principal would not be liable,⁸⁴ any more than he would be if the agent, during the existence of the agency, should contract a contagious disease or be struck by lightning. As has been already stated, the injury for which indemnity is sought, must be the direct and natural consequence of the doing of that which the principal directed to be done.

or seized particular goods pointed out to them,—as distinguished from the mere obedience to a general writ or the ordinary performance of their official duty,—have been held entitled to indemnity if those specific instructions prove unauthorized and involve the officer in liability. See Selz v. Guthman, 62 Ill. App. 624; Grimes v. Taylor, 93 Ill. App. 494; Gower v. Emery, 18 Me. 79; Henderson v. Eckern, 115 Minn. 410, Ann. Cas. 1912 D. 989; Ranlett v. Blodgett, 17 N. H. 298, 43 Am. Dec. 603.

In Denney v. Wheelwright, 60 Miss. 733, Wheelwright, as agent for Denney, bargained for the shipment of lumber, upon consignment, and procured an advance from the consignee and turned the amount over to Denney. The venture resulted in loss, and the consignee sued Wheelwright to recover the advances. Wheelwright notified Denney of the action and gave him an opportunity to defend, but the latter made no defense and judgment was rendered against Wheelwright. Having satisfied this judgment, Wheelwright sued Denney to recover the amount of the judgment with attorney's fees and costs. Held, that he was entitled to recover.

The right to indemnity covers attorney's fees necessarily incurred. In re Wells, 15 The Rep. 169.

⁸³ The defendants instructed the plaintiff, an auctioneer in Paris, to advertise for sale a mare which they represented to him to be a thoroughbred, and registered in the English Stud Book under the name of Pentecost. The plaintiff complied. A Frenchman, the owner of a thoroughbred mare also called Pentecost, sued the plaintiff in France, alleging that he had suffered damage through the defendant's mare being advertised for sale under that name, and recovered. Plaintiff then sued defendants for indemnity. It being shown that the representation made by the defendants concerning their mare was true, Held, that the defendants were not liable, the damages recovered from the plaintiff not being due to any wrongful act on their part. Halbronn v. International Horse Agency, [1903] 1 K. B. 270; Frixione v. Tagliaferro, 10 Moore P. C. 175, was distinguished.

⁸⁴ Unless, of course, the principal had reason to anticipate danger to the agent in the employment and failed to warn him. Baxter v. Roberts, 44 Cal. 187, 13 Am. Rep. 160.

§ 1605. ——— Illustrations.—Within the rule that the principal must protect the agent against the direct and natural consequences of the execution of the agency, an agent is entitled to be indemnified when he is compelled to pay damages for taking personal property by direction of his principal, which, though claimed adversely by another, he had reasonable ground for believing to belong to his principal.⁸⁵ So an agent, who, acting under the direction of his principal, cuts timber by mistake partly upon the land of another, which timber is received and used by the principal is entitled to recover of his principal what he has been compelled to pay as damages for the trespass.⁸⁶ And an agent, who, having recovered upon a claim due to his principal, and having paid the proceeds to him, is compelled, upon a reversal of the judgment, in accordance with the forms of law and through no fault of his own, to refund the amount previously collected, is entitled to be indemnified by the principal against the consequences of such reversal.⁸⁷

§ 1606. ——— So where a person is employed in the usual course of his business as an auctioneer or warehouseman to sell or deliver goods, by one who claims to have a right to do so, the law will imply a promise from the latter to indemnify him if he be compelled to pay damages to another who establishes a superior right to the goods.⁸⁸ And so when a railroad conductor, who had acted under express instructions from the company, was charged in damages to one whom he had ejected from the train for not producing such a ticket as he had been directed, though unlawfully, to insist upon, it was held that he was entitled to be indemnified by the company.⁸⁹ So where an agent, who had purchased and shipped property for his principal and which the principal failed to pay for, was sued and arrested for the price and was compelled to pay it, it was held that the principal was bound to reimburse him for the amount paid and for his costs and attorney's fees.⁹⁰ In these cases the agent need not wait to be sued by the third ⁸⁵ Moore v. Appleton, 26 Ala. 633, s. c. 34 Ala. 147, 73 Am. Dec. 448; Avery v. Halsey, 14 Pick. (Mass.) 174; Hoggan v. Cahoon, 26 Utah, 444, 99 Am. St. Rep. 837.

⁸⁶ Drummond v. Humphreys, 39 Me. 347.

⁸⁷ D'Arcy v. Lyle, 5 Binney (Pa.), 441, 1st Am. Leading Cases, 856. This case is one of the most remarkable in the books.

Compare Frixione v. Tagliaterra, 10 Moore P. C. 175, where it is said that the question whether the decision was legally right or wrong is immaterial if it be one which the agent is bound to recognize.

⁸⁸ Nelson v. Cook, 17 Ill. 443; Adanson v. Jarvis, 4 Bing. 66; Butts v. Gibbons, 2 Ad. & Ell. 57.

⁸⁹ Howe v. Buffalo, etc., R. R. Co., 37 N. Y. 297.

⁹⁰ Clark v. Jones, 84 Tenn. (16 Lea) 351. This was true, said the court, however wrongful might be the recovery against the agent.

party for damages, but may pay at once and thereupon recover from the principal.⁹¹ Where, however, he thus pays, without the protection of a judgment which will bind the principal, he can recover from the principal only to the extent of the injury actually sustained by the third person, though he may, in fact, have paid him more.⁹²

It is immaterial whether the agent be sued alone or jointly with the principal. The right to indemnity exists in either case.⁹³

§ 1607. Right to indemnity extends to contractual obligations properly incurred.—The agent's right to indemnity is not confined to cases,—which happen to be those thus far chiefly referred to,—wherein a tort obligation has been incurred to a third person by reason of the agent's acts, but it extends also to contractual obligations properly incurred in the execution of the agency and on the principal's account. Thus where an agent authorized to contract for the use of a vessel of the principal's, and who did so in his own name, was compelled to pay damages because the principal refused to furnish the vessel according to the agreement, it was held that he could recover from the principal.⁹⁴ Neither is the right confined to contractual obligations expressly authorized, but will extend to those which may fairly be deemed to have been contemplated when the execution of the authority was directed. Within the operation of this principle would be included obligations imposed by custom, either generally operative or prevailing in the markets or upon the exchanges in which the agent was expected to deal.⁹⁵

§ 1608. No indemnity where loss caused by agent's default.—The agent obviously can have no claim against his principal for indemnity

⁹¹ Saveland v. Green, 36 Wis. 612.

⁹² Saveland v. Green, 36 Wis. 612.

⁹³ Moore v. Appleton, 26 Ala. 633, s. c. 34 Ala. 147, 73 Am. Dec. 448.

⁹⁴ Saveland v. Green, 36 Wis. 612. To the same effect, where principal induced his agent to undertake in his own name to sell a certain number of bales of cotton which the principal agreed to furnish to him, but did not. Dozier v. Davison, 138 Ga. 190.

In Haskin v. Haskin, 41 Ill. 197, the plaintiff, agent, while carrying on in his own name, the warehouse business of defendant, issued a warehouse receipt in his own name, which was outstanding when the agency ceased. Defendant refused to honor this receipt, and plaintiff was compelled to protect it. Held, that defendant must indemnify the plaintiff. Held, also that the fact that the plaintiff had not entered the transaction upon the books, did not defeat his right to recover, if the defendant was not injured thereby.

⁹⁵ In Bayliffe v. Butterworth, 1 Exch. 425, a liability incurred by the broker in accordance with the known Liverpool usage, was held to be within the rule. In Whitehead v. Izod, L. R. 2 C. P. 228, a similar liability imposed by the rules of the stock exchange was included. To same effect: Taylor v. Stray, 2 C. B. N. S. 175; Stray v. Russell, 1 E. & E. 888; Ulster Co. Sav. Inst. v. Fourth Nat. Bank, 8 N. Y. Supp. 162.

as to losses caused by the agent's own misconduct or default.⁹⁶ And where the principal is not in default in meeting his obligations, it is held that the agent can have no claim for indemnity against losses caused by his financial inability to meet the obligations which he has voluntarily incurred on the principal's account in the execution of the agency. Thus, for example, where brokers who were carrying stocks for their principal became, by reason of a general failure of their clients to meet their obligations to them, unable to meet their own engagements, and by reason of this were declared defaulters by the stock exchange and subjected to certain liabilities according to its rules, it was held that the principal was not obliged to indemnify his brokers against those liabilities. The court agreed, "that where the agent is subjected to loss, not by reason of his having entered into the contracts into which he was authorized to enter by his principal, but by reason of a default of his own, that is to say, as in this case, by reason of his insolvency, brought on by want of means to meet his other primary obligations, it cannot be said that he has suffered loss by reason of his having entered into the contracts made by him on behalf of his principal, and consequently there is no promise which can be implied on the part of his principal to indemnify him."⁹⁷

But it will be otherwise where the agent's failure is caused solely and directly by the principal's failure to meet his obligations to the agent.⁹⁸

§ 1609. No indemnity where obligation incurred in excess of authority.—It is equally obvious that the agent can have no claim for indemnity against obligations, contractual or otherwise, which he incurred in excess of his authority, not justified by any emergency or exigency which might condone it.⁹⁹ "In order to entitle an agent to recover from his principal," it is said in a leading case,¹ "he must show, first, that the loss arose from the fact of his agency; secondly, that he was acting within the scope of his authority; and, thirdly, that the loss was not attributable to any default or laches on his part."

But though the act was at the time in excess of his authority, the principal may afterward ratify it as in other cases, and if he does so unconditionally and with full knowledge of the facts, the agent will be entitled to indemnity, as though the act had been originally authorized.²

⁹⁶ Hurst v. Holding, 3 Taunt. 32.

⁹⁷ Duncan v. Hill, L. R. 8 Ex. 242.

⁹⁸ Lacey v. Hill, L. R. 18 Eq. 182.

⁹⁹ Frixione v. Tagliaferro, 10 Moore

P. C. 175; J. I. Case Thresh. Mach. Co. v. Gardner, 24 Ky. Law Rep. 63.

¹ Frixione v. Tagliaferro, supra.

² Frixione v. Tagliaferro, supra.

§ 1610. — Unless lack of authority attributable to principal's default.—But where the agent's lack of authority was owing to the principal's default the agent would not be denied indemnity. Where the principal undertakes to direct what he himself has no authority to perform, the case is clear, as has been seen in the foregoing sections. But the agent would also be entitled to indemnity where the principal, having conferred authority, allowed the agent to go on in ignorance that the authority so conferred had been terminated by events within the peculiar knowledge of the principal but not of the agent, or by the revocation by the principal himself of which he had given the agent no notice where notice was due.

Of course, however, there would be no duty to indemnify the agent against the termination of his authority where it was terminable without notice, or where it was terminated by acts or events of which the agent was bound to take notice.

§ 1611. No indemnity where act is unlawful.—The principal cannot, however, require the agent to perform an unlawful act, and if the agent performs an act which he knows to be such, or which he must be presumed to have known was unlawful, he must answer for it like any other wrong doer, and like other wrong doers he is entitled neither to indemnity nor contribution.³ And in such a case not only does the law not imply a promise to indemnify, but it will not enforce even an express promise to that effect.

An express bond, therefore, or other formal written agreement to indemnify the agent against consequences of a proposed act known, or which he must be presumed to have known, to be unlawful, is void, as against the policy of the law. But this rule does not extend to cases wherein parties, in the prosecution of their legal rights, in good faith, have committed an unintentional wrong against another, but is limited to those cases wherein the intention is to commit a trespass; it does not include cases wherein the parties are actuated by honest motives in the assertion of what they believe to be their rights under the law, although it should subsequently transpire that they were not justified in doing the acts contemplated by them when the bond was executed.⁴

³ Coventry v. Barton, 17 Johns. (N. Y.) 142, 8 Am. Dec. 376.

⁴ Coventry v. Barton, supra; Al-laire v. Ouland, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) Cas. 54; Castle v. Noyes, 14 N. Y. 332; Nelson v. Cook, 17 Ill. 449; Stanton v. McMullen, 7 Ill. App. 326;

Moore v. Appleton, 26 Ala. 633; Ives v. Jones, 3 Iredell's (N. Car.) L. 538, 40 Am. Dec. 421; Holman v. Johnson, 1 Cowp. 341; Howe v. Buf-falo, etc., R. R., 37 N. Y. 299; Stone v. Hooker, 9 Cow. (N. Y.) 154; Jacobs v. Pollard, 10 Cush. (Mass.)

But where the act, though unlawful, has already been committed, a bond or other agreement based upon sufficient consideration to indemnify the agent against the consequences of it is valid.⁵

§ 1612. — But the doctrine of the preceding section was held not applicable where the business in which the principal was employed was not actually illegal, but merely one concerning which no action at law could be maintained. Thus the defendant had employed the plaintiff, who was a turf commission agent, to make bets for him upon horse races, and the bets were made in the plaintiff's name and lost, after which the defendant forbade the plaintiff to pay the debts. The agent however paid them, and brought action for indemnity. It appeared that if such an agent did not pay a debt so made, he was liable to be turned out of the horse exchange, and thereby prevented from going on with his business. It was held that the plaintiff was entitled to recover. Bowen, L. J., said: "I feel the force of the point that the obligation to pay a lost bet relied upon by the plaintiff is not recognized by law; but the plaintiff has placed himself in a position of pecuniary difficulty at the defendant's request, who impliedly contracted, I think, to indemnify him from the consequences which would ensue in the ordinary course of his business from the step which he had taken."⁶

§ 1613. Agent indemnified only against loss, not mere liability.— In accordance with what is probably the general rule, as a matter of legal liability at any rate, although the rule in equity may be different, it is said that the implied obligation of the principal to indemnify, is an obligation to indemnify against loss and not merely against liability.⁷ The agent would therefore be compelled to show that he has actually sustained loss, although, as has been already seen,⁸ where his liability is fixed, he need not wait until he has been sued by the other party, but may discharge the liability and recover indemnity from the principal.

287, 57 Am. Dec. 105; Shotwell v. Hamblin, 23 Miss. 156, 55 Am. Dec. 83; Forniquet v. Tegarden, 24 Miss. 96; Cumpston v. Lambert, 18 Ohio, 81, 51 Am. Dec. 442; Jameison v. Calhoun, 2 Speer (S. Car.), 19; Kemper v. Kemper, 3 Rand. (Va.) 8; Davis v. Arledge, 3 Hill (S. Car.), L. 170, 30 Am. Dec. 360; Atkins v. Johnson, 43 Vt. 78, 5 Am. Rep. 260; Armstrong v. Clarion Co., 66 Pa. 218, 5 Am. Rep. 368; Arnold v. Clifford, 2 Sumner (U. S. C. C.), 238.

⁵ Hacket v. Tilley, 11 Mod. 93; Kneeland v. Rogers, 2 Hall (N. Y. Sup. Ct.), 579; Hall v. Huntoon, 17 Vt. 244, 44 Am. Dec. 332; Knight v. Nelson, 117 Mass. 458; Griffiths v. Hardenbergh, 41 N. Y. 464; Doty v. Wilson, 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 378.

⁶ Read v. Anderson, 13 Q. B. Div. 779.

⁷ Brown v. Mechanic's Bank, 43 N. Y. App. Div. 173. See also, Otter Creek Lbr. Co. v. McElwee, 37 Ill. App. 285.

⁸ See ante, § 1606.

V.

THE AGENT'S RIGHT TO PROTECTION FROM INJURY.

§ 1614. In general.—It is not within the scope of this work to enter into a minute discussion of the liability of the employer for injuries happening to his employee in the course of his employment, either through the negligence of the employer or of a fellow-employee. These questions belong more appropriately to treatises on the subjects of Employer's Liability, Master and Servant, Torts, or Negligence. A general statement of the more important rules which govern in these cases is all which is deemed pertinent and will be given. Nothing like a full collection of the cases has been attempted. They are now so numerous as to be wholly beyond the range of a discussion which must be confined to a few pages.

1. Risks Incident to the Business.

§ 1615. General rule—Master not liable.—Every undertaking for the rendition of services is attended with more or less of risk incident to the business itself. Risks of this nature are as much within the knowledge and control of the servant or agent as of the master, and are presumably contemplated and considered by the servant when he accepts the undertaking. They result from no fault or neglect of the master, but arise from the very nature of the thing to be done, or from the circumstances under which it must be done. With reference to these, it is the rule of the law that the master is not responsible to the servant for injuries received in the execution of the undertaking and which result from the natural and ordinary risks and perils which are incident to the performance of such services including, as will be seen, the risk of the negligence of fellow servants.⁹

⁹ Assumption of Risk. Sweeney v. Central Pac. R. R. Co., 57 Cal. 15; Orman v. Mannix, 17 Cal. 564, 31 Am. St. Rep. 340, 17 L. R. A. 602; Hayden v. Smithville Mfg. Co., 29 Conn. 548; Bell v. Western, etc., R. R. Co., 70 Ga. 566; Prather v. Richmond, etc., R. R. Co., 80 Ga. 427, 12 Am. St. Rep. 263; Minty v. Union Pacific Ry. Co., 2 Idaho, 471, 4 L. R. A. 409; Bryant v. Burlington, etc., Ry. Co., 66 Iowa, 305, 55 Am. Rep. 275; Dowell v. Burlington, etc., Ry. Co., 62 Iowa, 629; Penn. R. R. Co. v. Wachter, 60 Md. 395; Wonder v. Baltimore, etc., R. R. Co., 32 Md. 411, 3 Am. Rep. 143; South Baltimore Car Works v. Schaefer, 96 Md. 88, 94 Am. St. Rep. 560; Consolidated Gas Co. v. Chambers, 112 Md. 324, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 509; Farwell v. Boston & Worcester R. R., 4 Metc. (Mass.) 49, 38 Am. Dec. 339; Yeaton v. Boston, etc., R. R. Co., 135 Mass. 418; Moulton v. Gage, 138 Mass. 390; Ft. Wayne, etc., R. R. Co. v. Gildersleeve, 33 Mich. 123; Hathaway v. Michigan Cent. R. R. Co., 51 Mich.

This rule has usually been founded upon two reasons. One is that above mentioned, that the servant knowing that he will be exposed to incidental risks, and having made no provision in the contract that they shall be otherwise borne, must be supposed to have contracted upon the basis that, as between himself and the master, he would assume the responsibility of the result.¹⁰ The other is that this rule best subserves and promotes the public interests. If the servant is to take the risks himself, he will naturally be more careful and prudent than if he could demand indemnity from his master. The result of this care and prudence is, not only that injuries are less liable to occur to the servant himself, but that they are also much less liable to happen to third persons, with the care of whose persons or property the servant may be intrusted.¹¹

The real foundation of the rule, however, is not either one of these, but the following: Under the law of life as well as under the law of the land, a loss must rest upon him on whom it falls unless there is some reason and opportunity to shift it to some one else. Under the law of justice, and, notwithstanding some notable exceptions, under the common law, a person can not be held liable for an injury for which he is in no wise at fault. With reference to the risks here concerned, they inhere in the business and are not attributable to the negligence of the master. Not being attributable to the fault of the mas-

253, 47 Am. Rep. 569; Schroeder v. C. & A. Ry. Co., 108 Mo. 322, 18 L. R. A. 827; Coyle v. Griffing Iron Co., 63 N. J. L. 609, 47 L. R. A. 147; Gibson v. Erie Ry. Co., 63 N. Y. 449, 20 Am. Rep. 552; Laning v. N. Y. Cent. R. R. Co., 49 N. Y. 521, 10 Am. Rep. 417; Sweeney v. Berlin, etc., Co., 101 N. Y. 520, 54 Am. Rep. 722; Lewis v. Seifert, 116 Pa. 628, 2 Am. St. Rep. 631; Watson v. Ry. Co., 58 Tex. 434; Nordstrom v. Spokane, etc., R. Co., 55 Wash. 521, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 364; Bormann v. Milwaukee, 93 Wis. 522, 33 L. R. A. 652; Kohn v. McNulta, 147 U. S. 238, 37 L. Ed. 150; Southern Pac. Co. v. Seley, 152 U. S. 145, 38 L. Ed. 391; Texas & Pacific Ry. Co. v. Archibald, 170 U. S. 665, 42 L. Ed. 1188; Clarke v. Holmes, 7 H. & N. 937.

¹⁰ Hutchinson v. Railway Co., 5 Exch. 343; Farwell v. Boston, etc., R. Co., 4 Metc. (Mass.) 49, 38 Am. Dec. 339.

It is, indeed, true that judges often declare that the assumption of the inherent risks is not a matter of express or implied agreement at all but a mere matter of law; and that the only risks to which the doctrine of assumption can apply are the extraordinary ones which arise from the negligence of the master. See Bria v. Westinghouse, 133 N. Y. App. Div. 346; Mansell v. Conrad, 125 N. Y. App. Div. 634. See also, Denver, etc., R. Co. v. Norgate, 72 C. C. A. 365, 141 Fed. 247, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 981, and cases cited.

¹¹ Tuttle v. Milwaukee R. Co., 122 U. S. 189, 30 L. Ed. 1114; Priestley v. Fowler, 3 Mees & Wels. 1; Illinois Central R. R. Co. v. Cox, 21 Ill. 20, 71 Am. Dec. 291; Lawler v. Androscoggin R. R. Co., 62 Me. 463, 16 Am. Rep. 492; Hanrathy v. Northern, etc., R. R. Co., 46 Md. 280.

ter, they can not be shifted upon him under the common law, but only by some statute or by contract. There being, by the hypothesis, no statute and no contract, the loss remains where it fell, upon the servant. It is not strictly accurate to say that he assumed it: he could not escape it. To say that he assumed the risk, however, would not be objectionable if it did not lead to confusion with another situation, hereafter to be considered, wherein there is room to escape, namely, where the master has been negligent, and the question arises whether the servant has assumed the risk of it in such wise as to relieve the master from a liability which would otherwise have fallen upon him.

§ 1616. — This "assumption" of the ordinary and inherent risks, by the mere fact of accepting the employment, of course presupposes, in the ordinary case, that the master has not negligently done and will not negligently do anything by which these ordinary and inherent risks will be extended or enlarged; in other words, that the master will perform his ordinary duties for the protection of the servant. There is, by the mere fact of entering upon the employment, no assumption of risks arising from the negligence of the master.

A known and existing condition, however, contemplated at the time of the employment may also be assumed thereby, under rules hereafter to be considered, although resulting from the negligent manner in which the master carries on his business.

2. Negligence of the Master.

§ 1617. Master responsible for his own negligence.—But although the servant must thus bear the responsibility of the risks which are incident to his employment, he has, as has been stated, a right to expect that the master will not add to or increase these risks or create others by his own personal negligence. It has been seen that the fact of the agency is no excuse to the agent for injuries resulting to others by his own neglect. No man can relieve himself from the responsibilities which rest alike upon all persons by becoming an agent or servant and the same rule applies to the principal or master.

If, therefore, injury results to the servant from the personal negligence of the master, the master is liable in the same manner and to the same extent as though the relation did not exist¹² unless he can ¹² Rhoades v. Varney, 91 Me. 222; Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co. v. Bayfield, 37 Mich. 205; Quincy Mining Co. v. Kitts, 42 Mich. 34; Johnson v. Boston Tow Boat Co., 135 Mass. 215, 46 Am. Rep. 458.

Fellow servant doctrine does not apply to negligence of the master where master is working with servant. Ashworth v. Stanwix, 3 El. & El. 701; Rhoades v. Varney, supra.

escape upon the ground of contributory negligence or assumption of the risk. The fact that the negligence of a fellow servant contributed with the master's negligence to cause the injury does not relieve the master.¹³

This negligence of the master may consist in his failure to observe one or more of several duties which he owes to the servant, the more important of which deserve specific mention.

§ 1618. I. For dangerous premises.—The master may incur liability to the servant for injuries received by the latter from the perils or dangers of the master's premises, of which the servant had no knowledge or notice and which he had no reason to expect, but of which the master knew, or by the exercise of reasonable care and diligence might have known. It is the general rule of the law that the owner or occupant of land or other premises is liable in damages to those coming to it, using due care, at his invitation or inducement, express or implied, on any business to be there transacted or permitted by him, for an injury there occasioned by the unsafe condition of the land or other premises, or of the access to it, which is known to him and not to them, and which he has negligently suffered to exist and of which he has given no notice. And this rule applies for the protection of the servant as well as of a stranger. Where the service is to be performed upon the principal's premises, it is the duty of the principal to exercise reasonable care to provide a reasonably suitable place in which the agent, exercising due care, can perform his duty without exposure to dangers that do not ordinarily come within the scope of such employments as usually carried on, and having provided it, to keep the same in a reasonable state of repair.¹⁴ The principal or master is not a guarantor in ¹³ Kennedy v. Swift, 234 Ill. 606, 123 Am. St. Rep. 113.

¹⁴ Louisville, etc., R. R. Co. v. Stutts, 105 Ala. 368, 53 Am. St. Rep. 127; Elledge v. Ry. Co., 100 Cal. 282, 38 Am. St. Rep. 290; Kennedy v. Chase, 119 Cal. 637, 63 Am. St. Rep. 153; Williams v. Sleepy Hollow Min. Co., 37 Colo. 62, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1170, 11 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 111; Burnside v. Peterson, 43 Colo. 382, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 76; McElligott v. Randolph, 61 Conn. 157, 29 Am. St. Rep. 181; Szymanski v. Blumenthal, 4 Penne. (Del.) 511, 103 Am. St. Rep. 132; Super. Coal & Mining Co. v.

Kaiser, 229 Ill. 29, 120 Am. St. Rep. 233; Rogers v. Cleveland, etc., Ry. Co., 211 Ill. 126, 103 Am. St. Rep. 185; Western Stone Co. v. Muscial, 196 Ill. 382, 89 Am. St. Rep. 325; Morris & Co. v. Malone, 200 Ill. 132, 93 Am. St. Rep. 180; McKee v. Chicago, etc., R. R. Co., 83 Iowa, 616, 13 L. R. A. 817; Barto v. Iowa Telephone Co., 126 Iowa, 241, 106 Am. St. Rep. 347; Schmalstieg v. Leavenworth Coal Co., 65 Kan. 753, 59 L. R. A. 707; Tradewater Coal Co. v. Johnson, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 1777, 61 L. R. A. 161; Bowden v. Derby, 97 Me. 536, 94 Am. St. Rep. 516, 63 L. R. A. 223; this respect, nor is it his duty to aim at perfection; reasonable care to provide and maintain a reasonably safe place is the measure of the principal's or master's obligation.¹⁵ Failing in this, he will, subject to the doctrine of assumption of risks hereafter considered, be liable for an injury resulting therefrom.

§ 1619. — Warning.—Since the servant is presumed to know the usual and ordinary risks incident to the business itself, the master owes the servant no duty to warn him against them. This is true, also, of obvious and open dangers.¹⁶ But, on the other hand, the servant has a reasonable right to expect that if the lands and premises of the master, where it is the express or implied right or duty of the servant to go or to be, in the performance of his undertaking, contain unusual or hidden dangers from which he may suffer injury and which exist to the knowledge of the master, but of which the servant is igno-

Coombs v. New Bedford Cordage Co., 102 Mass. 572, 3 Am. Rep. 506; Flynn v. Prince Collins Co., 198 Mass. 224, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 568; Swoboda v. Ward, 40 Mich. 420; Dayharsh v. Hannibal, etc., R. R. Co., 103 Mo. 570, 23 Am. St. Rep. 900; Burdict v. Missouri Pac. R. R. Co., 123 Mo. 221, 45 Am. St. Rep. 528, 26 L. R. A. 384; Saunders v. Eastern Hydraulic, etc., Co., 63 N. J. L. 554, 76 Am. St. Rep. 222; Burns v. Delaware, etc., Tel. Co., 70 N. J. L. 745, 67 L. R. A. 956; Donnegan v. Erhardt, 119 N. Y. 468, 7 L. R. A. 527; Wellston Coal Co. v. Smith, 65 Ohio St. 70, 87 Am. St. Rep. 547, 55 L. R. A. 99; Anderson v. Bennett, 16 Ore. 515, 8 Am. St. Rep. 311; Collins v. Harrison, 25 R. I. 489, 64 L. R. A. 156; Downey v. Gemini Mining Co., 24 Utah, 431, 91 Am. St. Rep. 798; Fisher v. Chesapeake, etc., Ry. Co., 104 Va. 635, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 954; McMillan v. North Star Min. Co., 32 Wash. 579, 98 Am. St. Rep. 908; Portance v. Lehigh Valley Co., 101 Wis. 574, 70 Am. St. Rep. 932; McMahon v. Ida Mining Co., 95 Wis. 308, 60 Am. St. Rep. 117; Johnson v. First Nat. Bank, 79 Wis. 414, 24 Am. St. Rep. 722; Armour & Co. v. Russell, 144 Fed. 614, 75 C. C. A. 416, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 602.

¹⁵ See Galveston, etc., Ry. Co. v. Gormley, 91 Tex. 393, 66 Am. St. Rep. 894; Little Rock, etc., Ry. Co. v. Eubanks, 48 Ark. 460, 3 Am. St. Rep. 245.

¹⁶ No duty to warn where obvious.—Hagins v. Bell Telephone Co., 134 Ga. 641, 137 Am. St. Rep. 270; Haskell v. Przewdziankowski, 170 Ind. 1, 127 Am. St. Rep. 352, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 972; Podvin v. Pepperell Mfg. Co., 104 Me. 561, 129 Am. St. Rep. 411; Hardy v. Chicago, R. I., etc., R. Co., 139 Iowa, 314, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 997; Cooper v. Cashman, 190 Mass. 75, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 209; Anderson v. Columbia Improvement Co., 41 Wash. 83, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 840; Bollington v. Louisville, etc., R. Co., 125 Ky. 186, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1045; Ford v. Pulp Co., 172 Mass. 544, 48 L. R. A. 96; Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Boland, 96 Ala. 626, 18 L. R. A. 260; McLaine v. Head & D. Co., 71 N. H. 294, 93 Am. St. Rep. 522, 58 L. R. A. 462; Rahles v. Thompson, 137 Wis. 506, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 296; Nelson-Bethel Co. v. Pitts, 131 Ky. 65, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1013; Nordstrom v. Spokane R. Co., 55 Wash. 521, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 364.]

No duty to warn even a minor employee of dangers obvious to one of his years and discretion. Cronin v.

rant, he will receive notice of them so as to be upon his guard.¹⁷ This duty of warning would be increased if the servant were, to the knowledge of the master, so young or ignorant or inexperienced as to be less likely to anticipate dangers from the employment than a person of greater age, knowledge or experience.¹⁸

Columbian Mfg. Co., 75 N. H. 319, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 111; Beghold v. Auto Body Co., 149 Mich. 14, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 609; Whalen v. Rosnosky, 195 Mass. 545, 122 Am. St. Rep. 271.

¹⁷ Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Hall, 87 Ala. 708, 13 Am. St. Rep. 84, 4 L. R. A. 710; West. Ry. v. Russell, 144 Ala. 142, 113 Am. St. Rep. 24; Burnside v. Peterson, 43 Colo. 382, 96 Pac. 256, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 76; Consolidated Coal Co. v. Wombacher, 134 Ill. 57; Louisville, etc., Ry. Co. v. Wright, 115 Ind. 378, 7 Am. St. Rep. 432; Pittsburg, etc., Ry. Co. v. Adams, 105 Ind. 151; Salem Stone & Lime Co. v. Griffin, 139 Ind. 141; Christopherson v. Chicago, etc., Ry., 135 Iowa, 409, 124 Am. St. Rep. 284; Brice-Nash v. Barton Salt Co., 79 Kan. 110, 131 Am. St. Rep. 284, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 749; Myhan v. Louisiana, etc., Co., 41 La. Ann. 964, 17 Am. St. Rep. 436, 7 L. R. A. 172; Faren v. Sellers & Co., 39 La. Ann. 1011, 4 Am. St. Rep. 256; Hume v. Fort Halifax Power Co., 106 Me. 78, 138 Am. St. Rep. 332; Crimmins v. Booth, 202 Mass. 17, 132 Am. St. Rep. 468; Ribich v. Lake Superior Smelting Co., 123 Mich. 401, 81 Am. St. Rep. 215, 48 L. R. A. 649; Parkhurst v. Johnson, 50 Mich. 70, 45 Am. Rep. 28; McDonald v. Chicago, etc., Ry. Co., 41 Minn. 439, 16 Am. St. Rep. 711; Hewett v. Woman's Hospital, 73 N. H. 556, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 496; Willis v. Plymouth Telephone Co., 75 N. H. 453, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 477; Blaisdale v. Davis Paper Co., 75 N. H. 497, 139 Am. St. Rep. 735; Western Union Tel. Co. v. McMullen, 58 N. J. L. 155, 32 L. R. A. 351; Cetofone v. Camden Coke Co., 78 N. J. L. 662, 27 L. R. A. 1058;

Brennan v. Gordon, 118 N. Y. 489, 16 Am. St. Rep. 775, 8 L. R. A. 818; Wagner v. Jayne Chemical Co., 147 Pa. 475, 30 Am. St. Rep. 745; Galveston, etc., Ry. Co. v. Garrett, 73 Tex. 262, 15 Am. St. Rep. 781; Missouri Pacific Ry. Co. v. White, 76 Tex. 102, 18 Am. St. Rep. 33; Michael v. Roanoke Machine Works, 90 Va. 492, 44 Am. St. Rep. 927; Miner v. Franklin County Tel. Co., 83 Vt. 311, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1195; Kliegel v. Aitken, 94 Wis. 432, 35 L. R. A. 249; Cincinnati, etc., R. Co. v. Gray, 41 C. C. A. 535, 101 Fed. 623, 50 L. R. A. 47.

In Dougherty v. Dobson, 214 Pa. 252, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 90, it was held that the master, owing such a duty to a minor, could not discharge it by placards, warning employees of the danger, posted around the room, when the foreman expressly directed the doing of the act warned against.

But in Shuster v. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co., 6 Penne. (Del.) 4, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 407, it was held that a placard posted on a freight car, notifying employees that it was "crippled" and dangerous, was a sufficient discharge of his duty to warn.

Duty to warn, when it exists, is non-delegable: Brice-Nash v. Barton Salt Co., 79 Kan. 110, 131 Am. St. Rep. 284, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 749; Koerner v. St. Louis Car Co., 209 Mo. 141, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 292; Anderson v. Pittsburg Coal Co., 108 Minn. 455, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 624.

¹⁸ Tedford v. Los Angeles Elec. Co., 134 Cal. 76, 54 L. R. A. 85; Ingerman v. Moore, 90 Cal. 410, 25 Am. St. Rep. 138; May v. Smith, 92 Ga. 95, 44 Am. St. Rep. 84; Hinckley v. Horazdowsky, 133 Ill. 359, 23 Am. St. Rep. 618, 8 L. R. A. 490; Norton

§ 1620. ——— Unsafeness where servant had no business to be.—

But this rule respecting a safe place does not apply to dangers in places where the servant has no express or implied right or duty to be. If the agent impelled by mere idle curiosity or some other motive having no relation to the service, goes into a place of danger, into which the master had no reasonable ground to anticipate that he might go, the master would not be liable;¹⁹ but the master must take into his consideration the age, habits and instincts of his servants, and will be liable if he fails to warn them of dangers known to him in places

v. Volzke, 158 Ill. 402, 49 Am. St. Rep. 167; Newbury v. Getchel, etc., Mfg. Co., 100 Iowa, 441, 62 Am. St. Rep. 582; Meier v. Way, Johnson Co., 136 Iowa, 302, 125 Am. St. Rep. 254; Taylor v. Wootan, 1 Ind. App. 188, 50 Am. St. Rep. 200; Hill v. Gust, 55 Ind. 45; St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Valirius, 56 Ind. 511; Chambers v. Woodbury Mfg. Co., 106 Md. 496, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 383; Ciriack v. Merchants' Woolen Co., 151 Mass. 152, 21 Am. St. Rep. 438, 6 L. R. A. 733; Parkhurst v. Johnson, 50 Mich. 70, 45 Am. Rep. 28; Coombs v. New Bedford Cordage Co., 102 Mass. 572, 3 Am. Rep. 506; Sullivan v. India, etc., Co., 113 Mass. 396; Anderson v. Morrison, 22 Minn. 274; Adams v. Grand Rapids Refrigerator Co., 160 Mich. 590, 136 Am. St. Rep. 454, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 953, 19 Ann. Cas. 1152; Norfolk Beet-Sugar Co. v. Hight, 56 Neb. 162; Omaha Bottling Co. v. Theiler, 59 Neb. 257, 80 Am. St. Rep. 673; Smith v. Oxford Iron Co., 42 N. J. L. 467, 36 Am. Rep. 535; Addicks v. Christoph, 62 N. J. L. 786, 72 Am. St. Rep. 687; Brennan v. Gordon, 118 N. Y. 489, 16 Am. St. Rep. 775, 8 L. R. A. 818; Turner v. Goldsboro Lbr. Co., 119 N. C. 387; Cleveland Rolling Mill Co. v. Corrigan, 46 Ohio St. 283, 15 Am. St. Rep. 596, 3 L. R. A. 385; Rummel v. Dilworth, Porter & Co., 131 Pa. 509, 17 Am. St. Rep. 827; Ross v. Walker, 139 Pa. 42, 23 Am. St. Rep. 160; Tagg v. McGeorge, 155 Pa. 368, 35 Am. St. Rep. 889; Baker v. Alleghany, etc., R. R. Co., 95 Pa. 211, 40 Am. Rep. 634; Ewing

v. Lanark Fuel Co., 65 W. Va. 726, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 487; Hightower v. Bamberg Cotton Mills, 48 S. C. 190; Reynolds v. Boston & Maine R. R., 64 Vt. 66, 33 Am. St. Rep. 908; Nadau v. White River Lbr. Co., 76 Wis. 120, 20 Am. St. Rep. 29; Jones v. Florence Mining Co., 66 Wis. 268, 57 Am. Rep. 269; Greenberg v. Whitcomb Lbr. Co., 90 Wis. 225, 48 Am. St. Rep. 911, 28 L. R. A. 439; Union Pacific Railroad Co. v. Fort, 17 Wall. (U. S. Sup. Ct.) 553, 21 L. Ed. 739.

¹⁹ Severy v. Nickerson, 120 Mass. 306, 21 Am. Rep. 514; Pierce v. Whitcomb, 48 Vt. 127, 21 Am. Rep. 120; Wright v. Rawson, 52 Iowa, 329, 35 Am. Rep. 275; Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co. v. Sentmeyer, 92 Pa. 276, 37 Am. Rep. 684; Doggett v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 34 Iowa, 284; McCann v. Atlantic Mills, 20 R. I. 566; Olson v. Minneapolis, etc., R. Co., 76 Minn. 149, 48 L. R. A. 796; Kennedy v. Chase, 119 Cal. 637, 63 Am. St. Rep. 153; Stodden v. Anderson Mfg. Co., 138 Iowa, 398, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 614; Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Hocker, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 982, 64 S. W. 638; Ellsworth v. Metheney, 44 C. C. A. 484, 104 Fed. 119, 51 L. R. A. 389; Pioneer Min. & Mfg. Co. v. Talley, 152 Ala. 162, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 861. See also, O'Brien v. Western Steel Co., 100 Mo. 182, 18 Am. St. Rep. 536; Sievers v. Peters Box Co., 151 Ind. 642; Wise v. Ackerman, 76 Md. 375; Hoffard v. Illinois Central Ry., 138 Iowa, 543, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 797.

where he ought reasonably to have anticipated that their natural instincts or curiosity would lead them.²⁰

§ 1621. — Unsafety resulting from doing of the work itself.—The doctrine of the safe place also does not apply for obvious reasons to cases in which the unsafety arises wholly in and from the ordinary doing of the work itself, as where employees must make their own place to work as they go along and the unsafety arises from that fact;²¹ or where the conditions of the work are necessarily and constantly shifting and changing as the work progresses, as in work of construction, excavation, demolition, and the like, and the unsafety arises from that fact and not from anything inherent in the place itself;²² or where the work itself is to correct or remove the unsafety

²⁰ Atlanta Cotton Factory Co. v. Speer, 69 Ga. 137, 47 Am. Rep. 750.

Compare Ellsworth v. Metheny, 44 C. C. A. 484, 104 Fed. 119, 51 L. R. A. 389; and Terre Haute, etc., R. Co. v. Fowler, 154 Ind. 682, 48 L. R. A. 531.

²¹ See Peschel v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 62 Wis. 338; Walaszewski v. Schoknecht, 127 Wis. 376; Miller v. Centralia Pulp Co., 134 Wis. 316, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 742; Knudson v. La Crosse Stone Co., 145 Wis. 394, 33 L. R. A. (N. S.) 223; Carlson v. Oregon Short Line, 21 Oreg. 450.

Scaffolds, etc. —The decisions respecting scaffolds, staging, and the like are conflicting; but in general if the master undertakes to furnish the scaffold, he is under the same obligation as to this as to any other appliance. See McBeath v. Rawle, 192 Ill. 626, 69 L. R. A. 697; Cheatham v. Hogan, 50 Wash. 465, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 951; Blomquist v. Chicago, etc., Ry. Co., 60 Minn. 426.

But where the workmen are to build their own scaffolds and the master furnishes reasonably adequate and suitable material, he is not liable for negligent defects in construction. The servants who build the scaffolds are fellow servants with those who use them. See Channon v. Sanford Co., 70 Conn. 573, 66 Am. St. Rep. 133, 41 L. R. A. 200; Beesley v. Wheeler, 103 Mich. 196, 27 L. R. A. 266; Gombert v. McKay, 201

N. Y. 27, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1234; Kimmer v. Weber, 151 N. Y. 417, 56 Am. St. Rep. 630; Lambert v. Pulp Co., 72 Vt. 278; Haakensen v. Fibre Co., 76 N. H. 443, Ann. Cas. 1913 B. 1122; Ross v. Walker, 139 Pa. 42, 23 Am. St. Rep. 160; Leishman v. Union Iron Works, 148 Cal. 274, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 500; Kennedy v. Spring, 160 Mass. 203; Callahan v. Phillips Academy, 180 Mass. 183; Olsen v. Nixon, 61 N. J. L. 671.

Reasonable care in selection of material not exercised. Farrell v. Eastern Mach. Co., 77 Conn. 484, 68 L. R. A. 239; Donahue v. Buck, 197 Mass. 550, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 476.

These general conclusions however, are likely to be affected by the "departmental rule." See Sims v. American Steel Barge Co., 56 Minn. 68, 45 Am. St. Rep. 451; Cadden v. American Steel Barge Co., 88 Wis. 409.

By the "association" or "consociation" theory. See Chicago, etc., Ry. Co. v. Maroney, 170 Ill. 520, 62 Am. St. Rep. 396. And by the vice-principal doctrine. See Blomquist v. Chicago, etc., Ry. Co., 60 Minn. 426; McNamara v. MacDonough, 102 Cal. 575.

²² Maloney v. Florence, etc., Ry., 39 Colo. 384, 121 Am. St. Rep. 180, 12 Ann. Cas. 621, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 348; Citrone v. O'Rourke Eng. Co., 188 N. Y. 339, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.)

caused by some unusual occurrence or emergency, and the injury arises from that very condition.²³

§ 1622. ——— Unsafety caused by conditions upon adjacent premises.—The master is, of course, not responsible directly for that which takes place upon the premises of others over whom he has no control. He has ordinarily neither the power nor the duty to prevent or abate that which the owners may lawfully do upon adjacent premises.²⁴ But where what is or has been done upon the adjacent premises directly causes the master's premises to be or to become an unsafe place in which his servants or agents are to perform their duties, the master may owe to his servants or agents a duty to warn, and even to reconstruct or rearrange his own premises so that they shall satisfy the legal requirement of a reasonably safe place in which to work.²⁵ Dangers of this sort also may be assumed by the servant, so as to release the master from liability, either by entering into or remaining in the employment with knowledge of their existence and without exacting from the master an undertaking to remedy the difficulty.²⁶ The servant's contributory negligence may also bar recovery as in other cases.²⁷

§ 1623. ——— Liability for places and instruments used, but not owned, by the master.—It follows, and for the same reason, that the master should be under the same duty to the servant, to use reason-

340; Russell v. Lehigh Valley R. Co., 188 N. Y. 344, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 344; Oleson v. Maple Grove Co., 115 Iowa, 74; Belque v. Hosmer, 169 Mass. 541; Moore v. Penn. R. Co., 167 Pa. 495; McElwaine-Richards Co. v. Wall, 166 Ind. 267; Grayson-McLeod Lumber Co. v. Carter, 76 Ark. 69; Richards v. Riverside Iron Works, 56 W. Va. 510; Christienson v. Rio Grande West. R. Co., 27 Utah, 132, 101 Am. St. Rep. 945; Miller v. Moran Co., 39 Wash. 631, 109 Am. St. Rep. 917, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 283; Armour v. Hahn, 111 U. S. 313, 28 L. Ed. 440; Omaha Packing Co. v. Sanduski, 84 C. C. A. 89, 155 Fed. 897, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 355; Westinghouse Co. v. Callaghan, 83 C. C. A. 669, 155 Fed. 397, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 361.

²³ Maloney v. Florence, etc., R. Co., 39 Colo. 384, 121 Am. St. Rep. 180, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 348, 12 A. & E.

Ann. Cas. 621; Neagle v. Syracuse, etc., R. Co., 185 N. Y. 270, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 321; Vaughn v. Cal. Cent. R. Co., 83 Cal. 18; Martin v. Des Moines El. L. Co., 131 Iowa, 724; Kletschka v. Minneapolis, etc., R. Co., 80 Minn. 238.

²⁴ Electric Ry. Co. v. Moore, 113 Tenn. 531; Moore v. Electric Ry. Co., 119 Tenn. 710, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 978.

²⁵ South Side Elev. Ry. v. Nesvig, 214 Ill. 463; Helfrich v. Ogden City Ry., 7 Utah, 186; Indianapolis Traction Co. v. Holtsclaw, 41 Ind. App. 520.

²⁶ Hall v. Wakefield, etc., Ry., 178 Mass. 98; Drake v. Auburn City Ry., 173 N. Y. 466; Indianapolis Traction Co. v. Holtsclaw, 41 Ind. App. 520.

²⁷ Helfrich v. Ogden City Ry., 7 Utah, 186; Savage v. Rhode Island Co., 28 R. I. 391.

able care in seeing that reasonably safe appliances and a reasonably safe place are furnished the servant for use in his employment, whether the master is the owner of the premises or appliances or is merely a lessee or a licensee.²⁸ It has accordingly been held that a railroad company must use the same care in maintaining a track leased and used by it as one owned by it;²⁹ and that it owes the same duty in regard to cars belonging to another company used by it as it does in regard to its own cars.³⁰ But in Massachusetts the rule has been applied that a company is not liable for the safety of premises or appliances used by it unless it had such control over them as to be able to repair them;³¹ and it has been held that under a statute requiring companies to keep their "ways" in proper condition, a railroad could not be held for the unsafe condition of a track used by it as a mere licensee for the purpose of delivering freight.³²

This question should not be confused with the liability of a master who has hired his servant to another. It has been held, and it would seem properly, that the general master in such a case is not liable for ²⁸ McGuire v. Bell Telephone Co., 167 N. Y. 208, 52 L. R. A. 437; Miner v. Franklin County Tel. Co., 83 Vt. 311, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1195.

²⁹ Wisconsin Central R. R. v. Ross, 142 Ill. 9, 34 Am. St. Rep. 49.

³⁰ Gottlieb v. N. Y., etc., R. R. Co., 100 N. Y. 462; Budge v. Railroad & Steamship Co., 108 La. 349.

But see McMullen v. Carnegie Co., 158 Pa. 518, 23 L. R. A. 448, where the court admitted the doctrine as to railroads but refused to extend it to the steel company which was owner and user of miles of side-tracks, and employed the plaintiff, as brakeman on cars run on such side-tracks, but which belonged to the railroads. For the unsafe condition of these cars the court refused to hold the steel company liable.

And so where a shed built over a railroad track by a third party was allowed to become unsafe. Doyle v. Toledo, etc., R. R. Co., 127 Mich. 94, 89 Am. St. Rep. 456, 54 L. R. A. 461; and where railroad scales on the track of a railroad were in an unsafe condition, the same result was reached, the scales being owned by a coal company. Little Rock, etc., R. R. Co. v. Cagle, 53 Ark. 347.

But a different result was reached where an employee was injured by reason of a third party's carelessness in piling up boxes on a wharf immediately adjacent to the company's tracks. Carolan v. Southern Pac. Co., 84 Fed. 84.

³¹ Trask v. Old Colony Railroad, 156 Mass. 298; Dunn v. Boston, etc., St. Ry. Co., 189 Mass. 62, 109 Am. St. Rep. 601.

In Robinson v. St. Johnsbury, etc., R. R. Co., 80 Vt. 129, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1249, 12 Ann. Cas. 1060, it was held that an express company owed no duty to see that the cars furnished by the railroad company for the use of express messengers were in a reasonably safe condition, the express company not being in the possession or control of the cars. Citing Chan-non v. Sanford Co., referred to in the second note hereafter.

³² Engel v. N. Y., etc., R. R. Co., 160 Mass. 260, 22 L. R. A. 283.

the lack of care exercised by the one to whom the servant was hired in constructing or maintaining a reasonably safe place for his use.³³

§ 1624. II. For dangerous appliances, tools and machinery.—The same general rules apply to the appliances, tools and machinery, which the master has expressly or impliedly undertaken to furnish. The master owes a duty to exercise ordinary and reasonable care in view of the nature of the employment to provide and maintain reasonably safe appliances, tools and machinery,³⁴ but he is under no obligation to provide the newest, latest or best machinery, tools or appliances, or to adopt every new improvement; he may conduct his business with such machinery, tools and appliances as he deems best adapted to his purposes and means, provided he uses reasonable prudence and care in the selection of such as are reasonably safe and proper for use, and keeps them in a reasonable state of repair.³⁵ The use of any machinery in-

³³ Channon v. Sanford Co., 70 Conn. 573, 66 Am. St. Rep. 133, 41 L. R. A. 200; Hardy v. Shedden Co., 24 C. C. A. 261, 78 Fed. 610, 37 L. R. A. 33.

³⁴ Duty as to instrumentalities.—Louisville, etc., R. R. Co. v. Stutts, 105 Ala. 368, 53 Am. St. Rep. 127; Last Chance M. & M. Co. v. Ames, 23 Colo. 167; Brazil Block Coal Co. v. Gibson, 160 Ind. 319, 98 Am. St. Rep. 281; Hannibal, etc., R. R. Co. v. Kanaley, 39 Kan. 1; Fuller v. Tremont Lbr. Co., 114 La. 266, 108 Am. St. Rep. 348; Cowett v. American Woolen Co., 97 Me. 543; Griffin v. Boston, etc., R. R. Co., 148 Mass. 143, 12 Am. St. Rep. 526, 1 L. R. A. 698; Johnson v. Spear, 76 Mich. 139, 15 Am. St. Rep. 298; McDonald v. Michigan Cent. R. R. Co., 132 Mich. 372, 102 Am. St. Rep. 426; Nutt v. Southern Pacific Ry. Co., 25 Ore. 291; Service v. Shoneman, 196 Pa. 63, 79 Am. St. Rep. 689, 69 L. R. A. 792; Purdy v. Westinghouse, etc., Co., 197 Pa. 257, 80 Am. St. Rep. 816, 51 L. R. A. 881; International, etc., Ry. Co. v. Kernan, 78 Tex. 294, 22 Am. St. Rep. 52, 9 L. R. A. 703; Texas & Pacific Ry. Co. v. Huffman, 83 Tex. 286; Bertha Zinc Co. v. Martin, 93 Va. 791, 70 L. R. A. 999; Richmond, etc., Ry. Co. v. Williams, 86 Va. 165, 19 Am. St. Rep. 876; Sroufe v. Moran Bros. Co., 28 Wash. 381, 92 Am. St.

Rep. 847, 58 L. R. A. 313; Texas & Pacific Ry. Co. v. Barrett, 166 U. S. 617, 41 L. Ed. 1136; American Bridge Co. v. Seeds, 75 C. C. A. 407, 144 Fed. 605, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1041.

In Mather v. Rillston, 156 U. S. 391, 39 L. Ed. 464, it is said: "We think it may be laid down as a legal principle that in all occupations which are attended with great and unusual danger there must be used all appliances readily attainable known to science for the prevention of accidents, and that the neglect to provide such readily attainable appliances will be regarded as proof of culpable negligence."

As to materials, the same general rule applies as to tools, machinery, etc. See Drew v. Western Steel Car Co., 616 Ala. 174, 40 L. R. A. (N. S.) 890; Neveu v. Sears, 155 Mass. 303; Mooney v. Beattie, 180 Mass. 451, 70 L. R. A. 831.

³⁵ Davis v. Augusta Factory, 92 Ga. 712; Western, etc., R. R. Co. v. Bishop, 50 Ga. 465; Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Driscoll, 176 Ill. 330; Monmouth Mining Co. v. Erling, 148 Ill. 521, 39 Am. St. Rep. 187; Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Orr, 84 Ind. 50; Lake Shore, etc., Ry. Co. v. McCormick, 74 Ind. 440; Burns v. Chicago, etc., Ry. Co., 69 Iowa, 450, 58 Am. Rep. 227; Brann v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., volves more or less of risk, and in many cases the degree of risk is very great. This risk, however, is a risk incident to the business, and 53 Iowa, 595, 36 Am. Rep. 243; Wonder v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., 32 Md. 411, 3 Am. Rep. 143; Wormell v. Maine Central Rr. Co., 79 Me. 397, 1 Am. St. Rep. 321; Ross v. Pearson Cordage Co., 164 Mass. 257, 49 Am. St. Rep. 459; Goldthwait v. Haverill, etc., St. Ry. Co., 160 Mass. 554; Thain v. Old Colony R. Co., 161 Mass. 353; Coombs v. New Bedford Cordage Co., 102 Mass. 572, 3 Am. Rep. 506; Ford v. Fitchburg R. R. Co., 110 Mass. 240, 14 Am. Rep. 598; Jones v. Granite Mills, 126 Mass. 84, 30 Am. Rep. 661; Shadford v. Ann Arbor St. Ry. Co., 111 Mich. 390; Hewitt v. Flint, etc., R. Co., 67 Mich. 61; Michigan Cent. R. Co. v. Smithson, 45 Mich. 212; Ft. Wayne, etc., R. Co. v. Gildersleeve, 33 Mich. 133; Grattis v. Kansas City, etc., R. Co., 153 Mo. 380, 77 Am. St. Rep. 721, 48 L. R. A. 399; Brands v. St. Louis Car Co., 213 Mo. 698, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 701; Vanderpool v. Partridge, 79 Neb. 165, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 668; Harley v. Buffalo Car Mfg. Co., 142 N. Y. 31; Sweeney v. Berlin & Jones Envelope Co., 101 N. Y. 520, 54 Am. Rep. 722; Corcoran v. Holbrook, 59 N. Y. 517, 17 Am. Rep. 369; Augerstein v. Jones, 139 Pa. 183, 23 Am. St. Rep. 174; Keenan v. Waters, 181 Pa. 247; Payne v. Reese, 100 Pa. 301; Philadelphia, etc., R. Co. v. Keenan, 103 Pa. 124; McCann v. Atlantic Mills, 20 R. I. 566; Darracott v. Chesapeake, etc., R. Co., 83 Va. 238, 5 Am. St. Rep. 266.

In Alabama, however, it is held to be the duty of the employer to keep "reasonably abreast with improved methods;" that while it was not the duty of the employer to adopt every new invention which might lessen danger, "but it is their duty to discontinue old methods which are insecure, and to adopt such improvements and advancements as are in ordinary use by prudently conducted roads engaged in like business, and surrounded by like circumstances." Richmond, etc., R. R. Co. v. Jones, 92 Ala. 218; Georgia Pac. Ry. Co. v. Propst, 83 Ala. 518; Louisville, etc., Ry. Co. v. Allen, 78 Ala. 494.

The North Carolina court, in holding that failure of a railroad company to equip its cars with a safety coupler was negligence per se, adopted practically the same rule. Lloyd v. Hanes, 126 N. C. 359; Troxler v. Southern Ry. Co., 124 N. C. 189, 76 Am. St. Rep. 580, 44 L. R. A. 313; Greenlee v. Southern Ry. Co., 122 N. C. 977, 65 Am. St. Rep. 734, 41 L. R. A. 399. See also, Galveston, etc., Ry. Co. v. Gormley (Tex. Civ. App.), 27 S. W. 1051; Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Warner (Tex. Civ. App.), 36 S. W. 118; France v. Rome, etc., Co., 88 Hun, 318; Burke v. Witherbee, 98 N. Y. 562.

By what standard the reasonable safeness of appliances is to be determined is more or less in dispute. A majority of the courts apparently consider that "reasonably safe" means in compliance with the ordinary usages and customs which prevail in like businesses. See Titus v. Bradford, etc., Co., 136 Pa. 618, 20 Am. St. Rep. 944; Briggs v. Chicago & N. W. Ry., 60 C. C. A. 513, 125 Fed. 745; Burke v. Witherbee, 98 N. Y. 562; Kehler v. Schwenk, 144 Pa. 348, 27 Am. St. Rep. 633, 13 L. R. A. 374; Roberts v. Port Blakely Mill Co., 30 Wash. 25; Troxler v. So. Ry., 124 N. C. 189, 70 Am. St. Rep. 580, 44 L. R. A. 313; Mississippi Logging Co. v. Schneider, 20 C. C. A. 390, 74 Fed. 195; Ship Bldg. Works v. Nuttall, 119 Pa. 149. Other courts do not make custom conclusive, but admit it as evidence only of what is reasonably safe under all the circumstances of the case. See Geno v. Fall Mountain Paper Co., 68 Vt. 568; Wiita v. Interstate Iron Co., 103 Minn. 303, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 128; Crocker v. Pusey if the servant, being of sufficient age and experience to appreciate the dangers accepts the employment,³⁶ or continues in it,³⁷ knowing, or having full opportunity to know, of the dangers, he assumes the responsibility of injury.

§ 1625. ——— Warning.—But even in this case, a duty of warning may attach to the master. If there are concealed dangers known to the master, but of which the servant is ignorant, it is the duty of the master to warn the servant of their existence.³⁸ So if, by reason

Co., 3 Penne. (Del.) 1; Going v. Alabama Steel Co., 141 Ala. 537; Washington etc., Co. v. McDade, 135 U. S. 554, 34 L. Ed. 235; Barclay v. Puget Sound Lumber Co., 48 Wash. 241, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 140; McCormick Harvesting Co. v. Burandt, 136 Ill. 170; Wheeler v. Wason Mfg. Co., 135 Mass. 294.

Furnishing better or safer appliances than the law would otherwise require will impose an obligation on the master to maintain them in good condition where the servant has been induced to rely thereon for protection. See Scheurer v. Banner Rubber Co., 227 Mo. 347, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1207.

³⁶ Dowling v. Allen, 74 Mo. 13, 41 Am. Rep. 298; Smith v. St. Louis, etc., Ry. Co., 69 Mo. 32, 33 Am. Rep. 484; Porter v. Hannibal, etc., R. Co., 71 Mo. 66, 36 Am. Rep. 454; Coombs v. New Bedford Cord. Co., 102 Mass. 572, 3 Am. Rep. 506; Sweeney v. Central Pac. R. Co., 57 Cal. 15; Hayden v. Smithville Mfg. Co., 29 Conn. 584; Bell v. Western, etc., R. Co., 70 Ga. 566; Dowell v. Burlington, etc., R. Co., 62 Iowa, 629; Yeaton v. Boston, etc., R. Co., 135 Mass. 418; Fort Wayne, etc., R. Co. v. Gildersleeve, 33 Mich. 133; Hathaway v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 51 Mich. 253, 47 Am. Rep. 569; Richards v. Rough, 53 Mich. 212; Gibson v. Erie Ry. Co., 63 N. Y. 449, 20 Am. Rep. 552; Lanning v. New York Cent. R. Co., 49 N. Y. 521, 10 Am. Rep. 417; Watson v. Railway Co., 58 Tex. 434; Wonder v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., 32 Md. 411, 3 Am. Rep. 143.

³⁷ Swoboda v. Ward, 40 Mich. 420; Richards v. Rough, 53 Mich. 212; Pingree v. Leyland, 135 Mass. 398; Huddleston v. Lowell Machine Shop, 106 Mass. 282; Umbach v. Lake Shore, etc., Ry. Co., 83 Ind. 191; Bell v. Western, etc., R. Co., 70 Ga. 566; McGlynn v. Brodie, 31 Cal. 376; Sowden v. Idaho Mining Co., 55 Cal. 443; Camp Point Mfg. Co. v. Ballou, 71 Ill. 417; Kroy v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 32 Iowa, 357; Behm v. Armour, 58 Wis. 1; Sullivan v. Louisville Bridge Co., 9 Bush (Ky.), 31; Porter v. Hannibal, etc., R. Co., 71 Mo. 66, 36 Am. Rep. 454.

³⁸ Many cases involving the duty to warn are collected in the note to the preceding section and the citation will not be repeated here. See also, Polaski v. Pittsburg Coal Co., 134 Wis. 259, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 952; Fleming v. Northern Paper Mill, 135 Wis. 157, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 701; Dowling v. Allen, 74 Mo. 13, 41 Am. Rep. 298; Nickel v. Columbia Paper Co., 95 Mo. App. 226; Baxter v. Roberts, 44 Cal. 187, 13 Am. Rep. 160; Ford v. Fitchburg R. R. Co., 110 Mass. 240, 14 Am. Rep. 598; Texas, etc., Ry. Co. v. McAtee, 61 Tex. 695; Ryan v. Fowler, 24 N. Y. 410, 82 Am. Dec. 315; Atchison, etc., R. R. Co. v. Holt, 29 Kan. 149; Malone v. Hawley, 46 Cal. 409; Hayden v. Smithville Mfg. Co., 29 Conn. 548.

There is no duty to warn the servant of that which he knew as well as the master possibly could know. Beghold v. Auto Body Co., 149 Mich. 14, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 609.

In Smith v. Peninsular Car Works, of the youth or inexperience of the servant, he is not aware of the dangers involved, it is the duty of the master to inform the servant of them if they are known to him.³⁹ It is not enough in these cases that the dangerous parts of the machinery should be visible, because the servant, though knowing the fact, may be utterly ignorant of the risks.⁴⁰ There can however be no duty to warn against that of which the master himself was ignorant and which he was not bound to know.⁴¹

§ 1626. ——— Inspection—Maintenance.—The duty of the master, as has been stated, is not merely to exercise reasonable care to furnish, but also to reasonably maintain, renew or repair. This involves the duty of reasonable inspection,⁴² where that is necessary to enable the main duty to be performed.⁴³

60 Mich. 501, 1 Am. St. Rep. 542, the plaintiff an employee of defendant was engaged in carrying molten iron over a passage-way that was covered with ice. He slipped and the molten iron overturned on the ice, and an explosion followed which injured the plaintiff. The defendant was held liable; the court held it was under a duty to inform plaintiff of unusual or latent dangers; that the plaintiff could not be presumed to have scientific knowledge enough to understand the danger of an explosion under such circumstances; that being so inexperienced, a duty to warn him arose which was not discharged by a general statement to him that the work was dangerous.

But to the effect that a master need not warn a nineteen year old boy of the effect of mixing lime and water, see Bollington v. Louisville, etc., R. Co., 125 Ky. 186, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1045.

³⁹ Many cases involving the duty to warn inexperienced or ignorant employees are collected in a note to the preceding section. See also, Mather v. Rillston, 156 U. S. 391, 39 L. Ed. 464; Welch v. Bath Iron Works, 98 Me. 361; Smith v. Peninsular Car Works, 60 Mich. 501, 1 Am. St. Rep. 542; Coombs v. New Bedford Cordage Co., 102 Mass. 572, 3 Am. Rep. 506; Grizzle v. Frost, 3 Fost. & Fin. 622; Swoboda v. Ward, 40 Mich.

420; Hill v. Gust, 55 Ind. 45; Sullivan v. India Mfg. Co., 113 Mass. 396; St. Louis, etc., Ry. Co. v. Valirius, 56 Ind. 511; Dowling v. Allen, 74 Mo. 13, 41 Am. Rep. 298.

But even as to infants there can be no duty to warn of that which the servant already knows and appreciates. Cronin v. Columbian Mfg. Co., 75 N. H. 319, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 111.

⁴⁰ Chicago, etc., R. R. Co. v. Knapp, 176 Ill. 127; Coombs v. New Bedford Cordage Co., 102 Mass. 572, 3 Am. Rep. 506; Kann v. Meyer, 88 Md. 541; Dowling v. Allen, 74 Mo. 13, 41 Am. Rep. 298; Mather v. Rillston, 156 U. S. 391, 39 L. Ed. 464.

⁴¹ As where there is nothing in the history, construction or operation of a machine to suggest such an injury as actually occurred. Conkey Co. v. Larsen, 173 Ind. 585, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 116.

⁴² Armour v. Brazeau, 191 Ill. 117; Brann v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 53 Iowa, 595, 36 Am. Rep. 243; Baltimore B. & S. Co. v. Jamar, 93 Md. 404, 86 Am. St. R. 428; Munch v. Great Northern R. Co., 75 Minn. 61; Parker v. Wood Lumber Co., 98 Miss. 750, 40 L. R. A. (N. S.) 832; Comben v. Stone Co., 59 N. J. L. 226; Young v. Mason Stable Co., 193 N. Y. 188, 127 Am. St. Rep. 939, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 592; Richmond, etc., R. Co. v. Burnett, 88 Va. 538.

⁴³ No duty rests upon an employer

§ 1627. — Repairing defective tools, etc.—For reasons similar to those referred to in the section respecting places to work, a servant whose undertaking it is to repair, restore or correct defective tools, appliances or machinery can not demand that, as to those particular things, the duty of furnishing safe tools and appliances shall be at the same time performed. There is an inherent inconsistency.⁴⁴

§ 1628. — Servants having no business to use—Using for unexpected purposes.—The duty with respect of tools and appliances, like the duty with respect of place, does not extend to tools, appliances, etc., which the servant injured had no business or occasion to use or to come into contact with in the course of his service, and the use of which by the servant injured involved a departure from his service which the master was not obliged to anticipate or guard against.⁴⁵ Neither does it apply to injuries received while the servant was voluntarily using or attempting to use the tools, appliances, etc., even though defective, for a purpose for which they were not designed or intended, and for which the master had no reason to suppose the servant would attempt to put them in the course of the service.⁴⁶

§ 1629. — Dangers arising from dangerous use of proper appliances, etc.—Obviously a master who has performed his duty to inspect simple and common tools, such as a ladder or a hammer. Meador v. Lake Shore, etc., Ry. Co., 138 Ind. 290, 46 Am. St. R. 384; Stirling Coal Co. v. Fork, 141 Ky. 40, 40 L. R. A. (N. S.) 837; Koschman v. Ash, 98 Minn. 312, 116 Am. St. R. 373; Wachsmuth v. Shaw Electric Crane Co., 118 Mich. 275; Vanderpool v. Partridge, 79 Neb. 165, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 668; Miller v. Erie R. Co., 21 N. Y. App. Div. 45; Marsh v. Chickering, 101 N. Y. 396; Martin v. Highland Park Mfg. Co., 128 N. Car. 264, 83 Am. St. R. 671 [compare Mereer v. Atlantic C. L. R. Co., 154 N. Car. 399, Ann. Cas. 1912 A. 1002]; Sheridan v. Gorham Mfg. Co., 28 R. I. 256, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 687; Gulf, etc., Ry. v. Larkin, 98 Tex. 225, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 944; O'Brien v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co., 36 Tex. Civ. App. 528; Williams v. Kimberly & Clark Co., 131 Wis. 303, 120 Am. St. Rep. 1049, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1043, 11 Ann. Cas. 622; Meyer v. Ladewig, 130 Wis. 566, 13

L. R. A. (N. S.) 684; Garnett v. Phoenix Bridge Co., 98 Fed. 192.

⁴⁴ "The physician might as well insist on having a well patient to be treated and cured, as the machinist to have sound and safe machinery to be repaired." Dartmouth Spinning Co. v. Achord, 84 Ga. 14, 6 L. R. A. 190. Same effect: Green v. Babcock Lumber Co., 130 Ga. 469; Martineau v. National, etc., Co., 166 Mass. 4; Reed v. Moore, 82 C. C. A. 434, 153 Fed. 358, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 331.

Same rule where servants are engaged in getting defective tools, etc., to the place of repair. Southern Ry. Co. v. Lyons, 95 C. C. A. 55, 169 Fed. 557, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 335.

⁴⁵ Stodden v. Anderson Mfg. Co., 138 Iowa, 398, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 614.

⁴⁶ Felch v. Allen, 98 Mass. 572; Kauffman v. Maier, 94 Cal. 269, 18 L. R. A. 124; Morrison v. Burgess Fibre Co., 70 N. H. 406, 85 Am. St. Rep. 634; Saunders v. Eastern Brick Co., 63 N. J. L. 554, 76 Am. St. Rep. 222.

in respect of the appliances, tools, etc., furnished to his servants, is not liable to one servant for dangers arising from the negligent use of them by fellow servants. That the servants in using the appliances, tools, etc., do not carefully adjust them or secure them or otherwise manage or handle them in the shifting exigencies of the work, is not ordinarily one of the dangers against which the master is bound to furnish protection.⁴⁷

§ 1630. III. For injuries resulting from failure to repair as agreed. Should the servant discover that the service has become more hazardous than usual, or than he had reasonably anticipated, by reason of defective machinery, the retaining of unfaithful fellow-servants, or other similar cause, the general rule, as will be more fully seen hereafter, is that he must quit the service, as he may, or assume the extra risks to which he is so exposed.⁴⁸ But this general rule is subject to certain exceptions. The servant has a right to expect that, if the defect were brought to the knowledge of the master, he would remedy or remove it. On the other hand, the servant has no right to complain of dangers or defects known to him but which he fails to communicate to the master, so as to give the latter an opportunity to remove them. Where, therefore, the servant discovers defects in machinery, or other similar thing that renders the service more hazardous, he should at once report the same to the master or to the person who is authorized to represent him in that respect,⁴⁹ and unless he does so, he cannot recover from the master for injuries occasioned by extra perils which he thus voluntarily encounters without notice to the master. The re-

⁴⁷ See Loud v. Lane, 103 Me. 309, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 680; Brown v. People's Gas L. Co., 81 Vt. 477, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 738.

Putting in fresh pieces or parts, as needed, from a proper supply furnished for that purpose by the master, to replace those necessarily and ordinarily worn out or consumed in the work, is part of the work and not the master's duty. Johnson v. Boston Tow Boat Co., 135 Mass. 209, 46 Am. Rep. 458.

⁴⁸ See post, §§ 1659-1661.

Missouri Furnace Co. v. Abend, 107 Ill. 44, 47 Am. Rep. 425; Eureka Co. v. Bass, 81 Ala. 200, 60 Am. Rep. 152.

⁴⁹ Complaint must be made to, and promise to repair obtained from, some one who represented the master in that behalf. Weber Wagon Co. v. Kehl, 139 Ill. 644; Pieart v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 82 Iowa, 148; Poli v. Numa Coal Co., 149 Iowa, 104, 33 L. R. A. (N. S.) 646; Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Sadler, 38 Kan. 128, 5 Am. St. Rep. 729; Ehmcke v. Porter, 45 Minn. 338; Lyttle v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 84 Mich. 289; Wust v. Erie Iron Works, 149 Pa. 263; Hollis v. Widen-er, 228 Pa. 466, 139 Am. St. Rep. 1010; Jones v. File Co., 21 R. I. 125; Utah Consol. Min. Co. v. Paxton, 80 C. C. A. 68, 150 Fed. 114.

Where mere notice is involved, the ordinary rules of notice to an agent apply. Baldwin v. St. Louis, etc., Ry. Co., 75 Iowa, 297, 9 Am. St. Rep. 479; Wellston Coal Co. v. Smith, 65 Ohio St. 70, 87 Am. St. Rep. 547, 55 L. R. A. 99.

lation of principal and agent, or of master and servant, imposes no obligation on the principal or master to take more care of the agent or servant than the latter is willing to observe for his own safety.⁵⁰ But where the master, on being notified by the servant of defects that render the service he is engaged in negligently hazardous, expressly promises to make the necessary repairs, the servant may continue in the employment for a reasonable time to permit the performance of the promise, without being guilty of negligence, and if any injury results therefrom during that time he may recover,⁵¹ unless the danger were so imminent that no prudent person would undertake to perform the service.⁵² The reason upon which the rule is said to rest is that ⁵⁰ Missouri Furnace Co. v. Abend, supra; Indianapolis, etc., R. Co. v. Flanigan, 77 Ill. 365; Pennsylvania Co. v. Lynch, 90 Ill. 334; Columbus, etc., Ry. Co. v. Troesch, 68 Ill. 545, 18 Am. Rep. 578.

⁵¹ Eureka Co. v. Bass, 81 Ala. 200, 60 Am. Rep. 152; Cheaney v. Ocean Steamship Co., 92 Ga. 726, 44 Am. St. Rep. 113; Morden Frog & Crossing Works v. Fries, 228 Ill. 246, 119 Am. St. Rep. 428; Missouri Furnace Co. v. Abend, 107 Ill. 44, 47 Am. Rep. 425; Indianapolis, etc., Ry. Co. v. Watson, 114 Ind. 20, 5 Am. St. Rep. 578; Meador v. Lake Shore, etc., Ry. Co., 138 Ind. 290, 46 Am. St. Rep. 384 (restricting the operation of the rule to machinery or instrumentalities more complicated than such ordinary tools as a shovel or a ladder); Buehner v. Creamery Pkg. Mfg. Co., 124 Iowa, 445, 104 Am. St. Rep. 354; Southern Kansas Ry. Co. v. Croker, 41 Kan. 747, 13 Am. St. Rep. 320; Breckenridge v. Hicks, 94 Ky. 362, 42 Am. St. Rep. 361; Dempsey v. Sawyer, 95 Me. 295; Roux v. Blodgett & Davis Lbr. Co., 85 Mich. 519, 24 Am. St. Rep. 102, 13 L. R. A. 728; Greene v. Minneapolis & St. Louis Ry. Co., 31 Minn. 248, 47 Am. Rep. 785; Le Clair v. Railroad Co., 20 Minn. 1; Conroy v. Vulcan Iron Works, 62 Mo. 35; Rice v. Eureka Paper Co., 174 N. Y. 385, 95 Am. St. Rep. 585, 62 L. R. A. 611; Union Manufacturing Co. v. Morrissey, 40

Ohio St. 148, 48 Am. Rep. 669; Patterson v. Pittsburg, etc., R. R. Co., 76 Pa. 389, 18 Am. Rep. 412; Brownfield v. Hughes, 128 Pa. 194, 15 Am. St. Rep. 667; Galveston, etc., Ry. Co. v. Drew, 59 Tex. 10, 46 Am. Rep. 261; Gulf, etc., Ry. Co. v. Donnelly, 70 Tex. 371, 8 Am. St. Rep. 608; Gulf, etc., Ry. Co. v. Brentford, 79 Tex. 619, 23 Am. St. Rep. 377; Brabbitts v. Ry. Co., 38 Wis. 289; Maitland v. Gilbert Paper Co., 97 Wis. 476, 65 Am. St. Rep. 137; Yerkes v. Northern Pacific Ry. Co., 112 Wis. 184, 88 Am. St. Rep. 961; Hough v. Railway Co., 100 U. S. 213, 25 L. Ed. 612; Holmes v. Clarke, 6 H. & N. 349; Clarke v. Holmes, 7 H. & N. 937. And for a case where the promise was to discharge an incompetent servant, see Williams v. Kimberly & Clark Co., 131 Wis. 303, 120 Am. St. Rep. 1049, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1043, 11 Ann. Cas. 622. See also, Cheaney v. Ocean Steamship Co., 92 Ga. 726, 44 Am. St. Rep. 113. But see Sweeney v. Berlin, etc., Co., 101 N. Y. 520, 54 Am. Rep. 722.

⁵² McKelvey v. Ches. & O. R. Co., 35 W. Va. 500; Indianapolis & St. Louis R. Co. v. Watson, 114 Ind. 20, 5 Am. St. Rep. 578; Erdman v. Illinois Steel Co., 95 Wis. 6, 60 Am. St. Rep. 66; Anderson v. Fielding, 92 Minn. 42, 104 Am. St. Rep. 665; North Chicago St. R. Co. v. Aufmann, 221 Ill. 614, 112 Am. St. Rep. 207; Dist. of Columbia v. McElligott, 117 U. S.

the promise of the master to repair defects relieves the servant from the conclusion of assumption or the charge of negligence in continuing in the service after the discovery of the extra perils to which he would be exposed.⁵³

Notwithstanding the promise to repair, the servant may lose his right of recovery by his own contributory negligence in conduct not relating to his mere reliance upon the promise.⁵⁴

§ 1631. — The mere fact that the servant has complained of the defect will not entitle him to recover. There must, in addition, by the weight of authority, be shown a promise to repair upon which the servant has relied, and which has induced him to continue in the service.⁵⁵ And if he continues to serve without further assurances 621, 29 L. Ed. 946; Hough v. Railway Co., 100 U. S. 213, 25 L. Ed. 612; Miller v. Bullion-Beck, etc., Minn. Co., 18 Utah, 358; Smith v. E. W. Backus Lumber Co., 64 Minn. 447; Brewer v. Tennessee Coal, etc., Co., 97 Tenn. 615; Schiglizzo v. Dunn, 211 Pa. 253, 107 Am. St. Rep. 567; Williams v. Kimberly & Clark Co., 131 Wis. 303, 120 Am. St. Rep. 1049, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1043, 11 Ann. Cas. 622; Comer v. Meyer, 78 N. J. L. 464, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 597.

Where the tool, etc., is a simple and ordinary one, and is openly defective and dangerous, it is held in many cases that the servant who continues to use it assumes the risk, notwithstanding a promise to repair. McGill v. Cleveland, etc., Co., 79 Ohio St. 203, 128 Am. St. Rep. 705, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 793; St. Louis, etc., Ry. Co. v. Kelton, 55 Ark. 483; Webster Mfg. Co. v. Nisbett, 205 Ill. 273; Conley v. American Exp. Co., 87 Me. 352; Erdman v. Illinois Steel Co., 95 Wis. 6, 60 Am. St. Rep. 66; Gulf, etc., Ry. Co. v. Brentford, 79 Tex. 619, 23 Am. St. Rep. 377. But many other cases repudiate this distinction, and hold that there is no distinction between simple tools and others, unless the danger of continued use is so great and obvious that no reasonable man would undertake it. Brouseau v. Kellogg Switchboard Co., 158 Mich. 312, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1052; Southern

Kan. R. Co. v. Croker, 41 Kan. 747, 13 Am. St. Rep. 320, in which many other cases will be found cited.

⁵³ Missouri Furnace Co. v. Abend, supra; Clarke v. Holmes, supra; Hough v. Railway Co., supra; Dempsey v. Sawyer, supra.

⁵⁴ See Miller v. White Bronze M. Co., 141 Iowa, 701, 18 Ann. Cas. 957; Levesque v. Janson, 165 Mass. 16; Trudeau v. American Mill Co., 41 Wash. 465; Erdman v. Illinois Steel Co., 95 Wis. 6, 60 Am. St. Rep. 66; Crookston Lumber Co. v. Boutin, 79 C. C. A. 368, 149 Fed. 680.

⁵⁵ Indianapolis, etc., R. Co. v. Watson, 114 Ind. 20, 5 Am. St. Rep. 578; East Tenn., etc., R. Co. v. Duffield, 12 Lea (Tenn.), 63, 47 Am. Rep. 319; Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Drew, 59 Tex. 10, 46 Am. Rep. 261; Pieart v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 82 Iowa, 148; Showalter v. Fairbanks, etc., Co., 88 Wis. 376; Erdman v. Ill. Steel Co., 95 Wis. 6, 60 Am. St. Rep. 66; Bodwell v. Nashua Mfg. Co., 70 N. H. 390; Hayball v. Detroit, etc., Co., 114 Mich. 135; Rothenberger v. Northwestern Consol. Mill Co., 57 Minn. 461; Union Mfg. Co. v. Morrissey, 40 Ohio St. 148, 48 Am. Rep. 669; Lewis v. New York, etc., R. Co., 153 Mass. 73, 10 L. R. A. 513; McFarlan Carriage Co. v. Potter, 153 Ind. 107; Brewer v. Tennessee Coal, etc., Co., 97 Tenn. 615.

after the expiration of a reasonable time from the date of the promise to repair, which has not been kept, he will, ordinarily, be deemed to have accepted the risk of the dangers, and the master will not be liable.⁵⁶ Whether under the circumstances and in view of the promise to repair, the servant exercised due care in continuing to use the defective machinery, is a question for the jury to determine.⁵⁷

This question most frequently occurs in those cases in which the defects or dangers arise after the servant has entered upon his service, and not in those in which he was fully aware of the dangers when he accepted the employment, but even in such cases the agent has a right to rely upon the master's promise that he will repair.

But the rule now under consideration presupposes that there are defects in the tools, machinery or appliances furnished. If, on the other hand, those furnished by the master are reasonably safe and proper for use, although not the best possible, or of the latest design, the master has done his duty and the servant assumes the risk. In such a case, not even the express promise of the master that he will furnish new or better ones, or will take greater precautions for the servant's safety, will give the servant a right of action for an injury received from the old.⁵⁸

§ 1632. IV. For employment of incompetent servants.—It is the duty of the principal or master to use reasonable care and prudence in ⁵⁶ Eureka Co. v. Bass, 81 Ala. 200, 60 Am. Rep. 152; Woodward Iron Co. v. Jones, 80 Ala. 123; Missouri Furnace Co. v. Abend, 107 Ill. 44, 47 Am. Rep. 425; Greene v. Minn. & St. Louis R. Co., 31 Minn. 248, 47 Am. Rep. 785; Union Mfg. Co. v. Morrissey, 40 Ohio St. 148, 48 Am. Rep. 669; Patterson v. Pittsburg, etc., R. R. Co., 76 Pa. 389, 18 Am. Rep. 412; Lansing v. N. Y. Cent. R. R. Co., 49 N. Y. 512, 10 Am. Rep. 417; East Tennessee, etc., R. Co. v. Duffield, 12 Lea (Tenn.), 63, 47 Am. Rep. 319; Galveston, etc., Ry. Co. v. Drew, 59 Tex. 10, 46 Am. Rep. 261; Conroy v. Vulcan Iron Works, 62 Mo. 35, s. c. 6 Mo. App. 102; Crutchfield v. Railroad Co., 78 N. C. 300; Albrecht v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 108 Wis. 530, 53 L. R. A. 653; Holmes v. Clarke, 6 H. & N. 349.

In Albrecht v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., supra, a period of about two hours in which to make the needed repairs, which were very simple, was held to be reasonable, and after that the servant, who knew they had not been made, assumed the risk.

⁵⁷ Hough v. Railway Co., 100 U. S. 213, 25 L. Ed. 612; Ford v. Fitchburg R. R. Co., 110 Mass. 261, 14 Am. Rep. 598; Laning v. New York Cent. R. R. Co., 49 N. Y. 521, 10 Am. Rep. 417; Snow v. Housatonic R. R. Co., 8 Allen (Mass.), 441, 82 Am. Dec. 720.

⁵⁸ Marsh v. Chickering, 101 N. Y. 356 (reported also in note to 54 Am. Rep. at p. 727); Sweeney v. Berlin, etc., Envelope Co., 101 N. Y. 520, 54 Am. Rep. 722; Nealand v. Lynn, etc., R. Co., 173 Mass. 42; Coin v. Talge Lounge Co., 222 Mo. 488, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1179, 17 Ann. Cas. 888; Higgins v. Fanning, 195 Pa. 599; Leonard v. Herrmann, 195 Pa. 222; Branstrator v. Keokuk, etc., R. Co., 108 Iowa, 377; Jones v. Yazoo, etc., R. Co., 90 Miss. 547.

the selection and employment of his agents and servants, and for a want of such care and prudence, he is liable to all of his other servants and agents who directly and proximately suffer injury therefrom.⁵⁹ This being his duty as to the selection and employment, he is under a like duty as to the retention of his servants and agents. If having received knowledge of their incompetence or unfitness, he still retains them in his employ, he must respond in damages to others who are injured thereby.⁶⁰

⁵⁹ Southern P. Co. v. Hetzer, 135 Fed. 272, 68 C. C. A. 26, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 288; First Nat. Bank v. Chandler, 144 Ala. 286, 113 Am. St. Rep. 39; Tyson v. Railroad Co., 61 Ala. 554; Still v. San Francisco, etc., Ry. Co., 154 Cal. 559, 129 Am. St. Rep. 177, 20 L. R. A. 322; Western Stone Co. v. Whalen, 151 Ill. 472, 42 Am. St. Rep. 244; Columbus, etc., R. Rep. 578; Indianapolis, etc., R. Co. v. Troesch, 68 Ill. 545, 18 Am. v. Foreman, 162 Ind. 85, 102 Am. St. Rep. 185; Evansville & Terre Haute R. R. Co. v. Geyton, 115 Ind. 450, 7 Am. St. Rep. 458; Chicago, etc., R. R. Co. v. Harney, 28 Ind. 28, 92 Am. Dec. 282; Norfolk & Western R. R. Co. v. Hoover, 79 Md. 253, 25 L. R. A. 710, 47 Am. St. Rep. 392; Blake v. Maine Cent. R. R. Co., 70 Me. 60, 35 Am. Rep. 297; Gilman v. Eastern R. R. Co., 13 Allen (Mass.), 433, 90 Am. Dec. 210; Beers v. Prouty Co., 200 Mass. 19, 128 Am. St. Rep. 374, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 39 (ability to speak English required); Friberg v. Builders, etc., Co., 201 Mass. 461, 131 Am. St. Rep. 412 (same not required); Kean v. Rolling Mills, 66 Mich. 277, 11 Am. St. Rep. 492; Walkowski v. Penokee Mines, 115 Mich. 629, 41 L. R. A. 33; Davis v. Detroit, etc., R. R. Co., 20 Mich. 105, 4 Am. Rep. 364; Smith v. St. Louis, etc., R. R. Co., 151 Mo. 391, 48 L. R. A. 368; Moss v. Pacific R. R. Co., 49 Mo. 167, 8 Am. Rep. 126; Harper v. Indianapolis, etc., R. R. Co., 47 Mo. 567, 4 Am. Rep. 353; Bunnell v. St. Paul, etc., Ry. Co., 29 Minn. 305; New Orleans, etc., R. R. Co. v. Hughes, 49 Miss. 258; En-

right v. Oliver, 69 N. J. L. 357, 101 Am. St. Rep. 710; Rosenstiel v. Pittsburgh Rys. Co., 230 Pa. 273, 33 L. R. A. (N. S.) 751; Mexican Nat. R. R. Co. v. Mussette, 86 Tex. 708, 24 L. R. A. 642; South West Improv. Co. v. Smith, 85 Va. 306, 17 Am. St. Rep. 59; Conover v. Neher-Ross Co., 38 Wash. 172, 107 Am. St. Rep. 841; Pearson v. Alaska Pac. S. Co., 51 Wash. 560, 130 Am. St. Rep. 1117; Williams v. Kimberly, 131 Wis. 303, 120 Am. St. Rep. 1049, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1043, 11 Ann. Cas. 622.

⁶⁰ First Nat. Bank v. Chandler, 144 Ala. 286, 113 Am. St. Rep. 39; Indianapolis Rapid Transit Co. v. Foreman, 162 Ind. 85, 102 Am. St. Rep. 185; Pittsburg, etc., R. R. Co. v. Ruby, 38 Ind. 294, 10 Am. Rep. 111; Robbins v. Lewiston, etc., Ry. Co., 107 Me. 42, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 109; Norfolk & Western R. R. Co. v. Hoover, 79 Md. 253, 25 L. R. A. 710, 47 Am. St. Rep. 392; Kean v. Rolling Mills, 66 Mich. 277, 11 Am. St. Rep. 492; Walkowski v. Penokee Mines, 115 Mich. 629, 41 L. R. A. 33; Davis v. Detroit, etc., R. R. Co., 20 Mich. 105, 4 Am. Rep. 364; Coppins v. N. Y., etc., R. R. Co., 122 N. Y. 557, 19 Am. St. Rep. 523; Park v. N. Y., etc., R. R. Co., 155 N. Y. 215, 63 Am. St. Rep. 663; Laning v. N. Y. Cent. R. R. Co., 49 N. Y. 521, 10 Am. Rep. 417; Baulec v. N. Y., etc., R. R. Co., 59 N. Y. 356, 17 Am. Rep. 325; Chapman v. Erie Ry. Co., 55 N. Y. 579; Handley v. Daly Mining Co., 15 Utah, 176, 62 Am. St. Rep. 916; Williams v. Kimberly Clark Co., 131 Wis. 303, 120 Am. St. Rep. 1049; 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1043, 11 Ann. Cas. 622;

He is not a guarantor, however, of the fitness or competence of those whom he employs, and it is not enough to show the fact of the incompetency, but it must also be shown, in the one case that he might by exercise of reasonable care and diligence have discovered the incompetency at the time of the employment,⁶¹ and in the other case that knowledge, or facts sufficient to have led to knowledge, of the incompetency had been brought home to him, and that he nevertheless continued them in the service.⁶²

§ 1633. — Sufficient number.—This duty to furnish competent servants may include the question of number as well as of fitness, and it is the duty of the master in those cases in which he has undertaken, or in which reasonable care imposes upon him the duty, to furnish assistants, to exercise reasonable care to provide a sufficient number of other servants to enable the work to be performed with reasonable safety.⁶³

Southern P. Co. v. Hetzer, 135 Fed. 272, 68 C. C. A. 26, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 288.

⁶¹ First Nat. Bank v. Chandler, 144 Ala. 286, 113 Am. St. Rep. 39; Western Stone Co. v. Whalen, 151 Ill. 472, 42 Am. St. Rep. 244; Norfolk & Western R. R. Co. v. Hoover, 79 Md. 253, 25 L. R. A. 710, 47 Am. St. Rep. 392; Conover v. Neher-Ross Co., 38 Wash. 172, 107 Am. St. Rep. 841.

⁶² Southern P. Co. v. Hetzer, 135 Fed. 272, 68 C. C. A. 26, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 288; Alabama, etc., R. R. Co. v. Waller, 48 Ala. 459; Indianapolis Rapid Transit Co. v. Foreman, 162 Ind. 85, 102 Am. St. Rep. 185; Ohio, etc., Ry. Co. v. Collarn, 73 Ind. 261, 38 Am. Rep. 134; Chicago, etc., R. R. Co. v. Doyle, 18 Kan. 58; Kean v. Rolling Mills, 66 Mich. 277, 11 Am. St. Rep. 492; Walkowski v. Penokee Mines, 115 Mich. 629, 41 L. R. A. 33; Huffman v. Chicago, etc., R. R. Co., 78 Mo. 50; Kersey v. Kansas City, etc., R. R. Co., 79 Mo. 362; Coppins v. N. Y., etc., R. R. Co., 122 N. Y. 557, 19 Am. St. Rep. 523; Park v. N. Y. etc., R. R. Co., 155 N. Y. 215, 63 Am. St. Rep. 663; Huntingdon, etc., R. R. Co. v. Decker, 84 Pa. 419; East Tennessee, etc., R. R. Co. v. Gurley, 12 Lea (Tenn.), 46; Walton v. Burchel, 121 Tenn. 715, 130 Am. St. Rep. 788; Handley v. Daly Mining Co., 15 Utah, 176, 62 Am. St. Rep. 916; Williams v. Kimberly, etc., Co., 131 Wis. 303, 120 Am. St. Rep. 1049, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1043, 11 Ann. Cas. 622. See also, cases in preceding note.

⁶³ Flike v. Boston & A. R. Co., 53 N. Y. 549, 13 Am. Rep. 545; Supple v. Agneu, 191 Ill. 439; Jones v. Cotton Mills, 82 Va. 140, 3 Am. St. Rep. 92; South West Improv. Co. v. Smith, 85 Va. 306, 17 Am. St. Rep. 59; Johnson v. Ashland Water Co., 71 Wis. 553, 5 Am. St. Rep. 243; Cheaney v. Steamship Co., 92 Ga. 726, 44 Am. St. Rep. 113.

This, of course, means something more than merely that the work is hard or heavy or pressing. The master must either have agreed to furnish help or it must be negligence not to do so. Where the servant continues to do heavy work without objection and is later injured, he cannot recover merely on this ground. See Skipp v. Eastern Counties Ry. Co., 9 Exch. 223.

Where the master has furnished a sufficient number, he is not liable where the foreman in charge of the work improperly distributes them on the work. Dair v. New York, etc., S. S. Co., 204 N. Y. 341, 40 L. R. A. (N. S.) 918.

§ 1634. — The risks resulting from the non-performance of the duty of the master, in these respects as in others already referred to, may be assumed by the servant under substantially the same conditions as in other cases. If a servant discovers that incompetent or insufficient servants have been employed or are being retained, he should notify the master and may rely for a reasonable period upon the latter's promise to remedy the difficulty. If he makes no such complaint or if he continues in the service after the force of the master's promise is spent, he will be deemed to have assumed the risk.⁶⁴

§ 1635. V. For not making and enforcing rules.—Where the business to be carried on is complex and dangerous, as usually in the case of railroads, mines, and the like, it is the duty of the principal or master to exercise reasonable care and prudence in making and promulgating such necessary and proper rules and regulations as may be required to enable the business to be carried on with reasonable safety;⁶⁵ and then to exercise like care and prudence to see that such rules and regulations are enforced and obeyed.⁶⁶

As in the case of tools and appliances, however, the master is not obliged to adopt any particular system, or to ensure either the best possible rules or the strictest possible observance: reasonable care and prudence is the measure of his duty.⁶⁷

Moreover, the duty to make and enforce rules applies only in those kinds of business or in those kinds of work whose complexity or danger makes such rules reasonably necessary. There is, for example, no

⁶⁴ Williams v. Kimberly & Clark Co., 131 Wis. 303, 120 Am. St. Rep. 1049, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1043, 11 Ann. Cas. 622; Cheaney v. Ocean Steamship Co., 92 Ga. 726, 44 Am. St. Rep. 113.

⁶⁵ Abel v. Delaware, etc., C. Co., 128 N. Y. 662; Merrill v. Oregon Short Line, 29 Utah, 264, 110 Am. St. Rep. 695; Reagan v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 93 Mo. 348, 3 Am. St. Rep. 542; Fitzgerald v. Worcester, etc., St. Ry. Co., 200 Mass. 105, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 239; Richlands Iron Co. v. Elkins, 90 Va. 249; Moore Lime Co. v. Richardson, 95 Va. 326, 64 Am. St. Rep. 785; Pittsburg, etc., R. Co. v. Powers, 74 Ill. 341; Evansville, etc., R. Co. v. Tohill, 143 Ind. 49; Sprague v. New York, etc., R. Co., 68 Conn. 345, 37 L. R. A. 638; Szymanski v. Blumen- thal, 4 Penne. (Del.) 511, 103 Am. St. Rep. 132.

The giving of warning of occasional dangers may fall within this principle. Polaski v. Pittsburg Coal Co., 134 Wis. 259, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 952. But there is no such duty where the general situation is well known, and the master does not know and has no reason to expect the particular danger. Ahern v. Amoskeal Mfg. Co., 75 N. H. 99, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 89.

⁶⁶ Doing v. New York, etc., R. Co., 151 N. Y. 579; Merrill v. Oregon Short Line, 29 Utah, 264, 110 Am. St. Rep. 695; St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Triplett, 54 Ark. 289, 11 L. R. A. 773.

⁶⁷ Hannibal, etc., R. Co. v. Kanaley, 39 Kan. 1.

duty to prescribe rules for the performance of simple and ordinary operations where the nature of the operation or the circumstances of its performance sufficiently indicate the course of conduct which ought to be pursued.⁶⁸

§ 1636. VI. For not furnishing necessary superintendence.—For similar reasons, where the work which the servant is called upon to perform is complicated or difficult, requiring the co-operation of several servants at once or at intervals, under circumstances in which they can not properly control themselves, involving the necessity of signals or warnings, needing expert advice or instructions for its proper performance, and the like, it is the duty of the master to exercise reasonable care to see that suitable superintendence and direction are supplied, and for a breach of this duty he will be liable if injury results.⁶⁹

But this rule, like the one in the preceding section, depends upon exceptional facts. If the work is simple and ordinary, such as a group of men or a single man can usually perform in safety with no outside direction, no superintendence would be required. The master is not bound to watch over the details of ordinary work or direct its performance or constantly follow after his servants to see that his proper directions are strictly obeyed.⁷⁰

§ 1637. VII. For injuries outside of employment.—It is those risks only which are incident to the undertaking of the servant or agent, which he is ordinarily deemed to have assumed, and not those of some other or different duty or employment.⁷¹ Hence, if the principal or master requires of the servant the performance of an act outside of the scope of his employment, the servant is under no obligation to perform it. If, however, he does consent to perform it, a situation not unlike the ordinary one presents itself. It is not per se wrongful ⁶⁸ Morgan v. Hudson River, etc., Co., 133 N. Y. 666; Voss v. Delaware, etc., R. Co., 62 N. J. L. 59; Texas, etc., R. Co. v. Echols, 87 Tex. 339; Moore Lime Co. v. Richardson, 95 Va. 326, 64 Am. St. Rep. 785; Norfolk, etc., R. Co. v. Graham, 96 Va. 430.

⁶⁹ Engelking v. Spokane, 59 Wash. 446, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 481 ("the duty of superintendence is not a fixed legal duty, but may arise from the facts of any given case"); Trainor v. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co., 137 Pa. 148; Hill v. Big Creek Lumber Co., 108 La. 162, 58 L. R. A. 346; McElligott v. Randolph, 61 Conn. 157, 29 Am. St. Rep. 181.

⁷⁰ See Anderson v. Oregon R. & N. Co., 28 Wash. 467; Central R. Co. v. Keegan, 160 U. S. 257, 40 L. Ed. 418.

⁷¹ Chicago, etc., Ry. Co. v. Bayfield, 37 Mich. 205; Railroad Co. v. Fort, 17 Wall. (U. S.) 553 Fed. Cas. No. 4,952; Lalor v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 52 Ill. 401, 4 Am. Rep. 616; Dallemund v. Saalfeldt, 175 Ill. 310, 67 Am. St. Rep. 214, 48 L. R. A. 753.

for the master to give such instructions,⁷² and if the servant undertakes to obey them he will ordinarily be deemed to have assumed the risks so far as they were open and obvious to him.⁷³ Where the risks are not obvious and are known to the master, but not to the servant, it is the master's duty to fully inform the servant of the perils of the undertaking and warn him against them. If he fails in this duty and the servant thereby suffers injury, the master is liable.⁷⁴

This is particularly true where the servant is young or inexperienced, and not likely to anticipate or guard himself against injury.⁷⁵

§ 1638. — It is, of course, true as has been stated that the servant would be under no obligation to obey instructions which required of him the performance of a duty beyond the scope of his undertaking, but, as bearing upon the question whether the situation presented itself to the servant as one within, or without his undertaking, and therefore as involving unfamiliar risks, it has been well said that where one contracts to submit himself to the orders of another, there must be some presumption that the orders he receives are lawful. The giving of the orders is, of itself, an assumption that they are lawful, and the servant or agent who refused to obey would take upon himself the burden of showing a lawful reason for the refusal, and in case of a failure so to do, he would incur the double risk of losing his employment and being compelled to pay damages. These ⁷² Anderson v. Morrison, 22 Minn. 274.

⁷³ Richmond, etc., R. Co. v. Finley, 12 C. C. A. 595, 63 Fed. 228; Cole v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 71 Wis. 114, 5 Am. St. Rep. 201; Gavigan v. Lake Shore, etc., R. Co., 110 Mich. 71; Maltbie v. Belden, 167 N. Y. 307, 54 L. R. A. 52; Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Crotty, 73 C. C. A. 147, 141 Fed. 913; Dougherty v. West Superior Iron Co., 88 Wis. 343.

⁷⁴ Chicago, etc., Ry. Co. v. Bayfield, 37 Mich. 205; Brown v. Ann Arbor R. Co., 118 Mich. 205; Lalor v. Chicago, etc., R. R. Co., 52 Ill. 401, 4 Am. Rep. 616; Wheeler v. Wason Mfg. Co., 135 Mass. 294; Thompson v. Hermann, 47 Wis. 602, 32 Am. Rep. 784; O'Connor v. Adams, 120 Mass. 427; Jones v. Lake Shore, etc., Ry. Co., 49 Mich. 573; Broderick v. Detroit Union Depot Co., 56 Mich. 261, 56 Am. Rep. 382; Kennedy v. Swift, 234 Ill. 606, 123 Am. St. Rep. 113.

⁷⁵ Quinn v. Johnson Forge Co., 9 Houst. (Del.) 338; Camp v. Hall, 39 Fla. 535; Meier v. Way, 136 Iowa, 302, 125 Am. St. Rep. 254; Newbury v. Getchel, etc., Mfg. Co., 100 Iowa, 441, 62 Am. St. Rep. 582; Vohs v. Shorthill, 130 Iowa, 538; Dallemand v. Saalfeldt, 175 Ill. 310, 67 Am. St. Rep. 214, 48 L. R. A. 753; James v. Rapides Lbr. Co., 50 La. Ann. 717, 44 L. R. A. 33; Bourg v. Brownell Lumber Co., 120 La. 1009, 124 Am. St. Rep. 448; Brown v. Ann Arbor R. Co., 118 Mich. 205; Brennan v. Gordon, 118 N. Y. 489, 8 L. R. A. 818; Lofrano v. New York & M. V. Walter Co., 55 Hun (N. Y.), 452; Kehler v. Schwenk, 151 Pa. 505, 31 Am. St. Rep. 777; Texarkana, etc., Ry. Co. v. Preacher (Tex. Civ. App.), 59 S. W. 593; Gulf, etc., Ry. Co. v. Newman, 27 Tex. Civ. App. 77; Michael v. Roanoke Mach. Works, 90 Va. 492, 44 Am. St. Rep. 927.

are sufficient reasons for excusing him if he declines to take this responsibility in any case in which doubts can fairly exist; he should assume that the order is given in good faith and in the belief that it is rightful, and if in his own judgment it is unwarranted, it is not for the principal to insist that he was wrong in not refusing obedience,⁷⁶ unless the danger is so extreme and obvious that no reasonable man would, under the circumstances, expose himself to it.⁷⁷

3. Negligence of his General Superintendent or other Representative.

§ 1639. Principal can not relieve himself by delegating duties.—

It has been seen in the preceding sections that the master undertakes that reasonable care shall be exercised for the protection of the servant in a number of particulars, as, for example, in the furnishing and maintaining of a reasonably safe place to work; in supplying and keeping in repair reasonably safe appliances, tools and machinery; in employing and retaining reasonably competent servants; in making and enforcing reasonable rules and regulations, and the like. It is part of the undertaking of the master that these duties shall be performed, and it is entirely immaterial, so far as the responsibility of the master is concerned, whether he undertakes to perform them in person or confides the performance to some representative or substitute. Whoever undertakes to act for the master in this particular, whether he be a general superintendent, a general manager, or a person exercising similar duties by whatever name, is the representative of the master, charged with the performance of the master's duties, and the master must answer for the way in which they are performed. In the sense that the master cannot escape responsibility by delegating the performance of these duties to another, these duties are often called non-delegable or non-assignable ones.

§ 1640. Liable for negligence of general agent or superintendent—

Vice-principal.—It is therefore well settled that where the principal or master entrusts to a general agent—often called a vice-principal because for the time being he is performing a master's or principal's duties—the power and the duty to purchase, control or keep in repair the implements or machinery to be used; or the power and duty to employ, regulate and discharge on his account the agents or servants to be employed, and the like, the principal is liable to an agent or servant for a neglect in the performance of these duties by such general agent, in the same manner and to the same extent as though the neglect had been that of the principal himself were he personally managing and controlling the business.⁷⁸ The fact that the principal has exercised due care in his selection does not alter the result, if the superintendent, however carefully chosen, has not performed the master's duty.

⁷⁶ Per Cooley, C. J., in Chicago, etc., Ry. Co. v. Bayfield, 37 Mich. 204.

⁷⁷ Chicago, etc., Ry. Co. v. Bayfield, 37 Mich. 205; Thompson v. Hermann, 47 Wis. 602, 32 Am. Rep. 784; Michael v. Roanoke Mach. Works, 90 Va. 492, 44 Am. St. Rep. 927; Helm v. O'Rourke, 46 La. Ann. 178; Northern Pac. Coal Co. v. Richmond, 7 C. C. A. 485, 58 Fed. 756; Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Hanning, 131 Ind. 528, 31 Am. St. Rep. 443; Pittsburg, etc., R. Co. v. Adams, 105 Ind. 151; Brazil Coal Co. v. Hoodlet, 129 Ind. 327; Taylor v. Evansville R. Co., 121 Ind. 124, 16 Am. St. Rep. 372, 6 L. R. A. 584; Consolidated Coal Co. v. Haenni, 146 Ill. 614; Chicago, etc., Ry. Co. v. McCarty, 49 Neb. 475; Fox v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 86 Iowa, 368, 17 L. R. A. 289; English v. Chicago, etc., Ry. Co., 24 Fed. 906.

Such a general agent or superintendent, called by whatever name, while engaged in the performance of that class of duties, is not a fellow-servant or co-employee of the agents or servants employed by and acting under him. For the time being and as to those duties he stands in the principal's place, and his neglect is the neglect of the principal.⁷⁹ This rule applies alike to corporations and to individuals, ⁷⁸ Tyson v. North, etc., Rr. Co., 61 Ala. 554, 32 Am. Rep. 8; Wilson v. Willimantic Linen Co., 50 Conn. 433, 47 Am. Rep. 653; Brown v. Sennett, 68 Cal. 225, 58 Am. Rep. 8; Beeson v. Green Mountain Co., 57 Cal. 20; Taylor v. Georgia Marble Co., 99 Ga. 512, 59 Am. St. Rep. 238 (but see Hilton, etc., Lbr. Co. v. Ingram, 119 Ga. 652, 100 Am. St. Rep. 204); Baier v. Selke, 211 Ill. 512, 103 Am. St. Rep. 208; Mitchell v. Robinson, 80 Ind. 281, 41 Am. Rep. 812; Brice-Nash v. Barton Salt Co., 79 Kan. 110, 131 Am. St. Rep. 284, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 749; Ford v. Fitchburg Rr. Co., 110 Mass. 240, 14 Am. Rep. 598; Shanny v. Androscoggin Mills, 66 Me. 420; Cumberland, etc., R. Co. v. State, 44 Md. 283, s. c. 45 Md. 229; Brown v. Gilchrist, 80 Mich. 56, 20 Am. St. Rep. 496; Riek v. Saginaw Bay Towing Co., 132 Mich. 237, 102 Am. St. Rep. 422; Ryan v. Bagaley, 50 Mich. 179, 45 Am. Rep. 35; Harper v. Indianapolis, etc., R. Co., 47 Mo. 567, 4 Am. Rep. 353; Gornley v. Vulcan Iron Works, 61 Mo. 492; Dowling v. Allen, 74 Mo. 13, 41 Am. Rep. 298; Brothers v. Cartter, 52 Mo. 373, 14 Am. Rep.

424; Bushby v. N. Y., etc., R. R. Co., 107 N. Y. 374, 1 Am. St. Rep. 844; Flike v. Boston, etc., R. R. Co., 53 N. Y. 549, 13 Am. Rep. 545; Corcoran v. Holbrook, 59 N. Y. 517, 17 Am. Rep. 369; Malone v. Hathaway, 64 N. Y. 5, 21 Am. Rep. 573; Fuller v. Janett, 80 N. Y. 46, 36 Am. Rep. 575; Cowles v. Richmond, etc., R. Co., 84 N. C. 309, 37 Am. Rep. 620; Kelly Island, etc., Co. v. Pachuta, 69 Ohio St. 462, 100 Am. St. Rep. 706; Medra's Admr. v. Holbrook, 20 Ohio St. 137, 5 Am. Rep. 633; Schiglizzo v. Dunn, 211 Pa. 253, 107 Am. St. Rep. 567; Mullan v. Philadelphia, etc., Steamship Co., 78 Pa. 25, 21 Am. Rep. 2; Clavin v. Tinkham Co., 29 R. I. 599, 132 Am. St. Rep. 836; Gunter v. Graniteville Mfg. Co., 18 S. C. 262, 44 Am. Rep. 573; East Tennessee, etc., R. Co. v. Duffield, 12 Lea (Tenn.), 63, 47 Am. Rep. 319; Sullivan v. Wood & Co., 43 Wash. 259, 117 Am. St. Rep. 1047; Massy v. Milwaukee El. Ry. Co., 143 Wis. 220, 139 Am. St. Rep. 1096; Johnson v. First Nat. Bank, 79 Wis. 414, 24 Am. St. Rep. 722; Brabbitts v. Chicago, etc., Ry. Co., 38 Wis. 289.

⁷⁹ See cases, supra.

although from the very nature of the case, the occasions or necessities for the employment of such a general agent are much greater in the case of corporations than in that of individuals.⁸⁰

Where, however, the agent or servant in question not only performs the duty of management or direction, but also, at times, joins with the other servants in the performance of the service, he is, by the weight of authority and reason, as to the latter class of duties to be regarded not as a representative of the master but as a fellow servant.⁸¹

4. Negligence of Independent Contractor Performing Master's Duties.

§ 1641. Liable for negligence of independent contractor performing master's duties.—For similar reasons the same result should follow where the master, instead of performing in person his duties of furnishing a safe place to work, supplying proper tools and appliances, and the like, makes a contract with one carrying on an independent calling to perform them for him: he should still be held liable if they are not performed, even though he has exercised due care in the selection of the contractor. That is to say, reasonable care must be exercised in furnishing a reasonably safe place, reasonably safe tools and appliances, etc. If the master does not perform this duty in person, his delegate must perform it. It must be performed by one or the other. If either one performs it, the master is not liable, though injury results. If neither one performs it, the master is liable, even though he selected his delegate with due care. To this effect is the weight of authority,⁸² though there are a few cases not easily to be reconciled with this conclusion.⁸³

⁸⁰ See cases, supra.

⁸¹ See post, § 1654.

See also, Crispin v. Babbitt, 81 N. Y. 516, 37 Am. Rep. 521; Madigan v. Oceanic Steam Navigation Co., 178 N. Y. 242, 102 Am. St. Rep. 495; Baier v. Selke, 211 Ill. 512, 103 Am. St. Rep. 208.

⁸² Pullman Palace Car Co. v. Laack, 143 Ill. 242, 18 L. R. A. 215; Bernheimer v. Bager, 108 Md. 551, 129 Am. St. Rep. 458; Sweat v. Boston & Albany Rr. Co., 156 Mass. 284; Morton v. Detroit, etc., R. Co., 81 Mich. 423; Burnes v. Kansas City, etc., R. Co., 129 Mo. 41; Herdler v. Buck's Stove Co., 136 Mo. 3; Story v. Concord & Montreal R., 70 N. H. 364; Trainor

v. Philadelphia & Reading R. Co., 137 Pa. 148 (but see Ardesco Oil Co. v. Gilson, 63 Pa. St. 146); Ortlip v. Philadelphia, etc., Trac. Co., 198 Pa. 586; Moran v. Corliss Steam Engine Co., 21 R. I. 386, 45 L. R. A. 267; Gulf, Colo., etc., R. Co. v. Delaney, 22 Tex. Civ. App. 427; Walton v. Miller, 109 Va. 210, 132 Am. St. Rep. 908; Vickers v. Kanawha, etc., Ry., 64 W. Va. 474, 131 Am. St. Rep. 929, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 793; Toledo Brewing & Malting Co. v. Bosch, 101 Fed. 530, 41 C. C. A. 482; Macdonald v. Wyllie & Son, 1 Scotch Sess. Cases, 5th Ser., 339.

⁸³ Devlin v. Smith, 89 N. Y. 470, 42 Am. Rep. 311. See also, Stourbridge

§ 1642. When liable to agents of contractor.—Care should be taken, however, to distinguish between the case considered in the last section, and that of the servant of an independent contractor who has undertaken to perform certain services for the principal, and to furnish the necessary machinery, appliances and labor. The agent or servant of such a contractor could not be considered to be the agent or servant of the principal, nor could the contractor himself be considered such an alter ego of the principal as to render the latter liable, to a servant or agent of the contractor, for an injury occasioned by the neglect of the contractor in furnishing and keeping in repair the necessary machinery, or in employing or retaining incompetent servants.⁸⁴ The principal would, however, be liable to the servant or agent of the contractor for an injury received from perils or dangers in the principal's premises, where such servant or agent had a right to be,

v. Brooklyn City R. Co., 9 App. Div. (N. Y.) 129; Kaye v. Rob Roy Hosiery Co., 51 Hun (N. Y.), 519; Carlson v. Phoenix Bridge Co., 55 Hun (N. Y.), 485; Butler v. Townsend, 126 N. Y. 105; Norfolk, etc., R. Co. v. Stevens, 97 Va. 631, 46 L. R. A. 367 (distinguished in Walton v. Miller, 109 Va. 210 cited in the following note).

Kiddle v. Lovett, 16 Q. B. Div. 605.

Buying from reputable manufacturers.—It is held in a number of cases that where the master buys tools, machinery, supplies, etc., of a reputable manufacturer by whom they have been tested, and himself subjects them to such inspection or examination as is usual and practicable in such cases, he has exercised due care and is not liable for latent defects. He is not obliged to tear it to pieces or destroy it in search for latent defects. See Taylor v. Centralia Coal Co., 155 Ill. App. 324; Kansas City, etc., R. Co. v. Ryan, 52 Kan. 637; Shea v. Wellington, 163 Mass. 364; Reynolds v. Merchants' Woolen Co., 168 Mass. 501; Fuller v. New York, etc., R. Co., 175 Mass. 424; Mooney v. Beattie, 180 Mass. 451, 70 L. R. A. 831; but not if he was not a manufacturer of that sort of article, Murphy v. Huber-Hodgman Printing Press

Co., 203 Mass. 549; Grand Rapids, etc., R. Co. v. Huntley, 38 Mich. 537; Dompier v. Lewis, 131 Mich. 144; Jenkins v. St. Paul R. Co. 105 Minn. 504, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 401; Tallman v. Nelson, 141 Mo. App. 478 (especially in the case of simple and familiar articles, like a delivery wagon); Carlson v. Phoenix Bridge Co., 132 N. Y. 273.

Master owes no duty of inspecting before delivering to the servant for use where the servant who uses it is in the best situation to inspect it before he uses it. Gibson v. Milwaukee Light, etc., Co., 144 Wis. 140. See also, Wachsmuth v. Shaw Electric Crane Co., 118 Mich. 275; Longpre v. Big Blackfoot Mill. Co., 38 Mont. 99; Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Larkin, 98 Tex. 225, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 944.

But in Hailey-Ola Coal Co. v. Parker, 32 Okla. 642, 40 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1120 it is said that it is not enough to buy of a reputable manufacturer, but that the master, before starting the use of the new article, is bound to submit it to reasonable inspection, and of this the jury is the judge.

⁸⁴ Knoxville Iron Co. v. Dobson, 7 Lea (Tenn.), 367; King v. New York, etc., R. R. Co., 66 N. Y. 181, 23 Am. Rep. 37.

of which the principal had knowledge but of which the agent or servant was left in ignorance. This liability does not rest upon the relation of principal and agent, or of master and servant, but upon the broad and familiar principle that every man who expressly or by implication invites others to come upon his premises, assumes to all who accept the invitation, the duty of warning them of any danger in coming, which he knows of or ought to know of, and of which they are not aware.⁸⁵ So if the principal was by the terms of the contract under obligation to the contractor to furnish the necessary machinery or appliances, or to supply a portion of the labor, it is held that he will be liable to the agent or servant of the contractor for an injury sustained by reason of his neglect to use due and reasonable care in selecting and keeping in repair the proper machinery or appliances, or in employing and retaining competent servants, not upon the ground of any contractual relation between himself and the person injured, but, according to some cases, upon the inherently dangerous character of the thing he furnishes,⁸⁶ and, according to others, "upon a failure to per-

⁸⁵ Samuelson v. Cleveland Iron Mining Co., 49 Mich. 164, 43 Am. Rep. 456; Southcote v. Stanley, 1 H. & N. 247; Indermaur v. Dames, L. R. 1 C. P. 274, s. c. 2 Id. 311; Francis v. Cockrell, L. R. 5 Q. B. 184; Elliott v. Pray, 10 Allen (Mass.), 378, 87 Am. Dec. 653; Coughtry v. Woolen Co., 56 N. Y. 124, 15 Am. Rep. 387; Tobin v. Portland, etc., R. R. Co., 59 Me. 183, 8 Am. Rep. 415; Latham v. Roach, 72 Ill. 179; Gillis v. Pennsylvania R. R. Co., 59 Pa. 129, 98 Am. Dec. 317; Malone v. Hawley, 46 Cal. 409; Deford v. Keyser, 30 Md. 179; Pierce v. Whitcomb, 48 Vt. 127, 21 Am. Rep. 120; Pugmire v. Oregon Short Line Ry., 33 Utah, 27, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 565, 14 Ann. Cas. 384.

⁸⁶ Coughtry v. Globe Woolen Co., 56 N. Y. 124, 15 Am. Rep. 387, is the leading case. In this case, O contracted to put a cornice on defendant's mill, defendant agreeing to erect the necessary scaffolding free of cost to O. Defendant erected the scaffolding so negligently that it fell, killing a servant of O, who was at work upon it. It was held that defendant was liable. The court distinguished the case from Winterbot-

tom v. Wright, 10 M. & W. 109; Longmeid v. Halliday, 6 Eng. Law & Eq. 761; Loop v. Litchfield, 42 N. Y. 351, 1 Am. Rep. 543; Losee v. Clute, 51 N. Y. 494, 10 Am. Rep. 638. The scaffolding here was fifty feet high, "and unless properly constructed would be a most dangerous trap, imperilling the life of any person who might go upon it."

The same principle was announced in Devlin v. Smith, 89 N. Y. 470, 42 Am. Rep. 311, in holding liable the contractor who defectively constructed a scaffold about ninety feet high. The case was said to fall within the principle of Thomas v. Winchester, 6 N. Y. 397, 57 Am. Dec. 455 (the case of a druggist who carelessly labeled a deadly poison as a harmless drug and was held liable to one with whom there was no privity of contract).

In Kahner v. Otis Elevator Co., 96 N. Y. App. Div. 169, the case is put upon the ground that, though the machine may not be inherently dangerous, yet if it is made so by the neglect of the manufacturer, having notice and knowledge that it is to be used by form a duty assumed by one which results in injury to another,"⁸⁷ a principle so broadly stated as to be of doubtful accuracy.

5. Negligence of Fellow-servant.

§ 1643. Master not liable to one servant for negligence of a fellow-servant.—The liability of the master to third persons for the negligence or misconduct of his servant is discussed in another chapter. As will there be seen, the master is held liable to third persons in many cases even though he is not personally at fault, and has done all that could reasonably be done to prevent the causing of injury. This rule imposing liability where there is no blame, is, in itself, an exception to a wider principle that every person shall answer for his own misconduct only; it often works great hardship upon innocent masters, and is difficult to account for except upon considerations of expediency rather than natural justice. Nevertheless it had become firmly established in our law for many years before the question arose whether the same exceptional rule should be extended to cases in which the person injured was not a stranger but a fellow-servant working for the same master and engaged in furthering the same general enterprise. The question was first suggested in an English case⁸⁸ arising in 1837, and was first maturely considered in an American case⁸⁹ decided in 1842, which has since been regarded both in England and America as the leading case upon the subject. It was urged that the established rule was that the master should answer, and therefore he should be made answerable here. But it was pointed out by Chief Justice Shaw that the rule of respondet superior was a rule applicable to the case in which the person injured was a stranger, and that the others than the purchaser, he will be liable to such user.

⁸⁷ This is the language used in McMullen v. New York, 110 N. Y. App. Div. 117, followed in Dougherty v. Weeks, 126 N. Y. App. Div. 786. See also, Jewell v. Kansas City Bolt Co., 231 Mo. 176, 140 Am. St. Rep. 515.

⁸⁸ Priestly v. Fowler, 3 M. & W. 1.

⁸⁹ Farwell v. Boston & Worcester R. Co., 4 Metc. (Mass.) 49, 38 Am. Dec. 339.

The case of Murray v. South Carolina R. Co., 1 McMull. L. (S. Car.) 385, 36 Am. Dec. 268, was decided a year before the Farwell case and reached the same result, though the court was divided in opinion. The great reputation of Chief Justice Shaw, the standing of the court, and the unanimity of opinion of the judges, as well as the careful consideration bestowed upon the case, have operated to make the Farwell case the leading case upon the subject, both American and English courts having accepted its reasoning as conclusive.

The Farwell case has often been referred to in the English cases and is reprinted in 3 Macq. 316. See Bartonshill Coal Co. v. Reid, 3 Macq. 266; Coldrick v. Partridge, [1909] 1 K. B. 530.

considerations which support the rule have no application to the case of a fellow-servant. There being, then, no established rule for such a case, it must be decided in contemplation of the contract between the parties and such considerations of policy as should be thought to be applicable. Considerations of policy were thought to lead to the conclusion that the safety of the servants and the public would be promoted if the servants were left with no other remedy for an injury than recourse to the fellow-servant who caused it, thus making each solicitous for the safety of all. From the standpoint of the contract, it was held that inasmuch as the servant presumptively knew, at the time he entered upon the employment, what the ordinary risks and perils of the business were, and that this was one of them, and had not stipulated for protection by the master, and was, further, at liberty to insist upon a compensation commensurate with the risks, it was fair to presume that he had assumed this risk along with the other risks of the business, in consideration of the compensation paid to him. It was therefore held that the servant could not recover, where the master had been guilty of no fault in selecting or retaining the servant or otherwise.

§ 1644. — Although sometimes dissented from, this doctrine has been generally adopted, and the principle is now firmly established, both in England and the United States, that a master is not liable to one servant for an injury received by the latter, resulting from the negligence, carelessness or misconduct of a fellow-servant engaged in the same general business.⁹⁰ As has been stated, it is inevitable in ⁹⁰ The cases upon this point are exceedingly numerous, and no attempt will be made to cite them all. But the following are among the number: Priestly v. Fowler, 3 M. & W. 1; Hutchinson v. York, etc., Ry. Co., 5 Ex. 343; Wigmore v. Jay, 5 Ex. 354; Clarke v. Holmes, 7 H. & N. 937; Wiggett v. Fox, 11 Ex. 832; Degg v. Midland Ry. Co., 1 H. & N. 773; Bartonshill Coal Co. v. Reid, 3 Macq. 266; Bartonshill Coal Co. v. McGuire, 3 Macq. 300; Coldrick v. Partridge, [1909] 1 K. B. 530; Burr v. Theatre Royal, [1907] 1 K. B. 544; Tenn., etc., R. Co. v. Bridges, 144 Ala. 229, 113 Am. St. Rep. 35; Southern Pacific Co. v. McGill, 5 Ariz. 36; St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Triplett, 54 Ark. 289, 11 L. R. A. 773; Beeson v.

Green Mountain G. M. Co., 57 Cal. 20; Novelty Theater Co. v. Whitcomb, 47 Cal. 110, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 514; Colorado, etc., R. Co. v. Ogden, 3 Colo. 499; Peterson v. New York, etc., R. Co., 77 Conn. 351; Taylor v. Bush, etc., Co. 5 Pennewill (Del.), 378; Hughson v. Richmond, etc., R. Co. 2 App. Cases (Dist. of Cal.) 98; Parish v. Pensacola R. Co., 28 Fla. 251; Shields v. Yonge, 15 Ga. 349, 60 Am. Dec. 698; Larsen v. Le Doux, 11 Idaho, 49; Illinois, etc., R. R. v. Cox, 21 Ill. 20; Chicago, etc., R. v. Keefe, 47 Id. 108; Columbus, etc., Ry. v. Troesch, 68 Id. 545, 18 Am. Rep. 578; Indianapolis, etc., Transit Co. v. Foreman, 162 Ind. 85, 102 Am. St. Rep. 185; Ohio, etc., R. R. v. Tindall, 13 Ind. 366; Wilson v. Madison, etc., R. Co., those employments in which the servant is liable to come in contact with other servants, engaged in the same general business, that he will incur more or less of risk from their negligence or default, but this is one of the risks incident to the business, and, by accepting the employment, the servant assumes this with the others.

18 Id. 226; Gormley v. Ohio, etc., Ry. Co., 72 Id. 31; Ohio, etc., Ry. Co. v. Collarn, 73 Id. 261, 38 Am. Rep. 134; Robertson v. Terre Haute, etc., R. Co., 78 Ind. 77, 41 Am. Rep. 552; Helfrich v. Williams, 84 Ind. 553; Collingwood v. Illinois, etc., Fuel Co., 125 Iowa, 537; Atchison & E. Bridge Co. v. Miller, 71 Kan. 13, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 682; Ft. Hill Stone Co. v. Orm, 84 Ky. 183; Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Collins, 2 Duv. 114; Hubgh v. N. O. & C. R. Co., 6 La. Ann. 495, 54 Am. Dec. 565; Satterly v. Morgan, 35 La. Ann. 1166; Osborne v. Knox, etc., R. R., 68 Me. 49; Blake v. Maine Central R. Co., 70 Id. 60, 35 Am. Rep. 297; O'Connell v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., 20 Md. 212; Shauck v. Northern, etc., Ry. Co., 25 Id. 462; Cumberland Coal Co. v. Seally, 27 Id. 589; Hanrathy v. Northern, etc., Ry. Co., 46 Id. 280; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Wachter, 60 Id. 395; Kelley v. Norcross, 121 Mass. 508; Harkins v. Standard Sugar Refinery, 122 Id. 400; Colton v. Richards, 123 Id. 484; Kelley v. Boston Lead Co., 128 Id. 456; Curran v. Merchant's Mfg. Co., 130 Id. 374, 39 Am. Rep. 457; McDermott v. City of Boston, 133 Mass. 349; Flynn v. City of Salem, 134 Id. 351; Floyd v. Sudgen, Id. 563; Day v. Toledo, etc., Ry. Co., 42 Mich. 523; Smith v. Flint, etc., Ry. Co., 46 Id. 258, 41 Am. Rep. 161; Greenwald v. Marquette, etc., R. Co., 49 Mich. 197; Brown v. Winona, etc., R. Co., 27 Minn. 162, 38 Am. Rep. 285; Collins v. St. Paul, etc., R. Co., 30 Minn. 31; Brown v. Minneapolis, etc., Ry. Co., 31 Id. 553; McMaster v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 65 Miss. 264, 7 Am. St. Rep. 653; Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Doyle, 60 Miss. 977; Parker v. Hannibal, etc., R. Co., 109 Mo. 362, 18 L. R. A. 802; Brothers v. Cartter, 52 Mo. 373, 14 Am. Rep. 424; Conner v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 59 Mo. 285; Hastings v. Montana Union R. Co., 18 Mont. 493; Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Sullivan, 27 Neb. 673; Manning v. Manchester Mills, 70 N. H. 582; McAndrews v. Burns, 39 N. J. L. 117; Enright v. Oliver, 69 N. J. L. 357, 101 Am. St. Rep. 710; Lutz v. Atlantic, etc., R. Co., 6 N. M. 496, 16 L. R. A. 819; Sherman v. Rochester, etc., R. Co., 17 N. Y. 153; Laning v. N. Y. Cent. R. Co., 49 Id. 521, 10 Am. Rep. 417; Crispin v. Babbitt, 81 N. Y. 516, 37 Am. Rep. 521; McCosker v. Long Island R. R. Co., 84 N. Y. 77; Harvey v. N. Y. Cent., etc., R. Co., 88 Id. 481; Young v. N. Y., etc., R. Co., 30 Barb. 229; Marvin v. Muller, 25 Hun, 163; Cowles v. Richmond, etc., R. Co., 84 N. C. 309, 37 Am. Rep. 620; Ell v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 1 N. D. 336, 26 Am. St. Rep. 621, 12 L. R. A. 97; Kelly Island Lime, etc., Co. v. Pachuta, 69 Ohio St. 462, 100 Am. St. Rep. 706; Columbus, etc., R. Co. v. Webb, 12 Ohio St. 475; Pittsburg, etc., Ry. Co. v. Devinney, 17 Id. 197; Lake Shore, etc., Ry. Co. v. Knittal, 33 Id. 468; Railway Co. v. Ranney, 37 Id. 665; McCabe v. Wilson, 17 Okla. 355; Knahtla v. Oregon Short Line R. Co., 21 Ore. 136; Willis v. Oregon, etc., R. R., 3 West Coast Rep. 240 (Or.); Weger v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 55 Pa. St. 460; Lehigh Valley Coal Co. v. Jones, 86 Id. 432; Delaware, etc., Canal Co. v. Carroll, 89 Pa. St. 374; Keystone Bridge Co. v. Newberry, 96 Id. 246, 42 Am. Rep. 543; Mann v. Oriental Print Works, 11 R. I. 152; Lasure v. Graniteville Mfg. Co., 18 S. C. 275; Guntir v. Graniteville Mfg. Co., Id. 262, 44 Am. Rep. 573; Gates v. Chicago, etc., Ry. Co., 45 D. 433; Ragsdale v. Memphis, etc., R. R., 3 Baxt. (Tenn.) 426; Nashville, etc., R. v. Wheless, 10 Lea (Tenn.), 741, 43 Am. Rep. 317; Houston, etc., R. Co. v. Myers, 55 Tex. 110; Texas Mexican Ry. Co. v. Whitmore, 58 Id. 276; Pool v. Southern Pacific Co., 20

The servant, at the same time, has a right to rely upon the principal's performance of his duty to use due and reasonable care and diligence to select and retain none but reasonably competent and careful servants. If, therefore, as has been seen, the servant receives injury by reason of the employment of a fellow servant, who was employed, or who has been retained, in violation of this duty of the master's, the master, subject to the further doctrine of the assumption of risks, is liable.⁹¹

Utah, 210; Davis v. Central Vermont R. Co., 55 Vt. 84, 45 Am. Rep. 590; Norfolk, etc., Rr. Co. v. Nuckols, 91 Va. 193; Metzler v. McKenzie, 34 Wash. 470; Cochran v. Shanahan, 51 W. Va. 137; Brabbitts v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 38 Wis. 289; Naylor v. Chicago, etc., Ry. Co., 53 Id. 661; Howland v. Milwaukee, etc., Ry. Co., 54 Id. 226; Hoth v. Peters, 55 Id. 405; Whitnam v. Wisconsin, etc., R. Co., 58 Id. 408; Heine v. Chicago, etc., Ry. Co., Id. 525; McBride v. Union Pac. Ry. Co., 3 Wyo. 248; Northern Pacific Rr. Co. v. Peterson, 162 U. S. 346, 40 L. Ed. 994; Baltimore & Ohio R. Co. v. Baugh, 149 U. S. 368, 37 L. Ed. 772; Chicago, etc., Ry. Co. v. Ross, 112 U. S. 377, 28 L. Ed. 787; Randall v. Baltimore & Ohio R. Co., 109 U. S. 478, 27 L. Ed. 1003; New England R. Co. v. Conroy, 175 U. S. 323, 44 L. Ed. 181; Hough v. Railway Co., 100 U. S. 213, 25 L. Ed. 612; Halverson v. Nisen, 3 Saw. (U. S. C. C.) 562; Melville v. Missouri River, etc., R. R., 4 McCrary (U. S. C. C.), 194; Yager v. Atlantic, etc., R. Co., 4 Hughes (U. S. C. C.), 192; Jordan v. Wells, 3 Woods (U. S. C. C.), 527; Thompson v. Chicago, etc., Ry. Co., 18 Fed. Rep. 239; Crew v. St. Louis, etc., Ry. Co., 20 Id. 87.

Infants.—The fact that the servant injured was an infant (unless where he was a child too young to have responsibility imputed to him), does not affect the rule. Houston, etc., R. Co. v. Miller, 51 Tex. 270; Fisk v. Central Pac. R. Co., 72 Cal. 38, 1 Am.

St. Rep. 22; King v. Boston, etc., R. Co., 9 Cush. (Mass.) 112.

⁹¹ First Nat. Bk. v. Chandler, 144 Ala. 286, 113 Am. St. Rep. 39; Davis v. Southern Pacific Co., 98 Cal. 19, 35 Am. St. Rep. 133; Keith v. Walker Iron & Coal Co., 81 Ga. 49, 12 Am. St. Rep. 296; Western Stone Co. v. Whalen, 151 Ill. 472, 42 Am. St. Rep. 244; Hincley v. Horazdowsky, 133 Ill. 359, 23 Am. St. Rep. 618, 8 L. R. A. 490; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Jewell, 46 Ill. 99, 92 Am. Dec. 240; Indianapolis, etc., Transit Co. v. Foreman, 162 Ind. 85, 102 Am. St. Rep. 185; New Pittsburg Coal & Coke Co. v. Peterson, 136 Ind. 398, 43 Am. St. Rep. 327; Norfolk, etc., R. Co. v. Hoover, 79 Md. 253, 47 Am. St. Rep. 392, 25 L. R. A. 710; Snow v. Housatonic, etc., R. Co., 8 Allen (Mass.), 441, 85 Am. Dec. 720; Walkowski v. Consolidated Mines, 115 Mich. 629, 41 L. R. A. 33; McMaster v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 65 Miss. 264, 7 Am. St. Rep. 653; Smith v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 151 Mo. 391, 48 L. R. A. 368; Harper v. Indianapolis, etc., R. Co., 47 Mo. 567, 4 Am. Rep. 353; Enright v. Oliver, 69 N. J. L. 357, 101 Am. St. Rep. 710; Wright v. N. Y. Cent. R. Co., 25 N. Y. 562; Handley v. Daly Mining Co., 15 Utah, 176, 62 Am. St. Rep. 916; Noyes v. Smith, 28 Vt. 63, 65 Am. Dec. 222; Big Stone Gap Iron Co. v. Ketron, 102 Va. 23, 102 Am. St. Rep. 839; Maitland v. Gilbert Paper Co., 97 Wis. 476, 65 Am. St. Rep. 137; Zabawa v. Oberbeck Mfg. Co., 146 Wis.

§ 1645. — So, too, as it is those risks only which are incident to his employment, which the servant assumes, he does not assume the responsibility for negligence or misconduct of other servants engaged in another and different employment.⁹²

§ 1646. — Moreover, if the master has been guilty of actionable negligence, the fact that the negligence of a fellow servant contributed will not defeat the servant's right of recovery against the master.⁹³

§ 1647. — Of course, the doctrines here considered do not affect the liability of the servant, whose negligence caused the injury, to the servant injured. As has been pointed out in other sections, the servant is usually liable for his own negligence, even though the law makes the master liable also, and there is nothing in the fellow servant situation to change that liability.⁹⁴

621, Ann. Cas. 1912 C. 419; Southern Pacific Co. v. Hetzer, 68 C. C. A. 26, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 288; Baltimore, etc., Rr. Co. v. Baugh, 149 U. S. 368, 37 L. Ed. 772.

⁹² This is, of course, true under the departmental theory. Pool v. Chicago, etc., Ry. Co., 56 Wis. 227; Cumberland, etc., R. R. Co. v. State, 44 Md. 283; Green v. Banta, 48 N. Y. Super. 156, 97 N. Y. 627; Nashville, etc., R. R. Co. v. Jones, 9 Heisk. (Tenn.) 27; Sheehan v. New York, etc., R. R. Co., 91 N. Y. 332; Shanny v. Androscoggin Mills, 66 Me. 420. But the same rule applies where, though the master was the same, the employments were different; Bain v. Athens Foundry, etc., Works, 75 Ga. 718; McTaggart v. Eastman's Co., 27 N. Y. Misc. 184; Connolly v. Davidson, 15 Minn. 519, 2 Am. Rep. 154; Indiana Pipe Line Co. v. Neusbaum, 21 Ind. App. 361; Sell v. Lumber Co., 70 Mich. 479.

⁹³ Fisk v. Central Pac. Ry. Co., 72 Cal. 38, 1 Am. St. Rep. 22; Farrell v. Eastern Mach. Co., 77 Conn. 484, 107 Am. St. Rep. 45, 68 L. R. A. 239; Loveless v. Standard Gold Min. Co., 116 Ga. 427, 59 L. R. A. 596; Siegel-Cooper & Co. v. Trcka, 218 Ill. 559, 109 Am. St. Rep. 302, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 647; Illinois, etc., R. Co. v. Marshall, 210

Ill. 562, 66 L. R. A. 297; Eureka Block Co. v. Wells, 29 Ind. App. 1, 94 Am. St. Rep. 259; Schwarzschild, etc., Co. v. Weeks, 72 Kan. 190, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 515; Fuller v. Tremont Lbr. Co., 114 La. 266, 108 Am. St. Rep. 348; Noble v. Bessemer S. S. Co., 127 Mich. 103, 54 L. R. A. 456; Franklin v. Winona, etc., R. Co., 37 Minn. 409, 5 Am. St. Rep. 856; Root v. Kansas City, etc., R. Co., 195 Mo. 348, 6 L. R. A. 212; Coppins v. N. Y., etc., R. Co., 122 N. Y. 557, 19 Am. St. Rep. 523; Railroad Co. v. Spence, 93 Tenn. 173, 42 Am. St. Rep. 907; Merrill v. Oregon Short Line R. Co., 29 Utah, 264, 110 Am. St. Rep. 695; Norfolk, etc., R. Co. v. Thomas, 90 Va. 205, 44 Am. St. Rep. 906; Howe v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 30 Wash. 569, 60 L. R. A. 949; Grant v. Keystone Lbr. Co., 119 Wis. 229, 100 Am. St. Rep. 883; Chicago Junction Ry. Co. v. King, 169 Fed. 372, 94 C. C. A. 652.

The same result would follow where there was negligence of a servant, not a fellow servant, though the negligence of a fellow servant also contributed. Kansas City, etc., R. Co. v. Becker, 67 Ark. 1, 77 Am. St. Rep. 78, 46 L. R. A. 814.

⁹⁴ Osborne v. Morgan, 130 Mass. 102, 39 Am. Rep. 427; Hinds v. Overacker, 66 Ind. 547, 32 Am. Rep. 114; Rogers

§ 1648. — The fact that the servant injured is a superior servant, who might not be regarded in all states as a fellow servant of a servant injured by his negligence,⁹⁵ does not affect the master's exemption from liability under the general rule. The negligent servant is a fellow servant of the superior servant for this purpose, even if the superior servant might not be deemed a fellow servant if the other servant had been injured by the superior servant's negligence.⁹⁶

§ 1649. Who is a fellow-servant?—Although it is thus firmly established in English law, where not changed by statute, that the master is not liable to one servant for injuries caused by the negligence of a fellow servant, the principles upon which it shall be determined who is a fellow servant within this rule have not been everywhere agreed upon. Among the reasons given for the rule in the leading American case⁹⁷ was that the servants, because of their association in the labor, were so situated that each could be an observer of the conduct of the others, could exert influence over the others for securing his own safety and could give notice to the master of any misconduct, incapacity or neglect of duty on the part of his fellow servant.

§ 1650. — Association rule.—Seizing upon this theory, as the leading argument in support of the rule, the courts in several of the states, notably in Illinois,⁹⁸ have adopted what is sometimes called the consociation or association rule, which limits the application of the general rule to those servants "who are co-operating at the time of the injury in the particular business in hand, or whose usual duties are of the nature to bring them into habitual association or into such relations that they can exercise an influence upon each other promotive of proper caution."⁹⁹

v. Overton, 87 Ind. 410; Hare v. McIntire, 82 Me. 240, 17 Am. St. Rep. 476, 8 L. R. A. 450; Griffiths v. Wolf-ram, 22 Minn. 185; Durkin v. Kingston Coal Co., 171 Pa. 193, 50 Am. St. Rep. 801, 29 L. R. A. 808; Lawton v. Waite, 103 Wis. 244, 45 L. R. A. 616.

⁹⁵ See post, § 1652.

⁹⁶ McGrory v. Ultima Thule, etc., Ry. Co., 90 Ark. 210, 134 Am. St. Rep. 24, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 301.

⁹⁷ Farwell v. Boston, etc., R. Co., 4 Metc. (Mass.) 49, 38 Am. Dec. 339.

⁹⁸ Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Moranda, 93 Ill. 302, 34 Am. Rep. 168; Illinois Steel Co. v. Ziemkowski, 220 Ill. 324, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1161; Chicago City

Ry. Co. v. Leach, 208 Ill. 198, 100 Am. St. Rep. 216; Illinois Steel Co. v. Bauman, 178 Ill. 351, 69 Am. St. Rep. 316; Aldrich v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 241 Ill. 402, 132 Am. St. Rep. 220.

(This list does not purport to be complete.)

⁹⁹ A number of states are often cited as those in which the association rule prevails, but in several of them it is certain that if the rule ever prevailed, it no longer does so or is treated as part of the departmental rule.

See St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Weaver, 35 Kan. 412, 57 Am. Rep. 176. Compare Atchison & E. Bridge Co. v.

§ 1651. — Departmental rule.—It was also contended in the leading case referred to that where the master's business was an extensive one the rule should only apply to those servants who were working together in the same general department. This rule was rejected in that case as impracticable of application, but a number of courts have made it the basis of a distinction.¹

§ 1652. — Superior servant distinction.—It has further been held that where one servant, who might otherwise be regarded as a fellow servant, was given the power of direction and control over other servants, while engaged in the performance of the work, even though the nature of his duties did not bring him within the field of the general manager or the vice-principal, he was, by reason of such power of control, distinguishable from the other servants working under him and was not to be regarded as a fellow servant with them when one of them is injured by his negligence.²

Miller, 71 Kan. 13, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 682.

In Kentucky, see Louisville, etc., Ry. Co. v. Edmund's Admr., 23 Ky. Law Rep. 1049; Louisville, etc., Ry. Co. v. Hibbitt, 139 Ky. 43, 139 Am. St. Rep. 464; Louisville, etc., Ry. Co. v. Brown, 127 Ky. 732, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1135.

In Utah, see Dryburg v. Mercur Gold Mining Co., 18 Utah, 410; though this case was largely affected by the Utah statute. Compare Stephani v. Southern Pacific Ry., 19 Utah, 196; Pool v. Southern Pacific Co., 20 Utah, 210.

In Missouri, compare Relyea v. Kansas City, etc., Ry. Co., 112 Mo. 86, 18 L. R. A. 817, with Grattis v. Kansas City, etc., Ry. Co., 153 Mo. 380, 77 Am. St. Rep. 721, 48 L. R. A. 399.

In Nebraska, see Union Pacific Ry. Co. v. Erickson, 41 Neb. 1, 29 L. R. A. 137.

(No attempt has been made to collect all of the cases.)

¹ See Leouis v. Bancroft, 114 La. 105; Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Lome, 118 Ky. 260, 65 L. R. A. 122; Pool v. Southern Pacific Co., 20 Utah, 210.

In Indiana the earlier cases so held. See Fitzpatrick v. N. A., etc., R. Co., 7 Ind. 436. But they were soon overruled. See Columbus, etc., Ry. Co. v. Arnold, 31 Ind. 174, 99 Am. Dec. 615; Gormley v. Ohio, etc., Ry. Co., 72 Ind. 31.

In Missouri, see Grattis v. Kansas City, etc., Ry. Co., 153 Mo. 380, 77 Am. St. Rep. 721, 48 L. R. A. 399; Koerner v. St. Louis Car Co., 209 Mo. 141, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 292.

In Tennessee the rule is restricted to railroads. See Coal Creek Mining Co. v. Davis, 90 Tenn. 711; Louisville, etc., Rr. Co. v. Dillard, 114 Tenn. 240, 108 Am. St. Rep. 894, 69 L. R. A. 746.

The California statute of 1907 adopts this distinction. Judd v. Letts, 158 Cal. 359, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 156.

² The superior servant doctrine was early announced in Ohio in Little Miami R. Co. v. Stevens (1851), 20 Ohio, 416, and was followed in that state and others, several of which have since repudiated it. In Ohio, see Cleveland, etc., R. Co. v. Keary, 3 Ohio St. 201; Pittsburgh, etc., Railway Co. v. Ranney, 37 Ohio St. 665; Cleveland, etc., R. Co. v. Shanower, 70 Ohio St. 166; Berea Stone Co. v. Kraft, 31 Ohio St. 287, 27 Am. Rep. 510.

The most potent influence, however, in spreading this doctrine was undoubtedly the case of Chicago, etc.,

§ 1653. ——— The general rule.—The departmental rule and the consociation rule have been found difficult of application³ and have not been generally followed. The superior servant rule, so far as it is based on the mere fact that one servant is given the power to control or direct the performance of the work, fails to recognize that the giving of such directions may be as essential and inseparable a part of the work as the obedience to them, and it therefore rests on no logical distinction.⁴

The great weight of authority in the United States ignores these distinctions and holds all to be fellow servants who are in the employment of the same master, engaged in the same general business and employed in furthering the same general purpose.

Ry. Co. v. Ross (1884), 112 U. S. 377, 28 L. Ed. 787, overruled in fact in Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Baugh, 149 U. S. 368, 37 L. Ed. 772, and formally in New England R. Co. v. Conroy, 175 U. S. 323, 44 L. Ed. 181.

Some state courts which followed the Ross case have since overruled their own holdings to conform with the Baugh and Conroy cases. Wisconsin has applied much the same rule in cases involving the use of electrical current. Massy v. Milwaukee Electric Ry. Co., 143 Wis. 220, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 814.

For the general doctrine, see Consolidated Coal Co. v. Wombacher, 134 Ill. 57; Chicago & Alton R. Co. v. May, 108 Ill. 288; Spencer v. Brooks, 97 Ga. 681; Walker v. Gillett, 59 Kan. 214; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Josey, 110 Ky. 342, 96 Am. St. Rep. 455, 54 L. R. A. 78; Bloyd v. St. Louis, etc., Ry. Co., 58 Ark. 66, 41 Am. St. Rep. 85; Bonnin v. Crowley, 112 La. 1025; Wilson v. Banner Lbr. Co., 108 La. 590; Williams v. Lumber Co., 125 La. 1087, 136 Am. St. Rep. 365, 19 Ann. Cas. 1244; Purcell v. Southern Ry. Co., 119 N. C. 728; New Omaha, etc., Light Co. v. Baldwin, 62 Neb. 180; Bell v. Rocheford, 78 Neb. 304, 126 Am. St. Rep. 595; Ft. Worth, etc., Ry. Co. v. Peters, 87 Tex. 222; Pittsburg, etc., R. Co. v. Lewis, 33 Ohio St. 196; Andreson v. Ogden Union Ry. Co., 3 Utah, 128; Sherrin v. St. Joseph, etc., Ry. Co., 103 Mo. 378, 23 Am. St. Rep. 881; Taylor v. Georgia Marble Co., 99 Ga. 512, 59 Am. St. Rep. 238; Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Dillard, 114 Tenn. 240, 108 Am. St. Rep. 894, 69 L. R. A. 746; Electric Ry. Co. v. Lawson, 101 Tenn. 406; Louisville & N. Ry. Co. v. Lahr, 86 Tenn. 335 (distinguishing between "personal" and "official" neglect of superior servant).

See also, Daniel's Admr. v. Chesapeake, etc., Ry. Co., 36 W. Va. 397, 32 Am. St. Rep. 870, 16 L. R. A. 383 (overruled in Jackson v. Norfolk, etc., R. Co., 43 W. Va. 380, 46 L. R. A. 337); Flannegan v. Chesapeake, etc., Ry. Co., 40 W. Va. 436, 52 Am. St. Rep. 896. See also, Miller v. Missouri Pacific Ry. Co., 109 Mo. 350, 32 Am. St. Rep. 673.

(No attempt is made in these notes to collect all of the cases.)

³ See Grattis v. Kansas City, etc., Ry. Co., 153 Mo. 380, 77 Am. St. Rep. 721, 48 L. R. A. 399; Atchison, etc., Bridge Co. v. Miller, 71 Kan. 13, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 682.

⁴ As pointed out by Brewer, J., in Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Baugh, 149 U. S. 368, 37 L. Ed. 772, "The truth is, the various employes of one of these large corporations are not graded like steps in a stair case,—those on each step being as to those on the step below in the relation of masters and not of fellow servants, and only those on the same steps fellow serv-

§ 1654. — According to the general rule it is well settled that where there is one general object, in attaining or furthering which all the servants are engaged, the rule applies although the servant injured and the servant through whose negligence he was injured, were not engaged in doing the same kind of work.⁵ Nor is the liability of the master enlarged where the servant who has sustained the injury is of a grade inferior to that of the servant or agent whose negligence, carelessness or misconduct has caused the injury, if the services of each, in his particular labor, are directed to the same general end.⁶ Nor does ants because not subject to any control by one over the other. Prima facie, all who enter into the employ of a single master are engaged in a common service and are fellow servants, and some other line of demarcation than that of control must exist to destroy the relation of fellow servants. All enter into the service of the same master to further his interests in the one enterprise; each knows when entering into that service that there is some risk of injury through the negligence of other employes, and that risk, which he knows exists, he assumes in entering into the employment. . . . But the danger from the negligence of one specially in charge of the particular work is as obvious and as great as from that of those who are simply co-workers with him in it. Each is equally with the other an ordinary risk of the employment. If he is paid for the one, he is paid for the other; if he assumes the one, he assumes the other. Therefore, so far as the matter of the master's exemption from liability depends upon whether the negligence is one of the ordinary risks of the employment, and thus assumed by the employee, it includes all co-workers to the same end, whether in control or not."

Giving warning of dangers as they arise in the ordinary progress of the work is not usually a master's duty, but the circumstances may make it such. See Anderson v. Pittsburg Coal Co., 108 Minn. 455, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 624.

⁵ Mann v. O'Sullivan, 126 Cal. 61, 77

Am. St. Rep. 149; Livingstone v. Kodiak Packing Co., 103 Cal. 258; American Bridge Co. v. Valente, 7 Pen. (Del.) 370, Ann. Cas. 1912 D. 69; Fagundes v. Cent. Pac. R. Co., 79 Cal. 97, 3 L. R. A. 824; Georgia Coal Co. v. Bradford, 131 Ga. 289, 62 S. E. 192, 127 Am. St. Rep. 228; Chicago City Ry. Co. v. Leach, 208 Ill. 198, 100 Am. St. Rep. 216; Blake v. Maine Cent. R. Co., 70 Me. 60, 35 Am. Rep. 297; Wonder v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., 32 Md. 411, 3 Am. Rep. 143; Seaver v. Boston, etc., R. Co., 14 Gray (Mass.), 467; Adams v. Iron Cliffs Co., 78 Mich. 271, 18 Am. St. Rep. 441; Louisville, etc., Ry. Co. v. Petty, 67 Miss. 255, 19 Am. St. Rep. 304; Laning v. N. Y. Cent. R. Co., 49 N. Y. 521, 10 Am. Rep. 417; Pleasants v. Raleigh, etc., R. Co., 121 N. C. 492, 61 Am. St. Rep. 674; Spees v. Boggs, 198 Pa. 112, 82 Am. St. Rep. 792, 52 L. R. A. 993; Lewis v. Seifert, 116 Pa. 628, 2 Am. St. Rep. 631; Grant v. Keystone Lbr. Co., 119 Wis. 229, 100 Am. St. Rep. 883; New England Rr. Co. v. Conroy, 175 U. S. 323, 44 L. Ed. 181; Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Hambly, 154 U. S. 349, 38 L. Ed. 1009; Charles v. Taylor, L. R. 3 C. P. D. 492; Lovell v. Howell, 1 Id. 161; Tunney v. Midland Ry. Co., L. R. 1 C. P. 291.

⁶ Laning v. New York Central R. Co., 49 N. Y. 521, 10 Am. Rep. 417; Lawler v. Androscoggin R. R. Co., 62 Me. 463, 16 Am. Rep. 492; Brown v. Winona, etc., R. R. Co., 27 Minn. 162, 38 Am. Rep. 285; Thayer v. St. Louis, etc., R. R. Co., 22 Ind. 26, 85

it make any difference that the servant guilty of the negligence is a servant of superior authority, whose lawful directions given while all are engaged in the doing of the work the servant injured was bound to obey,⁷ unless such superior servant arises to the grade of the vice-principal of the principal.⁸

Am. Dec. 409; Columbus, etc., R. R. Co. v. Arnold, 31 Ind. 174, 99 Am. Dec. 615; Peterson v. Whitebreast, 50 Iowa, 673, 32 Am. Rep. 143; Shauck v. Northern, etc., R. R. Co., 25 Md. 462; Hard v. Vermont, etc., R. R. Co., 32 Vt. 473; Pittsburg, etc., Ry. Co. v. Lewis, 33 Ohio St. 196; Warner v. Erie Ry. Co., 39 N. Y. 468; Wood v. New Bedford Coal Co., 121 Mass. 252; Malone v. Hathaway, 64 N. Y. 5, 21 Am. Rep. 573; Pittsburg, etc., R. R. Co. v. Devinney, 17 Ohio St. 197; St. Louis, etc., R. R. Co. v. Britz, 72 Ill. 256.

⁷ Georgia Pac. Ry. Co. v. Davis, 92 Ala. 300, 25 Am. St. Rep. 47; Livingstone v. Kodiak Packing Co., 103 Cal. 258; Collier v. Steinhart, 51 Cal. 116; McLean v. Mining Co., Id. 255; New Pittsburg Coal & Coke Co. v. Peterson, 136 Ind. 398, 43 Am. St. Rep. 327; Taylor v. Evansville, etc., R. Co., 121 Ind. 124, 16 Am. St. Rep. 372, 6 L. R. A. 584; Indianapolis Trac. Co. v. Kinney, 171 Ind. 612, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 711; Lawler v. Androscoggin R. Co., 62 Me. 463, 16 Am. Rep. 492; Blake v. Maine Cent. R. Co., 70 Me. 60, 35 Am. Rep. 297; Beaulieu v. Portland Co., 48 Me. 291; Conley v. Portland, 78 Me. 217; Gillshannon v. Stony Brook R. Co., 10 Cush. (Mass.) 228; Kenney v. Shaw, 133 Mass. 501; O'Connor v. Roberts, 120 Mass. 227; Floyd v. Sugden, 134 Mass. 563; Avikainen v. Baltic Min. Co., 160 Mich. 375, 136 Am. St. Rep. 443; Brown v. Winona, etc., R. Co., 27 Minn. 162, 38 Am. Rep. 285; Gonsior v. Minneapolis, etc., Ry. Co., 36 Minn. 385; Pasco v. Minneapolis Steel Co., 105 Minn. 132, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 153; Marshall v. Schrieker, 63 Mo. 308; Enright v. Oliver, 69 N. J. L. 357, 101 Am. St. Rep. 107; Keenan v. N. Y., etc., R.

Co., 145 N. Y. 190, 45 Am. St. Rep. 604; Laning v. N. Y., etc., R. Co., 49 N. Y. 521, 10 Am. Rep. 417; Malone v. Hathaway, 64 N. Y. 5, 21 Am. Rep. 573; Ell v. Northern Pacific R. Co., 1 N. D. 336, 26 Am. St. Rep. 621, 12 L. R. A. 97; Lewis v. Seifert, 116 Pa. 628, 2 Am. St. Rep. 631; Keystone Bridge Co. v. Newberry, 96 Pa. 246, 42 Am. Rep. 543; Reese v. Biddle, 112 Pa. 72; Jenkins v. Richmond, etc., R. Co., 39 S. C. 507, 39 Am. St. Rep. 750; Hard v. Vermont Cent. R. Co., 32 Vt. 473; Lane Bros. & Co. v. Bauserman, 103 Va. 146, 106 Am. St. Rep. 872; Knudsen v. La Crosse Stone Co., 145 Wis. 394, 33 L. R. A. (N. S.) 223; Gereg v. Milwaukee Gaslight Co., 128 Wis. 35, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 367; Hoth v. Peters, 55 Wis. 405; Dwyer v. American Express Co., Id. 453; Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Hambly, 154 U. S. 349, 38 L. Ed. 1009; Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Peterson, 162 U. S. 346, 40 L. Ed. 994; New England R. Co. v. Conroy, 175 U. S. 323, 44 L. Ed. 181.

⁸ See ante, § 1640. Alabama, etc., R. Co. v. Vail, 142 Ala. 134, 110 Am. St. Rep. 23; Tyson v. North, etc., R. Co., 61 Ala. 554, 32 Am. Rep. 8; Daves v. Southern Pacific Co., 98 Cal. 19, 35 Am. St. Rep. 133; Brown v. Sennett, 68 Cal. 225, 58 Am. Rep. 8; Beeson v. Green Mt. Mining Co., 57 Cal. 20; Colorado Midland Ry. Co. v. Naylor, 17 Colo. 501, 31 Am. St. Rep. 335; McElligott v. Randolph, 61 Conn. 157, 29 Am. St. Rep. 181; Wilson v. Willimantic Co., 50 Conn. 433, 47 Am. Rep. 653; Cheeney v. Ocean Steamship Co., 92 Ga. 726, 44 Am. St. Rep. 113; Moore v. Dublin Cotton Mills, 127 Ga. 609, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 772; Illinois Steel Co. v. Ziemkowski, 220 Ill. 324, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1161; Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Kneirim, 152

§ 1655. — It is immaterial, also, that the service was an occasional or job service. It is the quality, and not the length of time, or extent of the work, which fixes, in this respect, the character of the servant and the service. The servant may be engaged by the day, week or year, or by piece-work, yet if his employment is in the way of accomplishing a result which the other employees are also working to bring about, their service is common.⁹

§ 1656. — Servants employed by different masters engaged in independent pursuits, though working together at the same time and place and for the general accomplishment of the same end, are not usually fellow servants within the rule.¹⁰ To make them such there must be a common employment or the general servant of one master

Ill. 458, 43 Am. St. Rep. 259; Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Eaton, 194 Ill. 441, 88 Am. St. Rep. 161; Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. May, 108 Ill. 288; Chicago Union Traction Co. v. Sawusch, 218 Ill. 130, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 610; New Pittsburg Coal Co. v. Peterson, 136 Ind. 398, 43 Am. St. Rep. 327; Mitchell v. Robinson, 80 Ind. 281, 41 Am. Rep. 812; Taylor v. Evansville, etc., R. Co., 121 Ind. 124, 16 Am. St. Rep. 372, 6 L. R. A. 584; Newbury v. Gechtel, etc., Mfg. Co., 100 Iowa 441, 62 Am. St. Rep. 582; Harrison v. Detroit, etc., R. Co., 79 Mich. 409, 19 Am. St. Rep. 180, 7 L. R. A. 623; Ryan v. Bagaley, 50 Mich. 179, 45 Am. Rep. 35; Dayharsh v. Hannibal, etc., R. Co., 103 Mo. 570, 23 Am. St. Rep. 900; Gormley v. Vulcan Iron Works, 61 Mo. 492; Brothers v. Cartter, 52 Mo. 373, 14 Am. Rep. 424; McLaine v. Head & Dowst Co., 71 N. H. 294, 93 Am. St. Rep. 522, 58 L. R. A. 462; Knutter v. N. Y., etc., Teleph. Co., 67 N. J. L. 646, 58 L. R. A. 808; Hankins v. N. Y., etc., R. Co., 142 N. Y. 416, 40 Am. St. Rep. 616, 25 L. R. A. 396; Corcoran v. Holbrook, 59 N. Y. 517, 17 Am. Rep. 369; Madigan v. Oceanic Steam Navigation Co., 178 N. Y. 242, 102 Am. St. Rep. 495; Ell v. Northern Pacific R. Co., 1 N. D. 336, 26 Am. St. Rep. 621, 12 L. R. A. 97; Mast v.

Kern, 34 Ore. 247, 75 Am. St. Rep. 580; Anderson v. Bennett, 16 Ore. 515, 8 Am. St. Rep. 311; Mullan v. Philadelphia Steamship Co., 78 Penn. 25, 21 Am. Rep. 2; Jenkins v. Richmond, etc., R. Co., 39 S. C. 507, 39 Am. St. Rep. 750; Gunter v. Graniteville Mfg. Co., 18 S. C. 262, 44 Am. Rep. 573; Galveston, etc., Ry. Co. v. Smith, 76 Tex. 611, 18 Am. St. Rep. 78; Lane Bros. v. Bauserman, 103 Va. 146, 106 Am. St. Rep. 872; Norfolk, etc., R. Co. v. Houchins, 95 Va. 398, 64 Am. St. Rep. 791; Sroufe v. Moran Bros. Co., 28 Wash. 381, 92 Am. St. Rep. 847, 58 L. R. A. 313; Jackson v. Norfolk, etc., R. Co., 43 W. Va. 380, 46 L. R. A. 337; Daniels' Admr. v. Chesapeake & Ohio R. Co., 36 W. Va. 397, 32 Am. St. Rep. 870, 16 L. R. A. 383; Wiskie v. Montello Granite Co., 111 Wis. 443, 87 Am. St. Rep. 885; Mulcairns v. Janesville, 67 Wis. 24; Northern Pacific R. Co. v. Peterson, 162 U. S. 346, 40 L. Ed. 994.

⁹ Ewan v. Lippincott, 47 N. J. L. 192, 54 Am. Rep. 148.

¹⁰ Swainson v. Northeastern Ry. Co., 3 Ex. D. 341; Morgan v. Smith, 159 Mass. 570; Kelly v. Tyra, 103 Minn. 176, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 334; Murray v. Dwight, 161 N. Y. 301, 48 L. R. A. 673; Coates v. Chapman, 195 Pa. 109.

must for the time being have become the special servant of the other in whose service the injury occurred.¹¹

§ 1657. What risks within the rule.—The risks which are ordinarily affected by the fellow servant rule are the risks of the service as they must have been fairly contemplated at the time the service was entered upon,¹² but additional risks may also be included under the theory of the assumption of risks.¹³ They usually are risks of personal injury, but may extend also to property used in or connected with the service. In order to make the rule applicable, the servant must have been in the service. Ordinarily the risks will be those arising upon the master's premises, but they are not confined to those; as where the servants of a contractor are working upon the premises of a third person, or the servants of a truckman are working in the highway. Ordinarily, also, the risks will be those of injury to the servant himself, and will not extend to injuries to the members of his family for example, unless they were associated with and for him in the service. Usually the risks will be those incurred while the servant is actually at work, but they are not confined to those, but may include injuries received while he is temporarily suspending work or going to or from some place in pursuance of the service.¹⁴

¹¹ Delory v. Blodgett, 185 Mass. 126, 102 Am. St. Rep. 328, 64 L. R. A. 114; Hasty v. Sears, 157 Mass. 123, 34 Am. St. Rep. 267.

¹² In Gannan v. Housatonic R. Co., 112 Mass. 234, 17 Am. Rep. 82, a track employee was held entitled to recover for an injury to his wife caused by the negligence of a switchman of the same company caused while she was riding as a passenger upon a train. "The implied contract on the part of the servant by which he assumes the risk of the negligence of others, has reference to those direct injuries to which he is exposed in the course of his employment."

¹³ See ante, § 1651; post, § 1660.

¹⁴ In the following cases it was held that an employee, while on his employer's premises on his way to work, was then in the service of the employer and cannot recover if injured by the negligence of a fellow servant. Olsen v. Andrews, 168 Mass. 261; Ewald v. Chicago, etc., Ry. Co., 70

Wis. 420, 5 Am. St. Rep. 178; Boldt v. New York Cent. R. Co., 18 N. Y. 432. So, while going from one part of the building to another to eat his lunch. Boyle v. Columbian Fire Proofing Co., 182 Mass. 93; or to change his clothes before leaving for the day; Willmarth v. Cardoza, 99 C. C. A. 475, 176 Fed. 1.

In the following cases the employee was held not to be in the service of his employer. Savannah, etc., Ry. Co. v. Flannagan, 82 Ga. 579, 14 Am. St. Rep. 183 (flagman injured as he was returning home from work); Baird v. Pettit, 70 Pa. 477 (officer-injured as he was leaving the office); C. N. O. & T. P. Ry. Co. v. Conley, 14 Ky. Law Rep. 568 (section hand injured while he was taking a day off).

In St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Welch, 72 Tex. 298, 2 L. R. A. 839, an employee who was asleep in a "bunk-car" on a side-track, but liable to be called for duty at any time, was held § 1658. Volunteer assisting servant can not recover.—It is well settled that a person who, without any employment and without any interest in the performance or result of the service, voluntarily undertakes to perform service for another, or to assist the servants of another in the service of their master, either at the request or without the request of such servants, who have no authority to employ other servants, stands in no better situation, for the time being, than that of a fellow servant with those whom he undertakes to assist and is to be regarded as assuming all the risks incident to the business. If he is injured by the negligence of such servants, he has, therefore, no recourse to the principal.¹⁵ to be in the service of the company and a fellow servant of train hands of a passing freight train.

An employee, while being transported in the master's vehicles to and from work according to agreement with employer, and as part of the service is in the service of his employer while so being carried. Indianapolis, etc., Transit Co. v. Foreman, 162 Ind. 85, 102 Am. St. Rep. 185; Ellington v. Beaver Dam Co., 93 Ga. 53; Roland v. Tift, 131 Ga. 683, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 354; McGuirk v. Shattuck, 160 Mass. 45, 39 Am. St. Rep. 454; Gillshannon v. Stony Brook R. Co., 10 Cush. (Mass.) 228; Kilduff v. Boston El. Ry. Co., 195 Mass. 307, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 873; Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Stuber, 48 C. C. A. 149, 54 L. R. A. 696; Dayton Coal Co. v. Dodd, 110 C. C. A. 395, 188 Fed. 597, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 456; Coldrick v. Partridge, etc., [1909] 1 K. B. 530, [1910] App. Cas. 77; Ionnone v. N. Y., etc., R. Co., 21 R. I. 452, 79 Am. St. Rep. 812; Abend v. Terre Haute, etc., R. Co., 111 Ill. 202, 53 Am. Rep. 616; Ross v. New York, etc., R. Co., 5 Hun, 488, affirmed 74 N. Y. 617; Wright v. Northampton, etc., R. Co., 122 N. C. 852.

A fortiori, it is held that an employee engaged in ballasting a track or removing obstructions therefrom, whose duty requires constant transporting from one point to another, is, while so being transported as a part of his work, in the service of his employer. Kumler v. Junction, etc., R. Co., 33 Ohio St. 150; Knahtla v. Oregon Short Line R. Co., 21 Ore. 136; Heine v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 58 Wis. 525.

In Enos v. Rhode Island, etc., Ry. Co., 28 R. I. 291, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 244, a flagman was furnished with tickets to be used in going to and from work, and the court held him not to be in the service of the company while returning from work. Peterson v. Seattle Traction Co., 23 Wash. 615, 53 L. R. A. 586, was similar.

In Dickinson v. West End St. Ry. Co., 177 Mass. 365, 83 Am. St. Rep. 284, 52 L. R. A. 326, an employee while off duty but exercising the privileges accorded him by his employer of free transportation, was held not to be in the service of the employer. See, to like effect, State, use of Abell v. Western Md. Ry. Co., 63 Md. 433; Harris v. City R. Co., 69 W. Va. 65, Ann. Cas. 1912 D. 59.

In Williams v. Oregon Short L. R. Co., 18 Utah, 210, 72 Am. St. Rep. 777, a person going on a free pass to a distant point on the road at which he was to be given employment, was held not to be in the service. See also, Chattanooga Rapid Transit Co. v. Venable, 105 Tenn. 460, 51 L. R. A. 886; Simmons v. Oregon R. Co., 41 Oreg. 151.

¹⁵ Flower v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 69 Penn. St. 210, 8 Am. Rep. 251; New Orleans, etc., R. Co. v. Harrison,

But the rule is otherwise where the person injured, is not a mere volunteer, but assists for the purpose of aiding or advancing his own, or his own master's, business. Though performing a service which may be beneficial to both parties, he is doing so in his own behalf, or in the behalf of his own master, and not as if he were the servant of the master whose servants he assists. Their request or acquiescence may give him the right to assist, but the fact that he does so in his own behalf, or in behalf of his own master, however beneficial may be his assistance to the master of the other servants, gives him the right to be protected against their negligence.¹⁶ The act done by him, should, however, be a prudent and reasonable one, and not a wrongful interference and intermeddling with business in which he had no concern.¹⁷

6. Assumption of Risks.

§ 1659. In general.—It has been seen in an earlier section that the master is not liable to the servant for injuries received by the latter by reason of the natural and ordinary dangers which inhere in the business itself and for which the master is not at fault. These dangers

48 Miss. 112, 12 Am. Rep. 356; Osborne v. Knox, etc., R. R., 68 Me. 49, 28 Am. Rep. 16; Mayton v. Texas, etc., R. Co., 63 Tex. 77, 51 Am. Rep. 637; Street Railway Co. v. Bolton, 43 Ohio St. 224, 54 Am. Rep. 803; Eason v. S. & E. T. Ry. Co., 65 Tex. 577, 57 Am. Rep. 606; Welch v. Maine Cent. R. Co., 86 Me. 552, 25 L. R. A. 658; Wischam v. Rickards, 136 Pa. 109, 20 Am. St. Rep. 900, 10 L. R. A. 97; Cincinnati, etc., Co. v. Finnell, 108 Ky. 135, 57 L. R. A. 266; Railroad Co. v. Ward, 98 Tenn. 123, 60 Am. St. Rep. 848; Bonner v. Bryant, 79 Tex. 540, 23 Am. St. Rep. 361; Johnson v. Ashland Water Co., 71 Wis. 553, 5 Am. St. Rep. 243; Knicely v. West Va. R. Co., 64 W. Va. 278, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 370; Degg v. Midland Ry. Co., 1 H. & N. 773; Potter v. Faulkner, 1 Best & S. 800. But see Rhodes v. Georgia, etc., R. Co., 84 Ga. 320, 20 Am. St. Rep. 362.

Where a servant is loaned or hired to one who assumes control over him, such servant becomes the fellow-servant of the employees of the borrower or hirer. DeLory v. Blodgett, 185 Mass. 126, 102 Am. St. Rep. 328, 64 L. R. A. 114; Hasty v. Sears, 157 Mass. 123, 34 Am. St. Rep. 267; Brooks v. Central Sainte Jeane, 228 U. S. 688.

¹⁶ Street Railway Co. v. Bolton, 43 Ohio St. 224, 54 Am. Rep. 803; Eason v. S. & E. T. Ry. Co., supra; Murray v. Dwight, 161 N. Y. 301, 48 L. R. A. 673; Welch v. Maine Cent. R. Co., 86 Me. 552, 25 L. R. A. 658; Jones v. St. Louis, etc., Ry. Co., 125 Mo. 666, 46 Am. St. Rep. 514, 26 L. R. A. 718; Bonner v. Bryant, 79 Tex. 540, 23 Am. St. Rep. 361; Railroad Co. v. Ward, 98 Tenn. 123, 60 Am. St. Rep. 848; Sanford v. Standard Oil Co., 118 N. Y. 571, 16 Am. St. Rep. 787; Kelly v. Tyra, 103 Minn. 176, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 334; Miner v. Franklin County Tel. Co., 83 Vt. 311, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1195; Wright v. London, etc., Ry. Co., 1 Q. B. Div. 252; Holmes v. North Eastern Ry. Co., L. R. 4 Ex. 254.

¹⁷ Street Railway Co. v. Bolton, 43 Ohio St. 224, 54 Am. Rep. 803.

presumptively are as well known to the servant as to the master, and the servant, who, with this knowledge, seeks and accepts service in the business, is commonly said to assume the risks by the mere fact of accepting the employment.

There is, however, another aspect of the doctrine of the assumption of risks, radically different from the foregoing one and of very great significance, which must be separately considered.

§ 1660. — Assumption of risks resulting from master's negligence.—As has been stated, the risks referred to in the earlier section are those which naturally and ordinarily inhere in the business itself, when carried on in the usual manner and under ordinary conditions. These risks, however, may be greatly added to or increased by the actual methods or conditions under which the particular business was carried on. (1) These methods or conditions may be purely local or accidental and not attributable to the act or omission of any one and especially not to any act or omission of the employer. (2) They may be owing to the act or omission of the employer and yet not impute to him any legal or moral fault; as where, for example, he carries on his business, as he lawfully may, with other than the latest and most improved appliances or equipment, provided they are still reasonably safe. The first two of these classes usually fall within the same legal rules as those which ordinarily inhere in the business itself. They are not attributable to the legal fault of the master, and he is not legally responsible to the servant, except, perhaps, in cases in which he would owe the servant a duty to warn him of unusual dangers, known to the master (though not attributable to his fault) but not known to the servant. (3) On the other hand, the risks may be increased because the employer, through heedlessness, indifference or positive disregard, either of ordinary legal duties or of express statutory requirements, carries on his business in such a way as to subject his employees to unnecessary or unjustifiable perils. These last named risks lie outside the range of those which ordinarily and necessarily inhere in the business and continuance, being due to the master's breach of duty, would justify ing out of the mere fact of accepting the employment; their existence itself; they are not covered by any implied agreement or consent grow- the employee, even if he had made a contact for a definite term, in refusing to go on with the service; if he were immediately injured by them he could recover damages of the master; he may lawfully quit if they are not corrected. Suppose, however, that without protesting against them and exacting a promise to remove them, he continues, after the unusual perils become fully obvious to him, to perform the service in the midst of these perils and is ultimately injured because of them. May he now recover damages from the employer? He certainly may unless he has lost his right by some conduct of his own. Has he lost it? He may usually lose it in but one of two ways: either by his contributory negligence, or by some undertaking to assume the risk himself. The defence of contributory negligence will be later considered. The remaining defence that he has assumed the risk of the master's negligence is here to be dealt with. At this point we are confronted with a unique and difficult situation, though the legal solution seems in general to be well established.

§ 1661. — With reference to such of these perils as do not involve a violation of express statutory requirement (which will be considered later), the answer given to the question by the weight of authority is that the servant has lost his right and may not recover.¹⁸

¹⁸ Birmingham, etc., R. Co. v. Allen, 99 Ala. 359, 20 L. R. A. 457; Choctaw, etc., R. Co. v. Jones, 77 Ark. 367, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 837, 7 Ann. Cas. 430; Limberg v. Glenwood Lbr. Co., 127 Cal. 598, 49 L. R. A. 33; Illinois Central R. Co. v. Fitzpatrick, 227 Ill. 478, 118 Am. St. Rep. 280; Martin v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 118 Iowa, 148, 96 Am. St. Rep. 371, 59 L. R. A. 698; Buehner v. Creamery Package Mfg. Co., 124 Iowa, 445, 104 Am. St. Rep. 354; St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Irwin, 37 Kan. 701, 1 Am. St. Rep. 266; Consolidated Gas. Co. v. Chambers, 112 Md. 324, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 509; Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. State, 75 Md. 152, 32 Am. St. Rep. 372; Lamson v. American Axe Co., 177 Mass. 144, 83 Am. St. Rep. 267; Lewis v. New York, etc., R. Co., 153 Mass. 73, 10 L. R. A. 513; Lynch v. Saginaw Val. Tr. Co., 153 Mich. 174, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 774; Reberk v. Horne, etc., Co., 85 Minn. 326; Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Curtis, 51 Neb. 442, 66 Am. St. Rep. 456; Johnson v. Devoe Snuff Co., 62 N. J. L. 417; Odell v. N. Y., etc., R. Co., 120 N. Y. 323, 17 Am. St. Rep. 650; Knisley v. Pratt, 148 N. Y. 372, 32 L. R. A. 367 (overruled in Fitzwater v. Warren, 206 N. Y. 355); Smith v. Wilmington, etc., R. Co., 129 N. C. 173, 85 Am. St. Rep. 740; Consolidated Coal, etc., Co. v. Floyd, 51 Ohio St. 542, 25 L. R. A. 848; Brossman v. Railroad Co., 113 Pa. 490, 57 Am. Rep. 479; Gann v. Railroad, 101 Tenn. 380, 70 Am. St. Rep. 687; Leach v. Oregon Short Line R. Co., 29 Utah, 285, 110 Am. St. Rep. 708; McDuffee v. Boston & M. R. Co., 81 Vt. 52, 130 Am. St. Rep. 1019; Johnson v. Boston, etc., R. Co., 78 Vt. 344, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 856; Seldomridge v. Railroad Co., 46 W. Va. 569; Sanderson v. Panther Lbr. Co., 50 W. Va. 42, 88 Am. St. Rep. 841, 55 L. R. A. 908; Sweet v. Ohio Coal Co., 78 Wis. 127, 9 L. R. A. 861; Mielke v. Chicago, etc., Ry. Co., 103 Wis. 1, 74 Am. St. Rep. 834; Brotzki v. Wisconsin Granite Co., 142 Wis. 380, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 982; Butler v. Frazee, 211 U. S. 459, 53 L. Ed. 281; Utah Consolidated Mining Co. v. Bateman, 99 C. C. A. 365, 176 Fed. 57, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 958; St. Louis Cordage Co. v. Miller, 61 C. C. A. 477, 126 Fed. 495, 63 L. R. A. 551.

In Missouri, this form of the doctrine does not seem to be recognized. Jewell v. Kansas City Bolt Co., 231 Mo. 176, 140 Am. St. Rep. 515. The servant may recover unless he has been guilty of contributory negligence; and it is held that continuance after knowledge of the defect

In the language of the courts, he is said to have assumed the risks. The employee is said to have assumed the risks which are inherent in the business because he presumptively knows them and accepts the employment in view of that knowledge. The assumption of these unusual risks caused by the master's negligence cannot be put upon that ground. The servant was not bound to anticipate them, but he learned before he was injured that they were present. He was not obliged to assume them; he might have quit, but with knowledge of the situation and the danger he continued in the service without objection. By doing so he is ordinarily held to have assumed these risks also. That he was induced by economic necessity is usually held not to affect the result.¹⁹

§ 1662. — “The doctrine of assumption of risk,” it is said in a leading case,²⁰ “is placed by the authorities and sustained upon two grounds. That doctrine is that, while it is the duty of the master to exercise ordinary care to provide a reasonably safe place for the servant to work and reasonably safe appliances for him to use, and while, unless he knows or by the exercise of reasonable care would have known that this duty has not been discharged by the master, he may assume that it has been, and may recover for any injury resulting from the cannot, as a matter of law, be said to be negligence on the part of the servant, unless it is so glaringly unsafe as to threaten immediate injury; or, as it is often put, it is not negligence, as a matter of law, if it was reasonable to suppose that the place or instrument might be safely used by the exercise of care and precaution. Clippard v. St. Louis Transit Co., 202 Mo. 432; Curtis v. McNair, 173 Mo. 270; Doyle v. M. K. & T. Trust Co., 140 Mo. 1; Soeder v. St. Louis, etc., Ry. Co., 100 Mo. 673, 18 Am. St. Rep. 724; O'Mellia v. Kansas City, etc., R. Co., 115 Mo. 205; Settle v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 127 Mo. 336, 48 Am. St. Rep. 633; Huhn v. Missouri Pacific Ry. Co., 92 Mo. 440.

In North Carolina, also, a similar rule seems to prevail. Thus in Russ v. Harper, 156 N. Car. 444, it is said: “Whatever may be the ruling in other jurisdictions, it is now very well established in this State that this doctrine of assumption of risk, in its proper acceptation, does not apply to conditions caused or created by the employer's negligence, or, in such case, if it exists in name, it is to be determined on the principles applicable to contributory negligence.”

In Virginia, see Richmond, etc., Ry. Co. v. Norment, 84 Va. 167, 10 Am. St. Rep. 827.

¹⁹ Thus in Lamson v. American Axe Co., 177 Mass. 144, 83 Am. St. Rep. 267, it is said per Holmes, J.: “He stayed and took the risk. He did so none the less that the fear of losing his place was one of his motives.” Same: Wescott v. New York, etc., R. Co., 153 Mass. 460; Leary v. Boston & Albany R., 139 Mass. 580, 52 Am. Rep. 733; Haley v. Case, 142 Mass. 316; Burke v. Davis, 191 Mass. 20, 114 Am. St. Rep. 591, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 971.

²⁰ St. Louis Cordage Co. v. Miller, 61 C. C. A. 477, 63 L. R. A. 551.

failure to discharge it, yet he assumes all the ordinary risks and dangers incident to the employment upon which he enters and in which he continues, including those resulting from the negligence of his master which are known to him, or which would have been known to a person of ordinary prudence and care in his situation by the exercise of ordinary diligence. The first ground upon which this rule of law rests is the maxim, Volenti non fit injuria. A servant is not compelled to begin or continue to work for his master. Ordinarily, he does not work for him under a contract for a stated time. He is at liberty to retire from his employment, and his master is free to discharge him, at any time. The latter constantly offers him day by day his wages, his place to work, and the appliances which he is to use. The former day by day voluntarily accepts them. By the continuing acceptance of the work and the wages he voluntarily accepts and assumes the risk of the defects and dangers which a person of ordinary prudence in his place would have known. No one can justly be held liable to another for an injury resulting from a risk which the latter knowingly and willingly consented to incur.

“The second ground upon which assumption of risk is based is that every servant who enters or continues in the employment of a master without complaint thereby either expressly or impliedly agrees with him to assume the risks and dangers incident to the employment which a person of ordinary prudence in his situation would have known by the exercise of ordinary diligence and care, and to hold his master free from liability therefor.”

§ 1663. — With reference to the grounds suggested for this doctrine, however, some distinctions are to be made. So far as the ordinary and inherent risks of the business are concerned, it may perhaps be fairly said that the servant assumes these as part of the contract of employment. With reference to the extraordinary and unnecessary risks caused by the negligence of the master which are subsequently found to exist in the business, the foundation of contract is not so clear. What is the consideration? Where the employment is for an indefinite time, as in the above quotation it is said it ordinarily is, it may be said that continuation in an employment terminable at pleasure furnishes the consideration. But how in the case of a contract for a definite term? Does retention here furnish a consideration? Pretty certainly not. Even if a consideration can be found, is the contract a lawful one to make? It is at least questionable.²¹ If not,

²¹ General executory contracts to release the master from the consequences of his own negligence are usually held to be opposed to public

we must here fall back upon consent, or the maxim Volenti non fit injuria.

§ 1664. — It has been insisted by other courts that the matter of assumption of risks was not one of contract at all. Thus in one case²² it is said: "The law regarding the assumption of risk is the law which governs the relation of master and servant, and is independent of the will of either. It is not a term of the contract of employment. If it were, then the master and servant could retain it or abolish it in each contract of employment. But they can do neither. It is a principle of the common law, and must be repealed, if at all, by the law making power. It is the law of the land governing all persons who assume the relation of master and servant. It is over and above the contract, and depends in no manner for its existence upon the agreement of the parties. It is founded upon public policy, the status assumed by master and servant, and upon the maxim, Volenti non fit injuria."

§ 1665. — The truth is that the whole matter is in a most confused and unsatisfactory condition. The assumption of the inherent risks, which is one thing and not difficult to account for, has been confused with the assumption of the risks caused by the master's negligence, which is quite a different thing and not easy to account for; and both have been confused with the question of contributory negligence. There is nowhere agreement as to the grounds upon which assumption of the risks caused by the master's negligence is to be based.²³ It can not be deemed part of the original contract in the ordinary case, since undoubtedly that contract ordinarily is based upon the assumption that the master will not be negligent. If it be said that a contract of employment made with knowledge that the master is conducting his business in a negligent way includes by implication a term releasing the master from the consequences of a possible future injury, we are at once confronted by the fact that such general executory policy and void. See post, § 1681. A contract to assume in a forbidden employment, e. g. that of a minor under the statutory age, is said to be unenforceable. Berdos v. Tremont, etc., Mills, 209 Mass. 489, Ann. Cas. 1912 B. 797.

²² Denver, etc., R. Co. v. Norgate, 72 C. C. A. 365, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 981 (citing Langlois v. Dunn Worsted Mills, 25 R. I. 645; Martin v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 118 Iowa, 148, 96 Am. St.

Rep. 371, 59 L. R. A. 698; O'Maley v. Gas L. Co., 158 Mass. 135, 47 L. R. A. 161, and other cases); Contrast Dowd v. New York, etc., R. Co., 170 N. Y. 459.

²³ See, for examples of the difficulties such cases as Dowd v. New York, etc., R. Co., 170 N. Y. 459; Johnston v. Fargo, 184 N. Y. 379, 6 Ann. Cas. 1, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 537; Rase v. Minneapolis, etc., R. Co., 107 Minn. 260, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 138.

waivers of the consequences of the master's negligence are usually held in this country to be opposed to public policy.²⁴ There is, of course, room to distinguish between a general waiver of the consequences of unknown future negligence, and a specific waiver of the consequences of a particular act with which the servant is unexpectedly confronted in the course of the employment, but whose dangers he understands and whose risks he is willing to assume; and perhaps such a narrow contract might be upheld. In actual experience, however, there is doubtless no thought of contract or consideration in these cases at all, and to set up such an implied contract seems forced. If there be any principle here applicable it seems to be that already referred to of Volenti non fit injuria, which has an established place in the law outside the field of master and servant,²⁵ and which has in certain cases an equitable root not substantially different from that which supports estoppel in pais. No one who reads the cases, however, can escape the conclusion that it has been greatly overworked in this field.

§ 1666. — Not all courts, moreover, accept this doctrine of the assumption of risks by knowingly continuing in the employment. It is urged that, however true it may be in theory that the servant has an option in the matter and is free to choose, practically there is an entire absence of economic freedom. Thus it is said in Virginia,²⁶ with reference to the refusal of the trial court to instruct that continuance in the work with knowledge of the dangers would release the master from liability for injuries caused by defects resulting from his negligence: "The court did not err in rejecting this instruction. It was palpably improper. It is sanctioned neither by reason, justice nor law. The usual and legal duty of every employer is to provide all means and appliances reasonably necessary for the safety of those in his employment. It is a cruel—an inhuman—doctrine that the employer, though he is aware that his own neglect to furnish the proper safeguards for the lives and limbs of those in his employment puts them in constant hazard of injury, is not to be held accountable to those employees who,

²⁴ See post, § 1681.

²⁵ See for some account of its history and scope, Beven on Negligence (3d ed.), p. 632 et seq.

²⁶ Richmond, etc., Ry. Co. v. Norment, 84 Va. 167, 10 Am. St. Rep. 827.

Compare Lord Bramwell, in Smith v. Baker, [1891] App. Cas. 325, 346: "It is said that to hold the plaintiff is not to recover is to hold that a master may carry on his work in a dangerous way and damage his servants. I do so hold, if the servant is foolish enough to agree to it. This sounds very cruel. But do not people go to see dangerous sports. Acrobats daily incur fearful dangers, as do lion tamers and the like. Let us hold to the law. If we want to be charitable, gratify ourselves out of our own pockets."

serving him under such circumstances, are injured by his negligent acts and omissions, if the injured parties, after themselves becoming cognizant of the peril occasioned by their employer's negligent way of conducting his business, continue in his employment and receive his pay, though they may be virtually compelled to remain by the stern necessity of earning the daily food essential to keep away starvation itself."

Other courts have been reluctant to draw the inference of assumption where the servant was young or inexperienced and therefor not likely to really appreciate the situation.²⁷

§ 1667. Obviousness of risk.—In order to make this doctrine of assumption of risks applicable, it is essential that the risks shall either have been in fact known to the servant or so open and obvious that they must be deemed to have been within the contemplation of an ordinarily prudent man exercising reasonable care for his own safety. The servant is not bound to suspect defects. He is not bound to make critical inspection: that is the master's duty. Neither is the servant bound to go in search of defects where there is nothing to suggest their existence. He assumes that only which can reasonably be said to be either known or obvious.²⁸

On the other hand, the servant may not close his eyes to the obvious, and thereby escape the consequences of an assumption of the risk.²⁹

And not only must the defect be obvious, but it must appear that the ²⁷ See, for example, the dissenting opinion of Thayer, J., in St. Louis Cordage Co. v. Miller, supra; Mansell v. Conrad, 125 N. Y. App. Div. 634.

In Owens v. Cotton Mills, 83 S. Car. 19, it is held that the presumption is that an infant employee under 14 years of age is incapable of assuming the risks of danger. See also, Bare v. Crane Creek Coal Co., 61 W. Va. 28, 123 Am. St. Rep. 966, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 284.

²⁸ Texas & Pacific Ry. v. Swearingen, 196 U. S. 51, 49 L. Ed. 382; Choctaw Ry. v. McDade, 191 U. S. 64, 48 L. Ed. 96; St. Louis Cordage Co. v. Miller, 66 C. C. A. 477, 63 L. R. A. 551; St. Louis, etc., Ry. Co. v. Birch, 89 Ark. 424, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1250; Rase v. Minneapolis St. Paul Ry., 107 Minn. 260, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 138; St. Louis Southwestern Ry. v. Hynson, 101 Texas, 543; Dowd v. New York, etc., R. Co., 170 N. Y. 459; Davidson v. Cornell, 132 N. Y. 228; Alton Paving Co. v. Hudson, 176 Ill. 270; Postal Teleg. Co. v. Likes, 225 Ill. 249; Bowen v. Penn. Ry., 219 Pa. 405; Laughy v. Bird Lumber Co., 136 Wis. 301; Burnside v. Peterson, 43 Colo. 382, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 76; McDuffee v. Boston & M. R. Co., 81 Vt. 52, 130 Am. St. Rep. 1019; Finnegan v. Winslow Skate Co., 189 Mass. 580; Young v. Snell, 200 Mass. 242, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 242.

²⁹ "Of course, a servant is bound to use his senses, and cannot be heard to plead ignorance of a danger that was obvious to any one on inspection." Mitchell, J., in Wuotilla v. Duluth Lumber Co., 37 Minn. 153. The same idea is present in various forms in most of the cases cited in this section.

risk was either actually appreciated or so patent as to warrant the assumption that it was appreciated.³⁰

§ 1668. Voluntary action—Coercion—Command.—If assumption of risk in these cases rests upon the maxim Volenti non fit injuria, the servant must not only have knowledge of the risk but he must voluntarily assume it. As is pointed out by the English judges in several cases, the maxim is not Scienti but Volenti. When, however, we come to inquire closely as to whether one is volens or not, we are confronted with very great difficulties, and, if we seek to determine it by other than the ordinary external standards of conduct, we may easily be led into metaphysical discussions which are too refined for practical application. The English courts have pursued the matter further than is commonly done in the American courts; thus, it has been said in several of the English cases that a servant who knowingly continues in a risky service because he is directed to do so by his master, or for fear of losing his employment, cannot necessarily be said to have done so voluntarily.³¹ On the other hand, the current American view seems to be that continuing to serve with knowledge, even under such circumstances, is sufficient evidence of voluntary action.³² Thus, it was said of the servant in one such case in Massachusetts by Holmes, C. J.,

³⁰ Brown v. West Riverside Coal Co., 143 Iowa, 662, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1260; Seeds v. Amer. Bridge Co., 68 Kan. 522; Myers v. Iron Co., 150 Mass. 125, 15 Am. St. Rep. 176; Ferren v. Railroad Co., 143 Mass. 197; Fitzgerald v. Connecticut River Paper Co., 155 Mass. 155, 31 Am. St. Rep. 537; Wuotilla v. Lumber Co., 37 Minn. 153, 5 Am. St. Rep. 832; Peterson v. Merchants' Elev. Co., 111 Minn. 105, 137 Am. St. Rep. 537, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 816; Hamilton v. Mining Co., 108 Mo. 364; Rogers v. Roe, 74 N. J. L. 615, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 691; Tuckett v. Am. Steam Laundry, 30 Utah, 273, 116 Am. St. Rep. 832, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 990; Kreigh v. Westinghouse, etc., Co., 214 U. S. 249.

³¹ See Smith v. Baker, [1891] App. Cas. 325; Baddeley v. Granville, 19 Q. B. Div. 423; Yarmouth v. France, 19 Q. B. Div. 647; Thomas v. Quartermaine, 18 Q. B. Div. 685. See also, Choctaw, etc., R. Co. v. Jones, 77 Ark. 367, 7 Ann. Cas. 430; Lloyd

v. Hanes, 126 N. C. 359. But see, Brazil Block Coal Co. v. Hoodlet, 129 Ind. 327.

³² Thus in Massachusetts, see Leary v. Boston & Albany Ry., 139 Mass. 580, 52 Am. Rep. 733; Haley v. Case, 142 Mass. 316; Westcott v. New York & New England R. R. Co., 153 Mass. 460; Lamson v. American Axe Co., 177 Mass. 144, 83 Am. St. Rep. 267; Burke v. Davis, 191 Mass. 20, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 971, 114 Am. St. Rep. 591. In the last case it was said: "The fact that she [the servant] consented to undertake the work only reluctantly, and under a threat of dismissal, if she should refuse to do it, will not save her from being held to have assumed all the obvious risks of her undertaking." See also, Milby Coal Co. v. Balla, 7 Ind. Terr. 629, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 695; Atchison, Topeka Ry. v. Schroeder, 47 Kan. 315; Maltbie v. Belden, 167 N. Y. 307, 54 L. R. A. 52; Reed v. Stockmeyer, 20 C. C. A. 381, 74 Fed. 186; Brazil Block

"He complained and was notified that he could go if he would not face the chance. He stayed and took the risk. He did so none the less that the fear of losing his place was one of his motives."³³

Many cases, however, give more effect to the master's orders than those above referred to.³⁴

§ 1669. ——— Emergencies—Assurances of safety.—But even though continuing to serve in the face of risks, although because of commands or the fear of losing employment, may be regarded as evidence of assumption in the ordinary case in which there is time and opportunity to deliberate, there are many cases of haste or emergency or necessary absorption in the work where this would not necessarily be true, and in which the question whether the servant, who had obeyed commands or directions under the circumstances, had thereby assumed the risks, would fairly be an open one to be decided by a jury in view of all of the facts.³⁵

So, too, continuing at the work under assurances of safety, given by the master or his proper representative, where the danger is not obvious, and the master may reasonably be supposed to have superior knowledge, is not necessarily an assumption of the risks.³⁶

Coal Co. v. Hoodlet, 129 Ind. 327; Bradshaw's Adm'r v. Louisville, etc., Ry., 14 Ky. L. R. 688, 21 S. W. 346; Dougherty v. West Superior Iron Co., 88 Wis. 343; Hencke v. Ellis, 110 Wis. 532.

That the master's direction or command to do the work does not ordinarily alter the situation, see Briggs v. Tennessee Coal Co., 163 Ala. 237; Southern Cotton Oil Co. v. Walker, 164 Ala. 33; Worlds v. Georgia R. Co. 99 Ga. 283; Hanson v. Hammell, 107 Iowa, 171; Cunningham v. Lynn R. Co., 170 Mass. 298; Bier v. Hosford, 35 Wash. 544.

³³ In Burke v. Davis, supra.

³⁴ See Zearfoss v. Norway Iron Co., 218 Pa. 594; Kansas City, etc., R. Co. v. Thornhill, 141 Ala. 215; Jelinek v. St. Paul, etc., Ry. Co., 104 Minn. 249; Dallemand v. Saalfeldt, 175 Ill. 310, 67 Am. St. Rep. 214, 48 L. R. A. 753.

³⁵ Thus in Perrier v. Dunn Worsted Mills, 29 R. I. 396, it was said, per Parkhurst, J.: "The question, whether an employee has assumed the risk or has been guilty of contributory negligence, in a case where he is required to do his work in haste, either under orders of his superior, or by reason of the exigency of his position or because of an emergency, and where his whole energy and attention are absorbed in his work; or whether he may be excused from the degree of care ordinarily required or for temporary forgetfulness of a risk previously known to him, or of a risk which he might under other circumstances have remembered or appreciated, have been generally held to be questions for the jury under all the facts of the particular case" citing many cases.

³⁶ See McKee v. Tourtellotte, 167 Mass. 69, 48 L. R. A. 542; Lord v. Wakefield, 185 Mass. 214; Brown v. Lennane, 155 Mich. 686, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 453; Burkhard v. Leschen Rope Co., 217 Mo. 466; Anderson v. Pitt Min. Co., 103 Minn. 252; McKane v. Marr, 79 Vt. 13; Sullivan v. Wood, 43 Wash. 259, 117 Am. St. Rep.

Where the command and the assurances of safety are combined, the case against assumption is, of course, still stronger.

§ 1670. — Inexperience—Youth, etc.—Where the servant is young, inexperienced or ignorant, and especially where there was an unperformed duty to warn, the inference of assumption of risk is reluctantly drawn, and it is usually a question for the jury whether, under all the circumstances, there was an intelligent appreciation of the risk and a voluntary assumption of it.³⁷

§ 1671. — Assumption of risks existing in violation of statute.—Where the peril is increased by reason of the failure of the employer to do some act, or to take some precaution, expressly required by statute, a somewhat different question arises. Until it is obvious that it has not been or will not be done, the employee has a right to assume that the employer has complied or will comply with the statute, and during that interval he does not assume the added risk. When, however, it becomes obvious to him that the statute has not been or will not be complied with, the question whether, by continuing in the service without objection, he assumes the risk, is one upon which the 1047. See also, Owensboro v. Gabbert, 135 Ky. 346, 135 Am. St. Rep. 462.

³⁷ Minors. See Owens v. Laurens Cotton Mills, 83 S. C. 19; Shirley v. Abbeville Furn. Co., 76 S. Car. 452, 121 Am. St. Rep. 952; Tucker v. Buffalo Cotton Mills, 76 S. Car. 539, 121 Am. St. Rep. 957; Lowe v. Southern Ry. Co., 85 S. Car. 363, 137 Am. St. Rep. 904; Stuler v. Hart, 65 Mich. 644; Ewing v. Lanark Fuel Co., 65 W. Va. 726, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 487; Bare v. Crane Creek Coal Co., 61 W. Va. 28, 123 Am. St. Rep. 966, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 284; Walton v. Burchel, 121 Tenn. 715, 130 Am. St. Rep. 788; O'Connor v. Golden Gate Mfg. Co., 135 Cal. 537, 87 Am. St. Rep. 127; Omaha Bottling Co. v. Theiler, 59 Neb. 257, 80 Am. St. Rep. 673; Dallemand v. Saalfeldt, 175 Ill. 310, 67 Am. St. Rep. 214, 48 L. R. A. 753; Siegel, Cooper & Co. v. Trcka, 218 Ill. 559, 109 Am. St. Rep. 302, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 647; Addicks v. Christoph, 62 N. J. L. 786, 72 Am. St. Rep. 687; Saller v. Freedman Bros. Shoe Co., 130 Mo. App. 712; Chambers v. Woodbury

Mfg. Co., 106 Md. 496, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 383; Magone v. Portland Mfg. Co., 51 Ore. 21.

Child labor statutes are usually construed to deprive the master of the defense of assumption of risk if the injury occurred in an employment in violation of them. Inland Steel Co. v. Yedinak, 172 Ind. 423, 139 Am. St. Rep. 389; Madden v. Wilcox, 174 Ind. 657; Stehle v. Jaeger Machine Co., 225 Pa. 348, 133 Am. St. Rep. 884, 14 Ann. Cas. 122; Lena-han v. Pittston Coal Co., 218 Pa. 311, 120 Am. St. Rep. 885, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 461; Strafford v. Republic Iron Co., 238 Ill. 371, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 876; Berdos v. Tremont & Suffolk Mills, 209 Mass. 489, Ann. Cas. 1912 B. 797; Glucina v. Goss Brick Co., 63 Wash. 401; Norman v. Virginia Pocahontas Coal, 68 W. Va. 405, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 504.

Inexperienced persons.—See Di Bari v. Bishop Co., 199 Mass. 254, 127 Am. St. Rep. 497, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 773; Republic Iron Co. v. Ohler, 161 Ind. 393; Fletcher Bros. v. Hyde, 36 Ind. App. 96.

authorities are in conflict. The statute may, indeed, and sometimes does, expressly provide that an assumption of the risk shall not be permitted.³⁸ Where there is no such provision, it is held by some courts to be contrary to sound policy to permit an assumption of the risk to be inferred.³⁹ Other courts hold, on the contrary, that there is no

³⁸ Johnson v. Southern Pac. R. R. Co., 196 U. S. 1, 49 L. Ed. 363; Schlemmer v. Buffalo, etc., Ry. Co., 205 U. S. 1, 51 L. Ed. 681; Kansas City, etc., R. R. Co. v. Flippo, 138 Ala. 487 (referring to the federal act in regard to automatic couplers for railroads); Luken v. Lakeshore, etc., Ry. Co., 248 Ill. 377, 140 Am. St. Rep. 220 (same).

In North Carolina, see Coley v. N. C. R. Co., 128 N. C. 534, 57 L. R. A. 817; Mott v. Southern Ry. Co., 131 N. C. 234; Thomas v. Raleigh, etc., R. R. Co., 129 N. C. 392; Cogdell v. Southern R. R. Co., 129 N. C. 398. See also, Coley v. N. C. R. Co., 129 N. C. 407, 57 L. R. A. 817.

For constitutional provisions, see Buckner v. Richmond, etc., R. Co., 72 Miss. 873; Youngblood v. S. C., etc., R. Co., 60 S. C. 9, 85 Am. St. Rep. 824; Carson v. Southern Ry. Co., 68 S. C. 55; Norfolk, etc., R. R. Co. v. Cheatwood, 103 Va. 356.

³⁹ Narramore v. Cleveland, etc., Ry. Co., 37 C. C. A. 499, 48 L. R. A. 68; St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. White, 93 Ark. 368; Johnson v. Mammoth Vein Coal Co., 88 Ark. 243, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 646; Streeter v. Western Wheeled Scraper Co., 254 Ill. 244, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 628; Waschow v. Kelley Coal Co., 245 Ill. 516; Peebles v. O'Gara Coal Co., 239 Ill. 370; Spring Valley Coal Co. v. Patting, 210 Ill. 342; Spring Valley Coal Co. v. Rowatt, 196 Ill. 156; Catlett v. Young, 143 Ill. 74. See also, Browne v. Siegel Cooper & Co., 191 Ill. 226; Landgraf v. Kuh, 188 Ill. 484; United States Cement Co. v. Cooper, 172 Ind. 599; Davis v. Mercer Lbr. Co., 164 Ind. 413; Green v. American Car & Foundry Co., 163 Ind. 135; Davis Coal Co. v. Polland, 158 Ind. 607, 92 Am. St. Rep. 319;

Monteith v. Kokomo, etc., Co., 159 Ind. 149, 58 L. R. A. 944; Indiana, etc., Coal Co. v. Neal, 166 Ind. 458, 9 Ann. Cas. 424; Bromer v. Locke, 31 Ind. App. 353. See also, American Rolling Mill Co. v. Hullinger, 161 Ind. 673; Poli v. Numa Coal Co., 149 Iowa, 104, 33 L. R. A. (N. S.) 646; Stephenson v. Sheffield Brick Co., 151 Iowa, 371; Western, etc., Mfg. Co. v. Bloom, 76 Kan. 127, 123 Am. St. Rep. 123, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 225; Low v. Clear Creek Coal Co., 140 Ky. 754, 33 L. R. A. (N. S.) 656; Sipes v. Michigan Starch Co., 137 Mich. 258; Murphy v. Grand Rapids Veneer Works, 142 Mich. 677; Rivers v. Bay City Trac. Co., 164 Mich. 696; Kleinfelt v. Somers Coal Co., 156 Mich. 473, 132 Am. St. Rep. 532; Durant v. Lexington Coal Min. Co., 97 Mo. 62; McGinnis v. Printing Co., 122 Mo. App. 227; Nairn v. National Biscuit Co., 120 Mo. App. 144; Stafford v. Adams, 113 Mo. App. 717 (but see dictum in Spiva v. Osage Coal & Min. Co., 88 Mo. 68); Fitzwater v. Warren, 206 N. Y. 355, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1229; Greenlee v. Southern Ry. Co., 122 N. C. 977, 65 Am. St. Rep. 734, 41 L. R. A. 399; Hill v. Saugestad, 53 Oreg. 178, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 634; Solt v. Williamsport Radiator Co., 231 Pa. 585 (dictum); Kilpatrick v. Grand Trunk Ry. Co., 74 Vt. 288, 93 Am. St. Rep. 887; Gustafson v. West Lbr. Co., 51 Wash. 25; Whelan v. Washington Lbr. Co., 41 Wash. 153, 111 Am. St. Rep. 1006; Hoveland v. Hall Bros. etc., Co., 41 Wash. 164; Hall v. West, etc., Mill Co., 39 Wash. 447, 4 Ann. Cases 587; Johnson v. Far West Lumb. Co., 47 Wash. 492; Anderson v. Pac. Lumb. Co., 60 Wash. 415; Dukette v. Northwestern Co., 61 Wash. 95.

sound reason for a distinction between the employer's common-law duty and such a statutory duty, and that the risk may be assumed in either case.⁴⁰ If the considerations suggested with reference to the assumption of the risks caused by the master's failure to perform non-statutory duties have any weight, a fortiori ought they to operate here to prevent assumption in the case of statutory duties.

§ 1672. — Assumption of risk of the sort here in question as in the case of the non-statutory sort cannot be regarded as a matter of executory agreement.⁴¹ It is a question of conduct in view of an existing state of facts. Regarded as a matter of executory contract with reference to future negligence, it would usually be condemned as opposed to public policy.⁴² New York, for example, which upholds assumption of risk even in the case of statutory duties, declares invalid an executory agreement to release the master from the consequences of his negligence.⁴³

§ 1673. — Assumption of risk distinguishable from contributory negligence.—Assumption of risk is a different matter from contributory negligence.⁴⁴ As has already been pointed out, the term

⁴⁰ St. Louis Cordage Co. v. Miller, 61 C. C. A. 477, 63 L. R. A. 551; Denver, etc., R. R. Co. v. Norgate, 72 C. C. A. 365, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 981; Nottage v. Sawmill Phoenix, 133 Fed. 979; Birmingham R. & Electric Co. v. Allen, 99 Ala. 359, 20 L. R. A. 457; Denver, etc., R. Co. v. Gannon, 40 Colo. 195, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 216. See also, Browne v. Siegel, Cooper & Co., 191 Ill. 226; Martin v. C. R. I. & P. Ry. Co., 118 Iowa, 148, 96 Am. St. Rep. 371, 59 L. R. A. 698; Gillin v. Patten & S. R. Co., 93 Me. 80 (probably distinguishable); O'Maley v. South Boston Gaslight Co., 158 Mass. 135, 47 L. R. A. 161; Keenan v. Edison, etc., Co., 159 Mass. 379; Cassady v. Boston & A. R. R. Co., 164 Mass. 168; Marshall v. Norcross, 191 Mass. 568; Anderson v. Nelson Lbr. Co., 67 Minn. 79; Swenson v. Osgood & B. Mfg. Co., 91 Minn. 509; McGinty v. Waterman, 93 Minn. 242, 3 Ann. Cas. 39; Seely v. Tennant, 104 Minn. 354; Knisley v. Pratt, 148 N. Y. 372, 32 L. R. A. 367; White v. Witteman Lithographing Co., 131 N. Y. 631; Jenks v. Thompson, 179 N.

Y. 20. But these are now apparently overruled in Fitzwater v. Warren, 206 N. Y. 355, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1229; Mika v. Passaic Print Works, 76 N. J. L. 561; Hesse v. Columbus, etc., R. R. Co., 58 Ohio St. 167; Johns v. Cleveland, etc., R. R. Co., 23 Ohio Cir. Ct. 442; affirmed without opinion in 69 Ohio St. 532; Cleveland R. R. Co. v. Fergus, 24 Ohio Cir. Ct. 67; Langlois v. Dunn Worsted Mills, 25 R. I. 645; Holum v. Chicago, etc., R. R. Co., 80 Wis. 299; Helmke v. Thilmany, 107 Wis. 216; Williams v. Wagner Co., 110 Wis. 456.

⁴¹ The contrary of this is, indeed, stated in the opinion in Dowd v. New York, etc., R. Co., 170 N. Y. 459. It must be conceded, however, that some of the language in that opinion was unfortunately chosen. See Johnston v. Fargo, 184 N. Y. 379, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 537, 6 Ann. Cas. 1.

⁴² See post, § 1681.

⁴³ Johnston v. Fargo, supra.

⁴⁴ Choctaw, etc., R. Co. v. McDade, 191 U. S. 64, 68, 48 L. Ed. 96. (Cf. Schlemmer v. Buffalo, etc., R. Co., 205 U. S. 1, 51 L. Ed. 681.) St. Louis properly applies, not to the ordinary, necessary and inherent risks which usually belong to the business even when carried on under normal circumstances and with due care, but to those unusual and extraordinary risks which arise, occasionally because of unusual physical conditions, but most frequently from the negligent manner in which the master carries on his business. As has also been pointed out, the time of assumption may be when the servant accepts the employment with full knowledge of these unusual risks in addition to the ordinary and inherent ones, but it is usually when the servant, having entered upon the service without such knowledge, finds, after he is in it, that they exist, and then remains in the employment without protesting and obtaining a promise that the conditions will be changed. Now, remaining in the service under these circumstances is not per se contributory negligence, though it is usually held to be an assumption of the risk. The servant finding himself in the midst of unexpected risks decides to remain and to try to get along with the situation. If the risks are so obvious and so necessary and immediate that no reasonable man would so remain, the act of remaining may constitute contributory negligence; here assumption of risk and contributory negligence are substantially merged, but it certainly sounds very ill in the mouth of the master to urge that the act of the servant in remaining at his post amid dangers caused by the master's negligence is to be regarded as contributory negligence on the part of the servant unless that conclusion is practically irresistible.

But while remaining in the service is not necessarily contributory negligence, it is possible that the servant while acting in his perilous situation, instead of exercising reasonable care not to be injured by the assumed risks, may so carelessly conduct himself as to receive injuries which reasonable care would have prevented. Such a failure to exercise due care would constitute contributory negligence.

In practical results, the outcome may not be different. The servant's assumption of the risks would make the defence of contributory negligence unnecessary. If assumption of the risks should not be found, but contributory negligence existed, that would be a defence. If the servant had not assumed the risks and had still conducted himself with due care in his perilous situation, neither defence could be successfully urged by the master.

Cordage Co. v. Miller, 61 C. C. A. 477, 63 L. R. A. 551; Bradburn v. Wabash R. Co., 134 Mich. 575; Rase v. Minneapolis, etc., Ry. Co., 107 Minn. 260, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 138; Solt v. Williamsport Radiator Co., 231 Pa. 585; Johnson v. Mammoth Vein Coal Co., 88 Ark. 243, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 646.

§ 1674. — How determined—Court or jury.—Whether the question of the assumption of the risk is one of fact to be determined in each case by the jury, or whether it may be determined by the court is a question on which there seems to be some difference of opinion. In the case from which quotation has been already made,⁴⁵ it was said: "Now, while it is true, as the decisions to which we have adverted declare, that mere knowledge of a defect by a servant who continues in the employment does not necessarily establish the fact as a matter of law that he has assumed the risk it entails, and while it is also true that he does not assume such a risk unless an ordinarily prudent person of his capacity in his situation would have appreciated the danger from it, it is equally true that a servant who enters or continues in the employment of his master in the presence of visible or obvious defects and plain or apparent dangers from them, which he knows or appreciates, or which an employee of his intelligence and capacity would by the exercise of ordinary care and prudence know and appreciate, assumes the risk of these dangers, and he cannot be heard to say that he did not appreciate them, and when the uncontradicted evidence establishes these facts no case arises in his favor, no question remains for the jury, and it is the duty of the court to peremptorily instruct them to return a verdict for the master. This is a familiar and well-established rule of law."⁴⁶

In order to make this rule applicable it should appear, as has been pointed out, not only that the defect was obvious but that the risk was either actually appreciated or so patent as to warrant the assumption that it was appreciated. Where there is room for reasonable difference of opinion about this, the case should go to the jury.⁴⁷

⁴⁵ St. Louis Cordage Co. v. Miller, 61 C. C. A. 477, 63 L. R. A. 551.

⁴⁶ To same effect: Podvin v. Pepperel Mfg. Co., 104 Me. 561, 121 Am. St. Rep. 411; Milby Coal Co. v. Balla, 7 Ind. Ter. 629, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 695; Utah Consol. Min. Co. v. Bateman, 99 C. C. A. 365, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 958; Glenmont Lumber Co. v. Roy, 61 C. C. A. 506, 125 Fed. 524; Burke v. Union Coal Co., 84 C. C. A. 626, 157 Fed. 178; Chicago, etc. Ry. v. Crotty, 73 C. C. A. 147, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 832; Lamson v. American Axe Co., 177 Mass. 144, 83 Am. St. Rep. 267; Republic Iron Co. v.

Thomasino, 99 C. C. A. 523, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 606.

⁴⁷ Fitzgerald v. Paper Co., 155 Mass. 155, 31 Am. St. Rep. 537; Brown v. Coal Co., 143 Iowa, 662, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1260; Meier v. Way, 136 Iowa, 302, 125 Am. St. Rep. 254; Browne v. Siegel, 191 Ill. 226; Choc-taw, etc., Ry. v. McDade, 191 U. S. 64, 48 L. Ed. 96; Marshall v. Dalton Paper Mills, 82 Vt. 489, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 128; Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. v. Benton, 65 C. C. A. 660, 132 Fed. 460; Mahoney v. Dore, 155 Mass. 513; Hilgar v. Walla, 50 Wash. 470, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 367; Rankel v. Buck-

The English cases, holding as has been seen a more liberal rule respecting the voluntary character of the servant's conduct, treat the question of assumption as one for the jury in many cases in which the American courts would direct a verdict.⁴⁸

§ 1675. ——— Protests against doctrine.—There is undoubtedly a growing feeling against this doctrine of the assumption of risks.⁴⁹ The doctrine is based upon our legal conceptions of freedom of contract and freedom to accept or reject risks at pleasure. Practically, however, it may be urged that while there is theoretic freedom there is economic dependence. The servant is not free to choose. He must work and rather than lose his place, he accepts conditions which menace his safety. Frequently he is so young, inexperienced or immature that he does not in fact appreciate the danger however much he ought to have done so. Moreover, his safety alone is not the only interest involved. The interests of those who are dependent upon him are involved; and society is interested, because, if the servant or those dependent upon him become derelict, society must assume the burden of caring for them. In behalf of these latter interests, therefore, it may be urged that the master ought not to be permitted to throw the burden of his own failure to perform his legal duties upon the servant, even though the latter may have been ready to assume it. Certainly no one can read the cases upon the subject without being forced to believe at least that assumption of risks is often too easily and readily found.

7. Contributory Negligence.

§ 1676. Contributory negligence of servant defeats his recovery.—Notwithstanding the fact of the master's negligence, the servant's right of recovery may be defeated by his own contributory negligence. The same rules which govern the question of contributory negligence in other cases apply here. A servant has no cause of action against his master for an injury resulting from the negligence of the master, if staff-Edwards Co., 138 Wis. 442, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1180; Burgess v. Davis Sulphur Ore Co., 165 Mass. 71; Ferren v. Old Colony Ry., 143 Mass. 197; Choctaw, etc., Ry. v. Craig, 79 Ark. 53; Murphy v. O'Neil, 204 Mass. 42, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 146; Crimmins v. Booth, 202 Mass. 17, 132 Am. St. R. 468; Rase v. Minneapolis St. P. Ry., 107 Minn. 260, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 138.

⁴⁸ See Smith v. Baker, [1891] App. Cas. 325; Baddeley v. Granville, 19 Q. B. Div. 423; Thomas v. Quartermaine, 18 Q. B. Div. 685; Fitzgerald v. Paper Co., supra.

⁴⁹ See Johnston v. Fargo, 184 N. Y. 379, 6 Ann. Cas. 1, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 537; Butler v. Frazee, 211 U. S. 459; Richmond, etc., R. Co. v. Norment, 84 Va. 167, 10 Am. St. Rep. 827.

the servant's own negligence directly contributed to cause the injury.⁵⁰ Even though the master's negligence was greater than the servant's, the common law does not, in general, undertake to compare the degrees or to apportion the blame accordingly. Statutes upon the subject, however, sometimes provide for such an apportionment.⁵¹

⁵⁰ Warden v. Louisville, etc., R. Co., 94 Ala. 277, 14 L. R. A. 552; St. Louis, etc., Ry. Co. v. Dupree, 84 Ark. 377, 120 Am. St. Rep. 74; St. Louis, etc., Ry. Co. v. Rice, 51 Ark. 467, 4 L. R. A. 173; Victor Coal Co. v. Muir, 20 Colo. 320, 46 Am. St. Rep. 299, 26 L. R. A. 435; Baker v. Hughes, 2 Colo. 79; Elliott v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 5 Dak. 523, 3 L. R. A. 363; Florida, etc., R. Co. v. Mooney, 45 Fla. 286, 110 Am. St. Rep. 73; Carroll v. East Tenn., etc., R. Co., 82 Ga. 452, 6 L. R. A. 214; Campbell v. Atlanta, etc., R. Co., 53 Ga. 488; N. Y., etc., R. Co. v. Hamlin, 170 Ind. 20, 15 Ann. Cas. 988, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 881; Davis Coal Co. v. Pollard, 158 Ind. 607, 92 Am. St. Rep. 319; Muldowney v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 39 Iowa, 615; Lancaster's Admr. v. Central City Light Co., 137 Ky. 355; Potts v. Shreveport Belt Ry. Co., 110 La. 1, 98 Am. St. Rep. 452; Schultz v. Eckardt Mfg. Co., 112 La. 568, 104 Am. St. Rep. 452; Buzzell v. Laconia Mfg. Co., 48 Me. 113, 77 Am. Dec. 212; Wormell v. Maine Cent. R. Co., 79 Me. 397, 1 Am. St. Rep. 321; State v. Malster, 57 Md. 287; Grand v. Michigan, etc., R. Co., 83 Mich. 564, 11 L. R. A. 402; Vicksburg, etc., R. Co. v. Wilkins, 47 Miss. 404; Seibert v. Missouri, etc., R. Co., 188 Mo. 657, 70 L. R. A. 72; O'Hare v. Cochecho Mfg. Co., 71 N. H. 104, 93 Am. St. Rep. 499; Johnston v. Syracuse Lighting Co., 193 N. Y. 592, 127 Am. St. Rep. 988; Bennett v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 2 N. D. 112, 13 L. R. A. 465; Solt v. Williamsport Radiator Co., 231 Pa. 585; Honor v. Albrighton, 93 Penn. 475; Green, etc., Ry. Co. v. Bresmer, 97 Penn. 103; Houston, etc., Ry. Co. v. DeWalt, 96 Tex. 121, 97 Am. St. Rep. 877; Darracott v. Chesapeake, etc., R. Co., 83 Va. 238, 5 Am. St. Rep. 266; Miller v. Moran Bros. Co., 39 Wash. 631, 109 Am. St. Rep. 917, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 283; Stratton v. Nichols Lbr. Co., 39 Wash. 323, 109 Am. St. Rep. 881; Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Crotty, 73 C. C. A. 147, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 832; Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Reesman, 19 U. S. App. 596, 9 C. C. A. 20, 23 L. R. A. 768; Cunningham v. Railway Co., 17 Fed. 882.

⁵¹ The Federal Employers' Liability Act of 1906 (declared unconstitutional on other grounds) provided that the contributory negligence of the employee should not bar his recovery where his negligence was slight and that of the employer was gross in comparison, but that the damages should be diminished accordingly.

The Act of 1908 provides that "the fact that the employee may have been guilty of contributory negligence shall not bar a recovery, but the damages shall be diminished by the jury in proportion to the amount of negligence attributable to such employee." Sec. 3.

The Georgia Code (1895, § 2322) provides that "No person shall recover damages from a railroad company for injury to himself or his property where the same is done by his consent or is caused by his own negligence. If the complainant and the agents of the company are both at fault, the former may recover, but the damages shall be diminished by the jury in proportion to the amount of default attributable to him."

A doctrine of comparative negligence at one time prevailed in Illinois, but "The doctrine of comparative negligence no longer exists in this state." Macon v. Holcomb, 205 Ill. 643.

The effect of contributory negligence is, in general, as potent where the liability is a statutory one as it is where common law liabilities are concerned.⁵²

The fact that the servant is an infant, if old enough to be charged with the duty of care, does not ordinarily affect the application of the doctrine of contributory negligence; but this is not true under many of the statutes forbidding the employment of minors.⁵³

§ 1677. — As has been already pointed out, contributory negligence is a different matter from that of assumption of risk. Where the servant has assumed the risks, either usual or unusual, of the employment in which he is engaged, and is injured by reason of one of them (as he may be though in the exercise of due care in the dangerous situation in which he has consented to work), the master is not liable because, by the hypothesis, the servant has taken this risk upon himself. It is entirely possible, however, that the servant may have failed to exercise due care and thus have brought upon himself an in-

Comparative negligence was also thought to be the rule in Tennessee at one time, but it has been repudiated in the later cases. Railway Co. v. Hull, 88 Tenn. 33; Railway Co. v. Aiken, 89 Tenn. 245. So, in Kansas: Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Henry, 57 Kan. 154.

⁵² Narramore v. Cleveland, etc., Ry. Co., 37 C. C. A. 499, 48 L. R. A. 68; Taylor v. Carew Mfg. Co., 143 Mass. 470; Keenan v. Edison, etc., Co., 159 Mass. 379; Victor Coal Co. v. Muir, 20 Colo. 320, 46 Am. St. Rep. 299, 26 L. R. A. 435; Chicago, etc., Ry. Co. v. Brown, 44 Kan. 384; Grand v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 83 Mich. 564; Farquhar v. Alabama, etc., R. Co., 78 Miss. 193; Wabash, etc., R. Co. v. Thompson, 15 Ill. App. 117; Ford v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 91 Iowa, 179, 24 L. R. A. 657; Kilpatrick v. Grand Trunk Ry. Co., 72 Vt. 263, 82 Am. St. Rep. 939; Krause v. Morgan, 53 Ohio St. 26; Queen v. Dayton Coal & Iron Co., 95 Tenn. 458, 49 Am. St. Rep. 935, 30 L. R. A. 82; Christner v. Cumb., etc., Coal Co., 146 Pa. 67; Graham v. Newbury, etc., Coke Co., 38 W. Va. 273; Holum v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 80 Wis. 299; Lake Erie, etc., Ry. Co. v. Craig, 73 Fed. 642; Anderson v. Lumber Co., 67 Minn. 79; Munn v. Wolff, 94 Ill. App. 122; Johnson v. Mammoth Vein Coal Co., 88 Ark. 243, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 646.

⁵³ Where the employment of minors is expressly forbidden by statute, it is held by some courts that the defense of contributory negligence can not be made. See Lenahan v. Pittston Coal Mining Co., 218 Pa. 311, 120 Am. St. Rep. 885, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 461; Stehle v. Jaeger Machine Co., 225 Pa. 348, 133 Am. St. Rep. 884, 14 Ann. Cas. 122; Strafford v. Republic Iron Co., 238 Ill. 371, 128 Am. St. Rep. 129, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 876; Marino v. Lehmaier, 173 N. Y. 530. By other courts, the effect of the statute is deemed to be to make the master liable for all injuries caused by the service, but not those caused by the infant's own negligence. Darsam v. Kohlman, 123 La. 164, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 881; Norman v. Virginia Pocahontas Coal Co., 68 W. Va. 405, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 504; Evans v. American Iron Co., 42 Fed. 519; Queen v. Dayton Coal Co., 95 Tenn. 458, 49 Am. St. Rep. 935, 30 L. R. A. 82.

jury which, notwithstanding the dangerous situation, would not otherwise have happened to him. He could not recover for this, primarily because he had assumed the entire risk, and, even if he had not, because of his contributory negligence. If the doctrine of assumption of risks be not adopted, then the servant's failure to protect himself would have its usual significance.

§ 1678. — Effect of express command of master.—Contributory negligence is not to be so readily imputed to the servant where he did the act, alleged to be negligent on his part, as the result of the express direction or command of the master or of someone who represented the master in that behalf. Ordinarily it may be presumed that the master knows better than the servant the dangers of the employment. There is, too, as has been seen, a presumption that the master's orders are proper and lawful, and the servant who disobeys them must take upon himself the burden of showing that they were otherwise.⁵⁴ It is to be expected therefore that great weight will be given by the servant to his master's orders which he has undertaken to obey, and where the service is continued, or the task undertaken, by the express order or command of the master or those who represent him, this fact must be taken into consideration in determining the question of the servant's contributory negligence. The command of the master would not justify the servant in going into plain, undoubted and imminent danger, such as no man of ordinary prudence would encounter.⁵⁵ But in determining this question, too, regard must be had to the exigencies of the case. A prudent man even will run more risks in times of hazard or threatened disaster, than at other times when there is no pressing need. And so, under such circumstances, men cannot be expected to weigh the chances with nice precision. Each case is left to be judged by its own circumstances and surroundings. The rule of contributory negligence is, therefore, to be modified in this regard, that if the servant incur risk by the express command of the master or his agent, and the danger was not so inevitable or imminent that a man of ordinary prudence would not, under the circumstances, have incurred it, the servant is not to be deemed guilty of contributory negligence.⁵⁶

⁵⁴ See ante, § 1244 et seq.

⁵⁵ Mason v. Post, 105 Va. 494; Lowe Mfg. Co. v. Payne, 167 Ala. 245, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 436; Roul v. Railway Co., 85 Ga. 197; Shortel v. St. Joseph, 104 Mo. 114, 24 Am. St. Rep. 317.

⁵⁶ Southern Ry. Co. v. Shields, 121 Ala. 460, 77 Am. St. Rep. 66; Choctaw, etc., R. Co. v. Jones, 77 Ark. 367, 7 Ann. Cas. 430, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 837; Foley v. California Horseshoe Co., 115 Cal. 184, 56 Am. St. Rep. 87;

The fact that the servant was young or inexperienced may also be taken into account, since he may have neither the judgment to realize the danger nor the strength of will to resist an unwarranted direction.⁵⁷

8. Statutes Changing Common Law Rules.

§ 1679. Statutory changes.—Attempts have been made in a number of instances to change or modify the rules of the common law respecting the master's liability to his servant. A detailed statement of these statutes is not appropriate here, but a general reference to them may not be out of place. In 1880 the English Parliament passed an employers' liability act, which, in general terms, made the employer liable for injuries caused by negligently defective "ways, work, machinery or plant" or by the negligence of any servant charged with the power of superintendence or direction or by the negligence of servants charged with the control of signals, switches, engines and trains. In 1897 a new act was passed, revised and extended in 1906 (and which did not supersede the act of 1880), which proceeded upon the theory, then entirely new in English law, of requiring the employer to make certain fixed compensation, without regard to his negligence, whenever death or accident occurred in the service, including therein death or disability from certain occupational diseases. In the United States, a number of states have abolished the fellow servant rule and made other changes so far as railroads are concerned,⁵⁸ and several states have adopted employers' liability acts substantially similar to the Eng-

Little v. Southern Ry. Co., 120 Ga. 347, 102 Am. St. Rep. 104, 66 L. R. A. 509; Western Stone Co. v. Muscial, 196 Ill. 382, 89 Am. St. Rep. 325; Taylor v. Evansville, etc., R. Co., 121 Ind. 124, 16 Am. St. Rep. 372, 6 L. R. A. 584; Fraudsens v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 36 Iowa, 372; Fox v. Chicago, etc., Ry. Co., 86 Iowa, 368, 17 L. R. A. 289; Shaver v. Home Telephone Co., 36 Ind. App. 233, 114 Am. St. Rep. 373; St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Morris, 76 Kan. 836, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1100; Pullman Co. v. Geller, 128 Ky. 72, 129 Am. St. Rep. 295; McKee v. Tourtellotte, 167 Mass. 69, 48 L. R. A. 542; Chicago, etc., Ry. Co. v. Bayfield, 37 Mich. 204; Schroeder v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 108 Mo. 222, 18 L. R. A. 827; O'Hare v. Cochecho Mfg.

Co., 71 N. H. 104, 93 Am. St. Rep. 499; Mason v. Richmond, etc., R. Co., 111 N. C. 482, 32 Am. St. Rep. 814, 18 L. R. A. 845; Noble v. Roper Lumber Co., 151 N. Car. 76, 134 Am. St. Rep. 974; Schiglizzo v. Dunn, 211 Pa. 253, 107 Am. St. Rep. 567; Patterson v. Pittsburg, etc., R. Co., 76 Pa. 389, 18 Am. Rep. 412; East Tenn., etc., R. Co. v. Duffield, 12 Lea (Tenn.), 63, 47 Am. Rep. 319; Tuckett v. American Steam Laundry Co., 30 Utah, 273, 116 Am. St. Rep. 832.

⁵⁷ Dougherty v. Dobson, 214 Pa. 252, 31 Am. St. Rep. 777; Kehler v. Schwenk, 151 Pa. 505, 13 L. R. A. 374; Lowe v. Southern Ry., 85 S. Car. 363, 137 Am. St. Rep. 904.

⁵⁸ Arkansas: Acts 1911, p. 56.

lish employers' liability act of 1880.⁵⁹ Recently still more sweeping legislation, either in the form of liability acts, compensation acts, or Florida: Stats. of 1906, § 3150.

Georgia: Code of 1895, §§ 2610, 2323, 2297. Code of 1911, §§ 2751, 2782-4, 3129, 3602.

Indiana: Burns' Code 1901, § 7083 (limited to railroads by construction. See Indiana cases cited, post).

Iowa: Supp. 1907, § 2071; Laws 1909, ch. 124.

Kansas: Gen. Stat. 1901, § 6312; Laws of 1905, p. 540; Laws of 1909, § 6999.

Maine: Laws of 1909, ch. 258.

Minnesota: 1905 Stats. § 2040.

Mississippi: Const., § 193; Code 1906, § 4056.

Missouri: Rev. Stats. § 2873-4-5-6; Laws of 1911, p. 157 (as to railroads and mines).

Montana: 1907 Rev. Stats. § 5251; Laws of 1911, ch. 29.

Nebraska: Ann. Stats. 1909, § 2803.

North Carolina: Rev. Stats. 1905, § 2646.

Oklahoma: Const. Art. IX, § 36.

South Carolina: Const. Art. IX, § 15.

Texas: Laws 1897, p. 14, ch. 6; Sayre's Code, § 4560; Laws 1905, ch. 163; Laws 1909, ch. 10.

Utah: Comp. Laws of 1907, § 1343.

Vermont: Laws 1910, p. 101.

Wisconsin: Stat. 1898 § 1816; Laws of 1903, ch. 448; Laws of 1907, p. 495.

Statutes abolishing the fellow-servant rule only with reference to railroads have been uniformly held constitutional against contentions that they are founded on an arbitrary classification, a denial of equal protection of the laws, etc., on the ground that it is an occupation that is peculiarly and inherently hazardous. See Missouri Pac. Ry. Co. v. Castle, 224 U. S. 541 (upholding the Nebraska act); Mobile, etc., R. Co. v. Turnipseed, 219 U. S. 35 (upholding Mississippi act); Missouri Pacific Ry. Co. v. Mackey, 127 U. S. 205, 32 L. Ed. 107 (upholding the Kansas law); Missouri Pacific Ry. Co. v. Haley, 25 Kan. 35; Boggs v. Alabama, etc., Iron Co., 167 Ala. 251, 140 Am. St. Rep. 28; Johnson v. St. Paul Ry. Co., 43 Minn. 222, 8 L. R. A. 419; Deppe v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 36 Iowa, 52; Callahan v. St. Louis, etc., Ry. Co., 170 Mo. 473, 94 Am. St. Rep. 746, 60 L. R. A. 249; Swoboda v. Union Pac. R. Co., 87 Neb. 200, 138 Am. St. Rep. 483; Chesapeake & Ohio Ry. Co. v. Hoffman, 109 Va. 44; Schradin v. N. Y. Cent., etc., R. Co., 103 N. Y. Supp. 73, s. c. 109 N. Y. Supp. 428; Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Smith, 45 Tex. Civ. App. 128, 4 Ann. Cas. 644; Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Bailey, 53 Tex. Civ. App. 295; Mobile, etc., R. Co. v. Hicks, 91 Miss. 273, 124 Am. St. Rep. 679; Construction Co. v. Heflin, 88 Miss. 314; Kiley v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 138 Wis. 215; Lewis v. Northern Pacific Ry. Co., 36 Mont. 207; Pittsburg v. Leithaiser, 168 Ind. 438; Bedford Quarries Co. v. Bough, 168 Ind. 671, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 418; Indianapolis, etc., Co. v. Kinney, 171 Ind. 612, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 711; Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Melton, 127 Ky. 276; Pittsburg, etc., Ry. Co. v. Montgomery, 152 Ind. 1, 71 Am. St. Rep. 301, 69 L. R. A. 875; Hancock v. Norfolk, etc., R. Co., 124 N. C. 222; Pierce v. Van Dusen, 78 Fed. 693 (upholding the Ohio statute).

⁵⁹ Alabama: Code of 1907, § 3910.

Indiana: Burns' Code 1901, § 7083.

Massachusetts: Rev. Stats. 1902, p. 932.

New York: Laws 1902, ch. 600, p. 1748.

Virginia: 1904 Stats. § 1294k; Const. § 162.

See also, Arkansas: Kirby's Digest, insurance acts, has been enacted,⁶⁰ most of which has been upheld by the courts.⁶¹

1904 § 6658-60. Mississippi: Const. § 193; Code 1906, § 4056. South Carolina: Const. Art. IX, § 15.

⁶⁰ Arizona—Laws of 1912, Chap. 89, p. 491 does away with fellow-servant rule and minimizes assumption of risk. Special Session 1912, Chap. 14, p. 23, Workmen's Compensation Act. Employee may refuse benefits of act and sue. Act compulsory as to railroads, mines, factories, etc., and also optional where not compulsory.

California—Statutes of 1911, Chap. 399, p. 796. State Constitution, 1911, Art. 20, Sec. 21 abolishes contributory negligence, fellow-servant rule, assumption of risk as a defense, but adopts comparative negligence doctrine as to assessment of damages. Employer may escape liability of suit, by electing to become subject to compensation features of the act.

Colorado—Session Laws of 1911, Chap. 113, p. 294 abolishes fellow-servant rule.

Illinois—Rev. Stat. 1911, pp. 1136-44, Optional Workmen's Compensation Act. If not accepted, the defenses of contributory negligence, fellow-servant, and assumption of risk are abolished. Election of employer presumed, unless notice to contrary is given.

Indiana—Acts of 1911, Chap. 88, p. 145 abolishes fellow-servant rule; and assumption of risk and contributory negligence when in obedience to orders of master or where master knew or should have known of defect, or where a violation by master of statutory duty places burden of proof on employer.

Kansas—Laws of 1911, Chap. 218. A compulsory Workmen's Compensation Act, as to railroads, factories, etc., employing over fifteen. Optional with others. Abolishes defenses of fellow-servant, assumption of risk, contributory negligence to employers not under it, and allows by employers under it as against employers who seek to recover damages.

Maryland—Laws of 1912, Chap. 837, p. 1624. Optional workmen's insurance, under which employer is relieved of common-law liabilities, except as to a safe place of work.

Massachusetts—Acts of 1909, Chap. 514, § 127; Acts of 1911, Chap. 751; Acts of 1912, Chaps. 251, 571, 666. By Act of 1911, an optional workmen's compensation system was adopted. For those employers not accepting the same, the defenses of fellow-servant, contributory negligence, and assumption of risk were abolished.

Michigan—Howell's Rev. Stat. 1912, Chap. 63, §§ 3939 to 4008, Chap. 64, §§ 4110-18. Optional workmen's compensation act. For those employers not accepting the same, the defenses of contributory negligence, fellow-servant, and assumption of risk are abolished. As to railroads, defenses of fellow-servants, assumption of risk, and contributory negligence are abolished.

Nevada—Rev. Laws of 1912, §§ 1915-28. Compulsory compensation act applying to certain hazardous

⁶¹ The New York statute of 1910 was declared unconstitutional in Ives v. South Buffalo Ry. Co., 201 N. Y. 271, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 162, Ann. Cas. 1912 B. 156. The Wisconsin Compensation Act of 1911 was upheld in Borgnis v. Falk Co., 147 Wis. 327, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 489. The Massachusetts Act of 1911, in opinion of Justices, 209 Mass. 607. The Washington Act of 1911, in State v. Clausen, 65 Wash. 156, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 466. The Ohio Act of 1911, in State v. Creamer, 85 Ohio St. 349, 39 L. R. A. (N. S.) 694.

§ 1680. — Congress, which of course has jurisdiction in the matter only so far as it can be deemed a regulation of interstate commerce, has manifested considerable activity. A number of statutes have been enacted designed to secure the adoption of safety appliances. In 1906 an act was passed imposing liability upon all common carriers engaged in the commerce over which congress has jurisdiction. This act was declared unconstitutional because not sufficiently limited in its terms to persons engaged in the commerce which congress had the power to regulate.⁶² In 1908 a new statute was passed affecting all callings, e. g. railroads, mines, construction work, etc., and abolishing defenses of fellow-servant, contributory negligence, and assumption of risk under same.

New Hampshire—Laws of 1911, Chap. 163, p. 181. Optional workmen's compensation act, abolishing for those employers who do not accept it the defenses of fellow-servant, and assumption of risk. Contributory negligence may be a defense.

New Jersey—Acts of 1911, Chap. 95, p. 134. Optional compensation act, abolishing for those employers who do not elect to come under the act, the defenses of fellow-servant, and assumption of risk.

New York—Birdseye, Cumming & Gilbert's Consolidated Laws, pp. 3080-95. Affects common-law remedy to some extent as regards assumption of risk, and superintendence. Laws of 1910, Chaps. 352, 674, enacting a workmen's compensation law, declared unconstitutional.

Ohio—Laws of 1910, pp. 195-9; Laws of 1911, pp. 524-33. An optional workmen's insurance act, abolishing for employers not complying with act defenses of fellow-servant rule, assumption of risk, and contributory negligence.

Oregon—Lord's Laws 1910, p. XXX. Sec. 5057a abolishes defense of fellow-servant and contributory negligence in certain hazardous callings if master or superintendent are negligent or violate statute.

Pennsylvania—Purdon's Digest, 1910, p. 5464-5 abolishes fellow-servant rule, when injury is due to defect in plant, negligence of superintendent, or in obedience to orders of superior.

Rhode Island—Acts of 1912, pp. 204-228. Optional workmen's compensation act, abolishing defenses of fellow servant, contributory negligence and assumption of risk for those employers who do not elect to come under provisions of the act.

Washington—Laws of 1911, Chap. 74, p. 345. Compulsory workmen's compensation act on manufacturing, construction work, mining, etc., and optional to all others.

Wisconsin—Statutes 1911, § 2394. Sec. 1816 as to railroads, abolishes assumption of risk, fellow-servant doctrine, and substitutes comparative for contributory negligence. An optional workmen's compensation act, which to all employers, who do not accept the same, denies the common-law defenses of assumption of risk, and of fellow servant.

United States—Public Laws, Vol. 35, Part 1, Chap. 149, pp. 65-66; Vol. 36, part 1, Chap. 143, p. 291; Chap. 160, Sec. 4, p. 299. As to railroads engaged in interstate business, abolishes fellow-servant rule, assumption of risk when due to statutory violation by employer, and substitutes comparative for contributory negligence doctrine.

⁶² Employers' Liability Cases, 207 U. S. 463.

common carriers by railroad while engaged in commerce between any of the several states, etc., and this act has been upheld.⁶³ This act imposes liability for death or injury resulting in whole or in part from the negligence of any officers, agents or employees of the carrier or by reason of any defect or insufficiency due to its negligence in its cars, engines, appliances, machinery, track, roadbed, works, boats, wharves, or other equipment. It provides that the contributory negligence of the employee shall not bar a recovery but that the damages shall be diminished by the jury in proportion to the amount of negligence attributable to such employee, but that contributory negligence shall have no effect where the violation by the carrier of any statute enacted for the safety of employees, contributed to the injury or death of the employee, and that the doctrine of assumption of risks shall not apply in such a case. It declares void any contract or regulation, the purpose and intent of which shall be to exempt the carrier from the liability imposed by the act, but provides that any insurance or relief benefit or indemnity which the carrier shall have paid to the injured servant shall be deducted from his recovery.

A general compensation act, to supersede this liability act, is now before congress.

9. Contracts Waiving Master's Liability.

§ 1681. Agreements to waive liability invalid.—It is frequently attempted by employers to obtain from their employees, at the time of entering upon the service and in consideration of it, a waiver of the liability of the master for injuries that may happen through the negligence of the master or of other servants. Such waivers, however, are quite generally held to be opposed to public policy and void,⁶⁴ though ⁶³ Second Employers' Liability Cases, 223 U. S. 1; Philadelphia, etc., R. Co. v. Schubert, 224 U. S. 603.

⁶⁴ Johnston v. Fargo, 184 N. Y. 379, 6 Ann. Cas. 1, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 537; Little Rock, etc., Ry. Co. v. Eubanks, 48 Ark. 460, 3 Am. St. Rep. 245; Tarbell v. Rutland, etc., R. Co., 73 Vt. 347, 87 Am. St. Rep. 734, 56 L. R. A. 656 (statutory liability); Kansas Pac. Ry. Co. v. Peavey, 29 Kan. 169, 44 Am. Rep. 630, 11 Am. & Eng. Ry. Cases, 260; Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Fronk, 74 Kan. 519; Blanton v. Dold, 109 Mo. 64; Railway Co.

v. Spangle, 44 Ohio St. 471, 58 Am. Rep. 833; Roesner v. Hermann, 10 Biss. (U. S. C. C.) 486, 8 Fed. 782; Purdy v. Rome, etc., Ry. Co., 125 N. Y. 209, 21 Am. St. Rep. 736; Newport News, etc., Co. v. Elfert, 15 Ky. Law Rep. 575; Johnson v. Richmond, etc., R. Co., 86 Va. 975; Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Orr, 91 Ala. 548; Richmond, etc., R. Co. v. Jones, 92 Ala. 218; Ault v. Nebraska Tel. Co., 82 Neb. 434, 130 Am. St. Rep. 686; Pugmire v. Oregon Short Line, 33 Utah, 27, 126 Am. St. Rep. 805, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 565.

they have been sustained in England,⁶⁵ and in some of our States, as, for example, in Georgia.⁶⁶

Even statutory duties have been held in England to be capable of such waiver. Many of the statutes in the United States have expressly forbidden it.

VI.

AGENT'S RIGHT TO A LIEN.

§ 1682. In general.—Having ascertained the rights of the agent to commissions, reimbursement and indemnity, it becomes material to determine the means by which those rights may be enforced. The most important of these is the agent's right of lien.

Liens of various sorts, in recent times, are provided and regulated by statute, but it is not the intention here to determine how far the statutes have protected agents. So liens or charges may be created by the express contract of the parties, but these, also, are not now to be considered. The lien to be here considered is that which exists by the common law, as distinguished from statutory liens and those created by express contract.

⁶⁵ Griffiths v. Earl of Dudley, 9 Q. B. Div. 357.

⁶⁶ Western, etc., R. R. Co. v. Bishop, 50 Ga. 465; Western, etc., R. R. Co. v. Strong, 52 Ga. 461; Galloway v. Western, etc., R. R. Co., 57 Ga. 512; New v. Southern Ry. Co., 116 Ga. 147, 59 L. R. A. 115.

It is held, however, that a contract made between a porter and the Pullman company, or a messenger and an express company, by a term of which the employee releases all claims, against the railroad company which may transport the cars of his employer, is valid, and the railroad company may use it as a defense to an action for personal injury. Russell v. Pittsburgh, etc., Ry. Co., 157 Ind. 305, 87 Am. St. Rep. 214, 55 L. R. A. 253; Pittsburg, etc., Ry. Co. v. Mahoney, 148 Ind. 196, 62 Am. St. Rep. 503, 40 L. R. A. 101; Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Hamler, 215 Ill. 525, 106 Am. St. Rep. 187, 3 Ann. Cas. 42, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.)

674; Denver, etc., R. Co. v. Whan, 39 Colo. 230, 12 Ann. Cas. 732, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 432.

Where an employee participates in or contributes to a relief department maintained by his employer, an agreement made by him that if he accepts the benefits thereof he releases all claims for damages against the railroad, and if he prosecutes his action against the railroad he releases all claim to the relief fund, has almost uniformly been held valid. Oyster v. Burlington Relief Dept., 65 Neb. 789, 59 L. R. A. 291; Donald v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 93 Iowa, 284, 33 L. R. A. 492; Eckman v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 169 Ill. 312, 38 L. R. A. 750; Johnson v. Charleston, etc., Ry. Co., 55 S. C. 152, 44 L. R. A. 645; Owens v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., 35 Fed. 715, 1 L. R. A. 75. But see Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Healy, 76 Neb. 783, 124 Am. St. Rep. 830, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 198.

§ 1683. Lien defined—General and particular liens.—A lien at common law has been defined to be the right of detaining the property on which it operates until the claims which are the basis of the lien are satisfied.⁶⁷ It has also been defined as an obligation which, by implication of law and not by express contract, binds real or personal estate for the discharge of a debt or engagement, but does not pass the property in the subject of the lien.⁶⁸

The main distinction between common law liens and other liens is that possession is essential to the former class and not always to the latter.⁶⁹

Liens are either general or particular. A general lien is a right to retain the property of another to cover and secure a general balance due from the owner to the person who has possession.⁷⁰ A particular or specific lien is a right to retain particular property of another for charges incurred, or trouble undergone, with respect to that property.⁷¹

The former being regarded as an encroachment on the common law, is not favored by courts of law or equity, and will be strictly construed. It can, in the absence of an express contract, be claimed only as arising from dealings in a particular trade or line of business in which the existence of a general lien has been judicially proved and acknowledged, or upon express evidence being given that, according to the established custom, a general lien is claimed and allowed.⁷² Particular liens on the other hand are favored.⁷³

§ 1684. Foundation of the claim of lien.—The common law lien found its origin in principles of natural equity and commercial necessity. Its earliest form was the particular or specific lien, and it was first applied for the protection of those who were required by law to render services or to receive goods for all who sought their aid, as in the case of common carriers and innkeepers.⁷⁴ Manifest justice re-

⁶⁷ Ames v. Palmer, 42 Me. 197, 66 Am. Dec. 271; Oakes v. Moore, 24 Me. 214, 41 Am. Dec. 379; Hammonds v. Barelay, 2 East, 235.

⁶⁸ Fisher on Mortgages, § 149; Evans on Agency, 362.

⁶⁹ Quimby v. Hazen, 54 Vt. 132.

⁷⁰ McIntyre v. Carver, 2 Watts & Serg. (Penn.) 392, 37 Am. Dec. 519 and note; Evans on Agency, 363.

⁷¹ See cases cited in preceding note.

⁷² McIntyre v. Carver, supra; Rushforth v. Hadfield, 7 East, 229; Bevan

v. Waters, 3 C. & P. 520; Scarfe v. Morgan, 4 M. & W. 283; Houghton v. Matthews, 3 Bos. & Pul. 494; Bleaden v. Hancock, 4 Car. & P. 156.

⁷³ Scarfe v. Morgan, supra; Bevan v. Waters, supra; McIntyre v. Carver, supra.

⁷⁴ Naylor v. Mangles, 1 Esp. 109; Carlisle v. Quattlebaum, 2 Bailey (S. C.), 452; Quimby v. Hazen, 54 Vt. 132; Grinnell v. Cook, 3 Hill (N. Y.), 485, 38 Am. Dec. 663.

quired that those who were thus obliged to serve should have some compulsory means of obtaining compensation. A lien was also allowed to those who had, by their own peril, labor and expense, rescued, from loss or destruction at sea, the goods or property of another who was unable to protect them. Here, too, obvious equity, as well as commercial necessity, demanded that if the owner would reclaim his goods he should first pay the reasonable charges of him by whose exertions they had been preserved.⁷⁵

It was, however, soon extended to the case of those who, while not required by law to render service, yet by their skill or labor had imparted additional value to the goods or property of another.⁷⁶ That these persons, also, should have a lien upon the goods or property for the reasonable value of their services was obviously just and so plainly conducive to confidence and security in the transaction of affairs, that this principle has become firmly established in our law, and has in modern times been extended by statutory enactments to a great variety of cases not contemplated by the common law.

§ 1685. Nature of lien.—This lien conferred by the common law does not create an estate or title in the property over which it prevails. It is a simple right of retainer merely, and is neither a jus ad rem nor a jus in re.

⁷⁵ Fitch v. Newberry, 1 Doug. (Mich.) 1, 40 Am. Dec. 33. As to goods lost upon land, see Wood v. Pierson, 45 Mich. 313; Preston v. Neale, 12 Gray (Mass.), 222; Cummings v. Gann, 52 Pa. 484; Wentworth v. Day, 3 Mete. (Mass.) 352, 37 Am. Dec. 145.

⁷⁶ "The right of lien has always been admitted where the party was bound by law to receive the goods; and in modern times the right has been extended so far that it may be laid down as a general rule, that every bailee for hire, who by his labor and skill has imparted an additional value to the goods, has a lien upon the property for his reasonable charges. This includes all such mechanics, tradesmen, and laborers as receive property for the purpose of repairing or otherwise improving its condition." Bronson, J., in Grinnell v. Cook, 3 Hill (N. Y.), 485, 38 Am. Dec. 663. To same effect are Morgan v. Congdon, 4 N. Y. 551; Nevan v. Roup, 8 Iowa, 207; Wilson v. Martin, 40 N. H. 88; Moore v. Hitchcock, 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 292; Gregory v. Stryker, 2 Den. (N. Y.) 628.

But except where there is an obligation by law to take and care for property, no lien for simply keeping and caring for it exists at common law, upon the ground that the bailee has added no value to the property. Thus agisters and livery stable keepers have no lien for keeping animals in the absence of a statute or an express contract to that effect. Grinnell v. Cook, supra; Lewis v. Tyler, 23 Cal. 364; Goodrich v. Willard, 7 Gray (Mass.), 183; Wills v. Barrister, 36 Vt. 220; Wallace v. Woodgate, 1 Car. & P. 575; Bevan v. Waters, 3 Car. & P. 520; Judson v. Etheridge, 1 Crompt. & M. 743; Jackson v. Cummins, 5

It is purely personal to the lien holder, and is neither assignable by him, nor can it be attached as personal property or as a chose in action of the person who is entitled to it.⁷⁷ Being thus a personal privilege, no person but the lien holder can avail himself of it. It cannot be set up by a third person as a defense to an action brought by the owner of the goods.⁷⁸

§ 1686. Requisites of lien—Possession.—The common law lien being thus a mere right of retainer, it follows that the exclusive possession of the property by the person claiming the lien, is indispensable to its existence and continuance.⁷⁹ If the person holds the property in subordination to the will and control of another, no right of retainer attaches. No lien exists, therefore, in favor of the mere workman or servant of the contractor.⁸⁰ But the possession of such a workman or servant is the possession of the employer or master, and is sufficient to maintain the latter's right of lien.⁸¹

§ 1687. Possession must have been lawfully acquired.—In order to sustain the lien, the possession of the property must have been obtained in good faith, and from one having the power and the right to confer it. A person can neither acquire a lien by his own wrongful

Mees. & Wels. 342; Miller v. Marston, 35 Me. 153, 56 Am. Dec. 694; McDonald v. Bennett, 45 Iowa, 456; Allen v. Ham, 63 Me. 532; Mauney v. Ingram, 78 N. C. 96.

But on the ground of increased value, the horse trainer has a lien. Harris v. Woodruff, 124 Mass. 205, 26 Am. Rep. 658; Bevan v. Waters, supra; Towle v. Raymond, 58 N. H. 64; so has the horse doctor; Lord v. Jones, 24 Me. 439, 41 Am. Dec. 391; so has the owner of a stallion for the services of the stallion; Scarfe v. Morgan, 4 Mees. & Wels. 270; Sawyer v. Gerish, 70 Me. 254, 35 Am. Rep. 323.

⁷⁷ Barnes Safe & Lock Co. v. Block Bros. Tobacco Co., 38 W. Va. 158, 22 L. R. A. 850; Meany v. Head, 1 Mason (U. S. C. C.), 319, Story, J.; Lovett v. Brown, 40 N. H. 511; Holly v. Huggeford, 8 Pick. (Mass.) 72, 19 Am. Dec. 303; Jones v. Sinclair, 2 N. H. 321, 9 Am. Dec. 75; Daubigny v. Duval, 5 T. R. (Durnf. & E.) 606.

⁷⁸ Holly v. Huggeford, supra; Jones v. Sinclair, supra.

⁷⁹ McIntyre v. Carver, 2 Watts &

Serg. (Penn.) 392, 37 Am. Dec. 519; Jenkins v. Eichelberger, 4 Watts (Penn.), 121, 28 Am. Dec. 691; Tucker v. Taylor, 53 Ind. 93; Nevan v. Roup, 8 Iowa, 207; Oakes v. Moore, 24 Me. 214, 41 Am. Dec. 379; Ex parte Foster, 2 Story (U. S. C. C.), 131; McFarland v. Wheeler, 26 Wend. (N. Y.) 467; Collins v. Buck, 63 Me. 459; Robinson v. Larrabee, 63 Me. 116; Miller v. Marston, 35 Me. 153, 56 Am. Dec. 694; Rice v. Austin, 17 Mass. 197; Winter v. Coit, 7 N. Y. 288, 57 Am. Dec. 522; Heard v. Brewer, 4 Daly (N. Y.), 136; Sawyer v. Lorillard, 48 Ala. 332; Elliott v. Bradley, 23 Vt. 217; Donald v. Hewitt, 33 Ala. 534, 73 Am. Dec. 431; Peoples' Bank v. Frick Co., 13 Okla. 179.

⁸⁰ Hollingsworth v. Dow, 19 Pick. (Mass.) 228; McIntyre v. Carver, supra; Wright v. Terry, 23 Fla. 160.

⁸¹ Heard v. Brewer, supra; Elliott v. Bradley, supra; Wenz v. McBride, 20 Colo. 195; King v. Canal Co., 11 Cush. (Mass.) 231.

act, nor can he retain one when he obtains possession of the property without the consent of the owner express or implied.⁸²

If, therefore, the person claiming a lien acquired possession by misrepresentation or fraud, or from an agent or servant or other person having no right or power to confer it,⁸³ he cannot maintain the lien although he might have done so if he had acquired the possession fairly.

§ 1688. Possession must be continuous.—It is also indispensable that the possession should be continuous.⁸⁴ A voluntary surrender of the property, therefore, to the owner or some one on his behalf, terminates the lien, unless it is consistent with the contract, course of business or intention of the parties that it should continue.⁸⁵ And having once voluntarily relinquished the property, the party cannot regain his lien by recovering possession of the goods, without the consent or agreement of the owner.⁸⁶ If, however, the property be taken from the possession of the party claiming the lien by fraud or misrepresentation, the lien is not lost⁸⁷ and will revive if his possession be restored.⁸⁸

The lien is not lost by a mere temporary parting with the possession

⁸² Fitch v. Newberry, 1 Doug. (Mich.) 1, 40 Am. Dec. 33; Madden v. Kempster, 1 Camp. 12; Burn v. Brown, 2 Stark N. P. 272; Peoples' Bank v. Frick Co., 13 Okla. 179; Randel v. Brown, 2 How. (U. S.) 406, 11 L. Ed. 318.

⁸³ An exception to this general rule exists in the case of an innkeeper who is bound to receive the guest and cannot stop to inquire whether he is the true owner of the property he brings or not. Yorke v. Grenaugh, 2 Ld. Raym. 867; Johnson v. Hill, 3 Stark, 172; Snead v. Watkins, 1 C. B. (N. S.) 267; Grinnell v. Cook, 3 Hill (N. Y.), 485, 38 Am. Dec. 663; Jones v. Morrill, 42 Barb. (N. Y.) 626; Turrill v. Crawley, 13 Q. B. 197; Threfall v. Borwick, 26 L. T. Rep. N. S. 794, affirmed in the Exchequer Chamber, L. R. 10 Q. B. 210; Manning v. Hallenbeck, 27 Wis. 202.

This exception has not been made in this country in the case of common carriers. Fitch v. Newberry, 1 Doug. (Mich.) 1, 40 Am. Dec. 33; Robinson v. Baker, 5 Cush. (Mass.) 137, 51 Am. Dec. 54; Clark v. Lowell, etc., R. R. Co., 9 Gray (Mass.), 231; Gilson v. Gwinn, 107 Mass. 126, 9 Am. Rep. 13; Everett v. Saltus, 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 474; Brower v. Peabody, 13 N. Y. 121; Martin v. Smith, 58 N. Y. 672.

⁸⁴ Tucker v. Taylor, 53 Ind. 93; Nevan v. Roup, 8 Iowa, 207; Oakes v. Moore, 24 Me. 214, 41 Am. Dec. 379; Ex parte Foster, 2 Story (U. S. C. C.), 144; McFarland v. Wheeler, 26 Wend. (N. Y.) 467; Walcott v. Keith, 22 N. H. 196; Collins v. Buck, 63 Me. 459; Sawyer v. Lorillard, 48 Ala. 332; Way v. Davidson, 12 Gray (Mass.), 465, 74 Am. Dec. 604; Bowman v. Hilton, 11 Ohio, 303; Sears v. Wills, 4 Allen (Mass.), 212; Rowland v. Dolby, 100 Md. 272, 3 Ann. Cas. 643.

⁸⁵ Welker v. Appleman, 44 Ind. App. 699; Robinson v. Larrabee, 63 Me. 116; Spaulding v. Adams, 32 Me. 212; Nash v. Mosher, 19 Wend. (N. Y.) 431.

⁸⁶ Nevan v. Roup, supra.

⁸⁷ Bigelow v. Heaton, 6 Hill (N. Y.), 43; Ash v. Putnam, 1 Id. 302; Wallace v. Woodgate, 1 C. & P. 575.

⁸⁸ Wallace v. Woodgate, supra.

for a special purpose, when there was no intention to relinquish or release the lien.⁸⁹

§ 1689. Possession must have been acquired in course of employment.—In order to maintain the lien upon a specific chattel the possession must have been acquired in the course of the employment in respect of which the lien is claimed.⁹⁰ A mere creditor happening to have the goods of his debtor in his possession has no lien thereon to secure payment of the debt.⁹¹ Nor does the mere fact that a person occupies a position, or pursues a calling, in respect to which a lien ordinarily attaches give him a lien upon property which chances to be in his possession. The possession must have been acquired by virtue of his position, or in the pursuit of the calling in which he is engaged.⁹²

Thus a factor can only claim a lien upon goods which came into his possession as factor;⁹³ an attorney only upon the deeds and papers which came into his hands in the character of an attorney;⁹⁴ a broker only upon the property which was delivered to him in that capacity.⁹⁵

§ 1690. No lien if contrary to intention of parties—Waiver.—A lien is presumed to be something of value. It may in its inception be waived or given up without any valuable consideration, but when it has once attached, an executory agreement to waive or surrender it will not be obligatory unless based upon a legal consideration.⁹⁶

A lien will not attach if it be inconsistent with the terms upon which possession was obtained.⁹⁷ The existence of a special contract is not, of itself, inconsistent with a lien, but if it expressly or impliedly waives it, the lien can not exist.⁹⁸

So it is a general principle that an agreement to give credit, or a ⁸⁹ Hays v. Riddle, 1 Sandf. (N. Y.) 248; Reeves v. Capper, 5 Bing. N. C. 136; Robinson v. Larrabee, 63 Me. 116.

⁹⁰ Scott v. Jester, 13 Ark. 438; Thacher v. Hannahs, 4 Robert (N. Y.), 407.

⁹¹ Allen v. Megguire, 15 Mass. 496.

⁹² Dixon v. Stansfeld, 10 C. B. 398 ("A man is not entitled to a lien simply because he happens to fill a character which gives him such a right unless he has received the goods or done the act in the particular character to which the right attaches." Jarvis, C. J.).

⁹³ Drinkwater v. Goodwin, 1 Cowp. 251.

⁹⁴ Stevenson v. Blakelock, 1 Maule & Sel. 535.

⁹⁵ Dixon v. Stansfeld, supra.

⁹⁶ Danforth v. Pratt, 42 Me. 50.

⁹⁷ Crawshay v. Homfray, 4 Barn. & Ald. 50; Chase v. Westmore, 5 Maule & Sel. 180.

⁹⁸ Farrington v. Meek, 30 Mo. 578, 77 Am. Dec. 627; Leese v. Martin, L. R. 17 Eq. 224; Brandao v. Barnett, 12 Cl. & F. 787.

Contract held not to amount to a waiver, there being nothing inconsistent. Fisher v. Smith, 4 App. Cas. 1.

special contract for a particular mode of payment,⁹⁹ or the taking of a note, acceptance or other similar instrument payable at a future time,¹ or an agreement to deliver the property before payment or before the time of payment arrives,² is a waiver of the lien. An agreement to pay a fixed price is no waiver.³

§ 1691. Waiver by inconsistent conduct.—The lien will, however, be waived by a general refusal of the person, to whom it inures, to deliver the property, accompanied by a claim of title in himself, or by a claim to retain it on other grounds distinct from his lien.⁴ But a claim of right to detain the goods in respect of two sums, as to one only of which the person has a lien, has been held not to be a waiver.⁵

⁹⁹ Chandler v. Belden, 18 Johns. (N. Y.) 157, 9 Am. Dec. 193; Hutchins v. Olcutt, 4 Vt. 549, 24 Am. Dec. 634; Moore v. Hitchcock, 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 296; Stoddard Woolen Manufactory v. Huntley, 8 N. H. 441, 31 Am. Dec. 198; Stevenson v. Blakelock, 1 M. & S. 535; Raitt v. Mitchell, 4 Camp. 146; Cowell v. Simpson, 16 Ves. Jr. 280.

¹ Hutchins v. Olcutt, 4 Vt. 549, 24 Am. Dec. 634; Hewison v. Guthrie, 2 Bing. N. C. 755; Cowell v. Simpson, 16 Ves. Jr. 275; Au Sable Boom Co. v. Sanborn, 36 Mich. 358; Bunney v. Poyntz, 4 B. & Ad. 568. Unless the paper be dishonored while the property yet remains in the agent's hands. Feise v. Wray, 3 East, 93. It makes no difference whether the note is payable on demand or at future time, or whether negotiable or not. Hutchins v. Olcutt, supra. A factor's lien for money and supplies to make a crop is not waived by taking personal security for such money and supplies. Story v. Flournoy, 55 Ga. 56. The mere taking of some other form of security is not per se a waiver of the lien. Joslyn v. Smith, 2 N. Dak. 53 (a statutory lien in this case). To have that effect there must be something in the nature of the security, the length of time, or the other circumstances, fairly inconsistent with an intention to rely upon the lien. Rosenbaum v. Hayes, 10 N. Dak. 311 (citing many cases); Security Trust Co. v. Temple Co., 67 N. J. Eq. 514.

² Chandler v. Belden, 18 Johns. (N. Y.) 157, 9 Am. Dec. 193.

³ Hutton v. Bragg, 7 Taunt. 14; Raitt v. Mitchell, 4 Camp. 146; Stoddard Woolen Manufactory v. Huntley, 8 N. H. 441, 31 Am. Dec. 198; Mathias v. Sellers, 86 Pa. 486, 27 Am. Rep. 723; Hanna v. Phelps, 7 Ind. 21, 63 Am. Dec. 410.

⁴ White v. Gainer, 9 Moore, 41, 2 Bing. 23, 1 Car. & P. 324; Boardman v. Sill, 1 Camp. 410 Note; Dirks v. Richards, 5 Scott's N. R. 534; Weeks v. Goode, 6 Com. B. N. S. 367; Cannec v. Spauton, 8 Scott's N. R. 714 s. c. 7 Man. & G. 903; Dows v. Morewood, 10 Barb. (N. Y.) 183; Holbrook v. Wight, 24 Wend. (N. Y.) 169, 35 Am. Dec. 607; Everett v. Saltus, 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 474; Judah v. Kemp, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) Cas. 411; Rogers v. Weir, 34 N. Y. 463; Picquet v. McKay, 2 Blackf. (Ind.) 465; Hanna v. Phelps, 7 Ind. 21, 63 Am. Dec. 410; Leigh v. Mobile, etc., R. R. Co., 58 Ala. 165.

"Where one wrongfully converts property upon which he has a lien, such lien is extinguished." Peoples' Bank v. Frick Co., 13 Okla. 179.

⁵ Scarfe v. Morgan, 4 Mees. & Wels. 270 (compare Kerford v. Mondel, 5 H. & N. 931.)

But a demand for more than is due or for that to which the claimant is not entitled, especially where the lawful and the unlawful are united in

Whether the lien is lost by a general refusal to deliver the goods, without specifying any grounds, is a question upon which the authorities are in conflict, but the better opinion is thought to be that it is.⁶

§ 1692. Claim of lien no waiver of personal remedies.—In general, the lien holder has recourse to the personal responsibility of the debtor as well as the lien upon the goods,⁷ but he may waive this personal responsibility if he so elects. Whether he has done so in any given case, is a question of fact to be determined from its own circumstances.⁸ So although there may have been an undertaking to resort to the goods in the first instance, this will not prevent recourse to the debtor after the proceeds of the goods are exhausted, unless there has been an agreement to look exclusively to the goods.⁹

§ 1693. How lien may be enforced.—It is a general rule that a mere lien can not, in the absence of a statute authorizing it, be enforced by sale of the property.¹⁰ In such a case, either the ordinary proceedings at law to an execution upon which the property may be seized and sold, must be resorted to, or recourse must be had to the more appropriate remedy of an action in equity. An exception, however, is made in the case of factors, who may, as will be hereafter seen,¹¹

one sum, is usually held to work a forfeiture of the lien. Hamilton v. McLaughlin, 145 Mass. 20; Bowden v. Dugan, 91 Me. 141; Stephenson v. Lichtenstein, 72 N. J. L. 113; Viley v. Lockwood, 102 Tenn. 426. But see, Kirtley v. Morris, 43 Mo. App. 144. In Kelley v. Kelley, 77 Me. 135, it is said if the claimant has so mingled and intermixed the matters concerning which he is entitled to a lien with those as to which he is not entitled, that they cannot be separated, he loses his lien. But a mere refusal to furnish upon request "a full and itemized account of all claims and charges" for which the lien was claimed was held not a waiver in the absence of any statutory provision to that effect. Sutton v. Stephan, 101 Cal. 545.

⁶ Hanna v. Phelps, supra; Dows v. Morewood, supra; Spence v. McMillan, 10 Ala. 583. Contra: see Everett v. Coffin, 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 603, 22 Am. Dec. 551; Buckley v. Handy, 2 Miles (Penn.), 449.

⁷ Graham v. Ackroyd, 10 Hare, 192; Peisch v. Dickson, 1 Mason (U. S. C. C.), 9 Fed. Cas. No. 10,911; Beckwith v. Sibley, 11 Pick. (Mass.) 482; Colley v. Merrill, 6 Greenl. (Me.) 50; Upham v. Lefavour, 11 Metc. (Mass.) 174; Richards v. Gaskill, 39 Kan. 428.

⁸ Burrill v. Phillips, 1 Gall. (U. S. C. C.) 360, Fed. Cas. No. 2,200; Peisch v. Dickson, 1 Mason (U. S. C. C.), 9 Fed. Cas. No. 10,911.

⁹ Gihon v. Stanton, 9 N. Y. 476; Parker v. Brancker, 22 Pick. (Mass.) 40; Burrill v. Phillips, supra; Peisch v. Dickson, supra; Stoddard Woolen Mfg. Co. v. Huntley, 8 N. H. 441, 31 Am. Dec. 198.

¹⁰ Briggs v. Boston, etc., R. R. Co., 6 Allen (Mass.), 246, 83 Am. Dec. 626; Fox v. McGregor, 11 Barb. (N. Y.) 41; Hunt v. Haskell, 24 Me. 339, 41 Am. Dec. 387; Crumbacker v. Tucker, 9 Ark. 365; Bailey v. Shaw, 24 N. H. 297, 55 Am. Dec. 241.

¹¹ See post, chapter on Factors.

sell the goods in their possession to reimburse themselves for their advances. So where the case amounts to a bailment or a pledge of the property, or to a deposit by way of security for a loan, a different rule applies and the bailee or pledgee may, after reasonable demand and notice, sell the property at public sale.¹²

§ 1694. How these rules apply to agents.—It is not the purpose here to go minutely into the question of the right of lien as applied to agents of various kinds, but rather to state the most important principles governing liens in general, leaving their particular application to be considered hereafter when treating more fully of the more prominent classes of agents.¹³

But, in general, it has been said that there “exists a particular right of lien in the agent for all his commissions, expenditures, advances and services in and about the property or thing intrusted to his agency, whenever they were proper or necessary or incident thereto.”¹⁴

The foundation of this lien, in the absence of a statute conferring it, must, as in the case of other common law liens, be either that the agent, like a bailee for hire,¹⁵ has by his skill or labor added to the value of some specific thing, or that by advancing his own money or property

¹² Parker v. Brancker, 22 Pick. (Mass.) 40; Porter v. Blood, 5 Pick. (Mass.) 54; Howard v. Ames, 3 Metc. (Mass.) 308; Potter v. Thompson, 10 R. I. 1.

¹³ See post as to the liens of Attorneys, Auctioneers, Factors, and Brokers in the respective chapters devoted to those agents.

¹⁴ Story on Agency, § 373; Richards v. Gaskill, 39 Kan. 428; McKenzie v. Nevius, 22 Me. 138, 38 Am. Dec. 291.

¹⁵ McKenzie v. Nevius, 22 Me. 138, 38 Am. Dec. 291; McIntyre v. Carver, 2 W. & S. (Penn.) 392, 37 Am. Dec. 519; Nevan v. Roup, 8 Iowa, 207; Morgan v. Congdon, 4 N. Y. 552; Grinnell v. Cook, 3 Hill (N. Y.), 485, 38 Am. Dec. 663; Gregory v. Stryker, 2 Den. (N. Y.) 631; Wilson v. Martin, 40 N. H. 88; Farrington v. Meek, 30 Mo. 581, 77 Am. Dec. 627; Lovett v. Brown, 40 N. H. 511; Moore v. Hitchcock, 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 292; Mathias v. Sellers, 86 Pa. 486, 27 Am. Rep. 723.

Accountants employed to examine and investigate the accounts contained in certain books have no lien upon the books for their services. Scott Shoe Mach. Co. v. Broaker, 35 N. Y. Misc. 382. Said the Court: “They have done nothing to the books, but have merely made an examination of them. After their examination the books remained as they were before, nothing whatsoever having been added to their value. The object of the examination made by an accountant is the preparation of a report. The report may be something of value, or it may not, but the books themselves are not the least changed or improved by the investigation.”

In Grauman v. Reese, 13 Ky. Law Rep. 683, it was held that a traveling salesman had a lien on the samples entrusted with him by his employer, for his commissions.

In the absence of a statute, however, it is difficult to see how this decision can be upheld. It does not he has obtained or produced the thing,¹⁶ or that he has made advances to his principal in reliance upon the security of the property or thing confided in his custody.

Thus it is said by a learned judge in New York, "An agent may have a lien on the property or funds of his principal for moneys advanced or liabilities incurred in his behalf; and if moneys have been advanced or liabilities incurred upon the faith of the solvency of the principal, and he becomes insolvent while the proceeds and fruit of such advances or liabilities are in the possession of the agent, or within his reach, and before they have come to the actual possession of the principal, within every principle of equity, the agent has a lien upon the same for his protection and indemnity."¹⁷

So where a principal consigns goods to an agent to sell under an agreement that the agent will accept bills drawn upon him by the principal, it is said to be a necessary inference that the bills were drawn and accepted upon the credit of the goods, and the agent has a lien upon the goods in his hands for the amount of his acceptances.¹⁸

§ 1695. — Illustrations.—In accordance with these principles, it has been held that an agent employed to obtain a loan upon a commission, has a lien for the same upon the loan which he secures;¹⁹ appear that the agent produced the samples by his own labor, nor by the expenditure of his own means, nor that they were enhanced in value in any way by the services which he rendered. Missouri Glass Co. v. Roberts, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 137 S. W. 433, practically denies the right to any such lien.

¹⁶ Johnston v. Gerry, 34 Wash. 524.

Agent who has advanced money to buy land for his principal is entitled to lien for his reimbursement. Arnold v. Arnold, 83 Kan. 539; Robertson v. Rawlins Co., 84 Kan. 52. So of a stock broker who has advanced his own money to pay for stock he was directed to purchase and receive for his principal. Hope v. Glendinning, [1911] App. Cas. 419.

¹⁷ Muller v. Pondir, 55 N. Y. 325, 14 Am. Rep. 259. In Underhill v. Jordan, 72 N. Y. App. Div. 71, which relied upon and followed Muller v. Pondir, supra, an agent who had had the general management of the property of non-residents, and who had expended a large sum of his own money in the management of the property was held to be entitled to a lien on funds of theirs remaining in his hands, at least to the extent of his expenses and disbursements. Although not strictly a lien, yet where an agent, at the direction or request of his principal, takes title to land for the principal in the agent's name, the agent (or in this case his heirs) will not be compelled to convey it to the principal except upon being reimbursed for taxes properly paid by him. Warren v. Adams, 19 Colo. 515. Expense of executing such a trust said to be a lien on the estate. Johnson v. Leman, 131 Ill. 609, 19 Am. St. Rep. 63, 7 L. R. A. 656.

¹⁸ Nagle v. McFeeters, 97 N. Y. 196. See also, Holbrook v. Wight, 24 Wend. (N. Y.) 169, 35 Am. Dec. 607; Bank v. Jones, 4 N. Y. 497; In re Pavy's Co., 1 Ch. Div. 631.

¹⁹ Vinton v. Baldwin, 95 Ind. 433. Where the owner of real estate, be-that a real estate agent who has conducted negotiations for an exchange of property, drawn the deeds of conveyance, made expenditures in procuring a change in the terms of an incumbrance so that the exchange could be made, and at the request of the principal has received delivery of the deed running to him, has a lien upon that particular deed for his commissions and advances due from the grantee therein;²⁰ that an agent who, at the request or consent of his principal carries on a general mercantile business of the latter in the agent's name, with authority to buy, sell and exchange, and thereby incurs personal obligations, has a lien upon all the property in the business for his advances, expenses and liabilities, incurred in the proper management of the business;²¹ that an agent for the sale of agricultural machinery who, upon the unjustifiable termination of his employment by the principal, is forced to incur expense in caring for and storing machinery for the principal's protection, has a lien upon it for such expenses;²² that an agent directed by his principal to obtain possession of personal property, e. g., goods in the hands of a carrier, which could only be obtained by paying certain charges upon it, and who pays the charges with his own money, was entitled to a lien upon the property for the money so advanced.²³

ing indebted to real estate agents, executed a contract, which was recorded, by which he agreed to place in their hands for sale and to give them the exclusive control of the sale of the land, and to pay them out of the proceeds in the event of a sale, it was held that the contract gave the agents an equitable lien upon the land. Tinsley v. Durfrey, 99 Ill. App. 239. See also, Gresham v. Galveston Co. (Tex. Civ. App.), 36 S. W. 796.

²⁰ Richards v. Gaskill, 39 Kan. 428. "The accidental possession of a deed will not sustain a lien; so, also, if a deed is acquired under an express contract, or circumstances showing an implied contract inconsistent with a lien, the real estate agent or broker cannot claim any lien upon a deed so received." Id.

"Real estate brokers have no lien on money or papers placed in their hands to use in the purchase of land." Robinson v. Stewart, 97 Mich. 454.

In Peterson v. Hall, 61 Minn. 268, it was held that a real estate broker, to whom had been delivered a note and mortgage upon which he undertook to secure a loan, and who did, within the reasonable time to which the court held he was entitled, actually procure the loan, had a lien upon the note and mortgage to secure the payment of his commission as against his principal who sought to get back the papers and repudiate the employment after the agent had begun negotiations, but before he had had time to receive the money.

²¹ Dewing v. Hutton, 40 W. Va. 521, s. c. 48 Id. 576. The code made all such property liable for the debts of the person carrying on the business and incurred therein. It was also said that the agent would have the right to sell to satisfy the liabilities.

²² Deering Harvester Co. v. Hamilton, 80 Minn. 162, citing Haebler v. Luttgen, 61 Minn. 315.

²³ White v. Sheffield, etc., Ry. Co., 90 Ala. 253.

§ 1696. Agent's lien ordinarily a particular lien.—It will be seen hereafter, in cases which stand upon distinctive grounds, that an agent may have a general lien, as in the case of bankers, factors and attorneys. But the lien of an agent employed for a specific transaction is ordinarily a particular lien, and is confined to the retention of the property for services and disbursements in reference to that property only, and not for a general balance of account, nor for services in reference to other property or affairs, unless by general usage, special agreement or mode of dealing, a general lien has been established.²⁴

§ 1697. For what sums the lien attaches.—Except by virtue of a special agreement, the lien attaches only for debts which are certain and liquidated, and not for contingent, prospective or speculative damages or liabilities.²⁵ The debts must also have been incurred by the express or implied authority of the principal, and not as the result of the agent's own wrong, neglect or breach of instructions.²⁶ They must also have been incurred for lawful and legitimate purposes, and must be due as a matter of right and not as mere matter of favor.²⁷

The lien attaches also, in the absence of an express agreement enlarging its scope, only to debts arising or incurred in transactions had in the particular character by virtue of which the agent claims the lien, and not from other and dissimilar transactions;²⁸ and the demand must be due from the person whose goods are sought to be retained, and not from a stranger, and must accrue to the agent who claims the lien.²⁹

VII.

AGENT'S RIGHT OF STOPPAGE IN TRANSIT.

§ 1698. Agent liable for price of goods, may stop them in transit.—An agent who has made himself liable for the price of goods consigned by him to his principal, by obtaining them in his own name, and on his own credit may stop them while in transit if the principal becomes insolvent.³⁰ The principle upon which this rule is based is that ²⁴ Carpenter v. Momsen, 92 Wis. 449; McKenzie v. Nevius, 22 Me. 133, 38 Am. Dec. 291; Jarvis v. Rogers, 15 Mass. 389; Barry v. Boninger, 46 Md. 59. See also, Stevens v. Robins, 12 Mass. 180; Adams v. Clark, 9 Cush. (Mass.) 215, 57 Am. Dec. 41; Rushforth v. Hadfield, 6 East, 519; Wright v. Snell, 5 B. & Ald. 350; Castillain v. Thompson, 13 C. B. (N. S.) 105.

²⁵ Story on Agency, § 364.

²⁶ See ante, § 1683.

²⁷ Story on Agency, § 364, ante, § 1683.

²⁸ See ante, § 1689.

²⁹ Story on Agency, § 365.

³⁰ Newhall v. Vargas, 13 Me. 93, 29 Am. Dec. 489; Seymour v. Newton, 105 Mass. 272; Feise v. Wray, 3 East, 93; D'Aquila v. Lambert, 1 Amb. 399;

the relation of the parties under such circumstances is rather that of vendor and vendee than of principal and agent.³¹

The right, however, will not exist if at the time of the consignment the agent is indebted to the principal on a general balance of account to a greater amount than the value of the goods, and if such consignment has been made in order to cover this balance.³² Nor does the right exist if the agent is only a surety for the price of the goods.³³

So the right is lost where the agent, in pursuance of a contract between the principal and a third person who has bought the goods of the principal and paid him for them, delivers the goods to a carrier to be shipped to the purchaser, taking the shipping receipt in the name of the principal, although the principal fails to pay the agent for the goods, before they are delivered to the purchaser.³⁴

§ 1699. Right exercised as in other cases.—The agent's right of stoppage in transitu is to be exercised in the same manner, and is subject to be defeated by the same contingencies as in the case of the exercise of the same right by any other vendor.³⁵

§ 1700. Right of such an agent to retain the title until paid for.—Where an agent purchases goods intended for his principal, but, according to the express or implied agreement of the parties, buys them upon his own credit or with funds furnished by himself, he may retain a hold upon the goods until they are paid for by the principal.³⁶

This rule has been well stated by Folger, J., as follows: "When commercial correspondents, on the order of a principal, make a purchase of property ultimately for him, but on their own credit, or with funds furnished or raised by them, and such course is contemplated when the order is given, they may retain the title in themselves until they are reimbursed. One of the means by which this may be done, is by taking the bill of sale in their own names, and, when the property is shipped, by taking from the carrier a bill of lading in such terms as to show that they retain the power of control and disposition of it.

s. c. 2 Eden, 75; Tucker v. Humphrey, 4 Bing. 516; Hawkes v. Dunn, 1 Crompt. & Jer. 519. See also, Muller v. Pondir, 55 N. Y. 325, 14 Am. Rep. 259; Hollins v. Hubbard, 165 N. Y. 534.

³¹ Newhall v. Vargas, supra.

³² Wiseman v. Vandeputt, 2 Vern. 203; Vertue v. Jewell, 4 Camp. 31; Ewell's Evans on Agency, 377.

³³ Siffken v. Wray, 6 East, 371; Ewell's Evans on Agency, 377. But now in England, under the Mercantile Law Amendment Act, 19-20 Vict. C. 97, § 5, see Imperial Bank v. London, etc., Dock Co., 5 Ch. Div. 195.

³⁴ Gwyn v. Richmond & Danville R. Co., 85 N. C. 429, 39 Am. Rep. 708.

³⁵ See Parsons on Contracts, Vol. 1, Chap. VI; Benjamin on Sales, §§ 829-868; 2 Mechem on Sales, §§ 1605-1607.

³⁶ Farmers', etc., Bank v. Logan, 74

This results necessarily from the nature of the transaction. It is not, at once, an irrevocable appropriation of the property to the principal. It rests for all of its efficiency and prospect of performance, upon the intention to withhold and the withholding the right to the property, so that the right may be used to procure the money with which to pay. It contemplates no title in the principal until he has reimbursed to his correspondents the price paid by them or to the person with whom they have dealt, the money obtained from him, with which to pay that price. From the start, the idea formed and nursed is, that the property shall be the means of getting the money with which to pay for it, and that the title shall not pass to him who is to be the ultimate owner until he has repaid the money thus got.

"Although such correspondents act as agents, and are set in motion by the principal who orders the purchase, yet their rights as against him, in the property are more like those of a vendor against a vendee in a sale not wholly performed, where delivery and payment have not been made and where delivery is dependent upon payment. * * *

"If the vendor, when shipping the articles which he intends to deliver under the contract, takes the bill of lading to his own order and does so, not as agent or on behalf of the purchaser but on his own behalf, he thereby reserves to himself a power of disposing of the property, and consequently there is no final appropriation and the property does not on shipment pass to the purchaser. So if the vendor deals with, or claims to retain, the bill of lading in order to secure the contract price, as when he sends it forward with a draft attached, and with directions that it is not to be delivered to the purchaser until payment of the draft, the appropriation is not absolute, and until payment, or tender of the price, is conditional only, and until then the property of the goods does not pass to the purchaser. We see no principle which distinguishes the case of a vendor and vendee, in this respect, from that of a correspondent or agent, buying for another, yet paying the price from his own means, or from moneys by agreement raised upon the property, or upon his own credit, and holding the property

N. Y. 568; Turner v. Trustees, 6 Exch. 543; Mirabita v. Imperial, etc., Bank, L. R. 3 Exch. Div. 164; Shepherd v. Harrison, L. R. 4 Q. B. 196; Ogg v. Shuter, 1 C. P. D. 47.

Whether what is retained is the general property or only a special property in the goods depends largely upon the circumstances. The Uniform Sales of Goods Act, § 20, p. 2, provides that where the title would have passed except for the form of the bill of lading, the seller's property shall be deemed to be only for the purpose of securing performance.

as security until the principal has made reimbursement. Such is the purpose of the parties. There is no intent that the property shall be appropriated until payment is made. And unless third parties are unavoidably misled to their harm, they have no cause to complain of a purpose so reasonable and productive of so good results."³⁷

VIII.

RIGHTS OF SUB-AGENT AGAINST PRINCIPAL.

§ 1701. When principal liable for his compensation.—The right of the sub-agent to recover his compensation from the principal depends upon considerations already discussed. As has been seen, the general principle is delegatus non potest delegari. The principal, however, may, either expressly or by implication, consent that a substitute may be employed, and he may do this upon one or the other of two conditions: first, he may consent merely that the agent may employ an assistant as his, the agent's, servant or agent, without at all consenting that any privity of contract shall be created between himself and the assistants so employed. Or, secondly, he may expressly or by implication, authorize the appointment of a substitute or assistant for him, the principal, and as his, the principal's, agent. In this case, privity of contract will exist between the principal and the sub-agent.³⁸

In the second of these classes of cases where the appointment of the sub-agent as the agent of the principal, is expressly or impliedly authorized by the principal, the latter is liable for the sub-agent's compensation,³⁹ but where the agent, having undertaken the performance of some duty to his principal, employs upon his own account a servant or sub-agent to assist him, the sub-agent must look to his immediate employer,—the agent,—and not to the principal.⁴⁰

³⁷ Farmers', etc., Bank v. Logan, 74 N. Y. 568; Moors v. Kidder, 106 N. Y. 32. But such a correspondent cannot, even with the consent of the principal, acquire a general lien for other indebtedness which will prevail against another correspondent jointly interested in the same way in the same goods. Drexel v. Pease, 133 N. Y. 129.

³⁸ See ante, Book I, Chap. VI.

³⁹ See Eastland v. Maney, 36 Tex. Civ. App. 147; Cotton States Life Ins.

Co. v. Mallard, 57 Ga. 64; Cf. U. S. Life Ins. Co. v. Hessberg, 27 Ohio St. 393.

⁴⁰ See ante, Chap. VI. Text quoted with approval. Houston Co. Oil Mills & Mfg. Co. v. Bibby, 43 Tex. Civ. App. 100; Nat. Cash Register Co. v. Hagan & Co., 37 Tex. Civ. App. 281; Williams v. Moore, 41 Tex. Civ. App. 402. Mere bond salesman has no implied authority to employ a broker to assist him at his principal's expense. Fudge v. Seckner Contracting Co., 80

§ 1702. — Effect of ratification.—Although at the time of the appointment, the employment of a sub-agent may not have been authorized, this defect can, as in other cases, be cured by the subsequent ratification by the principal.⁴¹ It should be kept in mind, however, although it seems frequently to be overlooked, that the thing

Ill. App. 35. A real estate broker, employed to sell land for a commission, has no implied authority to obtain assistants at the principal's expense. Carroll v. Tucker, 2 N. Y. Misc. 397; Southack v. Ireland, 109 N. Y. App. Div. 45; Kohn v. Jacobs, 4 N. Y. Misc. 265; Hanback v. Corrigan, 7 Kan. App. 479; Hill v. Morris, 15 Mo. App. 322; Cleaves v. Stockwell, 33 Me. 341.

⁴¹ In Carroll v. Tucker, 2 N. Y. Misc. 397, one Thompson, a broker employed by defendant to sell land, had, without express authority, employed plaintiff to assist him and agreed to pay him a commission. Plaintiff found a purchaser to whom defendant sold, and now sued for commissions. Held, that he could not recover. "The respondent argues," said the court, "that by consummating the sale which he negotiated, the appellants are estopped to question his authority, upon the ground that the enjoyment of the fruits of an agent's act charges the principal with responsibility. The principle upon which the respondent relies is of recognized and salutary operation; but he misapprehends its import and application. The rule as propounded in a leading case of this state is, that 'when an agent, acting within the scope of his actual authority, perpetrates a fraud for the benefit of his principal, and the latter receives the fruits of it, he thereby adopts the fraudulent acts of his agent.' Smith v. Sweeny, 35 N. Y. 291; Mayer v. Dean, 115 id. 556, 5 L. R. A. 540. Here, the act of Thompson in substituting plaintiff as broker, if there were such substitution, was beyond the scope of Thompson's authority; and the transaction, the enjoyment of the fruits of which is supposed to estop the appellants, was not the transaction of their agent but of a stranger. The rule was never applied, and in reason can never be applied, so as to validate a delegation of his agency by a broker; else the principal would be at the mercy of his broker, and might be burdened with liability to as many deputies as the broker should choose to appoint."

In Homan v. Brooklyn Life Ins. Co., 7 Mo. App. 22, where a life insurance solicitor, employed by defendant's agent without authority, was suing for payment for services, the court said: "Where a person is employed by an agent, the mere fact that the principal of the agent knows that the person so employed is acting in the business committed by the principal to his agent, and accepts such employment as beneficial, does not prove an agreement on the principal's part to pay for the services of the person so employed. To hold the principal to payment, the element of privity of contract between the principal and subagent should appear. So, acts of recognition and the acceptance of services on the part of the principal do not necessarily tend to prove ratification in the sense here claimed; for the question arises, ratification of what? If, for example, Cole and Taylor [general agents of the company], relying on what Wilson [the agent] seems to have done (that is, hired the plaintiff under the obligation to pay him), accepted the plaintiff's services as the employee of and to be paid by Wilson, the acts of Cole and Taylor in this behalf in no way prove, or tend to prove, their which is thus ratified, like the thing that might be originally authorized, may be either the appointment of a sub-agent at the agent's risk and expense, or the appointment of a sub-agent at the principal's risk and expense. It must be kept in mind also that there can ordinarily be no effective ratification without full knowledge on the part of the principal of all the material facts. The mere fact that the principal knew that a sub-agent had been employed would not warrant the inference that he knew that this sub-agent was employed at the principal's expense. The fact that the principal has received the benefit of an act is often evidence of a ratification, but full knowledge of the facts or a voluntary waiver of such knowledge, is just as essential here as in other cases of ratification. The retention of the benefits of an act is also often evidence of a ratification. But as has been pointed out in another place, this retention must be voluntary and can ordinarily be operative only where the alternative of restoring the benefit was open to him.

§ 1703. Same rules govern reimbursement and indemnity.—The same general principles would govern the sub-agent's claim for reim-acceptance or ratification of any employment of the plaintiff as a sub-agent to be paid by the company."

In Williams v. Moore, 24 Tex. Civ. App. 402, it appeared that the principal had authorized an agent to endeavor to sell land, and that the agent had employed a broker to assist him and had promised him a commission. It was contended that with knowledge of these facts the principal had made a sale to a purchaser found by the broker. It was held that even if these facts be conceded there was not such a ratification as would make the principal liable to pay the broker's commission. The distinction between employment of a subagent as the agent's agent and as the principal's agent was pointed out, and it was said that inasmuch as the owner has a natural and inherent right to sell his property the mere fact that he sold to a person whose attention was called to the property by the subagent was not necessarily a ratification of the promise made by the agent to the sub-agent. To the argument that the principal may not adopt a part of a contract and repudiate the residue, it was said that the contract the principal adopted was the contract of the purchaser to buy the land (which he adopted in full) and not the contract between the agent and sub-agent. Hanback v. Corrigan, 7 Kan. App. 479, is substantially to the same effect.

In Hornbeck v. Gilmer, 110 La. 500, an agent employed to sell land arranged with the plaintiff, Hornbeck, to assist him. The agent wrote to his principal, the defendant, that he had made this arrangement and said "if the sale is made to Hornbeck's party, he will expect part of the commission which I assume you will be willing to pay." Defendant made no objections, and had some correspondence directly with Hornbeck. After this defendant made the sale to a buyer produced by Hornbeck. Held (in a not very satisfactory opinion), to be such a ratification of Hornbeck's employment as to entitle him

bursment for expenses and indemnity against loss or injury.⁴² Where the principal at the time was undisclosed, a sub-agent, who would be entitled to reimbursement or indemnity as against a disclosed principal, may enforce his claim against the previously undisclosed principal when disclosed upon the same conditions as any other person dealing with an undisclosed principal.⁴³

§ 1704. How as to protection against injury.—So where in accordance with the principles referred to, the sub-agent is to be deemed the agent of the principal, he would be entitled to the same remedies as any other agent for an injury occasioned by the principal's negligence.⁴⁴ Where, however, he is the agent of the agent merely, the same rules would apply which govern the relation to the agents or servants of an independent contractor.⁴⁵

§ 1705. When sub-agent entitled to a lien.—A sub-agent appointed without the express or implied authority of the principal and who is therefore regarded as the agent or servant of the agent merely, can, by virtue of that relation, acquire no lien or charge upon the goods or property of the principal confided to the possession of the agent.⁴⁶ But where the sub-agent, being appointed by the express or implied authority of the principal, is, in law, to be regarded as the agent of the latter, such sub-agent is entitled to a lien to the same extent as any other agent.⁴⁷ So although the appointment of the sub-agent was originally unauthorized, yet if his appointment has been subsequently ratified by the principal, by availing himself of the proto recover commissions from the defendant.

The case of Hurt v. Jones, 105 Mo. App. 106, is substantially to the same effect. No reference is made to Homan v. Brooklyn Life Ins. Co., supra.

So in Dewing v. Hutton, 48 W. Va. 576, where an agent had been employed to buy land and engaged another person to assist him for a compensation, it was held that if the principal accepted the purchases made he became responsible for the commissions of the subagent, upon the ground that if he takes the benefits of the services he must pay for them. However sound the conclusion in this case may be, the opinion is not a very convincing one.

⁴² See ante, §§ 649-651.

⁴³ Barrell v. Newby, 62 C. C. A. 382, 127 Fed. 656.

⁴⁴ See ante, § 652 et seq.

⁴⁵ See ante, § 1642.

⁴⁶ Story on Agency, § 389; Maanss v. Henderson, 1 East, 335; Man v. Shiffner, 2 East, 523; Westwood v. Bell, 4 Camp. 348.

The right of lien does not extend to one not in privity with the principal. Meyers v. Bratespiece, 174 Pa. 119; Clark v. Hale, 34 Conn. 398; Hollingsworth v. Dow, 19 Pick. (Mass.) 228.

⁴⁷ Story on Agency, § 389; McKenzie v. Nevius, 22 Me. 138, 38 Am. Dec. 291.

ceeds or benefits accruing from his acts, or otherwise, the sub-agent's lien will attach.⁴⁸

At the same time, however, the sub-agent, though appointed without authority, "will be at liberty to avail himself of his general lien against the principal to the extent of the lien particular or general, which the agent himself has against the principal, by way of substitution to the rights of the agent, if the acts of the latter or his own are not tortious."⁴⁹

So, in many cases, proceeds Judge Story, "a sub-agent who acts without any knowledge or reason to believe that the party employing him is acting as an agent for another, will acquire a rightful lien on the property for his general balance. Thus, for example, if a sub-agent or broker, at the request of an agent, should effect a policy on a cargo, supposing it to be for the agent himself, but in fact it should be for a third person for whom the agent has purchased the cargo, and afterwards, and while the policy is in the broker's hands, he should make advances to the agent, before any notice of the real state of the title to the property, he will be entitled to a lien on the policy, and on the money received on it, to the extent of the money so advanced, and also (as it should seem), for his general balance of account against the agent."⁵⁰

⁴⁸ Story on Agency, § 389; McKenzie v. Nevius, supra.

⁴⁹ Story on Agency, § 389; McKenzie v. Nevius, supra; Maanss v. Henderson, 1 East, 335; Man v. Shiffner, 2 East, 523; McCombie v. Davies, 7 East, 7; Solly v. Rathbone, 2 M. &

S. 298; Cochran v. Irlam, 2 M. & S. 301, note; Schmaling v. Thomlinson, 6 Taunt. 147.

⁵⁰ Story on Agency, § 390; Mann v. Forrester, 4 Camp. 60; Westwood v. Bell, 4 Camp. 349.

University of California
SOUTHERN REGIONAL LIBRARY FACILITY
405 Hilgard Avenue, Los Angeles, CA 90024-1388
Return this material to the library from which it was borrowed.

RECEIVED
APR 02 2004
UCLA LAW LIBRARY

LAW LIBRARY
UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA
LOS ANGELES

UC SOUTHERN REGIONAL LIBRARY FACILITY

D 000 323 181 8

